Ver. 8. Pillaged Gessuri, &c. These probably were enemies of the people of God; and some, if not all of them, were of the number of those whom God had ordered to be destroyed; which justifies David’s proceedings in their regard. Though it is to be observed here, that we are not under an obligation of justifying every thing that he did: for the Scripture, in relating what was done, doth not say that it was well done. And even such as are true servants of God, are not to be imitated in all they do. Ch.—The nations of Chanaan, who inhabited as far as Egypt, and the Amalecites, who had escaped the arms of Saul, were devoted to destruction. Ex. 17. &c. In such cases, any man might fall upon them, without any other formal declaration of war. C.—There was another Gessuri of Syria, in the tribe of Manasses, across the Jordan. M.—The country which these people inhabited, to the south of Palestine, was afterwards depopulated by the kings of Egypt and of Syria, in their continual wars, so that many of the cities which are mentioned in Scripture, were never known to profane geographers. C.—S. Jerom, (Trad.) Sa, and others, think that David attacked some of the Philistines. But it is as probable at least that he would abstain from molesting them, whom had so generously afforded him an asylum. Salien concludes, that he did not attack the other nations, (except the Amalecites, who were sufficiently marked out for destruction, Deut. 25:19,) without consulting the Lord, by the high priest, as he was accustomed to do in every difficulty. A. 2979. M.—They all dwelt in part of the land of Chanaan, (W.) which was sufficient. H.

Ver. 9. Apparel. Saul alone had been ordered to destroy all the property of Amalec. Abulensis.

Ver. 10. Jerameel, the son of Esron, inhabited the most southern part of Juda.—Ceni, or the Cinites, descendants of Jethro, (C.) who dwelt at Arad and the environs. The words of David might signify that he attacked these people of Israel, as Achis understood him; or that he made inroads upon those who dwelt to the south of them, which was really the case. H.—At his return, he passed by Siceleg, where he left the spoil, carrying some of the choicest things, as a present, to Achis. M.—But he suffered none of the human race to be carried away captive, lest any of them might disclose the true state of affairs to the king, who might have apprehended that the injured nations would make an attack upon his dominions. Salien.

Ver. 12. Harm. Heb. “he hath made himself stinking (an object of horror) to his people.” A strong expression used, Gen. 34:30. Ex. 5:21. C.—Sept. “he is quite covered with confusion.” Achis supposed that David had thus forfeited all his pretensions to dwell among, much less, to reign over Israel: so that he might keep him always in his service. H.—In the mean time, Saul was exterminating the people of Gabaon, which brought a pestilence on Israel, 40 years later. Theodoret.—He perhaps supposed that the oath of Josue had not been yet put in execution, as it ought to be, herein indulging too much his cruel temper. Salien.

1 KINGS 28

Ver. 1. Israel. God made use of the ill-will of the Philistines to punish Saul, and to make way for David to the throne. Salien.—Each of the five lords brought their armies into the field, where they were united. Achis, placing the greatest confidence in David, requires his attendance. C.

Ver. 2. Do; or “can do.” Thou wilt be convinced of my valour and fidelity. H.—But could David lawfully fight against his brethren? or could he desert Achis in the heat of the engagement? His answer is ambiguous. C.—He prudently committed his cause into the hands of Providence, resolved to do nothing contrary to his duty, and to abide by God’s decision, in this critical juncture, so that Cajetan blames him unjustly. Salien. M. T.—Guard. Sept. “captain of my body guard.”

Ver. 3. Samuel. His death is here recorded, as well as the abolition of magic, to explain what follows, when Saul, not being able to obtain an answer from God, as his prophet had been withdrawn in anger, had recourse to the devil. H.—Land, while he reigned virtuously, (M.) according to the law. Lev. 19:31. Deut. 18:11.

Ver. 4. Gelboe. So that he occupied the parts south of the vale of Jezrahel, while the Philistines were encamped on the north, in the tribe of Issachar. M.

Ver. 5. Dismayed. It was so numerous, while his own conscience upbraided him with being at enmity with God, who increased his fears. Salien.

Ver. 6. Dreams. During which God often revealed his will. See Deut. 13:3.—Priests. Heb. “nor by Urim.” It seems Saul had appointed some priests, and had fabricated a fresh ephod, with the Urim, &c. after the departure of Abiathar. C.—But Salien calls this in question, and there might neither be priests nor prophets for Saul to consult. H.—God despised a man, who had slain so many of his sacred ministers. M.

Ver. 7. Spirit. Heb. “an ob,” or vessel distended, as such impostors seemed to swell at the presence of the spirit. Sept. “a belly talker.” They endeavour to speak from that part. We read of some who, without magic, have possessed the art in great perfection, so as to deceive the company, and make them think that some one was calling them from a great distance; as was the case with one Farming in England, 1645. Dickenson, c. 9.—Brodeus mentions that the valet of Francis I. could thus counterfeit the speech of people deceased, and by these means prevailed upon a rich woman to marry him, and a banker of Lyons to give him a large sum of money. James Rodoginus, a possessed person in Italy, 1513, could make articulate sounds from the hollow of his belly, when his lips and nostrils were closed up. The oracles of idols were generally given in a low tone, as if they proceeded from the earth. Submissi petimus terram & vox fertur ad aures. Virg.—Those of Apollo were the most famous, and hence a divining spirit is called a Python. Saul must have been stupidly blind, thus to depend on what he had formerly banished with such care. C.—He flattered himself that some would still be left, especially among the women, who are most addicted to superstition, as well as to religion. M.—Endor was distant from Gelboe about four hours' walk. Adrichomius.—But Saul made a long circuit to avoid the enemy. Salien, v. 20.

Ver. 8. Clothes, that he might not fill the woman or his army with dismay. C.

Ver. 10. Thing. He adds this crime of swearing unjustly, to all the rest. Saline.

Ver. 11. Samuel. Here we behold the antiquity of necromancy, which is a proof that people believed the soul's immortality; animas responsa daturas. Horace i. sat. 8. C.—Protestants sometimes deny (H.) that souls appear again, contrary to this history and Mat. 17. S. Aug. W.

Ver. 12. Woman. The Rabbins pretend that she was Abner's mother, (C.) which is extremely improbable, as he was of the tribe of Benjamin, and a man of such renown. Salien.—Theodoret follows their opinion, in supposing that the woman was startled, because Samuel appeared in a standing posture, and not with his feet upwards, or lying down on his back, as in a coffin, which they say (C.) is the usual manner of spirits appearing to people of her character. Bellarm. Purgat. ii. 6.—She cried out, because he appeared before she had begun her incantations, and was arrayed like a priest, according to Josephus, (H.) in great majesty, or she pretended to see him, the better to impose upon the king; for some think that all was a delusion. C.—Saul. This she learnt either from Samuel, (Josephus) or from her familiar spirit. M.

Ver. 13. Gods, or one venerable and divine personage. W.—Elohim, is applied to Samuel for greater honour. It is a title given to the true God, to idols, and people in dignity. C.

Ver. 14. Understood that it was Samuel. It is the more common opinion of the holy fathers, and interpreters, that the soul of Samuel appeared indeed; and not, as some have imagined, an evil spirit in his shape. Not that the power of her magic could bring him thither, but that God was pleased for the punishment of Saul, that Samuel himself should denounce unto him the evils that were falling upon him. See Ecclesiasticus 46:23. Ch.—The passage is decisive; (T.) he slept and he made know to the king, and shewed him the end of his life, and he lifted up his voice from the earth, in prophecy, &c. Those who have called in question the reality of Samuel's apparition, seem not to have remembered this passage. H.—Yet his soul was not united to his body, (Salien) nor was he adduced by the power of the devil, but (D.) by a just judgment of God, to denounce destruction to the wicked king. S. Aug. &c. T.—The woman, beholding Samuel, fled out of the place, to Saul's companions, and left him alone with the king, v. 21.—Adored Samuel with an inferior honour, as a friend of God, exalted in glory. Salien.—That Samuel really appeared, is the more common opinion of the fathers. S. Aug. Cura. xv. W.

Ver. 15. Up. To inform a person of something very terrible, is distressing; and though the saints deceased cannot partake in the afflictions of mortals, yet we read that “the angels of peace will weep, but they will approve of the just sentence of the judge” against the reprobate. H.—The Scripture language conforms itself to the opinions of the people, who thought that such avocations disturbed the soul's repose. Hence the fathers at Elvira (C. 31) forbid “the lighting of wax candles in church-yards during the day, for the spirits of the saints are not to be disquieted.” Isaias (14:9,) represents hell all in commotion, at the approach of the king of Babylon. These expressions are figurative. C.—God does not encourage magical arts, on this occasion, but rather prevents their operation, as he did, when Balaam would have used some superstitious practices. Num. 24. D.

Ver. 16. Rival. How vain is it to expect that a prophet can give an answer when the Lord is silent! Heb. “is become thy enemy.” H.

Ver. 17. To thee. Heb. “to him.” This was only a repetition of what Samuel had before denounced. C. 15:28. If the evil spirit spoke this, he was not guilty of falsehood, nor more than Mat. 8:29. C.—But would he dare so often to repeat the name of the Lord? H.—Could he know what would happen to Saul, &c. the next day? W.

Ver. 19. To-morrow. Usher supposes some days afterwards. But all might take place the day after this was spoken. C.—Sons, except Isboseth, who enjoyed, for a time, part of his father's kingdom. H.—With me. That is, in the state of the dead, and in another world, though not in the same place. Ch.—Saul was guilty of suicide, so that he could not be with Samuel in happiness, (C. 31:4. T.) though he was in the other world. W.—See S. Aug. ad Simp. ii. 3. Cura pro mort. c. xv. S. Justin. Dial. Origen, &c.

Ver. 20. Day, through excessive anguish. H.—He fainted away; upon which his attendants and the woman rushed in. Salien.

Ver. 21. Hand, in the most imminent danger. See Judg. 12:3.

Ver. 24. Calf, destined for a victim or feast. Luke 15:23. Prov. 15:17. C.—The generosity of this woman deserves commendation. Josep. vi. 15. H.

Ver. 1. Aphec. Hence they proceeded to Sunam, and attacked Saul, near the fountain, which were all places in the vale of Jezebel. The sacred writer thus leaves the two armies ready to engage, being intent on giving the particulars of David's history, and only relating the affairs of Saul, &c. in as much as they may refer to him. C.—David had retired from the army of the Philistines before Saul went to Endor, and some of the tribe of Manasses went after him, and were present in the battle, in which the Amalecites were slain and plundered. 1 Par. 12:19. Salien.

Ver. 2. Thousands, making the troops pass in review, as the Hebrew insinuates. Their army seems to have been divided, in the same manner as that of the Israelites, each company of 10, 50, &c. having its respective officer, under the five lords.—Were. Heb. “passed.” David's band was connected with the troops of Achis, yet so that they might be easily distinguished by their dress, &c. C.—The Roman Triarii, who were esteemed the bravest soldiers, occupied the rear. M.—Josephus gives us to understand that Achis was the commander in chief. Ant. vi. 14. T.

Ver. 3. Know David. It seems they were not unacquainted with him, since they knew that Achis had given him a place, (v. 4,) or city. H.—But they prudently judged that it would be very hazardous to employ him on this occasion. Providence thus brought him honourably out of the scrape, as he could not have remained even inactive, among the troops of the Philistines, without rendering himself suspected both to them and to his own people. C.—Years. Abulensis thinks that Achis told an untruth, to persuade the lords that he had been long witness of David's fidelity. He might also allude to the first time, when he came to his court, or the four months specified C. 27:9, might fall into different years. Sept. “he has been with us days, this is the second year.” M.—Syr. “two years (Arab. “one year,”) and some months.” C.—The true term was only four months. W.

Ver. 4. Adversary. Heb. Satan, “a calumniator, enemy,” &c. C.—Tacitus (Hist. iv.) speaking of the Batavian corps, says, “which, being bribed, pretended to be faithful, that it might flee, and become more acceptable after it had betrayed the Romans in the heat of the engagement.”

Ver. 6. Lord. Heb. Jehova. H.—Achis speaks of the true God, as David was accustomed to do. Salien.—Perhaps he adored him, like his other gods; as the Israelites are accused of swearing by the Lord and by Melchom. Soph. 1:5.—The pagans often appealed to the gods of those with whom they were treating. C.

Ver. 8. King. He speaks thus that he might not increase the suspicions of the Philistines. M.—In the mean time, God called him to fight against Amalec, and to defend his own property, which was actually, or the next day, taken from Siceleg; (H.) so that nothing could have been more desirable to him, than to be thus dismissed with applause. Salien.

Ver. 9. Angel of God, equally incapable of any meanness. The pagans admitted the existence of good and of evil spirits. Sanctius. This exaggerated compliment occurs, Gen. 33:10. 2 K. 14:17 and 19:27.

Ver. 10. Thy Lord. He may allude to Saul, (v. 3,) or to himself, (C. 5:8,) or to God, as David was under obligations to all three. H.—Light, that none might know or be dejected, in the rest of the army. M.

1 KINGS 30

Ver. 1. Day. It was distant from Aphec about 90 miles.—Smitten, yet without killing any. C.—We may adore a merciful Providence, which prevented these barbarians from treating David’s men as he had treated theirs. C. 27:11. Salien, A.C. 1074.—He would allow them to burn the city, &c. that David might be roused to execute the divine vengeance upon them. Theodoret.

Ver. 4. Tears. Heb. “till they had no more power to weep.” M.—See Lament. 2:11. Cicero exclaims, Hei mihi! consumptis enim lachrymis, infixus tamen hæret in corde dolor. Phil. 2.

Ver. 6. Stone him, as the author of all their losses, because he had not left a sufficient garrison at Siceleg, and had irritated the Amalecites. Inconstant people! they thought that he was indebted to them for all that he possessed! C.—David, without being too much dejected, sought out for an immediate remedy, and led them on to battle. Their ancestors had once threatened to stone Moses. Ex. 17. &c. T.

Ver. 7. To David. Some think that David put on the ephod; but this was the function of the high priest, who, according to Grotius, turned towards David, that he might see the brightness of the precious stones. See Ex. 28:30. By means of the priest David was enlightened. W.

Ver. 9. Besor is formed by the water falling from the mountains of Idumea, and discharges itself into the Mediterranean, below Gaza. C.—Some take it to be the torrent of the desert, or the river of Egypt. Adrichomius makes it run from the mountains of Juda, so as to form the southern boundary of the tribe of Simeon. H.

Ver. 10. Weary. Heb. pigru, denotes those who are “lazy and dead.” Sept. “some sat down on the other side of the torrent.” Syr. and Arab. insinuate, to defend the passage. But why then do the rest complain? C.—They acted irrationally, as David shewed afterwards. Some of the 600 might well be more exhausted than others, and these were selected to guard the baggage, v. 24. This was only the third day since they left Aphec, v. 1. H.

Ver. 12. Raisins. Heb. tsimmukim. See C. 25:18. C.—The soldiers very prudently took some provisions with them, as they were going into a desert country. M.

Ver. 13. Ago. His master’s inhumanity was justly punished, and God provided for the safety of his poor slave, while he sent a guide for David. H.

Ver. 14. Cerethi, denotes the Philistines, (R. David. See v. 16. H.) who came originally from Crete. 2 K. 15:18. Ezech. 25:16. C.—They might be natives of some province of the Philistines, (Vatab.) belonging to Gaza, (M.) or Geth. H.—Caleb. Hebron and Cariath-sepher fell to his share. The enemy had a good opportunity to ravage all those places, as most of the soldiers were absent (C.) at Jezrahel. H.

Ver. 15. Him. David did not require this slave to betray his master, for the latter had lost all his claim, and David had acquired it by relieving the distressed. Si herus negaverit servo suo alimenta, & alius suppeditet, sit occupantis. See Martyr. and the Roman laws. The Amalecites dwelt in tents, and the slave knew where they commonly lodged. C.—Perhaps his master had told him where to meet him, in case he recovered.

Ver. 16. Drinking. Heb. adds, “and dancing,” (Salien) in honour of their gods.

Ver. 17. Evening. Heb. “twilight,” in the morning (C.) or evening. H.—Some think that the pursuit lasted three days; others only from three till five in the evening. But David more probably slaughtered the intoxicated people, during the space of a whole day, from morning till evening. C.—Sept. “from the morning or evening star rising, ἀπο ἑωσφορου, till the afternoon, and on the following day,” (H.) which commenced at sun-set. C.—It was no battle, but flight and carnage. M.

Ver. 19. All, excepting what had been eaten, or consumed with fire. M.

Ver. 20. And made. Heb. “which they drove before those things (or cattle,” taken from the Amalecites. H.) “which were separated from those which David had recovered.” Each one reclaimed what he had lost. Perhaps David’s portion was placed by itself. C.—Grotius thinks that, as the things taken in war cannot be reclaimed by the former proprietors, all was equally divided. See Seld. Jur. vi. 16.

Ver. 22. Unjust. Heb. Belial. See Deut. 13:13. C.—David saluted those who had remained at Besor, to shew that he approved of their conduct, unless we may attribute it to his great clemency. M.

Ver. 24. Alike. Nothing could be more just and prudent; as this decision prevents continual murmurs and inconveniences. Those who are left behind, are bound to defend the baggage at the hazard of their lives, and each man must obey the orders of the general. Hence all nations seem to have adopted similar regulations, though Achilles declaims against it. Iliad i.—Coriolanus observes, that formerly the Romans brought all the spoil into the public treasury. Halicar. vii.—The soldiers promised on oath to bring all they should take, and an equal division was made to the whole army. Polyb. x.—The sick and absent also partook of the plunder. C.—The same was observed by the Machabees, 2 B. 8:28. H.

Ver. 25. A law. Custom, (C.) and a particular injunction, had long before made way for it. Num. 31:27. H. Jos. 22:8.—We might translate the Heb. “And this law had been observed in Israel from that day and before.” David restored to its full vigour this ancient regulation. The Hebrews have no compound verbs, such as re-establish, re-build, &c. instead of which, they say, to establish, (C.) and build again. Thus, by the addition of adverbs, they can explain the same things. Prot. “from that day forward he made it a statute,” &c. H. —It is not, therefore, unlawful to make new laws, provided they be conformable to those of God. Deut. 4 and 12. W.

Ver. 26. Neighbours. Heb. “friends;” some were at a distance, v. 28. H. —The number of presents shews the quantity of the spoil, and the generosity of David towards those who had formerly assisted him. C.

Ver. 27. Bethel, “the house of God,” as the priests had afforded him protection. H.—It is not certain whether he speaks of a town of Ephraim, or of the cities where the ark and the tabernacle were now fixed.—Ramoth, in the tribe of Simeon: (C.) there was another in the tribe of Gad. M.—Jether, or “Jethira,” (Euseb.) a priests’ town, called Ether. Jos. 15:42.

Ver. 28. Aroer, on the Arnon. David had sojourned among the Moabites.—Sephamoth: perhaps Sephama, (Num. 34:10,) though it was a great way beyond the Jordan. C.—Abulensis assigns Sephamoth to Juda. M.—Esthamo was in the same tribe, belonging to the priests. Jos. 21:14.

Ver. 29. Rachel; perhaps the same with Hachila. C. 23:19. and 26:1.—Jerameel. See C. 27:10.—Ceni, a canton to the south of the Dead Sea.

Ver. 30. Arama, or Horma. Num. 21:3.—Lake. Heb. “at Chor Aschan.” It is called Asan, Jos. 15:42, and 19:7.—Athach, or Athar. Jos. 19:7.

Ver. 31. Hebron, twenty miles south of Jerusalem.—Rest. David remunerated all his old friends, which was the sure way to procure more. H.—He was still uncertain what would be the event of the war between Saul and the Philistines; and desirous to make friends, who might smooth his way to the throne, according to God’s appointment. Salien.

1 KINGS 31

Ver. 1. Fled. They make but a feeble resistance, as God was not with them. H.—The first onset was made by the archers, and Saul’s three sons fell, while the king himself was dangerously wounded. C.—The death of his sons would increase his anguish. M.—He seems not to have told them of the divine decree, as he might deem it irrevocable and unavoidable, so that flight would have been of no service to them. H.

Ver. 2. Jonathan. Ven. Bede, &c. doubt not of his salvation. Salien.

Ver. 3. Overtook. Heb. “attacked, found, or hit him.” He was running away. H.—Wounded. Some translate Heb. “terrified,” as they believe the words of the Amalecite, “my whole life is in me.” But that wretch deserves no credit; and Saul would probably not take the desperate resolution of killing himself, till he saw there was no possibility of escaping. Sept. “the archers find him, and they wounded him in the lower belly." Theodotion, "in the part near the liver."

Ver. 4. Bearer. The Rabbins say he was Doeg. They were not yet come to a close engagement.—Mock at me, as was then customary. See Jos. 8:29. Judg. 1:7. He might recollect the treatment of Samson. C.—Fear. "To spill the royal blood's a direful thing." Homer.

Ver. 5. With him. Thus to avoid a little shame and temporal punishment, they rushed into those which are inconceivably great and eternal. H.—The Jews in vain attempt to excuse Saul, as they deem suicide in such cases lawful, though in others they deprive those of burial, who have been guilty of it. Joseph. Ant. vi. 14.—This author applauds the behaviour of Saul; and indeed, his courage called forth the praises of David. But even the pagans have deemed those no better than cowards, who have killed themselves to avoid misery.

Rebus in adversis facile est contemnere mortem:
Fortiter ille facit, qui miser esse potest. Martial.

The civil laws deny suicides the rites of burial, as they are also guilty of a crime against the state, which they deprive of their labours. They unjustly abandon what God has only committed to their care. Saul seems to have been afraid of receiving any insult himself, rather than to have been desirous of preventing the blasphemies of the infidels against God, as the Jews pretend. He gave no signs of repentance, and the spirit of God pronounces his condemnation. So Saul died for his iniquities, because he transgressed; (C. Heb. and Sept. in his iniquities, by which he prevaricated. T.) ... and moreover consulted also a witch, and trusted not in the Lord: therefore he slew him. 1 Par. 10:13, 14. Saul prefigured those, who having yielded to temptations, persist and die in their evil ways. S. Greg. W.

Ver. 6. His men. Paral. his house fell together. The hopes of his family were at an end, (H.) though Isboseth, Abner, and some few survived him, (M.) who had fled, (C.) or had not been in the engagement. H.

Ver. 7. Beyond, or about "the passage" or fords of the Jordan, as the Heb. means. M.—The Philistines did not pursue after them, as God set bounds to their ambition. It might otherwise have proved very fatal to his people, who were now so much divided and terrified. In the parallel passage, in Chronicles, it is only said, When the men ... that dwelt in the plains (of Jezrahel) saw this, they fled. 1 Par. 10:7. The Philistines seized the abandoned cities, particularly Bethsan, (v. 10. H.) which had been retained by the Chanaanites in the days of the judges, and which David took back. Judg. 1:27. 3 K. 4:12.

Ver. 9. Head, as David had treated that of Goliath. C. 17:54.

Ver. 10. Astaroth. The like custom was observed by the Hebrew, (C. 21:9,) and by the Greeks and Romans, (C.) to acknowledge that victory was granted by God. The Philistines insulted Saul's body, and blasphemed the true God, as much as if they had taken the king alive. He only avoided the mortification of hearing them while he was forced to attend to the furies below.—Body, with those of his three sons, v. 12. H.—Saul's head was hung up in the temple of Dagon, at Azotus; (1 Par. 10:10,) his body was suspended on the wall or street of Bethsan; (2 K. 21:12,) or in the most public place, near the gate of the city.

Ver. 11. Jabes, in gratitude for the deliverance which he had procured for them. C. 11:11. C.—They are also deserving of praise for shewing mercy to the dead, as well as for their bravery. W.

Ver. 12. Burnt them, or the flesh, reserving the ashes and bones to be buried, as was customary among the Greeks (Homer, ψ.) and Romans:

*Sed cœnam funeris hæres
Negliget iratus quod rem curtaveris; urnæ
Ossa inodora dabit.* Persius. vi.

See Amos 6:10. Jonathan insinuates, that they burnt over the bodies aromatic spices.

Ver. 13. Wood. Par. under the oak.—Days, at their own option. David fasted one day, (C.) as he did for Abner. Salien.—There was no obligation of mourning for the kings, though it is probable that those near the royal city, would shew this mark of attention to the deceased monarch. See Jer. 34:5. 2 Par. 35:25. The usual term of mourning was seven days. Eccli. 22:13. C.—It is very difficult to ascertain the length of Saul's reign. Sanctius and Tirin allow him only 2 years; Petau 12; Calvisius 15; Salien 18; Bucholeer, and probably Josephus, 20, though most copies of the latter have 38; S. Aug. Serarius, Usher, &c. 40, which is the term mentioned Acts 13:20. But most chronologers suppose that the time of Samuel's administration is there also included. H.—Sulpitius thinks that Saul only “reigned a very short time,” as “the ark was brought to Cariathiarim before the appeared on the throne, and was removed by David, after it had been there twenty years.”

2 KINGS

THE SECOND BOOK OF SAMUEL;

otherwise called,

THE SECOND BOOK OF KINGS

INTRODUCTION

This Book contains the transactions of David till the end of the pestilence, occasioned by his numbering the people. C. 24. The last six chapters of the preceding book were probably written by Gad, who delivered God's orders to David, after he was deprived of the company of Samuel. Gad, Nathan, and other prophets, continued the sacred history, 1 Par. 29:29. After the unfortunate death of Saul, his general, Abner, instead of submitting quietly to the dominion of David, (H.) set the son of the deceased monarch upon the throne, at Mahanaim; and two years elapsed before the rival kings came to open war. C. 2:10. Salien.—David was 30 years old when he was anointed at Hebron, (C. 5:4,) where he reigned seven years and a half over Juda. On the death of Isoboseth, he was anointed a third time, as king of all Israel, and reigned in that character 37 years. H.—The partisans of Isoboseth might be excused in their adherence to him, as he was the son of the late king, and the election of David was not sufficiently notified to them. Salien.—We here behold the many virtues of David, and his repentance for some faults into which he had fallen. His predictions, and the names and exploits of many of his valiant men, are likewise recorded. W.

2 KINGS 1

Ver. 1. Siceleg, though it had been burnt down. Salien, A. 2949.

Ver. 6. Chance. He feigned this to obtain the favour of David; but the king punished him as he deserved. W.—Spear, or sword, as it is before expressed. M.

Ver. 8. Amalecite. The Rabbins say he was the son of Doeg; and has this appellation because Amalec sprung from Esau. Gen. 36:12. But this is all very uncertain. The man seems to have gotten possession of the marks of the royal dignity in the night, as the Philistines deferred till the next day stripping the bodies of the deceased. C.

Ver. 9. Anguish. Heb. “the coat of mail withholds me.” Sept. “horrid darkness encompasses me.” Shabah, signifies a coat of mail, made of cloth, very thick, and boiled in vinegar, to render it more impenetrable. The Greeks emperors and the French formerly wore them much, instead of iron. C.—Prot. however agrees with us.—In me. I have yet received no mortal wound. H.

Ver. 10. I killed him. This story of the young Amalecite was not true, as may easily be proved by comparing it with the last chapter of the foregoing book. Ch.—Fall. This he says, apprehending that David would perhaps disapprove of what he had done.—Diadem, or ribband, which was tied round his head, as a badge of his dignity. Heb. “the crown.” But it was not of metal, though such were already common. Ex. 28:36, 1 Par. 20:2. Some pretend that Doeg gave these insignia to this son, that he might ingratiate himself with the future king. But they were upon Saul, so that the enemy could easily distinguish him.—Bracelet. The Hebrews took a great many from the Madianites. Num. 31:50. Such presents were made by the Romans to soldiers who had performed some feats of valour. Plin. xxxiii. 2. Livy i. 10.

Ver. 11. Rent them, in sign of grief, as many other nations did.

Tum pius Æneas humeris abscindere vestem. Æneid v. C.

Ver. 12. Of the Lord, the priests; (Abulensis) though it seems to be explained by the following words, of all the Israelites. H.

Ver. 13. Stranger, residing among the Hebrews.

Ver. 16. Head. None but thyself can be answerable for thy death. See Matthew 27:25. David was already supreme magistrate, and he wished that all should be convinced that he rejoiced not at the death of the king, and that none might imitate the example of this wretch. C.—Thus Vitellius punished the murderers of Galba, “not out of respect to Galba; but, according to the custom of princes, as a protection for the present, and a threat of vengeance for the future,” in case any should dare to treat him in like manner. Tacit. i. Tradito principibus more, munimentum in præsens, in posterum ultionem.

Ver. 18. Bow. So this canticle was entitled, because it spoke in praise of the bow and arrows of Saul and Jonathan, v. 22. So one of the works of Hesiod is called “a buckler;” of Theocritus “a flute;” of Simmias “wing;” &c. Sept. have neglected this word entirely (C.) in the Roman edition. But it is found in the Alex. copy, which reads “Israel,” instead of Juda, perhaps properly. Grabe, prol. iv. 2. H.—Chal. “to shoot with the bow.” Many suppose that David cautioned his men to exert themselves in that art, (M.) as they might soon expect to have to encounter the Philistines, (T.) who were very expert bowmen. W.—But the former interpretation seems preferable. C.—The bow might be also the beginning of some favourite song, to the tune of which (D.) David would have his men to sing this canticle, (H.) particularly when they went to battle. Grotius.—Just. See Jos. 10:3. M.—It seems this was a more ancient record, to which the author of this book refers. C.—He might have in view the canticle of Anna, (1 K. 2:4,) or some other. H.—The custom of composing canticles, on such solemn occasions, is very ancient and frequent. See 3 K. 13:23. and 13:29, Jeremias 48:31. Iliad ψ & χ. The style of this piece can hardly be equalled by the most polite writers. C.—David is chiefly occupied with the praises of Jonathan. H.—Consider ... places. This sentence is omitted in Heb. Chal. Sept. and in some copies of S. Jerom’s version. T. i. p. 365, Nov. edit. op. It is a farther explication of the subsequent verse. C.—Yet the Sept. read, “Erect a pillar, O Israel, [upon thy heights; the Vat. Sept. places this after slain. H.] in honour of the slain, thy wounded soldiers. How are the mighty fallen?” The Hebrew seems to be different from what the Sept. Chal. &c. read, as the Masora now adopts etsbi, instead of etsib, which has greatly puzzled interpreters. Hence Aquila translates ακριβωσον, with the Sept. of Ximenes, i.e. “Execute or consider with attention,” this sepulchral monument on which you shall inscribe, “For the dead and for thy wounded.” It was to be placed on some “eminence,” according to custom. The present Heb. is very indeterminate, denoting “glory, a honey-comb,” &c. Ezech. 20:6, Dan. 11:16, 41. See Grabe, Prol. H.

Ver. 19. Illustrious. Heb. “the glory (beauty, hart, &c.) of Israel hath been pierced,” &c. The comparison of Saul with a hart, is noble enough in the ideas of the ancients. Ps. 17:34, Cant. 2:9 and 8:14. Syr. and Arab. “O hart of Israel, they have been slain,” &c. C.—Slain. Heb. chalal, signifies also “a soldier;” and this word agrees perfectly well with giborim, “valiant,” both here and v. 22 and 25. Kennicott would apply it to Jonathan, upon whom David’s attention is mostly fixed. “O ornament of Israel! O warrior, upon thy high places! How,” &c. H.—In this manner many such pieces commence. Lament. 1. T.

Ver. 20. Triumph. He was aware of the exultation of the infidels. H.

Ver. 21. Fruits, which may be offered to the Lord. Inanimate things could not offend, nor does David curse them in earnest. But (T.)

nothing could more strikingly express his distress and grief, than this imprecation. It is false that those mountains have since been barren. This canton is one of the most fruitful of the country. Brocard. C.—Job (3) speaks with the same animation, and curses his day. M.—Of Saul, or “Saul, the shield of his people, was cast away, as,” &c. Prot. “as though he had not been anointed with oil.” H.—He is not reproached for throwing away his buckler, for nothing was deemed more shameful. The ancient Germans would not allow such a one to enter their temples or places of assembly. Tacit. mor. Germ.—A woman of Sparta told her son, when she delivered on to him, “Bring this back, or be brought upon it” dead. Imposito scuto referunt Pallanta frequentes. Æneid x. Sanctius. C.—As though. Heb. seems to have sh, instead of s, (as it is in several MSS. correctly, in noshug) and bli, instead of cli, (Delany) as the former word seems no where else to signify quasi non; and the Syr. Arab. and Chal. omit the negation. It might therefore be the shield of Saul, “the arms of him who has been anointed with oil.” Kennicott.—Some would refer this unction to the shield, (Vatab.) as this was some times done: (M.) but the reflection would be here too trifling. C.

Ver. 22. From. Heb. “without the blood of soldiers, without the fat of the valiant, the bow of Jonathan had never returned.” Kennicott.—Fat. The entrails. It might also denote the most valiant of the soldiers, as we read of “the fat or marrow of corn” for the best. Ps. 80:17. C.—Jonathan attacked the most courageous, and laid them dead at his feet. H.—Empty. Saul carried destruction wherever he went.

Spargimus & nostro sequitur de vulnere sanguis. Æn. xii. 50.*

Ver. 23. Lovely, or united. Jonathan always behaved with due respect towards his father, though he could not enter into his unjust animosity against David. C.—The latter passes over in silence all that Saul had done against himself, and seems wholly occupied with the thought of the valour and great achievements of the deceased. H.—Sanchez believes that these epithets were introduced of course into funeral canticles, like Alas! my noble one, (Jer. 22:18. M.) as Saul could have no pretensions to be styled lovely, or friendly, towards the latter part of his reign; since he treated the priests, David, and even his son Jonathan, with contumely, and even with unrelenting fury. But all this David would willingly bury in oblivion. He will not even notice how different was the end of the two heroes. Jonathan died like a virtuous soldier in his country’s cause; Saul was wounded, but impiously accelerated his own death, through dread of torments and of insult. Though they died, therefore, on the same field of battle, their end was as different as that of the saint and of the impenitent sinner. H.

Ver. 25. Battle. Heb. “in the midst of battle! O Jonathan, thou warrior upon thy high places!” Kennicott, Diss. i. p. 123.

Ver. 26. Brother. So they lamented, Alas! my brother. Jer. 22:18. M.—Women. He indicates the ardour of his love, not any inordinate affection. D.—I love thee more than any person can love a woman, (C.) more than women can love their husbands or children. M.—Chal. “thy love is more wonderful to me than the love of two who are espoused.”—As, &c. This is not found in Heb. Sept. or S. Jerom. C.

Ver. 27. Perished, falling into the hands of the enemy; though Saul and Jonathan may be styled the arms, as well as the shield, of Israel. M.—No character could be more worthy of praise than the latter. His breast was never agitated by envy, though he seemed to be the most interested to destroy David. Even Saul had many excellent qualities; which makes Ven. Bede compare him in those respects with Jesus Christ; as most of the memorable persons and events of the Old Testament had a view to Christ on the one hand, and to the Synagogue on the other. Saul is one of the most striking figures of the reprobation and conduct of the Jewish church. As he was adorned with many glorious prerogatives, and chosen by God, yet he no sooner beheld the rising merit of David, than he began to persecute him: so the Jews had been instructed by the prophets, and had been selected as God’s peculiar inheritance; and nevertheless took occasion from the virtues and miracles of the Son of God, to conspire his ruin. The Romans were sent to punish the Jews, who are now become the most abject of all mankind, and are filled with rage, seeing the exaltation of the Christian Church, as Saul was reduced by the Philistines to the greatest distress, and his children were forced to implore the protection of the man whom he had so cruelly persecuted, &c. C.—Saul and Judas may be a warning to us, that no person ought to live without fear, since they perished so miserably, though they had been elevated by the hand of God. S. Amb. &c. H.

Ver. 1. Juda. David thought it was his duty to co-operate with the designs of Providence. He consults the Lord (C.) by means of Abiathar, (Abul.) or by a prophet. Joseph.—Hebron, ennobled by the patriarchs. M.—It was also in the centre of Juda, and the strongest place belonging to that tribe. C.—Part of Jerusalem was still in the hands of the Jebusites. H.

Ver. 3. Towns, villages, and dependencies of Hebron.

Ver. 4. Juda, without the concurrence of the other tribes, (C.) which would be an evil precedent in a commonwealth, unless God had authorized them by the declaration of his will. Grot.—Samuel had before anointed David, and given him a right to the crown, (W.) jus ad regnum. But this anointing gives him a right to govern, jus in regno; (C.) or rather it proves, that the tribe submitted voluntarily to his dominion, which he had already (H.) lawfully begun to exercise, when he put the Amalecite to death. Abulensis. T.—Told, perhaps by some ill-designing men, who wished to irritate David against those who had shewn an attachment to Saul, unless the king had made enquiry, thinking it his duty to bury the deceased. C.

Ver. 6. And truth, or a real kindness. God will reward you for the sincere piety which you have shewn towards the dead. C.—Will. I do, by these messengers, thank you. Louis de Dieu.

Ver. 7. King. He invites them to concur with the men of Juda, hoping that all Israel would be influenced by their example. But his hopes proved abortive, as Abner caused Isboseth to be proclaimed king in the vicinity at Mahanaim.

Ver. 8. Camp. Heb. Machanayim, which many take for a proper name (C.) of the town, on the river Jabok, where Jacob had encamped. Gen. 32:2. H.—Abner was aware that he should not retain his authority under David, and therefore conducted Isboseth to the camps in various places, (M.) but chiefly on the east side of the Jordan, (H. v. 29.) where the people were particularly attached to Saul's family. Isboseth seems to have been a fit tool for his purpose.

Ver. 9. Gessuri. There was one south of Juda: but this country was probably near Hermon, and might be tributary to Israel. David perhaps married this king's daughter, in order to detach him from the party of Isboseth. C. 3:3. Heb. reads, "Assuri;" and S. Jerom observes, that many explained it of the tribe of Aser, (Trad. Heb.) with the Chaldee, (D. M.) or of the Assurians. Gen. 25:3.—Israel, by degrees. In the mean time the Philistines occupied many cities, which might prevent Isboseth from attempting to fix his residence on the west side of the Jordan, v. 19.

Ver. 10. He reigned two years, viz. before he began visibly to decline: but in all he reigned seven years and six months: for so long David reigned in Hebron. Ch. W.—The Jews admit of an interregnum in Israel of above five years, which is by no means probable. Two years elapsed before the two houses came to an open war; (Salien) soon after which, the power of Isboseth was greatly weakened by the defeat, and afterwards by the defection, of Abner. H.—Hence the sacred historian refers to the commencement of hostilities, and not to the end of Isboseth's dominion. E. T. C.

Ver. 12. Servants; guards, army. M.—Camp; or from Machanayim to Gabaon, in the tribe of Benjamin, about six miles from Jerusalem. C.—Sept. leave the former word untranslated, “Manaeim.” H.

Ver. 14. Play, like the gladiators with drawn swords, which formed one of the principal diversions at Rome, (C.) while it was pagan. This might be considered as a prelude to the ensuing engagement; or like a detachment of twelve on each side, fighting to shew the prowess of their respective armies; as the three Horatii and Curiatii did afterwards, to spare the effusion of blood. But there is no mention that Abner and Joab had authority to agree that these champions should decide the fate of the two kingdoms, (H.) whence they are generally accused of ostentation; though the soldiers, not being acquainted with their motives, were obliged to obey. T. M.

Ver. 16. Together. Some understand this only of Abner's soldiers, as the original may be explained: “And they (David's men) caught every on one his,” &c. But it is more generally believed that all fell. C.—Rufin has erroneously translated Josephus in the former sense, and has lead Comestor, Lyran, &c. into this opinion. T.—Valiant. Heb. “the portion of the smooth stones, (hatsurim, 1 K. 17:40. or) of the brave.” C.

Ver. 18. Woods. Swiftness was one great qualification of a warrior. C. 1:23. Homer generally styles Achilles, “the swift-footed.”

Ver. 21. Spoils. Attack one who may be a more equal match for thee. H.

Ver. 22. Brother. It seems they were great friends, though they had espoused different parties. C.

Ver. 23. Stroke, (aversâ.) Heb. “with the hinder end of the spear, under the fifth rib.” Sept. “in the loin.”

Ver. 24. Wilderness, or land which was not ploughed, though fruitful.

Ver. 26. Destruction. Sept. “till thou hast gained a complete victory?” Chal. “to separation?” Must we come to an eternal rupture?—Despair? Heb. “that it will be bitterness in the end?” Abner insinuates that they had commenced in a sort of play, but the consequences had already proved too serious; and if Joab continued to pursue, his men would be rendered desperate. C.—Despair makes people perform wonders, to revenge themselves. M.

Ver. 27. Sooner. Heb. “If thou hadst not spoken,” (D.) by challenging, v. 14. Josephus, &c. C.

Ver. 28. Trumpet. It was not dishonourable for a general to do this himself. C. 18:16. But among the Hebrews, the priests generally performed this office. C.

Ver. 29. Beth-horon. Sept. “the extended plain.” Heb. Bithrun, (H.) or the country towards the Jordan. C.—Thus the battle ended in his disgrace; (H.) and many from all Israel began to flock to the standard of David. 1 Par. 12:22. T.

Ver. 32. Day, after a march of ten hours. Adric. M.

2 KINGS 3

Ver. 1. War, the particulars of which are not given. C.—But David’s power continually increased, and he was blessed with many children. H.—“Legions and fleets are not such strong bulwarks of the throne, as a numerous family.” Tacit. Hist. v.

Ver. 2. Amnon, who was murdered by Absalom, for his incest. C. 13:32. M.

Ver. 3. Cheleab, or Daniel. 1 Par. 3:1. Sept. “Dalnia.” C.—Alex. “Dalouja.” H.—Others, “Abia.”—Gessur, not far from Damascus. The lady probably first embraced the true religion, though the Scripture seldom enters into these details. C.—David is never blamed for marrying strange women. Salien supposes that he entered into this alliance before the civil war broke out, that Isboseth, who had fixed his court at Mahanaim, might have an opponent near at hand. The fruits of this marriage were very unfortunate, and brought great distress upon David: so little do men know what will be the event of the most splendid connections! H.

Ver. 4. Adonias was slain by Solomon, (3 K. 2:24. M.) for arrogating to himself the right of the first-born, and pretending that the crown belonged to him. H.—The names of his mother, and of those who follow, are barely known. Salien.

Ver. 5. Wife. She was otherwise of no nobility, but perhaps loved by David more than the rest, as Rachel was by Jacob. The Rabbins would infer that Eglā and Michol are the same person. But the latter had no children, (C. 6:23. Salien) and is mentioned v. 13.

Ver. 8. Concubine. To marry the king's widow was deemed an attempt upon the throne. 3 K. 2:22. Hence Solomon was so displeased at Adonias, v. 24. Some think that Isboseth formed the accusation on mere conjecture; but Abner does not deny the fact. C.—Dog's head: of no account, like a dead dog; (H.) or no better than a servant, who leads a dog. The Jews considered the dog as one of the vilest of animals. C. 9:8, Job 30:1.—Juda. This word is neglected by the Sept. Some would substitute Liduth, “to be cast away.” C.—God permits the defenders of a wrong cause to fall out, that the right one may be advanced. W.

Ver. 9. Sworn. It seems therefore that he knew of God's appointment, and had hitherto resisted it for his own temporal convenience. H.—If both he and Isboseth were ignorant of this decree, Abner had no right to deprive the latter of the crown. Abulensis, q. 7. M.

Ver. 11. Him. And no wonder; since even David could not repress the insolence of his chief commander, v. 39. So Otho “had not yet sufficient authority to hinder the perpetration of crimes.” Tacit. Hist. i.

Ver. 12. Himself. Heb. may be also “immediately,” (Piscat.) or “in secret,” (Kimchi) as the matter seems not to have transpired. C.—Sept. Alex. “to Thelam, where he was, without delay, saying, Make,” &c. H. —Land? Is it not thine? or have not I the disposal of a great part of it? M.

Ver. 13. Thee. Could David thus authorize treachery? It is answered, that Abner knew that the throne belonged to him, and he was already responsible for all the evils of the civil war. David does not approve of his conduct, but only makes use of him to obtain his right.—Michol. He might justly think that the people would have less repugnance to acknowledge him for their sovereign, when they saw that he had married the daughter of Saul. she had never been repudiated by him. C.

Ver. 14. Isboseth. Thus he would screen the perfidy of Abner, (M.) and hinder him from using any violence. C.—The pacific king accedes immediately to the request, as he had no personal aversion to David, and saw that he was in a far more elevated condition than Phaltiel. H. —Moreover, this was no time to irritate him more, as Abner was discontented. M.

Ver. 16. Bahurim, in the tribe of Benjamin. Adric. 28.

Ver. 18. Enemies. We read not of this promise elsewhere. But how many other things are omitted in the sacred books? C.—Abner alleges God's decree, that he may not be deemed a traitor. Cajet.

Ver. 19. Benjamin, which tribe was naturally most attached to Saul's family. They followed, however, the example of the ten tribes, and 20 of them accompanied their general to Hebron. Salien.

Ver. 20. Feast, through joy at the reception of his wife, and of such good news. M.

Ver. 21. And may. Some Latin copies read with the Heb. "and it (Israel) may enter," ineat.

Ver. 22. Robbers. Amalecites, (Salien) or Philistines, who had made some incursions into David's territories. Abulensis.

Ver. 25. Dost. This explains going out, &c. H.—Joab pretends to be wholly solicitous for the king's welfare. But he was afraid lest Abner should take his place, and he also desired to revenge Asael's death. M.

Ver. 26. Messengers, in the king's name.—Sira. See Judg. 3:26. Josephus says the place was 20 stadia from Hebron. Ant. vii. 1.

Ver. 27. Middle. Sept. "sides."—Brother; (who had been wounded in the same place) a just punishment of Abner's licentiousness. Salien.—This was given out as the pretext of the murder; but envy seems to have been the chief promoter. M.—Joab treated Amasa in the same manner. C. 20:10. Ambition was his god. C.—Abisai was ready to assist him to murder Abner, v. 30. Thus the fairest prospects of union seemed to vanish, and David was sincerely grieved, as he manifested in the most decided manner, confessing it was only the want of power which prevented him from bringing these merciless and potent brothers, his own nephews, to immediate punishment, v. 39. H.

Ver. 28. Innocent. I would not purchase a kingdom at such a price. C.—I beg that the crime may not be imputed to us, who are innocent. H.—God sometimes punishes a whole kingdom for the sins of the rulers. M.—Yet not without some fault of the subjects. H.

Ver. 29. Issue. Such were looked upon as unclean, (Lev. 15:3,) and incapable of having children. Aquila translates zab, "blind." Sept. "afflicted with the gonorrhœa."—Distaff, like eunuchs. Delrio, adag. 190. Claud in Eutrop. Tu telas non tela pati, &c. Some translate a stick, with which the blind, lame and aged endeavour to walk. C.—Any of these conditions would be very mortifying to great warriors. H.—Bread. Hunger and famine were considered as a scourge of God. Ps. 58:7, 15, and 108:10. David is not moved with hatred, but foretells what will befall the posterity of these men, whose crime he abhors. C.

Ver. 31. Joab. Requiring him to make some reparation, at least, for the offence, and to render the funeral pomp more solemn. All were obliged to rend their garments, and to put on sackcloth, on such occasions. It was very rough, and consisted chiefly of goat and camel's hair.—Bier, contrary to the custom of kings. Some copies of the Sept. say, he “went before the bier,” (C.) where women commonly were placed. Grotius.

Ver. 33. Died. Heb. “Is Abner dead, like Nabal,” “a fool,” (Chal.) “like the wicked?” “Ought so brave a man to have died in this treacherous manner?”

Ver. 34. Iniquity. David does not spare Joab, in this canticle, which was sung by all the people. C.—He intimates, that if he had not used deceit, Abner would not have been so easily overcome. H.

Ver. 35. David. Heb. “to cause David to eat meat” (H.) at the feast, which usually accompanied funerals. Gen. 50:3. C.

Ver. 38. Israel. And that all this pomp is not unseasonable. M.—The chief, if not the only virtue of Abner, was military skill, or a blunt valour.

Ver. 39. King. Sept. “and that I am to-day a relation, (by my wife) and appointed king by the king?” H.—He seemed as yet to have little more than the title. His throne was not well established; (C. W.) and to undertake to punish the offenders now, might have had so pernicious consequences as the attempt of Isboseth to correct his general. H.—It is better to temporize than to increase the distemper, (C.) by a fruitless zeal for justice. H.—The punishment was only deferred. 3 K. 2:5. M.—Hard. Powerful or insupportable. C.—This year was memorable for the death of Codrus, king of Athens. Salien, A. 2985.

Ver. 1. Isboseth is omitted in Heb. but understood. He is expressed in the Sept. The Alex. copy generally substitutes Memphibosthai, by mistake; as he (Miphiboseth) was the son of Jonathan, v. 4. H.—Weakened. Hitherto Abner had been the chief support of Saul's family.

His traitorous practices had been kept secret from Isboseth, (C.) who hoped that his former declaration had been dictated by a sudden passion, and would not be carried into effect. C. 3:10. H.—Troubled, not knowing what turn things would now take, and fearing the resentment of the sons of Sarvia, though they were convinced of David's good dispositions. Salien, A.C. 1067.

Ver. 2. Bands, (Latronum.) Lit. “robbers,” or people who live on plunder, like the posterity of Ismael, and of Esau. Gen. 27:40. The life-guards of princes are often styled latrones, (C.) from their being stationed at their “sides,” as if Laterones. M.

Fixumque latronis,
Impavidus frangit telum. Æn. xii. 7.

See Servius. Judg. 11:3.—Beroth was one of the towns of the Gabaonites. It is not certain that the inhabitants retired, in consequence of the persecution of Saul; but they went to the territory of Geth, or to another town of Benjamin. 2 Esd. 11:33. C.

Ver. 3. That. Heb. &c. “this day,” when the historian wrote. M.

Ver. 4. Miphiboseth. All from Beroth, (v. 2,) may be included within a parenthesis, being only mentioned here to let us know the state of affairs, (H.) and how the son of Jonathan could have no pretensions of the crown. Grot. C.—He would be almost 12 years old at the death of his uncle. H.

Ver. 5. At noon, “to divide the day,” as Varro (3:2,) writes. This custom is very prevalent in hot countries.—And the, &c. is all omitted in Heb. and in most ancient MSS. of S. Jerom's version. It is taken from the Sept. (C.) who do not notice any farther the taking ears of corn, v. 6. H.—Probably the Heb. had this sentence formerly. D.—It was customary to have women to keep the doors; (Mat. 26:69,) and they were often employed in cleansing wheat. Petronius says, in lance argentea pisum purgabat. C.—The ears of corn, hardly ripe, were cleansed, and used as a delicious food. T. 1 K. 17:17. Sanctius.

Ver. 6. Corn. Soldiers were paid with corn, instead of money. They came, therefore, under this pretext; or they brought some as a present to the king, (Liran) or pretended that they were come to purchase, (M.) or bringing a sample to sell; (T.) ut emptores tritici. Chal. Prot. “as though they would have fetched wheat, and they smote him under the fifth rib.”

Ver. 7. Parlour. Heb. “bed-chamber.”—Wilderness. Avoiding places frequented. H.—The distance was about 40 leagues, which they could not travel in one night. C.—Adrichomius says it was 30 hours' walk. Sept. "west-ward." H.

Ver. 8. Life. They wish to recall to David's remembrance what Saul had done against him, that he may approve the more of what they had perpetrated. M.—They supposed that, as Abner had been well received, they should obtain still greater favour. Salien.

Ver. 11. Innocent. Isboseth was such, at least, in their regard. He might also have mounted his father's throne, bona fide; and, at any rate, it was not their business to decide the matter (C.) in this treacherous manner. Thus Alexander punished Bessus, who had murdered his master, Darius, with whom the former was at war. H.

Ver. 12. Feet, while they were alive, (Theodoret. M.) almost as Adonibezec had treated many; (Judg. 1:6,) or they were first put to death, and the parts cut off were fastened to a cross; as the head and right hand of Cyrus were by his brother Artaxerxes. Xenop. Anab. iii. C.—Josephus seems to be of the former opinion, saying, "he ordered them to be executed in the most excruciating torments," "while the head of Jebosthe (Isboseth) was buried with all honour." Ant. vii. 2.—Thus David convinced the people that he would punish crimes, when it was in his power, and that he would give no encouragement to the treason or perfidy of any one. H.

Ver. 1. Tribes. Thus were God's promises sweetly fulfilled, and David obtained the quiet dominion over all Israel, excepting perhaps a few of the tribe of Benjamin, according to the Vulgate. 1 Par. 12:29. An army of 340,822 was collected on this occasion; and David signalized the commencement of his reign, by the taking of Jerusalem. C.—The tribe is Issachar is not specified in the text; but Josephus asserts, that 20,000 of them assembled; so that the army would amount to 359 (Salien) or 60 thousand, besides the 822. C.—These might be considered as deputies of all the rest of their brethren, 1 Par. 12:38. They were abundantly supplied with all necessities. Salien.—Flesh, of the same nation, as Moses had specified. Deut. 17:15. C.—They now relinquish all the seeds of division, which had before hindered them from joining with their brethren of Juda. Kennicott discovers several important alterations, by comparing this history with 1 Chron. 11. Dissert. i. H.

Ver. 2. Lead out to battle. His experience in war was a great recommendation. H.—Feed, as a shepherd, under which character he is first represented. H.—Other rulers were afterwards honoured with the same title, (C.) particularly the governors of the Church. Act. 20. &c. David's name is written without i, in the books before the captivity; whence Kennicott would infer, that the canticles were perhaps not the work of Solomon, as the i occurs there; Duid for Dud. H.

Ver. 3. Ancients; princes of the tribes, and officers, (C.) with all the chief magistrates. H.—The high priest, Abiathar, received the oaths of allegiance from the people, and of the king, who promised to govern according to the laws of God. The ark was probably present, and innumerable sacrifices offered on this solemn occasion, as was usual. 1 Par. 12:26. Hebron continued to be a place of sacrifices. C. 15:7. C.—David had erected here a temporary altar and tabernacle, where Abiathar officiated in his pontifical robes, as it was not safe for the people to go into the dominions of Isboseth, either to Gabaon or to Cariathiarim. Tostat.—Israel, acknowledging the right which David had to the throne, by God's appointment. H. W.

Ver. 4. Forty, a round number, as another half year is specified below; (C.) or Solomon might be crowned at the expiration of the 40th year. D.

Ver. 6. Land. This was the only canton which the infidels still retained, as they had still possession of the citadel of Jebus, (C.) though the Israelites had been in the country above 400 years. Ken.—Nothing could reflect greater glory on the beginning of David's reign, than the seizing of this place, (C.) which was deemed so impregnable, that the Jebusites thought the blind and the lame were sufficient to defend it. H.—They placed some upon the walls, (M.) “despising him, on account of the strength of their walls.”

Ver. 7. Castle: “the lower city,” (Josephus) spread over Mount Sion.

Ver. 8. Gutters. Heb. Tsinnor, “through (Nodius) the subterraneous passage,” (leading to the tops of the houses.) Hugo of Vienna.—Thus Babylon was taken by Cyrus, who passed through the channel of the Euphrates, the waters of which he had let out; though the inhabitants had derided his attempt to take the city by siege, as the men of Jebus do here. Polybius says, “Rabatamana, a city of Arabia, could not be taken, till one of the prisoners shewed the besiegers a subterraneous passage, (υπονομον) through which the besieged came down for water.” Of the same nature were the gutters here spoken of. Ken.—“The king promised to give the command of the army to the man who would pass through the cavities (φωραγγων) below, and take the citadel.” Josephus.—This reward is expressly mentioned in 1 Paral. 11:6, with the person who obtained it; (S. Jer. Trad.) and it seems, after David, this ought to be inserted, “shall be the head and captain. And Joab, the son of Sarvia, went up first, and was made the general.” H.—Hatred. Heb. “that are hated by David’s soul.” Cajetan supposes that the Jebusites in the citadel, are thus distinguished from those who dwelt peaceably in the lower town, with the Israelites. C.—Proverb. Prot. insert, “He shall be head and captain. Wherefore they said, the blind ... into the house.” What is translated temple, may denote also, “the house” of David, or “the place” where this provocation had been given. H.—Idols shall never be adored in the true Church. W.—Some think that the blind and the lame were excluded from the temple, or from David’s palace. But we find that they had free access to the temple; (Mat. 21:14, Acts 3:2) and Miphiboseth ate at David’s table, though he was lame. If the Jebusites be designated, they were already excluded from the temple, like other infidels of Chanaan. C.—Josephus (vii. 3.) insinuates, that “David drove them from Jerusalem,” though we read of Areuna residing there. C. 24:16. But he might be a proselyte before, and not dwell in the fort. The expression seems however to be proverbial, to signify any very difficult enterprize, which proves successful, and contrary to expectation. H.—The Jebusites were thus derided (Sanctius) in their turn. T.—Whether Joab took this strong place by a subterraneous passage, (H.) or scaled the walls, and so got to the top, whence the water falls, as from a gutter; (C.) it is certain that he displayed the utmost valour, and thus obtained the confirmation of his authority, which David would perhaps have willingly taken from him, (Salien) if another had offered himself, and performed this hazardous enterprize. H.—He made a fair offer to all Israel, as they probably expected. Kennicott.

Ver. 9. Inwards. He built or repaired the higher “city of David,” beginning at Mello, to “fill up” the valley, which Solomon finished, and adorned with a palace. 3 K. 9:15, 4 K. 12:20. The place is probably called Asaramel. 1 Mac. 14:27. C.—Sept. and Josephus generally understand Mello to designate the citadel of Sion, or “a complete fortification,” to defend the city. Instead of inwards, the Sept. have, “and his house.” But ubithe means, “and to the house,” temple, or fort, whence he began the enclosure, so as to make a complete communication. Ken.—This city became “the most famous in all the East.” Plin. v. 14.—“Walls, built in a crooked manner, according to the rules of art, enclosing two hills, immensely high.” Tacit. Hist. v.—These hills were multiplied, on account of their different summits, so that Josephus speaks of five hills. The palace of David stood on Sion, the temple on Moria, which was a part of it still more elevated, towards the east. The other hill is often called Acra, by Josephus, and lay southward of Sion. Here the ancient town of Jebus was built. The Machabees took in an adjoining eminence. Joseph. Bel. vi. 6.—Bethsetta, or the new city, was afterwards enclosed. Herod adorned the city with many superb monuments, both of a public and of a private nature. C.—We read of ten gates, and of four towers, belonging to this city. It was not well supplied with water, and what it had was brackish. The walls seem never to have exceeded four and a half miles; now they are only three, and include Mount Calvary, which was formerly no part of the city. Button says a valley run from west to east, between the two hills of Zion on the south, and Acra on the north; which contradicts the former statement. H.—Villalpand supposes that the citadel was nine and a half stadia, and all the city thirty-five stadia in circumference, eight of which make an Italian mile. M.

Ver. 11. Hiram was a magnificent prince, who kept up a correspondence with Solomon. He greatly adorned the city of Tyre. See Josep. c. Ap. 1.

Ver. 12. Over. Heb. “for.” The king is bound to promote the welfare of his people. C.—But the same word means “over,” as the Prot. allow. H.—Success constantly attending David, was an earnest that the Lord had not rejected him. C.

Ver. 13. David took more concubines and wives of Jerusalem. Not harlots, but wives of an inferior condition: for such in Scripture are styled concubines. Ch.—He had in all eight wives, and ten whom he married with less solemnity. He might desire to attach the principal families of the nation, as well as some foreign princes, to his interests. Moses forbids a king to have too many wives. Deut. 17:17. C.—But David is never blamed for the transgression of this precept. See C. 3:1. M.

Ver. 16. Eliphalet. Sept. reckon twenty instead of eleven. C.—The Vat. copy has twenty-four, as some of the names have been read differently, so as to make two persons, and thus frequently a double translation occurs in the Sept. the one being taken either from Aquila, &c. or from some more early version, of which we know not the author. Grabe. Kennicott, Diss. ii. p. 404.

Ver. 17. Seek, or attack David. He went out to meet them. Par. But receiving an order not to join battle as yet, retired to Odollam, (C. 23:13, 1 Par. 11:15. C.) a strong hold, with which he was perfectly acquainted. H.

Ver. 18. Raphaim. Sept. “of Titans,” C. or giants who had dwelt there. M.—It lay to the west (M.) or south of Jerusalem, and extended as far as Bethlehem. David was still more to the south, (C.) so that he seemed to be cut off from his capital. But it was secure enough. H.—On this occasion, three of his brave men went through the midst of the enemies’ ranks, to fetch water from the spring of Bethlehem. C. 23:16.

Ver. 20. Baal-Pharisim, “the master of the divisions or god of the scattered;” as the place was afterwards called, in memory that David became master, and put the enemy to flight, taking their idols, (C.) which were unable to save themselves. H.

Ver. 21. Away, and burnt. Par. The ark had on the contrary proved fatal to the gods, and to the people of the Philistines; who might hence perceive the difference there was between the true God and their false gods.

Ver. 23. Shall, &c. This consultation is omitted in Heb. C.—Prot. “and when David inquired of the Lord, he said, “Thou shalt not,” &c. Sept. “and David,” &c. H.—Trees. Heb. Becaim. Sept. “of lamentation.” Judg. 2:1.

Ver. 24. Trees. Many translate the Heb. “mulberry trees,” or leave the original word, becaim, “the heights of Bochim.” Sept. seem to give a double version: “the sound of the agitation (or Alex. “shutting up,” (H.) as with an army on all sides) of the woods, of the lamentation.” M.—Theodoret supposes, “the woods put in motion, without any wind.” It is thought that an army of spirits went before David, and threw the enemy into a panic. Storms of hail, &c. seem to have also cut them down. Isai. 28:21, Ps. 17:9.

Ver. 25. Gabaa, which some would understand of “the hills” of Bochim. C.—But in Sept. (Alex.) and in Par. we read Gabaon, a city near the birth-place of Saul. H.—David pursued the enemy by Gabaa, and took from them all the cities of which they had taken possession, after their victory. C.—Gezer was in the tribe of Ephraim, (M.) on the confines of the Philistines. C.

Ver. 1. Again, after he had been anointed. David consulted his officers, &c. (1 Par. 13:1) and called a numerous assembly of the priests and people to meet him at Cariathiarim.—Thousand, in arms, to protect the rest, (C.) who might probably amount to 300,000. H.—This number Capel and Grotius would substitute for the one here mentioned. Some copies of the Sept. read 70,000. In the former assembly, there were 340, or 359, (C.) or 60 thousand. C. 5:1. H.

Ver. 2. Juda. But why are not the other tribes mentioned? and whither did they go? We should probably translate, “from the city of Baalim, in Juda;” which is another name of Cariathiarim, as the Par. insinuate, v. 6. See Jos. 15:9, 60.—Invoked; or which is called “the ark of the Lord.”

Ver. 3. Cart, out of respect, as the Philistines had done, 1 K. 6:7. But God had ordered the Levites to carry it themselves, and the neglect here proved so dreadful; for which reason, David required the priests to attend when he removed the ark from the house of Obedom, 1 Par. 15:12.—Gabaa means “the hill of Cariathiarim,” where the ark had been in the house of Abinadab, from the time of its being restored back by the Philistines. Ch.—Hunnius would multiply the places where the ark was fixed, to show, against Catholics, that the Church is not confined to one place; (Amama) as if Catholic did not maintain the universality of the Church! H.

Ver. 5. Wood. Heb. specifies “fir wood,” of which the instruments were, perhaps, usually made.

Ver. 6. Nachon. 1 Par. Chidon. Heb. may be rendered, “prepared;” (Chal.) as they were almost arrived at the end (C.) of the procession.—His hand, is wanting in Heb. Kennicott.—Kicked. Prot. “shook it.” H.

Ver. 7. Rashness. Heb. shal, means also “error, ignorance,” &c. Syr. and Arab. better, “because he put forth his hand.” Kennicott.—Oza had touched the ark uncovered, (Serarius) shewing too little confidence in God, as if he could not have hindered it from falling; (Rabbins) or perhaps he was the advisor of the ark’s being placed upon a cart, instead of the Levites’ shoulders. T.—It is not certain that he was a Levite; and the privilege belonged to the sons of Caath, who could claim this honour only after the ark had been folded up with three covers. Moreover, the priests seem to have been always selected to carry the ark, after they came into the promised land, v. 3, 1 K. 4:4. &c. It is hoped that the fault of Oza would be expiated by his sudden death, (C.) as his intention was laudable. T.—But God would teach his ministers with what caution they were to treat sacred things, (C.) and how exactly all his injunctions were to be observed. H.

Ver. 10. Gethite, a native of Geth-remmon, a Levitical city; (Jos. 21:24,) or he might have been born at Geth; (C.) or his father might have resided there a long time, (Serar. T.) unless he was there with David. Salien.—He was a Levite, 1 Par. 15:18 and 16:5. and 26:4. C.

Ver. 12. Choirs. Or companies of musicians. Ch.—This sentence is not found in Heb. nor in S. Jerom's version. C.—The Vat. and Alex. Sept. have, "David brought the ark of the Lord from the house of Obeddara, into the city of David, with joy; (13) and there were seven choirs with him, taking up the ark, and the sacrifice, a calf and lamb; (14) and David played on tuneful organs before the Lord; and David had on a beautiful stole." H.

Ver. 13. Paces. So altars of turf (Grot.) were erected at this distance from each other, on each side of the road. The pagans have sometimes treated their emperors and deities with the like respect. Sueton. in Otho and Calig.—Paris thus addresses Helena in Ovid's Heroic Epistles.

*Ibis Dardanias ingens Regina per urbes,
Teque novam vulgus credet adesse Deam,
Quaque feres gressus, adolebunt cynnama flammæ,
Cœsaque sanguineam victima planget humum.*

Ver. 14. Ephod which ordinarily was the habit of priests. But no law restrained others from using it, (C.) particularly on sacred occasions; as we often see laics in a surplice, when they have to sing Church music, &c. M.—David had also on a cloak of byssus; (Paral.) and still Michol speaks as if he had been uncovered; because in this solemn ceremony, he was inspired to divest himself of his royal robes, and to act with a degree of enthusiasm; (H.) which would not have been otherwise becoming in a king. David is considered by some of the fathers as a figure of the priests of the new law; as he ate the loaves of proposition, was dressed like priests, &c. Sacerdos scitus erat David. 1 Iræn. iv. S. Amb. v. in Luc. vi. C.

Ver. 16. Leaping. Sept. "beating" musical instruments ... she counted him as nothing, &c. H.—She rather partook of her father's disposition and pride. M.

Ver. 18. Blessed. Wishing all sorts of happiness. Only priests and kings perform this function publicly, 3 K. 8:55. Afterwards David went to his palace, to impart the same blessing to his family, and particularly to the women, who had not been present. This is a vestige of the sacerdotal power, which masters of families formerly enjoyed.

Ver. 19. Cake, made very thin, with a mixture of oil.—Beef, sufficient for a meal.—Oil. This was much esteemed in those days. Many would translate the Heb. "a bottle of wine."

Ver. 20. Fellows. Sept. "dancers." Michol exaggerates, as David had been guilty of no indiscretion, v. 14. C.—S. Gregory (Mor. xxvii. 27,) styles her "insane." Yet Abulensis does not sufficiently approve of David's conduct. M.

Ver. 22. Eyes. Humility in a king is truly noble.—Glorious. He accepts the compliment of Michol, though she had spoken ironically. H.

Ver. 23. Death. Thus was she punished. The five sons who are attributed to her (C. 21:8) were only adopted; or perhaps we ought to read Merob, in stead of Michol; (C.) as the latter had been connected with Phaltiel, and not with Adriel, who was the former's husband. H.

Ver. 1. Enemies, before he had made war upon the surrounding nations. 1 Par. 18:1.

Ver. 2. Nathan. An admirable courier, (Grot.) and a great saint, Eccli. 47. He was neither too rough, nor too complaisant.—Cedar. This was the most esteemed species of wood. The palace of the Persian kings, at Ecbatana, was chiefly built of it, and of cypress wood. Polyb. x.—Houses were not there built in such a solid manner, as they are in colder climates. They consisted mostly of wood.—Skins. The outer veils of the tabernacle were made of skins, as others generally were. C.—Heb. and Chal. "of curtains."

Ver. 3. Thee. David did not, perhaps, consult him as a prophet; and Nathan thought that the proposal was so just, that it might be safely carried into effect. The prophets are not inspired in all their actions. Joseph was of a different opinion from his father. Gen. 48:19. Samuel supposed that Eliab should have been king; (1 K. 16:6,) and Eliseus confesses, that God had concealed from his the affliction of the woman with whom he lodged. 4 K. 4:24. C.—God afterwards sent the same Nathan to rectify his former decision, that he might not pass sentence, in future, without consulting him. M.

Ver. 7. Tribes. 1 Paral. 17:6, by the substitution of p for b, reads Shophete, "judges," which seems more natural. Some farther information is there given and we learn that the reason why David was denied the privilege of building a temple, was because he had been so much engaged in war. C.

Ver. 10. Before, provided they be faithful. These promises are conditional.

Ver. 11. House, or give thee children, who shall hold the sceptre. M.

Ver. 12. I will establish his kingdom. This prophecy partly relates to Solomon; but much more to Christ, who is called the Son of David in Scripture, and the builder of the true temple, which is the Church, his everlasting kingdom, which shall never fail, nor be cast off for any iniquity of her children. Ch.—God passes over all the children whom David had already, 3 K. 2:15. The temporal kingdom was enjoyed by David's posterity for a long time, sufficient to verify the expression for ever, as it is often used in Scripture. C.—But the spiritual kingdom of the Messiah will last till the end of time, and be perfected in eternity. H.—In these predictions we must always distinguish the type from the reality. C.

Ver. 14. Men, who are not to be entirely destroyed, like the Chanaanites. C.—This is not unlike the human temptation of which S. Paul speaks. 1 Cor. 10:13. See Ps. 72:5 and 88:33. H.—The rod of men denotes war, and stripes signify those punishments which God inflicts. S. Jer. Trad.—Some parts of this declaration regard Christ; others Solomon. Heb. 1:5. D.

Ver. 16. Faithful; or continue a long time. M. 3 K. 11:38.—Where is not the house of David? or how is this accomplished, except in the Church?—Thy face. Sept. “before me,” which is conformable to Ps. 88:38. David saw Solomon on the throne, and beheld the Messiah in spirit. C.—Souls departed still see what regards them, (Sa.) if they be happy. H.

Ver. 18. Lord. “More in soul, than by this posture of the body, remaining quiet in meditation and prayer.” Cajet.—Vatable says only kings were allowed to pary sitting, (Sa. M.) and they must be of the house of Juda. Maimon.—they say the priests always stood in the temple. But Josephus mentions seats of lead for them. Bel. vii. 11. The Heb. expression may denote no more, than that David continued for a long time in fervent prayer; Josephus says, prostrate on the ground before the ark. It is not so much the posture of the body as the fervour of the soul, which God regards. See S. Aug. ad Simp. ii. q. 4. Pythagoras ordered his disciples to pray sitting; and Homer represents Thetis in that attitude. C.—Far, in power and glory. H.

Ver. 19. God. Thus man wishes to be treated. This maxim prevails universally. People seek for their own and their children's happiness; a favour which thou hast graciously promised unto me. C.—Thus immortality, and all happiness, were proposed unto the first man. M.—Some use an interrogation; “Is this the law of Adam?” C.—Prot. “manner of man.” Can this felicity attend a man in his fallen state? Does the greatest friend treat his companion with so much condescension and regard? H.—In 1 Par. 17:17, it is thus expressed, and hast made me remarkable above all men, O Lord God. Osiander translates, “Behold the law of man, of the Lord God.” I now discern the mysterious union of the godhead with our humanity, in the person of the Son. C.—Luther attributes this version, Hæc est ratio hominis, qui Dominus Deus est, to Zisgler; and hence proves the incarnation. Amama and Tarnovius shew the weakness of the proof, though the article of faith be otherwise indubitable. H.—David is full of admiration that God should treat a weak mortal in such a manner. D.

Ver. 20. Unto thee. To express his sentiments of gratitude. M.—What more can he desire?

Ver. 21. Word’s sake. Some copies (H.) of the Sept. read “servant’s sake,” as 1 Par. 17. C.

Ver. 23. A name. So that all might praise God, for the favours which he had bestowed upon his people, (H.) and admire his power and glory.—Gods, whom thou didst cast out of Chanaan. Par. C.—From, is not expressed in the Vulg. or Heb. though Prot. also supply it. H.—Some explain Elohim, “gods,” of the chief men of the Hebrew nation. The power of the idols was overthrown; (Num. 33:4,) and the Israelites were rescued both from oppression, and from the service of false gods. Ezech. 16. C.—Adonai is often substituted for Jehova; as appears from 1 Par. 17:21, 22. Kennicott.

Ver. 25. Raise up. As long as the promises were not fulfilled, they seemed to be dormant. M.

Ver. 27. In his heart. Lit. “has found his heart,” (H.) following the inspirations of divine grace, to pray with attention and love, (C.) and confidence. H.

Ver. 29. Begin. Heb. “please, or deign to bless.” Sept. and Jonathan, “begin.” C.

2 KINGS 8

Ver. 1. Tribute. Aquila, and probably S. Jerom, translated, “cubit.” Others suppose that Amma, or Meteg-ama, is some unknown place, which David wrested from the hands of the Philistines. It is hardly probable that the Israelites would have paid the latter tribute till the 20th year of his reign, (C.) or even till the 12th. Salien.—He might now force them to pay tribute. S. Jerom, &c. H.—Perhaps a letter may have been transposed, and instead of Meteg, we should read, “Geth, the mother,” or metropolis, and its dependencies; (1 Par. 18:1) or “he took Metec, (Num. 33:28) and its mother,” Geth, which reconciles the two passages. Chald. &c. “he deprived them of the advantage of the rivulet.” Sept. “David took the separated” place, (Serar.) or the city of Geth. M.

Ver. 2. Earth, like criminals condemned to die. Theodoret.—Some of them he chose to spare, and made tributary, having levelled the strong places with the ground. Den. the Carthusian.—Sept. intimate that half were destroyed. C.—But the Heb. rather implies that the greatest part was saved, “a full cord to save alive;” (M.) unless there were three lots, and only one of them, larger indeed than the rest, spared. H.—Death, or slavery, were the portion of all who were taken in war. Grot. Jur. iii. 4. 20.—Lex nulla capto parcit aut pœnam impendit. Seneca.—Tribute. Heb. “brought gifts,” which is a softer term. The Moabites were thus punished for former and, probably, for some recent offences. H.

Ver. 3. Adarezer. He is styled Adadezer in Heb. and this seems to have been his true name, though it is written Adarezer in Paral. Adad, or “the sun,” was the chief idol of Syria, and the kings inserted the name with their own; as Benadad did. Josephus produces a fragment from Nicholaus of Damascus, in which he says that “Adad was king of Damascus, and of all Syria, except Phœnicia, and was defeated by David ... His successors took his name, as the kings of Egypt did that of Ptolemy; and that the third in descent from this king, made an attack upon Samaria,” and upon Achab. Ant. vii. 6.—Euphrates, which had been promised by God, Gen. 15:18, Num. 24:17. C.—Adadezer was probably the aggressor. Salien. M.

Ver. 4. A thousand. Protestants supply chariots, (H.) after the Sept. and 1 Par. (18:4) which have 7000 horsemen. See how we have attempted to reconcile these texts, 1 K. 13:5. Perhaps the numbers were expressed by single letters; and the Hebrew final n, (700) has been mistaken for z, (7000) both here and C. 10:18. Literis numeralibus non verbis antiquitus numeri concipiebantur. Scaliger, apud Walton prol. —“Will any other hypothesis so naturally solve this repeated difficulty?” Kennicott, Diss. on 1 Chron. xi p. 96 and 463.—Kimchi thinks that the king’s horse-guards are only specified here; and Salien supposes, that those who fought on chariots are also included in Chronicles, as they are often styled horsemen. Isai. 21:7, 9. M.—Houghed. Aquila, “destroyed.” He rendered them unfit for war, as Josue had don, (Jos. 11:6) supposing that this was the import of the decree, forbidding many horses to be kept, Deut. 17:16.—Horses is not expressed in Heb. though the Prot. supply the word; as also, for. We should translate lit. “He left out of them 100 chariots;” (H.) as we read elsewhere, that Adarezer had 1000. M.—But this expression being unintelligible, no less than, “he houghed all the chariots,” as the text stands at present in the original, may lead us to suspect that this verse has been inaccurately printed. Sept. “David paralyzed, (or rendered useless) all the chariots; and 100 chariots were reserved for himself out of them.” Josephus says the rest of the 1000 chariots were burnt, 5000 horse slain, and 20,000 foot. H.

Ver. 5. Men. As Adarezer had brought upon himself the arms of David, perhaps by attempting to succour the Moabites, as he afterwards did the children of Ammon; (C. 10) so the king of Damascus was ruined by coming too late to his assistance. This king may be the Adad mentioned by Nicholaus. B. 4. Salien, A. 2993, the 14th year of David. See v. 1 and 3.

Ver. 7. Arms. “Quivers.” Paral. and Syr. “Bucklers.” Heb. and Chal. “Bracelets.” Sept. C.—These bucklers might be for ornament, like those of Solomon. 3 K. 10:16. Salien.—They were taken afterwards by Sesac, king of Egypt. Joseph. vii. 6. H.

Ver. 8. Beroth, or Boroe. C.—Brass. All for the use of the temple. 1 Par. 18:8. The battle seems to have been fought near Beroth. Salien.

Ver. 9. Emath, or Emesa. Its king, Thou, being alarmed at the ambition of his neighbour Adarezer, (C.) was pleased with the victories of a prince from whom he thought he had less to fear, as the lived at a greater distance. H.

Ver. 10. Joram, called Adoram in Chron. C.—His, Joram’s hand. M.

Ver. 11. Subdued. This was the custom of most conquerors. But no prince was ever more religious in this respect than David. He had an officer appointed over the sacred treasure, which contained the presents of Samuel, Saul, &c. 1 Par. 26:26, 28.

Ver. 13. Name, or triumphal arch. Rabbins.—He acquired great fame. C. 17:9, 1 Mac. 5:57. M.—Syria, which is styled Aram in Heb. The Sept. have read Edom, or Idumea, as the two names have often been confounded, on account of the similarity of the letters. The following verse seems favourable to this reading, as well as the title of the Ps.

59.; and 1 Par. 18:12, says, Abisai ... slew of the Edomites, in the valley of the salt-pits, 18,000. It is probable that David was present. This Idumea was on the east of the Dead Sea, and had Bosra for its capital. The salt-pits might be a great plain, about three miles south of Palmyra or Thadmor, which supplies almost all Syria with salt. Brun. C.—Othes think that the borders of the most salt lake of Sodom are denoted. M. See Gen. 14:10.

Ver. 14. Guards, or officers to administer justice in his name, after Joab had killed all the males, during six months. 3 K. 11:15. C.

Ver. 15. All Israel, not only over Juda. M.—All the people who dwelt within the promised land, as far as the Euphrates, were forced to acknowledge his dominion. H.—People, settling their differences, &c. Kings formerly performed in person, the most important office of rendering justice; whence three kings of Crete are mentioned as judges in the realms below. C.—David acted with wisdom and justice. M.

Ver. 16. Sarvia, sister of David. 1 Par. 2:16.—Army. Joab had acquired such influence over it, that his power was formidable even to David. He was a great warrior, and had contributed more than any other person to establish the throne of his uncle; but he was devoid of justice, and not much unlike Achilles.

Jura negat sibi nata, nihil non arrogat armis. Horace.

Grot.—Recorder, or chancellor. Ch.—A commentariis. Aquila. —“Remembrancer,” (H.) or the person who kept a journal of all memorable transactions. The kings of Persia employed people to keep such journals. 1 Esd. 4:15, Est. 7:1. Joseph. xi. 2.—The power of these writers was very great. Judg. 5:14, 4 K. 18:18. C.—Reference is often made to their “words of days.” They had also to present petitions and memorials from the people. M.

Ver. 17. Achimelech is also called the father of Abiathar, as these two had both names indiscriminately. 1 K. 21:2. During the contest between the families of Saul and of David, two high priests were acknowledged, in their respective dominions. Sadoc was also permitted to officiate at Gabaon, during the reign of David; and, as Abiathar took part against Solomon, he was invested with the whole authority, and thus were accomplished the predictions made to Phinees and to Heli. Num. 25:12, 1 K. 2:35. C.—Yet Salien considers Abiathar as the sole pontiff, from the time that his father was murdered by Saul. Sadoc, in the mean while, was his arch-priest or delegate, at Gabaon; (H.) though Abulensis and Josephus acknowledge both as high priests, (1 Par. 24:3,) officiating by turns.

M.—Scribe, or secretary. Ch. See Judg. 5:14.—Sept. “counsellor.” He is called Susa, in Chronicles. H.

Ver. 18. The Cerethi and Phelithi. The king’s guards. Ch.—They were Philistines, and had attached themselves to David while he was at Geth, continuing always faithful to him. We read of them in the Vulgate, under the reign of Joas. 4 K. 11:19. David selected some out of all Israel, towards the end of his reign. 1 Par. 27.—Princes: literally, priests; (Cohen) so called, by a title of honour, and not for exercising the priestly function. Ch.—Sanctius translates, they “were like priests.” The book of 1 Par. 18:17,) explains, were chief about the king. Sept. “masters of the palace.” David kept them near his person, and employed them as he thought proper: Bertram thinks, in embassies, till after the revolt of Absalom, when Ira took their place. C. 20:26. C.—Prot. “David’s sons were chief rulers.” Chal. “grandees;” (H.) “ministers.” Grot. D.

Ver. 1. Saul. David was solicitous only about the descendants of Jonathan, who was the eldest son. The rest he afterwards gave up to be crucified, while he ordered the patrimony of Saul to be given to Miphiboseth, who was now about twenty years old. Salien, A.C. 1058.—It is rather wonderful that David had not thought of his old friend sooner. But we are not obliged to suppose that he had reigned fifteen years, without being mindful of his repeated promises to Jonathan. 1 K. 20:42. H.—This event took place towards the beginning of his reign. C.

Ver. 2. Servant, of free man of Saul, and a convert. Josephus. M.—Yet he might very well be a Hebrew, who refused to accept his liberty, and continued as superintendent over the rest of his master’s house, (v. 10,) like Eleazar, Joseph, (Gen. 24 and 39) or the servant of whom our Saviour speaks. Luke 12:42. C.

Ver. 4. Lodabar, probably on the east side of the Jordan. C.—Machir was a powerful man of the tribe of Manasses. M.

Ver. 7. Father, or grandfather. H.—It is thought that all his goods had been confiscated, in consequence of Isboseth’s assuming the regal dignity. C.—David might give the property to whom he pleased. M.—Always. This was a mark of the greatest distinction. Luke 22:30. The Romans sometimes made their slaves free, in this manner, per mensam.

C.

Ver. 9. Son, Miphiboseth. Some understand less correctly, (C.) “I have given to Micha, the son of Miphiboseth, all that belonged to Saul; and, as for Miphiboseth, I give him my table.” Munster. Vatab. Salien. M.—Saul’s patrimony might be administered by Siba, to support Micha. D.

Ver. 10. Servants under him, though all belonged to Miphiboseth. H.

Ver. 11. My table, if the king was pleased so to order. Sanchez.—It would seem that Siba did not properly understand the king. C.—The Sept. Syr. and Arab. read, perhaps more correctly u, “his,” instead of i, “my table,” in shulchani. “And Memphibosthai ate at David’s table, as one,” &c. H.—He did not merely eat of the king’s table, (v. 13,) but at it, super mensam, as the Heb. Chal. and Sept. express. M.

Ver. 13. Feet, from five years of age. C. 4:4. If we add the seven years and a half of his uncle’s reign, and suppose that David would take this notice of him, as soon as he had it in his power, after the taking of Jerusalem, we may conclude that he was about thirteen years old when he was presented to the king, and behaved with the most engaging modesty and respect. If he had already a son, (v. 12,) we may allow a few years more. H.

Ver. 2. Naas, whom Saul had defeated, and who on that account is supposed to have received his rival more willingly, (C.) when he had retreated into the country of Moab. 1 K. 22:3. After receiving many presents from Naas, he retired to Odollam. S. Jer. Tradit. M.—Though the Israelites were not to seek the friendship of these nations, (Deut. 23:6,) they were not forbidden to make a return of gratitude. M.

Ver. 3. It. Thus, by their insinuations, they pervert the good dispositions of their prince, and by too much policy bring ruin on the nation. H.—History affords many examples of similar effects of worldly wisdom. M.

Ver. 4. Away, having forced them as it were to go into mourning for the deceased king. These nations adopted the same customs as the Hebrews: they cut their hair, and rent their garments, to express their deep affliction. Isai. 15:2. The Arabs would deem it a great insult, and a piece of irreligion, to shave their beard. Darvieux vii. p. 175. Plutarch (Agesil) observes, that the Lacedemonians obliged those who acted in a cowardly manner in war, to wear only one wisker: and Herodotus (ii. 121,) takes notice of a person who, in contempt, cut off the beard on the right cheeks of some soldiers, who were placed to guard the body of his brother, who had been gibbeted, having first made them drunk, that he might take away the body. The garments (Aquila says, “the tunic,” Sept. “the cloak, or mandua,” which is a military garment used in Persia) were cut (C.) for the same purpose, like our spencers, (H.) that the ambassadors might be exposed to derision, as breeches were not usually worn, (C.) except by priests officiating. D.—This was in contempt of circumcision. M.—Yet we cannot suppose, but that the ambassadors would procure something to cover themselves before they arrived at Jericho, where they remained till their beard and the hair of their head (1 Par. 19) were grown. The city was not rebuilt, but there were some houses in the territory of that devoted place. Jos. 6:26. H.

Ver. 6. Rohob, the capital, between Libanus and Antibanus.—Soba was subject to Adarezer. C. 8:3.—Maacha, at the foot of Hermon.—Istob (Heb. ish tob) signifies, the man, or prince, or “the master of Tob,” (C.) where Jephthe lived. Judg. 11:5. D. Salien.—Josephus thinks that Istob is the name of a fourth king, who, together with the king of Micha, brought 22,000 into the field. The first he styles king “of the Mesopotamians,” (1 Par. 19:6) which Salien explains of the country between Abana and Pharphar, the two great rivers of Syria, (4 K. 5:12,) though, on this occasion, he allows that Adarezer hired forces from the utmost parts beyond the Euphrates. H.

Ver. 7. Warriors. The outrage offered to the ambassadors was a sufficient reason. The king of Ammon might have refused to receive them; but he could not, with any propriety, treat them with scorn. “The right of ambassadors has both a divine and human sanction.” Cicero, c. Verrem 3.—The Romans have frequently waged war to revenge such wrongs. Grot. Jur. ii. 18.

Ver. 8. Ammon. David was disposed to have lived in peace with this nation: but they voluntarily provoked his arms, after he had made such havoc upon all the neighbouring idolaters, and thus draw down the scourge of Providence; who suffers those to be blinded whom he has resolved to punish. The preparations for this war seem to have been greater than usual, and it continued for a longer period, and in the end proved destructive to all. H.—Gate of Medaba. Paral. Besides the 33,000 auxiliaries (v. 6) and the natives, 32,000 chariots of war were hired from beyond the Euphrates. 1 Par. 19:7.

Ver. 12. City, Jerusalem, the metropolis; or, all the cities of Israel.

Paral.

Ver. 15. Together, expecting that David would punish them farther. M.

Ver. 17. Helam. Ptolemy mentions Alamata, on the Euphrates. But perhaps we ought to read the Heb. Lehem, "he came upon them." See 1 Par. 19:17. Some translate, "he came to their army."

Ver. 18. Hundred. Paral. thousand, allowing ten men for each chariot. D. M.—The men is omitted in both texts. See C. 8:4. H.—Horsemen. Paral. reads, footmen, supplying what is here omitted, (Salien) so that 87,000 Syrians perished, unless there be a mistake of the transcribers. C.—Smote, though not perhaps with his own hand, as he slew so many thousands by means of his army. M.

Ver. 19. Before Israel. Heb. and Sept. only read, "And when all the kings, servants of Adarezer, saw that they were smitten before Israel, they made peace with Israel, and served them," &c. H.—The addition is not found in the ancient version of S. Jerom. These tributary kings lived in Syria, and some perhaps beyond the Euphrates. See Ps. 59. C.—The army had consisted of 145,000 men. After the loss of 87,000, the servants of Adarezer went over to David, and served him. Paral. M.

Ver. 1. Year. Heb. "at the end of the year," (Chal. Syr.) which may be explained either of the year after the preceding engagement, or at the end of the civil year, in the autumnal equinox, (C.) or of the sacred year, which begins in the spring, (H.) when kings more commonly go to battle, about the month of March. M.—In hot countries they make a campaign also in autumn.—Ammon. They had not been sufficiently chastised, as they had saved themselves within their strong cities. They had added to their other crimes, that of stirring up the Syrians against David. C.—Rabba, the capital of Ammon, which Polybius calls "Rabatamana." See C. 5:8. H.

Ver. 2. Noon. He had been reposing, according to custom. C. 4:7. C.—But the devil was not idle. He was meditating a temptation and crime, which involved a great part of the remainder of David's life in misery. H.—He had reigned 18 years, and lived 48, almost without blame. Salien, A. 2998.—His house, as the Heb. explains it. The Vulg. might insinuate that the woman was upon "the roof of her house." But she was probably in her garden, as the Jews have their baths in the open air. They are frequently obliged to purify themselves. C.—The house must have been very near David's palace. Salien.

Ver. 3. Eliam. By a transposition of letters, he is called Ammiel, in 1 Par. 3:5. Both words signify "my people is God's." This son of Achitophel (C. 23:34,) was one of David's valiant men, as well as Urias, who is styled the Hethite, being born at Eth; (S. Jer. Salien) or on account of his extraction, or because he or his ancestors (H.) had performed some great exploit against that nation; as Germanicus, Africanus, &c. received those titles among the Romans, for conquering the Germans, &c. C.—Eth was a place near Hebron. Adric. 128. M.—The name of Bethsabee is also different in Paral.; the last b in Heb. being changed into v. Both-shua, both-al-i-am; instead of Both-shoba, both-am-i-al. H. Kennic.—The grandfather of Bethsabee is supposed to have revolted against David, to revenge the wrong done to her. T. A. Lapide. "Let the weak tremble at the fall of the strong." S. Aug. in Ps. l.

Ver. 4. Purified. Lit. "sanctified." Heb. and Sept. "for she was," &c. H. —Hoc ideo additum ne miraremur illico eam concepisse. Grot. Arist. Anim. vii. 20.—Women were obliged to bathe after such actions. Lev. 15:18.

Ver. 8. Feet. As they did not wear stockings, this practice was very common after a journey. David thus insinuated that Urias might take his rest, and go to his wife, that so he might suppose that the child was his own, and the crime of Bethsabee might be concealed. C.—King, as a mark of honour, but in reality that he might be more excited to indulge his pleasures. Abulensis. M.

Ver. 9. House, in the court, for the guards. See Athen. v. 2. &c.

Ver. 10. Journey, of thirty hours' length. Adrichomius.

Ver. 11. Ark. Most people suppose that the ark and the priests were before Rabba, as they seem to have been present in all expeditions of consequence. M. C.—but, at any rate, the ark was covered with skins or veils, even in the tabernacle at Gabaon, or at Sion. H.—Thing. He binds himself by an oath not to gratify his natural inclinations, that the king might desist from pressing him any farther. Salien.—But David resolves to endeavour to make him forget his oath, during the moments of intoxication. The valour and temperance of Urias, and divine Providence, render all his craft useless; and a concatenation of crimes cannot hide the original offence. H.

Ver. 13. Couch. It seems he was one of the guards. Josephus says he was Joab's armour-bearer, (Ant. vii. 7.) and one of David's heroes. C. 23:39.

Ver. 14. Morning of the fourth day, as Urias staid three nights at Jerusalem. It is not clear that he was intoxicated the last of them. On that night David permitted him to act as he should think proper; and finding that he obstinately persisted in the resolution of not going to sleep with his wife, he had recourse to the last and most barbarous expedient of making way for his own marriage with the woman, as he saw this was the only method left for him to save her honour. The utmost expedition was requisition, as many days must have elapsed before she perceived her situation; (H.) and if many more should pass over, it would be manifest to the world that she had been guilty of adultery, and must either be stoned, or, if David spared her, he must bear the blame. Salien.—Urias. The fable of Bellerophon being sent by Proetus to Jobates, king of Syria, with a letter, desiring the king to put the bearer to death, seems to have been copied from this history. Their letters have become proverbial. Chry.

Aha Bellerophonem jam tuus me fecit filius,

Egomet tabellas detuli ut vincirer. Plaut. Bacchide.

Ver. 15. Die. We no longer behold the genius of that David who would not hurt his persecutor. What a change does a shameful passion introduce in the whole conduct of a man! and how does one false step conduct from one abyss to another! Proprium humani ingenii est odisse quem læseris. Tacit.—David could no longer bear the sight of a man whom he had injured so grievously. C.

Ver. 17. Also. Hence David prays with reason; Deliver me from blood (sanguinibus) of many slain. He was answerable for all Cajetan.

Ver. 21. Jerobaal? Hebrews write Jeroboseth, to avoid the mention of Baal, as they also do with respect to the name of Isboseth, who was probably called Isbaal. C. See Judg. 9:57.—Joab supposed that David might probably adduce this instance, to shew the danger of approaching too near the wall, as it had proved destructive to part of his army, and had been fatal to Abimelech. But it seems the messenger did not allow him time to express any resentment, before he told him the agreeable news, which he desired so much to hear, v. 24. H.

Ver. 26. For him. We may apply to her tears those words of Lucan:

Lachrymas non sponte cadentes

Effudit, gemitusque expressit pectore læto.

“None affected more sorrow for the death of Germanicus, than those who rejoiced the most at that event.” Tacit. An. ii.—The mourning for the dead usually lasted seven days; (Eccli. 22:13) and after that period, David seems to have married Bethsabee. Abulen. q. 21.

Ver. 27. Lord; not that David had married the woman, but on account of his former conduct towards her and her husband. M.—The canon law forbids the marriages of those who have been accomplices in the death of their former partner; and some have thought that this marriage of David was null. But this is inaccurate; and the fruits of it were (C.) all deemed legitimate. See 1 Par. 3:5. H.—The Rabbins even pretend that David was guilty of no sin in marrying Bethsabee during the life-time of Urias; as the latter, they say, must have given her a bill of divorce when he went to war. Grotius.—But why should we excuse an action which was so severely condemned and punished by God? C. 12:1. &c. Ps. 1. C.—In David’s conduct, we here behold a complication of the basest passions of lust and cruelty; which make David neglect the sanctity of an oath, (v. 11) and attempt to ruin, by drunkenness, the soul of one to whom he was much indebted; and, afterwards, to expose him to an untimely death, perhaps without repentance; if indeed Urias exceeded the bounds of moderation. This however is not certain; as the word drunk is often used to denote a degree of blameless conviviality. Gen. 43:34. Yet the design of David was equally criminal. How soon may the man according to God’s own heart, fall from his elevated station into the depth of the abyss! Wherefore let him that thinketh himself to stand, take heed lest he fall. 1 Cor. 10:12. H.

Ver. 1. Unto him, after the birth of the child. A whole year had nearly elapsed, and David continued blind and impenitent. The spirit of prophecy had left him; and, though he was clear-sighted, and equitable enough to punish the faults of others, he could not discern his own picture, till Nathan had removed the veil. The prophet acted with the utmost prudence, and did not condemn the king till he had pronounced sentence on himself. It is commonly supposed that the interview was private. S. Chrysostom believes that the chief lords of the court were present; which would enhance the discretion of Nathan, as well as David’s humility. C.

Ver. 3. Daughter. All these expressions tended to shew the affection of the owner for this pet lamb. H.—In Arabia, one of the finest is commonly fed in the house along with the children. Bochart, Anim. T. i. B. ii. 46.—It is not necessary that every word of this parable should have been verified in Bethsabee. C.—Many things are usually added for ornament. M.—Yet she had been treated in the most tender manner by her husband, who had her alone, while David had eighteen wives. H.

Ver. 4. To him. This wanton cruelty caused David to pronounce him deserving of death; as simple theft was punished with only a four-fold restitution. Ex. 22:1. Judges sometimes diminish, and at other times increase, the severity of the law, according to the dispositions of the offenders, which lawgivers could not exactly foresee. C.

Ver. 6. Fold. Sept. “seven-fold,” which Grabe corrects by the Heb. H.—David lost four of his sons; the first born of Bethsabee, Amnon, Absalon, and Adonias: and saw his daughter Tamar, (C.) and his ten inferior wives, dishonoured, in punishment of his crime. M.

Ver. 7. The man, against whom thou hast pronounced sentence, and who has treated thy neighbour with still less pity. H.

Mutato nomine de te Fabula narratur. Hor.

Ver. 8. Wives. We know of none that David married. But, as king, he enjoyed alone that privilege. Grot. C. 2:7. and 16:21.—Unto thee. Heb. “I would have given thee such and such.” C.—Sept. “I will moreover give thee like unto these;” a continuation of prosperity. H.—This singular love, which God was still disposed to manifest unto David, touched his heart with peculiar force. Salien.

Ver. 10. House. What a dismal scene opens itself to our view during the remaining part of David’s reign! H.—Scarcely one of his successors was free from war; even Solomon was disturbed by the rebellion of Jeroboam, &c. and many of David’s family and descendants came to an untimely end, v. 6. C.—Six sons of Josaphat, all Joram’s, except one, Josias, the children of Sedecias, &c. 4 K. 25. &c. W.

Ver. 11. I will raise, &c. All these evils, inasmuch as they were punishments, came upon David by a just judgment of God, for his sin; and therefore God says, I will raise, &c. But inas much as they were sins, on the part of Absalom and his associates, God was not the author of them, but only permitted them. Ch.—God permitted the wicked prince to succeed for some time, that he might punish David. C.—Neighbour, most dearly beloved. To be treated ill by such a one, is doubly severe. Ps. 54:15. M.

Ver. 12. Sun, publicly. C. 16:22. How abominable soever this conduct of an unnatural son must have been to God, he says, I will do this; because, when he might have prevented it by a more powerful grace, or by the death of the delinquent, he suffered him to carry his infernal project into execution. H.

Ver. 13. Sinned. His confession was sincere, and very different from that of Saul, 1 K. 15:24. "The expression was the same; but God saw the difference of the heart." S. Aug. con. Faust. xxii. 27.—Sin. He has remitted the fault and the eternal punishment, and he has greatly diminished the temporal chastisement, and will not inflict instant death, as he seemed to have threatened, v. 10. C.—"The speedy remission shewed the greatness of the king's repentance." S. Amb. Apol. 2.

Ver. 14. Occasion. Lit. "made" almost, in the same sense, as God threatened to do, what was effected by Absalom, v. 12. David did not co-operate with the malice of infidels; but he was responsible for it: in as much as he had committed an unlawful action, which gave them occasion to blaspheme God, as if he had not been able to foresee this scandalous transaction. Thus God and religion are often vilified, on account of the misconduct of those who have the happiness to be well informed, but do not live up to their profession: but this mode of argumentation is very fallacious and uncandid. It ought, however, to be a caution to the servants of the true God, never to do any thing which may have such fatal consequences; and alienate the minds of weak men for the truth.—Die. Thus infidels would see, that God did not suffer David to pass quite unpunished. H.

Ver. 15. Of. Heb. "it was sick" (C.) of a fever.

Ver. 16. A fast, (jejunavit jejunió) denotes, with more than ordinary rigour. Salien.—By himself. Heb. "he went in, and lay all night upon the ground." H.

Ver. 18. Day. After his birth, when he had received circumcision; (Salien) or on the 7th day since the commencement of his malady. C. M.

Ver. 23. To me. No instance of any one being raised from the dead had yet occurred; though David did not disbelieve its possibility. M.

Ver. 24. Wife. She had partaken in his affliction and repentance. The Jews say that David told her the divine oracle, which is mentioned 3 K. 1:13, 17, that her next son should succeed to the throne. Salien (A. 3000) supposes that he was conceived in May, two months after the death of Bethsabee's first-born, and came into the world about the time of the Passover.—Solomon, "the pacific." See 1 Par. 22:9. M.

Ver. 25. Amiable to the Lord. Or beloved of the Lord. In Hebrew, Yedideya. Ch.—Loved him, is not expressed in Heb. "because of the Lord." H.—Theodotion, "in the word, or agreeably to, the order of the Lord." Solomon never went by the name which God here gives him, (C.) except in this place. M.—It shews the gratuitous predilection which God had for him; but affords no proof of his predestination to glory, of which there is too much reason to doubt. C.

Ver. 27. The city of waters. Rabbath, the royal city of the Ammonites, was called the city of waters, from being encompassed with waters. Ch. See C. 5:8.—The Heb. in the preceding verse seems to insinuate, (H.) that "he had taken the royal city." But he was only on the point of doing it, or had, perhaps, made himself master of some part of it. Here the Heb. "I have taken," may be explained in the same sense, unless the city of waters were the lower part of Rabbath, lying on the Jaboc. Junius translates, "He cut off the waters, which entered the city;" and Josephus favours this explanation. It seems the siege lasted about two years. C.—Antiochus took this city, by depriving the inhabitants of water. Polyb. v.

Ver. 28. Take it. The higher, and more impregnable part; which honour Joab reserved for David.

Ver. 30. King. Heb. Malcam, "their king." Moloc, "king," or the chief idol of the Ammonites. It was forbidden to use the ornaments of the idols on Chanaan, but not of other nations. This crown might be worth a talent, on account of the gold and precious stones; (1 Par. 20:2. Sanchez. Bochart,) or it might weigh so much as almost 87 pounds, (C.) or above 113 pounds English. H.—such immense crowns were sometimes suspended for ornament, over the throne; as Benjamin of Tudela says was done by the emperor Commenes. Pliny describes one of nine pounds; and Athenæus (v. 8,) another of 80 cubits, or 40 yards (H.) in circumference. C.—The idol, or the king of Ammon, (M.) might have one of the like nature, suspended. The Rabbins say David caused it to hang in the air by means of a load-stone; as if it would attract gold! C.

Ver. 31. Sawed. Heb. "he put them under saws, and under rollers of iron, and under knives," &c. H.—The Jews say that Isaias was killed by being sawed asunder; to which punishment S. Paul alludes. Heb. 11:37. M.—Brick-kilns, or furnaces. Ps. 20:10. Muis.—David and his companions were thrown into the fiery furnace. Dan. 3:6, 11, Est. 13:7. C.—Some condemn David of excessive cruelty on this occasion.

T. Sanctius.—But the Scripture represents his conduct as irreproachable, except in the affair of Urias; (3 K. 15:5,) and at this distance of time, we know not the motives which might have actuated him to treat his enemy with such severity. The Ammonites had probably exercised similar cruelties on his subjects. See 1 K. 11:2, Amos 1:13. C.—They had shamefully violated the law of nations, and had stirred up various kings against David. M.—Salien blames Joab for what may seem too cruel. But, though he was barbarous and vindictive, we need not condemn him on this occasion, no more than his master; as we are not to judge of former times by our own manners. H.—War was then carried on with great cruelty. C.

Ver. 1. Thamar was born of Maacha, as well as Absalom.

Ver. 2. Her. He had seen her on some solemn occasions, when virgins were allowed to go out, well attended. At other times they were so strictly guarded, that Amnon thought it almost impossible to gratify his passion, (C.) which made him grow pale. He afterwards feigned himself to be more sickly than he really was, v. 6. H.

Ver. 3. A very wise man. That is, a crafty and subtle man: for the counsel he gave on this occasion shews that his wisdom was but carnal and worldly. Ch.—Jonadab seems to be styled Jonathan, C. 21:21. C.

Ver. 4. King? to whom every indulgence must be allowed. M.

Ver. 5. To me. Heb. “and give me meat, and dress the meat in my sight, that I may see it, and eat it,” &c. H.—He pretends to be disgusted with food, (C.) unless he see his sister make it ready. H.

Ver. 6. Messes. Heb. “cakes, or cordials;” what which refresh the heart, and give an appetite. The queen of Perdiccas, of Macedon, baked bread for her servants. Herod. viii. 137. Gen. 18:6.

Ver. 9. Out. This conveys the idea of something liquid. C.—It was a thin wafer, (H.) or cake, of which there were different sorts.

Ver. 10. Chamber. Heb. Chadera, “bed-place,” (Cant. 1:4) where Amnon was lying. C.

Ver. 12. Folly, or impiety, so directly contrary to the law. Levit. 18:6

and 9 and 11. H.

Ver. 13. Thee. Was she ignorant that such marriages could not be allowed? C.—Some think she was. Grot. M.—Others believe that, in her present situation, she said what first came into her head, to get out of the hands of her brother. The Rabbins pretend that she was conceived before David married her mother, and that the latter was a pagan; so that they suppose there was no relationship between Tamar and Amnon. But this is all asserted without proof. C.

Ver. 15. Before. Such changes are not unfrequent in those who give way to disordered passions, as Aristotle (prob. iv.) proves. Semiramis slew her lovers, and among the rest her own son. T.—God caused Amnon to be stung with remorse, and the evil spirit pushed him on to extremities, which filled the palace with scandal and bloodshed. M.

Ver. 16. Greater, as being more public; (T.) and all would think her guilty of some horrible misdemeanor. H.—It made the divulging of the crime in some degree necessary. M.—Unhappy woman! why did she not cry out, at least, before the perpetration of the act, as the law directed? Deut. 22:24. Salien, A. 3000.

Ver. 18. Robe. Heb. passim; long and variegated, like Joseph's. Gen. 37:3. The Sept. call it, καρπωτός, to insinuate that it was "adorned with fruits," &c. H.

Ver. 19. Head, as if to hide her face. Ezech. 27:30, Jer. 2:37. So Mezentius:

"Canitiem immundo deformat pulvere et ambas Ad Cœlum tendit palmas." Virgil, Æneid x. See Iliad ii. C.

—Crying, that no one might think she had consented. M.—She probably went directly to her brother's house, and related the affair to him; or he met her in this condition. Salien.

Ver. 20. Brother. His disgrace will fall upon the whole royal family, and the king will not bring him to punishment, like another. C.—Away. Heb. and Chal. "desolate." M.—Sept. "like a widow."

Ver. 21. And he, &c. This is not in Heb. &c. nor in S. Jerom's version. Josephus and some copies of the Sept. read it. But the reason here alleged would not suffice to excuse David. C.—He might think that, as he had shewn such a bad example himself, he could not with a good grace punish others. Sanctius.—This however was requisite, as long as he was king. Whatever faults he might have fallen into, he was not on that account to suffer crimes to remain unpunished; (H.) and it is supposed that he testified his resentment to Amnon; (Salien, &c.) though the Scripture be silent thereon. H.—Abulensis condemns him for too great remissness. M.

Ver. 23. Two. Heb. “full years.” He waited so long, that he might put his murderous designs in execution with less suspicion. H.—Sheep. It was esteemed the best husbandry, “to have fine flocks;” bene pascere: (Cato) even for the nobility.—Ephraim, or Ephrem; (Jo. 11:54) probably near Bethel. Joseph. Bel. v. 33. C.—Nabal had made a feast on a similar occasion. 1 K. 25. Absalom invites his father to avoid suspicion; (M.) though he would be glad at his refusing to come, unless perhaps he would not have hesitated to order his brother to be murdered in his very presence, in order to punish both. H.

Ver. 25. Blessed him, wishing him joy. Absalom kept a separate establishment, and had many children. C. 14:27. M.

Ver. 26. Amnon. He mentions him as the eldest, and that David might suppose that they were perfectly reconciled. C.—The unhappy father seems for a long time to have expressed a reluctance and foreboding. H.

Ver. 28. It is I: the blame will fall on me; I will rescue all from danger. These servants were probably infidels, of Gessur, and fled with their master. M.

Ver. 29. Mule. This is the first time we find these animals used to ride on. The judges had fair asses. These mules were not the offspring of horses and asses. They bear young in Syria, (Aristot. anim. vi. 24.) and are little inferior to horses in size, though they are shaped like our mules. Ibid. c. xxxvi.

Ver. 30. Left. Fame often magnifies. M.—Crescit eundo. H.

Ver. 32. Mouth. Chal. Syr. “heart.” Aquila, “because Absalom was in wrath against him.” He had resolved upon his destruction. C.—Perhaps he had expressed his intention to some of the court; and this Jonadab (by whose means the crime had been committed, v. 5) had heard of it. H.

Ver. 34. Mountain. Olivet. C.—They had not kept the high road through fear of Absalom; (Abul.) who, on his part, fled out of the country, as no city of refuge was able to protect wilful murderers. H.

Ver. 37. Tholomai, or Tholmai, (H. C. 3:3) his maternal grandfather. C.

Ver. 38. Ceased. We do not read that he had pursued Absalom before. C.—Now he laid aside all thoughts of punishing him, as he began even to desire to see him again, when he reflected that Amnon had deserved death. H.—Heb. also, “he burnt with a secret desire to receive Absalom.” C. 14:1. Jonathan. Vatab. &c. C.—Prot. “the soul of king David longed to go forth unto,” &c. H.

Ver. 2. Thecua, twelve miles south of Jerusalem. S. Jer.—Joab causes this unknown woman to come from the country to conceal his design, (C.) hoping that Absalom would be his father’s successor. M.

Ver. 4. Save me. So the Jews frequently repeated Hosanna; and David addressed God, save us. 1 Par. 16:35. T.

Ver. 5. Dead. Some conclude from v. 16, that this is a true history; but it appears rather, that it was only a parable, (v. 19. C.) invented by Joab. M.

Ver. 7. Heir. She expresses their sentiments more than their words. C.—Some of the relations might desire to obtain the inheritance. M.—See Num. 35:18.—Spark. Posterity is often denoted by a lamp. C. 21:17. Heb. and Sept. “my coal,” reserved to enkindle my fire, (C.) or to perpetuate our name in Israel, (H.) or that of his father, to whose title the son succeeded. The mother could claim no inheritance. M.

Ver. 9. Guiltless, if the murderer be not brought to execution. I am willing to bear all the blame and punishment. C.—Abigail and Rebecca speak in the same manner. 1 K. 25:24, Gen. 27:13. T.—Though kings may not pardon as they please, yet in this instance David might protect the widow’s son, as there was no witness to prove that he had committed the murder. M.—The woman was not satisfied with the former promise. She wished to extort something more decisive. She intimates that the danger is pressing, and if any misfortune should arrive, she cannot impute it to the king, (C.) which gives him occasion to encourage her the more. H.

Ver. 11. Multiplied, or overwhelm me with their numbers. C.

Ver. 13. Exile, the banished Absalom, (H.) who, in similar circumstances, has only committed a crime like that which the king is willing to pardon at the entreaty of a poor widow; though all the people of God seem interested for the welfare of Absalom, whom they look upon as the heir apparent. This was the drift of the whole parable. C.—To sin, may be referred to Absalom, who might be driven by despair to worship idols. M.

Ver. 14. Earth; so great was the distress of the people at the absence of their darling prince. H.—His death would not bring Amnon to life again. We must not cherish sentiments of eternal enmity.—Perish. Chal. “a just judge cannot take the money of iniquity.” Le Clerc, “And cannot the prince (or judge) pardon a man, and devise means to leave his son no longer in exile?” C.—Prot. “neither doth God respect any person; yet doth he devise means, that his banished son be not expelled from him.” Let the king imitate this example. H.

Ver. 15. Before the people. Heb. also, “through fear, or respect for the people,” who generally wished that Absalom might return. H.—Joab was present, (v. 21) and no doubt many others; who, if requisite, might join their prayers with hers. C.

Ver. 16. Me. She identifies her cause with that of her son, as if she could not survive his death; or, at least, could not retain the inheritance, if he should perish. H.

Ver. 17. Sacrifice; perfect and inviolable. T.—Cursing, provided he be in the right. M.—Heb. “the king to discern (hear) good and bad;” of consummate wisdom; (v. 20. H.) so that no one can impose upon him.

Ver. 19. Right, but he hath ordered me to say all these things. Joab had given her leave to make this declaration, as he perceived that the king’s heart was already inclined towards Absalom, v. 1. M.

Ver. 21. Boy. This expression might tend to excuse what he had done amiss; as it shewed also the tenderness of David for Absalom. M.

Ver. 22. Blessed. That is, praised, and gave thanks to the king.

Ver. 24. Face, though he lived in Jerusalem. C.—This was done, in order that he might enter seriously into himself, and avoid similar excesses. M.—He felt this privation more than exile. H.

Ver. 26. A year. Heb. and Sept. “from the end of the days to days.”—Chal. “as it was convenient.” But the Vulg. seems the best, (C.) and is followed by the Prot. version. H.—Sicles, including all his hair. The Hebrews wore their hair very long. It does not commonly grow above four inches in a year; so that the hair which was cut off could not weigh 200 sicles. C.—Weight. Heb. “after the king’s stone,” Beeben; but one MS. has Boshkol, with the Sept. “after the king’s sicle (Ken.) weight,” at Babylon, as Pelletier supposes that this work was written towards the end of the captivity. He allows that Absalom's hair might weigh almost 31 ounces. Some women wear above 32 ounces, if we may believe the hair-dressers. Some suppose that r (200) has been substituted instead of d (4) or c, (20) &c. But all are not convinced that the Hebrew formerly marked the numbers by letters. Sept. have, "100 sicles," (C.) which some attempt to reconcile with the common reading, by saying, that they speak of the sicles of the sanctuary, which were double the weight of the king's sicles. Yet the Alex. and Vat. copies agree with the Vulgate: (H.) and of this distinction of weights there is no proof. The Rabbins assert that the value, and not the weight, of Absalom's hair is given; (C.) and that he made a present of his hair to some of his friends, who sold it to the ladies of Jerusalem, to adorn their heads. Sanctius.—Tirin adopts this sentiment, and ridicules those who say that the weight is meant; as he says, 200 sicles would be equivalent to $8\frac{3}{4}$ Roman pounds, which comes near to Arbuthnot's calculation in English. H.—Bochart reduces the weight to four such pounds, each consisting of twelve ounces; and he supposes that the hair was so heavy, on account of the gold dust with which it was covered, according to the fashion of those times. Joseph. viii. 1.—But this weight would be only accidental. C.—Josephus (vii. 8.) intimates, that Absalom's hair was "cut every eight days," or "for the space of eight days." It is quite incredible that it should weigh 200 sicles, or five minæ of Alexandria, each consisting of twelve ounces. The Latin interpreter reads, "every eight months." C.—S. Epiphanius and Hero have 125 sicles, or about 31 ounces. H.—The Babylonian sicle, here mentioned, was only the third part of that used by the Hebrews. D.

Ver. 27. Sons, who all died before their father. C. 18:18.—Thamar, in memory of his sister; (Abul.) or this Thamar received the name from her aunt, who resided with Absalom. M.—Some Greek and Latin copies add, that she was married to Roboam, the son of Solomon, by whom he had Abias. But this addition is of no authority, and can hardly be reconciled with chronology. We read that Roboam espoused Maaca, the daughter of Absalom; (2 Par. 11:20) but she might be only his grand-daughter, by Thamar. C.—Josephus had adopted this addition. H.

Ver. 29. To him. Joab, like a crafty courtier, would neither disoblige the king nor the prince, and therefore wished not to meddle in this affair; as he might either excite the suspicions of the own, or the resentment of the other. C.

Ver. 33. Kissed Absalom, and thus was reconciled to his prodigal son. Luke 15:20. The ungrateful wretch only took occasion, from his father's goodness, to alienate the minds of the people from him, by insinuating that he neglected the welfare of the people. H.

Ver. 1. Before him. Romulus instituted the 300 guards, whom he called Celeres, for the like purpose. C.—Absalom's ambition could not wait patiently for the death of his father, who was not yet sixty years old, and had been first anointed forty years before, v. 7. He looked upon himself as the heir apparent, Amnon being now slain, and Cheliab (or Daniel) either dead, as it is thought, or unfit for government, while Solomon was only eight years old. Salien.—The quality of his mother, and his own personal qualifications, made him despise his brethren, and he began to assume the equipage of a king. C.—David considered this as only the effect of juvenile vanity, and he had not a mind to irritate him, without the utmost necessity. Salien.—Heb. “Absalom prepared for himself a chariot, (Prot. chariots) and horses,” &c. H.—It is not certain whether he had any other horsemen but those who mounted the chariots. Horses were then very scarce in Israel. C.—Adonias afterwards imitated his brother's ambition, during his father's life; (3 K. 1:5) so that evil was continually raised up against David, out of his own house. C. 12:11.

Ver. 2. Israel. Absalom rises early for wickedness. He assumes the character of a more zealous and disinterested judge, as if to contrast his conduct with the remissness of some appointed by the king; though the Holy Ghost bears witness to the integrity of David. C. 8:15. Who would not be deceived by such appearances, if the arts of hypocrites had not taught us to examine things to the bottom, and to be upon our guard? If thy eye be evil, thy whole body will be darksome. The intention decides all. H.

Ver. 5. Kissed him. Engaging affability! How often abused by the ambitious, for similar purposes! H.—Thus acted Otho. Protendens manum, adorare vulgus, jacere oscula et omnia serviliter pro dominatione. Tacit. Hist. i.—“Stretching out his hand, he bowed to the common people, dispensing his kisses at random, and performed all the acts of servility to obtain the throne.” H.

Ver. 6. Enticed. Heb. “stole.” The people were not aware of his designs. C.—Absalom rendered them dissatisfied with the present government, and led them to expect better days, under his administration. H.

Ver. 7. Forty, which Vatable dates from the time when the people petitioned for a king; Salien, from the first anointing of David. M.—It is probable enough that this number has been substituted instead of four, which Josephus, Theodoret, Syr. Arab. and many Latin MSS. read; and Absalom would employ this term in securing the interest of Israel, before he declared himself openly their king. C.—He had been so long at Jerusalem, since his return. Salien.—The canon of Heb. verity, supposed to be made about the ninth century, is said (by Martinney. H.) to be altered by some correcting hand, from four to forty. Kennicott.—This is the famous Memmian canon, which Theodulph, bishop of Orleans, is believed to have ordered, as the standard of truth, according to the Hebrew copies of that day: (17. The Vulgate of Sixtus V. in that passage, as well as in the present, reads the smaller numbers, as he was guided by the best Latin copies, whereas Clement VIII. has also consulted “the Heb. fountains.” The former, says Kennicott, (Diss. ii. p. 205) “seems to have been printed on a juster plan ... and the old Latin version is likely to be found more pure in the edition of Sixtus than in that of Clement, since the latter seems to have corrected his Latin by the modern (i.e. the corrupted) Heb. copies.” Dr. James observes, that “almost all the Latin editions received in the Church, for many years, (preceding 1590) agree with Sixtus,” who here reads quatuor, with many others; so that Grotius is well supported in having pronounced so decisively, “without doubt there is a mistake, two letters having been added at the end of arba. The thing itself declares that four years had elapsed.” Kennicott.—It appears to be indubitable, that some mistakes have taken place with regard to numbers. But that this place is incorrect may not be so certain, as the chronology of Salien, Usher, &c. explains it well enough. The Hebrew text was esteemed more correct when the last editions of S. Jerom, and of the Vulg. were given, than it is at present. H.

Ver. 8. Lord. The pretext seemed very bad, since he ought not to have delayed so long to perform his vow. Moreover, the usual places for sacrifice were Gabaon or Sion. But Absalom might plead a respect for the patriarchs, who were buried at Hebron. S. Jer. Trad. M.

Ver. 10. Spies, or men to give a plausible appearance to his ambition, and to insinuate that all was done according to order, and with David’s approbation. “The first word (or step) is the most difficult,” on such occasions; (Tacit. Hist. ii. Grot.) and those who find themselves incautiously entangled, find a repugnance to recede. H.—Reigneth. He was solemnly anointed. C. 19:10. M.

Ver. 11. Design. Their hearts had been stolen, v. 6. They only meant to do honour to the prince, but by no means to join in his rebellion, like the rest. C.

Ver. 12. Achitophel, the grandfather of Bethsabee; to revenge whose dishonour, he had instigated the young prince to revolt, and had planned his rebellion; (Salien) so that he was every ready to lend his assistance. C.

Ver. 13. Absalom. How came they to abandon a king, appointed by heaven, and adorned with so many virtues? God was resolved to punish him. Many are always desirous of novelty. David had lately been guilty of two scandalous crimes. Joab remained unpunished, and arrogant; the judges neglected their duty, &c. v. 3. Some had still a partiality for the family of Saul. C. Grotius.

Ver. 14. Ruin, of a house falling. Heb. “evil.” David gives way to the fury of the rebels, hoping that they will enter into themselves, without bloodshed. He departs on foot, like a penitent, acknowledging the justice of God. Fear does not prompt him to leave Jerusalem, which was a place of such strength, (C. 5:6) nor are his attendants abandoned on a sudden by that courage, which made some of them a match for a whole army. David disposes of all things with great coolness and prudence. C.—He wishes to appease God. M.

Ver. 16. Concubines. That is, wives of an inferior degree, (Ch. Gen. 25. W.) who might perhaps have some influence to pacify the rioters.

Ver. 17. House, or palace, (H.) at the foot of the walls, (C.) that all who were well disposed, might join the king’s standard. Heb. “in a place that was far off;” (H.) or, “this house of flight (this family of David, in flight) stopped.” C.

Ver. 18. Phelethi, the king’s foreign guards, of Philistine extraction. C. 8:18.—Gethites, who had been probably induced to enter his service by Ethai, v. 19. C.—Men. This number David kept up, in honour of those valiant companions who had defended him at Odollam, &c. Salien.—It is observable, that David is attended only by his own family, and by strangers; representing Jesus Christ, who rejects the Synagogue and its sacrifices, while he makes choice of the Gentiles. C.

Ver. 19. Ethai. Many assert that he was the son of Achis, and had embraced the true religion. M.—King; Absalom, who will not molest you. H.—Some translate the Heb. “Return from the king.” Syr. Arab.

Ver. 20. The Lord. Heb. “mercy and truth with thee.” As thou hast acted towards me, so mayest thou be rewarded. H.

Ver. 23. Cedron. Heb. nachal Kidron, may signify, “the shady torrent,” or “vale,” as it is styled by Josephus. It does not take its name from cedars. It is dry in summer, and when filled with water, in only three steps across. Doubdan xxvii.—Desert, of Bethel, (C.) or of Jericho, where S. John Baptist and our Saviour dwelt for some time. David passed over Kedron, only after he had dismissed the priests. M.

Ver. 24. Went up to the ark, or along with the rest. C.

Ver. 25. City. Abiathar had consulted the Lord for David, and received no answer; whence the king concluded that he had not suffered enough. M.—David displays a faith which could hardly have been expected of the carnal Jews. He confesses that God will reward the virtuous, and punish the wicked, independently of the ark, the symbol of his presence, and of which he deemed himself unworthy. C.

Ver. 27. Seer, supposing he was high priest, along with Abiathar, he might be thus addressed as one who consulted God by the ephod, as he might also, if he presided over the prophets, like Chonenias. 1 Par. 15:22. Dionysius. M.—Heb. “Art not thou a seer?” a prudent man, who may be of greater service to me in the city; (H. or) seest thou not “the state of my affairs?” Sept. “See and return.” Follow my advice, or then act as your own wisdom dictates. C.

Ver. 30. Weeping, &c. David on this occasion wept for his sins, which he knew were the cause of all his sufferings. Ch.—Barefoot, like a criminal, or one in mourning. Isai. 20:4, Ezech. 24:17. C.—Covered, that the people might not see him. W.

Ver. 31. Infatuate: “render useless;” (Theodotion) “dissipate,” Sept. C.—God hindered the wise counsel of Achitophel from being regarded. H.

Ver. 32. The Lord, before he lost sight of the holy city, where the ark was kept. C.—Arachite, a convert, (M.) from Arach, or Edessa. S. Jerom. Trad. in Gen. x.

Ver. 33. To me, as he was perhaps advanced in years, though very prudent. M.

Ver. 34. Defeat; (dissipabis) “render of no effect.” H.—Thus princes keep spies in an enemy’s country. C.

Ver. 1. Siba was a mean character, but of sufficient discernment to judge that David would gain the day. He came to calumniate his master; and David paid too much attention to him, though his testimony would not have been received in a court of judicature. C.—We must reflect that the mind of David was full of trouble, and devoid of suspicion. H.—But he did wrong (W.) in condemning Miphiboseth unheard.—Raisins. See 1 K. 25:18. C.—Figs; (palatharum) which are often called caricarum. M.—Heb. mea kayits, “a hundred of summer” fruits, like fresh grapes, (Num. 13:21) and other fruits, gathered after harvest time. Mic. 7:1.

Ver. 2. Loaves. Heb. “and to fight.” But the Sept. and the Masorets reject the letter l, which causes the difference. C.

Ver. 3. Father: a very improbable story, as the son of Jonathan was lame, and all Israel had declared for Absalom. M.

Ver. 4. All. In the East, crimes are generally punished with the loss of goods. C.—Kings. He intimates that he had not spoken against his master, with a design to obtain his effects. M.

Ver. 5. Bahurim, a fortress of Benjamin, about an hour’s walk east of Bethania. Adric. xxviii.—It signifies, “chosen youths;” and it is called Almut, or Almon, “youth.” 1 Par. 6:60. &c. Hither Phaltiel conducted Michol. C. 3:16. C.

Ver. 7. Belial; contemner of the laws, and murderer. M.

Ver. 9. Dog. David’s nephew was moved with indignation. He could easily have punished the insolence of Semei. H.

Ver. 10.—11. Hath bid him curse. Not that the Lord was the author of Semei’s sin, which proceeded purely from his own malice, and the abuse of his free-will; but that knowing and suffering his malicious disposition to break out on this occasion, he made use of him as his instrument to punish David for his sins. Ch.—He adored the justice of God; who is often said to do what he does not hinder, or what he only permits. E.—David is here a noble figure of Jesus Christ, excusing his executioners, (H.) and receiving the insults of the Jews, without complaining. C.—If Semei had not been guilty of sin, but acted according to God’s will, he could not have been justly punished. 3 K. 2. W.

Ver. 12. Affliction, of which he makes a sort of sacrifice, being convinced that God will not reject the contrite and humble heart. Ps. 50:19. C.

Ver. 13. Earth, like a man in fury. Acts 22:23.

Ver. 14. There, on the hill side, (H.) at Bahurim, v. 5. M.

Ver. 16. Arachite; perhaps descended from the ancient Aracites, who dwelt near Arad and Tripoli, where the pretended Sabbatic river is said to flow; (Jos. Bel. ii. 13.) or rather, as the names are written in a different manner, this person might be a native of Arachi, in Benjamin, west of Bethel. Jos. 16:2. C.—See C. 15:32.—Friend. This was his peculiar title of office. 1 Par. 27:33. C.—King. (Salve.) Lit. “Hail, O King,” in both places. The salutation is repeated for greater emphasis. H.

Ver. 17. Friend. He rather accuses him of treachery. H.—But he does not mention the name of king, or of father, lest it should too plainly speak his own condemnation, as an ungrateful rebel. Salien.

Ver. 18. Chosen. (Vox populi, vox Dei) Private people are not commonly able, or allowed, to judge of the right, which the prince has to the throne. But here Absalom was manifestly an usurper; and many still adhered to David. C.—Chusai assumes the character of a courtier, and flatters the prince; (Salien) who ought to have been on his guard. See C. 15:34. C.

Ver. 21. Their hands may be strengthened, &c. The people might apprehend lest Absalom should be reconciled to his father; and therefore they followed him with some fear of being left in the lurch, till they saw such a crime committed, as seemed to make a reconciliation impossible. Ch.—This was the most heinous outrage that a son could offer to his father. Jacob resented it to the last. Gen. 49:4. Amyntor devoted his son Phoenix to all the furies, for a similar offence. Iliad ix. Armais treated the wives of his brother Sesostris in this manner, when he had resolved to rebel. Joseph. c. Ap. i.

Ver. 22. Israel, who saw him enter the tents, (C.) on the flat roof. C. 11:2. and 12:11. H.—The wives of the conquered king were reserved for the victor. Smerdis married all the wives of his predecessor, Cambyzes. Herod. iii. 68. and 83. C.

Ver. 23. Absalom. It tended to promote the end which was desired, (H.) whether good or bad. His prudence is hyperbolically compared with the divine oracles; (M.) and his authority must have had great weight, since David began to take precautions, only after he had heard that Achitophel had joined the rebels; and Absalom was persuaded (C.) to perpetrate so foul and unnatural a crime publicly, no one daring to make any opposition. Chusai was silent; as he was aware that, if he began to contradict this counsellor at first, he would only incur suspicion. H.—The unjust commonly endeavour by all means to attach people to themselves: but God, in the end, turns their counsels against themselves. W.

Ver. 1. This night. Achitophel has a mind to shew that he is not only an able statesman, but a good general. H.—On such occasions, expedition is of the utmost consequence, that the people may not have time to enter into themselves, or to concentrate about their lawful king. “Nothing is more delightful than haste in civil discord, where action is more requisite than consultation.” By delays, “he would give the wicked an opportunity to repent, and the good would unite together. Crimes are confirmed by rushing on; good counsels by deliberation.” Scelera impetu; bona consilia mora valescere. Tacit. Hist. i.

Ver. 2. Handed. He has not had time to collect forces.—Alone. Heb. also, “the king also;” so that the people will be saved by flight. H.

Ver. 3. One man. They will return with such unanimity, when their leader is cut off. M.—David was the one man whom his son desired to kill, as the latter was the only one whom David ordered to be spared. C. 18:5. H.—Heb. seems rather transposed: “I will bring back all the people to thee, as all the people, whom thou seekest, are returned; and all the people shall be in peace:” or, ... “when all those, whom thou desirest, shall be returned, &c. C.—Sept. “as a bride returns to her husband; only the soul of one thou seekest, and peace shall be to all the people.” H.

Ver. 7. This time, though he displays such prudence on all other occasions; or, “at this time” the situation of affairs is such, that it may prove dangerous to push people, who are already desperate, to extremities. Here we behold, how different sentiments may appear equally plausible. H.—Mind, reduced to despair. The maxim is beautiful, as well as the comparison. See Osee 13:7, Prov. 17:12, Lam. 3:10.—People. Heb. adds, “in the night;” or, “he will not suffer the people to pass the night” in repose. C.—He will not entrust his person to a faithless multitude, but will be surrounded with a chosen band, with whom he may escape, even though the rest should flee. H.—Achitophel had represented David abandoned by his men. M.

Ver. 9. First. Heb. “If they attack them at first.” C.—Report will easily represent the engagement as unfavourable to Absalom; and this will be readily believed, as all are convinced of David’s valour. H.—Nothing ought to be risked in such beginnings. C.

Ver. 10. Man. Heb. “the son of valour himself.” Achitophel, or any other. M.

Ver. 11. Of them, their general. Heb. “and thy face shall go to battle.” Ex. 23:14.

Ver. 12. Dew, which there falleth every night, in summer, like rain. Deut. 33:28. Some of the light armed troops of the Romans were called Rorarii, because they fell upon the enemy, and began the battle.

Ver. 13. Ropes, armed with hooks, to pull down the walls, and to move the battering engines. All the discourse of Chusai tends to fill the mind of the young prince with vanity; as if he could overcome all opposition when surrounded with the armies of Israel, (C.) at the head of which he would appear, instead of Achitophel, v. 1. M.

Ver. 14. Profitable, to the cause of Absalom, more than that of Chusai, which was also very plausible. H.—Lord. The Scripture always directs us to fix our thoughts on God, as the arbiter of all human affairs. C.—Heb. “for the Lord had ordained to dissipate the good counsel,” &c. H.—“Plerumque qui fortunam mutaturus est consilia corrumpit, efficitque, quod miserrimum est, ut quod accidit, etiam merito accidisse videatur, et casus in culpam transeat,” Peterc. ii.

Ver. 15. Thus. He discloses the secrets of the person who had consulted him, (C.) as his engagements to David and to his country were prior, and more to be observed, to prevent the effects of civil war. H.

Ver. 16. Over the Jordan, that it might be some sort of barrier, in case Absalom changed his mind, to follow the advice of Achitophel.

Ver. 17. Robel, near Jerusalem, on the east. M.—Maid, under the pretence of washing linen. S. Jer. Trad.

Ver. 18. It, as it was level with the ground; so that a cloth being spread over it, prevented all suspicion. It had no water.

Ver. 19. Barley, which was afterwards fried with oil, and eaten. Ptisanas may also denote wheat, &c. Grana cantusa. Theodot.—“Figs.” C.—Sept. have the original (hariphoth) untranslated. H.

Ver. 20. Water. Heb. “they have crossed the brook of water.” C.

Ver. 22. River. Heb. “Jordan.” H.—They had travelled twenty leagues in the day and night after their departure from Jerusalem. C.

Ver. 23. Order, making his will. M.—Hanged himself. Some Rabbins pretend that he died of quinsy, or suffocated with grief. But it is almost universally believed that he set a pattern to Judas, the traitor, in this mode of dying, as well as in perfidy. He was aware that Absalom was undone, and vexed that his counsel had been disregarded. The most prudent of this world are often blinded to their own welfare. The Jews had not yet begun to refuse the rites of sepulture to suicides. C.

Ver. 24. To the camp. The city of Mahanaim, the name of which in Hebrew, signifies The Camp. It was a city of note at that time; as appears from its having been chosen by Isoboseth for the place of his residence. Ch.—The Vulgate often translates Mahanaim, or Manaim. See C. 2:8, 12. H.—Him. It is not known how soon. But he probably waited till he had collected his forces. David had done the like, and was joined by the king of Ammon, v. 27.

Ver. 25. Jazrael, or Israel. D.—Gortius would read Ismael, as 1 Par. 2:17, Jether, the Ismaelite. H.—Went in. This expressing makes Sanchez believe that Amasa was illegitimate. M.—Naas is either the name of Isai's wife, or rather the latter had both names. 1 Par. 2:13, 16. Sept. read Jesse, in the edition of Complut.; in others, Naas. C.—Joab; so that these two were own cousins, and both nephews of David.

Ver. 27. Camp, v. 24. H.—Sobi, whom David had set upon the throne, instead of Hanon. C. 10.—Machir, who had the care of Miphiboseth. C. 9:4.—Berzellai. See C. 19:31.

Ver. 28. Beds, will all the necessary furniture, coverlets, &c. Roman Sept. "ten beds, with fur on both sides."—Tapestry. Some would translate, "bottles," (Chal.) or "cauldrons;" (Roma. Sept.) but other editions agree with the Vulg.—Vessels. These are necessary, as much as things of greater magnificence. Precious metals were then rarely used in the kitchen.—Pulse, (cicer) or "parched peas." Heb. kali, is thus twice translated, as it had been rendered parched corn. It signifies any thing "parched." The ancients made great use of such food in journeys, as the Ethiopians and Turks do still. Athen. ii. 13. Busbec. iii. Bellon. ii. 53. C.

Ver. 29. Calves. Many translate the Heb. "cheese of kine." Theodotion. —"Calves fed with milk." H.—Wilderness, where they had been; unless this be placed out of its natural order. C.—The value of a present depends greatly on the time when it is made. H.—"How much dost thou esteem a hospitable reception in a wilderness?" &c. Seneca, Ben. vi. 15.

Ver. 1. Hundreds. Josephus only allows David 4000 men. But his army seems to have been pretty numerous, since he divides it into three parts, and appoints three head commanders, with officers of a thousand, &c. under them. See v. 4. C.—He designed to lead them to battle himself, if the people had not dissuaded him. Salien.

Ver. 3. Ten thousand, “like us.” Heb. C.—Succour us, “by praying for us.” (Chal.) or by sending reinforcements, where they may be necessary. M.—David was persuaded “to reserve himself (like Otho) for the interest of the state, at a distance from the danger of battle.” Tacit. An. ii.

Ver. 5. Save us: do not hurt, v. 12. S. Aug. (Doct. iii. 23.) concludes, that David wished to allow his son time for repentance. M.—He seems to have been sure of victory. Abul.

Ver. 6. Ephraim, where the men of that tribe had formerly signalized themselves. Judg. 7 and 8 and 12. C.

Ver. 8. Country; people fighting in great numbers. But the army of Absalom was soon dispersed. H.—Consumed, viz. by pits and precipices: Ch. “wild beasts.” Syr. &c. Many also died of their wounds, and were slain in the wood; (C.) so that not less, probably, than 50,000 perished on this fatal day. H.

Ver. 9. Oak, between the branches, which hindered him from escaping. C.—His beautiful curls got also entangled. M.

Ver. 11. Silver, somewhat above a guinea: sicles are not expressed in Heb. H.—Belt, the richest part of armour. Jonathan and Ajax made presents of their belts to David and Hector. 1 K. 18:4. Iliad H. See Job 13:18. The Romans wore very splendid belts. Balteus et notis fulserunt cingula bullis. Claud. Proserp. ii.

Ver. 12. Save. Prot. “beware that none touch the young man.”

Ver. 13. My own. Some copies of the Heb. and Sept. read, “his,” others, my, &c. The soldier would have acted against his conscience, and exposed his life to danger, if he had transgressed the king’s order. H.—By me? or, omitting the mark of interrogation, “Thou wouldst have declared thyself against me.” C.

Ver. 14. Sight. Heb. “I will not tarry thus with thee.” I will not stand to refute these reasons, nor imitate thy example. H.

Ver. 15. Ten. Naharai alone is specified. C. 23:37. Why he had ten does not appear. C.—Slew him, inflicting many wounds on him; though Joab had already done sufficient. H.—These men abused his corpse, as if to revenge the insult offered to David's ten wives. Salien. —It is asked whether Joab did wrong? He consulted the public welfare, rather than the parental affection of the king for a son, whom the law condemned to die for rebellion, incest, and murder. Lev. 18:29. C. 13:28. But still he was not a proper judge to inflict this death in cold blood; and thus to render the salvation of Absalom's soul more desperate. David would, however, have done well to have punished this son, as incorrigible and dangerous to the state. H.

Ver. 17. Him. Thus was the law executed upon Absalom. Deut. 21:18. S. Jerom. M.—History scarcely affords a more detestable character; and his punishment was no less terrible than instructive. He was a figure of the Jews persecuting Jesus Christ, while he gave his blood for the redemption of these his enemies, and prayed for them. As they continued obdurate, they were held up as objects of horror both to heaven and to all nations, like Absalom suspended on the tree, and rejected by heaven and earth. C.

Ver. 18. No son. The sons mentioned above, C. 14:27, were dead when this pillar was erected; unless we suppose he raised this pillar before they were born: (Ch). or meant this pillar to perpetuate his memory, when they should be no more. Joseph. vii. 9.—This author says that it was a pillar of marble; so that it is different from that which Doubdan (15) mentions, observing, that all who pass throw a stone at it. Thus was his vanity chastised!—Hand, work. So Martial (viii. 51.) says of a vial! Mentoris hæc manus est an, Polyclete, tua? M.—The same word is translated, triumphal arch. 1 K. 15:12. G.

Ver. 21. Chusi: perhaps, of Ethiopian extraction. Grot.

Ver. 22. Tidings. People of reputation did not wish to perform this office. 3 K. 2:42. Heb. “these tidings will bring thee nothing;” or, “do not suit thee.” C.—Prot. “seeing thou hast no tidings ready?” H.

Ver. 24. Two gates, one leading into the town, the other into the country. In the middle was a chamber for public meetings, and another above. Job 29:7. On the roof a guard was stationed on this occasion.

Ver. 25. Mouth. If the army had been routed, all would have been in confusion. C.—Now they are employed in plundering the vanquished. M.

Ver. 28. Shut up; frustrated the attempts of the enemy, and consigned many to the grave. H.

Ver. 29. Else. This was false. v. 20. C.—But he wished not to communicate the bad news; for which reason he had got first to the king. H.

Ver. 32. Is. This was as much as to tell plainly that he was dead, (M.) or at least, a prisoner. But David understood him right. H.

Ver. 33. Wept, in private. M.—Would. David lamented the death of Absalom, because of the wretched state in which he died; and therefore would have been glad to have saved his life, even by dying for him. In this he was a figure of Christ weeping, praying, and dying for his rebellious children, and even for them that crucified him. Ch. S. Amb. (de Ob. Valent.) Theod. q. 35.—David had presently ceased to weep for the son of Bethsabee, because he had reason to hope that he was saved. C.

Ver. 2. Mourning, as is commonly the case in civil wars. The king being oppressed with grief, a triumph was out of season. M.

Ver. 3. Shunned. Heb. “stole away,” fearing to enter; though they did at last, in a clandestine manner, (C.) by another gate. M.

Ver. 4. Head, continuing to mourn. See C. 15:30.—Absalom. The name is often repeated, as is usual on such occasions. Virg. Ec. v.—Thus Bion says, “I bewail Adonis. The beautiful Adonis is no more,” &c.

Ver. 5. Shamed; deceived the expectations. See Joel 2:12. Joab was one of those who spoil all their services by ostentation and rudeness. Like the first Anthony, Immodicus lingua, obsequii insolens, nimius commemorandis quæ meruisset. Tacit. Hist. iv.—He speaks to David, his king, as one friend would not do to another. “That sort of men is truly odious, who upbraid with their kindness; which those who have experienced, rather than the authors, ought to remember.” Cicero. Amicit.

Ver. 6. Thee. What insolence! Kings are often forced to brook the affronts of their higher servants, as well as other masters. There is a gradation in human affairs, which make the next in dignity and power think himself equal to the highest. Similis ero altissimo. Isai. 14:14. H.

—David sincerely desired the welfare of all his people, as well as of Absalom. M.

Ver. 7. To. (satisfac). Heb. “speak to the heart,” &c. with a cheerful countenance, to testify that their services will be rewarded. C.

Ver. 8. Israel, the rebels, as distinguished from Juda, or those who adhered to David; though many of all the tribes sided with Absalom, v. 11. H.

Ver. 10. Silent; inactive and indifferent, as this word often denotes. Jos. 10:12. C.

Ver. 11. Priests, whose influence was very great. H.—Last. David, like an able politician, shews the men of his own tribe, how dishonourable it will be for them to be outdone by the rest. C.—Talk: reported by a solemn ceremony. S. Jer. Trad. M.—Sept. λογος, “the word, (H.) council,” &c. Salien.

Ver. 13. Flesh? Amasa was his nephew, and as he had been appointed general by Absalom, his influence would be the greatest to bring back those who had given into the delusion. A sense of his misconduct would also render him more humble, and easier to manage than Joab, whose insolence caused him to be insupportable to the king. David designed to transfer the authority of the latter, (C.) which he had now enjoyed 23 years, since the taking of Sion. David’s promise did not oblige him to keep Joab in that office for life, if his conduct should prove unsatisfactory. Hence he appointed Amasa to pursue the rebels, and afterwards Abisai, setting Joab aside. But the haughty warrior supplanted both, and retained the command, as it were in spite of his sovereign. C. 20:4, 15. &c. H.

Ver. 14. And he; God, David, or rather Amasa. C.—All contributed, in different degrees, to bring about his happy union. H.

Ver. 15. Galgal, and thence proceeded across the Jordan, (C.) an hour and a half’s walk. M.

Ver. 16. Semei, who had cursed David in his adversity, is now ready to fawn upon him, when he sees him restored to his throne. He was chief of a thousand, in Benjamin.

Ver. 17. Over, or “into:” (irrupentes. H.) probably on horseback. M.

Ver. 18. Fords. Heb. also, “they took over the ferry-boat;” (C.) or, “there went across a ferry-boat to carry over the,” &c.

Ver. 20. Joseph. Semei was a Benjamite: but Joseph designates all the Israelites, except those of Juda, (W.) as these two possessed the birth-right of Ruben. 1 Par. 5:1. M. See Ps. 79:1, Zac. 10:6.—But we may translate with the Sept. “before all the house of Joseph.” Chal. Syr. &c. C.

Ver. 22. Sons. He refers to the preceding opposition of Joab, whom Abisai was beginning to imitate. H.—Satan; adversary. Mat. 16:23.—This day. Formerly, no one was to be put to death on days of rejoicing, and the prisoners were liberated when the king ascended the throne. A malefactor continued for a long time to be set free on the day of the passover. Mat. 27:15. C.—The Romans would never punish any one with death, on the days “whenever (Augustus) entered the city.” Sueton. lvii.—David considers this memorable day as a new epoch of his sovereignty, and will not suffer it to be rendered sorrowful. See 1 K. 11:13. H.—The punishment of Semei might have had the most pernicious consequences, as the rest of Israel would have feared a similar treatment. M.—Salien, A. 3010.

Ver. 23. Die, during my life, (M.) or by my hand, without some farther transgression. Hence the oath is worded, I will not kill thee with the sword. 3 K. 2:8. H.—Solomon was charged not to let his crime pass unpunished. But he did not kill him till he had shewed his disobedience. C.—The oaths of parents do not always (H.) pertain to their heirs. Grotius.

Ver. 24. Feet, which was very requisite in those countries, to prevent a disagreeable smell, for which the Jews were noted. Martial iv. 4.—Ammianus (2) speaking of the emperor Marcus says, Cum Palestinam transiret, foetentium Juædorum et tumultuantium sæpe tædio percitur. Some have thought that this odour was removed by baptism. Basnage, T. iii. p. 194. Rom. Sept. adds, “neither had he cut his nails, nor (made or) dressed his mustaches,” or upper lip. The chin, as far as the ears, was not shaved by the Jews. To cut all the hair was a mark of sorrow, no less than to neglect dressing it. See Lev. 21:5. C.—By the external appearance of Miphiboseh, David might be convinced that he had indulged his grief for a long time; (M.) which might serve to remove the ill impressions which he had received against the helpless son of his friend Jonathan.

Ver. 25. Met. Prot. “was come to Jerusalem, to meet the king.” H.—But his usual residence was in the city, where Siba had left him. C. 16:3. We should therefore translate, “And coming to meet the king at his arrival in Jerusalem.” C.

Ver. 26. Despised. Heb. and Chal. “acted treacherously against me.” M.

Ver. 27. God. It is not necessary for me to say any more in my defence. Thou art convinced of my innocence; and the accusation was in itself improbable, as I could never expect to be better treated by another king. I am resigned to abide by thy decision. H.—I cannot complain. C.

Ver. 28. Death, on account of Saul's persecution, and his sons assuming the purple; so that all his adherents might have been justly slain. C.—Cry, as if I had been wronged. M.

Ver. 29. More. Hebrew adds, "concerning thy affairs. I have said, Thou and Siba divide the inheritance." H.—Thou as the owner, Siba as the administrator, or steward, as he was before. Jun. Malv.—Sanchez thinks that David made a compensation to Miphiboseth, for what he left in the hands of his servant, as he did not wish to disturb the harmony of the day, nor to inflict any punishment on offenders. M.—But most interpreters accuse David of injustice, in suffering Siba to reap the fruits of his perfidy, &c. Salien. C. &c.—It is not probable, however, that he would deviate from his wonted generosity, nor suffer Miphiboseth to be injured, if he were convinced of his innocence. Perhaps he might judge it expedient that Siba should have a separate establishment, as he was now unfit to act in his former capacity, and had shewn some sort of affection towards his sovereign, when his own son, and most of his subjects, had revolted against him. H.

Ver. 30. House. He is all to me. M.

Ver. 32. Camp; Mahanaim. C. 17:28.

Ver. 33. Secure. Sept. "I will continually nourish thy old age." H.

Ver. 35. Burden, as I am unfit for any service. M.

Ver. 36. With thee. He did not proceed as far as Galgal; (H.) but took his leave of the king, intimating, what we never witness at the present day, that he was too old to enjoy the pleasures of a court! C.

Ver. 37. Chamaam, is supposed to have been the son of the good old man. C.

Ver. 40. There; coming up, for the most part, after the king had crossed the river. They had intended to have escorted him from Mahanaim. H.

Ver. 41. Stolen; as if the king were not the common father of all. Salien.

Ver. 42. Nearer related. H.—Us. What advantage have we gained? or, what have you lost? C.

Ver. 43. Ten parts. They might have said they were twelve tribes for one; and though the tribe of Juda was more numerous than many others, it was not equal to them all. C.—But the disproportion was by no means so great as ten to one; so that the Israelites unjustly pretended, that they had so much greater pretensions to the honour of bringing the king to his capital, in a sort of triumph. David might perhaps have waited a little longer, (H.) and shewed less predilection for his own tribe. C. Salien.—But what obligation was there for either? He had been long enough from Jerusalem, and eager to return, as soon as Amasa brought to him the tribe of Juda, and several of Benjamin, v. 16. What hindered the rest from coming in time? They seem to have pretended more loyalty than they really possessed; otherwise they would not have joined in every rebellion. H.—First. Hebrew may be, “did not I first propose the bringing back the king?” v. 11. C.—Israel. Tostat says, it is probable Juda asserted that the king did not, at all, belong to Israel; and hence Seba repeated the words with indignation. C. 20:1. It is wonderful that David did not repress this altercation. Abulensis supposes that he leaned too much towards his own tribe; for which, if true, we behold he was soon chastised; as God is always ready to reward or punish his servants. Salien.—But all that David said is not recorded. He could hardly have continued silent. All his endeavours to appease the sedition were, however, rendered abortive, by the evil dispositions of his subjects. H.

Ver. 1. Belial. Sept. “lawless.”—Jemini. The tribe of Benjamin continued to be rather disaffected. H.—Part. This was an usual mode of expressing a disunion. 3 K. 12:16, Acts 8:21. C.—See C. 19:43. H. Seba was perhaps a kinsman of Saul, (M.) in come command. C.

Ver. 2. Jordan, near which the contest had happened. Some chosen troops attended Seba to the north, while the rest went home.

Ver. 3. Widowhood, or celibacy, (M.) like nuns. Grot. Salien.—David could not with propriety approach to them, (E.) as they resembled his daughters-in-law; (Lev. 18:15. M.) and no other person could marry them, while he was still their husband. H.—The punishment of seclusion was very small in the East, where women seldom go out. The Jews assert, that the widows of the Hebrew kings could not marry again. Selden. Uxor. i. 10.—The like custom formerly prevailed in Spain. Coun. of Toledo. xiii. 3. A.D. 683, of Saragossa, c. 5. A.D. 691. So great was the respect for the king or the apprehension, lest those who married their widows, should aspire to the throne. C.

Ver. 4. Here, to be invested with the command over the army, and to pursue Seba. M.

Ver. 5. Him, owing to some insuperable difficulties. He was not long behind, since he joined the forces at Gabaon, where he was treacherously slain by the envious Joab. H.

Ver. 6. Lord, the king; or perhaps Joab. M.—A select company always attended the king; and some of these he sent, for greater expedition, to attack Seba, before he had become too strong.

Ver. 7. Men. It seems Joab accompanied them, though in a manner divested of his command, by the king's appointing Amasa, and then Abisai, to his exclusion. After the slaughter of the former, he resumed his authority; (v. 10) and David was forced to acquiesce, for fear of another civil war, reserving his punishment for more peaceable times. H.

Ver. 8. Stone, where Abner and Joab had formerly joined battle. C. 2. M.—Habit, or body.—Flank; they usually hand at the thigh. Ps. 44:4.—Strike: the scabbard was very wide; so that, when it was hanging very high, it would easily fall out, when he stooped; and thus afford Joab an opportunity of stabbing Amasa, without suspicion. C.—Prot. "Joab's garment, that he had put on, was girded unto him, and upon it a girdle with a sword, fastened upon his loins, in the sheath thereof, and as he went forth, it fell out."

Ver. 9. God, &c. Lit. "Hail, my brother." H.—Kiss him. "In former times it was the custom, in Greece, for supplicants to touch the chin, (Plin. xi. 45.) having the left hand upon the person's knees. Iliad A.) The touched a woman's cheeks; (Eurip. Hecuba.) or, among the Hebrews, her chin. Cant. 2:6. The Turks and Arabs still kiss the beard, with the utmost reverence. Thevenot xxii. Darvieux, C. vii. C.

Ver. 10. Struck him with his left hand. H.—Side. The same word is, elsewhere, translated groin; Sept. "loin." Moderns commonly render "in the fifth rib." C. 2:23. and 3:27. and 4:6. C.—Josephus, "the belly."

Ver. 11. Some men. The same author and the Heb. only mention "one of," &c. H.—Behold. Thus they insult over him, being attached to Joab. Heb. "Who loves Joab? and who is David? Let him follow Joab;" or, "who is this who wished to supplant Joab? and who desired to be in David's favour, after Joab? C.

Ver. 12. A certain. Heb. “the man” stationed by Joab, near the body, to inform those who passed, that he had been justly slain. Josephus, (vii. 10,) who observes, that this crime of Joab proceeded from envy, and was less deserving of excuse than the murder of Abner. H.

Ver. 14. Tribes, north-west of the Jordan. C.—Abela and Bathmaacha. Cities of the tribe of Nephtali. Ch.—The former is called simply Abel (4 K. 15:29. C.) as it is here by the Prot. version. H.—It is also called Abyla, (Luke 3:1,) and Hoba, (Gen. 14:15. C.) between Damascus and Paneas, (Euseb.) situated on the borders of Syria, as well as Beth Maaca, or “the canton of Maacha,” or Machati. Jos. 12:5.—Chosen. Heb. Berim, (which is translated “Berites,” by the Prot. H.) is derived from Bara, “to choose,” by S. Jerom. Sept. have read airim, “cities.” Some suppose that the inhabitants of Bahurim (near Mount Ephraim, v. 21, where Semei, a relation of Saul, and many disaffected people resided) shut themselves up with him in Abela.

Ver. 15. Works. Heb. a bank, or terrace against the city, and it stood in the trench; (H.) so that the town ditch was filled up, (Grot.) or terraces were raised, from which archers assailed the besieged. Joab made a ditch to defend his men from foreign assailants; and he had already taken the outward wall, so that the town could not hold out for any length of time.—The walls. S. Jerom thinks with battering rams: but they were not yet invented. C.—They undermined the walls, while some attempted to pull them down with hooks and ropes. C. 17:13. H.

Ver. 16. Say to Joab. This woman was noted for her prudence, and it was hoped that her words would have more influence to disarm Joab. She addresses those who were nearest the wall, that she may have an interview with the general, at the request of her fellow-citizens.

Ver. 18. End of their disputes, (H.) as Abela was remarkable for its wise counsellors, (M.) and equitable decisions; (H.) so that many came, from a distance, to consult the learned of this city. C.—Others suppose that she refers to the law, which ordains that peace shall first be proposed, and, if this had been done, the affair would long ago have been decided. Deut. 20:10. Jonath. E. &c.—Heb. “They spoke a word at first: Let them ask at Abela, and so they shall make an end.” Much must be supplied to make the text conformable to the former explication. We may translate, “They said, in ancient times: Let those who require more, go seek at Abela: so they finished their discourse.” C.—Prot. “They shall surely ask counsel at Abel: and so the ended the matter.”

Ver. 19. Truth. Heb. “I am peaceable, faithful in Israel.” H.—I am one of the cities most inclined to peace, and to the king's service, noted for lessons of loyalty. C.—Probably there was an academy here. M.—Mother, city, or metropolis. The Hebrews styled the inferior towns, daughters. C.—Lord, a city belonging to Israel. H.

Ver. 20. God, (Absit.) Lit. "Far be it, far be it from me;" as we need not put the name of God in the mouth of this profane man, without reason. H.

Ver. 26. Jairite, a descendant of Jair, (C.) son of Manasses. H.—Priest. Hebrew cohen, respected like a priest, (H.) chief favourite, (W.) the Rab. (Chal.) chief counsellor of David, (Vatab.) almoner, &c. It is not certain that he was of the family of Aaron, or qualified to be the domestic chaplain of the king. See C. 8:16, &c. No other king of Israel had an officer to whom this title was given. C.

Ver. 1. Of David, after the revolt of Seba. C.—House. It seems the family and chief officers of Saul, had concurred in his cruelty and unjust zeal. Hence many of them might be still living, to undergo this chastisement; and the rest of the people were guilty of some faults. H.—If they had been perfectly innocent, still God is the dispenser of his own gifts. He is under no obligation of sending health and peace to his creatures. The just often derive greater advantage from crosses than from prosperity. The exemplary punishment of Saul's family was a lesson to kings, and to all mankind, to teach them how they ought to observe justice and the sanctity of oaths.—Gabaonites; probably after the slaughter of the priests, at Nobe. 1 K. 22:19. C.

Ver. 2. Amorrhites, by which name all the nations of Chanaan were frequently designated. Gen. 15:16. M.—They were properly Hevites.—Juda. As if Josue, and all succeeding governors, had acted wrong. Ex. 23:33, Josue 6:19. Saul ought, at least, to have consulted God. C.

Ver. 3. Atonement, to expiate the injury done to you by Saul; (M.) and that you may turn your curses into blessings. The ancients were convinced, that God attends to the imprecations of the innocent. C.

Ver. 4. Gold. It is supposed that David made them an offer of some. Salien, A. 1040.—Israel besides. At first they required all the progeny of Saul, nine in number, to be crucified: but, at David's request, and intimation that he had sworn to protect the sons of Jonathan, Miphiboseth and Micha, (H.) they were content with the death of seven. M.—They insisted upon the law of retaliation. Salien.—The custom of delivering up criminals to be executed by the relations of the injured dead, still subsists in the East. C.

Ver. 6. Chosen. Some think it improbable that they should give Saul this title; and Castalion would substitute ber, “in the mountain,” (v. 9) instead of bechir, “anointed,” a title which Junius, however, refers to David: “O thou anointed,” &c. C.—But why might not these people recognize this character in Saul, which would make the punishment more disgraceful, as they chose the city of Saul, in preference, for the execution of his unhappy offspring? H.—Them, having received an order from God, lest the people might suspect that he was gratifying his private revenge. E. Josep. vii. 10, 12.

Ver. 8. Of Michol. They were the sons of Merob, who was married to Hadriel; but they are here called the sons of Michol, because she adopted them, and brought them up as her own: (Ch. Chal. S. Jer. Trad.) or Merob ws called Michol; (Sa.) or, what seems most probable, from the word she bore being used, (Cajet.) and as two sisters would hardly have the same name, (H.) Micholhas crept into the text instead of Merob. Capel. Salien. C. 1 K. 25:44.

Ver. 9. Lord. The prophets had frequented this hill. 1 K. 8:4, 13. So the Gabaonites crucified these seven, before an ancient altar, as victims to appease God’s anger, (C.) for the treaty with them having been violated, (H.) particularly after they had embraced the true religion. Salien. Deut. 10:19.—Barley, about Easter. M.

Ver. 10. Hair-cloth, to sleep on, occasionally.—Heaven. The famine had been caused by drought. As soon therefore as rain fell, David was assured that God was appeased. He had suffered the bodies to hang so long, for that purpose, though commonly they were to be taken down before night. M.—Respha is supposed, by some, to have guarded the bodies from spring till the rain fell in autumn. But the former opinion seems more plausible. We here behold the custom of watching by the bodies of the dead. See Iliad xxiii.—Beasts. The gibbets were formerly very low. C.—Thus Blandina was exposed to wild beasts. Euseb. Hist. v. 1.

Ver. 11. Done. Her piety and affliction were extraordinary. She had been brought up in delicacies, and was a person of uncommon beauty, so as to captivate Abner. C. 3:8. She must now have been advanced in years. H.

Ver. 14. Side of the mountain, or in distinct cavities. C.—Many suppose that Tsela, or Sela, is the name of a place (M.) not far from Gabaa. Jos. 18:28. C.—Many proper names are thus translated. D.

Ver. 15. Again: it is not certain at what time. Some think it was towards the beginning of David's reign, since he leads his men to battle; or the Philistines might have made an irruption into his dominions, about three years after the death of Absalom. C.—David had offered to put himself at the head of the army, against his son. C. 18:2. H.—Faint. He was now sixty-four years old. Salien.

Ver. 16. Jesibenob may signify, "Jesbi, the son of Ob." Sept. "Jesbe, of Nob, who was of the race of the giants." Arapha seems to have been one of great fame, (v. 18–21–22) who had several children; unless other giants assumed his name. C.—Ounces. Heb. "sicles of brass, in weight." Sicles is only understood, as on similar occasions. Neither is sword expressed; (H.) so that some think he had on a new suit of armour. Sym. "a sword." Rom. Sept. "a club." The weight of the whole spear is specified in Heb. Sept. &c. (C.) as weighing "300—of brass," (H.) of which metal it seems to have been formed, as the Jews had no such money till the captivity.

Ver. 17. Lamp; glory and protection. Achilles reproaches himself for not having been "a light to" his friend. Iliad Σ.

Ver. 18. Gob, as Gazer was called by the Philistines; (1 Par. 20:4. Salien) unless (H.) the former word be a mistake of the transcriber. C.—Sept. (Alex.) reads, Geth. H.—Sobochai, one of David's valiant men. 1 Par. 11:29.—Saphai is added in 1 Chron. 20.

Ver. 19. Adeodatus, the son of Forrest. So it is rendered in the Latin Vulgate, by giving the interpretation of the Hebrew names, which are Elhanan, the son of Jaare. Ch.—We should translate all the proper names, or none; as the present mode is extremely perplexing. Adeodatus might therefore be rendered, "God given;" (Dieudonne, as the French have it, though they will not translate Saltus, but leave Jaare) or, if Adeodatus must remain, as it is sometimes a proper name, why may not Saltus? A mere English reader might suppose that Forrest was a Hebrew name, and, with Swift in jest, maintain the high antiquity of our language. H.—Regularly proper names should be retained. C.—But the learned have often chosen to give the import of foreign names, in the language in which they have been writing. See Du Thou's History. Thus Dubois is styled Sylvius; Newman, Neander; &c.—An embroiderer. Prot. make this a part of the man's name, "Jaare-oregim." Sept. "the son of Ariorgeim." In 1 Par. 20 no notice is taken of his profession. H.—That passage will evince that Elhanan is not the same with David, as some would infer from the mention of Goliath's death, but the son of Jair, uncle of Joab, (C. 23:24.) who was born at Bethlehem, though the verse in Paral. would insinuate less correctly, that the giant's name was Lechem, thus, "Elehanan ... slew Lechem, the brother," &c. as the copyist had written ath instead of bith. C.—Our version has not this mistake: "Adeodatus, the son of Saltus, a Bethlehemite, slew the brother of Goliath, the Gethite," &c. 1 Par. 20:5. H.—"It would be difficult to find a passage more disfigured than the present; and, without the help of the Paral. it would be impossible to make it out." C.—Kennicott makes a similar remark. Diss. i. and ii. But he believes that the Book of Chronicles, though the latest, and usually the most corrupt, of the Old Testament, is here perfectly correct; and that the passage before us is strangely corrupted, "Jaare Oregim, a Bethlehemite," being placed instead of, ... "Jaor slew Lahmi," as he thinks that oregim, "weavers," has been inserted from the line below, p. 79. Josephus (vii. 10.) relates this transaction as follows, "When the king had sent a fresh army against them, Nephan, his relation, displayed the greatest valour. for engaging in a single combat with the bravest man of the Philistines, and killing his antagonist, he caused the rest to turn their backs, and many of the enemy fell in that battle." Thus he evades all the difficulty, adding much out of his own head; and by Nephan, designating Elehanan, the son of his (Joab's) uncle, (C. 23:24) or Dodo, a word which the Vulg. renders patrui ejus, "his paternal uncle," though it hat a wider signification, and denotes other relations. Hence, as Joab was the nephew of David, this brave man might be in the same degree, and born of one of the children of Isai; or, perhaps, Josephus infers that he was a kinsman of David, because he was of the same city. H.—Goliath. He might have the same name as his brother, who had been slain by David forty-three years before; (Salien) or the title of brother may only signify, that this giant resembled the former in size and strength. Prov. 18:9.—Beam. See 1 K. 17:7. C.

Ver. 20. Fourth. Josephus says this was the last war with the Philistines; and Tostat. supposes, that they wished to retake the city of Geth. Salien.—Statute, or "of contradiction." Aquila.—Heb. Madon. Sept. leave it as the proper name of a place, "Madon," specified Josue 11:1 and 12:19. Capel would read, "a man of Madian."—Six. Such people were styled Sedigiti, among the Romans. The daughters of Horatius were thus distinguished, as well as the poet Volcatius. Pliny xi. 43.

Ver. 22. Of David, who was present, though it does not appear that he slew any of the four. C.

Ver. 1. Spoke, &c. By comparing this with the 17th Psalm, we may be convinced how much the Hebrew varies, particularly if we examine also the MSS. Kennicott specifies no less than 600 variations in this one canticle, and refutes the opinion of those who say that the 17th Psalm is a second edition, corrected by David's own hand, as the MSS. frequently shew that inaccuracies of the printed copies. He has collated them with Walton's Polyglott. The variations are not however all distinct from each other, sometimes twenty MSS. having the same various readings, and may of the relate to the letter v. See Diss. ii. p. 565. We shall give the explication in the order of the Psalms. The collation of parallel passages is of infinite advantage. Frequently (H.) the words differ so as to explain one another.—Saul. He is specified as the most dangerous. David, by divine inspiration, thanks God for his deliverance from all his enemies, both corporal and spiritual, enjoying peace of mind on account of his sins being forgiven, and all his opponents repressed. W.—This year, the thirty-seventh of David's reign, was free from any commotion. Yet the king seems to have given way to a little vanity, on account of the many valiant men whom God had collected in his service; (C. 23) and hence he consented to the unfortunate resolution of numbering his subjects. Salien, A. 3016.

Ver. 7. Temple. David was now busy in making preparations for it.

Ver. 11. Upon. Cardell (M.) would translate the Heb. “as in contest.”

Ver. 13. Kindled. The words abju abru seem to be wanting here, as they are found in Syr. Arab. and the Psalm. Kennicott would render this most striking image, “at the brightness of his presence his clouds removed; They kindled into colas of fire,” &c. Diss. i.

Ver. 14. Shall. Heb. as well in the past tense. “The Lord thundered,” &c. H.

Ver. 16. Overflowings. Heb. “channels,” the waters receding as at the Red Sea, and at the passage of the Jordan.

Ver. 22. God. Perhaps David might have written this before his fall; or, if afterwards, his sincere repentance had restored him to his former state.

Ver. 26. Holy; treating all according to their deserts. H.

Ver. 29. Lamp. Heb. Thair, “thou wilt light” my lamp, seems deficient; as it is found in some MSS. Syr. Arab. Ps. 17. &c. Kennicott.

Ver. 44. Me. Though David conquered some Gentiles, and some were converted to the true faith under the Old Testament, yet the fulness of the Gentiles belongs to the Church of Christ, the perpetual stability of which is here foretold, v. 51. W.

Ver. 1. Last words, which he spoke by inspiration, (M.) or which may be considered as the conclusion of his Psalms, and inserted after the 71st, (C.) or as a preface or summary of those divine canticles; D. or they relate to the last ages, and to the Messias, (Chal.) the end of the law. H.—Some think it has not been inserted among the Psalms, as not being written in verse: (Sanctius) but it is composed in the true spirit of the Hebrew poetry, though very obscure.—Christ, who should be born of him; or David himself was appointed to be “the king” of God’s people. Sept. “he whom God raised up, the Christ of,” &c. Heb. “sovereign anointed of,” &c.—Psalmist. The Holy Spirit directs David to speak in his own praise. His Psalms were always most highly esteemed in Israel. C.—Said. This preamble may remind us of a similar one of Balaam. Num. 24:3. The prophets generally declare who they are. H.

Ver. 2. Tongue. Nothing could more decisively prove the inspiration of the sacred books.

Ver. 3. Strong one. This is one of the most common titles of God, 1 K. 2:2. Heb. “the rock.”—In the fear. Heb. “of the fear;” that is, of the just, who live in the fear of God. Such abstract expressions are frequent; so “the son of the captivity, of riches,” &c. mean a captive or a rich man. C.—God spoke such words to David as tended to promote solid virtue and piety. H.—We may explain the ruler, &c. of the Messias, who shall diffuse grace and glory throughout the earth. Prot. “He that ruleth over men, must be just, ruling in the fear of God.” An excellent lesson for all in power. H.

Ver. 4. As the light, &c. So shall be the kingdom of Christ. Ch.—Heb. “Like the morning light, shall the sun arise.” But is this sense? Is not the sun the light of the morning? The oldest Heb. MS. in England has the word Jehova before Sun, which seems to have acknowledged by the Sept. though now unintelligible; and thus we are freed from this difficulty, and the passage is proved to be prophetic of the great sun of justice. Malac. 4:2, Isai. 60:2. Kennicott, Dis. i. p. 471.—The Heb. is extremely obscure. C.—Prot. And he shall be as the light of the morning, when the sun riseth, even a morning without clouds; as the tender grass springeth out of the earth by clear shining after rain. H.—These comparisons may be applied to the Psalms and other inspired writings, which enlighten the eyes; (Ps. 18:9,) or to Christ, whose glory surpasses that of the sun, (Ps. 71:5,) and whose graces produce the just. Isai. 45:8. M.—We might expect that David was going to compare the glory of his reign and of his family, with that of the rising sun. Judg. 5 ult. But he does not finish the comparison, being filled with a sense of his own misery. C.

Ver. 5. Neither is my house, &c. As if he should say: This everlasting covenant was not due to my house: but purely owing to his bounty, who is all my salvation, and my will; that is, who hath always saved me, and granted me what I desired of him; so that I and my house, through his blessing, have sprung up, and succeeded in all things. Ch.—He clearly distinguishes between the covenant made with him as to his earthly kingdom, and that which regards Christ. W.—Even the former should be of long duration. Ps. 131:11. H.—Up. Heb. seems to contradict all that had gone before; “for it shall not flourish.” C.—Prot. “although he make it not to grow;” (H.) unless we read with an interrogation, “And shall not my family flourish?” which was a natural reverence to v. 4. C.—God had blessed David with the dew of heaven, and with the fatness of the earth. M.—His glory and happiness should not be of short duration, like the brightest summer-day, or a transient flower. H.

Ver. 6. But. This word is neglected by the Sept. who enjoin this to the preceding verse. “Because the lawless man shall not flourish. They are all like thorns thrust out, for they shall not be handled,” lest they prick. H.

Ver. 8. Jesbaham, the son of Hachamoni. For this was the name of this hero, as appears from 1 Chron. 11:11. Ch.—But then sitting, &c. should not be retained. H.—Most tender, &c. He appeared like one tender and weak, but was indeed most valiant and strong. It seems the Latin has here given the interpretation of the Hebrew name of the hero, to whom Jesbaham was like, instead of the name itself, which was Adino the Eznite, one much renowned of old for his valour. Ch.—The Vulg. has, contrary to custom, translated many of the proper names. C.—The French version would suppose that Adino, the Heznite, was the hero’s name; and queen Elizabeth’s version (1599) is, “He that sat in the seat of wisdom, being chief of the princes, was Adino, the Eznite.” H.—But no such person is mentioned any where else, in the Bible; and these words have been corrupted, like many others in this chapter, as may be gathered from collating it with Chronicles, &c. Kennicott was encouraged to continue, if not to begin his labours, to shew the imperfection of the printed Hebrew, by comparing these passages, though he had formerly imagined that the text had been preserved in its original purity. See Dis. ii. p. 496. He shews the inaccuracy of queen Elizabeth's version, and observes that some have very abruptly inferred, that David was the first of his own mighty men, from the Vulg. which is literally, "These are the names of the valiant men of David. Sitting in the chair, the most wise prince among the three. The same is like the most tender," &c. No name is here specified, (H.) though the catalogue be given expressly to honour their names.—In the chair. Heb. Bashebeth, "seems to be carelessly transcribed in here from the line above," as Oregim was taken from the subsequent line. C. 21:19.—Wisest. Heb. "the Hachmonite."—Three; it is in Heb. "the third;" and in Chron. thirty, improperly. Prot. "the Tachmonite, that sat in the seat, chief among the captains, (the same was Adino, the Eznite) against 800 whom he slew at one time," is therefore inaccurate.—Tachmonite has the th corrupted, from e, which stands for ben, "the son of Hachmoni;" though, as the father of Jashobeam was Zadiel, it would be better rendered the Hachmonite, being his family or local name. It is not always possible to know which is meant. The ellipsis in the Prot. version, and the confounding of Jashobeam with Adino, cannot be excused. Adinu seems to be (H.) corrupted from auror, (as v. 18, and 1 Par.) "lifted up;" eatsnu, a word retained in the Arabic language, for "his spear;" (Vulg.) wood. Le Clerc reads eatsni, which he deems inexplicable, no less than Adinu: but the best copies have eatsnu; so that we need not reject it.—Killed, or "wounded," is the general interpretation of elol; but it signifies also, "a soldier."—Eight is three, in Paral. Similar mistakes have probably arisen from the use of numeral letters. See 4 K. 8:26. We read, that Abisai lifted up his spear against 300. This was, perhaps, an usual number for a regiment of three companies. 1 K. 29:2. Both Jesbahan and Abisai ventured to contend, singly, with so superior a force; but the latter displayed rather less valour, so that he did not attain unto the glory of the former; which he ought to have done, if both had killed the same number. Kennicott would therefore translate, "These are the names of the mighty men, whom David had: Jashobeam, the Hachmonite, chief of the Three: He lifted up his spear against 300 soldiers, at one time." He observes that thirty-seven heroes are particularly specified: (v. 39) Joab, (the captain-general) Jashobeam, Eleazar, Shammah, the first ternary) Abishai, Benaiah, and Asael; (the second ternary) after whom follow thirty, whose exploits are not recorded. If any should still maintain that this verse is correct, we must say (H.) that Adino is a different person from Jesbahan, (as the Vulg. reads it, 1 Par.) and that he killed 800; whereas the latter was only like him, in as much as he slew 300. M.—The marvellous is greatly diminished by substituting 300 instead of 800, and by allowing that the heroes contended with, though they might not kill, the whole company of 300 soldiers. See Kennicott. It seems most rational to admit some corrections, to which we are led by the Sept. “Jesbaath, (Vatic. Jesbosthe, the Chanaanite) the son of Thakemoni. He was the chief of the three. Adino, the Asonian, is useless, (C.) as a proper name: when corrected, it is rendered, (H.) “he drew,” &c. Whence have they taken this, as it is not in Hebrew at present, unless they read, (C.) auror, elevavit, “he lifted up his spear.” Ken.—The number of 300 slain by one man, in one engagement, is also more credible than 800. C.—Josephus increases the number to 900; but then he supposes they were slain in various battles. “The king had thirty-eight, chiefly renowned for their achievements ... The first, Issaimos, the son of Achamani, who rushing, not once, but frequently, into the midst of the enemy, did not cease from slaughtering till he had killed 900.” We may observe that he increases the number of the mighty men. H.—Delany reduces it to thirty-six, though he afterwards reckons thirty-seven, erroneously making thirty-one commanders of the third order, when he ought to have allowed the odd one to be the captain-general, and placed him before the two ternaries. Lightfoot also reckons thirty-six, and mentions them in this remarkably false order: 1, Joab; 2, Adino, of Ezri, called Jashobeam, by office; 3, Eleazar. And in the second rank: 1, Abishai; 2, Shammah; 3, Benaiah. Kennicott.—All these officers were styled, Shalischim. See Ex. 14:7. C.—A body of “Thirty” was, perhaps, originally formed by David; and, though he afterwards admitted a greater number, they all went by the first name. Salien.

Ver. 9. Dodo. In Latin, Patrui ejus, which is the interpretation of the Hebrew name Dodo. The same occurs in v. 24, (Ch). and signifies, “of his paternal uncle.” H.—Sept. read Dudia, (C.) “of his father’s brother.” He, or his father, is styled Dudai. 1 Par. 27:4. C.—Sept. (Alex.) translates both Dodo and Dodi, “the son of his father’s brother,” the son of Sousei, or (Vat.) Doudei. Dodi seems to be the more accurate here, as he is thus more distinguished from Dodo, v. 24. Chron. 5:26.—Defied. Heb. is incorrect, and ought to be a proper name as is evident from the word there. Josephus calls it, ἀρᾶσαιμω, (perhaps originally, ἀρᾶσδαιμω) Chron. Pasdammim, or Ephesdammim. 1 K. 17:1. It is hardly probable that the Hebrews should defy or upbraid the Philistines, and immediately run away. We should therefore translate with 1 Par. men. “He was with David at Pasdammim. And when the Philistines were there gathered together to battle, and the men of Israel were gone away, he arose,” &c. Kennicott.

Ver. 10. Sword; holding it, and exerting himself so long; (Sanctius) or on account of the blood, which glued, as it were, his hand to the sword. Joseph. M.—This verse, and as far as troop in the following, is omitted in 1 Par.; so that Semma is not so much as mentioned, (H.) and of course the number thirty seven cannot be found. Ken.—Perhaps Samaoth may be the same hero. 1 Par. 2:27 and 27:8. C.

Ver. 11. Troop. Heb. Lachaya, has been much controverted: but it appears to be the name of Lechi, or Lehi, “the jaw-bone,” (Josephus and Sept. Complut.) so memorable for the exploit of Samson. Bochart Anim. p. 1. B. ii. 15.—Vulg. lit. in statione, “in a station.” Some copies of the Sept. “against wild beasts;” “To hunt wild beasts.” Syr. and Arab. But it is most probably the name of a place. C.—Lentils. 1 Par. Barley seems more correct, as the field could not be full of both at the same time; (H.) and barley is of more general utility. Kennic.—Yet some would assert, that there was barley in one part and lentils in the other. Buxtorf, &c.

Ver. 13. Before this. The exploits performed before the death of Goliath have been recorded. The following took place soon after the taking of Jerusalem. Heb. simply, “And three of the Schalischim came to David at harvest-time, (Paral, more correctly, to the rocks,) and into the cave,” &c. C.—Three is undoubtedly the proper word, though the printed Heb. copies have thirty in the text; except the most ancient edition of Ximenes, 1515, which retains three, with all the versions, and some Heb. MSS. and as v. 17 itself reads among would be better above; (v. 23,) as the three officers aforesaid were not of the body of thirty, but of a still higher order.—Harvest. Heb. el Katsir, is never used elsewhere in this sense; and the Sept. have left the latter word as a proper name, “at Kasoar;” etsur seems to have been the original word, as in Paral. “to the rock.” Such places had frequently caverns or strong holds, 1 K. 24:1, 4.—Camp. The Sept. also seem to have read mene, as in Par. instead of eith, which never occurs, for “a troop.” Ken.—This camp was distant from the station at Bethlehem, (M.) which was distant from Jerusalem “two hours travel.” Maundrell.—Giants, or Raphaim, 2 K. 21:18. M.

Ver. 14. Garrison. Lit. “station,” (H.) or advanced guard.—In. The b is omitted in Heb. as on many other occasions; (4 K. 14:14. Ken.) owing perhaps to the following words beginning with the same letter. H.

Ver. 15. Gate. David had been educated in that town. M.—He expresses his wish to see his native place delivered from the hands of the enemy, more than for water; (Sanctius. Ken.) or being very thirsty, he speaks his sentiments without designing that any should attempt to procure him the water. C.—The three valiant men considered his desire as a law. M.—They were not to be condemned of rashness, though it would have been such in ordinary men. Salien.—David only intended to try the valour of his soldiers. When they brought the water he would not drink, judging that precious things should be offered to God. W.

Ver. 16. Camp, or station of soldiers, v. 13, 14.—Offered it, as “a libation,” according to the Heb. and Sept. Vayasec is commonly used; but vinsoc, in Par. is the truer reading, as “it contains the three radical letters; and it were greatly to be wished that the verbs in every other place had also those radical letters restored, which have been omitted by the Masorets, and supplied by their punctuations.” Ken. Dis. i. p. 154.—Lord, as a sacrifice, worthy of him, and to teach his followers to be temperate, (M.) and not to expose their lives unnecessarily. H. —“He had formerly indulged himself in forbidden pleasures.” S. Greg. —David thus asked pardon for having, undesignedly, hazarded the lives of his men, (Ken.) and gave thanks for their safe return. Josephus.—A libation of water was solemnly made, 1 K. 7:6. The pagans used water when they had no wine, as they never sat down to meat, or offered sacrifice, without making a libation. C. See Iliad H. Æneid viii. 279.

Dixit & in mensa laticum libavit honorem. Virgil, Æneid i. 740.

Ver. 17. Drink. This word is acknowledged in 1 Par. and in all the ancient versions. Ken.—Prot. supply, “Is not this the blood of the men that went in jeopardy of their lives?” Instead of Jehova, (H.) which ought to have m prefixed, we find maleim; (1 Par.) a word never used in such solemn appeals to the Lord. This seems owing to the superstition of the Jews, who would not pronounce the former name, perhaps in imitation of the heathens, who kept the names of their tutelar gods secret, lest the enemy might call them out, and thus obtain possession of their country. See Macrobius. iii. 9. No mention is made of the Romans making use of this mode of evocation at the last siege of Jerusalem, as they were unacquainted with the true name of God. Virgil (ii. 351,) writes,—

Excessere omnes Adytis Arisque relictis, Dii quibus imperium hoc steterat. See Servius. Kennicott.

Ver. 18. Three. Sept. (Alex.) and Josephus read “six hundred,” (H.) against all the rest.

Ver. 19. Three. Heb. haci, seems to be mistaken for bossnim, “above two;” as one of the Greek versions in the Hexapla renders it, with the Sept. "Of the three he was more honourable than two; therefore he was their captain, and yet to," &c. Thus we see a double ternary fully established, v. 8. Kennicott.

Ver. 20. Banaias. The v at the end of this man's name, is wanting in Par. It serves to distinguish him more from one of the Thirty, who was the 11th captain in waiting on the king; (1 Par. 27:14,) whereas this was the third, (Ib. 5) and one of great renown. 3 K. 1:32.—Lions. Heb. ari, "a lion;" and el, "god," designate people "of extraordinary valour." Ken.—Hence the Arabians give the title to Ali, the son-in-law of Mahammed. Bochart, Anim. iii. 1.—These two were noblemen, (Chal.) giants, (Joseph.) or fortresses; (Vatab.) namely, Areopolis, which is divided into two parts by the Arnon. C.—Some suppose that he slew three real lions. The last, being in such a confined situation, enhanced his merit. Cajet. M.—The Alex. copy of the Sept. has a great omission of the words between slew, occasioned by the word recurring twice; as also v. 21. Dr. Milles attributes the omission of the famous text 1 John 5:7, to a similar case; μαρτυρουντις, being found in the subsequent verse. "Proclivi admodum errore, quod norunt, quibus cum veteribus membranis res est." 2nd edit.—"A source of frequent mistakes, as all know who have consulted old MSS."

Ver. 21. Sight, for size. Josephus.—Heb. "a man of great aspect," which 1 Par. properly explains "five cubits high."—Hand. Sept. supply what seems to be omitted, "like a weaver's beam," (Ken.) as it is found in Paral.—Rod, or rather "a staff," like David's. 1 K. 17:43 and 14:43. H.—Some men, with a stick or codgel, will not fear to encounter a man armed; (C.) as we see exemplified in Q. Curtius, (ix. 7,) where Dioxippus, the Athenian wrestler, overcame Horratus of Macedon, who had challenged him out in a fit of drunkenness. H.

Ver. 23. Who were. Heb. "he was honourable above the thirty." Sept. erroneously read three; as he was only the second in this series, though superior to the body of thirty. See v. 13. The versions seem here perplexed, for want of observing this distinction of ranks.—Council. Heb. "over his obedience," or "guard." Joseph. C. 20:23.—Sept. "over his own country," mosspethu, instead of the present el mishmahto, super auscultationem suam: or rather moשממorthu, custodiam suam. Grot. Ken.—Banaias held a very distinguished rank among the officers at court. He was like the king's eye and ear. H.—These titles were given to some by the eastern kings. Apuleius, Mundo. Brisson. Pers. i.—Midas was said to have such great ears, only on account of his spies. Conon. narrat. i. C.

Ver. 24. Was one. Heb. the preposition b is here used, which signifies “above;” as v. 13 and 23 and as Junius renders it. H.—“Asael ... was head of the thirty.” Arab.—He could not be one of that body, as the number is complete without him, and he is necessary to fill up the second ternary. The Book of Chronicles does not point this out with so much precision as it had been already done. Kennicott.—Asael was slain by Abner. C. 2:23. He was captain of the fourth band. 1 Par. 27:7.—Elehanan, the first of the thirty.—Dodo. Lit. patrui ejus, “of his (Asael’s) uncle,” which might, perhaps, be as well translated by 1 Par. 11:26. See C. 21:19. The Sept. give both, “Dodei, the son of his father’s brother,” as v. 9; (H.) or “rather those two translations are by some transcriber, or editor, injudiciously thrown together.” Kennicott.

Ver. 25. Semma. The same with the third hero, though his country is differently written, v. 11. C.—But this is very improbable, as the number of 37 would be thus destroyed. The former was an Hararite. The Sept. style the present captain, Samoth, in 1 Par.; Vulg. Sammoth; and the Ald. copy has Semoth here. He was the fifth captain; (1 Par. 27:8,) and the four subsequent ones relieved each other in waiting on the king.—Harodi, more correct than Arorite, 1 Par. (H.) as the Sept. also there terminate with di.—Elica is omitted, 1 Par. 11. (Kennic.) as he perhaps died soon; and Zabad succeeding to his honours, comes at the end of these 30 heroes. Ib. v. 30. Junius.

Ver. 26. Phalti. Par. Phalonite. H.—Nu has been mistaken for t. This is the seventh captain in waiting. Heb. “Heletz, the Pelonite.” It will suffice here to express how Kennicott would write the names of the following mighty men; referring for more particulars to his learned Diss. on 1 Chron. 11 and to the notes on that chap. v. 28, &c. In the body of 30, he places, 1. Elehanan, the son of Dodo, of Bethlehem; 2. Shamhoth, the Harodite; 3. Elika, the Harodite; (supplied by Zabad) 4. Heletz, the Pelonite; 5. Ira, the son of Ikkesh, the Tekoite; 6. Abiezer, the Anathothite; 7. Sibbecai, the Hushathite; (as C. 21:18, 1 Par. 20:4 and 27:11,) 8. Ilai, the Ahohite; 9. Maharai, the Netophathite; 10. Heled, the son of Baanah, the Netophathite; 11. Ithai, the son of Ribai, of Gibe, of the sons of Benjamin; 12. Benaiah, the Pirathonite; 13. Hurai, of the brooks of Gaash; 14. Abialbon, the Arbathite; 15. Azmaveth, the Bahurimite; 16. Elihaba, the Shaalbonite; 17. Gouni, (a word lost in Heb.) of the sons of Hassum; 18. Jonathan, the son of Shamha, the Hararite; (see C. 21:21,) 19. Ahiham, the son of Shacar, the hararite; 20. Eliphelet, the son of Abasbai, the Maacathite; 21. Eliam, the son of Ahithophel, the Gilonite; 22. Hetzrai, the Carmelite; 23. Naarai, the son of Azbai; 24. Joal, the brother of Nathan, of Tzobah; (see 1 Par.) 25. Bani, the Gadite; 26. Tzelek, the Ammonite; 27. Naharai, the Barothite, armour-bearer of Joab, the son of Zeruiah; 28. Ira, the Ithrite; 29. Gareb, the Ithrite; 30. Uriah, the Hethite. After these follow Zabad and 15 other brave men, though less renowned than the preceding. 1 Par. 11:42. It is a pity that the Masorets have introduced a new mode of pronunciation, and that it has been adopted by the Prot. so that it is almost impossible to recognize in their work the scriptural names of the most ancient versions of the Sept. and Vulg. H.

Ver. 27. Mobonnai. Sept. have translated the Heb. “of the sons,” mobni, (Kennicott) which is corrupted from sobci, or (H.) Sobbochai, who was a Husathite. 1 Par. 11:29. C.

Ver. 28. Selmon, or Ilai.

Ver. 29. Heled. Heb. ends improperly in b.

Ver. 30. Heddai: d is exchanged for r in Paral. Hurai.

Ver. 31. Abialbon, or Abiel.—Beromi, or Azmoth, a Bauramite.

Ver. 32. Jonathan. David’s nephew, (1 Par.) of the sons of Assem, a Gezonite. This ought, perhaps, to be “Gouni, of the sons,” &c. otherwise the name will be lost, contrary to the design of the sacred writer. The verse is not terminated at Jonathan. But he was the son of Sage, (or rather of Semma, as here, v. 33) an Ararite. 1 Par. H.—Sage was also the son of Samma, (v. 11,) as Sage and Age are visibly the same; (C.) though of this we may doubt. H.

Ver. 33. Aliam, &c. Par. Ahiam, the son of Sachar. The change is easy.

Ver. 34. Eliphelet, &c. or Eliphal, the son of Ur; Hepher, a Macherathite; Ahia, a Phelonite; Hesro, a Carmelite. See 1 Par. 11:35.

Ver. 35. Arbi. Par. “Naari, the son of Azbai.” H.

Ver. 36. Igaal, or Joel, the brother of Nathan. To reconcile these texts, we may say the person was adopted by his brother, or had married his daughter, which was not prohibited by the law.—Bonni, or Mibahar, the son of Agarai.

Ver. 37. Bearer, or “squire.” W.—He is the only one specified, though there were others. H.

Ver. 39. Urias, the husband of Bethsabee. We have observed (v. 25,) that in Paral. the number of 37 is completed by Zabad, instead of Elica. H.—Only 36 are specified in these catalogues, as the name of the sixth hero (v. 18,) is omitted, whom some take to be Sobati, Jonathan, (C. 21:22,) Joiada, (v. 20,) or Joab. C.—But the truth is, Joab is not mentioned here at all, as he was sufficiently known for the chief; (1 Par. 11:6,) and he makes up the number of 37. The sixth, therefore, was Asael; (v. 24,) and after him there are exactly 30. For though Gonni be lost, (v. 32,) Semma is substituted in the following verse. H.

Ver. 1. Stirred up, &c. This stirring up, was not the doing of God, but of satan; as it is expressly declared, 1 Chron. 21:1. Ch.—David was moved by vanity, &c. thus to displease God.—Among. Heb. “against,” as the king could have done nothing more prejudicial to his people, 70,000 of whom perished on this occasion, v. 15. H.—We might also translate, “The anger of the Lord continued against Israel: for David, for their misfortune, was moved to say, Go,” &c. as this would obviate the harshness of the expression. C.—However, as it is the same in the Sept. &c. and as similar words do not prove that God is the author of sin, we may explain this in the same sense, allowing that he suffered the evil to take place, knowing how to draw good out of it. S. Aug. &c. H.—Some take this Satan to be an evil counsellor. C.—The devil may be styled “the fury of God?” as he is his creature, though rebellious. W.

Ver. 2. Them. He was led by curiosity. M.

Ver. 3. Thing. He speaks in stronger terms, and adds, (1 Par. 21:3,) which may be imputed as a sin to Israel. Joab was not extremely religious: yet he perceived the evil consequences, and, along with the other captains, expressed his sentiments with more respect than on former occasions. H.

Ver. 5. God, at the eastern extremity, on the banks of the Arnon.

Ver. 6. Hodsi. Sept. Alex. (5) “of Gad and Eliazer, (6) and they came into Galaad, and into the land of Ethaon Adasai, and they went into Dan Jaran.” The other editions vary. Heb. means, “to the land of new subjects,” or “lately conquered” (Junius) from the Agarites, (1 Par. 5:10,) which agrees with this situation. C. Lyran.—The commissioners first took an account of the tribe of Ruben, (M.) and then proceeded northward, till they returned from Dan towards the south. H.—Woodlands. S. Jerom reads jar, instead of jan. By transposing a letter, ain would signify Dan, “the spring,” which feeds the Jordan.

Ver. 7. Tyre, the ancient; about 4000 paces from the new city, which stands in an island. Strabo xvi. See Jos. 19:29.

Ver. 8. Land. Yet they did not number the Levites or Benjamin, nor even the rest exactly, as Joab acted with reluctance. 1 Par. 21:6 and 27:24. M.

Ver. 9. Eight ... and five. Theodotion says nine and four, which comes to the same sum. H.—But 1 Par. 21:5, reads, eleven hundred thousand, and four hundred and seventy thousand fighting men: though even there the Arab. version has the number here specified, which is less incredible. The fighting men are not above a fifth part of the population; and we may allow that David might have about seven million subjects. It seems, therefore, best to abandon the latter number as incorrect, since all commentators confess that similar mistakes have been made by the transcribers; and to maintain the contrary, would be indirectly to throw the blame upon the sacred writers. C.—Yet some account for the variation, by saying, that Joab gave not in the full number here, (M. Abul. &c.) which seems contrary to the text, there were found, &c. H.—A. Lapide supposes, that the excess of number was occasioned by the subsequent list of the Levites, &c. But could they amount to so many? C.—And what proof is there that they were numbered, after the anger of God had manifested itself so severely? H.—Others affirm, that Joab did not take an account of the 288,000 chosen out of the twelve tribes, that 24,000 of them might guard the palace by turns, in each of the twelve months. 1 Par. 27:1. Bochart Anim. p. 1. B. ii. 37. Grot. &c.—But thus there will be 18,000 more than even in Paral. where we find in all 1,570,000, though the tribe of Juda have fewer, by 30,000, than in this book. To account for this, some say, (H.) the proselytes are here taken in, or the inhabitants of all the territory, which was at first assigned to Juda. Jos. 19:29. M.—All this is conjecture, (H.) and must remain among the systems of history. C.—If Joab chose to diminish the numbers of Israel, why has he increased those of Juda? Did he wish to flatter the king's vanity, or partiality for his own tribe? It is difficult to say what interest Joab could have in withholding the truth; and for the sacred historian to countenance his delusion, would expose us to the same danger of mistake, and overthrow the authority of Scripture, therefore, most rational to suppose that we have here the true list of the warriors, and that the book of Paral. has been injured by the negligence of transcribers, as it has on many other occasions. H.

Ver. 10. David's heart struck him, after the people were numbered. That is, he was touched with a great remorse for the vanity and pride which had put him upon numbering the people. Ch.—His sin must have been internal, and probably involved a secret confidence in his riches and power, without referring all to God, (H.) or trusting entirely in him. S. Amb. pœn. c. 9. S. Aug. c. Faust. xxii. 66. &c.—There was otherwise no prohibition for David's taking this account, (C.) which is so natural for a prince, and may frequently prove of great service. H.—Josephus (vii. 13.) and others assert, that he neglected to require the payment of half a sicle. T. E.—But where does God complain of this neglect? and how do they know that the injunction which was once given to Moses, when the tabernacle was furnished, (Ex. 30:12) was to remain in force afterwards? Oleaster (on Exod.) says David acted against God's intention, who had promised that the Israelites should be innumerable. But this reason seems childish; and did not the king abstain, on that very account, from numbering any but those who were fit for war? 1 Par. 27:23. C.—Struck him. Contrition and confession are specified here, as satisfaction is, v. 12. Temporal sufferings are inflicted, even after the sin has been remitted, v. 16. W.

Ver. 11. And seer. This was a peculiar distinction of the prophet, (H.) who was appointed to direct David, (M.) to whom he had been long attached. 1 K. 22:5. C.

Ver. 13. Seven. Par. three; which makes the contrast more striking. H.—The Sept. and some copies of the Arab. version, have the latter number. C.—Gad might first propose seven, and then reduce it to three. M.—But did the prophet deliver the message twice? Usher pleads for the truth of both numbers, though he says, “It was always my opinion, that the Hebrew copy of the Old Testament has been no less exposed to the errors of writers, than that of the New, and all other books.” Synt. p. 219. Boxtorf also declares, “it is better piously to believe that both is right.” Why? “because both is written.” Antic. p. 401 and 420! The contradiction, in fact, seems to have been occasion by the mistake of a numeral letter, g (3) for z (7.) Kennicott. —Usher, Malvenda, &c. adopt an hypothesis, beautiful enough, but destitute of proof, when they say that God proposed three years in punishment of David's criminal curiosity. But as that famine would have immediately followed the three years' scarcity, already endured, (C. 21) and during the seventh, or sabbatical year, nothing could be reaped, the famine would thus rage for seven years. C.—Salien places the 62nd sabbatical year at this very time, A. 3017, and terminates the famine occasioned by the cruel injustice of Saul, A. 1013, which cannot agree with the aforesaid system. H.

Ver. 14. Lord, and be exposed to the violence of pestilence, which attacks both rich and poor; whereas the rich can frequently escape the dangers of war, or of famine. C.—David knew that he had sinned, and he did not wish to screen himself from suffering the temporal punishment due to sin. H.—God punishes us equally by the hand of men, as by other means; but the king thus intimates, that he looks upon Him as an indulgent father, who is less severe than the ministers of justice. M.

Ver. 15. And. Sept. insert, “And David chose death, (the pestilence, as they usually render it; Salien). And it was the time of the wheat-harvest. And the Lord gave death in Israel, from morning till dinner-time.” H.—Appointed, for three days; though before the end of the last, God took pity on the people, ver 16. C.—Bochart thinks the pestilence ceased to rage at some hour of the first day. Syr. and Arab. “till the sixth hour.”

Ver. 16. Areuna. Heb. styles him, Araniah, (v. 18. C.) i being substituted for u, and placed after n. He is called Ornan, 1 Par. 21:18, (H.) and has the title of Jebusite, as he was originally of that nation, and had been permitted to retain his effects, on his embracing the true religion. Moria was his property, and seems not to have been much inhabited. It was not yet enclosed within the city walls. Here David saw the angel, in the air, ready to strike the inhabitants, and heard the voice from heaven. C.—He had already witnessed the death of many in the city. 1 Par. 21:14. The angel waited for God’s orders how many to destroy. H.—He did not sheath his sword till David had offered sacrifice to appease the Lord; (v. 21) though others think that the sacrifice was to thank God for the deliverance. C.

Ver. 17. Are, like sheep. M.—They were not accountable for the fault of their shepherd, or king; nor were they punished for it, (H.) but for joining in the revolts of Absalom, Seba, &c. (Salien) as well as for other secret offences. H.—Some groundlessly condemn the people, for entertaining sentiments of pride, along with David. Both king and people suffer, when either draws down the vengeance of heaven.

Ver. 18. Altar. This was done by a positive order. People still had the liberty of sacrificing on the heights of Gabaon. C.—This place was honoured with the tabernacle; and David would have gone thither, if he had not been so much terrified. 1 Par. 21:30. H.

Ver. 22. Wain. So Josephus reads. Sept. “wheels.” Heb. “rollers,” to beat out the corn. C.—Prot. “threshing instruments, and other instruments of the oxen for wood.” Paral. adds, that Areuna offered wheat, and saw the angel, as his four sons, and probably most of the inhabitants of Jerusalem did.

Ver. 23. As a king. Lit. “king Areuna.” e may have been substituted for c, “like,” though the latter word is often understood. H.—Some suppose that he was formerly king of the Jebusites, (Vatab.) or one of their descendants, (Grot.) or possessed of great riches, &c. But why is the title never given to him elsewhere? Bochart.—The Sept. Syr. and many Latin copies, do not recognize it; nor was it found in the Chaldean, in the 12th age. Yet without making any changes, we may translate, “O king, Areuna has given all these things to the king.” The Jews often speak of themselves in the third person, out of respect. Le Clerc. C.

Ver. 24. Free-cost, or given gratis. This shews that subjects have property, otherwise they could only yield what was due to the king, as his own. W.—Silver. Sept. “for the silver of fifty sicles.” H.—Bochart explains for the money of 50 sicles of gold, which makes 600 sicles of silver. Gold was formerly as twelve to one, compared with silver. Plato in Hipparcho.—But the best method of reconciling this passage with 1 Par. is to say, that David gave the 50 sicles for the oxen and floor, and afterwards purchased the whole piece of ground for 600 (C.) sicles of gold, (or 902*l.* 5*s.* sterling. H.) being informed that the temple was to be erected there, (C.) where Isaac had formerly been brought to be sacrificed. M.—We might make a colon, or pause, at floor, as if its price were specified elsewhere, and the fifty sicles were given for the oxen. D. M.—The sum amounts to only about 1*l.* 14*s.* H.

Ver. 25. Holocausts; a second time. The former victims had been consumed by fire from heaven. 1 Par. 26:28. C.

3 KINGS

THE THIRD BOOK OF KINGS

INTRODUCTION

This and the following Book are called by the holy Fathers, The Third and Fourth Book of Kings; but by the Hebrews, the First and Second. They contain the history of the kingdoms of Israel and Juda, from the beginning of the reign of Solomon to the captivity. As to the writer of these books, it seem most probable they were not written by one man, nor at one time; but as there was all along a succession of prophets in Israel, who recorded, by divine inspiration, the most remarkable things that happened in their days, these books seem to have been written by these prophets. See 2 Paral. alias 2 Chron. 9:29, 12:15, 13:22, 20:34, 26:22, 32:32. Ch.—This book informs us of the death of David, C. 2:11, where some Greek copies concluded the second book “of the reigns or kingdoms,” as they style all the four books. Theodoret and Diodorus follow this division. The point is of no consequence; and the Hebrew editions have often varied. Origen observes, that the Jews denoted these two books from the first words, “Ouammelech David.” Euseb. Hist. vi. 25. H.—In S. Jerom’s time, the four books made only two. The present book details the actions of Solomon, (C.) till the end of the 12th chapter. Then we behold the division of the kingdom: Roboam, Abias, Asa, and Josaphat, reign over Juda; Jeroboam, &c. over Israel; while the prophets Abias, Elias, Eliseus, appear in the remaining eleven chapters. W.—Though the memoirs seem to have been left by contemporary authors, (H.) one, and most probably Esdras, made the compilation, after the captivity, inserting frequently the very words of his authors, yet so as to make some additional reflections. C.—The Rabbins generally attribute the work to Jeremias. H.—He is more attentive to the house of David, and to display the rewards of the piety, and the punishment of vice, as well as the glory of the temple and of religion, than to describe the military exploits, which occupy so much of the profane history. C.

Ver. 1. Years; sixty-nine, as he died when he was seventy years old. C. 2 K. 5:4.—Warm. Though David was of a strong constitution, he had been so much exposed to fatigue, and so harassed with domestic broils, that his vigour was nearly decayed. C.—The Rabbins say, that the sight of the angel had greatly contributed to weaken him. Lyran, and others, suppose that he was affected with the palsy. Abul. Salien, A. 3019.

Ver. 2. Servants. Physicians. Josep. vii. 14.—People of the faculty still adopt the same sentiments; and when fire and clothes will not procure heat, they advise the application of living creatures. Bartholin ix. Galen vii. Vales. Philos. c. 19.

Ver. 3. Sunamitess. Sunam was not far from Thabor, in the tribe of Issachar. C.—This history leads us to explain the ambition and death of Adonias. H.

Ver. 4. Her. Which shews the virtue and temperance of David. M.—She was his wife, at least of a second order. Adonias flattered himself, on account of Abisag's virginity, that the law did not hinder him from marrying her; (Lev. 18:8. Kimchi) or he was blinded by ambition. C.—Heretics and persecutors thus attempt in vain, (H.) to defile the Church, the chaste spouse of Jesus, that they may usurp his throne. C.

Ver. 5. Him. He was not deterred by the fate of Absalom. H.—He was now the eldest son, and gave himself out for the presumptive heir. C.—David is blamed for some remissness, in not repressing him; (Salien) as his conduct tended to excite confusion, and to frustrate the appointment of God. But the king was convinced that nothing would be able to disturb that order; and he would take measures, in due time, to curb the ambition of his eldest son, from which, as yet, he apprehended no danger. H.—Old age renders people slow. M.

Ver. 7. Side. For their own interest, and because they supposed that the throne belonged of course to him. M.—This was the natural privilege, when no other disposition was made by God, or by the kings who succeeded David. They did not esteem themselves bound to leave the crown to their eldest sons. Hitherto God had made choice himself, as he had required. Deut. 17:15. In favour of David, he pleased to grant sovereignty to his descendants. But the king expected to declare which he preferred, in case he chose to deviate from the natural order, v. 20.

Ver. 8. Sadoc, the rival of Abiathar, and a descendant of Eleazar. David had permitted both to perform the functions of the high priesthood; (C.) or one had acted as the delegate of the other. Salien.—Banaïas was distinguished for his valour, 2 K. 23:20. He was the flower of his age, and, perhaps, aspired at the authority of Joab, whose credit began to decline; as he was grown old, and was known to be rather disagreeable to David, and had been guilty of such horrid murders. Both the contending princes sought to ingratiate themselves with the army and with the priests, as their influence was of the utmost consequence. Solomon was more fortunate, in having also Nathan the prophet on his side; but the throne was secured to him much more on account of the divine decree, 2 K. 7:12 and 12:25. H.—Nathan is commonly considered as the tutor of the young prince, (M.) and was styled his “father.” C.—Semei, or Nabath, father of Jeroboam; and Rei, or Ira, who is styled the priest of David, 2 K. 20:26. S. Jer. Tradit. M.—To confound Semei with Nabath is wrong. Salien.—Army; the king's guard consisting chiefly of the Cerethi, &c. (C.) who were under Banaïas. The whole army, over which Joab was general, was not always in arms. Sept. "Semei and Resi, other copies read (H.) his friends," (with Syr. Arab.) "and Daia, heroes of David." Heb. may be, "neither the hearers nor the seers, nor the brave men of David were with Adonias." The populace, or the disciples, as well as the prophets, may be thus denoted.

Ver. 9. Slain. Either for sacrifice, or simply for a feast; (C.) though it is probable that victims of peace would be offered, as on similar occasions, on which the guests would afterwards feast. 1 K. 11. H.—Rogel, east of Jerusalem, in the vale of Josaphat. M.

Ver. 10. Not. Out of contempt, (C.) and because he knew that they would oppose his measures. H.

Ver. 11. It not. So that we may safely endeavour to overturn his plane. M.

Ver. 12. Life. Both would have been in imminent danger, if the ambitious projects of Adonias succeeded, as he knew that the throne had been promised to Solomon by his father, and he would consider him as a dangerous rival. C.—The Turkish emperors usually destroy or confine their brethren, when they commence their reign. H.

Ver. 13. Swear. This he did, either when he comforted her, after the death of her first-born; (2 K. 12:24) or rather, when Solomon had received so glorious a name, and was declared the heir by Nathan. 2 K. 7:12. 1 Par. 22:19. and 28:5. Adonias acknowledges that God had made choice of his brother. C. 2:15. C.

Ver. 14. Words, and confirm what thou hast said, (M.) reminding the king of God's express declaration. H.

Ver. 16. Worshipped. Prot. "did obeisance." Heb. "fell prostrate on the ground before the king," (C.) without any danger of idolatry. H.

Ver. 18. Of it. So that thy authority is also contemned. M.

Ver. 20. Thee. Adonias boasts that all Israel was on his side. C. 2:15. C.

Ver. 21. Offenders. I, as guilty of adultery; and my son, as a mamzer; (Deut. 23:2. T.) or we shall be accounted pretenders, (H.) and condemned as guilty of high treason. C.—Our hopes and expectations will be frustrated. Vat. E.—We shall be despised or punished. W.

Ver. 28. Come in. Nathan went out, at the same time; (M.) so that each had a private audience. C.

Ver. 33. Lord, David. M.—The Cerethi, and other life-guards, went under the command of their captain, Banaïas, (C.) to repel any force that might disturb this solemn inauguration. H.—Mule. None but the king was allowed to mount it.—Gihon, a fountain, or place of public resort, on the west of Jerusalem. Ezechias brought its waters into the city. 2 Par. 32:30. C.—Adonias was at Rogel, on the east. M.

Ver. 34. Save, (Vavat.) “Live.” May Solomon reign for many years. H.

Ver. 35. Stead. Not after me only. David voluntarily abdicates the throne, so that Solomon reigned in his life-time. M.

Ver. 36. King. May all have a prosperous issue, conformably to the wishes of your majesty and the decrees of God. C.

Ver. 37. David. Parents wish their children to be still more happy than themselves, how jealous soever they may be of their own glory. C.

Aspice completum votum; jam natus adæquat

Te meritis, &, quod magis est optabile, vincit. Claud. iv. con. Honor.

Ver. 39. Horn of oil. Such liquors were commonly kept in vessels of horn. C.—Some say that oil, for the consecration of priests, was used on this occasion; and that the ceremony was performed only, when the throne was contested: as in the case of Joas, Joachaz, &c. H.—Nathan assisted Sadoc, (v. 34.) who was not yet the high priest. M.

Ver. 40. Rang. Heb. “was split.” Chal. “shook.” M.

Ver. 41. Uproar. Nathan had conducted the affair with singular address. A little delay might have plunged the kingdom into all the horrors of a civil war.

Ver. 43. Not so. Heb. “Misfortune or mourning, or verily.” A man of character did not willingly deliver a disagreeable message. 2 K. 18:25. C.—But Jonathan was concerned for his father. H.

Ver. 47. Blessed. Congratulating him on the exaltation of Solomon.—Bed. Shewing respect to the new king, as Jacob had done to Joseph; (Gen. 47:31. Sanctius) or laying himself down again; (C.) or rather giving thanks to God, (M.) whom he adored, in gratitude for the favour of a successor being granted to him. W.

Ver. 49. Afraid. As they had offended both David and Solomon, and had rendered themselves suspected of high treason.

Ver. 51. Altar. At Gabaon, (2 Par. 1:3,) or at Sion. All nations seemed to grant the right of an asylum to sacred places; but only in favour of the innocent. Ex. 21:14. C.

Ver. 53. House. He does not forbid him the court, but grants him pardon. M.

3 KINGS 2

Ver. 2. Flesh, to the tomb. Omnium idem exitus est, sed & idem domicilium. Petron.—In life each follows his own course. C.

Ver. 3. Charge, what he orders.—Understand. Heb. “act prudently,” (M.) or “with success,” Gr. interp. (C.) and Chal. M.—The observance of God’s law, both in private and in public, will ensure to thee the title of a wise prince.

Ver. 4. Truth and sincerity. C.—This promise was made, 2 K. 7:16. M.

Ver. 5. Joab. These instructions given by David to his son, with relation to Joab and Semei, proceeded not from any rancour of heart, or private pique; but from a zeal for justice: that crimes so public and heinous might not pass unpunished. Ch.—David and Solomon esteemed themselves, in a manner, defiled, as long as these continued unpunished, v. 31. Joab had behaved to David with great insolence, after the death of Absalom. H.—He had lately sided with Adonias. M.—But what touched the good old king more particularly, were the treacherous murders of two great generals, who had put themselves under his protection, and were endeavouring to promote his welfare. Only the fear of greater commotions had hitherto prevented David from bringing his nephew to public execution, as the people expected. He deemed it requisite to remind his successor of this obligation, when his power should be sufficiently strong, that the impunity of such daring offenders might not destroy the commonwealth. H.—Peace. Pretending affection. Joab had treated Abner and Amasa as the worst of enemies, and their blood had stained his garments. M.

Ver. 6. To hell. This word hell doth not signify the place or state of damnation; but the place and state of the dead. Ch.—It would have been a great scandal if this murderer had died quietly in his old age. Joab had rendered great services to his uncle, for which he had been rewarded. He had been at the head of the armies 40 years. His great age rendered him now less formidable; particularly as the nation enjoyed peace.

Ver. 7. Table, or of the meat, which had been served upon it; as was the custom at the court of Persia. Dan. 1:5.—Brother. See 2 K. 19:31. C.

Ver. 8. Curse. Saying, Go out, &c. 2 K. 16:5.—Camp. Heb. Machanayim. H.—Sword. He would revenge his private wrongs, but reserved the punishment of a notorious offender, till a time when passion would have no influence. Solomon was not bound by the personal oath of his father.

Ver. 9. Man. Many have thought that Solomon was only 12 years old. Euseb. &c.—But the best chronologers suppose that he was about 20. God had blessed him with a happy disposition, which he adorned with various graces. C. 3:12. Wisd. 8:19.

Ver. 10. David. Thus died this perfect model of princes, and this great saint, whose only fault, of consequence, was occasioned by Bethsabee: (2 K. 11:4) and this served to display his repentance. S. Chrys. hom lxxvii.—He prefigured Jesus Christ in a wonderful manner; in his birth, at the same city; his election, in preference to his brethren; his persecutions, and subsequent glory. Jesus was, in like manner, betrayed by a false friend, and obliged to go out of Jerusalem, laden with his cross. But he acquired fresh splendour by his sufferings, and purchased a more faithful people. The tomb of David remained for many ages. Acts 2:29. Josephus says that it contained vast riches: but this seems to be fabulous. S. Jerom often went to pray at this tomb. Ep. ad Marcel.—If it be now unknown, the Holy Ghost has left us a more illustrious monument to the honour of this great man, in the Psalms, and EcclI. 47:2. &c. C.—We have now only an abridgment of his history. 1 Par. 29:29.

Ver. 11. Seven years. The odd six months are not mentioned. 2 K. 2:11. H.

Ver. 12. Sat, exercising the same authority, as he had done in his father's life-time. C. 1:53. C. S. Aug. de C. xvii. 8. Salien, A.C. 1033.—The public assembly of Israel, convoked by David, had already sworn fidelity to him. 1 Par. 28:1. H.

Ver. 15. Mine, according to the ordinary course of things. But I was willing to forego my claims, when I perceived that the Lord had made choice of my brother. C.

Ver. 17. Wife. Some think that Joab had instigated Adonias to make this petition, that his party might be strengthened. Theod. q. 7. But love might be his prompter. C.—Bethsabee consented to further his petition, (M.) without suspecting any bad consequences. H.

Ver. 19. To her. Only fools will despise their parents. Prov. 15:20. Eccli. 3:18. Tob. 4:3. The Persians would allow no one to sit in his mother's presence, without her leave; and Alexander would treat Sysigambis with the like respect. Q. Curt. v.—Right hand. In the most honourable place, next to his own. Gen. 48:13. The Turks and Persians give the preference to the left. Xenop. Cyrop. viii.

Ver. 20. Thy face, with confusion. He engages to grant her request, if it could be done with any propriety, (C.) as a son ought to do. W.

Ver. 22. The kingdom. It was a maxim in most of the oriental courts, that the things which had belonged to the king, should not be enjoyed by any but his successor. Grotius.—Hence Adonias might be suspected of ambitious projects, as his party was still formidable. C.—The marriage seems also to be unlawful. M. See C. 1:4.—Yet, if the aforesaid custom subsisted at that time; or, if the marriage had been evidently prohibited, both Adonias and Bethsabee must have acted in a very inconsistent manner, so that we must hesitate before we pronounce sentence. H.—Many condemn Solomon of precipitation and cruelty in his judgment; (Cajet.) while others approve of his conduct, (Theod. q. 7.) and think any delay might have proved dangerous. Ubi facto magis quam consulto opus. Tacit. C.

Ver. 24. House. This generally denotes children, and Roboam was born this year. Some have considered his birth as miraculous, supposing that Solomon was not above 12 years old, v. 9. S. Jer. Ep. ad Vital.

Ver. 25. Banaias. The chief officers became executioners, on such occasions. Dan. 2:24. The Romans employed soldiers; which makes Tertullian (Coron. xi.) dissuade Christians from entering the service.

Ver. 26. Priest. Sadoc had been anointed in his stead, probably by Nathan, in the general assembly, while David was present: they anointed ... Sadoc to be high priest, 1 Par. 29:22. Salien.—But not, Solomon orders Abiathar to retire to his estate, in punishment of his conspiracy. C.—He might have justly put him to death, if he had committed a crime worthy of it; as his dignity did not give him a right to disturb the peace of the state with impunity. H.—Solomon acted as a prophet. W.—God had long before denounced that the family of Eleazar should regain the dignity, which Heli had obtained by some means or other. 1 K. 2:31. H.—Solomon only put the divine decree in execution. Pineda vi. 15.—Sadoc had perhaps also passed sentence, as the Levitical tribe had a great sway in the courts of judicature. M.—Abiathar was still honoured with his former title. C. 4:4. But he was not permitted to officiate, (C.) nor to remain in the royal city, as he seemed now to be a dangerous man. H.—Anathoth was a sacerdotal town in Benjamin. M.—A portion of the suburbs had been assigned to Abiathar, unless he had obtained a field by inheritance, or by marrying an heiress. See Jeremiah 32:7. C.

Ver. 28. Joab. The Latin MSS. except one, and almost all the ancient editions of Sixtus, &c. read Solomon. “And a messenger came to Solomon that Joab,” &c.—Solomon. Heb. “Absalom.” Sept. vary. The difference is of little consequence. C.

Ver. 30. Die, if my life must not be spared. H.—He knew that the like precaution would not have been able to protect Adonias. It was not just that he, who had despised all that was sacred, should find an asylum at the altar itself.

Ver. 34. Slew him, holding the altar; though some think that he was removed by force, like Athalia, 4 K. 11:15. Both actions were contrary to the reverence due to so holy a place, and perhaps inexcusable; (C.) unless the law had ordered it otherwise. Ex. 21:14. H.

Ver. 35. Abiathar. See v. 26. Secular princes sometimes nominate, but they must obey, the pastor. W.

Ver. 37. Cedron, which led towards Bahurim. He was equally forbidden to go out by any other road; and was put to death for going to Geth.—Head. Thou canst blame only thyself. Solomon might have put this man to death before: but he chose to pay so much deference to the oath of his father, as not to bring him to execution without a fresh offence.

Ver. 39. Servants. Two in number; (Heb. Sept.) perhaps originally from Geth; (M.) to the king of which place David had fled, 44 years before. Abul. q. 44.

Ver. 1. Solomon. By the death of his enemies, and by his affinity with the king of Egypt, and his friendship with Hiram, king Tyre, who were the most potent princes in the neighbourhood. Eupolemus (ap. Euseb. præp.) has a letter of Solomon to Pharaoh Vaphres, in which the latter is said to have been the friend of David; (Salien) and Clement (Strom. i.) produces the testimony of Polyhistor, saying, that Vaphres sent 80,000 Egyptian workmen to assist Solomon to build the temple.—Daughter. Who probably, embraced the true religion; so that her praises are supposed to be recorded in the 44th Psalm, and in the canticles; though it seems she afterwards relapsed, and became the chief instrument in the perversion of the king. C. 11:1.—David. She dwelt in the apartments of Bethsabée, (Cant. 3:4 and 8:2,) till a magnificent palace could be built for her reception. C. 7:8. To marry idolatrous women was strictly forbidden. Deut. 7:3. 1 Esdras 10:2. 2 Esdras 13:26.

Ver. 2. But yet. It is not clear to what this refers. Heb. “for the rest, (C.) or only;” (as also v. 3,) which may signify that the people, and their king, were blamable; or else, that they zealously offered sacrifices to God, even before the temple was erected. H.—Those who afterwards left that sacred place, to imitate the conduct of idolaters, or of the ancient patriarchs, which was no longer tolerated, are justly condemned. C.—High places. That is, altars where they worshipped the Lord, indeed, but not according to the ordinance of the law; which allowed of no other places for sacrifice but the temple of God. Among these high places, that of Gabaon was the chief, because there was the tabernacle of the testimony which had been removed from Silo to Nob, and from Nob to Gabaon. Ch.—Hither David would have gone, as Solomon did, v. 4. C.—Hence this was not, at least, once of those high places, where it was unlawful to offer sacrifice; as the tabernacle was there, and the altar of holocausts, which Moses had erected. The obligation of sacrificing in no place, except in that which the Lord had appointed, regarded the times while the ark was in the desert, (H.) and when it was placed in the temple. While it continued in an unsettled state, people enjoyed more liberty in this respect; (C.) particularly when there was a prophet present, to sanction what they did. H.

Ver. 3. Only, &c. Which David had not done, though it was lawful.

Pineda.—Yet we read that he offered victims on Sion, &c. 2 K. 6:18. H.

Ver. 4. Victims. These he accompanied with most fervent prayer. Wisd. 7:7. 2 Par. 1:9.

Ver. 5. In a prophetic dream, or ecstasy. His mind had been so filled with the desire of wisdom, that the same thoughts recurred to him while he slept; and, as he had entertained them voluntarily before, he acquired fresh merit even during that time; as a man, who indulges sensual affections, becomes responsible for the accidents of the night. S. Tho. 1. 2. q. 113. a. 2. and 2. 2. q. 154. a. 5. S. Aug. de Gen. ad lit. xii. 15. C.

Ver. 7. In. So as to judge with discretion, and to lead my people. C.

Ver. 9. Understanding. Lit. “docile.” H.—Heb. “willing to hear,” and to obey God. M.

Ver. 12. After thee. Solomon has given us some idea of his wisdom in the works which he has left. They were dictated by the Holy Spirit, who adorned his soul with so many graces. C. 4:29. 30. H.—His knowledge of nature, and of the art of governing, excelled that of any of the kings of Israel; (Lyran, &c. 2 Paral. 9) though Moses and the apostles had a more comprehensive knowledge of the mysteries of God. C.—Yet, even granting that no mere man might come up to him, Jesus Christ, in whom the treasures of wisdom were contained, was far superior. H.—General propositions are often to be understood with a limitation. M.

Ver. 13. Heretofore: 2 Paral. (1:12,) adds, nor after thee. Eccle. 2:7. This is also limited by some to the kings of that country. But the riches of Solomon were not exceeded by those of the greatest monarchs. Diss. “on the riches which David left.” C.

Ver. 14. Days. But this he forfeited. M.

Ver. 15. Dream. Sent by God, as Gen. 41:1. C.

Ver. 16. Harlots. Rather than simply, “innkeepers.” Chal. M.—The latter signification of Zona might, however, seem more natural; as harlots seldom have children; or, at least, any affection for them. Neither would such people have dared to appear before the king. Deut. 23:17.

Ver. 19. Him. This she suspected to be the case. They did not then place infants in the cradle, but let them sleep in their bosoms. C.

Ver. 25. Other. This sentence manifested the wisdom of Solomon, who knew that the real mother would feel the emotions of parental tenderness. By similar experiments, the truth has sometimes been discovered. Claudius obliged a mother to own her son, by ordering her to take him for a husband. Seut. xv.—The king of Trace told three who pretended to be the sons of the deceased king of the Cimmerians, to shoot an arrow at the corpse; which the real son would not do. C. Diod. Sic.—A native of Mexico, reclaiming a horse which a Spaniard pretended was his, as the judge was under some doubts, the American threw his cloak over the horse's head, and asked which eye was blind? The Spaniard replied, the right; and thus was detected. Palafox.

Ver. 2. Azarias. Some translate, “grandson of Sadoc, (and son of Achimaas) was priest,” to assist his father, unless he was born of some other. Cohen signifies also prince, v. 5. Azarias was scribe, as well as the two following, though not all at the same time. The office was very important. Judg. 5:14.

Ver. 3. Sisa. Perhaps the same with Siva, who was under David.—Recorder. Historiographer; (C.) the presenter of petitions. Grot. 2 K. 8:16.

Ver. 4. Abiathar. By this it appears that Abiathar was not altogether deposed from the high priesthood; but only banished to his country house; and by that means excluded from the exercise of his functions. Ch.—He retained the name, as bishops still do, after they have resigned their see. C.—Some think that Solomon reinstated Abiathar to his office. E.

Ver. 5. King. President of the council, (M.) steward of the household. —Priest refers to Zabud here, though the Heb. is ambiguous. It means also a prince. H.—He was chief officer and favourite of Solomon, (C.) as Chusai had been of David, 2 K. 16:16.

Ver. 6. House. Sept. “Eliak was also director of the house,” οἰκονομος. H.—It is impossible to mark, with precision, the extent of these offices.—Tribute, or levy of workmen, as it is expressed. C. 5:14.

Ver. 7. Month. The lunar year was not then in use; (C.) or else, the first of these governors, was in office during the 13th, or intercalary month, every third year, and the rest in succession. Tostat.

Ver. 8. Benhur. Ben here, and in the following verses, may signify “the son of Hur,” &c. C.—Sept. retain both the original term, and its explanation, “Ben the son of Or.” But they afterwards read only “the son of Dakar ... of Esed ... of Abinadab ... and Gaber.”

Ver. 11. To wife. Not at the beginning of his reign, v. 15. M.—This chapter gives a general idea of the officers who lived under Solomon. C.

Ver. 14. Manaim, which is often rendered the camp. The word is read Mahanaim, by the Masorets, (2 K. 2:8,) and by the Vulg. Gen. 32:2. H.

Ver. 19. Land. Heb. “the only officer who was in the land,” (H.) except in the towns of Jair, v. 13. C.—His province had belonged to two kings. M.

Ver. 20. Multitude. We may suppose seven millions; though, if the calculation of Chronicles be more accurate, they were much more numerous. See 2 K. 24:9. H.

Ver. 21. The river. Euphrates. Ch.—To, or “of the land,” terræ. H.—This river may denote the torrent Besor, as Solomon’s dominions extended not only as far as Gaza, but also to the oriental branch of the Nile, v. 24. Thus one verse explains the other. There were, indeed, no kingdoms (C.) in this portion of land, which is now quite barren: but formerly it had several cities, and they belonged to various kings of Egypt, Arabia, the Philistines, &c. H.—Heb. may be rendered “from the river, (Euphrates) the land of the Philistines, and to the border,” &c. (C.) agreeably to 2 Par. 9:26. He exercised authority over all the kings from the river Euphrates to the land, &c. Heb. “the river even unto,” &c. Solomon had all the kings of Syria, Ammon, the Philistines, &c. under him; so that his empire took in all that had been promised to Abraham. H. See S. Aug. q. 21. Josue.

Ver. 22. Measures, (cori.) Each of which contained little less than 300 pints. C.—A corus is equivalent to 30 modii, and would support as many men a day; so that the family of Solomon would contain 2,700 people. A. Lapide. M.—Villalpand calculates 48,600, and Calvisius 54,000.

Ver. 23. Buffaloes. Yachmur means also a sort of wild-goat, like a stag. Deut. 14:5. Bochart, Anim. i. B. iii. 22.—Fowls. Some Rabbins explain barburim, (or borbrim) of capons, or birds from Barbary; as if this name had been known in the days of Solomon. C.—There was an ancient Ethiopian Barbary on the Persian gulf, (Bochart) with which the Rabbins were not acquainted. C.

Ver. 24. Beyond. Heb. “on the side of,” without determining on which. Deut. 1.—Thaphsa. The famous Thapsacus, on the Euphrates.—To Gazan. Heb. Hazza. This name is written in a different manner from Gaza, and may signify a country of the Medes, on the frontiers of Armenia. But, as it is pronounced almost alike and the parallel passage determines for the country of the Philistines, (v. 21,) we may explain it of Gaza. C.

Ver. 25. Vine. this expression is often used to imply a state of peace and happiness. The people were then content with rural pleasures. C.

Ver. 26. Forty: 2 Par. 9:25 has four in the Heb. Sept. read in both places 40,000 mares, for chariots, and 12,000 horses. C.—The Alex. copy has 40 here, and 4000 in the latter place; where, instead of horses, it gives horsemen, with the Vulg. These two words are often used as synonymous by the best authors. But it is more difficult to reconcile the number; (C.) as (2 Par. 14) we read again differently, he had 1400 chariots, and 12,000 horsemen. H.—Forty might easily be mistaken for four, by only adding im at the end of arba. Bochart. Grot.—Instead of stalls, Calmet supposes stables to be understood, and in each he would place ten horses, which completes the number here assigned. If this be admitted, no change is necessary: but, as præsepe signifies “a stall,” we may adhere to the Vulg. which has 40,000 in both places; whereas the Heb. varies, though the sense may be the same. The number of Solomon’s chariots was 1400. As two horses were usually employed to draw them, 2800; or, allowing for accidents, changes, &c. 4000 horses would have been amply sufficient. It seems, therefore, that we should admit only so many horses or stalls. H.—“Vignoles conjectures, that the Jews formerly used marks analogous to our common figures; as the Arabians have done for many hundred years. And, if so, the corruption” of hundreds for tens, &c. “may be easily accounted for, by the transcriber’s carelessly adding or omitting a single cypher.” Kennicott, Diss. ii.—Yet, if 40,000 horses must be admitted, we may say that they were not all intended for the chariots of war, but some for draught-horses, to convey the stones and other materials for the numerous buildings, which Solomon carried on. This might serve to excuse him for having so many horses, (H.) contrary to the letter of the law, and the example of Josue and of David. His subjects were thus, perhaps, engaged in too much commerce with the Egyptians: and the king was forced to burden them with taxes, which at last proved so fatal. Serar. Pineda. C.—Yet some undertake his defence, by saying that he did not act against the spirit of the law; that many of the horses were imposed as a tribute, and Solomon did not place his trust in them. Prov. 21:31. 2 Par. 9:24. Tostat. Bochart. B. ii. 9.—His empire was become more extensive, and his works more splendid; so that what might appear an useless parade in some, might be worthy of praise in Solomon. The law is not so precise. He shall not multiply horses to himself, nor lead back the people into Egypt, being lifted up with the number of his horsemen. Deut. 17:16. There is a like prohibition of many wives and treasures.

Ver. 27. Fed them and is omitted in Heb. and Sept. H.

Ver. 28. Beasts. Racesh denotes horses of extraordinary swiftness, (Bochart) or dromedaries, &c. Junius translates, “post-horses.”—King: so also the Sept. Prot. “the officers were, every man according to his charge.” The twelve governors employed others to bring all necessary provisions, (H.) to the places where the king was travelling; (C.) or they took care not only of the king’s table, but they had also the general inspection over his stables. H.—Few oats are grown in the East. They feed their horses on barley and straw. C.

Ver. 29. Hart; magnanimity, which pride often attempts to imitate, and is therefore designated by the same expression. Prov. 21:4. The genius of Solomon was also most penetrating and comprehensive. C.—Ænomaus thus addresses Apollo, “Thou who knowest, both the number of the sands and the extent of the sea—who understandest the dumb, and hearest the man who has not spoken.” Eus. præp. v. 34. H.

Ver. 30. Orientals of Chaldea, Arabia, Idumea, &c. Dan. 2:2. Abd. 8. Num. 22:5. Job and his friends were of this description. The Greeks acknowledged that they had received their philosophy from the barbarians; (Laert. proem.) and Casaubon observes, that the ancient defendants of the Christian faith proved the same truth. Not. Ibid. They shewed that all true saving knowledge had been derived from the Hebrews. H.—The Chaldees maintain that their countrymen were the fountains of science; and many suppose that Abraham communicated these treasures to the Egyptians; whereas the latter pretend, that a colony from their country had imparted that blessing to the Chaldees. Diodorus (B. i.) says that Belus conducted such a colony, and the Greeks chiefly owed their information to the Egyptians. God had communicated to Solomon all that was of real use in those sciences, in a superior degree. Wisd. 7:17. Joseph. viii. 2. He was eminently skilled in natural philosophy, &c. C.

Ver. 31. All men, of his time (Lyran.) and nation. Munster.—But why should we limit these general statements? C. See C. 3:12. 13. H.—Ethan is the same as Idithun. The title of Ezrahite does not seem to belong to him; and Chalcol and Dorda seem to be inserted here by some transcriber from 1 Par. 2:6 where we read, the sons of Zara ... Ethan and Eman, and Chalchal and Dara, of the tribe of Juda. But they were different from these men, who were probably Levites. C.—We find Chalcol and Dorda mentioned no where else. Heman was an Ezrahite, (Ps. 87) and a seer of the king, presiding over the singers, (1 Par. 15:19 and 25:4. and 5. M.) who stood in the middle. Ethan's band surrounded the altar, (Ib. C. 6:44) while Asaph's were on the right hand.—Mahol was the mother of the four, unless the word denote their profession, as sons of "the choir," singing and playing on musical instruments. C.—Solomon was eminent in both respects, as well as in poetry; as he is compared with those who were most noted for compositions and music. Sanctius.

Ver. 32. Three thousand parables. These works are all lost, excepting some part of the parables extant in the book of Proverbs; and his chief poem called the Canticle of Canticles. Ch.—The title of Psalm 126 attributes it to Solomon. But its authority is not sufficiently established. The book of Proverbs contains at present only 658, (a Lap.) or 800 parables. Clarius.—Josephus exaggerates, when he reads 3000 volumes of parables.—Five. Sept. read, "5000 odes," which is adopted by many interpreters. Josephus (C.) and the Chal. agree with the Heb. M.

Ver. 33. Wall. Some deny that ezob means hyssop. Kimchi, Levinus, &c. But there is a species which grows on mountains, and even out of walls. Bochart. Sanctius.—It is a small odoriferous plant; whereas the cedar was the largest tree with which the Jews were acquainted. C.—On Libanus there are found such trees above 36 feet in circumference; which extend their branches 111 feet around them. Maundrell, Jerus. p. 239.—Solomon examined all. Wisd. 7:17, &c. Many works have been falsely attributed to him, which Origen rejects: hom. 35, in Mat. See Joseph. viii. 2. Pineda iii. 29. C.—Perhaps he might have composed some magical works, while he was an idolater. Salien.

Ver. 34. Wisdom. The Scriptures relate the coming of the queen of Saba. C. 10. Thus Livy attracted the attention of distant nations, who neglected the grandeur of Rome, to visit him. S. Jerom Ep. ad Paulin. Solomon's wisdom is compared to a great river, inundating the whole earth. Eccli. 47:16.

Ver. 1. Hiram. Josephus says, that the temple was built in the 11th year of this prince. He must therefore have been the son of David's friend, as the former had sent artificers to build David's house, (2 K.

5:11. C.) above 30 years before. But there may be a mistake in the number, as the Scripture evidently speaks of the same king; and Josephus had said before, “Hiram rejoiced exceedingly that Solomon had succeeded to the throne; (for he had been the friend of David) and he sent ambassadors to congratulate with him on his present felicity, by whom Solomon wrote,” &c. The mutual letters of these kings were still preserved in the archives of Tyre; and this author confidently appeals to them, as he deems it “impious to insert any fiction” in his history. Ant. viii. 2. He quotes Dius and Menander; who asserted, that these princes proposed enigmas to each other; and the Hiram was obliged to pay a large sum of money, as he could not explain that which Solomon had proposed, &c. C. Ap. i. H.

Ver. 3. Wars. Many interpreters assert that this was the real impediment, (Tostat, Salien, &c.) rather than the blood, which David had already spilt, 2 K. 7 and 1 Par. 22:8.

Ver. 4. Adversary. Lit. “Satan.” Adad of Idumea, and another of Syria, and Jeroboam, began to molest Solomon, only towards the end of his reign. C. 11:25.

Ver. 6. Libanus. It belonged to Israel, since the victory of David, 2 K. 10:18. Solomon built some fortresses on the mountain. C. 9:19. The cedar-trees grow chiefly towards Phenicia, above Biblos. They bear a great resemblance with fir-trees, and grow in a pyramidical form. The wood is hard and bitter, so that worms will not molest it. Hence it was much used in the temple of Ephesus, and in other large buildings; lacunaria ex eâ ... propter æternitatem sunt facta. Vitruv. ii. 9.—Sidonians. It seems they were subject to the king of Tyre, or this was the common title of all the Phenicians. C.

Ver. 7. Lord (Jehova) God “of Israel,” as it is expressed, 2 Par. 2:12. H.—This pagan prince adored and erected temples and altars in honour of Baal, Astarte, and Hercules; (Josephus, &c.) yet he did not hesitate to acknowledge the God of Israel, as he supposed that there was a god for each nation. See C. 20:28. 4 K. 17:27. C.—Thus many think that they may serve the God of unity, by going to hear the sermons of men who preach a contradictory doctrine. The devil will be satisfied, if he can share the divine honours: but God will admit of no rival, nor can he sanction any but the true religion. H.

Ver. 8. Fir-trees. Some take these to be another species of cedars, as they say fir is too slender and corruptible; (Martin, &c.) and Solomon had not asked for it, v. 6.; though he does in 2 Paral. 2:8, where (H.) the word is translated archeuthina, “juniper-trees,” by the Sept. and S. Jerom. C.—Beroshim, is rendered fir-trees by Pagnin; box or cedars, &c. by others. The precise import of the Hebrew names of plants, animals, &c. is not sufficiently known. M.—Fir is used by the best architects. Virtuvius, ii. 9. C.

Ver. 9. There. Joppe was fixed upon, as the port nearest Jerusalem, 2 Par. 2:16. The trees were squared and rolled, (C.) or dragged (H.) from the mountain-top to the river Adonis, or the plain of Biblos, and then sent in floats by sea. C.—Household, for the workmen employed in cutting the wood; (2 Par. M.) and also for Hiram's other servants, as the kings of the East paid them not with money. C.—The Tyrians neglected agriculture. Servius.

Ver. 11. Wheat, “ground or beaten.” Heb. Paral. H.—By comparing this passage with C. 4:22, we may see how much the court of Solomon surpassed that of Hiram. The former consumed 90 measures of flour a day; and 20,000 of wheat sufficed for the Tyrian prince's family a whole year.—Twenty. It is supposed by many commentators that thousand is to be supplied from the former sentence; as there seems otherwise to be no proportion between the wheat and the oil. Piscat. &c.—The Sept. Syr. &c. read 20,000. C.—The Alex. copy has not core, but only beth, (H.) or “bath,” which is a smaller measure, containing 29 pints and something more, (C.) or seven gallons, four pints, English wine measure; where the core, or chomer, consisted of 75 gallons, five pints. Arbuthnot. H.

Ver. 14. Levy, or tribute. The men had only to procure stones, as the Tyrians had engaged to do all which regarded the wood. C.—These were Israelites. M.

Ver. 15. Mountain of Libanus. C.—Par. mountains: but the Heb. is singular in both places. They were all proselytes or strangers.

Ver. 16. Three hundred. In 2 Par. (2:2. and 18,) we read six hundred; (H.) as there are 300 superior officers included. C. M. Sa, &c.—But these 3600 are all overseers. H.

Ver. 17. Fountain, which did not appear. C.—What sort would, therefore, be chosen for the most conspicuous parts of the temple? H.

Ver. 18. Gibbians. Ezechiel (27:9,) commends them for building ships. Giblos of Gebal is supposed to be the town, which profane authors style Biblos, at the foot of Libanus. Ptolemy also mentions Gabala, to the east of Tyre. C.

Ver. 1. Eightieth year. This chronology meets with the approbation of most people. See Usher. C. 12. Some, however, find a difficulty in reconciling it with Acts 13:20, which seems to attribute 450 years to the government of the judges. C.—Sept. have 440; Josephus 592, though Ruffin neglects the 90 in his version; Petau 520; Severus 582; Clem. Alex. 566; Vossius 380; Cano 590; Serarius 680.—Houbigant would read 350 in the Acts. But Capellus would add 200 here, &c. H.—Second of the sacred year, corresponding with our April. Syr. Chaldee styles it “of the splendour of flowers.” M.—The Hurons, and other nations of America, call this “the moon of plants;” the Flemings, “the month for mowing,” Grasmaand. Our Saxon ancestors gave descriptive names to the months. See Verstegan. H.—At first, the Hebrews only described the months by their order; “first, second,” &c. In Solomon’s time we begin to find other names, taken from the Phenicians, (Scalig.) Chaldees, (Grot.) or Egyptians. Hardouin, A. 2993.—After the captivity, at least, the Chaldee names were adopted; (H.) 1. Nisan; 2. Jar; 3. Sivan; 4. Tammus; 5. Ab; 6. Elul; 7. Tisri; 8. Marshevan; 9. Casleu; 10. Thebet; 11. Schebet; 12. Adar; (C.) 13. Veadar, the intercalary month, when requisite, according to the lunar system, which was not perhaps yet adopted. Each of these months generally corresponded with two of ours; Nisan with the end of March and the beginning of April, &c. Sept. here take no notice of Zio, though they do, v. 37. H.—The temple was begun on Monday, May 21, A. 2992. Usher.—It was finished A. 3000, or in the following year, when it was solemnly dedicated. Button.

Ver. 2. House. Heb. Habayith, “the palace” of the God of Israel, where the priests alone had access. It was surrounded by various courts and apartments, as the ancient temples were very different from ours. All these appendages sometimes go under the common name of the temple. C.—Cubits. The common one contained half a yard. The sacred cubit amounted to 21,888 inches. Arbuthnot. Ezech. 43:13.—Calmet makes the cubit consist of 24 fingers’ breadth, or little less than 20 inches of the French measure, which is greater than ours. H.—Hence the temple would be 102½ feet long, 34 feet 2 inches broad, 51 feet 3 inches high to the ceiling. C.—The walls are not included; else the breadth would be almost 60 cubits, the length 100, and the height 50. Vallalpand ii. 5. 14. M.

Ver. 3. Temple. The porch was of the same height as the temple, though we read that it was 120 cubits high, 2 Par. 3:4. But one word seems there to have been substituted for another, (C.) unless it might resemble a high tower. H.—Before the porch were placed the two brazen pillars. The interior of it was highly adorned by Herod. Josephus, Ant. xv. 11.

Ver. 4. Oblique windows. Which were made slanting, that the light might be more easily communicated within. H.—On the outside they were not so large. W. M.—Heb. “windows to see through, shut,” with lattices, (C.) or blinds. Prot. “he made windows of narrow lights.” H.—Curtains might be hung before them, as no glass was yet used. C.—These windows occupied the five cubits above the chambers, which were built on the west end, and on the sides of the temple, 15 cubits high. C.—No windows were permitted in the holy of holies. M.

Ver. 5. Upon the wall. That is, joining to the wall.—He built floors round about. Chambers or cells adjoining to the temple, for the use of the temple and of the priests, so contrived as to be between the inward and outward wall of the temple, in three stories, one above another.—The oracle. The inner temple or holy of holies, where God gave his oracles. Ch.—Sides. Prot. “he made chambers round about.” H.—Some think that buttresses were used, to strengthen the building. Sept. “ribs,” (M.) sides. But there seem rather to have been three offsets; so that the wall kept decreasing in breadth, as it grew higher, (H.) every ten cubits, (Ezec. 41:6. M.) and thus the upper chamber was two cubits broader than the lowest. The beams might thus rest upon the walls, and be easily changed. H.

Ver. 6. Temple. This was done for greater respect, and that the walls might not be injured. Ezechiel (41:6,) counts 33 chambers on the three sides. S. Jerom seems to double that number; while Josephus acknowledges only 30. C.—Salien has 42, or 14 in each story.

Ver. 7. Made ready, &c. So the stones for the building of God’s eternal temple, in the heavenly Jerusalem, (who are the faithful) must first be hewn and polished here by many trials and sufferings, before they can be admitted to have a place in that celestial structure. Ch.—Those who have the happiness to be chosen, will be no more disturbed with the noise or inconvenience of persecution, (H.) which they ought to bear in silence upon earth. W.—Building. Screw nails were probably used. The ancient Romans wrought the mouldings, &c. of their pillars, after they were erected. The Rabbins pretend that a little worm, or stone schamir, which was brought from the earthly paradise by an eagle, or by the devil, Asmodeus, polished all the stones. Maimonides has even written a book on this famous worm. Grotius.—Theodoret (q. 23.) also asserts, without proof, that the stones were found ready cut, in the quarry, and that they had only to be polished. We may form a grand idea of the workmen employed by Solomon, when we consider that they were able to prepare all things, with such exactitude, at a distance. C.

Ver. 8. Middle side. Sept. “lower story.” C.—“The door of the lower story (rib or side, πλευράς; Chal. the lower appendage) was under the right wing of the house, and a winding staircase led to the middle, and from the middle to the third story. H.—This sense is very clear. Heb. intimates that the staircase was round like a screw, and was formed in the wall, at one end of the rooms.—Right hand of those who entered the temple, or on the north; though the south is commonly thus designated. The doors opened into the porch, as the temple was not to be made a thoroughfare. C.

Ver. 9. Roofs. Prot. “beams and boards of cedar.” None of the stones appeared within, v. 18. H.

Ver. 10. Height. To prevent the excessive heats. Five other cubits were also subtracted, v. 20. Some translate, “he made also stories of all the temple, each five cubits high;” so that the three stories occupied half the height of the walls, which were 30 cubits in height, v. 2. C.—Covered. Heb. “took (or bound together) the house,” &c. The roof was flat. C.—Villalpand maintains the contrary, (in Ezec. 41) with Sanchez, &c. Salien gathers from many of the ancients, that the floor here mentioned, was a balustrade, or the pinnacle of the temple, (Mat. 4) where people might walk or pray. M.

Ver. 11. Saying. By the prophet Ahia, as the Jews suppose he was sent thrice to Solomon. The temple had been commenced two years; (Salien) or this apparition took place after the dedication, and is related more at length; (C. 9:2. C.) though the former opinion seems more agreeable to the context, art building, &c. Instead of as for, (H.) we might supply stabit. “This house ... shall stand;” (Salien) or simply, God looks down upon the building with complacency, and says, “This is the house,” by way of eminence. As thou hast endeavoured to honour my name, I will not only fulfil my promises to David, but I will be ever ready to grant thy just requests, in this holy place, provided thou continue faithful, with thy subjects, and obey my commands. H.

Ver. 15. Fir. Or perhaps of another species of cedar, resembling the juniper-tree. It is found in Phœnecian and in Lycia. See C. 5:8. It is doubted whether the sanctuary was also boarded, as we read that it was paved with marble. Heb. “with precious and costly stones,” 2 Par. 3:6. But boards might be laid upon them, as they were on other parts of the temple. The magnificence of Solomon appears in his using such costly things, even where they would not be exposed to view. The floor was again covered with plates of gold, v. 30.

Ver. 16. The inner house of the oracle. That is, the sanctuary, which he separated from the other part of the temple, with this partition of cedar, instead of the veil, which in the tabernacle of Moses hung before the sanctuary. Ch.—It was a square of 20 cubits, extending from the western end. H.—Hither none but the high priest was allowed to enter, and he but once a year. C.

Ver. 17. Itself. Where the priests were stationed. This part was double the length, but of the same breadth, as the most holy place. H.

Ver. 18. Out. Heb. “and the cedar boards of the house within, were carved with knops (fruits) and open flowers,” (H.) alternately. C.—At all. So the bones in the human body, though concealed, strengthen it; and monks, in their deserts, fortify the Church. W.

Ver. 20. Pure gold. Heb. “reserved” by David, or “gold locked up,” as most precious. Thin plates were laid on, so as to fit all the various mouldings, flowers, &c.—Cedar. The altar was probably of stone, and upon the cedar boards gold was laid, that the ark might rest upon it. The altar of perfumes was not in the most holy place. C.

Ver. 21. Before, v. 17. The holy and the most holy place were equally covered with plates of gold. H.—Heb. “So Solomon overlaid the inner temple with gold reserved, and he made a partition with chains of gold, before the sanctuary, and he overlaid it with gold.” H.—The chains were destined to fasten the doors, before locks were invented.

Ver. 23. Olive. Heb. “trees full of oil or resin,” distinguished from olive trees. 2 Esd. 8:15. Vatab. translates, “pine;” others, “cypress-wood.” C.—Height. Their gigantic stature served to denote the magnificence and greatness of God. They looked towards the east. M.—Their wings extended equalled their height; so that the two cherubims occupied the whole space from north to south, (H.) covering the smaller cherubim of Moses. They only reached half the height of the sanctuary. Their form is not clearly ascertained. See Ex. 25:18. C.—What will the Iconoclasts say to these images, which adorned not only the temple, which the people might behold, but also the most sacred place? H.—Villalpand and Salien suppose, that a cherub resembled a young man in the higher parts, adorned with four wings of an eagle and a lion’s skin, round his breast and shoulders, while his feet were like those of a calf. M.—Ezekiel seems to insinuate that, in the temple, the cherubim had two faces, one of a man and another of a lion, each looking at palm-trees; as these were placed alternately with cherubim, round the walls. Ezec. 41:18. 19.

Ver. 29. And divers, &c. Heb. "and open (full-blown) flowers within and without" the sanctuary. We read also of chains of gold connected together. 2 Par. 3:5. The palm-trees might resemble pillars of the Corinthian order. C.—It is clear that sacred pictures were authorized to be set up in the temple, for God's honour, (W.) though the Jews were so prone to idolatry. H.

Ver. 31. Corners, each piece being, perhaps, a cubit in length, so that the two folding-doors would contain ten cubits, or half the wall. But Ezechiel only assigns six cubits to this door, and ten to that of which opened into the holy place. Heb. "the lintel and the side posts, a fifth" of the wall; in which sense, the door must not have been above four cubits. So v. 33, four-square is translated also, "a fourth part." But it does not appear to what it refers. Rebihith sometimes means four-square; and why may not chamishith here signify pentagonal? C.—Many suppose that the gate of the sanctuary was of this form, (H.) ending in a point at the top; unless the posts were carved so as to have five angles, like a pillar. Ribera. Templ. ii. 8. M.

Ver. 32. And carvings, &c. Heb. "and flowers full-blown." The term anaglypha, denotes a sculpture in relievo, (C.) or projecting. H.

Ver. 34. Fir-tree, or some species of cedar, v. 15.—Double. In the large doors, other smaller were made, that the priests might pass more easily. M.—And so, &c. Lit. "and holding each other, was opened." Both the great and the small doors might open at the same time; (Sanchez) or rather the latter would afford a passage, while the great folding doors were shut. M.—Perhaps both the doors of the holy place and of the sanctuary were so connected, that both opened together. Tract. Middot. iv. 1. C.—But the sanctuary would never be thus exposed to public view. Prot. "two leaves of one door were folding," &c. H.

Ver. 35. And carved, &c. Heb. "and open flowers, (as v. 32) and overlaid them with gold, fitted upon the sculpture;" (H.) so that the shape of every thing appeared.

Ver. 36. Court of the priests.—Cedar. Some think that the court was surrounded with galleries, supported on three rows of pillars; or one gallery was above another, on pillars of stone, with a third supported by cedar pillars. M.—But Josephus takes no notice of these galleries. Others think that the wall of separation consisted only of two rows of stone, with a third of wood, in all three cubits high. Joseph. viii. 2. Villal.—But the sacred writers seem rather to indicate, that beams of cedar were fixed in the walls, at the distance of three courses of stone, even to the top. This mode of architecture is clearly mentioned, C.

7:12. 1 Esd. 6:3. 4 and 5:8. Habac. 2:11. The ancients admired such a variety, and deemed the building more solid. Vit. i. 5. Eupolemus (ap. Eus. præp. ix. 34.) take notice, that these beams were fastened together, in the temple, by hooks of copper, weighing each a talent. H.—Such was the structure of the inner court. C.

Ver. 38. Bul, afterwards styled Marchesvan. Pagnin thinks that the former name alludes to “the inundation” of rain, at that season, corresponding with our October and November. Chal. “the month of collected fruits.” M.—Years. Six months are neglected, (see C. 2:11) and as many are redundant. C. 7:1. Odd numbers are often treated in this manner. C.—It is wonderful that Solomon could complete this most stupendous structure (H.) in so short a time. All Asia was 200 years in building the temple of Diana, at Ephesus, and 400 more in embellishing it. Pliny xxxvi. 12.—It is reported that 360,000 men were employed for twenty years, to build a pyramid of Egypt; (C.) which was designed, perhaps for no other purpose but to shew the pride and magnificence of the king while living, and to contain his ashes after death. Many of the materials for the temple had indeed been collected by David, (1 Par. 22) so that Solomon was enabled to finish it in a much shorter time than his own palace, which took him almost thirteen years to bring to perfection. They were almost contiguous to each other, though built on separate hills. The temple occupied the whole of Moria, which was levelled a great deal, to allow space sufficient for such an amazing structure. It was thus founded upon a rock, as an emblem of the perpetuity of the true religion, which has subsisted from the beginning of the world: as may be seen at large in Dr. Worthington; who, on this occasion, gives a retrospective view of what had taken place in the Jewish state, with respect to this most important subject, during the fourth age, or for the space of the last 480 years. See Douay Bible, p. 701, &c. We may be dispensed from repeating these things after him, as they are already, for the most part, observed in the notes; where the attentive reader cannot fail to remark, that the law of the Old Testament was only a figure of that which all must now embrace. I am not come to destroy, (the law or the prophets) says our Saviour, (Mat. 5:17) but to fulfil, by accomplishing all the figures and predictions, and by perfecting all that was imperfect, though suitable for the state of mortals in former ages. Children cannot rationally be required to attain, at once, the perfection of manhood. The painter first marks the outlines, which the colouring is calculated to efface, yet so as to render the picture more beautiful. “The cunning Jew” would therefore, in vain, allege the greater antiquity of his religion, as it prefigured and foretold the author and finisher of our faith. And Protestants will act very childishly if they suppose, with Mr. Slack, a Methodist preacher, at Whitby, that this can in any degree enervate the argument of Catholics, who always arraign them before the tribunal of the apostolic ages, in which they confess our bishops, Linus, &c. existed, and were ordained by the apostles themselves. "Setting aside the apostles, Linus, agreeably to the common opinion, was the first bishop of the Rome see, who was ordained before the martyrdom both of Peter and Paul." Campbell, 12 lect. quoted by Mr. Slack; (p. 63) who says that he was the first pope, and of course, that our religion mounts up to the age of the apostles; and, if he thinks to evade this difficulty, by saying, that the Jewish religion was more ancient still, and yet rejected, we may desire him to point out where the Scripture mentions that the religion of Christ was to be rendered more perfect than he left it; as we know from that source, that he was to establish a new law, founded on better promises than those which had been made to the Jew? How will this state of fluctuation, and this relapsing into abominable errors and idolatry, for many hundred years, accord with the promises of Christ? Matt. 28. &c. H.—Building it. The dedication was deferred till the following year, probably on account of the jubilee recurring at that time. Usher, A. 3000. C.—But this is very uncertain. Salien fixes upon the year 3030, which was not a year of jubilee; and he rather thinks that the delay was occasioned by the vessels, the brazen sea, &c. which had to be brought from the other side of the Jordan. We may also recollect, that the rainy season was set in before the temple was quite finished; so that it would have been very inconvenient for all Israel to assemble at that time. After the dedication, the temple continued to be adorned, till it was destroyed by Nebuchadonoser, (H.) A. 3416, and lay in ruins fifty-two years, when the Jews were authorized by Cyrus to rebuild it. They could not however finish the work, so as to proceed to a fresh dedication, till the reign of Darius Hystaspes, A. 3489. Herod undertook to rebuild (Button) the greatest part of this second temple, and to adorn it, in the most magnificent manner, A. 3986. This place was honoured by the presence of the Son of God, who foretold the destruction, which took place within that generation. A.D. 70. H.

Ver. 1. Thirteen. He was only twelve years and a half; since he finished both the temple and the palace in 20 years. C. 9:10. Salien observes that Solomon's house was connected with the queen's, as well as with that part which was styled of the forest of Libanus, for their mutual recreation. A.C. 1023. The Rom. Sept. places the 13 first verses at the end, v. 51. H.

Ver. 2. Libanus. So it was called, on account of the many cedar pillars brought from that mountain; or because many trees and shrubs were planted in the vicinity. C.—Libanus might also be seen from it, and refreshing breezes be felt. Ar. Mont.—The palace stood on the eastern part of Sion, and to the west of the temple. M.—The vale between them had been filled up, at a vast expense, and a sort of bridge erected, which was called Mello. Thus the palace of David, on the west of Sion, and this of Solomon, served to protect the temple, and to keep the citizens in awe. Salien.—Sanchez declines giving the dimensions of this palace, as they are not satisfactory. M.—Here Solomon resided, and was served in gold, (C.) adorning his palace with shields and targets of the same precious metal. C. 10:16. 21.—Cubits. The more sacred part of the temple was only 60, 20, and 30 cubits. C. 6:2. But there were various other appendages and towers. This palace must have been very extensive.—And four. Heb. “upon four rows of cedar pillars, with cedar beams upon the pillars.” H.—One row of these might be rather pilasters, against the wall; (v. 3,) so that there would be three covered galleries, before the apartments, each supported on 15 pillars. C.

Ver. 4. Set, &c. Heb. “and windows in three rows, over-against one another; (5) and all the doors and posts square with the windows: and light was against light, in three rows.” H.—The palace had three stories; but the galleries before it were of equal height with it.

Ver. 6. Porch. Sept. seem to retain the original word ulam, as they read αἰλαμ; whence our hall, and the Latin aula, may be derived. H.—It was a court surrounded by pillars and galleries, in front of the palace. C.—Another. Heb. “the porch before them, (pillars) and the pillars, and the thick beam before them.”

Ver. 7. Tob. Heb. “the other side.” H.—The eastern princes generally sit before their palace to give judgment; and hence that of the Ottoman emperors is styled the Porte, (C.) or “gate.”

Ver. 8. House. In the form of a recess or alcove, at the end of one of the aforesaid porches, and probably in that which was nearer the palace. Guards would be stationed in the other. H.—This is the idea which travellers have given us of the palaces in the East. They consisted of various apartments, galleries, and courts. Under the outward porch there are guards standing, in a double row; and hence there is a communication with other parts of the house, and with the apartments of the women, which are far removed, and inaccessible to strangers. The women still continue to have separate tents, or apartments; as they had in the days of Sara, Esther, Herodias, &c. Gen.

24. Est. 1:11. Mat. 14:8. C.—Pharao. Till it was finished, this lady had lodged in David's palace; though as it was deemed in a manner sacred, on account of the presence of the ark, it was judged expedient to remove her. 2 Par. 8:11. H.—Perhaps she had begun to manifest some signs of a relapse towards idolatry, into which she is supposed chiefly to have induced her husband. C. 11:4. Salien.

Ver. 12. Cedar, in regular courses with the stones. C. 6:36. Public places were often made in a circular form, and were thus rendered more beautiful. The palace of Solomon might have enclosed the court in this manner, or there were buildings on all the four sides, made of three courses of fine large stones, with the fourth of cedar beams, till the whole was completed. The ancients built for posterity, as we may perceive from the huge stones, well connected, which still remain in the ruins of Egyptian, Greek, and Roman architecture.

Ver. 14. Nephthali: 2 Par. (2:14,) we read of Dan. But the king of Tyre might be under a mistake, (Sanctius) or he may only insinuate that she lived at the city of that name, in the tribe of Nephthali. M.—One of her husbands might be a Danite, (Grot.) though resident at Tyre.—Father, may also denote a master or officer; in which sense we read in Paral. My father, Hiram. H. S. Jer. Trad. M.—If the woman married an idolater, it was contrary to the law: (C.) though Grotius maintains the contrary, when the free exercise of religion was granted.

Ver. 15. Eighteen. Both together are said in Paral. to be 35, as if half a cubit too much had been here assigned, which is not unusual with regard to imperfect numbers, v. 1. But Jeremias (52:21,) agrees with this passage; and the book of Paral. may not have included a cubit of solid metal at the base or plinth. A. Lap.—The rest was hollow. The chapters of five cubits, and the bases, which were perhaps as large, are not contained in the 18 cubits, which might otherwise appear to be disproportionate with the circumference of 12 cubits. The Egyptian pillars are sometimes very thick and low; and their temples bear a great resemblance with that of Solomon, than with those of the Greeks and Romans. C.—Both. Heb. “the second,” as if something similar had been observed of the first. C.—But Sheni, signifies also “both, either,” &c. M.—Prot. “did compass either of them about.” H.—Circles, at equal distances, adorned these pillars. Ex. 26:32. Athen. v. 9.

Ver. 16. Five. Comprising all the ornaments. The body was only three cubits, 4 K. 25:17. If we include the circles, which joined it to the pillar, it would be four; v. 19, and with the rose, and ornaments at the top, five cubits high. Atheneus distinguishes three parts in the Egyptian chapters; (1) next to the pillar, was seen a circle or wreath of flowers; (2) the stalk, out of which proceeded (3) a rose beginning to open. C.—In the passages, which seem to contradict this text, the omission of the cornice or architrave, may cause the difference. M.

Ver. 18. The pillars. This word may have changed places with pomegranates.

Ver. 19. Of lily-work, seems also transposed. Calmet would translate, Heb. “and he made pomegranates, two rows round each net, to cover the chapter, which was at the top of the pillar, and in, &c. (19) and the chapter, which was above the pillars of the court, (or porch) four cubits high. And he made rows of 200 pomegranates, all round, to cover one of the crowns of the pillars, and he did the like for the other crown; (20) and he also made a chapter, like a rose, (or lily) at the top of the pillars, above, and over-against the body, which was beyond the nets.” The rose seemed to grow out of the pillar. The chapters were not square, but of a circular form. Pelletier supposes that these pillars were of the ancient Doric order. It is certain that all the chapter was not in the form of a lily, as the Heb. would now insinuate, but only the top part of it. C. 5:22. The long addition of one of the crowns, &c. may not be necessary, if the original signify either; (as v. 15) “to cover either crown.”

Ver. 20. Chapter, (capitelli secundi.) H.—Villalpand thinks this “second chapter,” is rather the cornice, round which the pomegranates hung. M.—Sept. “and of roses, five rows, all round, upon the second circle.” H.

Ver. 21. Temple. Against the wall, (Jer. 52:23,) on each side of the door which leads to the holy place. The pillars might be 28 cubits high, v. 15.—Jachin intimated that God “will establish.”—Booz means, “strength is in him.” C.—Both together might foretel the stability of the temple. “He shall establish in strength.” We have already mentioned the conjecture of Houbigant, that these two pillars were erected in honour of some of Solomon’s progenitors, though the former be lost in his genealogy. Ruth 4:22. H.—Jachin. That is, firmly established.—Booz. That is, in its strength. By recording these names in holy writ, the Spirit of God would have us understand the invincible firmness and strength of the pillars on which the true temple of God, which is the Church, is established. Ch.

Ver. 22. Lily, or rose, as Susan means both. This ornament seems to have been detached from the rest of the chapter, and one cubit high, v. 16. C.

Ver. 23. Brim, in diameter. The circumference was about 30 cubits; for it is not exactly three times as much as the diameter. C.—The latter is as 7 to 22, with respect to the circumference. But the Scripture takes no notice of trifles. M.

Ver. 24. Ten cubits. All was not therefore ornamented. Prot. “there were knops compassing it, ten in a cubit ... the knops were cast in two rows, when it was cast.” H.—The signification of Pekehim is not ascertained, whether it be “apples, balls,” &c. or perhaps a corrupt word for Bokrim, “oxen,” or “ox heads,” as 2 Paral. (4:3,) clearly explains it. C.—There also it is insinuated, that the carvings commenced only towards the bottom, where the circumference was reduced to 10 cubits. M.

Ver. 25. Oxen. Josephus and the Jews would condemn Solomon for making these figures; but it is clear that his present was acceptable to God, as well as his person. C.—Within. The oxen were of solid brass, to support such a weight. M.—Some think that the water was discharged through their mouths. But Pelletier believes that there were cocks placed between each of the four divisions of oxen, which let water into a basin below, in which the priests might purify themselves. He supposes also that the vessel was double; the cup would contain 2000 baths, and the foot or basin another 1000, by which means he would reconcile this book with that of Chronicles. Melanges, T. i. p. 115.

Ver. 26. Two thousand bates. That is, about ten thousand gallons. This was the quantity of water which was usually put into it: but it was capable, if brim-full, of holding three thousand. See 2 Par. 4:5. 7. Ch.—The batus contained about five gallons. W.—Some imagine, without grounds, (C.) that the measure in Par. was of a less capacity. Vallalp. A. Lapide.—The smaller is called metreta, “measure,” after the Greek, as it had no proper name. Salien.—Instead of a hand’s breadth, it is literally, “three ounces,” or the fourth part of a Roman foot; which is equivalent to four fingers’ (H.) breadth, or a “hand’s breadth,” as the Heb. tophach implies, or a little above three inches.—Crisped, or “full-blown lily.” The Chaldee supposes it was thus ornamented. Heb. “with flowers of lilies,” (C.) or “roses,” Shoshan. H.

Ver. 27. Bases. These were designed to wash the victims. Pelletier.

Ver. 28. And. Heb. is very obscure in this and the following verse. Indeed interpreters are so little agreed about the precise signification of some of the terms, that it is not necessary to repeat their sentiments.

Ver. 32. Joined. Yet not so as to be immovable. C.

Ver. 36. Palm-trees were not expressed, v. 29. All was in relieve, and represented in its natural posture. C.—About. One would have taken them to be alive, they were so well executed. Heb. “according to the proportion of every one, and added round about,” (H.) projecting. M.

Ver. 39. Right side, to the south, between the temple and the altar of holocausts.—Sea. It was the most towards the east, of the five basins, (C.) or near the eastern gate of the priests’ court, standing on the south of the entrance, that they might purify themselves. M.—S. Justin (ap. ii.) observes that the pagans imitated this custom. But this ought not to hinder Christians from employing a thing which is innocent in itself, and calculated to make them aspire to the greatest purity, when they approach to God. H.

Spargit & ipse suos lauro rorante capillos
Incipit & solitâ fundere voce preces. Fast. v.

Ver. 40. Shovels. Scutras may also signify “cauldrons,” from their resemblance with a shield. These terms occur Ex. 27:3. (C.) and are there properly translated, shovels, &c. H.—The Jews say there were always, at least, three things of the same species, that one might be ready in case another was defiled.

Ver. 41. Cords: no mention of these had been made before. The same terms are frequently expressed in a different manner, v. 15, to 20. Heb. “the two pillars and the chapters round, (C.) which were on the top of the pillars and the two nets to cover the two bowels of (or the two circular) chapters,” &c. H.

Ver. 45. Fine brass (aurichalco.) Some pretended that gold was mixed with this sort of brass. But Pliny (xxxiv. 2.) informs us that it came out of the mines, without dross.—Heb. “polished (or refined) brass.” C.—It might resemble the Corinthian brass. M.

Ver. 46. Sarthan. This place was on the west, and Socoth on the east of the Jordan, near Bethsan. C. 4:12. C.—Jos. 3:16. H.—Adrichomius places both on the east, in the tribe of Gad. M.

Ver. 47. Weighed. It was deemed unnecessary, and too troublesome. H.—Heb. “And Solomon would not have all the vessels weighed,” on account of the too great number: “the weight of the brass was not discovered.” Vatable.

Ver. 48. Altar, not that on which the ark was placed, (C. 6:20. C.) though some are of that opinion; (M. &c.) but perhaps the altar of incense. The one which Moses had made was probably too small, (C.) and reposed in the treasury. Rabbins.—Table. In 1 Par. 4:8 we find ten specified, one between each candlestick, in the holy place. Josephus (viii. 2.) mentions an incredible number of gold and silver utensils, which are not found in Scripture; and the Rabbins are not sparing in miracles, to promote a respect for the temple. No venomous creature, they say, was ever seen in Jerusalem; nor did man seek for lodgings in vain, &c. The priests were so numerous, that the same person had never to offer the perpetual sacrifice or incense twice in his life. No one durst spit in the temple, nor turn his back on the altar, &c. C.

Ver. 51. Dedicated. Lit. “sanctified,” (H.) or set apart. W.—Gold, unwrought. M.

Ver. 2. Ethanim was afterwards called Tisri. H.—Usher places the dedication on Friday, 30th October, the 8th of the seventh month. The people continued at Jerusalem till the 23rd. The feast of expiation fell on the 10th, (H.) during the octave of the dedication. After this, the feast of tabernacles commenced on the 15th, for other seven days. This was the year of jubilee; and Solomon had waited on purpose, that the people might have more leisure to attend on such a solemn occasion. C.—But on this we cannot rely. There might be other reasons for the delay; (See C. 6:38) and one of the chief might be, a desire to perform this ceremony in the seventh or sabbatical month, which was honoured with more festivals than any other. It had just elapsed, before the temple was finished, in the preceding year. H.

Ver. 3. Priests, who were also Levites, as it is expressed in 2 Par. 5:4. Perhaps the ark was uncovered, (C.) as the Caathites carried it when folded up. H.

Ver. 4. Ark, from the city of David, along with the tabernacle, (Salien) which had been made for it in the palace, v. 1. They also (H.) brought the Mosaic tabernacle from Gaboan, (C. Josephus, &c.) and repositied both H. in the treasury of the temple, as they were now of no other service. Jeremias was authorized to take the ark, the tabernacle, and the altar of incense, in order to prevent their falling into the hands of the Chaldees. He placed them in a cave, where they have never, perhaps, been discovered. 2 Mac. 2:4.

Ver. 5. Sacrificed, by the hands of the priests, (M.) or at least (H.) gave them the blood to offer upon the altars, which were placed at six paces from one another, in imitation of David. 2 K. 6:13. C.—Could not. See C. 7:47.

Ver. 6. Wings. These covered the smaller cherubim, upon the ark. H. C. 6:23. 27.—The formed a sort of throne, with their wings extended, from one side of the building to the other, (C.) twenty cubits long. H.

Ver. 8. Out. In the days of Moses, these staves had touched the veil of the tabernacle: but now, as the place for the ark was twice as large, they were no longer perceived; though they remained in the holes prepared for them by Moses, till the author wrote; which must have been before the captivity. Unless we thus distinguish the times, the Hebrew contains a palpable contradiction. C.—“They drew out (or lengthened) the staves, and the heads ... were seen out in the holy place ... and they were not seen out.” H.—To a person standing at a small distance, they were not visible, though they rather touched the veil. 2 Par. 5:9. M.

Ver. 9. Nothing else, &c. There was nothing else but the tables of the law within the ark. But on the outside of the ark, or near the ark, were also the rod of Aaron, and a golden urn with manna. Heb. 9:4. Ch. W. —These might have been in the ark while it was not fixed: but after the temple was built, all but the tables were placed in the treasury; where, we find, the book of the law was discovered, under Joas. Deut. 31:26. 2 Par. 34:14. Others think that, in the days of S. Paul, the rod, &c. might have been repositied in the ark, though they had not been admitted at the time when this book was written. Bellar. &c.—But we have no assurance that the ark was ever placed in the second temple; and Josephus informs us, that when the Romans destroyed the temple, “there was noting at all” in the sanctuary. C.—In area might easily signify ad, or juxta arcam, “near the ark.” Salien.

Ver. 12. Cloud. He alludes to Lev. 16:2. M.—God had so frequently appeared in this manner, that Solomon was authorized to consider it as the symbol of his presence. Ex. 14:19. 24:16 and 40:32. Ps. 17:12. This luminous cloud filled the whole temple, to convince all that the Lord was pleased with the devotion of the king, and of his people. C.

Ver. 13. Ever. He seems to contrast this solid and glittering fabric with the cloud, (M.) as, in some sort, more worthy of God’s presence. H.

Ver. 14. Stood. It is pretended that the king alone was allowed to sit. C.—But here Solomon stood, upon an eminence made of brass. 2 Par. 6:13. H.—He pronounced the blessing, (part of which is given, v. 15–22) with his face turned towards the people, as e was also in the court of Israel. Then turning himself to the altar (C.) of holocausts, (M.)

with his hands uplifted, he began to pray, v. 23, to 54. See Ex. 39:43. 2 K. 6:18, where Moses and David blessed the people, on similar occasions. C.—Thus the priests of the Catholic Church turn to the people, when they bless or speak to them; and look towards the altar, when they pour forth their supplications for them to God. Sectaries would always behold the face of the preacher. H.—Blessed. Princes bless their subjects, as parents do their children. W.

Ver. 15. Own hands, or almighty power, (M.) hath fulfilled his promise. H.

Ver. 22. Heaven, falling on his knees, v. 54. 2 Par. 6:13. This is the first instance we find of people praying on their knees, which was common afterwards. 1 Esd. 9:5. Isai. 45:24. Dan. 6:10. Acts 9:40 and 20:36. The Christian church generally adopts this custom. So did the pagans, (Et genibus pronus, supplex, similisque roganti. Metam. iii.) as they also stretched for their hands. Sustulit exutas vinclis ad sidera palmas, says Virgil. Æn. ii. 153. This practice was very general. Ps. 27:2. 1 Tim. 2:8.

Ver. 25. Sight. Solomon was aware of the conditions on which he held his crown and the divine favour, so that his fall is the more inexcusable. H.—His posterity lost a great part of the kingdom, though they had the right to rule over Juda, till the coming of Christ. W.

Ver. 27. Earth. Full of admiration, he breaks out into this pathetic exclamation, wondering that God should deign to accept of what he had done; and that, by the symbol of his presence, he should engage to honour this temple in a more particular manner, and to shower down his graces with a more liberal hand on those who should there present themselves before him. This wise prince was not ignorant that God's immensity fills all places.—Heavens. We know not how many haveans the Jews admitted. We find, 1. the air, 2. the region of the stars, 3. the residence of God, thus specified; and this last is here denoted as the most excellent of all. S. Paul styles it the third heaven. 2 Cor. 12:2. The Basilidians counted as many heavens as there are days in the year. S. Iræn. i. 23.

Ver. 29. My name. It shall be called the house of God. H.—There people shall come to do homage to the Lord. C.

Ver. 31. Oath. In certain cases, an oath would clear a person. Ex. 22:11. Solomon prays that perjury may be disclosed.—Altar. It was customary to touch the altar, when a person took an oath, as Hannibal did. K. Latinus says;

Tango aras mediosque ignes et Numina testor—

Nulla dies pacem hanc Italii nec fœdera rumpet.—Æn. xii. 201.

Ver. 32. Justice. A reward is clearly promised to good works. W.

Ver. 34. Fathers. In the place of their captivity they might turn, like Daniel, towards the temple. C.—God had threatened that he would punish his people by the hand of their enemies, &c. if they transgressed. Lev. 26:17. M.

Ver. 37. Mildew. Heb. also, “a bruchus,” or a young locust. Prot. “caterpillar.”

Ver. 38. Heart: his offence. Sept. ἀφην, “touching, or compunction.” H.—Let a man go to the source of the evil, and be sorry for his sins. C.

Ver. 39. Men. God cannot be imposed upon. If our heart be not moved with sorrow for our offences, including a degree of love, in vain shall we stretch forth our hands in prayer. C.

Ver. 41. Stranger. God watches over all mankind; and oblations were received from all sorts of people, even from idolaters. The kings of Persia and Egypt, the Roman emperors, &c. made great presents. 1 Esd. 3:7. and 7:21. Joseph. xi. and xii. 2. It seems the court of the Gentiles was only made after the captivity. Some of these adored the true God, like Cornelius, &c. Acts 8:27 and 10:1. Some were drawn by curiosity; others desired to be converted. To thee, kings shall offer presents, Ps. 71:10. C.—Unbelievers are still invited to attend the chapels of the true God, that they may receive information, and deserve to obtain the blessing of faith. H.

Ver. 44. Name. It was the practice of the religious Jews, to pray with their eyes turned towards the holy place, v. 48. The primitive Christians looked towards the east, in prayer, to remind them of the ascension of our Saviour, (C.) from Mount Olivet, in that quarter. H. Ps. 67:34. S. Just. q. 118. Tert. apol. xvi. S. Epip. hæ. xix. C.

Ver. 47. Heart. Without this, external repentance will not suffice. W.

Ver. 51. Iron. This expression is often used to denote the rigour of the Egyptian bondage. Deut. 4:20. Thus Homer says, that Mars was shut up for thirteen months in a barrel (or prison) of brass. Iliad E.

Ver. 59. Judgment, granting his just request, and defending him against all his enemies. C.

Ver. 63. Sheep, and other small beasts, during the seven days, without counting the oblations of individuals. The law had not prescribed any particular rites for the dedication of places. But common sense dictated that sacred things should be distinguished from such as were common. Moses and David had set a pattern, which was followed by the Jews after the captivity, and by the Machabees. Ex. 40:9. 1 K. 6:17. 1 Esd. 3:10. 1 Mac. 4:56. C.—The festival of the dedication was observed by our Saviour. Jo. 10:22. H.—Even private houses received a sort of dedication. Deut. 20:5. The pagans observed the like practice, with regard to statues and temples, lands and public places. Dan. 3:1. Among the Romans, such ceremonies were performed by a general or consul, with his head covered, reciting some ancient prayers, at the suggestion of the pontiff, before a fire and an assembly of the people, called on purpose, while some person played upon the flute. Cic. pro Domo. Alex. Genial. vi. 14.

Ver. 64. Court of the priests. An altar was there erected, in haste. Fire from heaven came to consume the victims. 2 Par. 7:1. C.

Ver. 65. Egypt. Rhinocolura, (M.) or rather the branch of the Nile nearest Arabia,. Jos. 13:3. Num. 13:22. C.—Seven, for each festival, v. 1.

Ver. 66. Eighth day, at the conclusion of the second octave. H.—Blessed the king, as he had done them before. The most honourable performs this office. Heb. 7:7. C.—The king and people wished all sorts of happiness to each other.—David. The glory of his son reflected honour on him. H.

Ver. 1. Do, regarding those buildings. Paral. M.

Ver. 2. Gabaon; that is, “during the night.” 2 Par. 7:12. God had spoken to Solomon, by a prophet, while he was building the temple; (C. 6:11. H.) unless that passage relate to the same time as that which is here recorded more in detail, and took place in the night, after Solomon had poured forth his most solemn prayer. C.—Others think that God deferred answering his petition for thirteen years, till Solomon was on the point of falling off from the observance of piety, that so he might be restrained more effectually. Salien, A.C. 1011.—Fire from heaven had sufficiently signified that his former request had been granted. M.—The context shews that the admonition was not sent till the palace was finished, (v. 1 and 10.) in the 23rd year of Solomon. Salien.

Ver. 4. Simplicity of heart. That is, in the sincerity and integrity of a single heart, as opposite to all double-dealing and deceit. Ch.—External worship alone will not be acceptable. W.—“God is worshipped by faith, hope, and charity.” S. Aug. Ench. iii.

Ver. 6. But if. This threat had been denounced by Moses, (Deut. 29:24) and was repeated by Jeremias, (22:8) when it was on the point of being put in execution. M.

Ver. 7. Take away, by death or exile. H.—Sight. God is disposed to grant favours to those who approach his temples with piety. If they indulge their passions, he will suffer these holy places to be profaned, as a dreadful warning of his displeasure. The Jews enjoyed prosperity while they continued faithful. On their revolt, the ark was taken, the temple pillaged by Sesac, burnt by Nabuchodonosor, profaned by Antiochus, and destroyed by the Romans. C.

Ver. 8. Example. Heb. “at this house, on high,” (or dedicated “to the most high;” Paral.) “every,” &c. H.—It shall be treated with no more regard than the high places of idols. C.—Though at present so much exalted, it shall be reduced to a heap of ruins, (Vatab.) and destroyed. Chal.

Ver. 11. Galilee, the higher, which was nearer to the sea and the confines of Tyre; (M.) or rather the lower Galilee lay in this direction. C.—This was not a part of the country allotted to Israel, (Jos. 19:27) but had been conquered: as Hiram gave the cities back, 2 Par. 8:2. Solomon caused them to be rebuilt, and peopled by the Israelites. Grot.—If they had formed a part of his dominions before, he would not have had to send a colony thither. C.—Others think that he only ceded that country for a time to Hiram, till he should be indemnified. Abul. Tostat. M. T. W.—The country belonged to the Lord, (Lev. 25:13) and could not be given away by the prince. In case it had been occupied by strangers, Solomon would have taken care that the Israelites should have the free exercise of their religion. But as Hiram rejected his offer, he would make him recompense by some other means; (C.) in ready money, v. 14. Joseph. T.

Ver. 13. Brother. By this title the eastern kings addressed each other. C. 20:32. 1 Mac. 10:18 and 11:30. Solomon and Hiram always lived on good terms. C.—Chabul: that is, dirty or displeasing. Ch.—The latter signification is given by Josephus, from the Phœnician language. H.—The real meaning is uncertain. Some with the last mentioned author, place these cities in the vicinity of Tyre, south of Ptolemais, which is most probable; though S. Jerom says they were in the land of Basan, beyond the Jordan. C.

Ver. 15. Offered, or paid back to Hiram, for what he had lent. T.—Heb. “And this is the reason of the levy (or tribute) which king Solomon imposed, in order to build,” &c. H.—We have seen that Adoniram was at the head of this department. C. 5:14. The people bore these burdens with patience, till the works of Mello gave Jeroboam an occasion of stirring them up to rebellion. C. 11:27. Mello was a palace, fortification, (C.) or bridge, erected in the vale, (Salien) from the palace to the temple, (M.) lying between Sion and the old Jerusalem. David had begun to build here, and Solomon perfected the works. Ezechias repaired the wall, 2 Par. 32:5. In this palace Joas was slain. 4 K. 12:20. C.—Heser, or Asor. Jos. 15:23 and 19:36. H.—There was a town of this name in the tribe of Juda, and another in that of Nephthali.—Gazer had been taken by Josue, but the Chanaanites had again made themselves masters of it.

Ver. 16. Wife. This custom distinguished princes from common people, who paid a dowry to their intended bride. 2 Mac. 1:14. Philadelphus gave his daughter Bernice to Antiochus, of Syria, with an immense dowry, which caused her to be styled Phernophorus. The influence of these royal wives was more extensive than that of others of meaner birth, as we find in the daughter of Pharaoh, Jezabel, Athalia, &c. C.

Ver. 17. Nether, in the tribe of Benjamin. 2 Paral. (8:5) adds, the upper, which was a town of Ephraim. M.

Ver. 18. Baalath. There were several towns of this name. Jos. 19:44. C.—Palmira. Heb. Tamor, “a palm-tree.” C.—But the d is preserved in the margin, as well as in some MSS. and in the ancient versions; and is read, Tadmor, in Chronicles. Kennicott.—Prot. have also, “Tadmor, in the wilderness, in the land.” H.—Le Clerc adds, “of Aram,” or Syria of Soba. 2 Par. 8:3, 4. Palmira, famous for its water and fertile soil, was the boundary of the Roman and Parthian empires, (Plin. v. 25.) surrounded on all sides by vast deserts, and built by Solomon for the advantage of travellers, a day’s journey from the Euphrates. Joseph. viii. 6.—Superb ruins are still to be seen, and various pagan inscriptions, in Greek. There are others in an unknown language, which might relate to the Jewish or Christian affairs. See Phil. Transac. Oct. 1695. Brun.—The city was destroyed by the emperor Aurelian. C.

Ver. 19. That ... himself. Heb. “of store;” or to keep his treasures. H.—Lit. “of indigence,” designed to counteract the effects of famine. Pharaoh obliged the Israelites to build such cities for him, (Ex. 1:11) which are called cities of tabernacles. The word miscenoth is here rendered, were not walled.—Chariots. See C. 4:26. C.—Libanus, the temple, (S. Jer. Trad.) or the palace. Sa.—But these were both in Jerusalem. H.—Solomon built a great deal at the foot of Libanus, (Salien) as the defile was of great importance. We read of the tower of Libanus, Cant. 7:4. Travellers mention its ruins. Gabriel. Sionita. p. 6.

Ver. 21. Day. After the captivity, some were found who had perhaps come from Phœnicia. 1 Esd. 9:1. Solomon reduced the natives of the country to the most abject condition, forcing them to work like slaves. Joseph. 8:6.—Heb. “upon those, Solomon imposed a tribute of bond-service, until this day.” H.—Esdras (1 C. 2:58) calls them who returned from captivity, the children of the servants of Solomon, 392. Their fathers were probably styled proselytes; and were in number, 153,600. See 1 Par. 22:2 and 2 Par. 2:17. C.

Ver. 22. Bondmen. Par. To serve in the king’s works; for they were warriors, &c. The natural subjects performed the more honourable offices. H.—Strangers pay tribute. Matt. 17:24. Sesostris, king of Egypt, caused many temples to be erected after his expeditions, with this inscription: “No native laboured on them.” Diodorus i.

Ver. 23. Officers of the crown. There were 250 over the army, (Paral.) or 3,300, (3,600, Par.) including those who presided over the proselytes. C. 5:16. C.—These are employed while the temple was building. M.

Ver. 24. Mello, taking it from the public, and adorning it with the most beautiful structures, for the honour and convenience of his queen. T.

Ver. 25. Year, at the three great festivals, with peculiar solemnity, (C.) as well as holocausts every day, and on the sabbaths and new moons. 2 Paral. 8:13. See ib. 31:3. C.—He established funds for all these victims. M.

Ver. 26. Fleet. Some ancient Latin editions have, (H.) “a name,” or monument. W.—Ailath, to the east. See Num. 33:13.

Ver. 27. Fleet, from Tyre, (C.) or from the island of the same name, in the Red Sea. Grotius.

Ver. 28. Ophir, in the East Indies; (M.) an island called Taprobana, or Sumatra; (Salien) or a country near the heads of the Euphrates and Tigris. C. Dissert.—The variety of opinions is astonishing. Huet fixes upon Sophola, on the eastern coast of Africa; and supposes that the fleet of Hiram might proceed down a canal, which seems to have been formerly opened for a communication between the Mediterranean and the Red Sea. Strabo i. 17. and ii. D.—The various commodities might be procured either in Africa, or, on the voyage, in other countries. H.—Twenty. Par. reads fifty. The letter c (20) and n (50) may easily have been mistaken. Huet.—The thirty talents might be the value of other parts of the cargo, or might be spent in repairs and wages. C.—The sum here mentioned might be also refined gold. M.

3 KINGS 10

Ver. 1. Saba is written with sh, to denote a part of Arabia, and with s, when Ethiopia is meant. Ps. 71:10. The former is here designated, (M.) being “the ends of the earth, east” of Judea, (Tacit. Hist. v.) and lying also to the south of that country. Matt. 12:42. This region was famous for gold, &c. and acknowledged the dominion of women:

Medis levibusque Sabæis

Imperat hic sexus. Claud. Eutrop. i.

Grotius follows the opinion of Josephus (viii. 6.) and Origen, (hom. 2. in Cant.) who place the seat of this queen’s empire at Meroe. The Abyssinians also pretend that their kings are descendants of Solomon, by the queen of Saba; and that Azarias, the son of Sadoc, stole the tables of the law, when he brought back his pupil from Jerusalem. Sanctius.—This shews their vanity and ignorance. C.—Still many suppose that this queen came from their country. W. &c.—Lord, who had raised Solomon to so great splendour, while, on the other hand, the king endeavoured to enhance his glory. H.—If we place the stop after Solomon, we may say that the queen was moved by divine grace, and attracted, like the Gabaonites, (Jos. 9:9) to embrace the true religion; (C.) though she seems to have professed it already, as many others did among the Gentiles. H.—The Fathers look upon her as a figure of the Christian Church. (S. Hilary, Ps. cxxi. S. Iræn. iv. 45. &c. Barbara natione, non animo. S. Paulin, ep. 1.—Questions. Thus the ancients tried each others skill. Judg. 14:12. See C. 4:30. The questions might regard natural history or religion. M.

Ver. 4. House, the palace, or rather the temple, (C.) or both. M.—Dion (37) and Tacitus extol the grandeur of the temple, which Titus destroyed. What would they have said of that built by Solomon? C.

Ver. 5. In her. She fainted away in rapture and astonishment. H.—Thus the church of the Gentiles is taught, by the gospel, to lay aside the spirit of pride, &c. W.

Ver. 9. Justice. Kings are given by God, either in his mercy or in his anger. C.—They are not appointed for themselves alone. M.—This queen was moved to take so long a journey, to hear and to see Solomon, as a figure of the many potentates who should embrace the Christian faith. W.

Ver. 11. Thyine. Pliny (iii. 16.) mentions a species of tall and incorruptible trees, called thya. The wood was odoriferous, and very costly. Citri et mensarum insania, quas femine viris contra margaritas regerunt. B. xiii. and xv. 16. Calypso burnt it, to perfume her whole island. Homer.—It was used as a sort of incense in sacrifices, and thence received its name. H.—Sept. translate, “plained;” and elsewhere, pine-trees, which is adopted by S. Jerom. 2 Par. 2:8. C.—Heb. reads almuggim in one place, and alumin in the other, the letters being transposed; “for I suppose, says Kennicott, it will hardly be said that these trees were both almug and alium.” H.—One word might be the Ethiopian pronunciation. Huet.—Yet Kimchi observes, that such transpositions of letter are very common among the Hebrews. D.—Solomon had desired Hiram to send him some alium, or “gum bearing” wood: but as there was not sufficient, or so fine, in Libanus as in Ophir, or in foreign parts, he procured more from those countries. The wood might probably resemble that of settim, or of black acacia, (Ex. 25:5) whence the gum of Arabia is extracted. Acanthos, in Thebais, was celebrated for its fine thorn-trees, and for its gum. Strabo xvii. C.—It is placed near Memphis. Plin. iv 10.—The Rabbins commonly understand the Heb. to mean, “coral,” which is not fit for instruments, much less for architecture. Others translate ebony, or Brazil wood, but without reason. C. T.

Ver. 12. Rails. Heb. mihsad, “pillars, supporters, or banisters.” H.—Most interpreters suppose the rails were on each side of the road, leading from the palace to the temple. C.—Paral. stairs.—Citterns, or harps and lyres. H.—Heb. “kinnoroth and nebalim.”

Ver. 14. Gold. His stated revenue was, 4,646,350*l.* sterling. H.

Ver. 15. Merchants: wholesale. M.—Arabia, the desert, which was peopled by various nations. Arab means, “a mixture, or assemblage,” as well as “the night, and a fruitless country.” Sept. seem to have read abor, “all the kings of the other side” the Euphrates, who were also called Arabs. See C. 4:24.—Country around Judea, comprising the Phylarchs of Arabia, (Gen. 17:20) and the Philistine Satraps.

Ver. 16. Shields. Heb. tsinnu is rather indeterminate, denoting something sharp or pointed; “a dart,” &c. C.—Par. spears. Some of the shields were made with a point, projecting from the middle, (H.) with which the enemy might be wounded. M.—These arms were used when the king went to the temple, and were repositied in the arsenal, at his return. C. 14:28.

Ver. 17. Targets, smaller than the former, and resembling a crescent.

Ducit Amazonidum lunatis agmina peltis. Æneid i. C.

—Par. reads, shields.—Fine. Sept. “ductile.” Heb. sseut, “beaten, refined,” &c.—Hundred is omitted in Heb. and Sept. (H.) but is found in 2 Par. (9:16) where we read 300 of gold, in like manner as 600 of gold in the preceding verse, without specifying the particular weight in either. These targets or shields, seem to have been heavier than the former, and designed only for ornament, being placed in the great hall, as they weighed each 375 Roman pounds, or 18,000 sicles; (C.) unless minæ, pound, be here put for sicle; as Josephus (ii. 3.) says that sons of Jacob sold their brother for twenty pieces of silver. Gen. 37:28. M.—Salien thinks that 200 shields were each worth 600 sicles, and these 300 targets weighed each 300 sicles of gold. H.

Ver. 18. Ivory. Heb. “of the tooth” (or horn) of elephants: people do not agree of which the ivory is formed. See Pliny (viii. 3.) for the former sentiment, and for the latter, Varro vi. Ezec. (27:15) seems to unite both sentiments, calling it, “horns of the tooth.” H.—Ivory may, in effect, be wrought like horn.—Finest. Heb. “gold of Uphas.” This was the country whence it was brought; (Jer. 10:9) probably Colchis, where the river Phasis, or Phison, flows. Gen. 2:11. C.—The Chaldee calls Uphas, (in Jeremias) Ophir; and Huet supposes that Paz and Parvaim designate the same place. C. 9:28. Job 28:17. D.—In Paral. we only read, pure gold, which would suffer the ivory to appear in some places. C.

Ver. 19. Behind, like an alcove, (H.) placed in the porch of the palace. C. 7:8.—Hands, for the elbows to rest on. In Paral. S. Jerom translates, “little” arms. The feet might also be made in this shape. Josephus (viii. 5.) represents them as forming the seat: (C.) and the Sept. place them on each side: “the fore-parts of oxen, projecting from the back of the throne, and hands on the throne, on each side of the seat.” In Paral. also, we find a foot-stool of gold. H.

Ver. 21. No silver vessels, (C.) though there was a great abundance of that metal, v. 27. It was not deemed worthy to be admitted at the king’s table. H.

Ver. 22. To Tharsis. This word in Heb. signifies, “the sea.” Isai. 2:16 and 23:10. M.—But when it signifies some particular place, (H.) it probably refers to Tarsus of Cilicia, which was once the most famous mart on the Mediterranean, though not perhaps in the days of Solomon, but after it had been embellished by the Assyrian kings. "Ships of Tharsis," often denote such as were fit for a long voyage; and of this description were the fleets of Solomon and of Hiram, which sailed from Asiongaber to Ophir, and touched at various ports, where they procured what they wanted. C.—Heb. "the king had at sea a navy of Tharsis ... once in three years: the navy of Tharsis came, bringing gold," &c. H.—Teeth. Heb. Shenhabim. The latter word is commonly rendered elephants, k being lost at the beginning. Bochart,—Syriac and Arab. intimate, that the elephants were brought alive. Perhaps n may be dropped after b; so that we should read, ebnim, as Ezech. 27:15, and translate ivory and ebony; the one being remarkable for its white, and the other for its black colour. Both might be procured on the coasts of Ethiopia, by which the fleet passed. The Persians, and Sesostris, required the people of the country to pay both for tribute. Pliny xii. 14. Diod. i.—Apes. Heb. Kophim. Greek Κηπος. There was a peculiar species in Ethiopia, which the Egyptians adored at Babylon, near Memphis, and was exhibited by Julius Cæsar, in the public shews. Solin. Bochart.—Peacocks is not expressed in the Sept. C.—The Roman edition, instead of elephants, &c. inserts, "stones" &c. intended for the various edifices and towns, which Solomon fortified, to keep under the nations of Chanaan, whom he forced to labour, &c. But the Alexandrian copy has, τῶνων, "peacocks," as thuciim is rendered (H.) by the Chal. Syr. &c. C.—Huet observes, that these birds were scarcely known in the time of Alexander, and would therefore understand, psittacos, "parrots." D.—But peacocks were called, "birds of Media," as they were very common in that country, (C.) and about Babylon. Diod. ii.—The fleet of Solomon might advance as far as the confines of Media. Josephus adds, that it brought home Ethiopian slaves, who were in high esteem in a country where eunuchs were employed to guard the women, (C.) as there would be less danger of too great familiarity. H.

Ver. 24. The earth; or, the kings of, &c. Paral.

Ver. 26. Hunderd chariots. Par. forty thousand horses, in the stables, and 12,000 chariots and horsemen; though the chariots may be referred to the former number, conformably to the Heb. and to C. 4:26. M.—Many of the horses were not employed in the chariots, (Salien) which were 1400 in number. 2 Par. 1:14. M.

Ver. 27. Sycamores, (Heb. shikmim) which were formerly very common in Palestine, as they are still about Cairo, in Egypt. The fruit resembles figs, as the leaves do the mulberry tree; whence the name is a compound of συκον, “a fig,” and μωρα, “a mulberry;” though some would prefer μωρος, “a fool,” to denote that the fruit is “insipid.” It is however sweeter than wild figs, and proceeds from the trunk of the tree. C.

Ver. 28. Egypt was once very famous for horses, and the breed is much admired by travellers. The Turks will not suffer strangers to have them. The canals made by Sesostris and other kings, caused their numbers to be diminished. Herod. ii. 108.—Yet there were many used in the time of Ezechias. 4 K. 18:24.—And Coa. Some take this to be the name of some unknown place, (D.) or of a town in Arabia Felix, (Ptol. vi. 17.) or “of a fair.” T.—Heb. “and from Michoe,” which was the ancient name of Troglodytis, near Egypt. Pliny vi. 29. C.—Prot. “and linen yarn; the king’s merchants received the linen yarn at the price.” Mokue signifies “a thread;” (H.) and the linen cloth of Egypt was in high estimation. Isai. 19:9. Ezech. 27:7. Pliny xix. 1.—Jarchi and others understand, “a string” of horses, tied together by the tails. But Bochart translates, “They brought horses for Solomon out of Egypt; and, as for the tribute, the custom-house officers of the king received it, at a certain rate,” agreed upon between Solomon and the king of Egypt.

Ver. 29. Fifty, upon an average.—Hethites: some had retired, and built Lusa; (Judg. 1:26) others dwelt beyond Libanus. 4 K. 7:4. These kings sold horses to Solomon; or, according to the Heb. the Jews had the traffic of horses in their own hands. C.—Prot. “and so for all the kings ... did they bring them out by their means.” Sept. “thus to all the kings ... of Syria, on the seashore, they came out.” H.—The merchants sold horses to these kings, at 150 sicles a piece. C.

Ver. 1. Strange women, who had been brought up in the service of idols, and were not sincerely converted. H.—Riches engaged Solomon in the love of pleasure, and this brought on his ruin. C.—He began with the spirit, but ended in the flesh. Gal. 3:3. Eccles. 47:21. He was aware of the dangerous conversation of women. Eccle. 19:2. Yet he has left us in his own person an example of that dreadful truth, that it is difficult to love with discretion. H.—Amare et sapere vix cuiquam conceditur. Nothing could be more beautiful than the commencement of his reign, nor more terrible than the latter part of it. Thou hast stained thy glory, &c. Eccli. 47:22. Hence we may apply to him, How are thou fallen from heaven? Isai. 14:12. C.—Pharao. This marriage seems to be blamed, as the source of Solomon's misfortunes; though it is probable, that she had pretended to embrace his religion. M. Salien.—He ought to have repudiated her as soon as she relapsed. T.

Ver. 2. Gods. See Ex. 34:16. Deut. 7:4. The law only forbids expressly the marrying of the women of Chanaan. But it was easy to discern, that the spirit of the law equally prohibited connexions with others who were addicted to idol-worship. See 1 Esd. 10:3. Such alliances are always dangerous, and generally prove fatal; (C.) unless there be good reason to believe that the parties are sincerely converted: in which case the prohibition ceases. H.—Love. Thus, nitimur in vetitum semper, cupimusque negata; and, stolen waters are sweeter, says impure love; but her guests are in the depths of hell. Prov. 9:17. 18.

Ver. 3. Concubines, or secondary wives. H.—Those who have any sense of modesty, can hardly read this without blushing. Salien.—Solomon was guilty not only of intemperance, but also of a transgression of the precept. M. Deut. 17:17.—He shall not have many wives: though as that command is indefinite, and David had eighteen, without blame, (2 K. 3:3) it is difficult to say how many a person might have, at that time, without exceeding the bounds of moderation. H.—But a thousand wives for one man, is certainly too great a number. When Solomon wrote the Canticles, he had only sixty queens and eighty concubines. Cant. 6:8. The Rabbins allow the king eighteen wives. But it is probable that most of the kings indulged themselves in a greater latitude. Darius, of Persia, took along with him to the wars 350 concubines, when he was overcome by Alexander. Athen. xiii. 1. Priam had also many wives, besides Hecuba, the queen. The inferior wives looked upon those who had this title with a degree of respect, bordering on adoration. C.

Ver. 4. Old; about fifty. Salien. C.—This is an aggravation of his guilt. H.—Solomon spent the first thirty years of his reign in virtue: but towards the termination of it, he gave into idolatry, and into such excesses, that he deserves to be ranked with Henry VIII. who began well, but ended with dishonour. H.—Heart, and mind also, v. 9. He sacrificed to idols, not only externally, but gave them internal worship; (Salien) so much was his understanding darkened, unless (H.) he acted against his better knowledge. Eccles. 2:9. T.—Father who did not continue long in sin. D.—“The wisdom, which had been given to him, entirely abandoned his heart, which the discipline even of the smallest tribulation had not guarded.” S. Greg. Pastoral. p. 3.—“He had commenced his reign with an ardent desire of wisdom, and when he had obtained it by spiritual love, he lost it by carnal affections.” S.

Aug. Doct. 3:21.—“Prosperity, which is a severe trial for the wise, was more disadvantageous to him than wisdom herself had been profitable.” De Civ. God xvii. 20.—The Fathers do not attempt to palliate the guilt of Solomon; and those aggravate his crime, who endeavour to excuse him by saying, that his mind was still convinced that there could be but one God, and that his adoration of idols was merely external, and out of complaisance to his wives. See Santius, &c. C.

Ver. 5. Astarthe. Heb. Hashtoreth, “ewes,” is in the plural form, as if to denote many idols. But the moon, or the queen of heaven, (Jer. 7:18) is particularly designated. Judg. 2:12. H.—Some explain it of Venus, (Sanctius) or Juno. T.—Moloch. Heb. Molciom, (their king) “the abomination;” (H.) supposed to be the sun, (Sanctius) or saturn. T. See 4 K. 23:10.

Ver. 7. Chamos. Bacchus or Priapus, called Κωμῶς, by the Greeks, as he presided over “feasting.” His worship was most shameful, and therefore performed in the night. The temples erected by Solomon, were not entirely demolished till the reign of Josias. T.—Hill. Heb. “Then Solomon erected a high place (temple, altar, or grove) to Chamos, the abomination of Moad, on the, &c. hill,” it is supposed of olives, (H.) to the east of Jerusalem, which was hence called, the mount of offence. 4 K. 23:13. C.—Yet no place was consecrated to idols within the city. M.—The idols of Egypt are not specified, though the daughter of Pharaoh would, probably, interest herself in their favour. The Jews were more prone to those of Chanaan. We find, however, that they were addicted to the worship of Adonis, who was highly revered in Egypt; (Ezec. 8:14. C.) and the golden calves were an imitation of Apis. H.—Six temples were probably built, as wives of so many different nations are specified, v. 1. Abul. Salien.

Ver. 9. Twice, or repeatedly. See C. 9:2. H.—He had appeared to him at Gabaon, and after the consecration of the temple, (M.) besides sending a prophet to him while he was building. C. 6:12. Abul.—God was not content with giving him the general commandments: he had condescended to caution him in a most particular and earnest manner: (H.) so that his transgression is more horrible and ungrateful. C.—No doubt the priests and prophets had often besought him to alter his conduct; but the sinner is deaf, till God speak to his heart. Salien, A. 3054.

Ver. 11. This. Lit. and Heb. “Because thou hast this with thee.” H.—Since this is thy conduct, and fixed determination, to abandon my service, I will also reject thee. The Lord spoke to him in a third vision, (C.) or by the mouth of Ahias, (Abul.) who was likewise appointed to inform Jeroboam of his election to a part of the kingdom. Salien, A. 3059.

Ver. 12. Sake. As David placed this son upon the throne, the disgrace would seem to revert on him. M.—Here we behold the reward of piety, and how desirable a thing it is to have saints for our parents. H.

Ver. 13. One tribe. Besides that of Juda, his own native tribe. Ch.—That of Benjamin had been so reduced, that it scarcely deserved the name of a tribe. It was also invariably connected with the adjoining tribe of Juda; as many of the other tribes, after the captivities of Assyria and Babylon, went by the common title of Jews. T.—The Levites, and many of the Israelites, came to inhabit in the land of Juda, for the sake of the true religion. C. 12:17. 2 Par. 11:13. 16. Jeroboam banished the tribe of Levi from his dominions, that he might more easily introduce a change of religion among his subjects. The two kingdoms were thus almost equal in strength. C.—Chosen for the abode of holiness, and the seat of government. Salien.—One tribe ... and Jerusalem; which latter may denote the tribe of Benjamin. W.

Ver. 14. Adversary. Heb. Satan. Nothing of this kind could molest him, while he continued faithful. C. 5:4. But now he sees the arm of God stretched out, pressing him to repent.—Adad. Sept. Ader. Josephus says that this prince solicited Pharaon to let him return into his own country, after the death of Joab: but was prevailed upon to desist from the attempt, till the affairs of Solomon began to decline. He then endeavoured to get possession of the country; but, being repelled by the strong garrisons of the Hebrews, he went and joined Razar, (Heb. Razon) who had revolted against Aderezer; and made inroads into the dominions of Solomon, after he had conquered a part of Syria. Ant. viii. 7. Others think that Solomon consented, at the entreaty of Pharaon, that Adad should reign over Idumea, on his paying tribute; and that the latter attempted to throw off the yoke. Salien.—But these particulars are uncertain, and Idumea was subject to the kings of Juda till the days of Joram. 2 Par. 21:8. C.

Ver. 15. In Edom, in the 15th year of his reign. Salien.—Abisai was the general in this expedition. 2 K. 8 and 1 Par. 18:12.

Ver. 17. Boy. About five (Salien) or 12 years of age. Pineda.

Ver. 18. Land, to maintain him (Josephus) out of the royal domains, (C.) of which the kings were possessed. Didor. i. p. 46.—He appointed him governor of some part of the country. Vatable.

Ver. 19. Full. Sept. “elder sister of his wife Thekemina.” H.

Ver. 23. Razon. He must have been now about 94 years old; unless this was the son of Aderezer’s general. Salien. M.

Ver. 24. Robbers, or (Heb. and Sept.) “a band” with whom he made depredations. H.—Damascus, with David’s consent, on their admitting a garrison, (2 K. 8:6,) and consenting to pay tribute; (M.) or Razon might make himself master of this place, only after the apostacy of Solomon. His successors became very formidable to the Jews, particularly Razin, (4 K. 15 and 16) who was slain by Theglathphalassar. Ib. 5:9. C.

Ver. 25. Solomon, after he once began. H.—Adad. Heb. “and with the evil of Adad, and he detested Israel.” M.—Razon and Adad conspired to attack Solomon. H.—Adad may be the common name of the kings of Damascus. Some copies of the Sept. do not speak of Razon, but continue the history of Adad, v. 14. They also read Edom here instead of Aram, or Syria, which would remove the confusion. C.—Adad, Razon, and Jeroboam always oppugn Solomon after his fall; and signify the flesh, the world, and the devil. W.

Ver. 26. King, attempting to draw the people into rebellion, as he perceived that they were discontent with the buildings at Mello. He had a command over them; and though he was, for the present, obliged to save himself by flight, he had sown the seeds of rebellion by his discourses, in such a manner, that the imprudent answer of Roboam (C.) easily brought them to maturity. H.

Ver. 28. Joseph, Ephraim and Manasses. M.—He was of the former tribe. Salien.—At first Solomon employed none of the Israelites to work. C. 9:22. But he afterwards oppressed them grievously. The king’s right was to make his subjects cultivate his lands, &c. 1 K. 7:11. They did not pay money, (Mat. 17:24,) but wrought for the king. Heb. “he made him ruler over all the charge,” (or levy.) H.—The Vulg. often uses the word tribute (C.) for sebel. Josephus believes that Jeroboam had the command over the forces of the house of Joseph: but he had rather the superintendency over the workmen. H.

Ver. 29. Garment. Salma occurs 16 times in this sense, and simlee 27. The latter, we may presume, is the true reading, as it is in the Sam. Pentateuch invariably; Ex. 22:26, 27, both words are printed in the Heb. Bible. But it is not probable that Moses should have written them so; no more than a Latin author would use both vestinentum and vestimentum. Shamal, in Arabic, signifies “he clothed himself all over.” Kennicott.—Way leading to Ephraim, (M.) his department. C.—Field.

Sept. "he drew him aside out of the road: and Ahias had on a new cloak, and both were in the field." H.—Jeroboam would not probably go unattended; (M.) and it seems this transaction soon transpired, and came to the ears of Solomon. H.

Ver. 30. Parts. He speaks by his actions, (M.) thus foretelling what should happen, as was customary with the prophets. Osee 1:2. Jer. 27:2. Ezec. 12:7. Acts 21:11. C.—This tended to make a deeper impression on the mind, (H.) and convince all, that what was spoken, was not in jest. W.

Ver. 34. Make, or permit him to reign. M.

Ver. 36. A lamp. Posterity, (2 K. 21:17) power, and glory. 4 K. 8:19.

Ver. 37. Desireth. It seems he was already disposed to revolt. C.

Ver. 38. Faithful house, which shall not be destroyed, nor lose the kingdom, for a long time. Jeroboam never complied with the condition. C.

Ver. 39. For this infidelity of Solomon, (H). afflict, by raising up a rival. M.—For ever. Notwithstanding the wickedness of many of its princes, this family was to subsist, in a distinguished rank, till the coming of the Messias; that the completion of the promises might be more observable. C.—After 250 years, the throne of Israel was subverted. M.

Ver. 40. Therefore, being apprized of what had passed, as well as to prevent the farther attempts of Jeroboam. H.—Sesac. He is the first, whose proper name is given in Scripture. Whether he was of the same family, as the Pharaoh, whose daughter Solomon had married, cannot be ascertained. Marsham makes Sesac the same with the renowned Sesostris, the Sethosis of Manetho. But Usher thinks that Sesostris reigned immediately after the Israelites left Egypt; while Pezron, &c. suppose that Amenoplis, who was drowned, was even his grandson. C.

Ver. 41. Words, or transactions. H.—Book. This book is lost, with divers others mentioned in holy writ. Ch.—Nathan, Ahias, and Addo, composed these journals. 2 Par. 9:29. H.—Similar works were kept at the courts of Persia and of Babylon. Est. 6:1. 1 Esd. 6:2. Plutarch quotes the journal of Alexander; and Tacitus (An. iii.) informs us, that the smallest occurrences were specified in journals, at Rome, while things of greater importance were recorded in the annals. The books of days, are cited in the Paral. so that we cannot suppose that these journals are the same with that work. C.—God was pleased that those writings should not come down to us; so that we can only speak from conjecture of the repentance of Solomon. Salien, A. 3058.

Ver. 42. Forty. Josephus says eighty; and some suppose, that the Scripture only specifies the years during which Solomon reigned virtuously. Pezron is the same opinion as Josephus. H.—Others contend that it is a manifest mistake. Immoderate pleasures hastened his old age and death, when he was about fifty-eight years old. All in him was great, whether we consider the virtues of his early days, or the vices of his old age. He falls from heaven into the abyss. His repentance is a problem. C.

Ver. 43. Solomon slept, &c. That is, died. He was then about fifty-eight years of age, having reigned forty years. Ch.—S. Chrysostom, at different times, seems to have entertained opposite opinions on this head, (H.) which has been a matter of controversy among the Fathers, as it is at present with us. We ought to adore and imitate, with trembling, the silence of Scripture. C.—Sept. seem favourable to Solomon: (Prov. 24:32.) “At last I did penance, and looked forward, to embrace discipline.” H.—But the Heb. Chal. and Vulg. have nothing similar. C.—Some think that the Book of Proverbs, as well as that of Ecclesiastes, was composed by him after his repentance; and that he expresses his sentiments of affliction and self-condemnation, (Prov. 30:2) and his opinion of all earthly gratifications. Eccles. 1:2. &c. H.—Yet this dreadful uncertainty may serve to keep us all in humble fear, and teach us to work out our salvation with trembling. C.—If Solomon really repented, (H.) he might not have time or power to remove all the vestiges, and the very foundations of the idolatrous temples, which Ezechias also neglected in ruins, as no longer dangerous, and as so many monuments of the folly of Solomon. But Josias caused them to be entirely removed. 4 K. 22:13. Salien, A. 3059. The daughter of Pharaon would probably imitate her beloved husband. Pineda.—Sadoc seems to have departed this life about the same time with Solomon; as his son Achimaas, who had married Basemath, the king’s daughter, succeeded him in the pontificate, at the commencement of Roboam’s reign. Chron. Min. Heb. Salien.

Ver. 1. King, or to acknowledge his right, provided he would grant their request. The discontented assembled at Sichem, rather than at Jerusalem, as they would be under less restraint. C.—They appointed Jeroboam to prefer their petition. M.—Roboam was probably the only son whom Solomon had by his wives. C.—We read of two daughters, Japheth and Basemath. C. 4:11. and 15. H.—Naama, the Ammonite, was the mother of Robaom, who, though 40 years old, was devoid of good sense. 2 Par. 13:7. Eccles. 2:18. Eccles. 47:27. C.

Ver. 2. Hearing of. Heb. “It (the assembly) and Jeroboam dwelt in Egypt.” H.—But in 2 Paral. 10:2, we find he returned. It is probable that both texts agreed in the days of S. Jerom; as the same letters, if read in a different manner, may have both meanings. C.—Sept. have also “returned.” H.

Ver. 4. Yoke, of personal service, (C.) first to build the temple, and afterwards to erect palaces, fortify cities, &c. The works of Mello gave the greatest discontent. H.

Ver. 6. Old man. Banaias and Jahiel. S. Jer. Trad.

Ver. 7. They said. Heb. “he said.” The transcribers, probably not understanding what they wrote, frequently make singular for plural verbs. So v. 21, “They came,” instead of he came. Some MSS. and the ancient versions are correct. Kennicott.—Yield. Heb. “serve.” By the submission of one day he might have acquired the kingdom. Great attention is requisite at first. Tacitus (Hist. iv.) represents Vespasian, Novo principatu suspensum, & vultus quoque ac sermones omnium circumspectantem.

Ver. 8. Him. They were young, compared with the former, though they might be 40 years old. M.—It was frequently the custom in the eastern courts, to educate young noblemen along with the heir to the crown. Such formed the captains of Alexander, (1 Mac. 1:7,) and the warriors of Sesostris, whose father ordered all the male children who were born on the same day in his dominions, to be brought to court, to be educated with his son. Diod. i.—The Persian nobility were brought up at the gate of the prince, that they might learn temperance and the art of governing. Xenoph. Cyrop. i.—The endeavours of Solomon were frustrated by the evil disposition of his son, and of those about his person.

Ver. 10. Finger is not expressed in Heb. or Sept. but the Syr. and Josephus agree with the Vulg. In Paral. we read loins, instead of back. Heb. and Sept. my little (Prot. supply finger). Sept. “my littleness,” μικότης; but in Paral. finger is added. H.—Chal. “my weakness is stronger than my father’s strength.” The loins denote strength. Roboam did not use these boastings and insolent expressions: but he adopted their spirit. C.—He insinuates that he was twice as old as his father when he began to reign, (Pineda vii. 24,) or he uses a proverbial exaggeration. Delrio. adag. 202. M.

Ver. 11. Scorpions. Chal. “thorns.” Heb. has both significations. Like a tyrant, Roboam threatens to beat the people with sharp thorns. M.

Ver. 15. Turned. Heb. “for the cause (revolution) was from the Lord, (C.) that he might verify his word.” H.—God permitted the king to act impudently, and disposed things in such a manner, that the prediction took effect. C.—Indeed, the prophet had only spoken, because things would happen. H.—“There are two sorts of persecutors, those who blame, and those who flatter: the tongue of the flatterers persecutes more than the hand of him who kills.” S. Aug. in Ps. lxi. D.—Roboam fell a prey to his evil counsellors. H.—That, (v. 16.) denotes the sequel, not the final cause, as C. 14:9. W.

Ver. 16. Look to. Chal. “rule over thy own tribe.” They imitate those who give a bill of divorce. C.—Herein they were not excusable, no more than those who persecuted God’s people, though he permitted their wickedness, to chastise the guilty. M.—Seba had formerly withdrawn the people from David in the same manner. 2 K. 20:1. H.—Abulensis thinks that as God had chosen Jeroboam, and his rival acted tyrannically, the people did right. T.

Ver. 17. Them, as well as over many, who came into his territory, that they might practise the true religion, without restraint. H. C. 11:13.—The kings of Juda afterwards made various conquests. C. 13:19. Hence they were able to contend with the other tribes (C.) with advantage. H.—Even at first, Roboam put himself at the head of 180,000 chosen men, v. 21. Abia had an army of 400,000, and Asa near 600,000; while Josaphat had 1,160,000 soldiers. 2 Par. 13:3 and 14:8. and 17:14.

Ver. 18. Aduram. One of the same name had occupied this post under David. 2 K. 20:24. C.—Some suppose that this is the same with Adoniram. C. 4:6. Roboam impudently sent him to appease the people, (Salien) or haughtily to demand the usual tribute; unless the king abandoned him to the fury of the populace, as an object of their horror. The people have often been appeased by the death of rapacious ministers.—Haste. Heb. “he strengthened himself,” or obstinately persisted in his resolution of reducing the people by force; and thus those, who might now have been easily reclaimed, were driven to choose another king, and the evil became irremediable. C.

Ver. 20. Again, from Egypt, v. 2. H.—He had not been present, it seems, at the second assembly; or, at least, he had retired as soon as Roboam had given his decision. But the people having stoned Aduram, and thus rendered a reconciliation very difficult, Jeroboam was invited to accept the crown. C.—As this was conformable to his utmost desires and the prophet's declaration, he made no demur. C. 11:37. H. Only. Benjamin was a small tribe, and so intermixed with the tribe of Juda, (the very city of Jerusalem being partly in Juda, partly in Benjamin) that hey are here counted but as one tribe. Ch.—Perhaps Benjamin at first hesitated; but, considering the greater danger to which it would be exposed, embraced the party of Roboam, v. 21. Salien.

Ver. 21. Fourscore. Sept. "twenty." D.—But the Alex. copy agrees with the Heb. H.

Ver. 24. Them. This shews the great authority of Semeias. He wrote the history of Roboam. 2 Par. 12:15. He also foretold the irruption of Sesac, to punish the house of Israel; but not to destroy it. C.—The obedience of Roboam deserves applause; though it would have been a vain attempt to resist God, who was resolved to punish his family. M.—God must have touched the hearts of the leaders, to convince them that he spoke by the mouth of Semeias. Salien.—The Vat. Sept. here subjoins almost the whole history of Jeroboam, improperly. H. See C. 14.

Ver. 25. Built, or "had built," while Roboam was preparing for his invasion. Salien.—Sichem and Phanuel had been ruined by Abimelech, and by Gedeon. Judg. 8:17 and 9:45. C.—By means of these fortresses, he secured both sides of the Jordan. H.—Jeroboam afterwards fixed his residence at Thirsa, where the court was kept, till Amri built Samaria.

Ver. 27. Him. Jeroboam chose to follow the dictates of human policy, rather than to depend on the express declaration of God, who had given him the kingdom. It was natural that the people should have a predilection for the house of David; (C.) and he might fear that the priests would prevail upon them to return to their old master, as they dwelt about Jerusalem. Salien.

Ver. 28. Device. Wicked policy, to make religion subservient to the state. W.—Jeroboam was right in judging, (H.) that it is one of the strongest foundations of government, (C.) and therefore he would have a peculiar religion for his subjects. H.—Strange blindness, caused by ambition! As if God could not have maintained him on the throne. The sequel evinces how delusive were his wicked projects. C.—Calves. It is likely, by making his gods in this form, he mimicked the Egyptians, among whom he had sojourned, who worshipped their Apis and their Osiris under the form of a bullock. Ch. S. Jerom in Osee iv.

15. and v. &c.—The Greeks commonly style these idols, heifers, are more contemptible than bulls: (T.) and some Fathers style them, “calf-heads.” Lact. iv. 10. Monceau pretends that they resembled the cherubim, and were intended to represent the true God; thus endeavouring to excuse the Israelites from idolatry, on this occasion, as well as when they came out of Egypt. Ex. 32:4. But his arguments are weak, and Jeroboam is constantly condemned as a most wicked and idolatrous prince. C. 14:9. 4 K. 23:15. Osee 8:5 and 10:5. C.—Egypt. The same had been said by Aaron. M.

Ver. 29. Bethel and Dan. Bethel was a city of the tribe of Ephraim, in the southern parts of the dominions of Jeroboam, about six leagues from Jerusalem: Dan was in the extremity of his dominions, to the north, on the confines of Syria. Ch.—The Israelites did not hesitate to travel so far, v. 30. C.—Those who lived nearer Bethel, went thither along with their king. Salien.—The latter city was assigned to Benjamin. Jos. 18:22. M.—But probably many of the subjects of Jeroboam dwelt in it; so that it was the most southern city of his dominions. It had been consecrated by Jacob, (Gen. 28:19) and was a famous place of devotion. 1 K. 10:3. Sept. (Alex.) and S. Cyril (in Osee, p. 5.) read Galgal. Dan had been long before infected with idolatry. Judg. 18:30.

Ver. 30. Sin, almost irreparable, which brought on the ruin of the ten tribes. Though the calves were taken away along with them into captivity, the people did not return to the service of the Lord: but the greatest part imitated the conduct of the pagans, with whom they mixed; while some few returned with the tribe of Juda, and made a part of that kingdom. The Samaritans, who were sent to inhabit their country, were not of the race of Jacob. C.

Ver. 31. Places, to other idols or devils, (2 Par. 11:15. H.) not merely at Bethel. C. 13.—Lowest. Such places were fittest for him. W.—Heb. “extremity:” others understand people of reputation: but it seems he took any whosoever would (C. 13:33) accept the office, without confining himself to the Levites. C.—Indeed most of them were banished, as refractory; (2 Par. 11:13) though some were so weak as to take part with him; (Ezec. 44:10) probably the descendants of Micha. Judg. 18:31. H.—They were not punished with instant death, like Core, though their crime seemed greater. Salien.

Ver. 32. Day. God had prescribed the seventh month, (C.) and this wicked prince purposely made choice of another, that the observance of the days appointed might be obliterated. Thus the Jacobins, in France, decreed that the tenth day should be the day of rest, instead of Sunday. H.—Religious assemblies tend greatly to promote the spirit of concord and peace.

Ver. 33. To: literally, “up on,” (super) as at the end of the verse. H.—The altars were very high and large. C.—Month. Sept. add, “on the festival which,” &c. M.—Heart. Hebrew reads millibod, (præter) instead of molbu, (ex corde suo.) Some MSS. retain the latter word, as it is printed also in the marginal keri. Leusden tells us, we are by no means to say it is the truer reading, because then the text must be allowed to be corrupted; but it only explains what is meant by præter, “besides.” A marvellous explanation! and perhaps it is only to be paralleled by ei explained by non. Kennicott.—Jeroboam has a mind to do honour to his new worship, and unites in his own person the sacerdotal and regal dignity, as the Roman emperors did. C.—Incense. Sept. “to sacrifice.” H.—From this period, many learned men date the 390 years of the iniquity of Israel. Ezec. 4:5. D.

Ver. 1. A man. Some suppose his name was Addo. 2 Par. 9:29. But this is quite uncertain.—Incense, or victims. C.

Ver. 2. Altar, in which the prodigy was to take place, for the instruction of all. M.—Name: 340 (C.) or 350 years after. Salien.—This prediction proves the truth of the religion; for, though the author of this book might have seen it verified, yet he would undoubtedly insert the very words of the prophet, which were known to all the people. 4 Kings 23:15. In this passage we do not read that Josias destroyed the priests. But v. 19 and 20, it is clearly insinuated. C.—Who now. He will reduce their bones to ashes upon this altar; or, those who shall imitate these priests, shall be there burnt alive. H.

Ver. 3. Sign. This would take place immediately, to convince the king that what he had said would be accomplished. So Moses and Achaz were treated. Ex. 3:2. 12. Isai. 7:14. 16. C.

Ver. 6. Thy God. He does not say my, being conscious that he had abandoned his service. M.—Before. We may be surprised that God thus heals a man, whose heart was not changed, v. 33. E.—But miracles do not always work a conversion. Pharaoh, Saul, and Achaz beheld the in vain: only one of the ten lepers returned to give thanks. Lu. 17:17. This miracle rendered Jeroboam still more inexcusable. C.

Ver. 8. With thee. He considers the king as one excommunicated, the he must thus be induced to repent. Salien.

Ver. 10. Bethel, which was defiled. 1 K. 21:5. God would thus caution us to keep at the greatest distance (T.) possible from evil company, (H.) and from whatever may lead to sin. M.—Besides the literal sense, Sanchez believes that the prophet was thus admonished to comply exactly with his injunctions, and to leave nothing unfinished; as God says, by the way that he came, he shall return, (Isai. 37:34) to denote that Sennacherib's attempts should be frustrated. C.

Ver. 11. Bethel, originally (H.) from Samaria. 4 K. 23:18. M.—Josias would have burnt his bones, like those of the false prophets, if they had not been blended with those of the man of God. C.

Ver. 18. An angel spoke to me, &c. This old man of Bethel was indeed a prophet, but he sinned in thus deceiving the man of God; the more, because he pretended a revelation for what he did; (Ch. W.) though he did it with a good intention, and supposed that the prophet had only been forbidden to eat with Jeroboam and his followers. Theod. q. 42.—This lie might cause him to be styled, “a false prophet,” by Josephus. Abulensis thinks he was a wicked man, like Balaam; and many suppose that he was the chief instrument in deluding the king. Josep. S. Greg. &c.—After the man of God had been torn to pieces, he might easily persuade the people that he was only an impostor, and that the pretended miracles were merely the effects of natural causes. It is not certain that this man was inspired by God, v. 20.—Deceived. Heb. “he lied unto him, (C.) and thus caused him to transgress. W.

Ver. 20. Table. After this the Masorets place a piska, or circle, to denote some omission, which the Syriac version alone supplies; “and did eat.” Kenn.—Back. Some translate, “whom he had brought back.” Junius, Syr. &c.—This would destroy the principal proof of those who esteem the man of Bethel to have been a true prophet. C.—Prot. agree with us; and the context seems to assert, that God addressed his servant by another's mouth. H.

Ver. 22. Fathers. This was a great punishment for the Hebrews. Gen. 49:29.

Ver. 23. For. Some Latin MSS. read propheta, as if the prophet saddled his own ass. But he probably came on foot, and the man of Bethel lent him one. C.

Ver. 24. Killed him. Thus the Lord often punishes his servants here, that he may spare them hereafter. For the generality of divines[theologians] are of opinion, that the sin of this prophet, considered with all its circumstances, was not mortal. Ch.—He had received a positive order, and ought to have tried spirits, whether they were from God. 1 Jo. 4:1. Gal. 6:18. Every prophecy which contradicts the word of God, comes from an evil principle. C.—The prophet might suppose, however, that some cause had intervened, which authorized him to eat with this his brother, (v. 30.) whom he probably revered as a true prophet. Many of God’s commands are conditional. H.—Serenus observes, that God often inflicts death for the smallest faults. Cassian vii. 26. S. Greg. Dial. iv. 24.—St. Augustine (cura, c. 7.) doubts not of the prophet’s salvation.—Body, without even hurting the ass, ver. 28. H.—God protected the relics of his servant, by stationing the lion for a guard. Procop. M.—How impenetrable are the counsels of God! He suffers Jeroboam, and the prophet who had seduced his servant, to live; while he punishes the latter for a fault which he had committed undesignedly. But he thus purified him from guilt, (C.) while he reserved Jeroboam for more lasting torments in another world. H.—Nothing could prove more forcibly the existence of future rewards and punishments. C.—Not only the deceiver, but he also who is deceived, so as to transgress God’s orders, must be punished. W.

Ver. 30. Brother. Such titles were customary. Jer. 22:18. M.

Ver. 31. Bones. Sept. add, “that my bones may be saved along with his.” The conduct and faith of this man would lead us to conclude that he had done wrong, without any malicious design, v. 18. H.

Ver. 32. Samaria. The city was built by Amri, fifty years after the death of Jeroboam. C. 16:24. But the sacred writer speaks of places by the names which they bore in his time. C.—If this man was a prophet, he might easily mention Samaria, which would give its name to the kingdom of Israel. There was also probably a village of this name long before, on the mountain Samir, where one of the judges was buried. Judg. 10:2. H.

Ver. 33. Way. Every thing promotes the salvation of the just, while the wicked pervert the most gracious designs of Providence to their own ruin. The king concluded that the prediction deserved no regard, v. 18. C.—Meanest. C. 12:31. Thus he wished to eradicate all sense of religion. H.—His, suam, “own.” Any person who brought the oil and the necessary victims, might assume the office of priest. See Ex. 28:41. H.

Ver. 34. Earth. Heb. “to destroy it from the face of the earth.” The Vulg. insinuates that it had taken place before the author wrote. In the third year of Asa, 22 years after this revolt, Bansa slew the whole family. C. 15:29.

Ver. 1. At. The Sept. omit the 20 verses following. But Grabe's edition has them marked with asterisks, (H.) as being supplied from Theodotion, &c. The Vat. copy gives a great part, with some circumstances which occur no where else. C. 12:24. C.—The wife of Jeroboam is there called Ano, (M.) the elder sister of the queen of Egypt, Thekemina. See C. 11:19; where Adad marries another sister. H.—Time. This expression does not determine the year. S. Chrys. &c.—The passage in the Vat. Sept. seems to place this death before Jeroboam ascended the throne: but it took place rather at the end of his reign, v. 14. Abia seems to have been his eldest son, and fit for command; so that the people mourn for him, which they would hardly have done for an infant. C.

Ver. 2. Dress. As if the prophet, who could dive into futurity, could be thus imposed upon. Jeroboam was aware that he would be full of indignation at the changes which had been introduced. He might also fear, lest his wife might be exposed to danger in (C.) or near (H.) the enemy's country, (C.) and the people would have been more convinced of the vanity of their idols, if they had seen that it was necessary to have recourse to a prophet of the true God. M.—The mother might ask without the least suspicion, "Will my son recover?"—Silo might still be attached to the service of God, in consequence of the ark residing there so long, and the presence of the revered Ahias; so that, if it formed a part of the dominions of Israel, (T.) as it was in the tribe of Ephraim, though nearer Jerusalem than Sichem, (C.) Jeroboam might reasonably fear lest his wife should be treated with indignity. T.

Ver. 3. Cracknels. Heb. nikkudim, "cakes full of holes," &c. Jos. 9:12. C.—Sept. give a double translation, "cakes and raisins." Arab. "fruits." Syr. adds "dried." It was customary to make presents to the prophets. 1 K. 9:7. C.—But these were mean, that the woman might not be known. D.—It is not said that Ahias deigned to receive them. S. Jer. in Mic. iii.

Ver. 4. Dim. Heb. "swelled," &c. C.—Sept. inform us that the prophet was 60 years old. H.

Ver. 6. Tidings. Heb. "I am a hard messenger to thee." C.

Ver. 9. Strange gods; that is, foreign gods: which expression destroys the opinion of those who imagine that Jeroboam designed by his calves to worship the Lord God of Israel. Ch.—Back. Lit. “body.”

Ver. 10. Wall. Every male child, or every dog. See 1 K. 25:22. H.—The Heb. word mashtin, in Spanish and French, signifies a “shepherd’s dog.”—Israel. This proverbial expression signifies, that even those who keep at home, and meddle not with the affairs of war, will not escape; (C.) nor shall those who have run away from the field of battle, (H.) nor the most precious or contemptible things be spared. Deut. 32:36. 4 K. 14:26. M.—Clean. This family is compared to something most disgusting, (H.) because it had introduced idolatry, and the prediction against it was literally fulfilled by Baasa, (C. 15:29. T.) “as the vintner seeks in the vineyard even for the last grape.” Syr. and Arab.

Ver. 11. Devour. They shall have the burial of asses. Jer. 22:19.

Ver. 13. Word from. Heb. or “thought towards.” Grot.—He has entertained sentiments of piety (C.) in the midst of a wicked court; therefore, God will hasten to draw him out of the midst of iniquity. H.—The Rabbins say that he had pulled down the walls, which his father had built, to prevent the people from going to Jerusalem. C.—God was please to shew mercy to him. M.

Ver. 14. Time. Prot. “But what? even now.” The young prince, (H.) who was the firmest support of the family, was presently hurried away. Abia, king of Juda, slew above 500,000 of Jeroboam’s subjects at once; and Baasa exterminated his family. C.—The latter had now begun his conspiracy. Abulensis, q. 26.

Ver. 15. Water. The kingdom of Israel was continually agitated with wars.—River Euphrates, by degrees. The kings of Assyria verified these predictions; and we know not what is become of these ten tribes. C.—To provoke. These people did not perhaps design (H.) to make God their enemy, no more than their king did, v. 9. But their actions had that effect. Such expressions denote not the final cause, but the sequel of other facts, without direct intention. W.—Yet these sins might probably be called sins of malice. H.—They were all involved in ruin, and because they had been accomplices in wickedness. M.

Ver. 16. Sin. This is the common effect of evil example in kings. Plus exemplo quam peccato nocent. Cicero, Leg. iii. “As it is esteemed a sort of service to imitate the customs and vices of the king; they laid aside all piety, lest they might seem to upbraid the king with his impiety, if they should live in a virtuous manner.” Lact. v. 6. The crimes of kings are seldom confined to their own persons. C.

Ver. 17. Thersa. Sept. inform us that Jeroboam had built this place, which the call Sarira, while he was employed by Solomon. No wonder, therefore, that it is not mentioned by Josue. Its exact situation is not known, though it must have been very delightful, since Solomon compares the spouse to it. C.—Where we read sweet, (Cant. 6:3.) Heb. has, “Thou art beautiful.... as Thersa, and comely as Jerusalem.” Hither Jeroboam had removed his court from Sichem. T.—Some place Thersa in the tribe of Manasses; (Adric.) others, in that of Ephraim. Bonfrere.—House. Heb. “door,” or gate of the city, when the prophet had denounced that the child should die, (v. 12.) unless the palace was contiguous to the walls. H.

Ver. 19. The book of the words of the days of the kings of Israel. This book, which is often mentioned in the Book of Kings, is long since lost. For as to the books of Paralipomenon, or Chronicles, (which the Hebrews call the words of the days) they were certainly written after the Book of Kings, since they frequently refer to them; (Ch.) and they also remit us to these journals for farther information. H.

Ver. 21. Forty. Some suspect there is a mistake, and that it should be twenty-one. See 1 Par. 22:5. Grotius D.—Hardouin dates from the æra of Solomon. Roboam was young, in the Scripture style. But he might be forty-one years old. C. 12:10. C.—Ammonitess. She probably perverted her son; (M.) so that he only continued three years faithful to the Lord; (2 Par. 11:17) when his people readily imitated the idolatry of Israel, as they had been already staggered in their faith by the conduct of Solomon. C.

Ver. 23. High hill. Such places of devotion had been tolerated, before the temple was built: but now they were deemed profane. C.

Ver. 24. The effeminate. Catamites, or men addicted to unnatural lust. Ch.—This crime had been punished in the Sodomites, and in the people of Chanaan, and of Benjamin. Yet they continued prevalent in the country. C. 15:12. and 4 K. 23:7 and Isai. 2:6 and 2 Mac. 4:12. C.—These were perpetrated in honour of Venus, Priapus, &c. M. See Deut. 23:17. H.

Ver. 25. Sesac. See C. 11:40. He was allied to Jeroboam, (C.) so that he might come to his assistance, (H.) being attracted by the ivory throne, (Rabbins) and immense riches of Jeroboam. C.—Roboam was informed by Semeias, that resistance would be fruitless; and being humbled, he repaired more frequently to the temple, v. 18. But his piety was of short duration, as it was influenced only by fear. 2 Par. 12:14.

Ver. 27. Hand. Sym. “the place where the courtiers” (guards) stood, (H.) in the hall; (C.) or he made the guards carry these shields before him, v. 28. H.

Ver. 30. Always. The two kingdoms were constantly divided, and did each other all the harm they could; though we know not that they ever came to a pitched battle. Roboam was too great a coward. 2 Par. 13:7.

Ver. 31. Roboam. He deserved some commendation for procuring provisions, and fortifying his dominion; (2 Par. 11:5, 12.) but was a prince devoid of wisdom and religion. He married 18 wives and 60 concubines. The son of Maacha, his most favourite queen, succeeded him, after he had reigned seventeen years, and lived fifty-eight. C.—Semeias and Addo wrote his history. 2 Par. 12:15.

Ver. 2. Years, wanting some months. Maacha. She is called elsewhere, Michaia, daughter of Uriel; but it was a common thing, in those days, for a person to have two names. Ch.—Abessalom and Absalom, the son of David are the same. 2 Par. 11:21. C.—S. Jerom (Trad.) is of a different opinion. M.—Josephus (viii. 10.) intimates that Maacha was the daughter of Thamar. The eldest daughter, in the kingdom of Gessur, seems to have been usually styled Maacha, v. 10. T.

Ver. 4. Lamp, son; (C. 11:36) though he deserved to have his family exterminated. C.—He is preserved for his father’s sake.

Ver. 5. Hethite. This could not be excused. But all his other imperfections might not appear criminal in the eyes of the world, as they had some pretext of virtue; so that God reserves the judgment of them to himself, and to David’s conscience, who confessed that he had sinned. 2 K. 24:10. T.—Except David, Ezechias, and Josias, all the kings of Juda committed sin; (Eccli. 49:5. C.) and not one of those who ruled over Israel, gave an example of virtue. H.—David soon entered into himself, with respect to his other failings. But he continued for a long time involved in the guilt of adultery and murder. Sanchez.

Ver. 6. Roboam. This had been remarked, C. 14:30. H.—There was a domestic quarrel between the two families. C.—Some suspect that Roboam is placed to designate his successors, or that we ought to read, Abia. Sanchez.—Castalion rashly ventures to alter the text. C.—

Abiam gained a decisive victory over Jeroboam, v. 7. 2 Par. 13:3.

Ver. 9. Year complete, when the 21st was running on. Usher.—Sept. “the 24th.” C.—But Grabe’s edition agrees with the Heb. H.

Ver. 10. His mother’s, &c. That is, his grandmother; unless we suppose, which is not improbable, that the Maacha here named is different from the Maacha mentioned v. 2. Ch.—She was probably another grand-daughter of David’s son, (C.) as such are frequently styled simply daughters. So David is called the father of Asa, (v. 11. H.) though he was really his great-grandfather. M.

Ver. 12. Effeminate. See C. 14:24. Yet his zeal could not entirely eradicate this evil. There was room for the exertions of his son Josaphat. C. 22:47. C.—The king punished with death such as he could discover. H.

Ver. 13. Priapus. He would not spare such abominations in his own family. M. He took from his mother the direction of the palace, (Vatab.) and her guards. Grot.—Heb. “even her he removed from being queen, because she had made a Miphlatstah.” H.—Sept. render this term a synod, “meeting,” or something shameful; also a cavern, or den; and in Par. the “idol” Astarte. S. Jerom also gives different meanings; so that the precise import is not well known. Most people translate, “a scarecrow;” (C.) terriculum. In the gardens of Greece and or Rome, the figure of Priapus was set up (D.) to frighten thieves and birds away.

Maxima formido.* Hor. Sat. l. 8.

Others understand that Pan, another frightening idol, is here meant; (Castalion) or the abominations of Phallus and Ithyphallus, derived from the same Heb. word. Seldon.—As the goddess Astarte, or Asera, “the grove,” here the object of adoration, was the wife of Adonis, it is probable, that the same obscenities were carried in triumph, as Herodotus (ii. 28. and 49.) specifies in the description of the festival of Bacchus, celebrated by the Egyptians.—To him. Prot. “She had made an idol in the grove.” Heb. also, “to Asera; and Asa destroyed her idol, (miphlatstah) and burnt it.” H.

Ver. 14. The high places. There were excelsa, or high places, of two different kinds. Some were set up and dedicated to the worship of idols, or strange gods: and these Asa removed. 2 Par. 14:2. Others were only altars of the true God, but were erected contrary to the law, which allowed of no sacrifices but in the temple; and these were not removed by Asa. Ch.—They had been built before the temple, and tolerated by the prophets; (C.) and, though they were now improper for sacrifices, (H.) Asa thought it would be imprudent to molest them, (C.) as perhaps he could not take them away. D.—He left also the ruins of (H.) the temples built by Solomon, (W.) on Mount Olivet, (4 K. 23. M.) as no longer dangerous. Salien.—Lord. Asa had his faults; but never forsook the worship of the Lord. Ch.—In the same sense, David is so often praised as a just prince. Asa threw a prophet into prison, and placed his trust as much in physicians, &c. 2 Par. 16:10, 12. But he did penance, and deserves to be ranked (C.) among the few just kings of Juda. H.

Ver. 15. Vowed. Heb. “which he himself had dedicated,” or vowed. 2 Par. 15:18. H.—Asa made liberal presents to the Lord, and gave what his father had promised, (M.) probably during the famous battle against Jeroboam. 2 Par. 13:5. Abulens. q. 17.—Abiam was a wicked prince, and had neglected this duty, though he reigned three years. Hence he was slain by God, ib. v. 20. It seems that heirs were bound to execute the vows of their parents, though Moses does not express it. C.

Ver. 16. Their days: not that they were always fighting. H.—Open war was declared only in the 35th year of Asa, (2 Par. 15:19) which must be dated from the schism, and not from the commencement of his reign; since his rival, Baasa, enjoyed the sovereignty only 24 years, and died in the 26th of Asa, which was the 36th from the division of the two kingdoms. Thus Hardouin observes that the years of Commodus, in some ancient Egyptians medals, are dated from the reign of M. Aurelius, chief of that family; so that the first of Commodus is inscribed the twenty-first of Aurelius. Asa defeated Zara in the fifteenth, and attacked Israel in the sixteen year of his reign. Usher. T. C.—Others would substitute 25 for 35, (Grot. Capel.) though contrary to the text, and to all the versions. C.

Ver. 17. Rama, fortifying it with a wall all round. 2 Paral. 16. H.—Rama signifies, “a height.” This fort commanded a narrow pass, between the two kingdoms, (C.) and cut off all communication; which Baasa dreaded, lest his subjects should return to the service of the true God, and of Juda. H.—Josue (18:25) mentions Rama, near Gaboon, (C.) about five miles north of Jerusalem. S. Jerom.—There was another towards the south. M.—But there the king of Israel would have no power. H.

Ver. 18. House. Sesac had not carried off all the treasures, (C.) and the losses had been since in a great measure repaired, v. 15. H.—Asa thought himself justified in employing these treasures in such a pressing necessity, (C.) perhaps (H.) without reason, as the danger was not so great; and he might have gained the victory without having recourse to an infidel, if he had placed more confidence in God. 2 Par. 16:7, 9. M.—He had already discomfited Zara, king of Ethiopia, and had an army of 580,000 men. C. 2 Par. 14:8.—Tabremon, “Good Remmon,” idol of Damascus. H.—Hezion, the same with Razon. C. 11:23. M.

Ver. 19. League. The infidel is ready to take part with the best bidder. H.—Benadad gains a double reward, as he plunders the conquered. M.

Ver. 20. Ahion, or Ain, remote in the north, whence Theglathphalasar took away captives, (4 K. 15:29) is perhaps the Enan of Ezec. 48:1. Num. 34:9.—Maacha. In Paral. Abel-maim, “Abela of the waters.” 2 K. 20:14.—Ceneroth, near the sea of Tiberias. Jos. 11:2. Benadad kept possession of some of these places, and even built streets in Samaria. C. 20:34.

Ver. 21. Returned. So the Sept. Heb. “dwelt.” C.—He returned to protect his own dominions, (M.) and shut himself up in his capital. C.

Ver. 22. Excused. “When the country is to be defended, all exemptions cease.” Leg. ult. C.—Sept. seem to preserve the terms of the original untranslated, “Asa called all.... to Annacim.” Heb. en naki, (H.) means, “no one exempt.” C.—Rama belonged to the enemy; and, as it appears from this passage, was in the vicinity of Maspha. H.—Gabaa, the city of Saul, (M.) adding fresh fortifications, as this and Maspha were frontier towns, against the inroads of Israel. H.

Ver. 23. Strength. Sept. “dynasty,” or power, whether of his dominions or of his person. C.—Feet, with the gout, (M.) three years before his death. He did not confide in the Lord sufficiently. 2 Par. 16:12. His body was embalmed or burnt, unless aromatic spices evaporated with it was laid on a bed of state, before it was consigned to the tomb, which Asa had prepared for himself in the city of David. Ibid.

Ver. 25. Two years, incomplete; since he commenced his reign in the second, and died in the third year of Asa, v. 28. C.—Petau only allows him, “a few months;” and supposes, that he had been associated on the throne with Jeroboam. But this is unnecessary. Houbigant—Nadab was the first king of Israel, who fell a pray to the fury of his subjects. Salien, A.C. 971.

Ver. 27. Gebbethon, of the tribe of Dan, occupied by the Philistines. It was often attacked. C. 16:15. C.—The occasion of this war is not known. M.

Ver. 29. Jeroboam. The author of schism is punished in his posterity. W.—The body of Nadab was left unburied. C. 14:11. M.

Ver. 1. Jehu was different from one of the same name and parentage, who came to Josaphat; (2 Par. 19:2. D. T.) though, if Baasa did not put him to death, as there is some reason to doubt, he might be the same, v. 7. C.—Hanani had been sent to Asa, 2 Par. 16:7. Abulens. q. 3.

Ver. 2. I have. All power comes from God, though he frequently disapproves of the means by which people obtain it. H.—Baasa was a traitorous usurper.—My people. Many had abandoned the Lord: (H.) yet he still regards Israel as his people, sending prophets to reclaim them, and preserving many from bending the knee before Baal.

Ver. 3. Posterity, (posteriora. H.) children, and all that he shall leave behind. C.—Baasa himself died a natural death, v. 6. Salien.

Ver. 7. The evil, to punish it. M.—He, God, slew him, Baasa, (C.) or “because the latter slew” Nadab, &c. Grotius—God punished his usurpation and murders. C.—That is, &c. is not found in Heb. Chal. Sept. nor in some Latin copies. E.—Hence Jehu might survive to admonish Josaphat, v. 1. C.

Ver. 8. Years, in part, as he was slain in the 27th year of Asa, v. 10.

Ver. 9. Horsemen. Heb. “chariots.” Sept. C.—But Josephus styles him, Hipparchon, “general of the horse.” M.—Rebelled. Heb. “conspired.” H.—He acted privately at first. M.—Governor. Heb. “steward of his house.” Chal. and Arab. “in the temple of the idol Arsa,” the earth, whom the pagans worshipped as the mother of gods and men; unless Arsa be put for Asera, or Astarte. C.

Ver. 11. Wall. See 1 K. 25:22.—Friends, from whom he had any thing to fear. M.

Ver. 13. Vanities; idols. H.—They raised fresh altars; or, by their example, encouraged the people to persevere in their impiety. M.

Ver. 16. All Israel, that was in the army, while others took part with Zambri. W.

Ver. 18. Himself. Heb. may also signify, “he (Amri) burnt him.”—

Zambri, his rival. But the other sense is more natural. C.—Thus Sardanapalus chose to destroy himself, with all his riches, (Justin i. Athen. xii. 7.) to prevent the dead body from being insulted. It was for this reason the Sylla, the first of the Cornelian family, ordered his remains to be burnt. Cic. Leg. i. T.

Ver. 19. To sin. Zambri had sufficient time, in seven days, (H.) to manifest his evil dispositions, of which he had perhaps given proof before. C.

Ver. 21. Parts. Those who had chosen Amri, were mortified at the election made by the army, and therefore set up another king. C.—The contest seems to have lasted four years. Houbigant.

Ver. 22. Died in the battle, wherein Amri prevailed. M.

Ver. 23. In the one and thirtieth year, &c. Amri began to reign in the seven and twentieth year of Asa; but had not the quiet possession of the kingdom, till the death of his competitor Thebni, which was in the one and thirtieth year of Asa's reign. Ch.—Twelve years in all, (W.) comprehending the four of civil war; six at Thersa, and two in Samaria. Houbigant.

Ver. 24. Silver: 684*l.* 7*s.* 6*d.* sterling. Arbuthnot.—The place was sold so cheap, on condition that it should be called after the original owner. Salien.—Somer dwelt there; and several houses had been already erected, (C. 13:32) and even streets, by the king of Syria, for the convenience of his merchants, C. 20:34. H.—Thersa had lately been so much ruined by civil wars, that Amri thought proper to choose a new seat of government. Samaria was greatly adorned by succeeding kings. C. 22:39. It stood in a delightful and commanding situation, and gave its name to the adjacent territory, and to the whole kingdom of Israel. Benadad besieged it twice; and Salmanasar took it. The kings of Egypt laid claim to it, after the death of Alexander: but Antiochus, of Syria, took it from them. Hyrcanus levelled it with the ground. Herod the Great rebuilt the city, and called it Sebaste, in honour of Augustus.

Ver. 25. Above. He made a law, (C.) to force all to conform to the established irreligion. Mic. 6:16. H.

Ver. 26. With their vanities. That is, their idols, their golden calves, vain, false, deceitful things.

Ver. 31. Jezabel, whose name is become proverbial, to designate a proud, lewd, cruel, and impious woman. Apoc. 2:20. Grotius compares her with Tullia, Fulvia, and Eudoxia, the respective wives of Tarquin, Anthony, and Arcadius. She was the chief promoter of all the evils of Achab's reign. He did not insist that she should embrace the true religion, when he married her; as it is supposed former kings had done, when they espoused women who had been brought up in idolatry. C.—He even introduced her country's idols, and thus enhanced upon the wickedness of his predecessors. H.—Ethbaal. Menander (ap. Jos. c. Ap. i.) calls him Ithobaal, and remarks that his reign was memorable for a year's drought; probably that of three years, under Achaz. C. 17:1. Ethbaal was king of Tyre, and ruled over the Sidonians likewise. C. 5:6.

Ver. 34. Hand. Josue had committed this curse to writing. H.—Hiel, an idolater, did not regard it, and Achab had not zeal to attempt to hinder him. But divine Providence punished his audacity. C.—All his sons perished, while the city was rebuilding. W.—See Jos. 6:26. C.

Ver. 1. Elias means, “the strong God.” Some Greeks derive the name of the prophet from ἡλιος, “the sun,” improperly. His parentage is not known, nor even his tribe. Thesbe was situated in the tribe of Gad. The Fathers agree that Elias never was married. He seems to have had no fixed abode; but was sent to the house of Israel, to maintain the cause of the true God, with the most active and generous zeal. He may have presided over the colleges of the prophets, (C.) which were then numerous in Israel, particularly at Mount Carmel, (T.) notwithstanding the general corruption. C. 18:13. and 19:10. H.—I stand, to serve (Num. 3:6) and pray. Jam. 5:17. Luke 4:25. He calls God to witness, like S. Paul. Gal. 1:20.—Mouth. Stupendous power and assurance of the prophet, with which the pagans have nothing to compare. C.—God had threatened his people with drought, if they proved faithless. Deut. 28:24. Elias begs that this punishment may now serve to open their eyes. T.

Ver. 3. Carith, between Samaria and the Jordan. It was a torrent or valley. C.

Ver. 4. Ravens. Heb. horebim, (H.) is sometimes rendered “Arabs,” by the Vulg. 2 Par. 21:16. Others would translate, “merchants,” or the inhabitants of Arabo, which was near Carith. They suppose that the ravens, being unclean birds, would never have been employed. But they were only forbidden to be eaten or touched, when dead; and God is not restricted by his own laws. He might thus chose to display his wonderful providence. S. Jerom relates how S. Paul, the first hermit, was fed thus by a raven, with half a loaf a day; and a whole one was sent, when S. Anthony went to see him. C.—Yet Kennicott mentions this as one of the improvements which might be now made in the Protestant version, “the Orbim,” or inhabitants of Oreb, or Orbo. Orbim, accolæ villæ in finibus Arabum Eliæ dederunt alimenta. Jerom iii. 119.—It is not clear to what passage he refers. Diss. ii. p. 581. Another instance occurs, Judg. 15:4, where instead of foxes, he would substitute “300 sheaves of corn, placed end to end.” But if there were no mistranslations of great importance, the version might subsist. H.

Ver. 6. And flesh. So the Heb. &c. But some copies of the Sept. have, “bread in the morning, and flesh in the evening.” Theod. q. 52.—It is idle to inquire whence the ravens took this food. C.—Some say from the kitchen of Achab. Abulensis—The minister of angels undoubtedly intervened. T.—God provides his servant with what may support nature, without any wine or delicacies. H.

Ver. 7. Some time. Lit. “after days,” (H.) which some explain of a year; others, of half that time, or less, as the torrent would not be long supplied with water.

Ver. 9. Sidonians, and nearer their city than it was to Tyre. C.—Commanded, or provided that she shall feed thee. So he commanded the ravens, v. 4. M.—It appears that the widow had received no precise intimation, v. 12. She was not an Israelite, (Luke 4:25) but probably a pagan. S. Chrys. &c.—Many suppose that Elias did not know, at first, that she was to entertain him. C.—But both the one and the other might be divinely instructed how to act. In due time the widow and the prophet became acquainted with the will of God, and complied with it. H.

Ver. 13. First. He puts the faith of the widow to a severe trial; and the gospel requires nothing more perfect than what she practised. The true faith, which she then received, was her first and most precious recompense; and we shall soon see, that her guest drew down blessings upon her. C.

Ver. 14. Until, nor for some time afterwards; otherwise they would still have been in danger of perishing, as the corn could not grow immediately. Salien, A.C. 929.

Ver. 17. In him. He died. H.—The Jews, followed by some Christians, assert that this boy was the prophet Jonas. But Jonas was a Hebrew, from Geth-opher. 4 K. 14:25. Jon. 1:9. C.

Ver. 18. Remembered. Have I not waited upon thee with sufficient attention? or have not thine eyes been able to bear with my imperfections? H.—Before thy arrival, God seemed not to notice my transgressions. She is convinced that “all just punishment presupposes an offence.” S. Aug. Retract. i. 9. This child died like Lazarus for the greater glory of God. Id. ad Simp. ii. 5. John 11:4. W.

Ver. 20. Her son. He speaks in the most earnest and familiar manner, shewing his confidence in God. Salien.

Ver. 21. Times, in honour of the blessed Trinity. M.—He puts himself in this posture, as if the co-operate with God in warming the child; as Eliseus did, (4 K. 4:34,) as well as S. Paul, (Acts 20:10,) and S. Benedict. S. Greg. Dial. ii. 32. This posture represented the condescension of Jesus Christ in assuming our nature, to give us life; and the Old Testament affords few more striking figures of this union. C. S. Aug. ser. 201. de Temp. S. Bern. xvi. in Cant. T.

Ver. 24. True. She saw the force of miracles; (H.) and now was, at least, thoroughly converted. Salien.

Ver. 1. Year of his sojourning at Sarephta. As other six months elapsed before the drought was removed, it is probable that Elias had spent them at Carith. S. Jam. 5:17. C.—Earth. God is pleased to withdraw his chastisement, though the guilty were not yet reclaimed. Salien.

Ver. 2. Samaria, and the vicinity. The people could procure corn from a distance. But Achab is solicitous to find grass, v. 5.

Ver. 3. Abdias. Some suppose that he was the fourth of the minor prophets, or the husband of the Sunamitess, (4 K. 4) or the third of the captains, who were ordered by Ochozias to seize Elias, 4 K. 1:13. T.—But this is uncertain. He took care of the persecuted prophets, (ver. 4. 13,) judging it better to obey God than man. C.

Ver. 6. Himself. So Providence ordered it, that the prophet might declare his sentiments to him freely. H.—Achab would go in person, another way, that he might not be imposed upon. He was more solicitous for his cattle than for his subjects. M.

Ver. 7. Face, to shew him a religious veneration, due to the servant of God. W.

Ver. 9. Kill me, as an impostor, or an accomplice of thy escape, if afterwards thou shouldst disappear, v. 12. C.

Ver. 10. An oath of every kingdom, adjuring all his neighbours to tell if they knew any thing about Elias. H.—Achab wished to make him restore rain, or to punish him for the refusal. C.—How stupid he must have been, not to perceive that God was punishing him! H.—Elias must have kept himself very retired, not to be discovered at Sarephta, which was so near, (C.) and where Jezabel's father reigned. But God could render him invisible, even upon the high road, when he went thither. H.

Ver. 12. Spirit. Abdias supposed that the prophet had been transported to some unknown country, (C.) as he was afterwards to paradise. His disciples imagined, by a violent wind. 4 K. 2:16. H.—Thus the spirit of the Lord took away Philip, (Acts 8:39,) and conducted Jesus into the desert. Mat. 4:1. Mar. 1:12. C.—Infancy. This he mentions, that the prophet might take pity on him. M.

Ver. 13. A hundred. Hence we may judge how numerous they were. These prophets were not perhaps all inspired: but they had such at their head; and spent their time in working and in the divine praises. They were the salt and light of the earth, the pillars of the true religion, against whom Jezabel bent all her fury, during the first years of the drought. C.

Ver. 14. Kill me. He had expressed this fear twice before. Elias perceiving how much he was agitated, confirmed him with an oath. H.

Ver. 16. Meet Elias, out of respect, (Abulensis) or rather to upbraid him.

Ver. 17. Troublest Israel? Thus the wicked esteem those disturbers of the public repose, who will not suffer them to go on in their wickedness unmolested. Thus the Jews complain of Jesus Christ. Luke 23:5. Such a war is better than a false peace: and Achab, in fact, proclaims the praise of Elias, who strove by easy means to make the people open their eyes and return to their God. C.

Ver. 18. House. Your impiety has brought on this scourge. I only denounced it. Salien.

Ver. 19. Fifty, attached to Baal, and fed by the king; while the prophets of the groves, or of Astarte, lived at the queen's expense. They imitated the lives of the true prophets, to delude the people.—Carmel was long after famous for the worship of Apollo, who was the same with Baal, or the sun. Jos. 19:26. C.—No mention is made of rain: but it was understood that it would be given, when the people should assemble to hear God's determination. M.—Achab durst not therefore refuse to convoke them. H.

Ver. 21. Sides: sometimes adoring God; at other times the devil. C.—Such an expostulation ought to be made to those who are indifferent about religion. W.—You cannot serve two masters. C.—They wished to unite the service of both, foolishly supposing that there might be many gods; as some, at present assert that many religions may be pleasing to heaven. H.—A word, not knowing the drift of his proposal. But, as they might perhaps rely that they considered Baal also as a god, Elias puts this to the test of a miracle; being convinced that God would never suffer the devils to prevail on this occasion. Salien.—They might otherwise have brought down fire, as they will do in the days of Antichrist. Apoc. 13:13. M.

Ver. 22. I. Heb. repeats “I,” to make the contrast more striking. Elias alone was present, in this assembly, as the prophet of the Lord. H.—He knew that Abdias had preserved 100: but they were concealed.—Men. The other 400 of Jezabel did not appear.

Ver. 24. Call ye. He does not order them to invoke idols; but challenges them to prove their divinity, if they can.—By fire. On such trying occasions, it is not tempting God to ask for a miracle. God had given this proof of fire repeatedly. Gen. 15:17. Lev. 9:24. 2 Par. 7:1. He will restrain the devil's power, to confirm the truth. Mark ult. W.

Ver. 26. That they. Heb. “which he (Achaz) had made;” (C.) or, “which was made.” H.—The altar of Elias was erected afterwards, v. 30. The prophets of Baal acted in a foolish manner, (C.) as if in jest, but really despairing of success. H.—The pagans were accustomed to dance around their altars:—Pingues spatiantur ad aras. Æneid iv.—and some would translate, “near the altar.” We might apply to these prophets, the verses of Horace:—

*Dedit risusque jocosque,
Dum, flamma sine, thura liquescere limine sacro
Persuadere cupit: credat Judæus Apella
Non ego.* Sat. 1:5.

Ver. 27. Talking to some of his prophets, (C.) or in deep contemplation. Mon.—An inn. Sept. “giving oracles;” or, “he is pursuing.” Pagnin.

Ver. 28. Blood. Strange infatuation! which has nevertheless prevailed in many pagan mysteries and countries. Thus were Bellona, Cybele, the Syrian goddess, &c. honoured and appeased. C.—God prohibits this fury. Deut. 14:1. The devil always endeavours to destroy or to injure man. M.

“Ipsa bipenne suos cædit violenta lacertos, Sanguineque effuso spargit inepta deam.” Tibullus.

Ver. 29. Prophesying, “acting like fools;” (Chal.) performing their superstitious rites, and singing the praises of their god, &c. C.—Sacrifice, by Elias, who had assigned all the morning to Baal’s prophets. Perhaps he waited till the time of the evening sacrifice. Ex. 29:38. M.

Ver. 30. Down, by the false prophets, whose fury the people now repressed. T.—The altar might have been erected, under the judges, lawfully. C.

Ver. 31. Twelve stones, (as Ex. 24. &c.) intimating that he acted in the name of all; (M.) and in order that all Israel might return with one heart to the service of God. H.—The prophet did not follow his own spirit in erecting this altar. C.

Ver. 32. Furrows. Heb. “of two (sathayim) measures of seed.” These furrows Elias filled with water, to impede the natural activity of fire, and to shew the miracle in a more striking light; (H.) as also to convince all that there was no deceit. An author quoted, under the name of S. Chrysostom, says that the pagans had sometimes subterraneous passages, by which they kindled the wood on the altar, as if by miracle, ita ut multi decepti ignem illum cœlestem esse existiment. ap. Surium iv.

Ver. 34. Time. So that the wood was less disposed to catch fire. M.

Ver. 37. Again. This effect he hoped for from the miracle.

Ver. 38. Trench, as if it had been of an inflammable nature. Julian himself was forced to acknowledge this miracle. “This, says he, once happened under Moses, and, a long while after, again under Elias, the Thesbite.”

Ver. 40. Cison, at the foot of Carmel. Adrichomius.—Ahab durst not protect his prophets, being confounded by the evidence of the miracle, (M.) and the unanimity of the people’s cry. H.—Killed them, by God’s inspiration, (C.) as impostors, who had deluded the people, and were worthy of death.

Ver. 41. Sound. It will as surely come, as if you heard it falling. H.

Ver. 42. Knees, in fervent and humble prayer. God made his servant wait some time before he granted his request, that he might not give way to vanity. The people were not present, so that there was no danger of their being scandalized. M.

Ver. 44. Sea, the Mediterranean, which could be seen from Carmel. H.—Hence the rain commonly came in that country. Luke 12:54.

Ver. 45. Jezrahel, where Achab had a palace. C. 21:1. C.—He stopped for shelter, as he had not time to reach Samaria. M.

Ver. 46. Before Achab, notwithstanding the king was drawn by horses, (C.) and Elias was advanced in years. C. 19:4. M.—The invigorating spirit gave him such strength and agility, (H.) as Jezrahel was 12 or 15 leagues, (C.) or about 36 miles, from Carmel. In the Levant, impostors still run very swiftly before the chariots of princes, to imitate Elias. C.

Ver. 3. Afraid. Heb. “he saw, arose, and went for his life.” H.—He was aware of a woman’s anger. Ecclei. 25:23. Though he goes intrepidly to meet Achab, he flees before a woman, God being desirous that he should exercise humility, (Theod. q. 57, &c.) though some think that he had given way to a secret fault; (C.) which is a groundless assertion. H.—He must confess that all his strength is from above. T.—Mind, to escape notice. M.—Bersabee, at the southern extremity of the kingdom of Juda, perhaps fifty leagues from Samaria, and five more from Jezrahel. C.—Servant, the boy whom he had raised to life. Abulensis.

Ver. 4. Desert. It seems, towards Horeb. C.—Tree. Heb. Rothem, which term the Sept. retain, “Rathmen.” Sym. has, “a shade.” H.—Die. Elias requested to die, not out of impatience or pusillanimity, but out of zeal against sin; and that he might no longer be witness of the miseries of his people, and the war they were waging against God and his servants. See v. 10. Ch.—He does not wish to fall into the hands of Jezabel, lest the idolaters should triumph: but he is willing to die, if God so order it. C.—Mathathias entertained the like sentiments. 1 Mac. 2:7.—Fathers: that I should live longer than they did. M. Eccli. 30:17.—If he had been weary of life, why did he flee? His answer to Achab shews that he was by no means timid. C.

Ver. 6. Cake, baked in a hollow stone, covered with fire. The Arabs call such cakes, Ridpha. An angel brought this nourishment. C.

Ver. 7. Go. Heb. “the journey is too great for thee,” without this support. H.—He spent forty days in this journey, as he did not follow the straitest road. Horeb is only about fifty leagues from Bersabee. C.—He might have travelled thither in four or five days. M.

Ver. 8. In the strength of that food, &c. This bread with which Elias was fed in the wilderness, was a figure of the bread of life, which we receive in the blessed sacrament: by the strength of which we are to be supported in our journey through the wilderness of this world, till we come to the true mountain of God, and his vision in a happy eternity. Ch.—Horeb signifies “a rock, or dry wilderness.” C.

Ver. 9. Here. Thy presence is necessary in Israel. T.—Elias had been guided by a natural fear. M.—“With how great familiarity is he received by God!” Tert. c. Psychic. vi.

Ver. 10. Zeal; ordering the idolatrous prophets to be destroyed, (M.) which has enkindled the rage of Jezabel against me. I cannot bear to see the general corruption. C.—Covenant; neglecting circumcision, (Rabbins) and almost the whole law. H.—Altars. Some had been erected by the prophets, (E.) as the king would suffer none to go to Jerusalem. H.—The idolaters there them down. C. 18:30. Such altars would have been unlawful in Juda. C.—I alone am left; viz. of the prophets in the kingdom of Israel, or of the ten tribes; for in the kingdom of Juda, religion was at that time in a very flourishing condition, under the kings Asa and Josaphat. And even in Israel there remained several prophets, though not then known to Elias. See C. 20:13, 28, 35. Ch. W.—Heb. repeats I, as v. 14, and C. 18:22. He might justly fear that those had been destroyed at last, whom Abdias had protected. At any rate, none durst appear in public to assist Elias. H.—God informs him (v. 18.) that all is not yet lost.

Ver. 11. Lord; the angel, his representative. M.—God had formerly granted the like favour to Moses, in the same place. Ex. 33:21.

Ver. 12. Air. Something similar happened at the giving of the law, and at the propagation of the gospel. Ex. 19:9, 16. Acts 2:2. The Lord was pleased to shew his prophet the difference between the two laws: the own was full of terror, the other of mildness. Grotius—He insinuated likewise, that he could easily exterminate the offenders, but he chose to bear patiently with them; (T.) and taught his prophet to moderate his zeal, and, after terrifying sinners, to bring them to a sense of their duty by gentle means. Sanctius. C.—“His spirit is most indulgent and mild." ... est teneræ serenitatis, apertus et simplex. Tert. c. Marcion xxiii.

Ver. 13. Mantle, out of respect, like Moses. Ex. 3:6. So the cherubim veil their faces with their wings. Isai. 6:2. M.—Among the Orientals, to cover the face has the same import as when we pull off our hats. C.

Ver. 15. Desert, avoiding the towns as much as possible, (C.) and travelling through the country of Ammon to Damascus. M.—God does not send Elias again into the midst of danger, at Achab's court. H.—Hazael. God exercises his authority over all nations, and disposes of crowns. He appoints Hazael to punish his people. It does not appear that Elias performed this commission in person, but by the hand of Eliseus. 4 K. 8:12. Neither do we find that Hazael was anointed, but he was "declared king;" in which sense the term is used. Judg. 9:8. Salien. C.—Yet Torniel believes, that Elias really anointed both Hazael and Jehu. He foretold, at least, (H.) that they should reign. W.

Ver. 16. Jehu, the son of Jospahat, (4 K. 9:2) and grandson of Namsi. M.—Eliseus sent one of his disciples to anoint him, (4 K. 9:1. C.) with common oil; the sacred was reserved for priests and the kings of Juda, according to the Rabbins.—Anoint, or call to the ministry, perhaps by placing a mantle on his head, v. 19. No mention is made of unction. C.—Yet the Fathers have hence inferred that prophets received it, as well as priests and kings. Sanctius—Elias had complained that he was left alone. God appoints him a coadjutor, and successor; a person who seemed to have yet made no immediate preparation for the office. His parents were probably known for their probity, and had taken no part in the worship of idols. C.—Abelmeula was in the great plain, ten miles south of Scythopolis. Eus.

Ver. 17. Shall be slain by Eliseus. Eliseus did not kill any of the idolaters with the material sword; but he is here joined with Hazael and Jehu, the great instruments of God in punishing the idolatry of Israel, because he foretold to the former his exaltation to the kingdom of Syria, and the vengeance he would execute against Israel, and anointed the latter by one of his disciples to be king of Israel, with commission to extirpate the house of Achab. Ch.—They left nothing imperfect in the vengeance. 4 K. 8 and 9. Eliseus sent bears to destroy forty-two children of Bethel; (4 K. 2:23. C.) and Abulensis (q. 23.) thinks that he might put many false prophets to death, as the Scripture does not mention every thing, (M.) and as Elias had done himself. H.—Eliseus may also be the name of some general. D.

Ver. 18. Will leave. Heb. also, "I have left," as Rom. 11:4. Sept. "thou shalt leave." H.—After answering the first part of the prophet's complaint, and informing him that the guilty should not pass unpunished, God lets him know that he is not left alone, but that many thousands (C.) even in Israel still continue faithful; so far was the true Church from being in danger of perishing entirely. H.—Seven is often put for a great number. Prov. 24:16. Yet some suppose, (C.) that only this number served God out of 1,110,000 men in Israel. 1 Par. 21:5. Grotius, &c.—Hands. To this custom the word adore owes its rise. H.—The pagans kissed their right-hand, or the statue itself, when they could reach it, to testify their veneration. Inter adorandum, dexteram ad osculum referimus. Pliny xxviii. 2. Cicero (in Ver. 4.) mentions a beautiful statue of Hercules, the cheeks and beard of which had been rather worn with kissing; non solum id venerari, sed etiam osculari solent. See Gen. 18:2. C.—Job 31:27. M.

Ver. 19. Mantle, perhaps to signify that he must change his manner of living. M.

Ver. 20. Kiss, and bid them adieu. M.—To thee. I have no farther orders. Obey the Spirit of God. Hoc age. Heb. “for what have I done to thee?” Did I require thee to follow me? Act as God may direct thee. Yet remember the ceremony which thou hast seen, and do not turn back (C.) to neglect thy office. H. Matt. 8:22. Luke 9:62.

Ver. 21. Oxen, to shew that he had relinquished his profession. M.—“He makes a vow of them.” S. Jerom, ep. xxviii.—Elias waited for him in the field, while he made a feast for his fellow-citizens, at parting. C.—Then both probably retreated to Carmel, (Salien) to watch over the instruction of the college of prophets. H.

Ver. 1. And. The Rom. Sept. and Josephus place this war after the account of Naboth. C. 21. But the Alex. copy follows the order of the Hebrew. H.—The style Benadad, “the son of Ader.” He succeeded (ver. 34.) the king who attacked Baasa. C. 15:18. We know not the time nor the occasion of this war. C.—Probably Achab had refused to pay tribute, and God had a mind to try if his obstinacy would yield to kindness, v. 13 and 28. Salien, A.C. 919.—Kings. Almost every city had one.

Ver. 3. Mine. He had a desire to dispose of them, as he thought proper. Achab was willing to pay tribute, to remove the impending danger. C.

Ver. 4. Have. Achab is not in earnest, but strives to pacify the barbarian. M.

Ver. 6. Servants, or subjects. The king of Israel has thus a plea to interest all his people, as the danger was common. Salien.—He assumes the character of disinterestedness, as if he had been willing to abandon all his private property; knowing that Banadad would not accede even to that hard proposal. H.—Thus “Nero consulted the first men of the city, whether they would prefer a doubtful war or a disgraceful peace.” Tacit. An. xv.

Ver. 10. Handfuls. Heb. shohal. The Sept. read “shuhal” and render it, “suffice for the foxes, for all the people, (even for) my infantry;” (H.) as if his forces were so numerous as to cover the whole land, and leave no room for even foxes to occupy. The hyperbole is equally great, supposing that his soldiers could by each taking a handful, or what might stick to his feet, (Chal.) carry off all Samaria. Josephus intimates, that Benadad speaks of erecting terraces of equal height with the walls; others, that he would level the city with the ground. Ezec. 26:4. Sanctius.

Ver. 11. Let not the girded, &c. Let him not boast before the victory: it will then be time to glory when he putteth off his armour, having overcome his adversary. Ch.—“Let not him who goes to battle, though well armed, boast; but the man who returns victorious.” Chal. “Enough: let not the man with a crooked back boast, as one that is upright.” Sept. “Let not him that girdeth, (H.) or is bound,” (Heb.) or rather “shutteth up, boast, as he that openeth.” Syriac. It is easy to besiege: but the city does not always fall. Neither people in arms, nor the unarmed, have reason to boast; as the former are often made prisoners, as soon as the latter. C.—A despised enemy sometimes proves most dangerous. H.—Those who distrust in themselves, and place their confidence in God, prevail: a necessary lesson both in temporal and spiritual warfare. W.—The fortune of war is very doubtful. T.

Ver. 12. Pavilion, (umbraculis) or even under “the shade” of the trees, in full security. M.—Beset. Heb. “set, and they set against the city.” Chal. “hold yourselves in readiness, and they laid ambushes round the city.” The siege had not been yet commenced in form, as it was never expected that Achab would dare to make any resistance.

Ver. 13. Prophet. It does not appear who this and the other prophets were who address Achab so boldly during these wars; if indeed they were different persons: Elias is never mentioned. Did Jezabel leave the rest alone? or did these wars break out before she began to persecute them? C.—Many suppose that the prophet, who spoke on this occasion, was Micheas. M.—But Achab complains that he always brought him evil tidings. C. 22:8. Salien.

Ver. 14. Servants. Lit. “footmen.” H.—Heb. means either “sons or servants.” The pages of honour, or the menial servants of the lords, were not likely to gain the victory. C.—There were 232 in number, v. 15. Achab followed them, (v. 19.) with 7000; and this army defeated the Syrians.—Thou, not in person; but thy men must begin the attack.

Ver. 18. Alive. This he said out of contempt, and too great confidence; (M.) and this gave occasion to his defeat. For, while his men were endeavouring to execute his orders punctually, the Israelites cut many in pieces, and routed the rest. Salien.

Ver. 23. Hills. All the high places of Israel were covered with idols. Samaria, Bethel, Dan, &c. were built on eminences. M.—Altars had also been erected to the true God on the most famous mountains. The law had been given at Sinai, and promulgated at Garizim. The late miracle at Carmel was known to all. Hence the pagans, (C.) conformably to their notions of assigning different parts of the creation to different gods, suspected that the god of Israel might preside only over the mountains. H.—People are always ready to blame any but themselves. C.—They lay the fault on fortune, &c. T.—The pride of Benadad could not bear to be told that his own temerity had brought on the defeat. H.

Ver. 24. Stead, who may obey thy orders more implicitly. Rex unius esto. C.—Captains, who have been inured to warfare, would not so easily run away. M.—Thus, in the late French republic, commanders were chosen from the common ranks, while the nobles were neglected. H.

Ver. 26. Aphec, belonging to the tribe of Aser, though it does not appear that they ever obtained possession of it. Jos. 19:30. A subterranean fire and earthquake have caused the city to sink; and a lake, nine miles in circumference, now occupies its place. The ruins may still be discerned in its waters. It is about two hours walk from the plains of Balbec, (Paul Lucas. Levant i. 20.) at the foot of Libanus. The waters must be very thick and bituminous, if what is related by the ancients be true; namely, that the presents, offered to the Aphacite goddess, were tried by them, and deemed agreeable to her, if they sunk; as wool would do, while tiles, and often metals, would swim. C. Adrichomius places this Aphec on the great plain of Esdrelon, not far from Jezrahel. M.

Ver. 27. Victuals. Heb. also, “they were all present.” Chal. “ready.”

Syr. "in battle array."—Goats. They were comparatively so contemptible, v. 15. H.—At the same time, Josaphat could muster above a million warriors; for piety makes kingdoms prosper. Salien.

Ver. 28. Lord. Many favours were bestowed on Achab, but he died impenitent. W.

Ver. 29. Days. The Syrians durst not begin the attack. H.

Ver. 30. Went, or had gone before, and commanded his men to defend the walls of Aphec. H.—But the slaughter of these 27,000 is joined to the preceding. M.—God caused the walls to fall, as he had done those of Jericho; or the Israelites beat them down with battering rams, and the defendants perished in the ruins.—Chamber. Josephus observes that it was under ground. Micheas told Benadad that he would have thus to hide himself again. C. 22:25. C.

Ver. 31. Heads, or necks, to indicate that they deserved to die. H.—The Syrians acted thus, when they came as supplicants. Josephus viii. 14.—The son of Psammetichus, king of Egypt, was led in this manner to execution, with 2000 others. Herodot. iii. 14.—Bessus was conducted to Alexander with a chain round his neck. Curt. vii. C.—What a reverse of fortune do we here behold! Salien.

Ver. 33. Men. Prot. "Now the men did diligently observe whether any thing would come from him, and did hastily catch it, and they said." They heard him mention the title of brother with joy, concluding that he was not so much irritated, as they might have expected. Allied kings style each other brother; those who are tributary, call themselves servants, (like Achaz, 4 K. 16:7. C.) as well as those who seek for favour; as Benadad does at present, v. 32. H.—Luck. The pagans were accustomed to make vain observations. M.

Ver. 34. Thy father. Benadad did not know the changes which had taken place in the royal family of Israel. He speaks of the cities which his predecessor had wrested from Baasa. C. 15:20.—Streets, for merchants, of whom he would receive tribute: or military stations, as David had done, (2 K. 8:6) to prevent any inroads. Benadad does not appear to have complied with these conditions, as the king of Israel had to take Ramath by force. C. 22:2.—And having. These words seem to be the conclusion of Benadad's proposition: but, according to the Hebrew, they contain Achab's reply. C.—Prot. "The said Achab: I will send thee away with this covenant." H.—How generous does the conduct of Achab appear to the world! Yet it displeased God. Salien.—He severely punished this foolish pity towards a dangerous foe. W.

Ver. 35. In the word, or by the authority. The person who refused to comply, out of a false compassion, displeased God. The wound of the prophet was a symbol of what would happen to Achab. It was a prophetic action. C. 11:30. C.

Ver. 38. Dust. Chal. and Sept. “he tied a veil,” &c. Apher has both meanings.

Ver. 39. One. Thus God delivered the proud and blasphemous Benadad to Achab. H.

Ver. 40. Decreed. Thou must either die or pay the money. M.—Thus the king pronounced sentence against himself, as David had done. 2 K. 12:1 and 14:4. The Rabbins assert, that Achab had received an express order from God to destroy and subjugate all the Syrians. He ought, at least, to have been consulted, as he had given the enemy into the hands of the Israelites; (C.) and thus insinuated, that he would have them punished, (v. 28. Rupert v. 13.) for restricting his power to the hills. T.

Ver. 42. Worthy. Heb. “of my anathema;” or, “the man who has fallen into my snares.” Vatab. Cherem is taken in this sense, Mic. 7:2. &c. He was my prey, and you ought not to have disposed of him without my leave. C.—People. This was verified (C. 22. M.) within three years. Salien.

Ver. 43. Raging, (furibundus) full of indignation. Heb. “went to his house heavy and displeased.” Sept. “confounded and fainting,” through rage; εκκληλυμενος. H.—“Vexed at the prophet, he ordered him to be kept in prison; and confounded at what Micheas had said, he went to his own house.” Joseph. viii. 14.

Ver. 1. Who was. Heb. Chal. &c. place this after vineyard, and read which, referring it to the ground; which we might naturally suppose would be the place of Naboth’s nativity, as it was his parental estate, 4 K. 9:21. Josephus calls the place Azari, and says it was a field contiguous to the king’s palace. Sept. αλω, “threshing-floor.”

Ver. 2. Herbs. The taste of eastern nations is very different from ours. The Syrians delight in seeing gardens filled with melons, onions, &c. and they cannot conceive what pleasure we can find in rambling round our long walks for the sake of exercise.—Money. Hence we perceive that, notwithstanding the despotic power of the kings of Israel, they did not imagine that they had a right to take their subjects' lands. 1 K. 8:14. C.—Naboth's conduct is therefore here applauded; and S. Ambrose (Off. iii. 9.) styles him a martyr, (W.) and a great saint. T.—Maluit periculum cum honestate, quam utilitatem cum opprobrio.

Ver. 3. Fathers. He would have deemed it a mark of disrespect and a crime, as he was not in a state of indigence; which alone could authorize him to sell his property, and then only till the year of jubilee; (Lev. 25:23) and as his field was to be turned into a royal garden, and the law was disregarded by the king, there was no prospect of his regaining it at that period. The law of Moses was till in force; and there were some, like Naboth, who were resolved to comply with it, (C.) even at the hazard of their lives. T.

Ver. 4. Fretting. The Heb. terms are the same as C. 20:43. What weakness in Achab! Riches and honours are not capable of ensuring content. C.—“Who, thinkest thou, is poor; the man who is content with his own, or he who covets another's property?” S. Amb. Naboth ii.—Wall, as Ezechias did afterwards, in very different dispositions; though both were oppressed with grief. Isai. 38:2. Sept. “he covered his face.” H.

Ver. 7. Israel. Heb. simply, “Now thou wilt make the kingdom of Israel.” C.—Prot. “Dost thou now govern the?” &c. H.—Thou art a fit person indeed to establish a kingdom! Ought not a king to take what he has a mind to? Syr. “Are you fit to reign?” Arab. “You do not deserve to govern.” C.—Sept. “Dost thou now act the king over Israel, in this manner?” H.

Ver. 8. Chief men. Heb. chorim, “those in white,” the usual colour of magistrates and noblemen. Eccle. 9:8. Dan. 7:9. The angels generally appear arrayed in white. Among the Egyptians and the Greeks, the rich were remarkable for the whiteness of their robes. Herod. ii. 36. Odys. z.

Ver. 9. Fast, as in a case of the greatest importance, where the welfare of the king and of the state are concerned. We have frequent mention of such extraordinary fasts. 2 Par. 20:3. 1 Esd. 8:21. Joel 1:14, &c. Some would translated, “Call the assembly.” Vatab.—But the Chal. &c. are for the fast. Josephus joins both. All the people were collected, (C.) and Naboth was (Heb.) “set on high, or at the head, as president, on account of his riches and nobility, (H.) that he might be unprepared, and afterwards be more disgraced. M.—Abulensis (q. 4.) thinks that the judges were accustomed to fast, to shew their pity for the criminal, and that they were moved only by a zeal for justice.

Ver. 10. Belial, without restraint or conscience.—Blasphemed. Heb. “blessed.”—Elohim, (H.) or god, the gods, magistrates, &c. C.—Blessing is equally put, to avoid the horrible sound of blaspheming. W. Job 1:5 and 2:9.—Martin de Roa (1:9) maintains, that the word implies to “bid adieu,” or quit; as if Naboth had relinquished the service both of God and of the king. He was accused as a traitor. The law did not condemn the person to death who had spoken ill of the prince. Ex. 22:28. But the wicked judges complied with the intimation of Jezabel; (C.) as she pretended that he had also blasphemed God. H.—Josephus introduces three witnesses, which was more conformable to the practice of the Jews. Grot.—But the text specifies two; and that number would suffice. H.—All Naboth’s family were involved in his ruin; (4 K. 9:26. T.) as it was necessary for Achab’s purpose. So Achan’s children perished with him. Jos. 7:25. H.—What a complication of crime! T.—“They proclaimed a fast, in order to commit murder.” S. Chrys. ser. 68. Hypocrisy, falsehoods, perjury, perversion of justice, all are employed to take away the life, honour, and property of the innocent. See S. Amb. Seneca Benef. ii. 27. T.

Ver. 13. Devil. Heb. Belial, v. 10. Prot. “and the men of Belial witnessed against him.”—City, as was requisite. C.—Stoned him, for blasphemy. Lev. 24:16 and 23.

Ver. 16. Of it, on the title of confiscation, as Naboth had been condemned for high treason; (see 2 K. 9:7. M.) or because there was no heir left, v. 10. Some assert, that Naboth was Achab’s uncle. But this wants proof. C.—Achab only waited one day, and the Elias met him to denounce to him a similar fate after he was dead. 4 K. 9:26. Sept. have, “he tore this garments, and put on sackcloth; and it came to pass afterwards, that Achab arose,” &c. This addition would intimate that the king pretended to be sorry. They repeat the same thing, v. 27. “he had put on sackcloth, on the day when he slew Naboth, and went along cast down.” It is probable that Achab might assume this garb, to make people suppose that he had no hand in the death of Naboth; but this was all hypocrisy, and Elias boldly accused him of guilt. Thou hast slain, &c. v. 19. H.—He knew, at least, of his wife’s machinations. Salien.

Ver. 19. Possession, by desire; though he was yet only on the road. M.—Perhaps he had sent his servants before. H.—Place, not precisely, as Achab was slain in Samaria. M.—But Naboth’s vineyard, perhaps, was not far distant from the pool, where dogs licked the blood of the king. H.—On account of Achab’s repentance, the sentence was (v. 29. C.)

rather changed, and his son Joram was substituted in his stead. 4 K. 9:25. Jehu, and his captain, Badacer, were present, when Elias denounced this sentence upon the family of Achab; and they concluded that the prediction regarded Joram. He had, perhaps, taken part with his impious parents, and promoted the same crimes. H.

Ver. 20. Thy enemy. Have I done thee any harm, whenever thou hast appeared before me? Heb. and Sept. “O my enemy.” H.—To find, often means to attack or take by surprise. Art thou come thus, to fall upon me on the road? C.—Sold. That is, so addicted to evil, as if thou hadst sold thyself to the devil, to be his slave to work all kind of evil. Ch. W. S. Greg. in Ezech. hom. 10.—The expression strongly marks the empire of the passions. Achab was sovereignly wicked, without any restraint. C.—So Vitellius was: Luxui saginæque mancipatus, emptusque. Tacit. Hist. ii.—Sold, or “abandoned,” are used in the same sense. Ps. 43:13.

Ver. 21. Wall. See 1 K. 25:22.—Israel. C. 14:10. M.

Ver. 22. Sin. God frequently inculcates the enormity of the crime of public scandal. M.

Ver. 23. Field. Heb. “wall,” or “before the wall.” This was exactly fulfilled, 4 K. 9:32. Jezabel was hurled from a window over the gate or wall of the city. C.

Ver. 24. Eat him. Yet God remitted something from the severity of this sentence; and Achab was buried in Samaria. C. 22:37. But his son was deprived of burial. T. 4 K. 9:26.—According to the Hebrew, the prediction related to Achab’s posterity, as the Chal. Sept. Syr. &c. have understood it. C.—Prot. “him that dieth of Achab in the city,” &c.

Ver. 25. Now. Sept. “Moreover, Achab was foolishly sold, a man who was sold, &c. since Jezabel.... changed him:” μετεθηκεν. His natural disposition was not perhaps so bad. But his unfortunate connexion with a most wicked wife involved him in ruin. Even when he began to relent, and was on the point of reforming his life, (v. 27.) her influence spoiled all. H.—He was sold to her, and she exercised a most severe tyranny over him, using his seal at pleasure, and treating him with indignity, v. 7, 8. T.

Ver. 26. Amorrhites. The Sidonians still adored the idols Baal and Astaroth, with the utmost exertions of cruelty and lust. This was the religion which Achab wished to establish, more than any of his predecessors. C.

Ver. 27. Down. Heb. “uncovered,” (Malv. 2 K. 15:30) or “barefoot,” (Chal. Syr.) or “softly,” (Vat. Prot.) or “he walked bent down.” Sept.

This variety shows that the signification of at (H.) is not well known. The repentance of Achab is not more certain. Some believe that it was insincere, and only external: yet God was pleased to reward it in this life, (Lyran. Theod. &c.) as if it might have some influence on the people. H.—Others suppose that Achab really repented for what he had done, but presently relapsed at the instigation of Jezabel; so that his reward was equally of a temporal nature; though S. Chrysostom (ad Theod. laps.) seems to be convinced that he “obtained the remission of all his sins, and entirely changed his life.” ser. 68, et hom. 5. ad Antioc.—But here lies the difficulty. C.—“His groans would have found favour, if the lurking envy had not increased his offence.” S. Amb. in Ps. xxxvii. de Naboth. C. iv. See v. 25.—A relapse renders the sincerity of the former conversions doubtful; and the more so, when no radical change, but only external sorrow, has appeared.

Ver. 29. Sake. Heb. “before me,” publicly. H.—The threat of the prophet caused Achab to invest his son with the royal dignity, and Josaphat followed his example. Salien, A.C. 916.—But some call this in question. H.

Ver. 1. Israel, from the time when Benadad and Achab had made a league. C. 20:34.

Ver. 2. Josaphat. It is wonderful that a prince of so great piety, should be on terms of such strict friendship with a most wicked king. God did not approve of it; and the event was unfortunate. 2 Par. 20:37. Achab received the king of Juda with extraordinary magnificence. 2 Par. 18:2. It is thought that (C.) the latter had married his daughter, (Grot.) or rather (H.) he had taken Athalia for his son Joram. 2 Par. 18:1. T. M.

Ver. 3. Syria. Benadad had not restored it; either because he no longer regarded his treaty, or because the city had not been taken by his father. C.

Ver. 5. One, in concord, (H.) and ready to march against the same enemy.—Lord. This was rather late, if (M.) the army was already receiving its pay under the walls of Samaria. Joseph. viii. 15.—God ought to have been consulted at first. M.

Ver. 6. Men, probably the prophets of the groves, who had not gone to Carmel. C. 18:19. 22. C.—The recent slaughter had not deterred others from imitating the example of the false prophets. H.

Ver. 7. Lord. Josaphat knew that these four hundred were addicted to idol worship, (H.) and suspected that they only flattered their king. Josephus.

Ver. 8. One man. Perhaps Micheas alone resided at Samaria. Elias and his disciples were in the country. Josephus and some others think, (C.) that the son of Jemla had been cast into prison for what he had said to Achab, when he had dismissed the king of Syria. C. 20:43. H.—Not so. Good advice should be followed, though it be not pleasant. M.—Josaphat justly suspected the schismatical false prophets. W.

Ver. 9. Eunuch. Heb. saris, denotes also “a servant;” or Achab might have purchased this stranger.

Ver. 10. Court, or barn floor. They were in or near cities, that they might be so protected from the incursions of enemies, who strove to set the corn on fire. 1 K. 23:1. Judg. 15:5.

Ver. 11. Push, “with the horn,” (κερατῖσθαι; Sept.) and throw into the air, (M.) like a bull. C.—Nothing shall withstand thy power. The actions of Sedecias were of the same import as his words. H.—See Jer. 27:2 and 28:10.—Such horns were shewn to Zacharias; (1:18) as false prophets often do, like the true ones. W.

Ver. 15. Go up, &c. This was spoken ironically, and by way of jesting at the flattering speeches of the false prophets: and so the king understood it, as appears by his adjuring Micheas, in the following verse, to tell him the truth in the name of the Lord. Ch.—Micheas had only repeated their words, and by his accent and gestures (D.) might easily explain his meaning. H.—Similar examples of irony may be seen. C. 18:27, and Gen. 3:22. C.—The prophet might also pray for success. But the king begged for a positive answer. W.

Ver. 17. No shepherd... no master, clearly intimated (M.) that the king should perish in the battle. Paral. reads: These have no masters. H.

Ver. 19. He, Micheas, added, (M.) not fearing the king’s displeasure, who seemed to regard his former denunciation as an effect of his ill-will. Hence he explains his vision more at large. God often conforms to our ideas, and even prejudices. The people were then accustomed to look upon him as a king, environed with his army of good and evil spirits; the one at his right-hand, to execute his designs of mercy, and the other at his left, to execute his judgments. Job (1:6, 12) speaks in the like manner. We know that God stands in need of no counsellors;

(Rom. 11:34) and that the angels of satan have no place in heaven. Isai. 14:12. Apoc. 12:9. Jude 6.

Ver. 20. The Lord said, &c. God standeth not in need of any counsellor; nor are we suppose, that things pass in heaven in the manner here described: but this representation was made to the prophet, to be delivered by him in a manner adopted to the common ways and notions of men. Ch. S. Greg. Mor. ii. 21. &c. W.—God did not enable the king to discern the falsehood. Bellarm. ii. 13. Grat. Amis.

Ver. 22. Go forth, and do so. This was not a command, but a permission; for God never ordaineth lies, though he often permitteth the lying spirit to deceive those who love not the truth. 2 Thessal. 2:10. And in this sense it is said in the following verse, the Lord hath given a lying spirit in the mouth of all thy prophets. Ch.—What is translated in the imperative, denotes frequently what will come to pass, though it be displeasing to God. C.—He permits it, therefore, only by not exerting his power to prevent the execution. H.—The devils can do nothing without such a permission. Achab deserved to be deceived by the false prophets, as he would not hearken to a true one. S. Aug. con. Jul. v. 4. and q. 53. inter. 83.

Ver. 24. Cheek. Josephus says he had told the king, that if his hand did not wither, like that of Jeroboam, he might conclude that Micheas was a false prophet; particularly as his prediction was at variance with that of Elias; who had asserted that Achab should die at Jezrahel, while Micheas seemed to condemn him to death at Ramoth. But these circumstances are by no means certain, though they be adopted by the author of the Scholastic History, by Lyran, &c. C.—If Sedecias had the assurance to make such a declaration, God was not obliged to work a miracle to prevent the king's mistake; and Micheas had never said that Achab should die at Ramoth. H.—Hath. In 2 Par. 18:23, it is expressed, Which way went the spirit of the Lord from me to speak to thee? If he could have proved that he had ever possessed the spirit, he might have spoken with some confidence; though sin may easily banish him. Thus Catholics may ask the pretended reformers, who boast of the spirit, how He came to abandon the Church with which all agree He once resided, to establish a contrary one? The spirit of God cannot be at variance with himself, nor reveal contradictory things. H.

Ver. 25. Go into a chamber, &c. This happened when he heard the king was slain, and justly apprehended that he should be punished for his false prophecy; (Ch.) though this be nowhere recorded, (C.) except in Josephus. W.—He probably escaped death. Salien.

Ver. 27. Distress, both “in small quantity,” (Paral.) and very bad. Grot. T. Isai. 30:20.—Peace, when I will punish thee, as an impostor. M.—How grating must this have been to the good king Josaphat; and still he does not abandon the company of such infatuated people! v. 29. H.

Ver. 30. Thy own. Sept. “I will disguise myself, and go into the battle; and do thou put on my garment.” Hence the Syrians mistook Josaphat for Achab, (v. 32. C.) as “it had been agreed between them, that he should wear the robes of Achab, to elude more easily the prediction of Micheas.” Joseph. viii. 15.—Vain and impious attempt! Providence found him out, though unadorned. H.—Achab might pretend thus to honour the king of Juda! (M.) and perhaps he had been apprized of the order given to the Syrians, to single him out, v. 31. What could prompt such an order, cannot be easily ascertained. Benadad might wish to revenge himself, for being brought out as a prisoner to Achab; or he might be informed of the prediction of Micheas.

Ver. 31. Captains of, or mounted “on chariots.” There would hardly be so many general officers over the chariots alone. The same number of kings had been in a former engagement, and they had been replaced by these captains. C. 20:24. C.—Only. Not that the Syrians were to avoid hurting any body else, as they could not thus come at the king; (Salien) and we find one shot an arrow at the army of Israel; (v. 34. H.) but the main onset was to be directed against Achab, either to kill or to take him prisoner. M.

Ver. 32. Cried out. Par. add, to the Lord, and he helped him, and turned them away from him. The Jews (in Seder. Olam xvii.) acknowledge the same thing; and thus it was known that Josaphat was not the king of Israel, who would rather have invoked Baal. M.—Perhaps he also declared the truth, and who he was, when he saw the Syrians surround him, crying, This is the king of Israel! 2 Par. 18:31. T.

Ver. 34. Stomach. Par. between the neck and the shoulders. The arrow went in at the lungs, and came out at the shoulders, as it was shot from a lower ground. M.—Some explain the Heb. “between the joints and the coat of mail.” Prot. “joints of the harness.” Sept. “between the lungs and the thorax.” H.—Syr. “between the juncture of the coat of mail,” where it is connected with the armour of the thighs. Grot.—God directed the random shot. Salien. W.—Hand. It was deemed unbecoming for the king to touch the reins. Diod. Sic. xvii. Brisson iii. p. 383.

Ver. 35. Evening. Achab had only retired to the hinder ranks, while Josaphat, by his valour, maintained the day, till the death of the former put an end to the war.

Ver. 38. Of Samaria. Josephus says, of Jezara, (Jezrahel) conformably to the prediction. But God had relented in that particular, on Achab's repentance; (C. C. 21:24. 29.) unless it regarded his son Joram. H. Salien.—Reins. Heb. zonoth, may also signify "arms," (Munster) and "harlots." Sept. Some suspect that such were painted on the chariot. Josephus intimates, with the Sept. that "harlots bathed in the blood," (Ant. viii. 15.) which would tend to the greater contempt of Achab. M.—Spoken, respecting dogs licking up Achab's blood. No mention had been made of the chariot. God was thus pleased to shew how easily he could have executed the sentence in all its rigour.

Ver. 39. Of ivory. The palace was greatly adorned with it, (see Amos 3:15 and Ps. 44:9. C.) like the palace of Solomon. C. 10:18. Pliny (xvi. 43.) speaks of bedsteads and vehicles of ivory, in the same sense. T.

Ver. 44. He took not away, &c. He left some of the high places, viz. those in which they worshipped the true God: but took away all others, 2 Par. 17:6; (Ch.) and even those also, before the end of his reign; (C.) as they were contrary to the law. M.—Others think that the passage in Par. is incorrect; ula being substituted for vaud. He took away the high places, (C. 19:3) and the groves. Grot. Capell.—We know that such remained in the days of Joas; and Josaphat in not ranked among the irreproachable kings. Eccli. 49:5. C.—He attempted perhaps to remove those places, but was prevented by the people. M. See C. 15:14.

Ver. 45. Israel. The five subsequent verses are omitted in the Roman Sept.

Ver. 47. Effeminate. Men addicted to unnatural lust. C. 14:24. and 15:12.

Ver. 48. Edom. Heb. and Chal. "but a deputy king," or viceroy; (T.) so that the kings of Juda might equip fleets at Asiongaber, as the country of Idumea was subject to them ever since the time of David. 2 Par. 8:17. Under Ochozias, the son of Josaphat, the kings of Edom became independent, 4 K. 8:20. C.—Hitherto they had paid tribute. M.

Ver. 49. Made. Heb. incorrectly reads hasar, "ten," instead of hasa, "made;" (C.) which the Prot. follow, "made ships of Tharshish, to go to Ophir." H. See C. 4:26. and 28.

Ver. 50. Would not. He had been reprehended before for admitting such a partner: and therefore would have no more to do with him. Ch.

—They had formerly joined in equipping such a fleet, (2 Par. 20:36 and 37. C.) and it had been dashed to pieces in the very port. H.

Ver. 52. Years, not complete; as the first is comprized in the reign of Achab, and the last in that of Joram. 4 K. 3:1. Usher, A. 3108.—Yet, his very short reign was memorable for many disasters; the revolt of the dependant king of Moab, the ruin of his navy, &c. that he might thus be reclaimed from his evil ways. Salien, A.C. 915.—Houbigant allows this king two full years; and rejects the notion of his being associated by his father, as he does on other similar occasion, where the Scripture is silent. He makes Ochozias commence in the 19th, and end in the 22d of Josaphat, and not in the second of Joram. 4 K. 1:17. The Heb. and Greek copies vary. H.

4 KINGS

THE FOURTH BOOK OF KINGS

INTRODUCTION

This Book brings us to the conclusion of the kingdom of Israel, (C. 17) and to the captivity of Juda, at Babylon. C. 25. We behold some virtuous princes reigning over the two tribes, while the ten were uniformly governed by men of perverse morals. W.—Yet there were some who adhered to the Lord in both kingdoms. David and his descendants (H.) occupy the throne near 480 years; and, after the captivity, continue in some degree of honour till the coming of Christ. W.—But various families rule over Israel; some by usurpation, (H.) others by God's appointment: who thus chooses to chastise the wicked. He still watches over his Church, and sends his prophets for the instruction of all. W.—We have enquired in the preface of the former Book, who composed this. H.—The kingdom of Israel subsists about 250, (W.) or 254 years. This Book contains the transactions of 308 years. C.—But the chronology is extremely perplexed. To the sixth year of Ezechias, when Israel was led away captive, the kingdom of Juda seems to have lasted 260, and that of Israel only 241 years, though they both commenced at the same period. The errors regard the kings of Isreal, according to Houbigant, who would assign the following years to the respective kings of Juda and Israel. 1. Of Juda: Solomon, 40; Roboam, 17; Abiam, 3; Asa, 41, Josaphat, 25; Joram, 8; Ochozias, 1; (the same is said to have begun to reign in the preceding year, the 11th of Joram, 4 K. 9:29, incorrectly) Athalia, 6; Joas, 40; Amasias, 29; (he reigns 15 after the death of Joas, king of Isreal) Azarias, 52; Joatham, 16; Achaz, 16; Ezechias, 6; in which year, the three hundredth from the commencement of Solomon's reign, and the two hundred and sixtieth of the kingdom of Juda, Samaria was taken. 2. The kings of Israel: Jeroboam, 22; Nadab, 2; Baasa, 24; Ela, 2; Zambri, 7 days; Amri, 12; Achab, 22; Ochozias, 2; Joram, 12; Jehu, 28; Joachaz, 17; Joas, 16; Jeroboam, 41; Zacharias, 10½; (in the text 10 is omitted. H.) Sellum, 1 month; Manahem, 10; Phaceia, 2; Phacee, 30; (in the text, 20. H.) Osee, 9; in all, 261½ years, (Houbig. Chron. Sac.) or 261 years and 7 months. The variation of 19 months, which still appears, may be owing to some of the years being incomplete. H. —3. After a reign of 28 years over Juda, Ezechias is succeeded by Manasses, who reigns 55: Amon, 2; Josias, 31; Joachaz, a few months; Eliacim, or Joakim, 11; Joachin, Conias, or Jechonias, had reigned ten years with his father. After three months and ten days reigning alone, he is led away to Babylon with part of the people. Matthanias, or Sedecias, is appointed in his stead; but proving refractory, is also, after nine years, deprived of his sight, and conducted with 832 of his subjects to Babylon. Nabuchodonosor had already led away 3023, under Joachin. After the death of Godolias, who was left to govern the miserable remains of the people, A. 3417, he made 745 more captives, and thus an end was put to the kingdom of Juda. The scourge had been retarded for some time, by the repentance of Manasses, and the prayers of the prophets. C.

Ver. 1. Rebelled: lit. “prevaricated.” H.—The kings of Israel kept some of the nations, which David had conquered, in subjection, while the kings of Juda ruled over the others. In consequence of the late disaster, these people began to throw off the yoke. T.—Joram made war upon Moab. C. 3:5. God began to punish the house of Achab, by these means. C.—The Moabites refused to pay tribute, (M.) as the Israelites would not acknowledge the divine authority. H.

Ver. 2. Lattices, by a skylight, (H.) or trap-door, designed to give light to the room below, into which the king fell. The roofs are generally flat in the East, and covered with earth mixed with straw, with the light at the top, to prevent the excessive heats.—Of. Heb. &c. “into.” C.—If the lattices be understood to mean the rails, which were ordered to be placed round the roof, (Deut. 22:8.) Ochozias might fall into the street. M.—Josephus thinks he fell from the staircase. At any rate, he was much hurt, (H.) and thus was made to feel the indignation of God. T.—God. Sept. “Baal, the god-fly;” (C.) the Jupiter of the Greeks, or their chief god; and the prince of devils. Mat. 12.—Accaron. Hence Pliny (viii. 29.) styles the god Achor, T. and Myiodis, (B. xxxvi.) which is the name given to him by Josephus, ix. 2. H.—He was supposed to free the people of the country from being infested with flies; or the many victims offered up to him, drew those insects together. Vatable.—Grotius supposes that the Phœnicians styled their god, Beelsemen, (Balsomin) “God of heaven;” and that the Hebrews called him, Balzobub, “god of flies,” out of contempt. But perhaps his is too favourable to the idolaters. D.—Selden is convinced that Ochozias gives the idol its real name. Scaliger rather thinks that Balzobeim, “the lord of victims,” was the original title. H.

Ver. 4. Away; probably to his usual abode, at Carmel, where the king sent to seize him.

Ver. 5. Messengers. They were perhaps citizens of Accaron, who had extolled the sagacity of their god, but were totally unacquainted with Elias. Yet as he shewed his knowledge of secret things, by telling them what they were going about, (Salien) and spoke with such assurance, (H.) they thought proper to return, lest they should incur a similar punishment. M.

Ver. 8. Man. Heb. ish bahal sehar, “a man lord of hair,” or all covered with it, having a long beard, like the ancient sages, (S. Jer. in Ezech. xxxv.) and clothed with a skin, (Bochart) as the first inhabitants of the earth, the heroes, prophets and S. John the Baptist, are described. Heb. 11:37. Matt. 3:4. So Statius (ii. and iv.) says:

Tiresiæ vultus, voces et vellera nota Induitur.

The monks imitated this poverty and simplicity of clothing; and it is still common among Arabs, who wear a sheep’s skin, with the shorn side inwards in hot weather. C.—Elias. He was known by his long hair and distinct garment, from ordinary men. W.—Hence none ought to blame priests and monks, for wearing clothing which may designate their profession. H.

Ver. 9. Under him; his own guards. The captain was to request him to pray for the king's recovery; (C.) or rather, (H.) to punish him for what he had said to the messengers. C.—Of God. Procopius and others think that he spoke contemptuously, and was therefore punished. M.—Down. The prophets are not bound to obey kings, in the exercise of their ministry. Grotius.—Elias complies as soon as he had orders from God. C.

Ver. 10. Let fire, &c. Elias was inspired to call down fire from heaven upon these captains, who came to apprehend him; not out of a desire to gratify any private passion, but to punish the insult offered to religion, to confirm his mission, and to shew how vain are the efforts of men against God and his servants, whom he has a mind to protect. Ch.—The Roman laws authorized a person, in authority, to punish those who refuse to obey. Ulpian 1 D. Si quis jus dicenti non obtemperaverit, omnibus concessum est suam jurisdictionem defendere pœnali judicio. Elias acted as God's envoy, and the insult reverted upon him. S. Tho. 2. 2. q. 108, a. 2.—The Manichees have blamed the conduct of the prophet: but the miracle justifies him, as God would never countenance the private revenge of any one; and the Holy Ghost places this transaction on a level with that when Elias shut up the heavens. Eccli. 48:3. S. Peter was moved with the like zeal. Acts 5:5. The sons of Zebedee gave way to some private indignation, when they wished our Saviour to call down fire from heaven upon a city of Samaria. Luke 9:54. But he reprimanded them for it; as the citizens might not be so well acquainted with him, as these soldiers must have been with Elias: and he came to display the spirit of mildness, (C.) to attract all to his holy religion; while Elias had manifested the severity of the divine judgments, conformably to the law of terror, under which he lived. H.—In zeal of justice, Elias procured fire to burn these wicked men, as he had done for the holocaust. S. Aug. W.

Ver. 11. Another, not knowing what was become of the first, or why he did not return; as Ochozias was eager to have the prophet in his power. M.—If he were acquainted with his fate, (H.) this second captain was guilty of greater insolence. But there are such generally to be found at courts; men who are ready to execute the king's orders, without considering whether they be contrary to God's law or not.

Ver. 13. Again. This third captain is commonly supposed to be Abdias, (3 K. 18:3) though without much reason. C.—John of Jerus, (c. 15) says he left the court, and became a disciple of Elias, and a prophet. M.—But he is very different from the prophet, whose writings are still extant. C.—The report of the two miracles had come to his ears, and filled him with fear. M.—Despise not. Heb. "let my life ... be precious in thy sight." 1 K. 26:21. Ps. 115:15.

Ver. 17. The second year of Joram, &c. counted from the time that he was associated to the throne of his father Josaphat; (Ch). so that it is said that he reigned also in the 18th year of Josaphat. C. 3:1. See also C. 8:16. To obviate there apparent contradictions, chronologists suppose that Joram reigned over Israel in the 18th of Josaphat, king of Juda, and in the second year after the latter had appointed his son Joram viceroy. He was associated with his father on the throne two years before his death, and in the 5th of Joram, king of Israel. Examples of this kind are frequent among the Hebrews, and particularly among the Persians, whose chronology is thus rendered very difficult. Why should we allow that the numbers are erroneous, when this explanation will suffice? C.—Grotius leaves the matter undecided. D.—Capel (Crit. p. 414.) maintains that the numbers have been ill transcribed; and so does Houbigant, who asserts that such a mode of writing whould not be tolerated in a profane author; thus the mention of different dates, without intimating how they are to be reconciled. If we should read, that Heraclius began to reign “in the 18th year of Chosroes,” and a little after, that he ascended the throne “in the second year of the son of Chosroes,” without ever specifying how Heraclius began his reign at two different periods, who would not suspect a mistake? Is it not more rational to throw the blame on the transcriber, than on the author? The modern chronologists seem to have invented the idea of viceroys and simultaneous kings, among the Hebrews, merely to get over difficulties; though the Scripture be entirely silent on this head. Houbigant would therefore read, “in the 22d year of Josaphat,” as the mention of Joram seems here improper, (absurda) his father reigning 25 years. Ochozias began to reign when Josaphat had almost completed his 17th year. See 3 K. 22:52. H.—His brother is not specified in Heb. Chal. Arab. and in some copies of the Sept. but it is in most others, as well as in the Syriac, (C.) Josephus, &c. (H.) and this is the common opinion. The Roman edition here inserts (C.) after Elias spoke, (18) “And the, &c ... and Joram,” &c. nearly as C. 3:1. 2. 3; only for father, it substitutes, “not like his brothers;” and adds, “the wrath of the Lord was enkindled against the house of Achab.” No mention is made of the second year of Joram, &c. (H.) in any edition of the Sept. Capel.—In the mean time Josaphat, being returned from the unfortunate expedition with Achab, set his kingdom in order, purifying it from all the vestiges of idolatry, as much as he was able, and appointing proper judges. 2 Par. 19.

Ver. 1. Heaven. By heaven here is meant, the air, the lowest of the heavenly regions, (Ch.) through which he was carried by the ministry of angels, who directed the storm, (H.) to the place designed for him. —It is generally supposed to be Paradise, (C.) whither Henoch had been translated. H.—They are still living, (C.) and must come again, to invite all to repent. After which they will die martyrs, in the persecution of Antichrist. H.—See S. Aug. de Gen. ad lit. ix. 6. et Apoc. 11. W.—Eccli. 48:10. M.—They are a proof of a future resurrection. C.—To decide where the paradise which they inhabit, (H.) is situated. would be rash. S. Chrys. hom. 21. in Gen. &c. Some suppose it is still in some unknown region of the earth: others place it above the sky, (M.) or in the bosom of Abraham. C.—The Jews (ap. Munster) assert that Elias penetrated the sphere of fire, where his body was consumed. Vat.—The earthly paradise is very probably no longer existing, in its ancient luxuriant state. H.—It may now be covered with the waters of the Persian Gulf. Worthington.

Ver. 3. The sons of the prophets. That is, the disciples of the prophets; who seem to have had their schools, like colleges or communities, in Bethel, Jericho, and other places, in the days of Elias and Eliseus. Ch. —Many of these disciples might be also their children. Elias collected some fervent souls together even at Bethel, to preserve the true religion, as much as possible. He visited them before his departure. C. —Peace: let not Elias hear us.

Ver. 5. From thee. Heb. “from thy head,” thy superior, and raise him into the air, v. 3. C.

Ver. 6. Thee. Elias had tried the constancy of his disciple three times, as Christ required of S. Peter a triple confession of love. Jo. 21:17. H. —Humility might also prompt the prophet to desire to be alone. Salien.

Ver. 8. Mantle. Sept. μηλωτην, “sheep skin,” (M.) such as the prophets wore. The Syriac explains it of an ornament or bandage of the head; others, of a leathren mantle to keep off rain. Ad subitas nunquam scortea diset aquas. Martial xiv.

Ver. 9. Double spirit. A double portion of thy spirit, as thy eldest son and heir: or thy spirit, which is double, in comparison of that which God usually imparteth to his prophets; (Ch). or the power of working miracles, as well as of prophesying. W.—He wishes to excel his fellow disciples, rather than his master. T. Cajet. Amama.—Double often means, great and perfect. Jer. 17:18. If Eliseus even begged that he might perform more and greater wonders than his master, (as Christ enabled his disciples to surpass himself, in this particular. Jo. 14:12. H.) he might do it without pride, purely for the glory of God. He certainly shone forth with peculiar splendour; and some have enumerated sixteen or twenty-four of his miracles, while they can only find eight (Lyran.) or twelve recorded of Elias. See A. Lapide, in Eccli. xlviii. 13. C.—We read a similar expression in Pindar, (Olym. vi.) where Neptune gave his son Jamus (Θησαυρον διδυμον μαντοσυνας) “the double treasure of divination,” p. 50. Ed. Step. H.

Ver. 10. Hard thing. Heb. lit. “thou art hardened to ask” a thing so difficult, and which I have not the power to grant. But I will pray that thou mayst receive it; (C.) and I feel confident that thou wilt, if God shall grant thee the power to see me, at my departure. H.—This he did, v. 12. M.—Elias had perhaps imagined that his disciple would have desired some of his clothes, or some advice. C.—He left him his mantle, (v. 13. H.) and by prayer was enabled to communicate his spirit to him; as Moses and the apostles did to their assistants in the ministry. C.

Ver. 11. Horses. Angels assumed these forms, (Grotius) or a cloud, resembling a fiery chariot and horses, was impelled by a strong wind, under their guidance. Tostat. M. Salien, A.C. 914.—As the name of Elias is very like Helios, “the sun,” some have supposed that hey have the same meaning: (Sedulius, pasc. 1.) but the Heb. term signifies, “He is my God.” The pagans have taken occasion from this history to represent the sun drawn in a fiery chariot, by horses composed of the same element.

Animosos ignibus illis,

Quos in pectore habent, quos ore & naribus efflant. Metam. xii. C.

—Heaven; (see v. 1.) where he lives free from all disturbance. T.—It is a constant, that he will come again before the last judgment; as his representative, John the Baptist, announced the first appearance of our Redeemer. S. Greg. hom. 7. in Ev. Of this the Jews were convinced. S. Justin, dial. See Malac. 4:5.

Ver. 12. Thereof. Thou alone wast equal to an army, in our defence. Chariots were then very common. C.—Chal. and Vatab. “Thou wast, by thy prayer, better to Israel than chariots and horses.” So we should call a person, a pillar of the state, &c. T.—In giving the character of Elias, the Holy Ghost dwells in a particular manner on his burning zeal. C.—Elias stood up as a fire, and his word burnt like a torch ... he brought down fire from heaven thrice, on the holocaust, and on the captains. H.—Who can glory like to thee? Eccli. 38:14. See SS. Amb. and Chrys. on Elias. His resemblance with Christ is very striking. His name puts us in mind of Christ's divinity; who burnt with zeal for God's house, (Jo. 2:17) was persecuted, (C.) raised the dead to life, rose again and ascended triumphant into heaven, having imparted his blessing (H.) and his sacraments to his disciples. C.—No more, as he was taken from the company of men. H.—Pieces, to express his grief, at being deprived of so excellent a master. M.

Ver. 13. Mantle, as an earnest of his affection. By the imposition of this mantle, he had been called to be a prophet. 3 K. 19:19.

Ver. 14. Not divided. God thus prevented him from giving way to vanity, (Abul. q. 28.) or thinking that he could do any thing himself. H.—Elias. Heb. "where is he?" C.—The original and Sept. (Alex. and Vat.) do not specify that he struck the waters twice, or that they did not divide at first. H.—This is taken from other copies of the Sept. Amama.—The exclamation contains a most fervent prayer. Heb. "he smote the waters, and said: Where is the Lord God of Elias? and when he had stricken the," &c. which removes the idea of presumption, which (H.) some discover in the words of Eliseus. T. Sanctius.—Now. Heb. aph hu. Sept. $\alpha\phi\phi\omega$, retaining the words which Theodotion renders "the hidden" god. H.—"Even he himself." Aquila. C.—When I stand so much in need of his assistance, (M.) having performed his important functions, which cannot be done without his spirit, nor without the confirmation of miracles, before an unbelieving people. H.

Ver. 15. They worshipped him; viz. with an inferior, yet religious veneration, not for any temporal, but spiritual excellency. Ch. W.—They had stopped on a hill, (M.) to see the event, v. 7. H.—Jericho itself is two hours' journey from the Jordan. Adric.—The sons of the prophets had seen what had happened at the translation of Elias, and perceiving that Eliseus was invested with his mantle, and with the power of working miracles, they did not hesitate to acknowledge him for their superior, during the absence of Elias, who they expected would return. C.

Ver. 16. Valley. It seems such translations were not uncommon. 3 K. 18:12. C.

Ver. 17. Send. He acquiesces, lest they might think that he was afraid of losing his superiority. M.

Ver. 19. Barren, owing to the salt or bituminous waters. Some think that they were muddy and of a loathsome smell. The fountain is still to be seen very abundant and excellent, watering the plain on the west of the city. Its source is about two miles distant on the road to Jerusalem. Maundrell, p. 134. C.—Other parts of the environs were very fertile. M.

Ver. 20. Put salt. He removes ever suspicion of imposture: if the waters were already saline, the remedy would seem contrary to his design, but it would display the miracle in a stronger light; and if they were only fetid and muddy, (C.) though (H.) salt might rectify a small quantity, (Palladius tit. 9. Vales, &c.) it could never correct the bad qualities of such a fountain for a length of time, by the mere force of nature. H.—Josephus (Bel. iv. 8.) represents Eliseus acting like a magician, being desirous to please the pagan readers with various embellishments. C.

Ver. 21. Barrenness. By the divine power they are become salubrious. H.

Ver. 23. Bald-head. It is not known whether Eliseus was really bald, or only wore his hair short, like the priests of the Lord, and the monks at present. It may also be a term of reproach, of which the emperors Julius Cæsar, Domitian, and Otho, were very sensible. Cæsar wore a crown of laurel, and Otho a sort of false hair, to hide this deformity. Sueton.

Quod summum formæ decus est, periere capilli. Petronius. C.

Ver. 24. Cursed them. This curse, which was followed by so visible a judgment of God, was not the effect of passion, or of a desire of revenging himself; but of zeal for religion, which was insulted by these boys, in the person of the prophet, and of a divine inspiration; God being determined to punish in this manner the inhabitants of Bethel, (the chief seat of the calf-worship) who had trained up their children in a prejudice against the true religion and its ministers. Ch.—The boys themselves were not so little as not to be aware of the insult they were offering to a minister of the God of Juda; and probably they acted thus out of hatred to him, at the instigation of their idolatrous parents. Sanc. C.—Lord. He called on him (M.) to revenge his own cause, (H.) “that the people might learn to take care of their souls, by the fear of death.” S. Aug. D.

Ver. 25. Carmel. To avoid the indignation of the populace, and to instruct his disciples.—Samaria. That he might be ready to give advice to the two kings, who were meditating an expedition against Moab. M.

Ver. 1. Achab. Joram succeeded his brother. C. 1:17.

Ver. 2. Baal. This happened after his victory over Moab, v. 13. C.—Salien thinks rather that Josaphat refused to assist him, except he would destroy what had been lately introduced by his parents, as the league with Achab had been blamed. See 2 Par. 19:2. The golden calves were of an older standing, and could not be so easily taken from the people. M.—Joram was not so wicked as might have been expected. C.

Ver. 4. Nourished. Hebrew noked, a term which the Sept. leave untranslated, means literally, “marked” with some colour by the master.

Aut pecori signum, aut numeros impressit acervo. Georg. i.

Sheep, Sym. “large cattle.”—Fleeces; is it commonly supposed every year. This mode of tribute was more usual than paying money. The Moabites were chiefly employed in feeding sheep and cattle; so that it is not wonderful that they should have such great numbers. Dejotarus is represented not only as “a noble Tetrarch, but also as a diligent husbandman and herdsman,” pecuarius: (Cic.) which last is the idea which some attach to Mesa.

Ver. 7. He entered cordially into this war, as he perceived that if Moab succeeded, Edom would follow the same plan. M.

Ver. 8. Edom though more circuitous (C.) than to cross over the Jordan at Galgal, as the enemy might this be taken unawares, (M.) and fresh recruits might be procured from the tributary king of Edom, v. 9. H. Yet the want of water made this road more dangerous.

Ver. 11. Elias, a proverbial expression to denote that he waited upon him, though the prophet’s rough manner of living would require but little attendance. So the Baptist speaks of untying our Saviour’s shoes, Mat. 3. C.—Providence had sent Eliseus to attend the army (H.) contrary to his custom. C.

Ver. 12. With him. I am content. H.—Others read with an interrogation, as if the reputation of Eliseus was not yet established. M.—Him; they go to his tent. No one ever supported the character of God’s envoy, or shewed his authority over the most haughty, better than Eliseus. C.

Ver. 13. Mother, whom thou supportest. This is not an order, but a sarcasm (H.) which the king deserved. C.—Christ said to Judas, what thou dost, do quickly, John 13:27. H.—With what liberty does the prophet speak to an impious king! shewing himself worthy to succeed Elias, and actuated by the like zeal for God.

Ver. 14. Reverence, (erubescerem) “blush at,” may imply a degree of censure at Josaphat’s being again found in such bad company, v. 2. H.—Heb. “If I did not receive (C.) or regard the face.” H.

Ver. 15. Minstrel. The priests and Levites, who officiated in the temple, accompanied the army. Eliseus wants no profane music, (C.) but, by this request, shews his respect for the true religion, (H.) and by sounding forth the divine praises, in some of David’s psalms, wishes to obtain of God the favour which was desired. Theodoret. M.—He had felt some emotion at the sight of Joram, and was sensible that God required a calm. C.—He dwells not in a violent wind, &c. 3 K. 19:11. H.—The surprising effects of ancient music to calm the passions are well attested. 1 K. 16:17. By this means S. Francis was raised to the contemplation of heavenly things; and S. Augustine says of himself: “How I wept when I heard thy hymns and canticles, being greatly moved at the delightful harmony of thy church:” suavesonantis Ecclesiae tuæ vocibus commotus acriter. Conf. ix. 6. de C. xiv. 24.—Upon him, so that he experienced that enthusiasm which shewed that he was actuated by the divine spirit, to speak with all the authority requisite. The pagans strove to imitate the true prophets, but the difference was very evident; no less than the spirit with which they were filled; the former were agitated in a furious manner; the latter were composed and majestic. C.

Ver. 16. Ditches. It was then quite dry; the water which should come in the night, would both refresh the army, and bring on the ruin of the Moabites.

Ver. 19. Tree. This was an exception from the general law; (Deut. 20:19. C.) or it might only regard the land of Chanaan, which the Hebrews should occupy. M. W.—Stones, which had been gathered off into heaps. Isai. 5:1. Persius calls a field thus cleared, Exossatus ager; (C.) as if the bones were taken out. H.

Ver. 20. Offered, at sun-rise, Ex. 29:38.—Water, produced miraculously, without any rain being seen; (v. 17. C.) though it might fall at a distance in Idumea. H.

Ver. 21. Upon them. Heb. “and upward,” both soldiers and those who were usually exempt from service.

Ver. 22. Blood. The clouds have frequently a reddish colour at sunrise, which would be reflected in the waters: the sand might also be red. As the Moabites knew that no water could be expected there at that season of the year, and as some examples had occurred of people turning their arms one against another in the night, (Judg. 7:11. 1 K. 14:20) they concluded that what they saw was blood. C.—God had also destined them for slaughter, (Abulens. q. 21.) and suffered their imagination and judgment to be deluded. H.

Ver. 24. Moab. Heb. adds, “even in the country.”

Ver. 25. Brick walls. It was the proper name of the city of the Moabites. In Hebrew, Kir-Charaseth. Ch.—Isai. 15 and 16:7. It was also called Ar, or Arcopolis.—Remained. Heb. adds, “with the stones unmolested.” They laid siege to it. H.—Slingers. Grotius would understand those who attended the machines designed to throw stones, &c. But the slingers kept off the enemy, while others undermined the walls. C.

Ver. 26. Edom, hoping that he would favour their escape, or because that part seemed the weakest.

Ver. 27. Wall, to Chamos, the idol of Moab; (M.) or to Moloc, to appease the wrath of the gods. Horrible blindness! The pagans believed, that the most precious thing ought to be sacrificed in very imminent dangers. Philo Biblius. ap. Eus. præp. iv. 16.—The Phœnicians offered such victims to Saturn. Many devoted themselves to death for the safety of the Roman republic; and some were ready to do so, to preserve the lives of Caligula and Nero, before they had given proof of their evil dispositions. Seuton. xiv.—It s thought that Sennacherib intended to treat his two sons in this manner, if they had not prevented him. Abul. in 4 K. xix. 37.—Some imagine that Mesa sacrificed his son to the God of Israel, in imitation of Abraham; (Joseph. Grot.) others, that he slew the son of the king of Edom, out of revenge. Kimchi, in Amos ii. 1.—The Heb. is ambiguous. Amama.—But interpreters generally believe, that the heir of Mesa fell a victim (C.) to his father’s mistaken zeal, or to his desire to make the enemy retire, when they saw him reduced to such a state of desperation. It had, at least, this effect. H.—Indignation, at such a cruel action. M.—Sept. “there was great repentance” and sorrow. The text may also imply, that God was displeased at Israel for pushing the king to such an extremity; or, they became an object of horror to the surrounding nations. C.—The first explanation seems the best; as the Israelites thought the king had been sufficiently punished, and therefore retired. They had no reason to suspect that he would have given way to such madness, nor were they to blame for it. H.

Ver. 1. Prophets. Josephus (ix. 4.) intimates that this man was Abdias; (3 K. 18:13) and the Rabbins pretend that Joram was the creditor. But these traditions are destitute of proof; and we know not that Abdias was a prophet. C.—Serve him, not as slaves, for the Hebrews were not thus to be sold, except they had committed some crime. Salien, A.C. 913. See Lev. 25:39.—But the condition of mercenaries was perhaps little different; (H.) and we find that people were sold for debt. Ex. 21:7. Isai. 50:1. The same practice seems to have continued till our Saviour's time. Matt. 18:25. Children were regarded as part of a person's property. Halicar. ii. p. 96. Plut. in Solon et Lucullus. The custom of selling children continued for a long time in our islands.

Ver. 2. Anoint me, for delicacy or health. Matt. 6:17. M.—To abstain from this unction, in the East, was a great mortification. 2 K. 14:2. Deut. 28:40. Sanctius supposes, that the woman intended the oil to anoint her body for interment. Matt. 26:12. Heb. asuc, occurs nowhere else, and my signify a pot, or “skin of oil.” The woman had nothing else. The original does not say what she intended to do with it. C.—She might use it for food: (3 K. 17:12) but the Sept. agree with the Vulg. H.

Ver. 6. Stood. The grace of God ceases to flow, when the soul is full of vanity. S. Bern.—Charity does not increase, when it bestows nothing. S. Aug. ser. 206. de Temp.

Ver. 8. Sunam, the birth-place of the beautiful virgin Abisag, (3 K. 1:3) at the foot of Thabor, (C.) and not above a mile from Carmel, v. 23. T.—Great woman, “renowned for piety” (Arab.) and riches, v. 13. T. M.—“Fearing sins.” Chal. This was true greatness! H.—Eliseus often passed by her house, when he went to visit the colleges at Bethel, Jericho, &c. M.

Ver. 10. Chamber. Heb. adds, “on the wall,” (H.) or surrounded “with walls,” at the top of the house, where strangers usually lodged. C.—After being entertained the first day with the family, they might retire, and live, as if they were at home; some presents being sent to them daily, at least among the Greeks of rank. Vitruv. vi. 10.—The apartment of Eliseus might be separate from the house, that he might be less distracted in his meditations. M. Vatable.—Candlestick, on

Ver. 13. He said, or “he had said;” (Junius and Piscator) so that we may include this and the following verse within a parenthesis, as alluding to what had passed before; (C.) unless the woman, out of modesty, did not come into the chamber of the prophet, who addressed her by an interpreter, (M.) or servant. H.—Army. Eliseus had acquired great influence with Joram, in the war with Moab. C.—The ancient canons exhort bishops to present the petitions of the poor to the prince. Grotius.—People. I have nothing to fear, (H.) and am not in want. T.—I have no quarrel with any person. C.—I am of too mean a condition to have anything to do at court. Abul.

Ver. 14. No son. The desire of one was very natural, particularly to people in good circumstances (M.) and of the Hebrew nation. H.

Ver. 16. Womb. Heb. “At this season, according to the time of life, (H. or of a woman with child, M.) thou shalt embrace a son” in thy arms. H. See Gen. 18:10. C.—If is added by S. Jerom, agreeably to an usual form of speaking. M.—The prophet assures the woman, that she will not only live, but also bear a son, and nurse him.—Lie, deceive, (v. 28. H.) or flatter me with vain hopes. C. She might think that the prophet was not actually inspired. M.—Through joy, she could hardly believe. See Luke 24:41. H.

Ver. 19. Carry. This interpretation suits with the occasion, and is conformable to the Sept. and Chal. M.—Lit. “conduct him,” but he was sick and little. H.

Ver. 21. Bed, esteeming it as a relic, (H.) or wishing to excite the man of God to pray for her child, and to conceal its death from her husband. M.

Ver. 23. Moon, a day of devotion, (Num. 10:10. C.) or probably of obligation, like the sabbath, on which no long journey could be undertaken, (T. v. 8.) unless for the sake of piety, (Ex. 26:8) as Sunam is a place six or seven leagues, (C.) or eight hours’ walk from Carmel. Adrichom. M.—Piety was not so far decayed in Israel but many fervent souls still went to hear the prophets. C. It seems this woman had often made such journeys. M.—Go. Heb. “peace.” Prot. “it shall be well.” let me depart. She is unwilling to reveal the reason of her journey; but her husband was so well convinced of her virtue, that he placed no obstacle in her way. Perhaps he might partly guess what was the matter, as he had sent the child home sick, and saw his wife so desirous to visit the prophet. H.

Ver. 24. And do. Heb. “unless I bid thee.” Some translate, “urge me not to get up, unless,” &c. Chal. Arab. &c. They suppose that she went on foot, and that the ass was designed for Eliseus. Vatab.

Ver. 26. Well. She declines mentioning what she wanted to the servant, in order that she might speak to the prophet in person. M.—She might also rationally hope that the child was well in another world. H.

Ver. 27. Her. Being aware of the extreme circumspection and modesty of his master.—Told me. Hence it appears that the prophets were not inspired at all times, 2 K. 7:3. “that they might be sensible that what they had was a gift of God.” S. Greg. hom. in 11 Ezech.

Ver. 28. A son. Better had it been for me not to have become a mother, than to be so soon delivered of my child. M.

Ver. 29. Salute him not. He that is sent to raise to life the sinner spiritually dead, must not suffer himself to be called off, or diverted from his enterprise, by the salutations or ceremonies of the world. Ch.—So must the preachers of the gospel diligently fulfil their important office. Luke 10:4. S. Greg. hom. 17. Urbanity is not reprehended; but no human transaction ought to impede what is divine. S. Amb. ib. In ancient comedies, slaves are always represented in a hurry. The Jews will not salute any person when they are going to their synagogues, for fear of being distracted in their devotions. C.—Eliseus requires the utmost expedition, that the favour might be the greater, Qui cito dat, bis dat. M.—He would also prevent his servant from telling any one what he was about, that he might not be touched with vanity, and thus hinder the miracle, which some think was nevertheless the case. R. Salomon. Theod. q. 17. T.

Ver. 31. The child is not risen. By the staff of Eliseus is represented the rod of Moses, or the old law, which was incapable of restoring life to mankind, then dead by sin. It was necessary that Christ himself should come in our flesh, to restore us to life again. In this, Eliseus, as a figure of Christ, behaved to go in person to restore the dead child to life. Ch.—S. Aug. (c. Faust. xii. 35.) shews that many like things recorded in the Old Testament are figures of the New. W.—Many of the fathers observe, that this miracle was intended to shew the necessity of the Incarnation to redeem lost man. The staff did not therefore restore life. Some lay the blame on Giezi; others on the woman, who required the prophet to come in person; and others suppose that Eliseus followed herein his own spirit. But all this is destitute of proof. C.—He might alter his mind (T.) at the request of the woman, and to imitate Elias; (3 K. 17:21) all by God’s direction. H.

—He had before trusted that God would perform the miracle by means of the staff, as he did formerly by the rod of Moses, or by the mantle of Elias. M.

Ver. 34. Warm. Arab. adds, “by his breath,” as when God breathed a soul into Adam. Theodor. q. 18.—Some Greek interpreters have, “he breathed upon him,” &c.

Ver. 35. Upon him. Sept. “he breathed,” &c. C.—Other copies, (Alex. and Vat.) “he bent down upon the child seven times, and the child opened his eyes.”—Gaped. Prot. “sneezed;” (H.) in which interpretation, Junius, Mont. &c. agree. Arab. “he turned his eyes about seven times.” Others, “he trembled,” (C.) or sighed; (M.) or Eliseus “clasped him in his arms,” &c. The child died of a headache; (v. 19.) and sneezing is accounted good for alleviating the pain. Sternutamenta capitis gravedinem emendant. Pliny xxviii. 6. C.

Ver. 37. Ground. To honour the saint, who had done her such a kindness. M.

Ver. 38. Galgal, where he had been often before.—Dwelt. Heb. “sat,” like disciples attending to the instructions of their master. Acts 22:3. C.—To one, &c. Heb. and Sept. “to his servant,” Giezi. M.—Eliseus provided for the temporal as well as for the spiritual wants of his followers. H.—The famine had been sent by God, to punish the idolatry of the people. C. 8:1. M.

Ver. 39. Wild herbs. Heb. oroth. Sept. αρωθ, may denote any thing that could be “gathered.”—Gourds: colocynthides. They resembled cucumbers; but were so bitter, that they were styled, “the gall of the earth.” Vallesius, (Phil. c. 36.) who observes, that a small quantity may cause death, (c. 37.) and that the remedy used by the prophet was supernatural; though Lemnius (c. 7.) asserts, that the mixture of barley-flour would take away the bitterness. T.—It has, in effect, that tendency; but the hand of God must still be acknowledged. C.

Ver. 40. Death, poison, &c. Matthiæ accounts this fruit poisonous.

Ver. 42. Baalsalisa, 15 miles south of Diospolis, and to the north of Jerusalem. C.—His scrip. Hebrew bctsiklono. Prot. “in the husk thereof.” Carmel, means a greenish ear of corn, (H.) which might be rubbed in the hand, and so eaten. C.

Ver. 43. Men. The disciples of Christ found the like difficulty. Jo. 6:9. M.—God multiplied the provisions for these 100 men, (C.) living in the community at Galgal. H.

Ver. 1. King, Benadad, who had defeated Achab, and was slain by Hazael; (C. 8. T.) or, according to Salien, Hazael was already king. M.—Josephus passes over this history. It is not known for what reason, (C.) unless he was staggered at the petition of Naaman, v. 18. 19. H.—Syria. The Rabbins say, by killing Achab. 3 K. 22:34. But their authority is very small; (H.) and he might signalize himself on many other occasions.—Leper. This malady did not exclude him from court. The Hebrews allowed such to appear in public, till the priests had declared them unclean; and other nations viewed the leprosy with less horror.

Ver. 2. Robbers; soldiers. T. 2 K. 4:2.—Such invaded the dominions of Joachin. C. 24:2. Irruptions of this nature were then very common, (see Judg. 11:3. Job 1:15) and regarded as noble military exploits. When the Greeks first became acquainted with navigation, they exercised themselves in this manner; (Thucyd. l.) and the Germans allowed their citizens to take from other people. Juventutis exercendæ ac desidie minuendæ causâ. Cæsar. Bel. Gal. vi. Those who had been plundered, were allowed to redeem their goods. Strabo xi.—The Arabs still maintain their right to live upon their neighbours. C.—The Christian religion has introduced more gentle manners.—Maid. It seems, however, she was well informed of the miraculous powers and goodness of Eliseus. H.

Ver. 5. Raiment; the tunic and the cloak, (C.) of a finer sort. T.

Ver. 7. Leprosy. The cure was deemed very difficult; as it generally kept gaining ground, and destroyed the constitution. See Num. 12:12. Isai. 53:4. C.—Me. The letter was, in effect, written in a haughty style, (M.) and the king might naturally infer that war would be the consequence. H.

Ver. 8. Israel; able to perform much greater wonders, by God's assistance. M.

Ver. 10. Messenger. Eliseus supports the dignity of God's envoy, and shews the general that his cure was to be attributed, not to the presence of the prophet, but to the will and goodness of God.

Ver. 12. Pharphar. Benjamin (p. 53) informs us that the former river serves to water the city, and the second the surrounding gardens. Maundrell could discover no vestiges of these names in Syria, but he describes the Barrady, which supplies Damascus with abundance of water. Stephanus calls it Bardine; and others, the Chrysorroas. The Orontes, which is supposed to be one of these rivers, flows by Antioch into the Mediterranean sea. C.

Ver. 13. Father; a title given to masters, kings, &c. The Romans senators were styled, “conscript fathers;” and Homer calls kings “the fathers and shepherds of the people.” See Gen. 45:8. C.—Masters may often derive benefit from the observations of their servants, as Naaman did repeatedly, v. 2. This may serve to correct their pride. H.—Clean. The patient ought not to prescribe rules to his physician. M.—How justly might these words be addressed to delicate penitents! H.

Ver. 14. Clean. If bathing seven times in the Jordan had been an infallible remedy, there would soon have been no lepers in the land; and our Saviour plainly intimates that the cure was miraculous. Luke 4:27. The leprosy of Naaman, though inveterate, was cured in an instant. To bathe in a rapid stream, is allowed to be very salutary for removing the diseases of the skin. C. Vales. 38.—The fathers discover in this miracle, a figure of the Gentiles called to the faith by the Synagogue, which is in servitude. Gal. 4:25. Baptism cleanses us from all the seven capital sins, (Tert. c. Marc. 4.) so that no vestiges remain. S. Amb. &c. C.

Ver. 15. A blessing. A present, (Ch.) accompanied with wishes of happiness, on both sides. We have seen that the prophets generally received such presents. But Eliseus acts with more reserve in regard of this stranger, as S. Paul did towards the new converts; though he received some sustenance from those, who would be less in danger of suspecting that he was actuated by selfish views in preaching the gospel. 2 Cor. 10:7 and 12:14. Matt. 10:8. C.—They abstained from every appearance of evil, (H.) though they might lawfully have accepted such presents. Eliseus wished to convince Naaman that God’s grace was not to be purchased, and to leave a lesson of moderation to future teachers. M.

Ver. 17. Mule; (burdonum,) the offspring of a horse and of an ass. M.—Earth, to make brick for an altar, or to inclose within a box of brass, as was done in the altar of holocausts in the desert; or, in fine, to sprinkle on some clean place, where an altar might be erected, in honour of the true God. He does not inquire what ceremonies were used in the land of Israel, (C.) as he was not enrolled by circumcision, among the Hebrews, as an observer of their law; but intended to serve God, like Job, and many other righteous Gentiles, who kept themselves clear of idolatry, and observed the ancient patriarchal religion with a clean heart. H.—As God had sanctified the land by the observance of his true religion, Naaman rightly judged that it was fitter for an altar than the earth of his own country. W.—The Jews had a particular veneration for it. Ps. 101:15. They built a synagogue in Persia, with earth and stones taken from Jerusalem. Benjamin.—Christians sometimes carry away the same earth. S. Aug. de C. xxii. 8. Turon. i. 7.—The Donatists had a sovereign respect for it; (S. Aug. ep. 52.) and it is said that S. Helena brought a great quantity to the church of the Holy Cross of Jerusalem, at Rome. Mabillon, Itin. p. 187. C.—Lord. Out of Palestine, the Gentiles were not prohibited to offer sacrifice to the true God any where; nor were they under any obligation of following the law of Moses. Abulens. T.

Ver. 18. Remmon, denotes “a pomegranate,” or something “elevated,” and is probably an epithet of the sun, the chief idol of the Syrians, which was also styled Adad, “one,” as both are united. Zach. 12:11.—Rempham is probably the same divinity. Acts 7:43. Sept. here read, Remman. Hesychius explains Ramas, “the highest god.” Selden thinks the Elion of the Phœnicians is understood; Grotius, that Saturn, the highest of the planets, is meant. Serarius declares for Venus, to whom pomegranates were sacred; and P. Martyr for Juno, who held one of these apples in her hand. Pausan. in Corinth.—Remmon occurs nowhere else.—Hand. This was an honour of the chief favourite. C. 7:2. C.—Thing. He does not ask leave to commit sin, which would be absurd; though Protestants are not ashamed to accuse the Catholic Church, as if her “indulgences” were pardons for sins to come; though they be in reality no pardon for sin at all, but only a remission of temporal punishment, after the sin has been remitted by penance. Why do they not manfully attack what we really profess to believe?—When he. Heb. “when I bow,” &c. H.

Ver. 19. Go in peace. What the prophet here allowed, was not an outward conformity to an idolatrous worship, but only a service which by his office he cowed to his master; who, on all public occasions, leaned on him: so that his bowing down when his master bowed himself down, was not in effect adoring the idols; nor was it so understood by the standers by, (since he publicly professed himself a worshipper of the only true and living God) but it was no more than doing a civil office to the king, his master, whose leaning upon him obliged him to bow at the same time that he bowed. Ch.—Some assert that the prophet does not even authorize this civil assistance in the temple of idols, but simply tells Naaman to go in peace, and to think no more of his former religion; that he will beseech the Lord not to suffer him to be exposed to the danger. Jun. and Piscat. C.—Some formerly pleaded this example, to excuse their occasional conformity in going to the Protestant churches, as the law required. But the case was very different. Greater perfection is required in the new law. They had not to act in the capacity of Naaman; and their attendance was considered a profession of a false religion. Their directors loudly condemned the practice. They ought rather to have imitated Eleazar, &c. who refused to eat swine's flesh. 2 Mac. 6 and 7. W.—Though the king intended to adore the idol, Naaman referred his worship, to God alone. Bristow, Mot. 23. Theodoret, q. 19 and a Greek interpreter.—The Heb. term signifies, either to adore mentally, or to bend down; which latter is the sense applicable to Naaman. Cajet. Amama.—His “request must certainly refer to the time past, and not to that to come; as if he begged an indulgence in idolatry, or of countenancing his master's idol-worship, by his presence.” Button, Dict.—The Jews foolishly pretend (C.) that “the proselyte of dwelling,” like Naaman, might return to the service of idols, in his own country, without its being imputed to him. Seld. Jur. ii. 11. Maimon.—The conduct of the Syrian convert, whether past or future, undoubtedly filled him with alarm. If he considered the danger of a merely civil attendance upon the king, in an idolatrous temple, we cannot condemn him for idle scrupulosity; (H.) since many have found a difficulty in admitting the lawfulness of such a practice, and have even blamed both Naaman and the prophet. Greg. de Valentia, &c. ep. A. Lapide. C.—But if the practice was irreprehensible, as most interpreters assert, the answer of Eliseus might give this assurance to Naaman, and inform him that he need be under no farther apprehension on that account. God in peace. These words do not expressly solve the difficulty; but he mode in which they were uttered might intimate, either that the general would be no longer under that embarrassment, (as we do not read that he ever attended the king of Syria into the temple afterwards) or that God had forgiven his former offences, and particularly the scandalous idolatry which now gave him so much pain. The original, v. 18, which is generally translated in the present of future, (H.) may be better rendered in the past tense, as the Chal. has it. “In this thing the Lord pardon thy servant. My master going into the temple of Remmon to worship there, and leaning upon my hand, and I worshipped in the temple of Remmon, when I did worship in the temple of Remmon, that the Lord pardon,” &c. S. Jerom and the Sept. seem to have read more correctly, when he, &c. We may also render it in the present tense, “and I worship,” or, “am wont to adore;” not that he meant to prevaricate any longer. The Syr. and Arab. read with an interrogation. “When I shall adore ... (C. or bow down, H.) wil the Lord pardon me?” But this rather increases the difficulty. C.—We may therefore conclude either that Naaman had no decision, or that he had leave to serve his master, (H.) in a civil capacity even in the temple; (M. T. Alex. 2. dis. 7. Santius, &c.) or, that he obtained pardon for his past transgressions. Bochart, C. &c.—Earth, as the expression is rendered Gen. 35:16, though here it is lit. “at the chosen season;” electo, not verno. The sense is the same. Cibrath, untranslated by the Sept. may denote a certain space, or village; (H.) “a furrow,” of 240 feet long, and half that breadth; (C.) “a mile;” (Chal. Pagnin) or a portion of time allowed by the law, about a quarter of an hour, during which a mile, or sabbath-day’s journey, might be performed. T.—Prot. “a little way.”

Ver. 20. Liveth. How unnecessary was this oath! But the Simoniac has no regard for any thing but money. H.

Ver. 23. Him. The weight must have been considerable, (6000 sicles, v. 26. Ex. 38:25. H.) otherwise Giezi would have preferred carrying them himself, that his master might not know. C.—He had pretended a reluctance to take more than one talent, not to swerve from his master’s injunctions. M.

Ver. 24. Evening. Sept. Syr. &c. seems to have read aupol, instead of the present Heb. hopel, eminence,” (C.) Prot. “tower,” (H.) at or near Samaria; when Giezi thought proper to take the burden himself to prevent detection. Eliseus would hardly dismiss the Syrians, when the night was so near at hand. C.—It might however be found more eligible to travel in the evening, (H.) as it was now the spring or summer season, (T.) or at least warm, v. 10. H.

Ver. 26. Present is not expressed in Heb. but must be understood. Prot. “Went not mine heart with thee.” H.—God has revealed the whole transaction to me. M.—Heart in Scripture, often denotes the spirit or soul. H.

Ver. 27. For ever. Not perhaps to those who might be already born, unless they were accomplices in the crime. The leprosy is hereditary. Giezi was punished for simony, in selling the miracle, as well as for lying and disobedience. C.—He might also have given occasion to Naaman to judge ill of his master; as the false prophets were noted for such avarice. Mic. 3:11. But Eliseus would probably take care to give him better information. T.—He did not require his servant to give up what he had unjustly received, as the general had made over the property to him; and he thought proper to leave it in the hands of Giezi, to indemnify him for past services, and that he might have wherewith to support himself, as he now dismissed him from his company. Salien, A.C. 903.—Snow, and therefore more incurable. T.—See Lev. 13. C.—“All the covetous and misers, together with their riches, possess the leprosy of Giezi:” thesaurum criminum congregarunt. S. Amb. Giezi prefigured Judas, the false apostles of Christ, and all those who buy or sell spiritual things. By their avarice, they procure infamy in this world, and damnation in the next. S. Aug. ep. 208, de Temp. W.

4 KINGS 6

Ver. 2. Timber. Heb. and Sept. “a beam.” Salien supposes that these prophets resided at Galgal. M.

Ver. 5. Borrowed. He was grieved because he could not repair the loss. W.

Ver. 6. Swam. So; Demersam fluvio relevavit virga securim. (Tert. c. Marc.) The Fathers here remark a figure of the cross of Jesus Christ; the virtue of which, in baptism, reclaims the hardened sinner from the ways of vanity. Tert. c. Judæos xiii. C.—Those who would explain the reason of every miracle, may here inform the infidel why recourse was had to a supernatural interference, in a matter apparently of such a trifling nature. They ask why God should cause the eyes of various pictures in Italy to move on a late occasion; and because they cannot assign a satisfactory reason, they boldly assert that all was an imposture. But this mode of argumentation is very delusive, if not impious. “Who hat been his (God’s) counsellor?” Rom. 11:34. All that we have to do is to believe, when the proofs are of such a nature as to require our rational assent.

Ver. 8. And such, which the king would mention. M.—The causes of this war are not known; but an ambitious prince always finds pretexts to cover his injustice. C.

Ver. 10. Twice, but very frequently: so that the Syrian feared some treachery. H.

Ver. 12. Chamber. It is difficult therefore for the saints in heaven to hear our prayers? though they have not such long ears as Calvin ridicules. H.

Ver. 13. Take him. Foolish attempt! as if the prophet could not foresee his own danger. Salien.—Dothan or Dothain, (Gen. 37:17) twelve miles north of Samaria. (Eus. C.) Andrichomius says, in the tribe of Zabulon. M.

Ver. 14. Of an, or, “of the army.” To take one man was judged of such consequence; and Benadad feared lest the Israelites should rise up in his defence. H.

Ver. 15. Servant, Giezi; as his leprosy is placed too soon. Salien. M.

Ver. 17. Of fire. The angels assumed such a glorious and terrible appearance. One of them would have sufficed to destroy all the army of Syria; and thus the servant might be convinced how vain were all attempts against God's servants, Psalm 144:19. Salien, A.C. Christ 907. Jacob beheld such camps of angels, (Gen. 32:1, 2.) and our Saviour speaks of the legions which he could have brought forward, Mat. 26:53. C.

Ver. 18. Blindness. The blindness here spoken of was of a particular kind, which hindered them from seeing the objects that were really before them; and represented other different object to their imagination; so that they no longer perceived the city of Dothan, nor were able to know the person of Eliseus; but were easily led by him, whom they took to be another man, to Samaria. So that he truly told them; this is not the way, neither is this the city, &c. because he spoke with relation to the way, and to the city which was represented to them. Ch.—Stratagems in war are lawful. S. Chrys, &c. Grot. Jur. iii. 1. 17. The words of the prophet might be merely ironical.—Blindness, Sept. ἀορασία, “not seeing” certain objects, while they could perceive others; as was the case of the men who sought Lot's door at Sodom; (Gen. 19:11. C.) and the eyes of the disciples were held, that they might not know our Saviour. Eliseus had left his house, going towards Samaria to meet the soldiers; and when they asked him where the prophet dwelt, he answered truly, This, &c. For he was then near the royal city, and is above was at Dothan. Salien. H.—The reprobate will thus acknowledge their error, when it is too late, at the last day.

Ver. 22. For thou. Heb. “Dost thou kill, &c.?” If those who have surrendered themselves in battle be often spared, though they might be slain by the strict laws of war, how much less ought these men to be treated with such severity? C.—Sicut bellanti & resistenti violentia redditur: ita victo vel capto misericordia jam debetur. S. Aug. ep. 1. ad Bonif. Grot.—And water, all necessary provisions. W.—These men were suffered to live that they might relate the wonders of God. Theod. q. 20.

Ver. 23. Meats. So the apostle orders us to treat our enemies, Rom. 12:20.—The robbers, these soldiers, who were dismissed. H.—No more, (ultra) or, “no farther.” (H.) during this war, or in small troops; but, a little later, Benadad came with all his forces to besiege Samaria. T.—He was enraged at Eliseus and Joram, as if they despised his power. Salien.

Ver. 25. In Samaria. It had raged in all the country above three years, (Salien) and continued other four, C. 8:1. The continuance of the siege added fresh horrors.—Pieces is not expressed in Heb.: a sicle is understood. H.—Lyran supposes that the whole ass was sold for about 38 crowns, (H.) or 130 livres; as we say commonly, “so much a head.” But interpreters generally assert that the price of the head alone is given; which shews more forcibly the greatness of the famine. On other occasions the animal could not be eaten by the Jews. Artaxerxes was forced to kill his beasts of burden; and an ass’s head was then sold for 60 drachms, or 25 livres. When Hannibal besieged Casilinum, a mouse (or rat) was sold for above 70, or for 200 denari. Plin. viii. 57. V. Max. vii. 6, 3.—Cabe. Sufficient measure of corn for a man’s daily sustenance. M.—The fourth part would be about a gill. H.—Dung. Bochart maintains that “chick-peas” are designated. The Arab. usnen and kali, “pigeon or sparrows’ dung,” are real eatables. Those who suppose that the Samaritans bought the dung of pigeons to use as salt or for food, or to burn, or to manure the earth, &c. produce not satisfactory reasons; no more than the Rabbins, who pretend that the corn which they had picked up was taken from their crop. Tr. Megil. 3. and the Schol. History. Junius and Fuller would translate “belly,” which is refuted by Bochart, Anim. T. ii. B. i. 7. Very disgusting things have often been used through extreme hunger, (Grot.) and some sort of birds’ dung is said to fatten oxen and swine, Varro 38. Pliny xvii. 9.—But what nutriment can there be in that of pigeons, that people should go to buy it? C.—Houbigant understands a sort of peas is meant. H.—The Hebrews called them kali when they were parched; and such food was very common. 2 K. 17:28. Bellon. ii. 53, and 99. C.

Ver. 27. Save (salvat.) Many ancient MSS. read salvet, conformably to the Heb. and Sept. as if the king cursed the woman: “Let not the Lord save thee,” Joseph. ix. 4. Others place the stops differently: “He said, no: the Lord save thee.” C.—He is the author of life. M.

Ver. 29. Eat him. Strange cruelty! foretold Deut. 28:53, and again verified at Jerusalem. Ezech. 5:10.

Ver. 30. Passed by, without punishing such a horrid crime, as he esteemed his own sins the occasion of it. M.—Flesh. Behold the advantage to be derived from afflictions! They make the most hardened enter into sentiments of humility and penance. C.—Abulensis thinks that God was pleased to cause the siege to be raised, to reward this act; as a similar one of Joram’s father had merited a delay and mitigation of punishment, (H.) 3 K. 21:27. Salien.

Ver. 31. Day. This was said in a fit of sudden passion, which may give us reason to conclude that the repentance was insincere, or of short duration. H.—The king supposed that he Eliseus could remedy the evil: but God was not moved by his prayers to grant such a favour, till all were convinced that human aid was fruitless. C.—The prophet might have answered Joram in the words of Elias, 3 K. 18:18. M.—Probably he had dissuaded the king from making peace. T.

Ver. 32. Murderer. Achab had slain Naboth, and Jezabel had destroyed the prophets. C.

Ver. 33. And he, Joram, (M. &c.) after (H.) his messenger. E. Pisc.—What, &c. All is desperate; (C.) our miseries cannot increase. M.—I have nothing now to fear or to hope for. Salien.

Ver. 1. A stater. It is the same as a sicel or shekel. Ch.—As it is in Heb. and Sept.—Bushel, or “measure,” H. above 9 pints.—Gate, where the market place commonly was. C.

Ver. 2. Lords. Heb. shalish, “an officer” of the first rank, Ex. 14:7. Sept. τριστατης, which Josephus explains of one who “commands a third part of the army.” C.—Flood-gates. If corn should fall with the same abundance as water does from the cataracts of the Nile; or, Heb. “if the Lord should make windows,” &c. to pour it down, (C.) could it possibly be so cheap? M.—Thereof. Thus his incredulity was punished, v. 17. Salien.—Reason must not pretend to reach the power of God, but ought to believe what he says. W.

Ver. 3. Lepers. They were excluded from society, though the laws of religion were ill observed in Israel. The Rabbins say, these four were Giezi and his three sons. C.—But this is without foundation, (H.) as Giezi was not yet a leper. C. 8:5.—Salien places that judgment two years later. H.

Ver. 5. Evening. Heb. “twilight.”—First part, where the advanced guard should be, or the nearest tents.

Ver. 6. Hethites. Sept. “Chetteans.” Joseph. “the islands” of Cyprus, &c. He seems to have read Cethim in the text, as they peopled Cyprus. C.—See Jer. 2:10. M.—These Hethites seem to have dwelt in the stony Arabia, (Judg. 1:26) or in Syria. H.—Solomon had connexions with them, 3 K. 10:29. C.—Angels made the noise of a mighty army, and probably appeared, as they had done to Giezi. C. 6:17. T.

Ver. 9. Crime, and punished. Heb. “iniquity shall find us.” Citizens are bound to give notice of what may tend to the common good. C.—Court. Not in person, but by means of others. M.

Ver. 10. Tied to the mangers, or rather by the hind-legs, as it is still the custom in the East. Xenop. Anab. iii. Martyr legat. Babyl.

Ver. 13. Consumed, for food. M.—Sept. “Let them take five of the horses left. Those which are left here, behold they are to all the remaining multitude of Israel, and let us send them.” They have read in a different manner from the present Heb. which has, “Let them take five of the horses there remaining; behold they are like all the multitude of Israel who are lost; let us send them.” Arab. “Let us send thither five horsemen who remain; if they escape, we shall look upon them as those Israelites who continue alive; if they perish, they well be numbered with the other Israelites who are dead.” Both horses and horsemen were dreadfully lean, and they could not expect a better fate than those already consumed by famine. C.—The truth of the report ought at least to be fully ascertained. By following the timid advice of the king no prospect of redress appeared. At last the king consented to send two horsemen. H. Sept. v. 14. Jun. &c.

Ver. 14. Horses. Heb. “chariot horses,” or two chariots with (each) two horses, as it was customary to go to war, and to travel on chariots. C.

Ver. 17. Gate, to prevent confusion and accidents, (Josephus) or to guard against any return of the enemy. M.

4 KINGS 8

Ver. 1. Famine. God disposes of all things. C.—Famine, &c. are his executioners. D.—This dreadful visitation took place before the siege of Samaria, (Salien) and had even commenced when Eliseus raise the child to life; (C. 4:38) so that we might translate, “Eliseus had spoken,” &c. C.

Ver. 3. Lands, which others had seized. D.

Ver. 4. Giezi was not yet infected; (Salien. M.) or if he was, (H.) the king spoke to him at a distance, overcoming his natural repugnance, in order to know some particulars of the life of Eliseus. C.—This he would more readily do, if Giezi had brought the glad tidings of plenty. T.—Providence ordered that he should be present at this time, that he might bear witness to the woman. C.

Ver. 6. Restore. “Restituere est possessorem facere fructusque reddere.” Caius.—Some think that the lands had been confiscated to the king, as being abandoned; or his authority was requisite, at least, to make the present occupiers give them up.

Ver. 7. Damascus, the territory, (v. 8.) to announce the king’s death, and to anoint Hazael, as God had ordered Elias, 3 K. 19:15. C.—Sick, at the ill success of his late expedition. Josephus. T.

Ver. 9. Camels. It does not appear that Eliseus rejected these presents. M.—Thy son. The kings of Israel and Juda styled the prophet father, and this title was given by Christians of antiquity to bishops and priests.

Ver. 10. Tell him: Thou shalt recover. By these words the prophet signified that the king’s disease was not mortal: and that he would recover, if no violence were used. Or he might only express himself in this manner, by way of giving Hazael to understand that he knew both what he would say and do; that he would indeed tell the king he should recover, but would be himself the instrument of his death. Ch.—The imperative is often used for the future tense. Gloss iii. 3. Jo. 2:19. The present Heb. reads, “Thou shalt not live: for,” &c. which removes the difficulty. But the Chal. Sept. Syr. &c. agree with the Vulgate, (C.) as the Prot. version also does. “Thou mayst certainly recover, howbeit the Lord,” &c. H.—Lo, “not,” in the Heb. text, seems however preferable to the marginal reading, lu, “to him.” This mistake has been sometimes made elsewhere, and ought to be carefully examined. Kennicott 1 Par. 11:20.

Ver. 11. Blush. This may be referred either to Hazael, who was astonished at the words and looks of the prophet, (H.) or to Eliseus. M.—Sept. Complut. “and Hazael stood before his face, and he displayed the presents before him, till he blushed, and the,” &c. Though this has the appearance of a gloss, it is perhaps more conformable to the Heb. and to an ancient Greek version. C.—Prot. “he settled his countenance steadfastly, until he was ashamed.”

Ver. 13. A dog. He speaks with indignation, as if he could not be so brutal; (T.) or he could not yet think that he should be king. C.—He afterwards proved as cruel as the prophet had signified. C. 10:32. Amos 1:3. C.

Ver. 15. Blanket. Heb. macber, a word which the Sept. retain. H.—It denotes a hairy coverlet, pillow, &c. Tiberius and Frederic II. met with the like fate. C.—Some think that Hazael was only guilty of imprudence; (M.) or that Benadad killed himself; as the Heb. might be rendered, if the sequel did not evince that his death was caused by Hazael's malice. C.—He might pretend that the wet cloth would give Benadad refreshment. H.—But it would bring on present death, with most exquisite torture. T.—The names of both these kings were in great veneration among the Syrians, who paid them divine honours. Joseph. ix. 4.—Perhaps they might not know that the latter had been guilty of such a base murder. H.

Ver. 16. Fifth. Houbigant would read “third,” p. 100. See C. 1:17. H.—Josaphat. That is, Josaphat being yet alive, who some time before his death made his son Joram king; as David had done before by his son Solomon. Ch.—The words are omitted in some copies of the Sept. (D.) and are perhaps inserted from the end of the verse. H.—Prot. “Jehosaphat being then king,” in his 22d year. H.—Joram had been appointed viceroy in the sixteenth year of his father's reign, and was now raised to sit on the throne with him. Thus the Scripture may be reconciled. C.

Ver. 18. Achab, Athalia. She led her husband into all wickedness. T. 2 Par. 21.

Ver. 19. Light, or lamp, posterity and regal power, 3 K. 11:36. H.

Ver. 20. King. The one under Josaphat was dependant, C. 3:9. 3 K. 22:48. Thus the prediction of Jacob was verified, (Gen. 27:40. C.) and Joram punished. H.

Ver. 21. Seira, or Idumea. Gen. 14:6.—Defeated. The Syriac and Arab. explain it in a contrary sense, as the Heb. may well signify, and the sequel seems to prove, as the Edomites became independent. Heb. “He rose ... and attacked Edom that surrounded him, (with superior numbers) and the princes ... and the people (of Israel) fled.” But the text will also bear the sense of the Vulg. which is conformable to 2 Par. 21:9, which does not say the people, &c. though these words may be understood of the Edomites. Joram could not derive such advantage from his victory, as to reduce the nation under his obedience. C.

Ver. 22. Day, when Jeremias, the author lived. Tostat.—Lobna, a frontier town bordering on Idumea. It was a strong place assigned to priests; but strangers had probably again taken possession of it, and caused it now to revolt. The kings of Juda had retaken it when Sennacherib laid siege to the place. See C. 19:8. Josue 10:30 and 21:13.

Ver. 24. Slept, after a lingering and painful illness of two years' continuance. Joram was not buried in the tomb of the other kings, nor were perfumes burnt over his corpse; (C.) as his memory was abhorred. 2 Par. 21.

Ver. 25. Twelfth, more correctly than "the eleventh." C. 9:29. Houbigant.

Ver. 26. Twenty. In 2 Paral. 22:2, we read forty, by mistake of the transcribers, as Ochozias, (Joachaz, or Azarias, 2 Par. 21:17) would thus be older than his father, who died at the age of forty. 2 Par. 21:20. All the original versions, and many copies of the Sept. read "twenty-two" in both passages; and those who would admit no mistake, are forced to have recourse to explanations which can give no satisfaction. De Dieu would include in the reign of Ochozias the six years of Athalia's usurpation, and the thirteen of Joas, during his minority. Others would date from the separation of the two kingdoms, &c. But would the Holy Ghost cause the same fact to be recorded in two places in such a different manner? The best chronologists acknowledge a mistake in the Hebrew text of Paral. (Cajet. Salien, Petau, T. &c. C.) as the letters which denote these numbers are not unlike (Mariana:) c (20) might easily be exchanged for m (40.) H.—Daughter. That is, grand-daughter; for she was daughter of Achab, son of Amri, v. 18. (Ch.) unless she was only adopted by Achab. W.

Ver. 28. Galaad. The same city had proved fatal to Achab, 3 K. 22. Joram took it, but received (C.) many wounds; so that he left Jehu to attack the citadel. The latter was anointed king, and acknowledged by the army. He immediately proceeded to Jezrahel, and put his master to death. H.

Ver. 1. One. The Rabbins say Jonas; who at this rate, must have been very young, as he prophesied 50 years afterwards, under Jeroboam II. C.—Eliseus did not go himself, to avoid giving umbrage, and in obedience to God's order. M.

Ver. 2. Brethren. The captains, v. 5.

Ver. 3. Bottle. See 1 K. 10:1. Elias had received orders to anoint Jehu, 3 K. 19:16. C.—There. The utmost expedition was necessary, that Joram might be surprised, as well as Ochozias, and their devoted families. M.

Ver. 7. Jezabel, who had persecuted the prophets unto death, 3 K. 18:4.

Ver. 8. Israel. See Deut. 32:36 and 3 K. 14:10 for an explanation of these expressions. C.

Ver. 10. Field, between the inner and the outer wall. Her body shall be left exposed to be eaten by the dogs.

Ver. 11. Madman. The extravagant motions of the false prophets caused even the true ones to be treated with contempt. Warriors are but too apt to give way to sentiments of irreligion, (M.) and to despise men who lead a retired and penitential life. H.—How often were Ezechiel and Jeremias treated as fools, (Ezec. 33:30. Jeremias 29:26. C.) as well as our divine Saviour? The pagans looked upon those who were inspired by Apollo in the same light. H.—Ut primum cessit furor & rabida ora quierunt, Virg. Æneid vi. “What authority has this fury, which you call divine, that the insane should behold what escapes the observation of the wise, and that he who has lost common (human) sense should possess divine?” ea videat insanus, & is qui humanos sensus amiserit, divinos assecutus sit? Cicero Divin. ii.

Ver. 12. False. We know not who he was, or what he said; though, from his conduct, we judge that he was one of the prophets. Hence they so readily acquiesced in saluting Jehu king. H.

Ver. 13. Garment, out of respect, as the multitude honoured Jesus Christ, Mat. 21:7. The pagans sometimes did the like when they carried their idols in procession. Plut. in Alcib. The king of Persia walked on carpets in the court of the guards, who were styled immortal. Athen. 12.—Trumpet, according to custom, 3 K. 1:40. C.

Ver. 14. Conspired, with the captains. M.—Besieged, as it is observed above. C. 25:29. Heb. “had kept (H.) or observed;” watching the motions of Hazeal, lest he should return, or succour the citadel.

Ver. 17. Watchman. Such were very common, (2 K. 18:24. 1 Mac. 12:26) and as the army was at Ramoth, the attention of the people would be drawn that way. C.—Troop. Sept. “the dust of the,” &c. M.

Ver. 18. Peace? As this expression sufficiently vindicated the designs of Jehu, he would not suffer the messenger to return before him. H.

Ver. 20. Furiously. The Chal. and Arab. say, “he marcheth slowly.” But the whole conduct of Jehu was marked with eagerness and severity, like that of Cato of Utica, (Grotius) and the utmost expedition was requisite.

Ver. 22. Jehu? The king supposed that he had meet with some defeat, (C.) of that he wished to announce the good tidings in person. M. Salien, A.C. 902.—Vigour? How can Israel prosper? H.

Ver. 23. Hand. Or ordered his charioteer to flee with all speed. M.

Ver. 25. Sitting. Heb. “rode together after,” as if they were two abreast. C.—Burden, or dreadful misfortune. M.

Ver. 26. Children. We do not read these words before, or that the children of Naboth were slain; but it is very usual to supply in one place what has been omitted in another, and Achab was not required to make restitution, (C.) as there were no heirs probably left. M. W.

Ver. 27. House. Sept. retain “Baithgan,” the original term, as if it were the name of that road. M.—Ochozias wanted to reach the palace by the garden, which was the source of the miseries of Achab’s family.—There. Being brought back from Samaria, 2 Par. 22:9. (C.) or lurking in that kingdom, (M.) and slain by Jehu as being the grandson of Jezabel. Great troubles took place in Juda, in consequence of his death. C.

Ver. 29. Eleventh, or rather the twelfth, (C. 8:25. Houbigant) unless he had been associated with his father on the throne a year before his death. C. D.

Ver. 30. Stone, or antimony, to make the eyes look black and large. If (C.) Jezabel thought that she would thus command respect or love, (Abulensis) she was extremely imprudent and rash, in her present condition. Pride might suggest that she ought not to appear unadorned. C. T.—The women of the Eastern countries delight much in painting, (Pliny xi. 37. and xxxiii. 6.) and some men have not been ashamed to follow their example. S. Cyp.—Sardanapalus had his eyes and his eye-lids painted. Athen. xii. The Arabs, &c. think that this black colour protects the eyes against the sun-beams. Valle ii. Ep. 17. To express the affection of Jezabel, Heb. has, “she placed her eyes in antimony,” (fuc, or puc, whence the Latin fucus is visibly derived) as if she plunged them in it. C.

Ver. 31. Master. Being convinced that she could not gain the affections of Jehu, (H.) and thinking that he would not lay hands on a woman, (M.) she insolently, or in despair, (H.) upbraids him as a new Zambri, who might expect a similar fate, 3 K. 16. C.—The name of Zambri was used proverbially to denote an ungrateful rebel; as with us Judas is used for a traitor. T.

Ver. 32. This. “Who dares address me with such provoking language?” Heb. “Who with me, who?” will punish the wretch? The eunuchs, who had hitherto waited upon Jezabel, immediately shewed their readiness to take part with her enemy: so little dependence can be placed on servants in the hour of adversity, when they have long been witnesses of their masters’ crimes.—Hoofs. Heb. “and the horses, and he trod her under foot.” H.—Jehu shewed the example. M.

Ver. 34. Bury. He had forgotten the prediction of Elias, v. 36. Salien. —Daughter of Ethbaal, wife of Achab, mother of Joram king of Israel, and mother-in-law of Joram king of Juda, and grandmother of his son Ochozias. C.—Her great connexions seemed to entitle her to the rights of sepulture. H.

Ver. 35. Hands. All the rest had been presently devoured, or carried off by dogs. H.—Her precious jewels had been plundered by the soldiers. M.

Ver. 36. Field, or space between the walls, 3 K. 21:23. C.

Ver. 37. Jezabel? So fallen (M.) and degraded, though once possessed of so much power and beauty! sic transit gloria mundi. Heb. and Sept. “that they shall not say, This is Jezabel!” H.—No monument shall recall her to the remembrance of men. C.—Her body cannot be recognized. This will be the fate of the greatest mortal beauties, a few days after their departure. S. Francis Borgia durst not take an oath that the corpse which he had to attend, was that of the late beautiful empress Isabella: so much was it already disfigured. This sight was the beginning of his conversion, and of that eminent sanctity to which he attained, by despising all that the world can give or take away. H.—The Spanish interpreters call Achab’s widow, Isabella: and she seems to have been the sister, or relation, of Dido, who founded Carthage about this time; (T.) Salien says in the 16th year of Jehu. A.C. 887. H.

Ver. 1. Seventy sons, as he had many wives. Gedeon had 70. C.—Grand-children might also be included. D.—But this is not necessary. C.—City, Heb. “of Jezrahel,” a word which has probably been substituted instead of “Israel,” which is more conformable to the Sept. and Vulg. Those who adhere to the Heb. pretend that the princes had all fled from Jezrahel.—Children. This is the sense generally given to Nutritios Achab, which literally signifies, “nursing-fathers (preceptors, counsellors, &c.) of Achab,” v. 5. The king’s children were perhaps educated in the most noble families, (v. 6.) and in the best cities, 2 Par. 11:23. Isaias (49:23) foretelling the happiness of the Israelites after the captivity, says, that kings and queens will nurse them.

Ver. 3. Master. Jehu would lead them into a snare, and insultingly challenges them to battle, shewing how little he feared their power. C.—He speaks ironically. D.

Ver. 8. Morning, that all the people might see them. C.—Jehu did not choose to admit the Samaritans into the city during the night. M.

Ver. 9. Just executioners of the divine wrath. D.—You know what is right. M.—You are now in the same predicament with myself. H.—All the chief men had thus rendered themselves odious to the people, who could not choose them for leaders. He captiously infers, from his astonishing success, (C.) that his conduct is pleasing to God. M.—All the people seeing that so many had armed (T.) against the house of Achab, might conclude that what they did was just. H.

Ver. 11. Chief men, probably including those perfidious wretches, who had so basely betrayed their trust, and slain the 70 sons of Achab, “the nobles of the kingdom, his kinsmen, and friends.” Chal. Arab.—Friends. Some copies of the Sept. have connoisseurs, of magicians. Lev. 19:31.—Priests, princes of the court (2 K. 8:18) and those who offered sacrifice to idols, (C.) being of Achab’s descendants. M.—He afterwards inveigled all the priests of Baal, to their entire ruin, v. 19. H.

Ver. 12. Cabin. Heb. Beth-heked, (H.) a term which the Sept. do not translate. It means, “house of tying,” as the sheep were tied to be shorn. M.—Eusebius places it in the great plain, 15 miles from Legion. C.—It was not a despicable hut, (H.) but like the houses where Nabal and Absalom shorn their sheep, 1 K. 25. &c. T.

Ver. 13. Brethren. The Arabs had destroyed all his brothers by the same mother; (2 Par. 22:1) but these were near relations, and they durst not deny the fact. M.—In 2 Par. 22:8, they are styled princes of Juda, and sons of the brethren of Ochozias. Jehu must have used surprising diligence (C.) and secrecy (H.) to prevent the many important transactions and changes which had lately taken place from being known at Jerusalem, or even at Bethheked, v. 12 which was so little distant from Samaria. C.—Queen. The wife of Joram, or the children of Jezabel, (M.) with whom they were connected by affinity and friendship, to their great detriment. H.

Ver. 14. Alive. That they might not attempt to defend themselves, (M.) as they might hope that Jehu would, at least, spare their lives. H.—Of them, as they were in some degree related to Achab, (M.) or might endeavour to obstruct his dominion. T.

Ver. 15. Jonadab, a holy personage. Jer. 35:6. The Rechabites were a sort of religious, descended from Jethro and the Cinites. C.—They dwelt in the country, and fed sheep, &c. Num. 10:29. T.—John of Jerus. (c. 25.) says that Jonadab was a disciple of Eliseus, and followed his institute in all things, except continency. M.—Blessed him, wishing his peace and prosperity. M.—It is not clear whether Jehu or Jonadab pronounced this blessing. H.—Heart. Art thou friendly to my cause?—Thy hand, in sign of concord, and to help him up into his chariot. C.—It was of great consequence to obtain the approbation of a man H. who must have been so revered by the people. M.—Jehu acted with the utmost policy. H.

Ver. 18. I will worship him more. Jehu sinned in thus pretending to worship Baal, and causing sacrifices to be offered to him: because evil in not to be done, that good may come of it. Rom. 3:8. Ch. W.—S. Jerom, &c. excuse him from mortal sin, as his intention was good. T.—If he had not thus dissembled, he could not have so effectually destroyed the adorers of Baal, who would have concealed themselves. But God rewarded his zeal, and not his falsehood. C.—He might speak ironically; though Theodoret, &c. admit a lie. M.

Ver. 19. Servants. The number had greatly decreased under Joram. M.

Ver. 20. Proclaim. Lit. “sanctify (Heb.) a prohibition” to work, or to be absent, (C.) “and they proclaimed it.”

Ver. 21. Other. Lit. “from top to top.” Heb. “from mouth to mouth,” H. like a vessel brimfull. C.—Every corner was filled. All the priests and prophets made their appearance, through zeal to re-establish the honour of their idol, and for fear of death. M.

Ver. 22. Wardrobe, of vestments used in the service of Baal. The worship chiefly consisted in such outward pomp. The priests were probably adorned like those at the pillars of Hercules, who were from the same country. Sil. Ital. iii. velantur corpora lino, &c.

Ver. 24. Life. These 80 were stationed at the doors, while the rest slaughtered the unhappy idolaters, (M.) who were all by themselves, like the reprobate separated from the elect, at the last day. H.

Ver. 25. Soldiers. Heb. “runners, (or foot-guards, 3 K. 1:5,) and chief officers.” Ex. 14:7.—Out. Heb. “cast out” their carcasses, or “rushed out (themselves) into the city,” which was styled “the temple of Baal;” or “penetrated into the fortress” and inmost recesses of that structure. Osiander.—We read of such a fortress. Judg. 9:46. H.—In every city where there was a temple of Baal, the fabric and idols were demolished. Salien.

Ver. 27. A jakes, or necessary. H.—See 1 Esd. 6:11. Dan. 2:5.

Ver. 29. Dan. This wicked policy, which was designed to prevent his subjects from submitting again to the kings of Juda, proved his ruin.

Ver. 30. Generation. So Joachaz, Joas, Jeroboam II. and Zacharias, succeeded to the throne. This small temporal reward he obtained for the little good which he had done; while, on the other hand, he was punished for his manifold transgressions. Osee (1:4,) reproaches him even for the blood which he had spilt in Jezrahel; for, though Achab and Joram were guilty, was Jehu innocent? Can this murder of Ochozias be justified? C.—“What advantage was it to him that he received some little transitory reward of a temporal kingdom, for his obedience in exterminating the house of Achab; which he indeed exhibited to gratify his own lust of dominion?” S. Aug. c. mend. ii. c. 2. This holy doctor observes, that moral good works are thus rewarded. W.

Ver. 32. Weary. Heb. “to retrench or destroy.” Hazael took occasion, from the absence of Jehu (C.) from Galaad, and the disturbances on the west of the Jordan, to dismember the provinces on the east, and to commit the horrid ravages foretold by Eliseus. C. 8:12. H.

Ver. 33. Aroer. See Jos. 13:25. This was a most severe scourge, (M.) as all the eastern tribes were lost to Israel. H.

Ver. 1. Seed. What cruelties are occasioned by ambition! W.—This is one of the most extraordinary proofs recorded in history. Agrippina was but a faint copy of the unnatural Athalia, (C.) who knew that she was destined for slaughter, if she should fall into the hands of Jehu. M.—Her impiety might also prompt her to destroy all the posterity of David, that she might introduce the worship of idols more easily. Theodore.

Ver. 2. Sister. She had probably a different mother, as she consented to the death of Athalia. C.—But the crimes of the latter require such a punishment; and even a daughter would have done wrong to screen her. H.—Josabeth, as she is called in 2 Par. 22:11, was married to Joiada the high priest, ibid.—Out of. Heb. and Paral. “hid him, even him and his nurse, in the bed-chamber” of the priest, in the temple; (Salien) different from that bed-chamber in which he had hitherto been nursed. Thus the passage may be reconciled. M. C.—Some maintain that Joas was not the son of Ochozias, in whom the line of Solomon ended, but a descendant of David by Nathan. But he is always styled the king’s son, and the authority of the false Philo of Anniius is of no weight. C.—Joiada is called Barachias, “blessed of the Lord,” on account of his justice, (S. Jer.) in Mat. 23.

Ver. 3. Lord. The case was so extraordinary, that he high priest dispensed with a woman lodging in those apartments.—Land, for six years, by usurpation. Women were commonly excluded, and she was not of the race of David, 4 K. 8:26. C.

Ver. 4. Year, of the age of Joas, v. 21. M.—Centurions. Five in number of the tribe of Levi, (M.) commanding each 100 men. Heb adds “the rams,” (C.) to denote “the captains (Prot.) and the runners,” or guards. H.—Joiada was a man of great authority, virtue and discretion; so that he was able to manage this delicate affair, and no one gave information to Athalia, as she was detested. The Levites and principal men of Juda were admonished, underhand, to be present on the day appointed. The quality of high priest, and the known probity and zeal for the public good, which were conspicuous in Joiada, as well as his being so nearly related to the lawful heir to the crown, made the people readily come forward. C.

Ver. 6. Sabbath. On this day the Levites replaced each other; so that many might assemble without suspicion. They guarded the king’s apartments in the temple.—The gate of Sur, or of the foundation, (2 Par. 23:5) and the western gate leading to the palace. C.—Sur, or “the gate of the lords,” (Chal.) is generally supposed to be on the opposite side. M.—But this is uncertain, as well as the situation of Messa, which is perhaps the Musach. C. 16:18. This was probably some building or covert adjoining the temple, (C.) either belonging to some private person, (M.) or designed to contain the ashes, &c. taken from the temple; (Villalp. ii. 32.) or a tribune for the king in the temple. H.—The Chaldee seems to have explained it as an adverb, sollicite, “with diligence,” (M.) as well as the Sept. (D.) which is consonant to Vatable; you shall guard the house “from desertion.” Let no one quit his post. M.

Ver. 7. Of you. Levites, who waited on the king's person alternately. C.—They were divided into three parts, being in actual service, v. 6. Those who went out of office were twice the number, and are here told what to do. Sa thinks that those who entered upon duty, and those who went out, formed two thirds of the Levites, v. 9 and 2 Par. 23:8. M.

Ver. 8. Temple, to cause confusion, Syr. &c. The court of the priests, (Ezec. 41:9) and that of Israel, (Josep. viii. 4.) were separated by walls, beyond which strangers were not allowed to pass. C.—Slain, being first cast out, v. 15. M.—Great respect is due to holy places, and hence comes the privilege of sanctuaries. W.

Ver. 10. David. There was a sort of arsenal in the temple, containing arms consecrated to the Lord by David and his valiant men, in memory of their victories, 2 K. 8:11. 1 Par. 18:11. The usual band of Levites had proper arms, but more were employed on this occasion. C.

Ver. 11. Right, or south, leading to the palace, (M.) whence the greatest danger was feared. C.—Altar of holocausts, that it might not impede the sight of the king. M.

Ver. 12. The testimony. The book of the law. Ch.—So Job (31:35, 36) wished to have the sentence pronounced by God as a crown upon his head. The Orientals still lift to their heads the letters which they have received from people whom they wish to honour. Thevenot, 46.—Some think that the diadem was adorned with phylacteries, or scrolls, containing parts of the law, (Grot.) particularly what related to the king; (H.) or that Joas held in his hand a roll of vellum, containing those instructions, (Deut. 17:18. 2 Par. 23:11) instead of a sceptre.—Anointed him, by the hands of Joiada; as this ceremony was requisite on account of the usurpation of Athalia. In peaceable times the unction was not given, (C.) according to the Jews, (H.) whose sentiment is elsewhere shewn to be unsatisfactory. C.

Ver. 13. Going in. She must have been attended by a strong guard, to force the passage through the Levites at the door. H.

Ver. 14. A tribunal. A tribune, or place elevated above the rest. Ch.—Heb. “on a pillar.” Solomon had stood upon one of brass, three cubits high and five broad. See C. 23:3. and 2 Par. 6:13.

Ver. 15. Precinct. Heb. sedereth, (untranslated by the Sept. and (H.) improperly supposed by Josephus to be the torrent Cedron) means, “the ranks” of the guards, (C.) or, “ranges” of the sacred buildings, which her impure blood must not defile. H.—Follow her, as an accomplice. M.

Ver. 16. Thrust. Heb. “and she went by the way by which the horses enter the king’s house. When she was come within the horse-gate of the palace, they killed her there.” 2 Par. 23:15. Such was the ignominious end of this true daughter of Jezabel! H.

Ver. 17. People. Joiada, as mediator (C.) between God, the king, and the people, engaged the two latter to be faithful to their common Lord, and to each other. They promised mutually to observe the laws, and, on that condition, the high priest gave them an assurance that God would protect them. H.—The covenant entered into by their fathers (Ex. 19:5) was renewed. C.

Ver. 18. Altar. Many of the sacred ornaments belonging to the temple had been transported to the house of Baal, probably on Mount Olivet, where Solomon had formerly erected such buildings. 3 K. 11:5. 2 Par. 24:7. The reform of the state justly, therefore, began with the destruction of this profane and sacrilegious place.—Lord, according to the former regulations, which had been lately ill observed, to prevent any thing unclean from coming in. 2 Par. 23:19. C.—Sept. “the priest placed overseers (ἐπισκοπους) in the house of the Lord. H.

Ver. 19. Phelethi. In the Heb. of the books of Kings we read nothing of these bands after the reign of David. The same expressions occur here as v. 4. “the centurions, the rams, (or captains) and the runners,” (C.) or guards. Prot. H.—Gate, on the west. Athalia had probably entered by the south.—Kings. It was made of ivory, &c. 3 K. 10:18. C.

Ver. 2. Taught him. Joiada lived, at least, till the 23d year of the reign of Joas, (v. 6.) and the king seems to have persevered some time longer in virtue.

Ver. 3. Places, to the true God, but contrary to his law. The king was deterred from overturning these altars, through human policy; which did not meet with the divine approbation. C. See 3 K. 22:24. Deut. 12:8.

Ver. 4. Sanctified. That is, dedicated to God’s service. Ch.—Lit. “of the holy” sanctorum. H.—For the use of the sanctuary.—Pass, as strangers, (3 K. 8:41) desiring sacrifice to be offered, (Grotius) or who pass in the roll of those who have attained their 20th year, and are obliged to pay half a sicle. Ex. 20:13, 14. This was the first fund which had been turned to a different purpose by the priests, (C.) under the wicked kings. H.—Soul. that is, the ordinary oblation, which every soul was to offer by the law. Exod. 30. Ch.—Or, this was a second fund arising from the redemption of vows. Lev. 21:2.—Lord. Voluntary contributions, like that of the widow, (Luke 21:2) were also recommended; and Joas sent Levites throughout the land, every year, to collect what they could, for the reparation of the temple. 2 Par. 24:5.

Ver. 5. Order. Heb. “acquaintance.” Let them receive the contributions on the spot where they reside; or, let those who are on duty in the temple take them. C.—Thing. Heb. “breach,” badek, a term which the Sept. retain. H.

Ver. 6. Temple. It is not known when the king gave his orders; but they were executed with negligence, as they seemed to interfere (C.) with the emoluments assigned by the law to the Levites. 2 Par. 24:5. H.—The latter Jews were obliged to pay half a sicle towards the repairs of the temple. T.

Ver. 8. Forbidden. Heb. Sept. &c. “And the priests consented to take no,” &c. They were also obliged to restore what they had already received. C.

Ver. 9. By the altar, yet without the enclosure, that any person might freely put in what he thought proper. 2 Par. 24:8. Priests were still appointed to watch, that no fraud was committed: and they counted the money which the law ordained to be paid. Josephus (Bel. vi. 5.) speaks of many coffers; one might be near the altar, and another out of the door. M.

Ver. 10. Priest, or his deputy. Paral. C.—Out. Prot. “put it up in bags,” (H.) or tied and afterwards weighed it.

Ver. 11. And they. The king and the high priest conjointly. Paral.

Ver. 13. Bowls. Chal. “silver chalices.” The precise import of the Heb. term is not well known. M.—Lord. After the repairs were finished, the remaining money, which was very considerable, was however employed for these purposes, 2 Par. 24:14. C. M.

Ver. 15. Faithfully, and corresponded with the trust reposed in them. H.

Ver. 16. Sins. These terms seem to be synonymous, though they may be distinguished. Lev. 4:2 and 5:15. If any one forgot to pay tithes, he was bound to make full reparation to the priests; (Tostat.) and the money which was given to them by strangers, to offer sacrifice, was not taken from them. C.

Ver. 17. Then. After the death of Joiada, the king gave way to the greatest excesses of idolatry, and even murdered the son of his greatest benefactor. Hereupon the justice of God fell heavy upon him; Geth was taken, Jerusalem only saved by giving up all the sacred treasures, &c.: yea, the very next year, Hazael returned, routed the forces of Juda, and wounded the king, who on his return to the palace was murdered by conspirators, (C.) to revenge the death of Zacharias. 2 Par. 24:25. Joseph. ix. 8.

Ver. 18. Joram, &c. These are accused of plundering the temple, 2 Par. 24:7. But they might make some presents, through ostentation. How many rob the poor, while they erect magnificent altars to the God of the poor! C.

Ver. 20. Sella. A flight of steps leading to the temple. H.—The palace was at the bottom of it, and had been built by Solomon. Here Joas was slain in his bed. Paral.

Ver. 21. Josachar, or Zabad, the son of Semmaath, an Ammonitess, and Jozabad, the son of Semarith, a Moabitess. Par. Both their mothers were of foreign extraction. C.—People have frequently two names.—Somer is the father of Jozabad. M.—David. Achaz was treated in like manner. The fear of this infamy might tend to keep the kings in awe. After death, the kings of Egypt might be accused, and deprived of sepulture, if their crimes deserved it: as many of them were. Diod. i. p. 46. C.—Thus Joas was covered with eternal infamy, after he had begun so well. Finis coronat opus. H.

4 KINGS 13

Ver. 1. Years. Two with his son Joas, (Usher) or three. Capell. D. See v. 10.

Ver. 3. Days, while Joachaz lived, v. 22. M.—Yet Benadad only molested his son. C.—Hazael proved a dreadful scourge in the hand of God, to punish his people, C. 8:12. H.

Ver. 5. Saviour, in the person of Joas, (v. 23. Tostat.) after the death of Joachaz, whose repentance preserved him, at least, in this world. H.

Ver. 6. A grove, dedicated to the worship of idols. Ch.—Heb. “and the Ascera (grove of Astarte) was standing even in Samaria.” That impure worship had gained ground again, after Jehu was dead.

Ver. 7. Floor. Amos (1:3) informs us, that Hazael had crushed the inhabitants of Galaad to death with iron chariots.

Ver. 8. Valour, or personal courage, (C.) though he gained no complete victory. The most valiant are not always successful. T.—Fortiter ille facit qui miser esse potest. Mart. H.—Joachaz did not quite sink under his troubles. T.

Ver. 10. Seven. To complete the number seventeen, (v. 1.) it ought to be “nine” ending. Houbigant, p. 109. See C. 14:23.—Years. If Jeroboam reigned in the 15th year of Amasias, and his father in the 37th of Joas, and not in the 39th almost complete, this king would have held dominion eighteen years. Ibid.

Ver. 12. Juda, who was the aggressor. See 2 Par. 25:23.

Ver. 13. Throne, for ten years, along with his father. From this period the reign of Azarias must be dated. C. 15:1. Usher. C.

Ver. 14. The illness. Heb. Sept. and Chal. “of his sickness whereof he also died;” insinuating that he had been before afflicted with this infirmity.—To him, probably in the same city of Samaria.—Wept. See how he loved him! He was concerned for the welfare of his kingdom. M.—Thereof. Eliseus had addressed Elias in the same terms. C. 2:12. C.

Ver. 17. East, looking towards Galgaad, (H.) which the Syrians occupied. M.—These actions were all significative and prophetical. The throwing of a dart was formerly the mode of declaring war. Virg. Æneid ix. Justin (ii.) says, “Alexander first threw a javelin, as against a hostile country.” Thus also the ancients took possession. Varro. V. Max. iii. &c. The people of Andros and Chalcis, sent each a deputy to seize Acanthos, when it had been abandoned by its inhabitants. The man from Andros, perceiving the other before him, threw his dart at the gate, and it was decided that he had thus lawfully obtained possession. Plutarch, q. Græc. Selden, Mare. Claus. iv.—The action of Joas may be considered in both lights.—Them. We do not read the particulars of this battle: but it must have been very bloody. One of the three victories (v. 25.) of Joas was probably obtained at Aphec, (C.) a place memorable for the victory of Achab, over the same Syrians. 3 K. 20:26. M.

Ver. 18. Still. This shewed a degree of remission. H.—It was natural for the king to conclude, that the more he struck the earth, the greater would be his success; (C.) and the prophet had, perhaps, insinuated as much. M.

Ver. 19. Angry. Sept. “grieved.” H.—Or seven is omitted in Heb. and Sept. This text proves that God knows what would take place conditionally. T.—If, &c. By this it appears, that God had revealed to the prophet that the king should overcome the Syrians, as many times as he should then strike on the ground; but, as he had not, at the same time, revealed to him how often the king would strike, the prophet was concerned to see that he struck but thrice. Ch.—Joas was assured that he should consume the Syrians. But this was to be understood, provided he performed this part, (M. T.) and that destruction was not said to be entire. H.

Ver. 20. Buried him, near Samaria. M.—He had been chosen by Elias sixty-eight years before, and had lived eleven with him. His perfect character is given, Eccli. 48:13. His double spirit represents the plentitude of grace in Jesus Christ; as his raising the child to life, in such a wonderful manner, denotes his incarnation. The waters of Jericho made sweet, and the healing of Naaman, set before us the virtue of baptism: as the widow’s oil shews the great graces which are bestowed by Christ upon his Church. The children devoured, and the Syrians struck blind, remind us of the perversity and blindness of infidels, who will not acknowledge the truth. Matt. 13:14. We must now see how the bones of Eliseus prophesied: 1. By raising the dead to life, as a confirmation of all his former predictions; 2. as proof of a future resurrection, of the virtue of relics, and of the influence of the saints in heaven, whose souls were formerly united to their bodies, and were filled with the Holy Spirit; (S. Cyr. of Jer. cat. xviii. Illum.) 3. in as much as this miracle was a figure of Christ’s resurrection, who raised himself to life, and those who believe in him: (C.) while Eliseus, in the like state of death, had only raised another. H. S. Max. hom. i. de pasc.—Same. Sept. Heb. and Syr. “at the coming in of the year;” (H.) or, “the next year.” Pagnin.

Ver. 21. Eliseus. His tomb was not in the city, but in a spacious cave, the entrance of which was secured with a stone, according to custom. This was removed in the hurry, and the corpse thrown into the same recess, which had been prepared for the remains of the prophet. Josephus (ix. 8.) relates the history in a different manner, and pretends that robbers having slain a person, threw his corpse accidentally into the tomb of Eliseus. The Rabbins tell us his name was Sellum, and that he died again immediately, because he was a wicked man, which would render the miracle, in a manner, useless. C.—By it God honoured his servant, and convinced the Israelites that what he had so lately foretold, respecting the Syrians, would undoubtedly take place. M.

Ver. 23. Time. Long before the captivity of Babylon, the Israelites had been led captives, to return no more in a body. Some stragglers mixed with the Jews, and inhabited the country under that appellation. It would seem that this was written before the overturning of the kingdom of Israel. H.

Ver. 25. Israel, on the east side of the Jordan; (C. 10:33. C.) at least (H.) those which had been taken from his father. Jeroboam retook what had been lost by Jehu. M.—Hence both these kings are styled saviours, v. 5. C. 14:27. Salien.

Ver. 1. Second, from his being associated in the empire. It was the first of his reigning alone.

Ver. 3. David. Yet not with a perfect heart. 2 Par. 25:2.—Father. He imitated his early piety, as well as his miserable end. C.

Ver. 4. But, &c. All that Amasias did, at first, was right, (v. 3.) but this only. See 3 K. 22:24. H.—Joas had also left such high places. C. 12:3.

Ver. 6. Sin. This is the rule of human tribunals, to which God is not restrained. Salien. Ezech. 18:20. M.—The action of Amasias is commended as something unusual (C.) among princes, who are but too apt to exceed the bounds of moderation (H.) to revenge their murdered parents. C.

Ver. 7. Edom, who had rebelled under Joram. C. 8:20. The particulars of this war are given, 2 Par. 25:5. Josephus (ix. 9.) says, Amasias designed also to attack Amalec and Gebal in the same country.—Pits. Called the woody vale, Gen. 14:8. (M.) south-west of the Dead Sea, (Adric.) or rather to the south of Palmyra, towards Bosra, 3 K. 9:18.—Rock. Petra, the capital of the country, formerly called Rekem Arke, or Hagar. Most of the houses are hewn out of the rock. Heb. Sela signifies “a rock;” and many think that this was some other place, whence the Idumeans were hurled down, after the victory. Amasias gave it the name of Jectehel, “obedience of God,” in memory of his having obtained this success, in consequence of his having obeyed the prophet, and sent away 100,000, for whom he had paid 100 talents to the king of Israel.

Ver. 8. Let us see one another. This was a challenge to fight. Ch. W.—The interviews of ambitious kings are often baneful. H.—Abner said in the same sense, “Let the young men rise and play,” 2 K. 2:14; and Virg. Æneid xii. Inter se coiisse viros & cernere ferro. Amasias had many reasons to be displeased with the king of Israel. He might justly redemand part of the money, (C.) as he had not employed the soldiers. H.—They had also committed depredations in Juda. Paral. Jehu had slain Ochozias, and many of his relations. C.—Josephus also observes that he now required Israel to return to his obedience, and acknowledge the power of the lawful descendants of David. Sanctius.

Ver. 9. Thistle. Heb. choach, something prickly; (H.) “a thorn.” Syr.

and Arab. “a plum-tree.” Nothing could be more cutting (C.) than this answer of Joas, to shew the king of Juda how much he despised his power. H.—The ancients were much pleased with such ingenious similes. See Judg. 9:7.

Ver. 10. Home, to boast of thy victory, (H.) but do not offer to molest others. C.—God permitted that Amasias should pay no attention to this advice, nor to the prophet who reproached him for adoring the idols which he had brought from Edom, 2 Par. 25:14.

Ver. 11. Saw, or fought, v. 8. C. 23:29. Bethsames was in the tribe of Dan, (C.) but belonging to the king of Juda.

Ver. 13. Cubits. Josephus says 300, and that he led Amasias in triumph through the ruins, (Ant. ix. 10.) on the west side, (C.) or on the north. Villalp. M.

Ver. 14. Hostages, as he left Amasias, on condition he should pay tribute, (M.) and took “the children of the nobles” (Chal.) to secure his fidelity. H.

Ver. 15. Valour. Hence it appears that Juda made a stout resistance, though Josephus would insinuate the contrary.

Ver. 19. Lachis, in the tribe of Dan. Some say that the kings resided there twelve years, in a kind of exile. Malvenda.—But the conspiracy only took place in the last year of his reign. Usher, A. 3194.—Some powerful men rose up against him, and the people were displeased with his conduct. M.—But the majority did not approve of his death, so that they granted him the funeral honours, and appointed his son to succeed. C.

Ver. 21. Azarias. Heb. Hazarya. Sometimes printed more correctly Azieu, at others Azrien, (H.) by the blundering of transcribers, who have confounded the name of the king Ozihu (Azieu or Ozias) with that of the priest Ozrichu. (Azrien.) Carpzovius maintains that Azarias and Usias are two names of the same person. Crit. p. 789. But if he should find Carpzovius, Carpzorvius, and Carpzoviu, in the same book, would he not think them the same name erroneously printed? Kennicott, (Dis. i. p. 478.) who observes that the Syr. and Arab. versions have here, as in the sequel, Uzia, and S. Mat. (1:8) calls the king Ozias, conformably to 2 Par. 26:1. &c. The MSS. also vary. Kennicott.

Ver. 22. Built, or rebuilt Elath; which gives its name to the eastern branch of the Red Sea. David had possession of all Idumea. Amasias had reconquered a great part, and his son pushed his conquests still

Ver. 25. Wilderness, or the Dead Sea, to which place the dominion of Israel originally extended, under Jeroboam I. C.—Opher, in the tribe of Zabulon. Ch.—Prot. “which was of Gath-hepher.” H.—We have not all the works of the prophets, nor did they write all their predictions. C.—Here we learn at what time Jonas lived. M.

Ver. 26. In prison is not expressed in the original, (C.) which has, “not any shut up, nor last.” Neither those who had strong castles, nor the poorest people, were exempt from suffering. H.—None durst appear. 3 K. 14:10. M.

Ver. 27. Israel, like Amalec. 1 K. 15:3. M.

Ver. 28. To Juda, or “of Juda;” Judæ; (H.) as those strong cities had been conquered by David. The Syr. and Arab. omit this word entirely, and suppose, with many others, that Jeroboam kept possession of these cities. C. T.—In Israel, or “to Israel,” over which he reigned. H.

Ver. 29. Slept, dying a natural death; though the idolatrous priests of Bethel falsely asserted, that Amos had foretold he should fall by the sword. Amos 7:11.

Ver. 1. Twentieth. Houbigant endeavours to shew it should be, “the 14th;” Capellus says, the 17th; (H.) and others have suspected that the number is incorrectly printed. Grot. &c.—But this expedient ought only to be adopted when no other can give satisfaction; and this difficulty may be obviated by saying, that Jeroboam’s reign with his father continued six years, and that after he had held the septre nineteen years alone, Azarias commenced; (C. Usher) or, that there was an interregnum of eleven years, which is not probable. Capel.—Azarias; otherwise called Ozias; (Ch.) and this was his real name. Grot. See C. 14:21. H.

Ver. 3. Lord. Many laudable actions are specified, 2 Par. 26:4. But at last, forgetting the instructions of the prophet Zacharias, he opened his heart to pride, the bane of great souls, and would arrogate to himself the rights of the priesthood, which brought on his leprosy. C.

Ver. 4. But. In this he was not different from his father. C. 14:4.

Ver. 5. A leper. In punishment of his usurping the priestly functions. 2 Par. 26:19. Ch. W.—The priests boldly remonstrated with him, but to no effect; till the king perceived himself stricken with the leprosy. Josephus (ix. 10.) says, a dreadful earthquake was felt at the same time, which is supposed to be that mentioned Amos 1:1 and Zac. 14:5; (S. Jerom, &c.) though Usher produces some chronological difficulties against this opinion: but they are founded on error. C.—Free. Par. apart; at a distance from all. H.—The like rules were observed in cities, as in the camp. Lev. 13:46. M.—Ozias was in a manner dead to all civil transactions; and Isaias (6:1) probably refers to this event. Syr. and Arab. “he remained hidden.” Josephus (ibid.) says, “leading a private life.” Thus aiming at too much, he lost all! H.

Ver. 7. David: or, Oziaas slept ... and they buried him in the field of the royal sepulchre, because he was a leper, and Joatham, &c. 2 Par. 26:23. H.—Such an aversion had people for lepers, that they would not even bury them with others. C.—Yet he was treated with some honour. W.

Ver. 8. Thirtieth. Usher would place an interregnum of eleven years and a half, after the death of Jeroboam, to make the first year of Zacharias correspond with the 38th of Azarias, during which, he supposes, the troubles mentioned Amos 7 and 8 happened. But this interregnum has no foundation, v. 5. C.—Capellus says it would have lasted above 22 years. He and Houbigant would read, 28th: the latter adds ten years to the reign of Zacharias. The transcriber might easily omit the years, as they end in the same manner as months. Arab. has “six years;” whence we may infer, that the copies formerly varied. The exploits of Zacharias require a longer space than six months. Chron. sac. p. 107. 110.

Ver. 10. Place, having before taken his measures with the conspirators; (v. 15.) so that he had not to fear the resentment of the people. He cut off the last king of the family of Jehu; (H.) probably at Jezrahel. Osee 1:5. C.

Ver. 14. Manahem, general of Zacharias, revenged his death, and then returning to Tharsa, treated it and the neighbouring city, Thapsa, with the utmost fury. So Josephus, ix. 11. But his conjectures are to be received with caution.

Ver. 17. Ten years. Dating from the time that he was enabled to enjoy the throne in peace, after a struggle of eleven months. Usher, A. 3233. —Phul rendered him this service, having received presents, and one of the golden calves, (Osee 10:6 and 13) besides 1000 talents, v. 19.

Ver. 18. Days. During which Jeroboam or Manahem swayed the seceptre. C.—The Sept. refer all his days to the following verse, (H.) which seems to intimate that the tribute was required annually, as may be gathered from the Vulg. veniebat. M.—But Phul probably received the talents only once, to indemnify him for his trouble. He was perhaps the father of Sardanapalus, who joined his name, Phul, to his own, Sardan; as Merodach assumed that of Baladan. Isai. 39:1. Profane authors style the father of Sardanapalus, Anacindaraxes, &c. Phul was the first of the Assyrian monarchs who came into the land of Israel, where we shall find them too often in the sequel. He probably repented on the preaching of Jonas, and averted the scourge (C.) which fell upon the city during the reign of his son. H.

Ver. 20. Rich. The lower classes were not perhaps entirely exempted.

Ver. 25. Near. Heb. “may be along with Argob, &c.” who were in the conspiracy. Chal. Sept. &c. C.

Ver. 26. Israel. This book is lost. H.—The Paral. takes no notice of these kings; but relates only the transactions of the kings of Juda after Joas gained the victory; which greatly abridged their power. C. 14:14.

Ver. 27. Romelia. S. Jerom (ep. 142.) places the birth of Romulus in this year, which preceded the famous Olympiads. But Salien differs that event 14 years. A.C. 769. H.

Ver. 29. Assyria, at the invitation of Achaz. C. 16:7.—Theglathphalasar is probably the same who is called Ninus the younger, or Thilgam, (Ælian. animal. xii. 21.) by profane writers. He re-established the kingdom of Nineve in part, after the city had been taken, under his father Sardanapalus, by Arbaces, founder of the empire of the Medes, and by Belesus, narbonassar, or Baladan, who reigned at Babylon. Such was the state of the eastern empires at this time. C.—Aion, or Ahion, (3 K. 15:20) perhaps the Enan of Ezechiel 48:1. H.—Moacha, whither Seba had retreatd, 2 K. 20:14. Heb. Abel-beth-maacha.—Galaad, comprising all the east of the Jordan. C.—Nephthali, to the north-west. H.—Thus the Galileans and Nephthali were transported into Assyria, to repeople it after the late ravages. The tribe in Galaad were fixed on the river Gozan, 1 Par. 5:26.

Ver. 30. In the twentieth year of Joatham. That is, in the twentieth year from the beginning of Joatham’s reign. The sacred writer chooses rather to follow here this date, than to speak of the years of Achaz, who had not yet been mentioned. Ch.—But Joatham reigned only 16 years, (v. 33) so that this was the fourth year of Achaz. H.—Usher says that Osee did not ascend the throne till nine years after the death of Phacee, as he is asserted to have commenced his reign in the twelfth year of Achaz. C. 17:1. But another difficulty arises from the mention of this 20th year, as Phacee would have reigned 22, instead of 20; (v. 27.) for Joatham only commenced in the second year of Phacee. To reconcile these passages, we may conclude that Osee conspired against the king of Israel in the 18th year of Joatham, gained possession of part of the kingdom in the 20th of the same prince, and of the whole in the 12th of Achaz. C.—The pretended interregnum ought to be rejected, as the murderer of the late king would not delay to ascend the throne. Houbigant adds 10 years to the reign of Phacee, as well as to that of Zacharias: the dates assigned to the kings of Israel being otherwise so much deficient, p. 113.

Ver. 34. Did he. Yet he did not imitate his presumption. God gave great success to his enterprises, 2 Paral. 27:2.

Ver. 35. Gate, repairing that on the east. Jeremias (26:10) mentions the new gate. Joatham also made great additions to the walls of Jerusalem. Paral.

Ver. 37. Began. Achaz was much more infested by these princes.

Ver. 2. When he, Joatham, “had begun,” cœpisset. H.—Thus Junius evades the following difficulty. D.—Sixteen, consequently he died when he was 36 years old. As Ezechias was 25 when he came to the throne, Achab must have been a father at 11 (C.) or 12 year of age. Bochart, Dissert. xxiii.—S. Jerom asserts the same of Solomon, and observes, that “many things which seem incredible in Scripture, are nevertheless true.” ep. ad Vital. He, with some others, has recourse to a miracle. Others suppose that Ezechias was an adopted son, or kinsman, or that the numbers are incorrect, &c. But we are assured by respectable authors, (H.) that people have children very soon in the hotter climates. Busbeque (Ep. 3.) says, in Colchis many are mothers at ten years of age; and to convince the incredulous, produce their infants “not much bigger than a large frog.” Albert the Great says he knew one who had a child at 10, and Navarre (ap. Sanchez. Mat. 7:2, 5 disp. 104.) was credibly informed that a similar fact was seen at Naples. Mandesle observes that this is common in India. He says one had lately a child at six year of age, which was there thought remarkable. S. Jerom mentions a boy who became a father at 10, and Sanchez relates that the same happened in Spain. A boy under 12 had a child by a girl of 10, in Provence. Scaliger Elenc. The Romans laws fix upon the age of 14 for males, and 12 for females' lawfully marrying; (H.) though many examples of people having children before that age are produced by Tiraqueau, 6. conn. 36. Yet physicians require 13 in males, and 14 years complete in females before they are capable of this effect. Genebrard. S. Aug. (de Civ. xv. 11. and xvi. c. ult. and in ps. civ.) maintains that a person of 10 years of age is unfit for generation. C.—Malitia supplet ætatem. Achaz was a monster of wickedness. H.—In the first year of his reign, and in the fifth Olympiad, the Ephori were appointed at Sparta under Theopompus, nephew of Lycurgus. Salien, A.C. 759.

Ver. 3. Fire, to purify him (or them, Paral. filios, all were treated thus. H.) according to the superstitions of the pagans: omnia purgat edax ignis. Ovid, Fast. Theod. q. 16. M.—Others believe that the child was burnt to death in honour of Moloch, and in imitation of the Chanaanites. Ps. 105:37. Deut. 18:10. The Carthaginians were required by Gelon, king of Syracuse, to lay aside this most barbarous custom. Phil. apoph. Yet, “infants were publicly immolated to Saturn, in Africa, till the proconsulate of Tiberius, who ordered the priests to be exposed on those same trees which shaded their crimes, as on votive crosses. This the soldiers, my countrymen, who executed the proconsul’s orders, can testify; and still the sacred crime is perpetrated in secret.” Tert. Apol. viii.—How tenacious are people of old errors! H.

Ver. 5. Then. In punishment of such enormous crimes, God first delivered Achaz into the hands of Rasin, (2 Par. 28. S. Jer. in Isai. vii.) and afterwards Phacee destroyed 120,000 in one battle, and took 200,000 prisoners, whom the prophet Oded persuaded him to release. Ibid. v. 8. 11. Salien (A.C. 759.) observes that the two kings then joined their forces, and besieged Jerusalem the following year, but to no purpose. H.—Isaias was sent before the siege to encourage Achaz, and to promise the miraculous birth of the Messias, as a sign that he should be delivered: and to convince him of it the more, he foretold that the two kings should be destroyed before his own son should be able to say father. Isai. 7:8, &c. Yet as Achaz did not still amend his life, God sent the same kings the following year (M. 3263.) to lay waste the country. C.

Ver. 6. Juda. Lit. “Jews,” Judæos, (H.) which is the first time we find this appellation. D.—Aila, or Elath, which had been taken by Ozias. C. 14:22. M.—It seems never to have belonged to Syria, as it was too far from Damascus. Instead of Aram, we should therefore probably read Edom, which words in Heb. are extremely similar, and have been often mistaken, (Judg. 11:17. C.) particularly as we find that the Edomites took possession of the city. This latter word is indeed Syrians in Heb.

&c. H.—Josephus and others maintain that the Syrians seized and kept the place. But they were most likely only invited by the Idumeans to come to their assistance. C.

Ver. 7. Son, vassal, or under thy protection. C.—Save me. Achaz sinned by this placing his confidence in man, after the prophet had given him such assurance from the Lord. M.—He has soon reason to repent of having brought this proud ally into his dominions, as he proved a great scourge; (2 Par. 28:20) no less than the Saxons did to the ancient Britons.

Ver. 9. Cyrene, not in Egypt, where he had no power, but near the river Cyrus, (C.) in higher Media. Josephus.—Heb. “and took it and carried the inhabitants captives to Kir,” (H.) whence the Syrians had come originally. Amos 9:7. Arbaces, who had dismembered Media from the Assyrians empire, was now dead, and the king of Nineve had retaken several cities, occupying Rages, &c. (Tob. 1:16. &c.) before Dejoces mounted the throne, and extended the empire of the Medes. Usher.—The people of Sepharvaim lived also on the borders of Media. C. 18:11.

Ver. 10. To meet, and congratulate the king on his victory, and perhaps to divert him from proceeding any farther. C.—But it was too late, v. 7. H.—The same year Phacee hastened to defend his dominions, but was slain by Osee. Salien, A.C. 757.

Ver. 11. Priest, or pontiff, as no other would have dared to make this innovation. Salien.—He was guilty of a great weakness; as the altar of Solomon had been so solemnly consecrated by God’s presence. All changes in religion are dangerous. The Machabees behaved with far greater respect, with regard to the altar which had been profaned. 1 Mac. 4:45. C.—Isaias (8:2) calls this priest a faithful, or competent witness, (H.) on account of his dignity, not approving his conduct. Salien.—But he had not erected this altar when the prophet spoke thus to him. D.

Ver. 12. And worshipped. Heb. simply, “and the king approached to the altar, and offered on it (13) his holocaust and his meat (or flour) offering, and poured his drink-offering, and the blood of his peace-offerings, upon the altar.” H.—He dedicated it with all sorts of sacrifices, forbidding any other to be used in the temple. But shortly after he shut up the temple entirely. 2 Par. 28:24 and 29:3. He offered sacrifice to idols upon this altar, (Abul.) while the priests made use of the same altar to sacrifice to the true God, (v. 15. M.) unlawfully.

Ver. 14. And from. Heb. “from between the new altar and the house of," &c. H.—Achaz had placed his altar before that of Solomon: but he afterwards removed the latter from the right-hand of the sanctuary, to a corner of the court, on the north side. C.—In the midst of his distress, he despised God; sacrificed to the gods of the Syrians, as more powerful and victorious than the Lord; pillaged the temple, which he shut up during the remainder of his reign, (H.) and erected altars for himself in all the corners of Jerusalem. 2 Par. 28:24.

Ver. 15. Morning, as prescribed in the law. Ex. 29:38.—King's ordained for sin: (Lev. 4:22) or instituted by Solomon, who left a fund. H. 2 Par. 8:12. M.—The law says nothing about the king's daily holocaust and sacrifice of flour. H.—But it probably was offered after the morning and evening sacrifices. This Achaz calls his own, (v. 12. C.) as he had not yet laid aside the practice.—Pleasure. Heb. "to inquire about." H.—I shall do what I think proper with it. M.

Ver. 17. Stone, all out of avarice, (H.) and contempt of the Lord, who chastized him. M.—He took away the plates of brass, &c. from the doors, (C.) which Ezechias was forced to replace, (H.) afterwards to take down for the Assyrians. C. 18:16. C.

Ver. 18. Musach. The covert, or pavilion, or tribune for the king. Ch.—Achaz would not have his ally to be in the court, but placed his throne in the temple. D.—Sept. "and the foundation of the chair he built in the house of the Lord." H.—Heb. "and the (musac) covert, or tribune of the sabbath, which they had built in the temple, and the king's entry without, the turned (H.) round (M.) from the temple, for the king of Assur." He despoiled these rich ornaments, to gratify the Assyrian. H.—Solomon had built a most magnificent tribune. 2 Par. 6:13. See C. 11:6. The musach of Juda, was the pulpit; from which the law was read. Isai. 22:8. The king's tribune was near the eastern gate, which was only opened on the sabbath. Ezec. 46:1. Some believe that the musach was a large curtain, suspended over the court, to keep off the sun's beams. Eupolemus speaks of some very magnificent ones, (Euseb. præp. ix. 34. as does also Josephus; such as those which covered the Roman theatres. Others think it was a tent for the priests to take a little rest, or for the door-keepers, or a chest designed to receive the contributions for the repairs of the temple, or for the king to distribute his alms, or a covered throne for him to sit down on. C.

Ver. 19. Book. Heb. "in the chronicles;" or, "in the book of the annals." H.

Ver. 20. With them; but not in the same sepulchre, on account of his impiety. 2 Par. 28:27. C.—In the 5th year of his reign, the Idumeans harassed the country, and in the 6th, the Philistines took several towns; (Salien) so that he fell a prey to enemies on all sides, and was memorable for nothing but impiety and disasters. H.—Rome was built, and Numa born, on the 21st of April, in the 9th year of Achaz, and the first of the 7th Olympiad. Salien, A.C. Christ 751.

Ver. 1. Twelfth. Houbigant would substitute 14th, to make the dates agree, p. 113. See C. 15:30. H.—Till this time, Osee had been tributary to the Assyrian monarch. Grotius.—Heb. may be, “in the 12th year ... Osee ... had reigned ... nine years; which his true. C.—He reigned so long afterwards, v. 6. H.

Ver. 2. Him. The Jews say, that he did not hinder his subjects from going to Jerusalem to adore. One of the golden calves had been sent away by Manahem. Osee 10:5. C.—Yet under the less wicked king the nation is destroyed, as their crimes were come to the height; and Osee had not sufficient virtue to suspend the stroke of divine justice any longer. H.

Ver. 3. Salmanasar, who is called Salman, or Salomo; (Osee 10:14) and Enemassar, in the Greek of Toby. The Tyrians relate that he took many of their towns, but that Tyre sustained a siege of five years. Joseph. ix. 14.

Ver. 4. Sua; probably Sabachon, king of Ethiopia, who made himself master of Egypt, and burnt king Bocchoris alive. Herodotus (ii. 137.) calls him Abacus. Jocquelot thinks that Sethon is meant, and that he was invaded by Sennacherib on account of this league with Osee. C.—Prison, after he had taken the city, (H.) which held out three years. This great city was then reduced to a heap of ruins, and so continued till after the captivity of the Jews, (1 Esd. 4:17) when it began to be peopled again. The inhabitants revolted against Alexander the Great, who placed Macedonians in their city, and gave the territory to the Jews. It was afterwards seized by the kings of Egypt and of Syria. But Hyrcan retook it, and levelled it with the ground. Gabinius built another town here, which bore his name till Herod greatly enlarged it, and called it Sebaste. C.—The prophets describe the distress of Samaria. Osee 10:4 and 14:1. Mic. 1:6. Jer. 31:5.

Ver. 6. Medes. See C. 16:9. The great maxim and policy of these nations, was to transport the conquered nations to a distant country, in order to prevent any revolts. C.

Ver. 9. Offended. Heb. “They concealed (or spoke secretly, H.) words, which were not right before the Lord:” (C.) being guilty of hypocrisy or of blasphemy. H.—Watchmen: the meanest huts. T.—All was contaminated. C.—Towers were erected to guard the flocks from thieves. 2 Par. 26:10. M.

Ver. 10. Groves. Heb. Asherim, Astarte or Venus, to whom “the groves” were consecrated. C. 21:7. and 23:4. C.

Ver. 11. Removed by the sword, (M.) or by flight. H.

Ver. 12. Abominations. Heb. gillulim, “idols of dung.”—Thing. Lit. “word.”

Ver. 13. Seers. See 1 K. 9:9. M.—God never ceased to admonish the rebels. H.—Jer. 25:5. M.

Ver. 15. Testimonies. The ceremonial law was in memory of some great transactions, as the sabbath was of the creation; and the whole law was given with great solemnity, in the presence of witnesses. C.

Ver. 16. Heaven: sun and moon; and the stars, which were like the soldiers of the two former. This expression is very common in Scripture.

Ver. 17. Fire. See C. 16:3.—Delivered. Heb. “sold,” 3 K. 21:20. 1 Mac. 1:16. C.—To provoke. This was the consequence of their wickedness. W.

Ver. 18. Sight, as objects of horror, cast away from the temple, and from the promised land.—Tribe, or kingdom. See 3 K. 12:20. Israel began to be rejected by God, when the schism took place. H.—It was entirely lost, when Salmanasar took the people into captivity. Some few were left; and these formed a part of the kingdom of Josias, on their returning to the service of the true God, (2 Par. 24:6) while others fled into Egypt. Osee 8:13 and 9:3. C.

Ver. 23. Day. If Esdras was the author of this book, as it is very probable, this observation would tend to show how much more favourably the Jews were treated than the kingdom of Israel, which was still, for the most part, in captivity. C.

Ver. 24. King, Assaraddon, who led away the remnants of Israel, and fulfilled the prediction, Isai. 7:8. D.—Babylon, or the territory. These people had been lately conquered from the Babylonian empire, from Syria, &c.—Cutha: the greatest part were from this city; so that the Samaritans were afterwards called Cutheans.—Emath, on the Orontes.

—Sepharvaim; or the Saspire, near Media. C.—We find several other places mentioned, 1 Esd. 4:9. H.

Ver. 25. Lions. The Sam. Chronicle says the fruits, though beautiful to the eye, were of a poisonous quality; and Josephus, as usual, (ix. 14.) alters the text, saying that the people were afflicted with pestilence, and the oracle being consulted, told them to worship the High God; on which account, they desired the king to send them a priest. C.—These nations had not been accustomed to fear the Lord in their own country; but God was more offended when they exercised their idolatrous worship in that land, which he had chosen in a particular manner for himself. M.—He suffers wickedness and infidelity to prevail to a certain point; but when his patience is exhausted, (C.) all nature fights for him against the wicked. H.

Ver. 26. King: Assar-adon. 1 Esd. 4:2. They did not send as soon as they came into the country.—Land. They reason according to their false notions, as if a plurality of gods were not incompatible: and all would go on well, if each were served according to his will. On the same principle, they united the worship of the true God with that of idols, (C.) as had been done before by the Israelites. M.—Yet God having shewn that he could have forced them to comply, (Tostat.) was pleased to remove the scourge; as if he preferred that imperfect worship rather than to suffer pure idolatry to reign. Genebrard.

Ver. 27. Let him. Heb. Chal. Sept. “them go.” Probably more went; but one was of superior dignity. He might have been priest of the golden calves, as none of the priests of Jerusalem had yet been taken. Hence he taught the Cutheans to join the worship of God with that of idols. Some think that no part of the Scripture was used among them, till the building of the temple by Sanballat, on Mount Garizim: (Le Quien, Antiquite. v. 13.) but this is extremely improbable. How should he pretend to teach the law without the books of Moses? H.—The Samaritans have retained the Pentateuch in the Phœnician character, while the Jews have insensibly adopted the Chaldee, during their captivity. On some occasions, these people have boasted of their descent from the patriarchs. Jo. 4:12 and 20. But in times of danger, they have confessed their true origin. Joseph. ix. fin. and xii. 5.

Ver. 28. Bethel. Garizim was not then honoured with the temple, as the Samaritans would pretend. Chron. They wished to join in building that at Jerusalem, under Esdras. C.—Lord. Collins would make us believe, that the Samaritans continued “for a long time” without the Pentateuch, and all “heathens for many ages.” But the first supposition “is to me incredible,” says Kennicott; and Hottinger himself allows, that the priests did bring back a copy of the law “exactly corresponding with the autograph of Moses.” Exert. p. 8. And as for the Samaritans being heathens, Prideaux, whom this infidel writer quotes, (H.) says, “consistently with his Bible, that they continued in that gross idolatry of worshipping other gods in conjunction with the True; which last words are very unfairly omitted.” Kennicott, Diss. ii. p. 115.—This was the true origin and state of this mixture of nations, who were sent to cultivate the lands of Samaria. H.

Ver. 29. Dwelt. This impure service did not deserve a mitigation of the late chastisement. But God often punishes in this world (H.) to manifest his glory, (Jo. 9:3) and spares to display his power (C.) and goodness. H.—He had sufficiently convinced these nations of his dominion over all.

Ver. 30. Socoth-benoth, “the tents of young women,” who prostituted themselves once in their lives at Babylon, in honour of Mylitta. Herod. ii. 199.—Nergel, “light.” C.—The Pyreia (H.) of the Persians are famous in history. Strabo xv. Selden, Synt. ii. 8.—Asima, like an ape, goat, &c. C.

Ver. 31. Hevites, who came from Ava.—Nebahaz. “Nebo the seeing, or living and possessing.” Nebo was a famous idol of Babylon.—Tharthac; perhaps Sar, (prince) Sak, or Sesac, (Jer. 25:26 and 51:41) the sun, &c.—Adramelech, “the magnificent king,” and Anamelech, “the king of clemency,” may denote the sun and moon; as these were the divinities commonly adored in the East, under various names. The same victims were offered to these as to Moloc and Saturn; whence we may infer, that they were the same idols. S. Jerom translates the work of Eusebius on the Heb. (C.) and places without any disapprobation of his opinion, that Socoth-benoth, &c. were the names of towns, which the people built in Samaria. H.

Ver. 32. Worshipped, or appeared to worship: for true religion admits of no false god. W.—Lowest. This expression sometimes means the most noble. H.—But the priests were chosen from the midst of the people, without examination. They employed the priest, whom the king had sent for the worship of the true God, whilst others were appointed to serve the idols. C.

Ver. 34. His ceremonies. Heb. “they fear not the Lord, neither do they after their statutes.” Prot. H.—This involves a sort of contradiction, unless we explain it of the Israelites; thought they had not been mentioned before. There is a confusion in the original text; and v. 41 seems to require that we should understand it in this manner, as the Cutheans could hardly be blamed for neglecting a thing of which they had before no knowledge. The Israelites are justly blamed for obstinately continuing in their prevarication, even in the midst of their captivity. The Syr. and Arab. translate, “The Israelites have been forced to leave their country, because they have abandoned the Lord; and they have not obeyed his laws, his precepts, and his ordinances, which he gave to,” &c. Many adopt this explanation. Jun. Vatab. &c. C.—Sept. make these people unite the true and the false worship, as v. 41. “They did according to their judgment. These fear, and do according to their justifications (δικαιώματα) and decision; and according to the law,” &c. H.

Ver. 1. Third, far advanced, as he was associated by his father in the last year of his reign, (C.) or three years before its termination. D.

Ver. 3. Good; opening the temple, celebrating the Passover with extraordinary magnificence, &c. He had invited people from all Israel, and at their return they broke many statues. Ezechias provided for the subsistence of the Levitical tribe, by ordering the laws to be put in execution in their favour. 2 Paral. 29 and 30.

Ver. 4. Groves. The people were now more obedient, being terrified at the chastisement of Israel, (C.) though Samaria was not taken till the sixth year of this good king; who carried his reform rather than most of his predecessors, (H.) in destroying the high places which had been unlawfully (C.) retained, as consecrated to the true God. See v. 22. H.—Yet Josias had still some to remove. M.—Nohestan; that is, their brass, or a little brass. So he called it in contempt, because they had made a god of it. Ch.—Before, this image had been treated with due respect. When any relic or image becomes the occasion of abuse in the Catholic Church, it is thus taken away, or the error is otherwise corrected. See S. Aug. de C. x. 8. Ser. 14. de Verb. Ap. &c. W.—Some of the ancients assert, that Ezechias suppressed many books of Solomon, on account of similar abuses. But this seems not to be well attested. We know that he made a collection of some of some of his sentences. Prov. 25:1.

Ver. 5. Like him. Ezechias was remarkable for many excellent qualities. Yet we must not push these comparisons too far, contrary to the intention of the sacred writers. The same eulogium is given to Josias, (C. 23:25) and David seems to be preferred. C. 19:34. These three are particularly commended. Eccli. 49:5. C.—Their virtues were certainly different in some respects. T.

Ver. 7. Wisely. Heb. “with success.” Syr. &c. “he was victorious wherever he went.”—Rebelled. The Assyrian assumed an undue authority in consequence of the words of Achaz, (C. 16:7) and arrogated to himself the authority of doing what he pleased with the people, v. 32. Ezechias having formed various alliances, judged it necessary to make some resistance. Yet the prophet Isaias (30:1) complains of his applying to the Egyptians. C.

Ver. 8. City. Thus he punished them for their late invasion. 2 Par. 28:18.

Ver. 9. Samaria. The same history is given, C. 17:3. C.

Ver. 11. By the rivers. Gozan was the name of the river, as above; (H.) so that Salien suspects it should be fluvii, “of the river.” M.

Ver. 13. Sennacherib's expedition in Egypt and Asia are mentioned by Herodotus (ii. 141.) and Berosus, (Joseph. x. 1.) but they do not say that he passed farther then Pelusium, (C.) the frontier on the Egyptian side of Palestine. H.—These expeditions might have been performed in less than eight months, during the 14th year of Ezechias, who fell sick, perhaps soon after the ruin of Sennacherib's army. C. 20:1. Isaias (10:28) represents the Assyrian proceeding from Gabaa towards Egypt, and thence he ascended to attack the cities of Juda, (v. 25.) Manresa, (Mic. 1:15.) &c. While he was before Lachis, Ezechias, dreading the horrors of war, purchased a peace: but the tyrant soon after sent to require him to surrender at discretion; and in the mean time he went to besiege Lebna, where his envoys found him, having received no answer from the king of Juda. The haughty Assyrian being obliged to go to meet the king of Chus, sent insolent letters to Ezechias; but the latter was assured that all his menaces were to be despised, and on the same night that Sennacherib left Lebna, the angel destroyed 185,000 of his men. It is thought that the siege of Lachis did not take place till three years after Sennacherib had come into Palestine, and after he had spent that time in attacking Egypt, C. 19:24. Joseph. x. 2. and 3. —He attempted afterwards to take the southern cities of Juda, in order to cut off all communication with Egypt; as Nabuchodonosor, Holofernes, and Eupator probably intended to do. Jer. 24:7. Judith 6 and 7. 1 Mac. 6:31. C.—Offended, and been imprudent. M.—Gold, so that the value of each was equal. D.—Josephus reads, “or thirty,” as if that quantity of gold would suffice. H.—The talent contains 3000 sicles. M.—The heart of Ezechias fainted at the approach of so great an army, though he had before made the greatest preparations. C. 20:2. 2 Par. 32:5. Eccli. 48:19. T.

Ver. 16. On them. All must go to meet the exigencies of the state. Grot. Jur. ii. 5.—The doors of temples and palaces were frequently adorned with the most precious metals, as Homer describes the palace of Alcinous; (Odys. H.) and Tavernier (vii. 12.) speaks of some mosques in Persia, the doors of which are covered with plates of silver. See Joseph. Bel. vi. 6.

Ver. 17. Tharthan, or Thathanian, (1 Esd. 5:3) and in the Greek of Isa. 20:1 means “the president of tributes,” or presents. The two other names denote “the chief eunuch,” and “the chief butler,” and are not proper names. These officers were sent at the head of a strong army to Jerusalem.—Field, by the torrent Cedron, to the east. There they defied the king, or perhaps endeavoured to persuade him to come out, that they might seize his person. C. They came in a military capacity, rather than as ambassadors.

Ver. 18. House. Josephus says, “procurator of the palace or kingdom.” H.—The house often refers to the temple, when placed without any explanation. Isai. 22:15. C.—Eliacim was prefect of the prætorium, (Salien) or grand master of the palace. He was richly dressed, and possessed a great authority over the people.—Scribe. See Judg. 8:14. This Sobna, according to S. Jerom, is different from the one who was over the house in the days of Manasses, before Eliacim was restored to his office, (C.) unless he also was a different person. T.—The Jews say Sobna was deprived of his dignity, on account of his having betrayed the lower city to Sennacherib. See Isai. 22:21.—Recorder, or chancellor, &c. 2 K. 8:16. C.

Ver. 20. Counsel. Heb. “Thou sayest (but they are but vain words) I have counsel and strength for the war.” Prot. H.—You have vainly boasted. C.—Isai. 26:5. C.

Ver. 21. Pierce it. He alludes to the reeds which grow on the Nile. See Delrio, adag. 210. Egypt had been already greatly harassed in the expedition of Sennacherib, so that no succour could be expected thence. C.

Ver. 22. Jerusalem. Many were perhaps displeased at this injunction, and Rabsaces endeavoured to excite them to revolt, and insinuates (C.) that the king had made God his enemy, (H.) and must expect punishment from him. Theod. in Isai. xxxvi. 5. He perhaps was ignorant that these altars were contrary to his law. M.—Yet the Jews say that Rabsaces was son of Isaias, (ap. S. Jer. bib.) or a Samaritan.

Ver. 23. Over. Josephus insinuates that it is a challenge to fight, and that Rabsaces was so confident of victory, that he made this contemptuous proposal, (H.) knowing that the subjects of Ezechias were not good horsemen, (C.) or that they were comparatively (H.) so few in number. M.—Heb. “agree, or give pledges to my master.”

Ver. 25. Destroy. Prosperity renders a man insolent, and the passions blind him. Rabsaces interprets success to be a sure proof of the divine approbation, and thus attempts to justify all the excesses of his master. C.—God only used Sennacherib as a rod to chastise his people. M.—The most wicked often represent themselves as the executioners of God’s will, and attribute their ambition to his decrees. H.—God did not order the Assyrians to destroy the land: he rather threatened to destroy them. Isai. 37. 2 Par. 32. W.

Ver. 26. Syriac, or Chaldee language, which was spoken at the Assyrian court, 1 Esd. 4:7. Dan. 2:4. Rabsaces was acquainted with both the languages; as the Jews say he was an apostate, which they infer from this passage, and from the legates tearing their clothes when they heard him blaspheme; as they pretend this was only done when blasphemy came from the mouth of an Israelite. Grotius.—But these reasons are very weak. C.—The like was practised when any thing terrifying was heard, v. 37. H.—The reasons why the legates desire Rabsaces not to speak in a language which the common soldiers understood, was to prevent them from shewing their indignation by shooting at him, or out of fear, lest they should be induced to cause some sedition. M.

Ver. 27. With you. Insolent bravado! whence some have inferred the probability of pigeons’ dung being really eaten. (C. 6:25.) C.—Rabsaces threatens them with all the horrors of famine, so that they shall eat such things, if they refuse to give up the city. M.

Ver. 29. My. Heb. and Vat. Sept. “his (Sennacherib’s) hand.” But the other reading of the Syriac, &c. is more natural. These words do not occur Isai. 36:14.

Ver. 31. Advantage. Heb. “make a blessing,” or present. C.—Chal. and Syr. “peace.”

Ver. 32. Till. Sennacherib will remove you to another country, but it will be as good as this. He requires you to surrender at discretion. C.—Deliver us. This will not be in his power, no more than it was in that of the other tutelary gods. M.—Infidels and heretics are very foolish thus to compare their delusions with God, and his holy religion. W.

Ver. 34. Emath, Emesa.—Arphad, or Arad, an island and city on the continent, (C.) near Tyre.—Of Ana, &c., “of,” is not expressed in the Vulg. (H.) and it may be explained as if Ana and Ava were idols of Sepharvaim. M.—But they are commonly supposed to be cities. H.—Ana is probably a city (D.) built on both sides of the Euphrates, four days' journey from Bagdat. Isaias does not specify these cities in the parallel passage, but they are found in the letter addressed to Ezechias, Isai. 37:13.—Samaria, or the inhabitants who had come from distant parts, and had perhaps revolted. We do not however find the Sennacherib had conquered them, nor does he pretend that all these conquests were made by himself. C.—He gives part of the honour to his ancestors. C. 19:12. 2 Par. 32:13. But he asserts that all the gods of the respective countries of Samaria, &c. had yielded to his superior force. H.—Strange infatuation in a man who looked upon the idols as gods! They are in effect nothing. 1 Cor. 8:4. But as their votaries were of a different persuasion, ought they not to have acted and spoken consistently? Yet Suetonius (Caius, c. 5.) informs us, that “on the day when Germanicus died, the temples were stoned, the altars of the gods overturned, the domestic lares thrown out by some into the open air;” all to express their grief and indignation at the gods, for not preserving his life. H.

Ver. 36. The people. The three legates, (C.) Isai. 36:21. And they held their peace. H.

Ver. 37. Rent, as was customary on such dismal occasions. Joakim is reprehended for not shewing this mark of consternation, when he heard the dreadful predictions of Jeremias, 36:24. C.

Ver. 3. Blasphemy. The enemy insults over us (C.) and over God. H.—Birth. Heb. “the mouth of the womb.” Vatab.—This comparison shews the utmost distress to which the people of Jerusalem were reduced. Any great anguish is denoted by a woman in travail. Deut. 2:25. Ps. 47:7. Homer (Iliad A) thus describes the uneasiness of Agamemnon. C.—Ezechias found himself unable to contend with the Assyrian, though he wished to do it. M.—Without courage, all hope of escaping is lost. D.

Ver. 4. It may. Lit. “if perhaps the Lord hear.” H.—Found. After such devastation has been made in the country, particularly by carrying away the ten tribes, (C.) Ezechias recommends the kingdom to the prayers of the prophet; as we are exhorted to have recourse to the intercession of the saints. H.

Ver. 7. Upon him, so that he shall be eager enough to return, (C.) being filled with consternation at the approach of Tharaca, (M.) and at the destruction of his men by an angel, v. 35. H.—Lachis and Lobna were both in the mountains of Juda, to the south of Jerusalem. Jos. 10:31. C.

Ver. 9. When he, Sennacherib, though it would seem to refer to Rabshaces. H.—Tharaca, called by Thearchon by Strabo, (i. and xv. p. 653.) extended his conquests as far as the pillars of Hercules. Megasthenes.—The Egyptians seem to have called him Sethon, and assert that the god (Vulcan) appeared to him on the approach of Sennacherib, assuring him of his protection. He encamped near Pelusium, where the enemy's army on its arrival was infested with rats, which destroyed their armour, and made them an easy prey. Herodot. ii. 141. It is probable that Taphnes, near Pelusium, was the capital city of Tharaca. Isai. 18 and 30:4. He does not appear to have joined battle with Sennacherib, whose army was destroyed on its march (ib. 10:24) the very night that the prophet promised Ezechias a deliverance.

Ver. 12. Gozan, in Less Armenia; Haran and Reseph in Palmerene Syria. Thelassar, or Syria. They were nations not very remote. See C. 18:34. C.

Ver. 14. Before the Lord, to move him to revenge his own cause, (H.) and to shew that he looked upon the Lord, as a father, with the utmost confidence (M.) and resignation. He spreads the blasphemous letter (H.) before the ark, which was the special place for prayer. W.

Ver. 15. Earth. He attempts to make some reparation for the blasphemies which had been uttered (C.) and written. H.

Ver. 16. Unto us is not in Heb. or Sept. D.—God, as if he were not able to deliver us. M.

Ver. 21. Virgin. The few who adhere to the Lord despise all idols and their votaries. W.—Of Sion and of Jerusalem may denote those places. Towns and provinces are often represented as women: the daughter of Babylon, the daughter of the sea, mean Babylon and a maritime town. Perhaps this comparison is used through tenderness and affection for a place. C.—Even the most timid female would shortly despise the fallen tyrant. H.—Wagged, out of contempt, or in a threatening manner. Ps. 21:8. Mat. 27:39. M.

Ver. 22. Of Israel. This title is often found in Isaias; 45:11. and 47:4. &c.

Ver. 23. Carmel. A pleasant fruitful hill in the forest. These expressions are figurative, signifying, under the names of mountains and forests, the kings and provinces whom the Assyrians had triumphed over. Ch.—He must have passed by Libanus, and might boast of this exploit. Other proud words to the same purpose are mentioned Isai. 10:9 and 33:9. He had made himself master of Mount Carmel, as well as of Libanus. C.

Ver. 24. Strange waters, which did not run in my original dominions, (H.) or which were found by opening springs before unknown.—Shut-up, with mounds of earth, or in the banks of rivers. The army of Xerxes is said to have drunk whole rivers dry. We might also translate, “I have dried up the waters, which served as ramparts for cities.” Thus Cyrus diverted the streams of the Gnidus, and of the Euphrates. Heb. also, perhaps most literally, “I will dry up the rivulets of Egypt.” See Isai. 19:6 and 37:25. C.—Prot. “all the rivers of besieged places.” H.

Ver. 25. I have formed it, &c. All thy exploits, in which thou takest pride, are no more than what I have decreed; and are not to be ascribed to thy wisdom or strength, but to my will and ordinance: who have give to thee to take and destroy so many fenced cities, and to carry terror wherever thou comest.—Ruins. Literally, “ruin of hills.” Ch.—Prot. “Now have I brought it to pass, that thou shouldest be to lay waste fenced cities into ruinous heaps.” H.

Ver. 26. Of hand. Heb. “short, (C.) or contracted in hand,” or power. This does not add to the glory of Sennacherib; and if the enemy had been less valiant, the victory was still to be attributed to God. H.—The Assyrian found but little resistance. C. 18:13.

Ver. 27. In. All thy actions. M.—I knew, or disposed of, for wise purposes. Nothing shews more forcibly the dominion of God, even over the most impious. They cannot frustrate the divine decrees.

Ver. 28. Ring, or hook, like that with which fishes are taken. C.—Bit. Prot. “bridle,” (H.) or a sort of muzzle. M.—I will treat thee like a furious beast.—Camest, without having effected what thou hadst designed. H.

Ver. 29. O Ezechias is not in Heb. or Sept.; but they shew the sense. H. —Second, which was a sabbatical year. Usher. T.—We elsewhere find signs given as a proof of past events, and that they were from God, who enabled his prophet to foretell both. Ex. 3:12. Isai. 8:4. Thus three things are proved. 1. That the prophet is truly animated with the divine spirit. 2. That God is the author of the miracle. 3. As also of the sign which follows it, particularly if the sign be likewise miraculous. It was of the utmost importance that the people should be convinced that all proceeded from the hand of Providence, in the overthrow of Sennacherib. C.—Such things. Isaias (37:30) specifies apples, as they also supplied the people with food. M.

Ver. 30. Upward, like a fruitful tree. H.

Ver. 31. Sion. These shall repeople the land. In a higher sense, the Christian Church was propagated by the few Jews who believed. C.—Zeal, or ardent love. M.—Of hosts, is added in the Prot. version, as being deficient in the Heb. H.—It is found in several MSS. Kennicott.

Ver. 32. About it, as was then the custom in besieging cities. Josephus and others suppose that Sennacherib's army was destroyed before Jerusalem. But it seems more probable it fell on the road to Egypt, v. 7. The camp, which is still shewn, might be that of Rabsaces. C. 18:17. C.

Ver. 33. Return. Sennacherib's life was spared for a time, that he might be covered with ignominy the longer, and suffer a more disgraceful death. H.

Ver. 34. Own sake, who have chosen this city for my sanctuary. M.—David. Here again we behold the influence of the saints with God.

Ver. 35. Night following the prediction of Isaias, (C.) or that memorable night which would be so terrible to the Assyrians after three years, v. 29. Thus we read, in that day, &c. Isai. 27. M.—The exterminating angel, (Ex. 11:4. C.) an evil spirit, (Ps. 77:49) or the guardian of the synagogue. Abulensis.—When he, Sennacherib. Heb. &c. “when they,” his few attendants who were spared to announce this judgment; (Isai. 37:36. C.) or when the inhabitants of Jerusalem arose. H. It seems the carnage was effected without much noise, (C.) by fire (Rabbins) or by pestilence. Josephus. M.

Ver. 37. Nesroch. Josephus calls both the idol and the temple Araskes. Sennacherib persecuted the Israelites for 45 (Greek 55) days. Toby. 1:21.—Sons, as the Jews suppose they were destined for victims by their father, and got beforehand with him. S. Jer. in Isai. x. C.—Armenia. So the Prot. translate Ararath, (H.) where Noe's ark rested. This nation has been esteemed very warlike, and has always asserted its liberty.—Asarhaddon. His two elder brothers were excluded, on account of their parricide. Joseph.—This prince is called Sargon in Isai. 20:1 and Achirdon in Toby 1:24.

Ver. 1. Days, before the destruction of Sennacherib's army; (v. 6. M.) though some suppose that Ezechias was afflicted with sickness, because he had not shewn sufficient gratitude for his deliverance. 2 Par. 32:24. Euseb. and S. Jerom in Isai. xxxix. C.—But it might be sent only to purify him the more, &c. M.—He fell ill the same year that the Assyrian invaded his dominions, v. 6, and C. 18:13. The nature of his disorder is not fully known. It was probably an abscess, (C.) brought on by a fever; or an ulcer, for which the things which promote suppuration, are always proper. Thus God teaches us to make use of natural remedies, yet so as to place our whole confidence in him. H.—Others think it was a pleurisy, (John 21. Thesaur. 26.) or a quinsy, (Barthol.) or the pestilence, &c. C.—Unto death, of an illness, which would naturally have proved mortal; as that of Benadad was the reverse. C. 8:10.—Not live, very shortly; though he does not express the time. We should always bear in mind this awful warning. H.—The prediction was conditional, like that of Jonas; (3:4. C.) otherwise it would have been sinful to strive to render it ineffectual. E.

Ver. 2. Wall, towards the temple; (Chal. &c.) or that he might be less distracted, and indulge his grief without restraint.

Ver. 3. Before thee. The saints of the old law frequently mention their good works, (Ps. 7:9. &c. 2 Esd. 13:14) which is less common in those of the new. When God rewards our good works, he only crowns his own gifts. C.—Ezechias had sincerely desired to please God, though he might have given way to some imperfections, v. 1. H.—Weeping; because he thought that the Messiah would not be one of his posterity, as he had yet no children. C. 21:1. S. Jerom.—The saints of the Old Testament could only be received into Abraham's bosom. We may be with Christ immediately after death; so that it is far less terrible. Phil. 1:23. H.

Ver. 4. Court. Heb. her, "city;" but in the margin, (C.) etsor. Sept. αὐλή, "hall," or court, is retained, and followed by the Chal. C.—Prot. "the middle court." H.

Ver. 5. Day, dating from the time when Isaias spoke. Tostat.—This shewed that the cure was miraculous, and not effected by natural remedies only. T.

Ver. 6. Assyrians. It is commonly supposed that this alludes to Sennacherib. But it might refer to his son, who was sending an army. Isai. 20:1. We ought not to alter the scriptural order of the transactions, without cogent reasons.

Ver. 7. Figs; dried. They are very serviceable in various disorders of the throat, to mullify, &c. Pliny xxiii. 3. Aldrov. ii.—S. Jerom (in Isai. xxxviii.) acknowledges that they might help to removed the disorder. Grotius is of a contrary opinion; (C.) and this would enhance the miracle. See Vales. xxxix. M.—At any rate, the discovery of this remedy to the prophet, and its sudden efficacy, were miraculous. C.

Ver. 8. Signs. He is not incredulous, but gives the prophet an occasion of declaring by what authority he spoke thus.

Ver. 10. Lines, according to the usual course of the sun. An instantaneous motion of this kind would, in reality, be as difficult, as the retrogradation. But it might not strike the people so much. H.—Some take the lines to designate hours. But the sun is never up twenty hours in that country; and it must have been at such a height, as that it might appear visibly to recede, or to go forward, ten lines. We may therefore suppose, that they consisted only of half hours, (T.) or less. C.—If the retrograde motion were instantaneous, as Cajetan believes, the day would only be five hours longer than usual; (M.) but if otherwise, it would be ten; as the sun would occupy five hours in going back, and as many to regain its former station. T.—Usher supposes that the night was as much shortened, that so astronomical observations may still be verified without any confusion. But that would introduce a fresh miracle. Some assert that only the shadow went back, without any derangement in the heavenly bodies. Spinosa laughs at the ignorance of those people, who mistook the effects of a parhelion for a miracle. This author may boast of his superior knowledge. But how came the sages of Babylon (v. 12.) to be unacquainted with such a natural cause? How came it so opportunely (C.) at the time appointed by the prophet? What improbable explanations are not those forced to admit, who deny to the Almighty the power of changing his own works! H.—The silence of profane historians respecting this miracle, is of little consequence. Herodotus (ii. 142.) seems to hint at it, as well as at that under Josue; (x.) being informed “by the Egyptians, that during 10340 years, the sun had risen four times in an extraordinary manner. It had risen twice where it ought naturally to set, and had set as often where it should rise.” He might have said more simply, that the sun had twice gone back. See Solin, 45. C.—S. Dion. Areop. ep. 7. ad Polycarp.—This last author thinks that this day was twenty hours longer than usual, supposing that the lines designate so many hours, and that the sun kept going back for ten hours. W.

Ver. 11. Dial. Heb. also, “steps.” S. Jerom confesses that he followed Sym. in Isai. 38:7. Whether this dial resembled one of ours, (Grotius) or was made in the form of steps, (S. Cyr. hom. 3, in Isaïas, &c.) or rather of a half globe, (C.) after the Babylonian fashion, (Vitruv. ix. 9.) is not clear. Some have asserted that hours were not known to the Hebrews, before the captivity. Usher, A. 3291.—But Toby, (12:22) who wrote at Nineve, under the reign of Manasses, clearly speaks of them. The Egyptians pretend that they invented water hour-glasses. But the invention of dials is attributed to the Chaldees, from whom Anaximander introduced them among the Greeks, under the reign of Cyrus. He died A. 3457.—Achaz had much to do with Theglathphalasar; (C. 17:8) and probably obtained this curiosity from the same country. In more ancient times, people measured time by the length of their shadow, and were invited to a feast at such a foot, in the same manner as we should invite for such an hour. Palladius, Rustic. xii. C.—Till the year of Rome 595, when Nasica dedicated the first water hour-glass, the Romans knew not how the time passed on cloudy days. Pliny vii. 60. Vitruvius ix. 9.—Grotius supposes that the dial of Achaz was a concave semicircular gnomon, in which a globe was placed, the shadow of which fell on twenty-eight lines. D.

Ver. 12. Berodach, or Merodac Baladan. Isai. 39:1. C.—The latter was his father; the famous Nabonassar. D.—Letters, or books. Isai.—Sick. They came to congratulate him on his recovery, and also (M.) to inquire of the wonder that had happened upon the earth. God left him that he might be tempted, and all things might be made known that were in his heart. 2 Par. 32:31. H.—If this embassy took place after the fall of Sennacherib, the king of Babylon might thank Ezechias for having stopped the career of that ambitious monarch, from whom the former had every thing to fear. C.

Ver. 13. Rejoiced, at being honoured by so great a prince, (M.) who afterwards defeated Asarhaddon. T.—Heb. “hearkened unto them.” But the sense of the Vulg. is preferable, and the construction of the original seems to require it, as it is also understood by the Sept. and Syriac, and by Isaïas, 39:2.—Spices. Heb. “precious things,” (Mont.) “treasures,” (Chal. Syr.) “cabinet” of jewels, &c. Vatable.—Vessels, or armour, and all this fine furniture. S. Jerom says, that Ezechias also displayed before them the treasures of the temple, which chiefly drew upon him God’s displeasure. C.—He might be guilty only of a venial sin of vanity and of ingratitude: (M.) and God took occasion, from this offence to admonish the king of the impending ruin. D.

Ver. 17. Babylon, under the last kings of Juda. It cannot be explained of Sennacherib. C. 18:15.

Ver. 18. Eunuchs; servants. Dan. 1:3. We only read of Manasses, who was taken to Babylon. C.—But he might have many brothers, who might be reduced to a menial condition; (Salien) as the text seems to refer to the immediate sons of Ezechias. H.—It may, however, be explained of his descendants. M. C. 24:12.

Ver. 19. Let. Heb. “and he added, let,” &c. C.—Prot. “he said, is it not good, if peace and truth (or a solid and desirable peace) be in my days?” He is not indifferent about his family, as the Jews would insinuate (Eus. and S. Jer. in Isai. xxxix. 7. 8) from the prophet’s adding, Be comforted ... my people; (C. 40:1. H.) but he submits with resignation to God’s decrees, (S. Ambrose) and begs that God would be pleased to suffer him to die in peace, as the sentence did not seem to affect his person. H.—Josephus insinuates that he was exceedingly grieved at the distress which hung over his posterity, (Ant. x. 3.) and we are assured the Ezechias and the people entered into sentiments of humility and penance, which for a time averted the wrath of God. 2 Par. 32:26.

Ver. 20. City. Probably before it was besieged by Sennacherib. 2 Par. 32:4.—Juda, and in the works of Isaias. Ibid. 32:32. Isaias 37 and 38 and 39. The prophet gives us the canticle of this pious king, who shone with so great splendour, and did so much for the good of his people. C. 18:4. 5. Eccli. 48:19. C.—He generously opposed the reign of vice, and though threatened with the most imminent dangers, came off with victory. Thus Jesus Christ declared war against idolatry and all vice, and established his Church in the midst of persecution. H.—Ezechias was conducted to the gates of death, and brought back; Christ rose victorious from the grave, as the holy king seems to have foreseen. Isai. 38:19. C.

Ver. 1. Twelve. Being born three years after his father’s recovery.—Fifty. Including the years of captivity.

Ver. 2. Idols. Heb. “abominations,” (C.) as their worship was attended with the greatest infamy and dissolution, and was in itself the source of God’s chastisements. H.

Ver. 3. Groves. Heb. Ashera, “the grove,” or the idol of Astarte, (C.) as both were worshipped. H.—Achab, whom he imitated also in spilling the blood of the saints. M.

Ver. 4. Altars, in honour of the sun, moon, and stars, (H.) in the courts of the priests and of the people. 2 Par. 33:4.

Ver. 6. Fire, for purification, or as a holocaust to Moloch. See C. 16:3. —Divination, or, “he observed times,” Arab. Mont.—Omens. Prot. “used enchantments,” (H.) by means of brass or of serpents, &c. C.—Sept. agrees with the Vulg. “he took notice of birds.” H.—Pythons. That is, diviners by spirits (Ch). particularly by Apollo. He authorized and encouraged such ventriloquists, &c. Lev. 19:31.—Soothsayers, who inspected the entrails of victims, to foretell future things. C.—Prot. “He dealt with familiar spirits and wizards.” H.

Ver. 7. Of the grove. Heb. “a graven thing of Ashera,” the grove or Astarte, (H.) v. 3. This was an engraving in sculpture of a sacred grove. Sa. C. 23:6. T.—My name. I alone will be adored, and there allow an altar to be erected. H.

Ver. 9. More, because they had received more favours and instructions from above. W.

Ver. 10. Prophets, Joel, Osee, Amos, Nahum, Jonas, Abdias, Micheas, and particularly by Isaías, who was related to the king. T.—Tradition informs us, that Manasses was so irritated, that he ordered Isaías to be slain with a wooden saw, (S. Aug. de C. D. xviii. 24.) for greater torment; (C.) and his companions were daily executed, Joseph. x. 3.—Isaías (22:13) seems to pronounce his sin irremissible, (C.) or that he should not, at least, escape the punishment of it, as long as he lived. But we are assured that the eyes of Manasses were at last opened by adversity, and that he performed many laudable things after his return from captivity; (2 Par. 33) so that the latter part of his reign resembled that of his father; though the beginning had been like that of the impious Achab. His coming to the throne so soon, before his pious father could have time to impress upon his mind the truths of salvation, had nearly proved his ruin. The sins of my youth, and my ignorances, remember not, O Lord, Ps. 24:7. H.

Ver. 11. Doings. Heb. “idols,” v. 2. See C. 17:12. H.

Ver. 12. Tingle, through astonishment, as if he had been stunned with too loud a sound. 1 K. 3:11. C.

Ver. 13. The line, or rope, to pull down the walls, Lament. 2:8. (C.) 2 K. 17:13. Jerusalem, which has imitated Samaria in sinning, shall experience the same fate; the same weight of punishment shall fall upon the royal family, as upon the house of Achab. H.—The prophets frequently entitle their menaces a weight, or burden. Isai. 13:1. M.—

Sept. have, “the balance of the house, &c.” as if God had weighed all the good and evil, and would now reward the people accordingly, (H.) with judgment. D.—Table, or board, covered with wax. The ancients were accustomed to write in this manner with a style which was sharp at one end and blunt at the other. Altera pars revocat quicquid pars altera fecit. Ænig. Symponii. When the wax was rendered smooth, no vestige of the former writing could appear, and God threatened to destroy Jerusalem, in like manner. Heb. is variously translated. C.—Sept. “I will wipe out Jerusalem as an alabaster vase is wiped, and turned downwards.” Prot. “as a man wipeth a dish, wiping it and turning it upside down.” H.—Often. 1. Under Manasses; 2. under Josias and Joachaz; 3. under the last kings of Juda. 2 Par. 23. &c. T.

Ver. 14. Leave. Sept. “with horror,” απεασομαι (H.) “I will cast off.” So Chal. Syr. &c.—Remnants. Juda, &c. who shall be treated like the ten tribes. C.—All shared in the punishment, though some preserved the true religion. Ps. 88:35. W.

Ver. 16. Mouth. Chal. “extremity.” All was full of blood, and impure idols, v. 11.—Besides, (absque) “without” mentioning his other scandalous sins of idolatry.

Ver. 17. Sinned. It is rather wonderful that his repentance is not here noticed; but we find it mentioned 2 Par. 33:12. H.—He was probably taken prisoner by Thartan, general of Sargon, or Asarhaddon, who had reunited the two kingdoms of Assyria and Babylon. Isai. 20:1. In prison Manasses composed a penitential prayer, which is not absolutely rejected by the Church, but left in the rank of Apocryphal writings; (C.) the authority of which is not clearly ascertained. H.—The Greek church admits this prayer into her Euchologium, (C.) or Office-book. H.—Being liberated, probably by Saosduchin, Manasses did all things well, only he left the high places, where the people had been accustomed to sacrifice to the Lord. Hozai wrote his history. 2 Par. 33:19.

Ver. 18. Oza, a private man, to whom it had belonged; (M.) or the place where the Levite had been punished for touching the ark; (1 K. 6:8) or, in fine, the garden to which king Ozias had retired after he became a leper. C.—It is said, that Manasses chose this place for his tomb out of humility. Grotius.

Ver. 20. Done, in his youth, flattering himself that he should also repent, when he had gratified his passions (Glycas) but God presently chastised this presumption, after suffering him to reign only two years. T.

Ver. 1. Eight years. After he had reigned other eight, being still but a boy, he began more seriously to seek the Lord, and purified his dominions, and the neighbouring country, from all the vestiges of idolatry. 2 Par. 33:3. He was one of the three most excellent kings of Juda, (H.) and might be said to be the last; as those who followed were displaced at pleasure by Egypt, &c. D.

Ver. 3. Scribe of. Heb. “to the temple.” Chal. Syr. &c. It is not certain that there was such an officer as scribe of the temple; but the king’s secretary was ordered by Joas to take an account of the money contributed, C. 12:10. C.—Josias followed the same plan. T.

Ver. 4. Together, so as to be reduced into a mass, and refined by fire. Pagnin.—Sept. “seal up the money.” Prot. “that he may sum the silver which,” &c. H.—Let him make all be paid up that is due, (Piscat.) and cease to demand any more.—Door-keepers. Their office was of some consequence. 1 Par. 9:26. 29. C.

Ver. 5. Overseers, or undertakers. Grotius.—People of the great respectability were selected, so that no reckoning with them was requisite, v. 7. H.—They were thus encouraged to do the work with greater perfection. C.

Ver. 8. The book of the law, (that is, Deuteronomy. Ch.—S. Chrys. hom. 9. in Mat.) or the Pentateuch. Joseph.—Achaz, Manasses, and Amon, had burnt (R. Solomon) as many copies as they could, (H.) but some zealous priests had concealed this copy, in a box, in the wall of the temple, (Lyran) or in the treasury adjoining it. The very hand writing of Moses, containing the record of the covenant, (or the 28, 29, 30, and 31st chapters of Deuteronomy) which was placed in (C.) or beside the ark, was now happily discovered. H.—It seems it had been misplaced, as the ark itself had been removed, 2 Par. 24:14 and 35:3. This venerable monument, and the dreadful menaces which it denounced, made the deepest impression upon all, as we should read the autographs of S. Matthew, &c. with far greater respect and emotion than we do the printed copies. It is not at all probably that all the books of Scripture had been destroyed, as there were always some religious souls in both kingdoms; and if some kings had already made the impious attempt, (H.) of which, however, they are never accused in Scripture, they would not have been able to carry their malicious designs into effect. Josias had, before his 18th year, made many excellent regulations, conformably to the law, which was well understood, and carefully preserved by the priests and prophets. C. 2

Par. 17:9.—Read it. Scribes were generally chosen from among the Levites. C.

Ver. 11. Garments, through zeal for God's honour, and fear of his indignation. M.

Ver. 14. Holda. She is known only by this honourable embassy. It is rather wonderful that Jeremias was not consulted, as he had begun to prophesy five years before. But he probably resided at Anathoth. Sophonias appeared, perhaps, only towards the end of the reign of Josias. C.—The Second, a street, or part of the city so called; in Hebrew, *Masse*m. Ch.—The Sept. retain this word, (M.) or rather, “in Masena;” Heb. mishne. H.—Manasses inclosed Jerusalem with a second wall, (2 Par. 33:14. C.) unless this was done by his father, ib. 32:5. T.—Here Holda is said to have kept a school. C.—Chal. “the house of doctrine,” a place next in importance to the temple. Vatab.—S. Jerom speaks of this Second, as of a gate, or part of Jerusalem, between the inner and the outer wall. C. Pelag, 2 Irad. in 2 Par. and in Sophon. i. 10. M.

Ver. 20. Peace, before these horrors overtake the city. Josias was interred with all the usual honours, have fallen in battle. C. 23:29. C.—Instead of peace, the Alex. Sept. reads, “in Jerusalem,” to which city Josias was brought from Mageddo, where he had perhaps rashly attacked the king of Egypt, with whom he had not been engaged in war. H.—This last good king was given to Juda, that he people might not pretend that they were forced to embrace idolatry by the royal power. S. Jer. D.

Ver. 2. Prophets. Chal. “scribes.” But there were many prophets at this time, who were ordered to come and renew the covenant with God.—He read, in person, acting as a mediator, in imitation of Moses, Josue, Samuel, Joiada, and Ezechias. C.

Ver. 3. The step. His tribune or tribunal, a more eminent place, from whence he might be seen and heard by the people. Ch.—This brazen tribune is described C. 11:14. 2 Par. 6:12.—To the covenant, but with much less exactitude than the king. C.

Ver. 4. Order, who presided over the 24 classes of inferior priests. M.—Jonathas understands it of those who supplied the place of the high priest when he could not attend. Grotius.—Baal, the sun: (C.) in Heb. “for.”—The grove, Astarte, or the moon. H.—Cedron, to the east and south of Jerusalem, where Topheth and the sepulchres of the poor, and all unclean things, were placed. Here the pagans burnt their children in honour of Moloch. See 3 K. 15:13. 2 Par. 29:16 and 30:14.—Bethel, out of contempt for the golden calf, (H.) and to remove those impurities to a greater distance. C.

Ver. 5. Soothsayers. Prot. “the idolatrous priests.” Grotius thinks that camilli, or “ministers of the gods,” (Serv. and Varro. vi.) may be derived from the Heb. hacemarim, “the black-vested,” or cryers. The Rabbins give this title in derision to the religious of the Christian Church. There were some melanophori, or people “in black,” who honoured Isis, or the moon, by this dress; as if to condole with her on the absence of the sun. Plutarch Apuleius describes a shining black veil, which was carried in the procession of her statue.—Baal. Heb. “to Baal the son;” (C.) or rather, “to Baal, to the son.” H.—The Heb. mazathoth, (C.) Sept. Mazouroth (H.) is not better understood. S. Jerom translates signs of the zodiac; others have, influences, planets, Lucifer, Venus, &c. Job (38:32) designates some stars by the name of Mozruth, and Mozrim. C.

Ver. 6. Grove. The idol of Astarte, or the representation of a grove in sculpture. H.—People, who were not rich enough to have a sepulchre. Jeremias (19:11) threatens the people of Jerusalem with such a burial. C.—The common people here means the idolaters. 2 Par. 34:4. H.

Ver. 7. Effeminate. Heb. “consecrated” (C.) or “initiated” (Mont.) in the obscene mysteries of idols. See Deut. 23:18 and 3 K. 15:12 and 2 Mac. 6:4. These men prostituted themselves (M.) even in that sacred place. C.—Prot. “he broke down the houses of the Sodomites, that were by the house of the Lord, where the women wove hangings for the grove.” These hangings, tents, or dwellings, (H.) were destined for the idol; (Syr. &c.) or they were intended to hid the abominations which were committed. They were called “tents of the daughters,” C. 17:30. C.—For. Lit. “of the grove:” luci. But the other translation is conformable to the Sept. Vatable, &c. H.

Ver. 8. Bersabee; to which the Israelites went in pilgrimages, Amos 5:5. This place was situated at the southern extremity of the dominions of Juda, as Gabaa was at the northern. The priests being unable to offer sacrifice in the temple, and desirous to gain a livelihood, had been so weak as to conform to the illegal practices of the country; though they seem to have intended to worship God. Deut. 12:11.—Altars. These might also be consecrated to the true God, but they were forbidden. There were others, placed in similar situations, in honour of Trivia, or the moon. Isai. 57:8 and 65:11. C.—City, to a person entering. Chal. Josue was the chief lay-judge, or magistrate. M.

Ver. 9. Brethren. Thus people are degraded in the Christian Church, that they may suffer some confusion (C.) in this world, and repent. H.—The priests, who had offered sacrifice unlawfully, where only permitted to perform the minor offices; but provision was made for their support, that they might not be tempted to relapse. Lev. 21:17. 22. Ezec. 44:10. C.—They were reduced to the rank of Levites. M.

Ver. 10. Defiled, or declared it unlawful. M.—Topheth may signify “a drum;” which the Jews say the idolaters beat, to prevent their childrens’ cries from being heard, when they were burning in the arms of Moloch. S. Jerom interprets it “latitude,” as the vale was very wide, and beautifully adorned with gardens and springs. It formed a part of the vale of Josaphat and of Cedron; (C.) or the same valley went by these different names, as well as (H.) by that of Geh-hinnon, “the vale of Ennom,” whence Gehenna is formed, and applied to hell. Matt. 5:22. Mark 9:44. &c. C.—Yet some think that the term denotes a place of torment on earth, which those deserve who say, thou fool. H.

Ver. 11. Nathan-melech. Sept. “to the treasury (room. Pagnin) of Nathan, the king’s eunuch,” or chamberlain. H.—Pharurim, “the suburbs.” Vatable. M. Chal.—It perhaps denotes the guard-house. See 1 Par. 26:18.—Chariots. The aforesaid horses were designed to draw them in honour of the sun. Some nations used to ride in this manner with all expedition, at its rising; and the Rabbins pretend that the king, or some other by his order, had been accustomed to ride from the eastern gate of the temple to the house of the governor, Nathan-melech. The horse was consecrated to the sun, on account of its agility.

Placat equo Persis radiis Hyperiona cinctum, Ne detur celeri victima tarda Deo. Ovid, Fast. i.

The Persians sacrificed the horse to the sun, that a slow victim may not be offered to the swift deity. The sun gives vigour to the whole material system, as the instrumental cause in the hand of God; and horses perceive the influence, more particularly in the warmer climates, and exult in their strength. Job 39:21. H.—Perhaps these horses had been destined for sacrifice by the infidel kings of Juda, as well as the chariots. C.—The Rhodians threw some into the sea every year. Festus.—Others think that what Josias took away, was only engraved, or, that the horses had been set at liberty for superstitious observations, as was customary among the pagans. Tacit. Mor. Germ.

Sueton. in Julio.

Ver. 12. Upper chamber, to be nearer the host of heaven, which they adored. H.—We are assured that the Arabs also adored the sun, and offered incense to it on the tops of their houses. The prophets often upbraid the people with this practice. Jer. 19:13. Soph. 1:5. C.—It is wonderful that Ezechias had not before removed these remnants of his father's infidelity; and still more that Manasses, after his repentance, had not destroyed what he had unlawfully erected in the courts of the priests and of the people. But Amon might have restored them.—Ran. This shews the zeal of the king. Heb. and Sept. “and thence he broke or tore them.”

Ver. 13. Offence; Olivet. H.—In the original, the terms are very much alike; and the Jews take a pleasure in deforming names, for which they had a horror. Solomon had erected temples here to various idols, (3 K. 11:7) which had probably been demolished by Ezechias, but had been rebuilt under Amon, &c. and subsisted during the minority of Josias; (C.) or they had been neglected by the pious kings of Juda, as no longer dangerous. But Josias, in the fervour of his zeal, thought proper to remove every thing that had been the occasion of offence: Heb. “of corruption.”—Idol, and scandal, and abomination, are the same in Heb.

Ver. 14. Statues is more proper than the Prot. “images,” which would rather be torn.—Dead is not expressed in the Heb. or Sept. but must be understood. H.—The pagans had the same idea of their impurity: incestat funere classem. Virgil, Æneid vi.

Ver. 15. Bethel had perhaps fallen into the hands of Juda, after the Israelites had been led away. C.—Josias exercised the like authority throughout all Samaria, (v. 19.) as the country properly belonged to the house of David, and was God's peculiar inheritance. H.—We may, therefore conclude that He authorized Josias to act in this manner; and the new inhabitants had no interest in maintaining the superstition of those who had lived there before them. The priest sent by Asarhaddon, had taken up his residence at Bethel; whence it is inferred that the town, at that time, was in the hands of the Samaritans, (C.) as it might be still, though Josias might exercise dominion in it as lord paramount. H.

Ver. 16. Spoke. Sept. subjoin some words, which seem to be lost in the original: [“when Jeroboam was standing, on the festival day, upon the altar. And turning, he lifted up his eyes towards the tomb of the man of God,] who spoke these words.” H.—“The copies, from which this version was made, read differently from the modern copies,” and often better. Kennicott, diss. ii. p. 335.

Ver. 17. Monument. Heb. tsiun, “an eminence” of “dry” earth, (Ezec. 39:15) heaped upon a corpse; whence the Latin tumulus. Servius. C.—It seems some inscription was still to be seen on the tomb. M.—Thou, &c. Sept. “which he proclaimed against the altar.” H.

Ver. 18. Samaria. It seems this word has been inserted instead of Juda, as it is certain the prophet came thence, v. 17 and 3 K. 13:32. C.—But thus both prophets would be identified. It would rather appear that the seducing prophet, who resided at Bethel, is here said to have come out of Samaria, though that place was not raised to the dignity of a royal city (H.) till 50 years afterwards. C.—There might be a town there long before; and, at any rate, he belonged to the kingdom to Jeroboam, or of Samaria. H.—His faith in the prophet’s prediction was, perhaps, thus rewarded, (M.) as his bones were left unmolested, on account of their being buried in the same sepulchre with the man of God. H.

Ver. 20. Slew. Most of the Israelites who had been left, (H.) embraced the true religion, after the captivity of their brethren, (C.) and adhered to the kings of Juda, (v. 15. H.) who had taken possession of the whole country (D.) after the fall of the Assyrian empire; (T.) unless the emperors of Chaldea had given it to them as to their vassals. See v. 29. C.

Ver. 21. Covenant, in Deuteronomy, C. 22:8. M.

Ver. 22. No such, is all respects. H.—The number of paschal lambs was certainly greater when all Israel was assembled; but the other victims presented by the king and his officers during the octave is here noticed, (2 Par. 35:7. M.) as they are also styled the Phase; (H.) and this explains Jo. 18:28. T.—Neither ought we to push these expressions too far, as they only mean, that this solemnity was very great. See v. 25. C. 18:5. C.

Ver. 24. Spirits. Lit. “the pythons.” Deut. 18:11; Num. 22:5.—Idols. Heb. Teraphim; Prot. “images,” Gen. 21:19.—Uncleannesses. Heb. &c. “idols.”

Ver. 25. Like him. Every person has some peculiarity, which distinguishes him from every other. H.—Thus we say of many saints: There was none found like unto him. Eccli. 44:20. T.

Ver. 26. Had provoked him. The impiety of this king must have been extreme, since his repentance did not avert the scourge. H.—Besides, many of the people were corrupt at heart, though they were afraid of shewing it, as we learn from the prophets Jeremias and Sophonias. God therefore withdrew the good Josias, who was their bulwark, that they might feel the effects of his just indignation. C.

Ver. 29. Nechao, six years (Usher, A. 3394.) after he had succeeded his father Psammetichus, with whose ambitious views he was animated to attempt the conquest of Asia. Marsham sæc. 18. Pharaoh pretends that God had sent him to attack the Assyrians. 2 Par. 35:21. But Josias thought he was only imposing on him, or speaking through fear. The Jews assert that Jeremias also opposed the king's design. 3 Esd. 1:28. S. Jer. ad Ctesip. But this does not appear from the canonical Scripture. C.—Meet him, in order to hinder him from passing through his dominions without leave; as this might prove dangerous. H.—Seen him, and fought. M.—He received a mortal wound at Mageddo, but did at Jerusalem. 2 Par. 35:23. Joseph. x. 6.—Mageddo lay to the south of Cison, where Barak had fought before. Judg. 5:19. Herodotus (ii. 159.) says, that Nechos gained a victory over the Syrians at Magdolum, and took Cadytis, which is probably Cades, a strong city of Galilee, though some take it to be Jerusalem, as it may be interpreted “the holy city.” C.—Mageddo is called Magdala in the Greek, and Magedan in other copies, and in the Vulg. Mat. 15:39.

Ver. 30. Sepulchre. Par. 35. in the monument (or mausoleum) of his fathers. Such was the end of Josias: he fell gloriously in defence of his country, as he had spent his life in promoting religion. God therefore withdrew him from the sight of the miseries which were shortly to fall on his devoted people. C. 22:20. H.—He was a prince of most excellent disposition, and receives the highest encomium, v. 25 and Eccli. 49:1. Jeremias composed his funeral canticle, which was sung on his anniversary for many years. 2 Par. 35:24. The mourning for this pious king became proverbial, and resembled that which should be made for the Messias. Zac. 12:11. The life and death of Josias prefigured those of Jesus Christ; who should be long expected as the restorer of the true religion, the teacher of a more excellent law, and the most innocent victim for the sins of the people. The glorious Phase under Josias, was but a faint representation of the eucharistic sacrifice. C.

Ver. 31. Old. Eliacim his brother was 25. H.—Perhaps Joachaz was esteemed more by the people, as fitter to defend them against the king of Egypt, who had proceeded on his journey to attack Charchamis on the Euphrates. C.—Having placed a garrison in it, he was met by Joachaz, and gained a victory over him at Rebla, (H.) as Sanctius gathers from Ezec. 19:4. Hence he treated the captive king with such severity, and sent him into Egypt to die in chains. Jer. 22:11. Joachaz is called Sellum (in Jer.) and Jechonias, 3 Esd. 1:34. C.—He was a lion only against his own subjects. T.

Ver. 33. Rebla. Syr. and Arab. “Deblat;” probably (C.) Apamea on the Orontes. Chal. on Num. xxxiv. 11.

Ver. 34. Joakim. Thus he asserted his dominion over him, as Nabuchodonosor did afterwards over Matthanias. C. 24:17. Daniel 1:6. C.—Eliacim means nearly the same as Joakim, “the Lord’s strength,” or “appointment.” M.

Ver. 36. Old, of course Josias had him at 15. Some suspect we ought to read 15 here. D.

Ver. 37. Fathers, or ancestors, not his immediate father Josias, v. 32. H.—Joakim chose to imitate the wicked, and was not deterred by the chastisement of his brother. C.—His character was marked with avarice and cruelty. He slew the prophet Urias. Jer. 22:13 and 26:23. H.—S. Matthew 1:11. calls him Jechonias. (M.) 1 Par. 3:15.

Ver. 1. Days. At the end of the third year. Dan. 1:1. Jer. 25:1. Nabuchadonosor, in the first year of his reign, (Jer. ib.) being associated in the empire by his aged father Nabopolassar, came up to attack Carchemis, (Jer. 46:1) and the other dominions of Egypt, (v. 7.) and their ally or vassal Joakim. He took the city of Jerusalem, and carried off many of the sacred vessels, and captives, (Dan. 1. C.) conducting the king himself to prison, for a short time, when he set him at liberty, on condition that he should pay tribute. 2 Par. 36:6. T. —Joakim obeyed for 3 years.—Then again. Heb. “he turned and rebelled.” This was the first time, as he had before been subject to Egypt, and was attacked no that account. He probably took advantage of the absence of Nabuchodonosor, who was gone with haste to secure all the dominions of his deceased father. In the 7th year of his reign, he sent rovers to punish Joakim. When the latter had reigned near 11 years, they reduced the kingdom, and treated the king’s corpse with the utmost indignity. Jer. 22:19. T.

Ver. 2. The rovers. Latrunculos. Bands or parties of men, who pillaged and plundered wherever they came. Ch. See C. 5:2. and Judg. 11:3.—Nabuchodonosor could not come in person.—Prophets. Holda, sup. C. 22:16. Isaias C. 21:17. Jeremias 14. 15. 16. &c.

Ver. 5. Did. Paral. And his abominations which he wrought, and the things which were found in him. This S. Jerom, (Trad.) explains of certain diabolical marks on his body, shewing him to be devoted to the fiend Codonasar. Such are often found on magicians. M.—Thus the priests of Baal cut themselves. 3 K. 18:28. H.

Ver. 6. Joachin, who is styled Jechonias, Mat. 1 and Conias Jer. 22:24. The prophet counts his reign as nothing, because it was so limited by the Chaldees, and continued only three months. Jer. 36:30.

Ver. 7. Egypt, at least from the eastern mouth of the Nile, at Damietta, to the Euphrates. Nechao had conquered all those countries: but now he was driven into his ancient territories. After some time he attempted to relieve Sedecias, but war repulsed by Nabuchodonosor, who soon after took Jerusalem, Jer. 37:6. C.—Again, during the reign of Joachin. D.

Ver. 8. Eighteen. One Heb. MS. reads “thirteen,” (H.) or 3 instead of 8. Kennicott.—The number seems also (H.) to be incorrect in Paral. where we find that Joachin was only eight years old, as the Syr. and Arab. have 18 in both places, and it could not well be said, that he did evil, &c. (v. 9.) at the age of 8, much less that he had wives so soon, v. 15. C.—Some attempt to reconcile both places, by saying that the eight years refer to the commencement of his father’s reign; (Jun.) which is very unusual: (C.) or to the servitude of Babylon, when Jerusalem was taken under Joakim. Hardouin.—Sanctius conjectures that Joachin was associated with his father when he was 10 years old, and after 8 years became sole king. Kimchi, &c. D.

Ver. 9. Done. Ezechiel 19:5 and Jeremias 22:24 speak of this king under the name of (H.) Jechonias. C.

Ver. 10. Came. Heb. “servants ... he came.” But several MSS. are more accurate and grammatical, “they came.” Kennicott. H.

Ver. 12. Went out. Josephus (Bel. vi. 8.) insinuates, to save the vessels of the temple.—Jeremias had persuaded him to desist from making resistance. T.—Nabuchodonosor did not comply with his promise, (M.) but took the king and all the artificers (v. 14.) to Babylon, that the former might not attempt to revenge the injuries done to his father, nor the latter contribute to fortify the towns. The Philistines had deprived the Israelites of blacksmiths, with the same design. 1 K. 7 and 13. Angelomus. T.—Eighth; commencing, or at the end of the seventh. Jer. 52. D.

Ver. 13. All, or a great part; for some were still left. 1 Esd. 1.—Which:

or like unto those which Solomon had made. The identical vessels had been perhaps (D.) plundered. M.—Nabuchodonosor took away the sacred vessels at three different times: 1. under Joakim. These he placed in the temple of his god; and they were afterwards profaned by Baltassar, and restored by Cyrus. Dan. 1:2 and 5:2 and 1 Esd. 1:7. 2. Many he now broke in pieces. 3. Under Sedecias, he took probably what that prince had made. C. 25:13. Bar. 1:7—Lord, by Isaias (39:6. Sup. C. 20:17) and Jeremias, 15:13.

Ver. 14. All; the chief men. C. 25:18. Ezechiel and Mardocheus were in the number.—Engraver. The first term means a workman in wood, stone, &c.; the latter seems to designate a mason, smith, or garrison-soldier; (C.) or one expert in making camps; (Sa.) an engineer. T.—S. Jerom explains it of one who enchases jewels in gold. M.—Hecateus and Demetrius (ap. Jos. and Clem. Alex.) mention this transportation. D.

Ver. 15. Judges. Heb. “the rams.” Chal. “the grandees.” These are not included in the 10,000, (v. 14.) nor more than (C.) the 8,000 who were taken from the country (v. 16. C.;) or 3,000 were taken from Jerusalem, and 7,000 from other places. D.

Ver. 17. Uncle, the third son of Josias, who was placed on the throne. H.—The eldest, (M.) called Johanan, seems to have died in his youth. C.—Sedecias means, “the justice of God,” (T.) as Nabuchodonosor had adjured him, or made him swear by God; (2 Par. 36:15. H.) and thus insinuated, that, if he proved faithless, he should feel the effects of God’s justice, as it happened. T.

Ver. 19. Done. He was not deterred by his punishment, nor by the admonition of Jeremias, 37:2. and 2 Par. 36:12. The prophet informs us, that the priests and people defiled the temple of God. See Ezechiel 8. &c. C.

Ver. 20. Revolted. Lit. “departed;” (H.) “broke his covenant;” (Sept.) acting contrary to his oath, (Par.) and to the dictates of prudence. God permitted this to take place, in the 8th year of Sedecias. C.

Ver. 1. Day, the 30th of January, A. 3414. Usher.—Some time after Nabuchodonosor left the siege, to attack the Egyptians; (Jer. 37:3) and the people of Jerusalem, (H.) supposing that he would return no more, took back their slaves, whom Jeremias had prevailed on them to liberate, according to the law, during the sabbatical year. Jer. 34:8. Usher.—The prophet reproached them for it; and announced the destruction of the city so plainly, that he was thrown into prison. Jer. 21 and 34 and 38.—It. The Babylonians had already taken all the towns of Juda, except Azeca and Lachis. Jer. 34:7. C.

Ver. 3. Of the. Prot. supply, “fourth month,” as it is in the parallel passage. Jer. 52:6. And in the fourth month, the ninth day of the month. In C. 39:2, we read, in the fourth month, the fifth day of the month, the city was broken up, or a breach was made in the outer wall. In the course of a few days, the princes of Babylon seized the middle gate; and the famine became so intolerable, that, on the 9th, it was judged expedient to abandon the city. H.—During this siege it is thought, (C.) that mothers eat their children, (Lam. 4:10. Bar. 2:3) and children their parents. Ezechiel 5:10. M.

Ver. 4. Walls, by a subterraneous passage, to the plains of Jericho; (Rabbins) or by the horse gate, which was the most private, and, it seems, had been walled up. Ezec. 12:12. M.

Ver. 6. Rablatha, the Antioch of Syria, (S. Jer.) which was styled also Ephiphania, (T.) or more probably Apamea, where Nabuchodonosor was, when Jerusalem was taken.—Upon him, by the advice of his council. Jer. 39:3. 13. Syr. “they made him answer the charges brought against him,” (C.) of ingratitude and rebellion, as he had been appointed by the king of Babylon, and had sworn to be faithful to him. M.—This repeated infidelity made Nabuchodonosor resolve to remove the people from their own country. C.—He sentenced the last of the kings of Juda to see his children slain, (H.) to have his eyes put out, and to remain in prison till his death. Jer. 52:11. &c. C.—Heb. he “spake judgments with him.” Thus was accomplished the prediction of Jeremias, (34:3.) “thine eyes shall behold the eyes of the king of Babylon, and he shall speak to thee.” Watson.—The same prophet had said the same (C. 32:4) before he was throne into prison. The sight of an angry judge is no small punishment. H.

Ver. 7. Eyes; after they had been excruciated by the sight of his slaughtered children. He thus might be convinced, that there was no reason to despise the predictions of Jeremias and of Ezechiel, (12:13) as contradictory, because the latter informed him that he should not see Babylon; though the other said that he should die there.—Babylon, where he was honourably buried, by order of Nabuchodonosor. Joseph. x. 11.—Seder (Olam xxviii.) records that his attendants sung, at his funeral, “Alas! king Sedecias is dead, having drunk the dregs of all ages;" as he suffered also for the crimes of his predecessors. Genebrard. T.—This is not indeed specified in Scripture: (H.) but it is highly probable that Nabuchodonosor would thus "revere royalty, even in its ruins," if Daniel and the other Jews in power, had not been careful to shew this mark of respect to their deceased monarch, conformably to the prediction of Jeremias; (34:3) who foretold that he should die, not by a violent death, the usual fate of captive kings, but in peace, or on his bed, though in a prison. Watson, let. 6.

Ver. 8. Seventh. Jeremias (52:12) mentions the tenth; on which day Nabuzardan probably arrived, or begun to put his orders in execution. Yet the Jews keep the ninth as an annual fast. Zac. 7:3 and 8:19. The temple was destroyed on Saturday, 27th August, A. 3416, (Usher) after it had stood 424 years, 3 months, and 8 days. C.—Army. Heb. "of those who slay;" which may be fitly understood "of soldiers," as well as "of cooks," (Sept.) "butchers." Pagnin, &c. M.

Ver. 9. Great. This word is supplied from Jer. 52:13 and Heb. "great man's house." Prot. But Jer. 39:8, we read, they burnt the houses of the people, (H.) even the meanest, destroyed the walls, and took the people to Babylon, only leaving some countrymen to cultivate the land. Jeremias was set at liberty by Nabuzardan, (ib. 11) and chose to continue with this remnant of the people, for their comfort and direction. H.—They applied to him to know whether they should retire into Egypt; and after ten days, he gave them God's injunction to the contrary: but they despised it. Jer. 42:7 and 43:1. The prophet, and his secretary, Baruch, followed them into Egypt. Thus was the country abandoned, and the monarchy at an end, after it had subsisted 468 years from the commencement of David's reign. C.—Yet some little power remained in the family of David, even at Babylon; (v. 27.) and the Jewish affairs were re-established, after the captivity, though not in such splendour as formerly, nor always under princes of the same royal family. H.

Ver. 14. Mazers. Heb. yahim, "shovels." Prot. Sept. retain the original word, which S. Jerom translates differently. See 3 K. 7:50. (M.) and Exodus.

Ver. 18. Saraias, father of Esdras, and of Josedeck, who succeeded in the Pontificate, 1 Esd. 7:1. and 1 Par. 6:14. T.—Sophonias. He was perhaps chief of the fourth band of door-keepers, mentioned 1 Par. 9:17. 24 and vice-gerent of the High-priest, to supply his place, in case of any accident. We find no mention of such a priest in the law, but Eleazar possessed a similar power, Num. 3:32. C.—Keepers. These seem to have concealed themselves in the temple. M.—They were punished, as the counsellors of Sedecias, by being beheaded or crucified. Lam. 5:12. T.

Ver. 19. Eunuch. Prot. "officer." H.—Five. Arab. and Jeremias 52:25 read seven, as two were probably discovered afterwards, (C.) or had fled. D.—These were chief officers.—Sopher. Sept. "and the secretary of the general." Syr. "the secretary and chiefs of the armies." C.—Prot. "the principal scribe." H.—It is not clear whether the general have this title of sopher, "scribe," himself; or it rather designates his secretary, or scribe. Judg. 8:14. C.—Many date the 70 years captivity from the last year of Joachin. D.

Ver. 22. Godolias. The Rabbins say that he had gone over to the Chaldees: Jeremias (37:2, 17) had advised all to do so, and Godolias was of an easy complying disposition. Grotius.—But God did not suffer him to collect the remnants of his unhappy people, (C.) at least for any long time, as he was slain by Ismael, (Jer. 40:12 and 41:1. H.) who probably envied his dignity. Joseph. Salien.

Ver. 26. Chaldees. They went under the conduct of Johanan, in opposition to the declaration of Jeremias, 43:7. and 44:1. C.

Ver. 27. Twentieth. Jeremias (52:31) says the 25th, when Nabuchodonosor was buried, and (D.) the decree was made, though it was not put in execution till two days later. C.—Evilmerodach, whose proper name was Baltassar, (Dan. 5:1. T.) or the latter was his son. The Jews say that he had been confined in prison, with Joachin, because he had not administered the kingdom well, during the seven years' illness of his father Nabuchodonosor. Berosus (ap. Jos. c. 1. and Euseb. præp. ix. 40. who cites also Megasthenes) informs us that he reigned with insolence during two years, when he was treacherously murdered by his father-in-law, Neriglissor.

Ver. 28. Kings, who had been made captives. Adonibezec had 70. Judg. 1:7. Alexander kept Porus and Taxilus at his court, as Cyrus and done Croesus, whom he treated with great distinction. The prosperity of Joachin does not seem to have been of long continuance, as his benefactor did not reign above two (v. 27.) or three years. Dan. 8:1.

Ver. 30. His life, may be referred to Evilmerodach, unless Joachin was involved in his disgrace, and perished at the same time. Perhaps the king of Juda did not always eat at the table of Evilmerodach, but received his meat from it, as was customary. Syr. &c. C.—He received all that was necessary to support his household, daily. Grotius.—In Jer. 52:34. until the day of his death, seems to be an useless "tautology," which is omitted here, and in "our oldest MS." says

Kennicott; who observes that whoever will compare these passages, “will find many variations, and some corruptions.” But most of them may be easily explained, v. 3. 8. 27. &c. H.

1 PARALIPOMENON

THE FIRST BOOK OF PARALIPOMENON

INTRODUCTION

These Books are called by the Greek Interpreters, Paralipomenon; (Παραλειπομενων,) that is, of things left out, or omitted; because they are a kind of supplement of such things as were passed over in the Books of Kings. The Hebrews call them, Dibre Hajamim; that is, The words of the days, or The Chronicles. Not that they are the books which are so often quoted in the Kings, under the title of, The Words of the days of the kings of Israel, and of the kings of Juda; for the Books of Paralipomenon were written after the Books of Kings; but because, in all probability, they have been abridged from those ancient words of the days, by Esdras, or some other sacred author. Ch.—The author of this compilation refers to the same works, 2 Par. 16:11. &c. These journals were principally composed by prophets, though there were other people appointed to write the most important occurrences. 2 K. 8:16, 4 K. 18:18. The genealogies of families, particularly of the Levites, and the interests of piety and religion, are kept most in view. C.—The variations which appear between this work and the other parts of Scripture, are owing to the faults of transcribers; and, though they could not be satisfactorily explained, it would be rashness to condemn the author of inaccuracy, at this distance of time, when we know so little of those transactions. H.—Who calls in question the history of Alexander, though the different authors of it scarcely agree in one calculation of the number of troops, nations conquered, &c.?” Yet the work before us is of far higher authority, as it was dictated by the Holy Ghost. C.—“Without it, a person would in vain pretend to understand the Scriptures.” It is “an epitome of the Old Testament,” and “explains many difficulties of the gospels.” S. Jerom.—The author does not, however, seem to have designed to draw up an exact epitome, or to supply the deficiencies of the other works. C.—The first nine chapters contain various genealogical histories. In the 10th, we have the election and death of Saul; and in the remainder of the first book, the transactions of David, (W.) till the year 2990, where the second book commences with the reign of Solomon, and brings us to the end of the captivity. A.M. 3468. C.

Ver. 1. Seth. Prot. “Sheth, Enosh, Kenan:” but in Genesis they agree with us, which shews that the translator of the two different books is different, and that there is a want of uniformity in the plan adopted by king James I. H.—The posterity of Cain is neglected, as it all perished in the deluge. C.

Ver. 4. Noe begot Sem, Cham, and Japheth. (H.) See Gen. 10. The author passes lightly over some of the descendants of the two latter, as he had David’s genealogy principally in view.

Ver. 6. Riphath. Heb. begins with D. C.—But the Prot. correct it (H.) according to the book of Gen. and the Sept. The two letters are very much alike.

Ver. 7. Dodanim. Heb. has R, conformably to the Samar. copy of Genesis, and the Sept. translate the Rhodians. Yet Dodanim seems more accurate, (C.) and is retained by the Prot. H.

Ver. 10. Earth, first establishing the monarchy of Babylon, and building the castle. D.

Ver. 12. Philistines, a colony from Crete.

Ver. 17. Hus and Hul were the immediate sons of Aram, as well as ... Mosoch, or Mes; (Gen. 10:23. C.) so that there seems to be here some transposition. D.

Ver. 18. Sale. The Rom. Sept. omits v. 11 to 17, and v. 18 to 24, having only, (17) “The sons of Sem, Ailam and Assur; (24) and Arphaxad, Sala.” H.—But the other copies here insert Cainan, as the father of Sale. See Gen. 10:24. C.—It is a matter of great doubt whether he ought not to be inserted. Lu. 3. H.

Ver. 24. Sem begot Arphaxad. M.

Ver. 32. Concubine. She was his lawful wife, but of an inferior degree, and such were called concubines. Ch.—She has the title of wife, Gen. 25:1.—And the sons of Dadan, &c. seems to be copied from Genesis, as the addition is not found in many Lat. MSS. no more than in the Heb. or Sept. C.

Ver. 36. And by. This serves to explain the difficulty; as Thamna would otherwise seem to be a daughter of Eliphaz, though we know she was his concubine. Gen. 36:12. H.—The Heb., Rom. Sept. Syr., and Latin, suppose that Thamna was the brother of Amalec; but the Alex. Sept. has, “Now Thamna, the concubine of Eliphaz, bore Amalec.” Arab. “And Thamna, who was the concubine of Eliphaz, the son of Esau, bore him Amalec,” which seems to be the true reading. Kennicott.—Heb. “And Timna and Amalek,” (Prot. H.) which confounds the sense. Mariana. D.

Ver. 38. Seir, not Esau, but the Horrite, (Gen. 36:20. M.) which is added in order to explain the origin of Thamna. D.

Ver. 40. Dixon. We must add Oolibama. Gen. 36:25.

Ver. 41. Hamram. In Gen. Hamdan. Two letters have been mistaken since the Chaldee characters have been adopted. C.—On this occasion, we may briefly remark, 1. The most learned fathers have admitted such mistakes in Scripture: yet these are not to be corrected by each one’s private judgment, but we must all abide by the determination of the Church, which is plainly appointed for our guide in the infallible word of God. 2. To obviate the objections of infidels, respecting the apparent contradictions of Scripture, particularly in these books, we must observe that many people and places had different names; 3. And those who had the saem were really distinct. 4. Frequently also grandchildren, and those who have been adopted, are mentioned as the immediate offspring. 5. Some mysterious numbers are specified, as fourteen in the genealogy of Christ, though the history allows more. 6. Odd numbers are sometimes neglected. 7. Often a part is put for the whole, or on the contrary; as Christ is said to have been dead three days, though he was only one whole day and part of two others: and in the reigns of different kings, in the same year, the different parts are assigned to each, as a whole year. 8. Sometimes two reigned together, as Joathan ruled while Ozias was still living, (4 K. 15) and so both reigns are sometimes counted, and, at other times, their respective years. 9. The interregnums are either omitted in calculations, or added to the years of the next ruler. 10. Only the years that a person governed well are sometimes noticed, as Saul is said to have reigned two years, (1 K. 13) though his administration continued much longer. Some of these rules may be applied to most of the scriptural difficulties, as the spirit of God could not dictate any falsehood. At the same time we must be forced to acknowledge that the Scriptures are hard to be understood, 2 Peter 1:20. (W.) and 3:16; and this may serve to exercise the genius, and to humble the pride of man. H.

Ver. 43. Israel. The same remark had been made in Gen. 36:31. It is wonderful that the author of this work gives us no further information, when so many revolutions had since occurred. C.—But he might content himself with repeating the words of Moses. H.—The eight kings here specified must have reigned each 50 years, which is not impossible. David conquered the country under Adad.

Ver. 48. River. Euphrates is commonly so designated. See Gen. 10:11. C.—Pagnin translates, “from the river Rohoboth.” D.

Ver. 50. Mezaab. It is unusual for the Scripture to mark so particularly the genealogy of a woman. We might translate the Heb. “a native, or who was a native of Mezaab,” which is probably the same with Dizahab, “abundance of gold.” Deut. 1:1. Mezaab signifies, “waters of gold,” (C.) or “whose is gold,” whence some infer that the woman was very rich, (Lyran) or had discovered the art of drawing gold thread. Abul.—It is more probably a proper name. M.

Ver. 51. Kings. Heb. “Adad also died, and the dukes of Edom were duke Thamna, &c. H.—This, and the following names, designate the place of their residence. M.—The same forms of government prevailed in Idumea, as among the Hebrews, who had judges or dukes, then kings, and, after the captivity, dukes, till the time of the Machabees. T.

Ver. 1. Israel, “seeing, or valiant with God,” was before called Jacob, or “a supplanter.” Gen. 35. W.

Ver. 2. Aser. They are not placed in the order of their birth. H.

Ver. 3. Her. The crime for which he was punished is not specified in Scripture. C.—The Rabbins say that he was so enamoured of the beauty of his wife, that he treated her in the same manner as Onan did afterwards. Cassian viii. 11.—It is supposed that he was slain by a devil, (C.) like the (T.) impure husbands of Sarai. Tob. 6:14. H.

Ver. 6. Zamri, or Zabdi. Jos. 7:1.—Etham. Similar names occur 3 K.

4:30. But they seem to have been different persons.

Ver. 10. Ram. He is commonly called Aram. But it is to be observed here, once for all, that it was a common thing among the Hebrews for the same person to have different names: and that it is not impossible among so many proper names, as here occur in the first nine chapters of this book, that the transcribers of the ancient Hebrew copies may have made some slips in the orthography. Ch.—Juda. Probably the first, appointed by Moses in the desert. Num. 1:7 and 7:12.

Ver. 11. Salma. Sept. have “Salmon,” as it is written Ruth 4:20, Mat. 1:4.

Ver. 15. Seventh. Syriac and Arab. add, “Eliu, (C. 27:18) and the eighth David.” It appears, in effect, the Isai had eight sons, and that David was the youngest. 1 K. 16:10 and 17:12. The Rabbins suppose that one was only adopted, namely, Jonathan, the son of Samma, noted for his prudence and valour. 2 K. 13:3 and 21:21. C.—One might die in his youth, and be therefore omitted, (T.) as he had done nothing memorable. D.—The Scripture does not always specify the full number. Abul.

Ver. 16. Sarvia. The honour shewn to the sisters of David is unusual. The father of the three valiant children of Sarvia is no where specified.

Ver. 17. Ismahelite, or more correctly, “Jethra, of Jezrahel;” (2 K. 17:25) though the Heb. and Sept. in that place read “Israelite,” which would be a trifling remark; and it is improbable that Isai would give his daughter to a descendant of Ismahel. C.—The person might, however, have resided among them. D.

Ver. 18. Caleb, alias Calubi, v. 9. Ch. W.—He is different from Caleb, the son of Jephone.—Took, &c. Heb. “begot Azuba, Ischa, and Jerioth;” or rather with the Sept. “took to wife Gazuba and Jerioth.” C.—Syr. and Arab. “Caleb had Jerioth by his wife Azuba.” We know that the latter was his wife, (v. 19.) and this seems to be the true reading. As ath signifies “of or from,” (Noldius) the Heb. only requires a small correction. As it stands at present, it means, “Caleb begot Azuba, a woman, (or wife) and Jerioth.” Prot. supply, “begat children of Azuba, his wife, and of Jerioth.” Kennicott.—Her sons. The original determines us to read her, instead of “his,” as ejus would as naturally be understood. If Jerioth was not the wife, she seems to have been the daughter of Caleb; as Jaser, &c. were his sons. H.

Ver. 20. Bezeleel, the famous artist, (Ex. 31:2. C.) or a different person. D.—The Rabbins, who confound Caleb with the son of Jephone, say that he espoused Ephrata, or Mary, the sister of Moses, when he was ten years old, that Ur and Uri had each a child at eight, and the Bezeleel began to work at the tabernacle before he was nine years old. Lyran.—But this is extravagant, and the Bezeleel here mentioned was of the family of Hesron. C.

Ver. 21. Machir, grandson of Joseph, whose descendants occupied part of Galaad, (H.) of which he is styled the father, or prince. M.—The daughter of Machir was probably an heiress, and Segub dwelt with his mother's tribe. C.

Ver. 23. Aram. Prot. add “with the towns of Jair from them,” the former possessors; (H.) or Gessur assisted Aram (Syria) in attacking Israel, 4 K. 10:32. C.—All these villages. Prot. supply, “belonged to the sons.” Sept. “were of the sons.” All these were dependencies of Machir, “prince” of Galaad; in which sense father is taken, v. 24. M.—Sons often denote nephews, &c. W.

Ver. 24. Hesron. Perhaps it ought to be Azuba, v. 19. Heb. “and after Hesron was dead, in Caleb-ephrata, then Abia, the wife of Hesron, bore him a (posthumous) son, Ashur, the father of those who dwelt at Thecua.” He could not reside there himself no more than Caleb did at Bethlehem, which some, without proof, pretend was called Caleb-ephrata. The Sept. agree with the Vulg. They may signify that Caleb went to the town of Ephrata. But he son of Hebron certainly never resided at Bethlehem. C.

Ver. 25. And, is not in Heb. Achia, which may also signify “her sister.” Sept. “brother.” Others take (C.) Achia to be the first wife of Jerameel. Jan.

Ver. 31. Oholai, a daughter, (v. 34. T.) unless this son died before his father. Vatab.

Ver. 42. Caleb, or Calubi, v. 9. Ziph, Maresa, and Hebron, are the names of towns, as well as of men. The descendants of Mesa inhabited Ziph, and those of Maresa dwelt at Hebron. The same remark will hold good in other places, where the names of places are put for those who occupied them. C.—And the sons. Heb. “and of the sons of Maresa.” Vat.—But it may be as well explained in the sense of the Vulg. Sept. “Marisa, his first-born. He was the father of Ziph, and the sons of Marisa, of the father of Hebron.”—Father. Lit. “of the father,” patris Hebron. H.

Ver. 47. Jahaddai. His name occurs not before. Some suppose he was the son of Mosa: perhaps a verse may be lost, as the Syr. and Arab.

pass over this and the two following verses.

Ver. 49. Achsa, different from Axa, the grand-daughter of Jephone. Judg. 1:12. H.—Both had daughters of the same name. D.

Ver. 50. Caleb, grandson of Calubi. Vatab. &c.—Sobal, his descendant, was prince of those who established themselves at Cariathiarim. C.—The Alex. Sept. seems rather to assert that he was son of Hur, as well as those who follow. “The sons of Hur ... Sobal ... Salomon, father of Baithlammon, father of Bethlehem.” But the editions vary. H.

Ver. 52. He that saw, &c. The Latin interpreter seems to have given us here, instead of the proper names, the meaning of those names in the Hebrew. He has done in like manner, v. 55, (Ch.) and in many other places. D.—Heb. “had sons, haroe cha hamenuchoth, (H.) or Raia, Roeh, (C. 4:2) and Chazi of the canton of Menuchat, near Babaa. C. 8:6 and Judg. 20:43. Sept. mention Mancho. Jos. 15:60.—We may also translate “the father of Cariathiarim, the prince of half Manuchat, had sons who peopled different cities.” It seems too harsh to call a man “half the place of rest,” or “seeing from the moiety of rest,” though the Heb. has this literal signification. The Sept. give proper names, (C.) “Araa, Esei, Ammanith,” (but v. 55, half of Manath) and the Prot. “Haroeh and half of the Manahattites.” H.—Sobal left to his descendants half the country which he had quietly occupied.

Ver. 53. Kindred. Sept. “Oumasphas.” H.—Esthaolites. All these places were in Juda, (C.) or perhaps (H.) the two last in Dan, (M.) or occupied by both tribes. Abul. q. 8.

Ver. 54. Salma, or Salmon’s descendants, people Bethlehem, &c.—Crowns. Valiant heroes who assisted Joab to gain crowns. W.—Heb. “Hateroth,” the house (Sept. Alex. of the house of Jobab) of Joab; (H.) perhaps the famous general who had land near Absalom’s, on the frontiers of Ephraim, where Ataroth was situated.—And half. Heb. “half of the Manahethites.” Prot. (H.) or “of Menuchat, towards Zarai.” The author seems purposely to mention to whom the cities at first belonged, that the right owners might be reinstated in their possessions, at their return from Babylon. C.—This verse may specify six towns, Bethlehem and Netophat, (H.) Beth-Joab, Chatsi, Manachti, and Atsothi.

Ver. 55. Scribes, learned in the law. M.—Singing, &c. The different professions of the Rechabites are here given, instead of proper names, (C.) which the Vat. Sept. retains.—Thargathiim and Samathiim, Sochathim.—Heb. Tirhatim, “porters;” (Chal.) Shimhathim, “the obedient;” Sucathim, “the inhabitants of tents;” Calor, “the heat,” as the Heb. Chamath (Prot. Hemath) signifies. The Cinites dwelt on the south of Juda, for which reason they are probably here mentioned, though some of them also inhabited Jabes Galaad, while the Rechabites dwelt in tents, (H.) and were perhaps employed as porters in the temple. C. Jer. 35:5, 19.

1 PARALIPOMENON 3

Ver. 1. Hebron, during the seven years that he reigned there over Juda. M.—Jezrahel, a city of Juda, less noted than the one in Issachar. —Daniel, or Cheliab, 2 K. 3:3.

Ver. 2. Aggith. The mother of Adonias is styled Haggith elsewhere in the Vulg. H.

Ver. 3. His wife also. T.—This title refer to all the preceding. Sanctius.

Ver. 5. Solomon is put last, though the eldest, because of his genealogy is to be continued. Some think that the three others were the sons of Urias, adopted by David, as Solomon styles himself an only son; (Prov. 4:3) but that only means singularly beloved, and an heir, (C.) as David had certainly another child by Bethsabée, who died in his infancy. T.—Bethsabée. Syr. and Arab. “Bersabee.” Heb. “Bathshuah,” all erroneously.—Ammiel, or Eliam, (2 K. 11:3) as the same man had two names, (C.) or, in this instance, we must allow a transposition. H.

Ver. 6. Elisama, or Elisua. C. 14:5. C.—Heb. substitutes Elishama and Eliphelet, and Nogah, the last name being “an evident corruption of Nepheg, and the two former being taken in to soon, and still repeated, “in their proper places.” The Vat. Sept. is likewise interpolated, (2 K. 5:14, &c.) by the insertion of eleven names from another version, and two names are twice repeated, so that we have 24 sons of David instead of 11. Kennicott.

Ver. 7. Noge; called Noga, (C. 14:6) and omitted entirely in the book of Kings. Eliphaleth being twice mentioned in this book, has made some conclude that David’s first son of this name died in his youth; (C.) which may be said of Elisama also. Sa.

Ver. 8. Eliada, or Elioda, (2 K. 5:16) styled Baaliada, (C. 14:7. C.) as both have the same meaning, “God’s, or the Lord’s knowledge.” H.—Nine, excluding the children of Bethsabée. In 2 K. there are only seven, or, with the sons of Bethsabée, eleven. There must be a mistake in one place, unless the book of Kings only specifies those who were then alive. Vatab. C.

Ver. 9. The concubines. The inferior wives. Ch.—Some of the preceding sons were born of such, v. 6, &c.—Thamar. She is the only one whose name is mentioned, but David had other daughters. 2 K. 6:13.

Ver. 15. Johanan, who is not mentioned in 4 K. 23 and 24. Some think that he died young, (Tostat) or in battle with his father, against Pharao. Pradus.—Joakim, or Eliacim, possessed the throne after Joachaz, or Sellum, (C.) which name signifies “confusion,” and was given to all the sons of Josias. S. Jer.—Then came Joachin and Sedecias, whose proper name was Matthanias. H.—Joakim is passes over by S. Mat. S. Jer. ib.

Ver. 16. Jechonias, who is called also Joakim, (W.) and Cenias in Heb. Jer. 22:28. C.—Both the son and the grandson of Josias go under the name of Jechonias. Mat. 1:11. Barrad. i. 5. 16. M.—Sedecias. If this be the same with the king, was born must signify succeeded, as we know that Joakim was not the father of Sedecias. Grotius, &c.

Ver. 17. Asir, means a “prisoner,” so that we might translate, Heb. “and the sons of Jechoias, the prisoner, (at Babylon, 4 K. 24:15) were Salathiel.” C.—Prot. “Assir, Salathiel his son.” H.—Some think that the following were the adopted children, or successors of Jechonias; as S. Luke (3:24) insinuates that Neri was the father of Salathiel, and Jeremias (22:30) seems to declare that Jechonias should have no children. But he means such as should sit on the throne, as he explains himself, and S. Matthew (1:12) expressly says, Jechonias begot Salathiel.

Ver. 18. Melchiram, &c. born of Salathiel. C.—Sama. Sept. “Osamo and Nabadias.” Prot. “Hosahama,” &c. H.

Ver. 19. Phadaia, called also Salathiel, (Mat. 1:12) or these two brothers had each a son named Zorobabel. The grandson of Salathiel was called Abiud, and that of Phadaia, Mosollam, (M.) unless these were the same person. Sa.—Phadaia, son of Salathiel, and father of Zorobabel, left his son to the care of his brother Salatheil, who was therefore accounted the father of Zorobabel too. C.

Ver. 21. Son. Heb. “sons of Hananias, Phaltias, and Jesacias, the sons of Raphias, the sons of Arnan, ... (22) the sons of Sechenias, Semeia, &c.” But the Sept. and Syriac have read in a more intelligible manner, (C.) intimating that these people were lineally descended from each other, (H.) while the Heb. leaves us ignorant of the names of the sons of Rephais, &c. C.

Ver. 22. Six. Counting the father in the number. Ch.—Heb. shisha, or “six.” Sixtus V. with several MSS. Gothic edit. &c. take it improperly for the name of a man. C.—Semeia and his five sons are attributed to Sechenias. W.—Others think that a name has been lost. Castal.

Ver. 24. Oduia, the 12th from Zorobabel, which shews that this has been inserted since the time of Esdras, and that the author was very careful to preserve the genealogical tables, as it was not known from what family of the descendants of David the Messias should be born. C.—S. Matthew gives us a different genealogy. D. C.

Ver. 1. Charmi, the great-grandson of Juda, by Zara and Zamri. Jos. 7:1.—Junius takes him to be the same with Calubi, (C. 2) father of Sobal. This seems to be transcribed from another ancient register of the family of Juda, and designed to shew where the principal men had resided. C.—Only the chiefs are specified. D.

Ver. 2. Sarathi, who peopled Saraa. C.

Ver. 3. Posterity. So all the ancient versions seem to have read boni, instead of the present Heb. abi, which literally means, “and these are the father of Etam.” If words ever wanted sense, they do so here. Kennicott.—Etham is perhaps the name of a town. Malv.

Ver. 7. Ethnan. Some would insert “and Cos,” to connect this with the following.

Ver. 8. Cos. Perhaps (C.) the same with Genez, v. 13. T.

Ver. 9. Jabes. That is, sorrowful. Ch.—There seems to be something wanting, as we are not informed who were the brethren of Jabes. C.—This name he received from his mother, while his father Cos, called him Othoniel. E.

Ver. 10. For. To reward his piety and vow. Othoniel obtained Cariath-sepher, and Axa, the daughter of Caleb. Jos. 15:17. C.—Jabes imitated holy Jacob, (Gen. 28) and both desired temporal blessings, for their advancement in virtue. W.

Ver. 11. Caleb. Heb. “Celub,” different both from Calubi and the son of Jephone, v. 15. C.—Brother, &c. Sept. “father of Ascha,” which would seem to make him the same with the latter.

Ver. 12. City. Heb. “Hir-Nachash.” H.—The latter term denotes “copper of a serpent.” We know not where this city was situated, no more than Recha. C.

Ver. 13. Othoniel, first judge. H.—He was brother, or rather cousin, of Caleb. See Jos. 15:17.

Ver. 14. Artificers. Heb. Charashim, which means various sorts of “workmen,” (C.) or “father (prince. M.) of Ge-Harasim, for,” &c. C.—Under this lord the artificers dwelt who built the temple. W.

Ver. 15. Caleb, so memorable (C.) for this fidelity. Num. 13:30. and 32:12. H.

Ver. 18. Judaia, a second wife, of his own nation. By the first, from Egypt, Mered had Miriam, &c. Some words seem to be lost, which render it doubtful to whom Judaia was married.

Ver. 19. Odaia, perhaps the same with Judaia, (C.) as the Sept. read. —Who was. Heb. and Sept. “Machatha,” (H.) a place to the north of Basan, far from the limits of Juda, whence we should, perhaps, read Menuchat, as C. 2:52, 54.

Ver. 21. Her. Hitherto we have seen the possessions of the descendants of Phares. Those of Her inhabited the country rendered famous by the exploits of Samson with the jaw bone. Judg. 15:9. C.—The first-born of Sela was called Her, after his unfortunate uncle. Gen. 38:7. H.—That wrought. Sept. take it for a proper name, “Ebdath.” Heb. Beth-habodath habuts, “the house of the byssus, or fine linen manufacturers in Beth-Ashbaah,” (H.) which is, perhaps, the same with Beersabee, “the well of swearing.” Gen. 21:31. C.—Oath. The Latin word juramenti, might be retained here, as well as Calor. C. 2:55. See 2 K. 21:19. Sept. read, “Esoba,” as the proper name of a place. H.

Ver. 22. He, that made, &c. viz. Joazim, the meaning of whose name in Hebrew, is, he that made the sun to stand. In like manner the following names, Lying, (Cozeba) Secure, (Joash) and Burning, (Saraph) are substituted in place of the Hebrew names of the same signification. Ch.—The first etymology is not perfectly accurate, as Jokim means simply, “he made to stand;” Jachin, the pillar which Solomon erected, has the same import. H.—Some injudicious person seems to have placed the sun in the margin, whence it has crept into the text. T.—It might be occasioned by the fable of the Rabbins, who assert (H.) that Elimelech wrought the like miracle as Josue, to convince the people of Bethlehem of the necessity of being converted; but, finding them incorrigible, denounced a famine, which forced him to retire with his family into the country of Moab. S. Jer. Trad. &c.—Elimelech died in that country; but these four descendants of Sela retired, probably, along with him, and returned afterwards to Lehem, or Bethlehem, as it is customary to omit a part of a word. T.—This town was peopled by different branches of Juda's family, v. 4, and C. 2:54. C.—Lahem, &c. Sept. seem to leave the original terms: "he made them return to Abedderim Athoukiim."—Who returned, is also left as a proper name by the Prot. (H.) &c. "And Jasubi Lehem." Vat. M.—It is not easy to decide, when the Hebrew words should be translated.—Old. Heb. "and ancient words;" (H.) records, shewing where these families resided, (C.) unless this be also the name (H.) of a place. Sept.

Ver. 23. Potters. Heb. yotserim, may also designate some family, as it seems improbable that the princes, in Moab, should be reduced to so mean a condition. But we have many examples of such a fall; (H.) and it is supposed, that these descendants of Sela were employed by the king of Babylon, at Nethaim and Gadera. C.—Hedges. These are the proper names of the places where they dwelt. In Hebrew, Netahim and Gedera. Ch.—Sept. "Ataim and Gadera." H.—The correct Roman edition of the Vulg. prints these words, plantationibus et Sepibus, with large letters, to imply as much. M.—King; David. Sa. M.—Many of the tribe of Juda attended David, while he was forced to flee before Saul, and to hide himself in unfrequented places. Some of them might be these Yotserim, or they might follow the profession of potters. H.—"With the king they were powerful in his kingdom, and dwelt there." Sept. H.—The Vulg. often give the meaning of proper names. D.

Ver. 24. Namuel, or Jamuel. Gen. 46:10.—Jarib; perhaps the same with Sohar, (M.) unless the latter be Zara, or Zare. Num. 26:12. These genealogies seem different; but the same person (C.) might have many names. D.

Ver. 27. Juda, probably, not even in the following cities, which they inhabited along with them. This tribe of Simeon was always the weakest, and kept close to Juda. See Num. 26:14.

Ver. 30. Bathuel appears to be the same with Bethulia. Judith 6:7. C.

Ver. 31. David, who had Siceleg given to him, 1 K. 27:6. H.—After the schism, Juda straitened the tribe of Simeon; so that it was forced to seek for other habitations in Gador, under Ezechias, v. 39, &c. C.—It could no longer reside among those of the tribe of Juda, (D.) and acknowledge another king. H.

Ver. 33. Baal, or Ballath. Jos. 19:1.—Distribution. Heb. and Sept. "and their genealogy." M.—Καταλογισμός, may as well have the former signification, "their class;" (H.) though the sequel seems to determine it in the latter sense. D.

Ver. 34. Mosabab. This and the following princes joined their forces, to conquer fresh territories from Gador, (H.) or Gadara, near Joppe, (Strabo xvi.) which had been long in the possession (H.) of the Egyptians, (v. 40. C.) or Philistines. Malvenda.

Ver. 40. Cham. It is not certain that the Philistines, who came from the country of the Casluim, were descendants of Mezraim. Gen. 10:14. But it is very clear that the Egyptians sprung from Cham. Ps. 77:51.

Ver. 41. Inhabitants. Sept. "and the Mineans." Heb. meyenim, "the inhabitants of Maon," in Arabia. See Judg. 10:11. Syr. and Arab. "the fountains."

Ver. 42. Jesi; perhaps Asaia, by the transposition of one letter; (v. 36. C.) or these chiefs were remote descendants of Jesi, v. 20. H.—The expedition probably took place about the same time as the preceding, to avoid the attack of the Assyrians, or of Juda, by retiring farther into Arabia. C.

Ver. 43. Escape the arms of Saul, or of David. D.—Day. It seems, therefore, that they escaped captivity, having abandoned their own country; or this was taken from a record, which had been made before that event, and is here inserted by Esdras; though, when he wrote, these Simeonites might have experienced the fate of their brethren, who were led captives in the 6th year of Ezechias. H.

Ver. 1. First-born. Gen. 49:4. W.—He gives this reason for not beginning with him. C.—And he. Prot. "and the genealogy is not to be reckoned after the birth-right." H.

Ver. 2. Accounted to Joseph, viz. as to the double portion, which belonged to the first-born: but the princely dignity was given to Juda, and the priesthood to Levi. Ch.—Yet it is not certain that the latter dignity formed a part of the birth-right, (Gen. 25:31) and the author takes no notice of it. C.—The double portion seems to have been all the privilege. Deut. 21:17. Sept. "the blessing or gift was Joseph's." Hebrew also does not specify princes, but "the leader," (H.) the Messiah, (Syr. &c.) and kings, from David till the captivity. C. Gen.

Ver. 4. Joel. It does not appear whether he was the son of the last, or of Henoch.

Ver. 6. Beera, This tribe continued to have princes of their own, after the division of the kingdom. Beera was in power when Thelgathphalnasar, or Theglathphalasar, took five tribes into captivity. 4 K. 15:29. Only twelve generations are mentioned to fill up about 750 years, from the leaving of Egypt. C.—But Enoch must have lived much sooner, as the Israelites continued in that country at least 215 years. The princes are probably not all specified, as on other occasions. H.

Ver. 7. Families, when they were led captive into Assyria; (M.) or before, when the tribe was in a most flourishing condition.—Princes. Heb. and Sept. “prince.”—Jehiel. Sept. “Joel,” v. 4.

Ver. 8. And. So Heb. &c. as if he was one of the princes. But the Vulg. seems to begin a new sentence, Porro, “now Bala.” The possessions of this man must have been very extensive, from the Euphrates till (H.) Baal-meon, within nine miles of Hesebon, (Eus.) almost (C.) as far as the Jordan. T.—Bala, or his descendants, extended their conquests as far as the Euphrates, which had been promised to Israel; and, under Saul, conquered the Agarites, who sprung from Agar. Syr. &c. “the Arabs of Sacca,” or the Scenites, “dwelling under tents,” and inhabiting the Desert Arabia. The details of this war are probably given, v. 19, &c. C.

Ver. 9. Cattle, for which reason they desired to have this country. Num. 32:4. M.

Ver. 11. Selcha, not far from Jabok. Deut. 3:10. C.

Ver. 12. Chief, (in capite.) Sept. “first-born.” H.—This list was made under Joathan, king of Juda, when Joel was at the head of the tribe of Gad. C.—Basan, the capital city, v. 16. Sa. M.

Ver. 15. And, &c. Heb. also, “Achi, son of Abdiel.”—Chief, like the preceding, each in their respective families. C.—They were relations (H.) of the same tribe. M.

Ver. 16. Saron, in Basan; (Jos. 12:18) different from those vallies near Joppe, (C.) and between Thabor and Tiberias. Euseb.

Ver. 17. Israel. Jeroboam II. had been dead two years before Joathan was born: unless some of the numbers be incorrect; which seem very probable. 4 K. 15:5. Yet these registers might be made at different times, and one, perhaps, under Jeroboam I. as when any war seemed to threaten, the number of soldiers was to be known. C.—It does not appear why the king of Juda is mentioned, as the people were not under his dominion, unless (H.) he was contemporary with Jeroboam II. as some assert. M.—Yet the following expedition seems to have taken place while Israel was still faithful to God. H. By faith they overcame kingdoms. Heb. 11. W.

Ver. 19. But, &c. Heb. “and Jetur, &c. (20) and they were helped by God against them.” H.—Sept. “they prevailed over them, and the Agarites,” &c. The ancient, or higher Iturea, lay between Hermon and Manasses; but the lower, which Josephus includes under this name, took in the deserted possessions of that half tribe. C.—The former (H.) extended from Jordan by Libanus, to the mountains of Tyre. M.—And Naphtis, sons of Ismael. Gen. 25:13. H.

Ver. 22. Lord. Very dreadful, and in obedience to God’s orders.—Captivity, v. 6. C.

Ver. 23. Basan, which belonged to Gad. H.—In Josue (17:5.) Basan and Galaad seem to be given to Manasses; but the former there denotes all the level country, from the Jabok to the Jordan, as Galaad is put for the mountains on the East. C.—Great. It would take thirty hours to travel from the torrent Jabok to Baal Hermon. Adric. M.

Ver. 26. Assur. These princes were scourges in the hand of God, to punish the guilty. H.—The former forced Israel to pay tribute; the latter carried many into captivity, 4 K. 15:19, 29 and 16:7. C.—Lahela, or Hala and Haber, cities watered by the river Gozan.—Ara; perhaps Rages. Tob. 1:16, &c. D.

1 PARALIPOMENON 6

Ver. 1. Levi. The genealogy of the Levites is given with more exactitude than any of the preceding. Caath formed two branches, 1. the priests, descended from Aaron; 2. all his other children, who were simply Levites. C.—Hence they are placed after the priests. M.

Ver. 2. Isaar, or Aminadab, v. 22.

Ver. 3. Abiu. These died without children. The genealogy of Eleazar is given, as his family enjoyed the pontificate a long time, while that of Ithamar is neglected, (C.) as only Heli and a few others were raised to that dignity. H.

Ver. 4. Eleazar. The nine following generations to Sadoc may be immediate. D.

Ver. 5. Abisue. He is mentioned no where else. Josephus (v. ult.) calls him Abiezer. C.—Many of these high priests were very obscure. M.—Ozi, after whom Heli is supposed to have reigned, so that Zaraïas and the three following were excluded, (C.) while Heli, and four of the same family of Ithamar, were acknowledged as high priests. T.—Abiathar was then forced to give place to Sadoc, (3 K. 2:26. H.) whose family was in power at the captivity, v. 15. T.—Nicephorus (ii. 4.) and Josephus (x. 11.) mention other high priests besides these. W.

Ver. 9. Azarias. Perhaps the same who is called Amarias, (2 Par. 19:11) as Johanan is probably the illustrious Joiada, 4 K. 11:4.

Ver. 10. This may refer to either. C.—The Holy Ghost gives an encomium to Joiada, for re-establishing the divine worship, (Junius) or to Azarias, for withstanding the impious attempt of king Osias. E. T. &c. 2 Paral. 26:17. M.

Ver. 12. Sellum, or Mosollam. C. 9:11. C.

Ver. 15. Went out, into captivity, while his father was slain. 4 K. 25:18. More than 22 priests would be requisite to fill up near 900 years. See Salien.

Ver. 16. Gerson. Hebrew here reads Gersom, though it had Gerson before, v. 1.

Ver. 18. The, &c. This verse is repeated from v. 2 as the author is now going to continue the genealogy of the Levites, in their natural order, (H.) to Samuel. D.

Ver. 20. Jahath. See v. 42, 43.—Zamma springs from Semei, Jeth, Gerson, and has a son named Ethan, who has Adaia; as Zara begot Athanai, v. 41. Almost all the names are rather different Ver. 22. Asir. While Core perished, his children were preserved. Num. 16:30 and 26:11. H.

Ver. 23. Asir. This name seems superfluous (v. 36, Ex. 6:24. C.) perhaps taken from the preceding verse. H.—The two former were sons of Core, v. 25, 37. C.

Ver. 26. Sophai, Nahath, and Eliab, are called Suph, (H.) Thohu, (v. 34. C.) and Eliel. H.—Sophai may be a surname of Elcana. Poole. D.

Ver. 27. Elcana, his son. It seems necessary to supply, “Samuel, his son,” (H.) as he descended from the 3d Elcana. D.

Ver. 28. Vasseni. Some Latin copies subjoin “Joel,” who was the first-born, (v. 33.) La Haye.—Vasseni means, “and the second;” which can hardly be considered as the name of the eldest son, though some have take it as such, in like manner as they have explained six. C. 3:22. But then the v ought at least to be omitted, (C.) as it is in the Vat. and Alex. Sept. “Sani and Abia.” H.—Other editions insert “Joel,” with the Syr. and Arab. C.—This person had therefore either two names, or Joel has been omitted, and we should translate “Joel and the second, Abia.” M.—These brothers acted so ill as judges, that the people took occasion to demand a king. 1 K. 8:3.

Ver. 31. The singing. Heb. “the hands or places of the canticle,” the two tribunes on each side of the altar. Heman presided over the band in the middle, while Asaph directed those on the right, and Ethan those on the left, v. 33, 39, and 44. C.—Placed. Heb. “rested,” as before David’s time it had been carried about. He erected a tabernacle for it on Sion, and directed the Levites to attend in order, (C. 25) so that some should be present every day (M.) to honour God, both by instruments and vocal music, while the priests performed their sacred functions with the utmost decency.

Ver. 33. Heman. Some families among the Levites were more distinguished than the rest, having authority to regulate the singers, and to give the tune. Hence many psalms are addressed to these three masters of music. Yet from those titles we cannot surely infer that those psalms were composed by Asaph, &c. C.

Ver. 34. Eliel. Many of the genealogies do not seem to agree in these first 10 chapters, as some more obscure names have been passed over, (M.) or the people had different names, or, through the fault of transcribers, some alteration has taken place, which could hardly be avoided, without a constant miracle. H.

Ver. 39. Brother, or relation, though of the family of Gerson. He also followed the same profession as Ethan did, v. 44.

Ver. 44. Ethan is also called Idithun (C. 25:1. 8) in the Psalms. C.

Ver. 48. Brethren. All the other Levites, who were not Cantors. M.

Ver. 49. Offerings, which is here the meaning of incensum; as “incense” was not burnt on this altar, but only victims. Ex. 29:13.

Ver. 53. Sadoc. By God’s ordinance Heli had been appointed. But the dignity still subsisted in Aaron's family. W.—Achimaas, who was pontiff in the days of Solomon. This genealogy had been brought down to the Captivity, (v. 3, &c.) which shews that the author give extracts from different records.

Ver. 55. Suburbs, or 2000 cubits round the city. See Jos. 20 and 21. C.

Ver. 57. Of, is not authorized by the Vulg. civitates, but is added, to signify that all these 13 cities were not thus privileged. H.—There were only six cities of refuge, of which Hebron was one. See Josue 20:7. C. M.—Prot. “And to the sons of Aaron they gave the cities of Juda, namely, Hebron, the city of refuge.” But “such a licence to insert words at pleasure, cannot be allowed.” Heb. lit. “they gave cities of Hebrew refuge, Hebron,” &c. The “sense absolutely disallows the word Judah,” which is omitted, (Jos. 21:13) as well as in some Heb. MSS. in the Bamberg, and Complut. editions, and in those of Jablonski and Michaelis.—Hari, “cities,” ought to be hir, “a city,” as only one is meant. We should also add with the Arab. and Syriac, and the parallel passage in Josue, “and her suburbs,” after Hebron. Kennicott.—“Juda” is not found in the Sept. &c.: and Buxtorf acted with little wisdom, when he thought he had sufficiently answered Capellus, by observing that the Masora declared the word to be authentic. Anticrit. It is a great misfortune that most of the printed Heb. editions have been given under such influence; and that the Masorets have defaced so many MSS. by their corrections. H.—Hence they probably burnt all the first edition of Naples, 1487, except part of a single copy, comprising the Cethubim given to Eton college by Dr. Pellet, which omits the word Juda. Kennicott. Dis. i. p. 520–2.

Ver. 59. Asan, perhaps Jethnan, or Ain. Jos. 15:23 and 21:15. Syriac adds Ethra. C.—Bethsames. Sept. Alex. subjoins, “Baither and its suburbs.” H.—All these cities were in the tribes of Juda and of Simeon. M.

Ver. 60. Almath. Jos. Almon.—Thirteen; but Geta and Gabaon are not here expressed. Jos. 21:16, 17. C.—Sept. Alex. inserts, “Lebee,” before, and “Anchos, with its suburbs,” after Anathoth, thus making 14; but these additional cities are not sacerdotal. H.

Ver. 61. Out of. We may supply, “the tribe of Dan, Ephraim, &c.” as only two cities belonged to Manasses. Jos. 21:25. C.—Double that number was taken from the two other tribes. M.

Ver. 65. Them. The priests, v. 54. D.—Names. Some being styled of the priests, (C.) other of the Levites, (M.) whose dominion as thus asserted. C.

Ver. 66. The cities, or rather “some cities,” as all were not in the tribe of Ephraim. H.

Ver. 67. Of the. Lit. “cities to flee to, (or of refuge) Sichem,” (H.) which might induce some to suppose that all these cities were of this description; but, in reality, only Sichem had that privilege. C.—Sept. is liable to the same ambiguity. See v. 57. (H.) Jos. 20:7 and 21:21.

Ver. 68. Jecmaan, or Cibsaim, (Jos.) as Helon is put for Aialon below. And of the tribe of Dan, Eltheco and Gabathon is omitted. See Jos. 21:23.

Ver. 70. Aner and Baalam, perhaps the same as Thanach and Gethremmon, which were given to the children of Caath of the inferior degree, (Jos. 21:26. C.) or, who were left out of the rank of priests, (M.) or before unprovided for, as the partition was made at different times. —Baalam. Heb. “Balaam.” Sept. “Iblaam” is the Jeblaam. Jos. 17:11.

Ver. 71. Astharoth, or Bosra. C.—Heb. Hashtaroth. Jos. 21:27. H.

Ver. 72. Cedes ... Ramoth, and Anem, are Cesion, Jaramoth, and Engannim. Jos. 21:28, 29.

Ver. 75. Hucac ... Hamon, and Cariathaim, are Helcath, Hammoth-Dor, and Carthan.

Ver. 77. Remmono and Thabor, or, Jecham and Cartha. H.—Damna and Naalol are here omitted. Jos. 21:35. There was formerly a town on Thabor, perhaps called Ceselet Thabor. Jos. 19:12, Judg. 4:6. C.

1 PARALIPOMENON 7

Ver. 1. Jasub, or Job. See Gen. 46:13, Num. 26:23. C.—Simeron, elsewhere Samron and Semran; (M.) which shews, either that the names have been differently pronounced, or that the transcribers have erred. H.

Ver. 2. Chiefs. They were at the head of distinct families. M.—David. We know that David took an account of his fighting men. 2 K. 24. But it is not certain that this register was made at that time; as we read that Benjamin was not numbered. C. 21:6. These lists were probably made when some expedition was intended by David. The author was not, perhaps, able to recover the accounts of Nephthali, Manasses, and Ephraim, no more that the genealogies of Dan (v. 12) and Zabulon, which do not appear in this book. C.

Ver. 3. Sons, for “the son.” D.—Izrahia. He alone deserved to be mentioned. See v. 6, where only three sons of Benjamin appear, though there were more, C. 8:2. T.—Five, comprising Israhia, “all chiefs,” (H.) men of note, (D.) or one name may be lost. C.

Ver. 4. Children, who had numerous offspring; (H.) so that, in the days of David, these descendants of Thola, amounted to so many. M.

Ver. 5. War. In all, this tribe could muster 145,600 men, at that time. C.

Ver. 6. Benjamin; a man, perhaps, of the tribe of Issachar. See v. 10. Or the patriarch had originally ten sons, (Gen. 46:21) or grandsons, five of whom only had children, and perhaps tow of their families perished entirely in the war with the other tribes; (Judg. 20:46) so that, under David, only three branches were acknowledged. C.—Jadihel, or Asbel in Genesis.

Ver. 7. Urai, a grandson, called Hir, v. 12. C.—Five chiefs, but inferior to the seven original families, (Num. 26:38. M.) unless the fortune of war had made great changes, or some of the lists be imperfect. C.

Ver. 12. And Hapham; called Mophim and Ophim, (Gen. 46) and Suphim and Hupham, Num. 26:39.—Aher, in Heb. means, “another” son, called Hazim: or more probably Aher ought to be Dan, the father of Husim, (Gen. 46:23) as Dan and Nephthali had both the same mother, Bala, v. 13. C.

Ver. 14. Son. Heb. “sons ... Ezriel, whom she bare.” This seems imperfect. The Hebrews seldom name the mother. C.—Sept. intimate that the Syrian wife was mother of both. H.—Galaad, whose posterity enjoyed the country of the same name, (Num. 22:29 and 32:41) only Machir in mentioned as the son of Manasses.

Ver. 15. And Saphan. S. Jerom seems to have taken them for women. If they were the sons of Hir, (v. 12) Machir probably adopted them. Heb. “Machir took a wife from Happhim,” &c. But does one woman marry two men? Syr. and Arab. “Machir took a wife one of the sisters of Huphim and Suphim, (the great and powerful) named Maacha.” C.—Prot. “the sister of Huppim ... whose sister’s name was Maachah.” H.—Hebrew may have this sense, with a small alteration. C.—Le Clerc thinks that the name of the woman has been lost, and the text altered.—Second. This also seems defective, as no first had been mentioned. C.—Two intervened between Machir and Salphaad, namely, Galaad and Hephher, (Num. 26:29 and 27:1. M.) so that Salphaad was his great-grandson. H.

Ver. 17. Badan, perhaps the same with Jair; (Judg. 10:3, 1 K. 12:11. C.) or rather in this last place, the Syr. &c. read more correctly Barac, and Samson instead of Samuel, who was then speaking. See Heb. 11:32. There was no such deliverer as Badan, but the word has been corrupted from Barac. Sept. Kennicott.

Ver. 18. Queen. Heb. “Moleceth bore Ishehod.” S. Jerom and the Latin Church translate these names. W.—Prot. “Hammoleketh bore Ishod.” H.—The proper names might have been as well retained, (C.) as in the Sept. H.—Some suppose that the mother of Josue, or Debora, may be designated. Rabbins.—Abiezer, (19) Leci, are the Jeser and Chelek. Num. 26:30.

Ver. 20. Bared, Thahath, probably called Becher and Theken, in Num. Three alone are there mentioned, though the other thirteen, whose names are given, seem to have been all the immediate sons of Ephraim, (C.) since he mourns for them, (v. 22. M.) and his other children afterwards. H.—The dreadful slaughter made them, is perhaps the reason why only three are mentioned in Numbers, and none in Genesis.

Ver. 21. Son, Ezer. Heb. “and Ezer and Elad.” His son, after each, seems to be twice omitted, as these were in the same degree as the rest. Sept. agree with the Vulg. H.—Because they, the sons of Ephraim, (C. &c.) or the men of Geth. Syr. and Arab. D. M. T.—The text is ambiguous, but the former supposition seems more rational, (H.) and more generally received. C.

Ver. 23. Beria. This name signifies, in evil, or in affection. Ch.—Briae, “in howling.” M.

Ver. 24. Daughter, or great grand-daughter, repaired these three cities. C.—The last, probably, was called after her. H.—But its situation is unknown. C.

Ver. 25. Thale. Heb. “and Thale, his son, and Thaan, his son.” These seem to have been the sons of Ephraim. The following were their descendants. H.—At least Elisama was prince in the wilderness, (C.) under Moses; (Num. 1:10. H.) and Josue, the sixth from Ephraim, was 54 years old, when the Israelites left Egypt. C.

Ver. 29. Daughters. Sept. “villages.”—Joseph, by Ephraim and Manasses, west of the Jordan. H.

Ver. 34. Aram. Add, “and Helem,” (C.) unless Helem was the first-born (v. 35) of Ahi, which signifies “brother.” Perhaps Helem was brother of Somer, called Hotham, v. 32.

Ver. 37. Jethran. Sept. "Jether," as v. seq.

Ver. 38. Jephone. The father of Caleb was of the tribe of Juda. C.

Ver. 40. Of captains; a Hebrew idiom, to denote the most excellent. H.—Heb. "chief of the princes." All mentioned from v. 30, were at the hand of their tribe, in succession, and led their brethren to battle. C.

1 PARALIPOMENON 8

Ver. 1. Benjamin. Some farther particulars of his genealogy are given, for the honour of Saul; (C.) and many of these, who returned from captivity, are mentioned. 1 Esd. 10:11. Sanctius.—Bale, &c. are called Bela, (M. C. 7:6.) Jadiel, and Ahiram, or Echi, Num. 26:36 and Gen. 46.

Ver. 2. Nohaa is probably styled Bechor; and Rapha, Ros, in Genesis.

Ver. 3. Addar, Ared or Hered. C.

Ver. 6. Ahod, the judge. Judg. 3:15.—Manahath; the Menuchat, in the tribe of Juda, (C. 2:54) after the captivity. C.—Abulensis thinks Manahath was in Moab, v. 8. M.

Ver. 7. And. Lit. "but," autem. H.—The sentence is clearer without this particle. M.—Naaman was the first-born of Ahod; and Gera prevailed on his brethren to leave Gabaa, (T.) and was probably the father of Oza. C.

Ver. 8. Saharim. His father is not specified: but his was a Benjamite. M.—Some force the Heb. text to say that Ahod had three sons, whom he sent to form a colony at Manahath, and afterwards he had three others by his two wives, and at last, by Rodes, he had Jobab, &c. C.—Begot. Prot. "children in the country of Moab, after he had sent them away: Hushim and Baara were his wives." But the Sept. intimate, that "Saharim begot ... after he had sent away Osim, and his wife Baara, and he begot of Ada," &c. H.—He had perhaps retired into Moab, at the same time as Elimelech. Ruth 1. T.—Those who were sent away were men, (eos) according to the Hebrew, unless (H.) the word should be eas. D.

Ver. 11. Mehusim. Heb. and Sept. "of Husim (v. 8) he begot."

Ver. 12. Ono was three miles from Lod, or Diospolis, (Lightfoot) built after the return from Babylon, (1 Esd. 2:23. C.) in the territory of Benjamin. M.

Ver. 13. And Sama. They are supposed to have been sons of Elphaal. C.—Aialon belonged to Dan. Jos. 19:42. But it was near Benjamin, (M.) and was probably occupied by people chiefly of that tribe. H.—Geth. We know not at what period.

Ver. 16. Baria, son of Elphaal. Whether the following were his brothers does not appear certain, as it seems more natural to have placed all his father's children together, v. 12 and 18.

Ver. 21. Semei; perhaps Sama, v. 13. C.—Sept. read, Samai. H.

Ver. 25. Sesac, probably mentioned in v. 14. C.—Sept. have “Sosek,” in both places.

Ver. 28. Families. Heb. “These were heads of the fathers by their generations, chief men.” Prot. H.—Jerusalem, probably after the captivity. We find none of these names from v. 14, in the days of Josue; and it was not easy for people to establish themselves at Jerusalem, till David had expelled the Jebusites. C.—Yet we find that the tribes of Juda and Benjamin had seized the lower city long before. Jos. 18:28. H.

Ver. 29. Dwelt. Lit. “they dwelt.” But Heb. and Sept. “in Gabaon, dwelt the father of Gaboan,” (H.) who was called Jehiel, (C. 9:35) or Abiel. 1 K. 9:1. C.—The following verses are repeated in the next chapter, (H.) and seem to have been originally the same; though now many variations occur, which shew that “every Hebrew letter” has not been preserved. Kennicott.

Ver. 30. Baal. Add, “and Ner,” (v. 33. C. 9:36) as the Sept. have it here also.

Ver. 31. Zacher, or Zacharias. C. 9. Heb. omits the following name, as well as (H.) the end of the preceding one. Kennicott.—The Alex. Sept. has the same faults. But the Vatican retains Macelloth. H.

Ver. 32. Over-against, in the vicinity, while some remained at Gabaon. See Gen. 16:12. C.—The family of Cis resided at Gabaa. 1 K. 10:26. M.

Ver. 33. Ner, son of Abiel, or of Jeheil, prince of Gabaon, v. 29. H.—From Aphia sprung Bechorah, Seror, Abiel, (1 K. 9) who is also called Ner and Jehiel. He had Ner, the father of Abner, and Cis, father of Saul. M.—Abinadab, or Jessui. 1 K. 14:49. C.—Esbaal, alias Isboseth. Ch.—The Hebrews avoid pronouncing the name of the idol, and substitute boseth, “confusion.” C.—Hence it is clear that many had two names. D.

Ver. 34. Meribbaal, alias Mephiboseth. 2 K. 4:4. Ch. 2 K. 9. M.

Ver. 36. Joada, or Jara. C. 9:42. C.—“Strange mistakes these!” Kennicott.

Ver. 40. Archers, particularly the natives of Gabaa. Judg. 20:16. Jonathan is praised for his skill. 2 K. 1:22. M.—Benjamin. We might hence conclude that here ended the genealogy of that family. Yet we find it partly repeated in the following chapter, v. 35. H.

Ver. 1. Israel. These registers were preserved by those who fled from the arms of Salmanasar, into the kingdom of Juda. Such records were preserved with the utmost care, and were collected by the author; who could give an account of what happened during and after the captivity, as he was an irreproachable eye-witness; not to mention the divine inspiration, which places his testimony out of the reach of criticism. C.—And Juda; perhaps by some historian. M.—Babylon, while Israel was removed elsewhere, by the Assyrians. H.—The genealogies of Israel being hitherto recited, now those who came back from captivity appear. W.

Ver. 2. First. He only treats of those who returned first, (T.) under Esdras. H.—Nehemias brought back others, and more returned afterwards. Many also retook possession of their lands, which they had enjoyed before the captivity. 1 Esd. 3:12.—Nathineans. These were the posterity of the Gabaonites, whose office was to bring wood, water, &c. for the service of the temple. Ch. Jos. 9:27.—David and Solomon consigned others of the Chanaanites, whose lives they spared, to perform the same office. They were like public slaves. The number of those who returned was so small, that days were appointed for all the people to help to carry wood for the temple. At Jerusalem the Nathineans, “or people given,” resided on the east side of the city; (2 Esd. 2:2–6.) and other towns were assigned them. 1 Esd. 2:70. C.—The people continued to be divided into four classes, as they had been before the captivity. Malvenda.

Ver. 3. Manasses. People from these tribes particularly, (H.) as well as from others, had fled to the kingdom of Juda, when the Assyrians took their brethren prisoners; and these returned to Jerusalem. M.—Cyrus gave a general leave for all Israel to return. The country was too spacious for them; and it was found necessary to force the tenth part of the people, by lot, to repair to Jerusalem, as it wanted inhabitants. 2 Esd. 11:1.

Ver. 4. Othei; perhaps Hathaia, son of Husias. The Heb. names are differently pronounced. C.

Ver. 5. Siloni may mean a native of Silo, or a descendant of Sela. See Num. 26:20 and 2 Esd. 11:5. C.

Ver. 7. Oduia, or Johed, or Juda. 2 Esd. 11 and 7:9. Junius.

Ver. 11. Azarias, or Saraia, ib. 11.—Mosollam, or Sellum. C. 6:12. C.—High is not expressed in Pontifex; and this Azarias was only (H.) one of the principal families; (M. D.) perhaps the second in dignity; (4 K. 25:18) while Jesus was the successor of Aaron, 1 Esd. 3:8. C.—Heb. and Sept. “the ruler,” (H.) or “captain of the guard of the house.” C.—They were styled pontiffs, or princes of the priests. T.

Ver. 12. Phassur, Phesur, (H.) or Phetur. From him sprung Zacharias, Amsi, Phelelia, Jehoram; so that the last was only the great-grandson of Phassur, 2 Esd. 11:12.—Maasai. In Esd. (v. 13) Amassai, the son of Azreel, the son of Ahazi.

Ver. 14. Levites, established at Jerusalem.

Ver. 15. Carpenter. Heb. Cheresh, is taken by some to be a surname. Sept. “And Ares.” It is asserted that the priests and Levites could follow no mechanical profession, (Abul.) and the Bacbacar only presided over the carpenters, who wrought in the temple. M. T.—But why might not people of this order employ themselves in such arts and labours, which were never deemed degrading among the Hebrews, nor incompatible with the sacred ministry, during the leisure hours? C.—S. Paul did not disdain to make tents. H.

Ver. 16. Suburbs, or “courts,” atriis. H.—Heb. “villages.” M.—Netophati was a town of Juda. The ancient regulations could not be observed exactly. C.—The priests received the Levites into their cities. D.

Ver. 17. Sellum had the superintendency over all the porters. H.—He was also at the head of one of the four bands which guarded the doors, east, west, north, and south of the temple, with various apartments, v. 26. C.—Brother. Heb. “brethren,” or bands. H.

Ver. 18. Time. Heb. “and hitherto.” This custom has been observed at the king's gate, who entered his tribune by the eastern gate of the temple. 4 K. 16:18. So far the ancient records reach. Some would infer from this passage, that a guard was still kept at the king's gate, even though there was none sitting upon the throne after the captivity. C.—Prot. ("who hitherto waited in the king's gate eastward.) They were porters in the companies of the children of Levi." H.—These different bands attended by turns. M.—But the captains were on duty every day, v. 25, and 26, and 34.

Ver. 19. Service, to keep watch. C.—Families. Heb. "fathers over the host, (H.) or camp of the Lord: keepers of the entry." The Corites, though not perhaps alone, performed what their fathers had done before the tabernacle, in the desert, and in the temple of Solomon; which were considered as the camp of the great king.

Ver. 20. Before. Heb. "the Lord with him," an usual form of blessing, (C.) or of wishing well (H.) to the deceased. C.—This Phinees lived after the captivity, (M.) and possessed the same power as Eleazar and Joiada. C. 12:27, Num. 3:32. It is not necessary to refute the fables of the Rabbins, who pretend that the famous Phinees was an angel, who appeared at different times, and particularly at the return from Babylon. C.—Heb. may refer to the ancient Phinees: "And Phinees ... was ruler over them formerly, and the Lord was with him." D.

Ver. 21. Gate, leading to the holy place, which corresponded with the tabernacle.

Ver. 22. Towns, where they resided, when they were not on duty. M.—Seer, or prophet. H.—We read not of his making any such regulation. But he probably made it after the misconduct of the sons of Heli, and when the ark was brought back. C.—He might also give private instructions to David for the same purpose; (H.) as Gad and Nathan did. 2 Par. 29:25. The same plans were still adopted, though the number of Levites was small. C.—Trust, while they were at the head of affairs, and acting by God's authority. Lit. "in their faith;" (H.) enlightened from above, and regulating matters according to the dispositions, which they discovered in the sacred ministers: or rather Heb. "in their established employment," which was to subsist in future ages. C.

Ver. 24. Quarters: lit. "by the four winds."

Ver. 25. Up on. Heb. "after seven days ... with them," to take their place for a week.

Ver. 26. To these. Heb. "for these Levites, (Sellum, &c. v. 17) four chief porters were in their set office,” for life, or as long as they were able to serve, and did not change every week like the rest.—Lord: the apartments of the priests, and the storehouses, (H.) where all precious ornaments, wine, &c. were kept. C.

Ver. 30. Priests. They alone were allowed to make the composition, which no mortal was permitted to use (C.) for his own pleasure. H. Ex. 30:34.

Ver. 31. Pan, to be offered on the altar of holocausts, (Lev. 2:4 and 7:12) or to be eaten by the priests. Ezech. 46:20. Mathathias was to take care that all this was done with decency, (C.) and to look after the utensils.

Ver. 32. Propositions. Heb. “of arrangement;” (Ex. 35:13.) “of faces.” These loaves were made by the Levites, but arranged upon the golden table every week (C.) before the ark. See C. 23:29.

Ver. 33. These; probably Sellum, &c. (v. 17) though it is not certain that the chief porters presided over the singers. C. 15 and 16. Heb. “And these are the singers, chief of the families (C. or fathers) of the Levites, in the chambers (of the temple) free” from all other avocations, (H.) that they may watch over the porters and musicians. Sept. is clearer: (C.) “And these are the masters of music over the bands of Levites, observing their daily courses, because they are day and night over them in the works.” H.—The sons of Caath seem to be chiefly specified, (v. 32) though other families sung. C. 6:39.—Chambers, at a distance from their wives, to trim the lamps in the evening, and to see that none were extinguished, (M.) as also to teach music, &c. The Synagogues were used afterwards. D.

Ver. 34. Jerusalem, having no substitute; (C. 26. H.) or the chiefs of each family resided there. M.

Ver. 35. And in. These verses are repeated from the last chapter, in order to bring us to the death of Saul, (M.) and the reign of David. C. —“Tis difficult to account for the repetition, provided they were repeated originally; but if they have been repeated through the blunder of a transcriber, the existence of the same words” before them may be the reason. Kennicott.—The father of Gabaon. This is the explanation of Abigabaon. C. 8:29. H.—Wife. So the former chapter, and all the ancient versions, with some Heb. MSS. read, instead of the printed Heb. “sister,” (Ken.) which seems to be corrupted; (C.) and the Prot. venture to correct it. H.

Ver. 41. Tharaa. Heb. “Tachrea.” Ken. e, is substituted for a. H.—And Ahaz, is omitted in Hebrew, (Ken.) and Sept.

Ver. 42. Jara. Heb. Yahra instead of Jeuade, or Johada, (C.) 8:36, twice. Sept. Jada here, and Joiada above. H.

Ver. 43. Raphaia, called Rapha before. C.

Ver. 44. These. All is omitted, though it is found C. 8:38, and in MS. ii. Kennicott.—These remarks, which may appear to some minute, shew that all Hebrew MSS. are not absolutely alike, as some once pretended; and that the Hebrew Bible is not printed from the best copies. H.—“The sacred volume in Hebrew has, therefore, been published with such carelessness, as no other printed copy with which I am acquainted.” Houbigant, prol. p. 2.—Yet this is the copy, which alone Protestants hold up as the standard of perfection, and the Rule of Faith! H.

1 PARALIPOMENON 10

Ver. 1. Now. Sept. “and.” H.—This has no connexion with what goes before. C.—This history is given more at large, 1 K. 31 and 2 K. 1. M.

Ver. 3. Reached: lit. “found.” H.—Heb. “attacked him, and he feared the archers. He was not, at least, mortally wounded, when he took the desperate resolution to destroy himself, through fear and consternation. C. Yet the original will admit the sense of the Vulg. and Saul might have received some wounds. Sept. “Archers found him with bows, and in labours, and he laboured on account of (or to avoid) the bows.” H.

Ver. 4. Fear and reverence for his master, (C.) as well as concern for his own safety. H.

Ver. 6. Fell. Heb. “died.” C.—But, though the house of Saul was fallen from its former glory, on this fatal day, when so many of his courtiers perished; yet he left Isboseth to bewail his fate, (H.) and some others who were not of age to go to battle. C.

Ver. 9. To be. Heb. “to carry tidings to their idols, (sorrows) and to the people.” They exposed the spoils in the temples, and gave thanks to their idols for the victory.

Ver. 10. Head, while his body was hung on the walls of Bethsan. 1 K. 31:10. C.—The temple of Dagon was contiguous to the wall. D.

Ver. 12. Oak, well known at Jabes. Elsewhere the word is translated, the grove. C.

Ver. 13. For. Sept. “in his iniquities.” H.—See 1 K. 13:9 and 15:23. Saul offered sacrifice unlawfully, and spared some of the Amalecites. W.

1 PARALIPOMENON 11

Ver. 1. David. This name is written without i, in the books composed before the captivity, (A.C. 588) but i is inserted in the latter works, which is an argument against the antiquities of Canticles, where the i is found. Yet the MSS. vary so, that great stress is not laid on this (Kennicott) proof, and it is not sufficient weight to stand against the general opinion, which attributes that work to Solomon. H.—Hebron, after the death of Isboseth. 2 K. 5. C.—Flesh; related, as the children of Jacob.

Ver. 3. Which he spoke, is not expressed in Heb. or Sept. Samuel complied with the injunction, by anointing David. 1 K. 16:13. He also wrote an account of this memorable transaction, which translated the sceptre from one family to another. H.—It is, on this account, that the author here takes particular notice of God's decree. Ken.

Ver. 5. Here. In 2 K. 5:6, the passage is much fuller, and attended with many difficulties. Kennicott would correct and translate it: "And they spake unto David, saying, Thou shalt not come hither: for the blind and the lame shall keep thee off, by saying David shall not come hither. But David took the stronghold of Sion," (different from the citadel. Josephus) "which is the city of David. And David said, on that day, whosoever (first) smiteth the Jebusites, and, through the subterraneous passage, reacheth the blind and the lame, which are hated of David's soul, because the blind and the lame continue to say, he shall not come into this house—shall be head and captain. So Joab, the son of Zeruiah, went up first, and was head."

Ver. 8. Round. He made a complete inclosure or fortification, as Mello denotes perfection, or completion, (H.) by building houses from the castle to the town beneath it. David begun at the very house (or citadel, 4 K. 12:20) from which the blind and the lame thought to have excluded him, and built all round, so as to make an entire communication. Ken.—Built. Prot. "repaired." Heb. yechaye, (H.) "saved alive." Syr. &c. Poole's Synop. But probably shear is now written instead of shor, and jeje ought to be jeje. The long and the short e are easily confounded, (H.) and a is frequently thus inserted. Watson.—"He built ... round to the beginning of that circuit. And Joab was made governor of the city." Ken.—"And surrounding it with a wall, he appointed Joab superintendant of the walls." Joseph. vii. 3. —The position of the vowel points in these words, might naturally cause this mistake, (H.) as it seems to have done on other occasions. Thus shor, "an ox," should be sar, "a prince." Gen. 49:6 and Osee 12:11. Shevarim, "oxen," has been read sarim, "princes," by the Sept. The former passage might admit of some corrections. "In their anger they slew the men, and in their fury (vabrothom; instead of vabrotsnom, which is always explained in a good sense) they destroyed the princes. Cursed be their anger, for it was fierce; and their fury, for it was inflexible."

Ver. 9. Lord. 2 K. adds God, more properly, as it seems always to have been inserted, though it is now wanting in two hundred places. Kennicott, Dis. i. p. 62 and 525.

Ver. 10. These. Besides the help which David received immediately from God, he derived great assistance from Joab, the captain-general, from the six more renowned valiant men, and from the body of Thirty, as well as from fifteen others of less note, who are mentioned here. H.

Ver. 11. Number. 2 K. 23:8. the names. But the two authors do not always use the same terms. Ken.—Thirty, or three, (2 K.) more correctly. D.—Three, ib. eight; (H.) probably by mistake.—Wounded, or rather soldiers. He encountered singly a whole regiment, though he might not kill them all; much less did he attack them, when already wounded. Ken.—Numbers have often been expressed by letter in Heb. as well as in Greek and other languages. Our numeral figures are not liable to fewer mistakes. H.—Heb. “This is the number of the mighty men whom David had; Jashobeam, (the son of Zabdiel) the Hachmonite, chief of three. He lifted up his spear against three hundred soldiers at one time.” Ken.

Ver. 12. His. Heb. “the son of Dodi.”

Ver. 13. And. “Who could have discovered that thirty-four words are here omitted, if they had not been preserved in 2 K. 23.” though with some inaccuracy? We should read, “And when the men of Israel were fled, he arose and smote the Philistines, until his hand was weary, and his hand clave unto the sword. And the Lord wrought a great deliverance that day; and the people returned after him only to spoil. And after him was Shammah, the son of Agee, the Hararite: and the Philistines were gathered together at Lechi, where was a piece of ground full of barley ... 14. But he placed himself in the midst of the field, (of barley) and saved it, and smote the Philistines; and the Lord wrought a great deliverance.” Ken.—The name of Samma must have been omitted by the transcriber. C.—Without it, how will the number 37 be made out?

Ver. 14. These men. Sept. speak only of one: “And he stood,” &c. (H.) and the verbs are singular. 2 K. 23:12.—Gave. Heb. vayahas (ibid.) is more correct than vayosha, “saved.” Ken.—Prot. are forced to add, “saved them by a great deliverance.” But there is nothing in the original signifying by. H.

Ver. 15. Captains. This is not rightly expressed in any of the ancient versions, no more than in the Prot. which has, “Three of the Thirty chief;” marg. “Three captains over the Thirty.” The latter signification comes much nearer to the truth. It should be, “And there went down three captains, (Jesbaam, Eleazar, and Semma. H.) who were over Thirty.”—Rock, (hatsur) which seems preferable to katsir, “in the time of harvest.” 2 K. Ken. C.

Ver. 16. Garrison, or advanced guard.

Ver. 17. O that. Heb. “Who will.” David wished to see his native country freed from the troops of the Philistines.—In. Heb. “by the gate.”

Ver. 18. These. Heb. “The three (or perhaps, three of the mighty men) brake through the host of the Philistines ... by the gate, and took, and brought it to David. But David would not drink it; and he poured it out unto the Lord,” by way of prayer, (Ken.) or of thanksgiving. Josephus.

Ver. 19. In the. Heb. “thing! Shall I drink the blood of these men, with their lives? for at the hazard of their lives they have brought it! And he would not drink it. These things did these three mighty men,” (Ken.) forming the first ternary. T.—Among these heroes there were different degrees of excellence. C.—Prot. acknowledge the superlative, “mightiest:” but “mighty” would do better, as they were not still equal to Joab. H.

Ver. 20. Abisai. His name is written without the middle i, in all this book.—Three. Alex. Sept. alone reads, “six.”—He was. Heb. adds, “not;” evidently mistaking lo, “not,” for lo, “ei.” See 4 K. 8:10. “He lifted up his spear against 300 soldiers, and had a name among Three.” Ken.

Ver. 21. Second and (H.) first occur not in Heb. and Sept. C.—Heb. “Of the three he was more honourable than two; therefore he was their captain: and yet he attained not unto the first three.” Ken.—First is indeed the sense, but it is not expressed in the original. We have here the exact order of these mighty men sufficiently marked out. Abisai is the first captain (H.) of the second ternary. T.

Ver. 22. Two ariels. That is, two lions, or lion-like men; for ariel, in Hebrew, signifies “a lion (Ch). of God,” the strongest compound word for “a man of valour. The courage of a lion is so singular, that a man of extraordinary heroism is frequently called a lion, by way of emphasis; and the word God is frequently applied in Scripture to things particularly great.” Kennicott.—V is wanting at the beginning and end of the name of Banaias, (here Benaia, instead of Ubenaiahu and Banaias, 2 K.) The last letter (v. 24) serves to distinguish this third captain in waiting on the king, from the eleventh, v. 31. C. 27:5 and 14. H.—Heb. “And Benaihu, the son of Jehoiada, the son of a valiant man of Kabzeel, mighty in exploits; he slew two men of Moab, who were stouter than lions. He also went down and slew a lion in a pit, in a snowy day.” Ken.—We have observed, that “And” is not found in the printed Heb. nor is it in the Prot. “Benaiah ... slew two lion-like men, of Moad.” Lit. “ariels;” (Sept.) that is, “lions of God,” or two of Moab equal to (H.) the strongest lions. W.—Yet it is not certain whether these were not real lions, as well as the following. H.—S. Jerom translates, two lions of Moab, 2 K. 23:20. C.—Lion: ari is written arih, 2 K. H.

Ver. 23. Cubits. 2 K. “a man of great aspect.”—Ones. Heb. “and he had a name among three mighty men.” Ken.—Shelosha, “three,” has the u omitted, (2 K.) as it is frequently on other occasions. H.

Ver. 25. Among, or rather “above,” as he was the second captain of this series, and not one of the body of Thirty. Ken.—Council. Lit. “placed him at his ear,” (H.) fecit eum auricularium a secreto; (2 K.) though the word is the same. C.—It seems, however, to have been read differently. H.—Sept. “he placed him over his family, (C. πατριαν) or native place.” H.—Syr. “guard of his spear, and chief of his heroes.” Arab. “over all his riches.” Some would translate, “captain of his guards.” Grot.—Banaias was a man of consummate prudence, as well as a great warrior. C.—David “gives Banaias the command of his life-guard.” Joseph. 7:12.—Heb. “Behold! he was more honourable than the Thirty; but he attained not unto the first three, and David set him over his guard,” the Cerethites, &c. C. 18:17. Ken.—This author adopts the correction of Grotius, as the Prot. do; though he acknowledges there is not impropriety in the present reading, “over his hearing or obedience.” He also adds “first,” by way of explanation, as v. 21. H.

Ver. 26. Moreover. Nothing particular is here recorded of Asahel, and therefore he is barely mentioned with the rest. But the Book of Kings had been more particular in determining their rank, and had said, “Asahel, brother of Joab, was over the Thirty,” being the last of the second ternary. The preposition b (Ken.) frequently means, “over.” Nold. &c.—Arab. “head of Thirty, whose names are these.” Ken.—Elchanan; probably the son of Jair. 2 K. 21:18. C.

Ver. 27. Arorite, or Harodite, (2 K.) to distinguish him from Shammah. Eliza, who follows in 2 K. is here universally omitted, as he is supposed to have died soon, and to have been replaced by Zabad, (v. 41.) who completes the number of 30. Ken.—Phalonite; not Paltite, as 2 K. where t has been formed of the two letters un. So Sept. have read Adni, "my lord," perhaps correctly, (Ken.) instead of Adan, "any man's," (1 K. 17:32) as the two letters might easily be mistaken for one. Ken.—Helles was the captain for the seventh month, as the following was for the sixth, and Abiezer for the ninth. C. 27:10. H.

Ver. 29. Sobbochai, rather than Mobonnai, (2 K.) where s and m have been mistaken for m and n, which are very similar in Heb. The Sept. (Aldi) has there also Sabouchai. He was the eighth captain. C. 27.—Ilai, or Selmon. 2 K. Sept. have the same variation in some copies; but others lead us to suppose that Ilai was the true name. Neither occur any where else in Scripture.

Ver. 30. Maharai, the tenth captain. (C. 27.) Heled was the twelfth.

Ver. 31. Ethai. Not the famous prince of Geth, (2 K. 15:19. Ken.) though the name is written alike, (2 K. 23:29) an i being omitted. H.—This captain contributed to make David king (v. 10.)—Banaia. 2 K. 23 a v is added, which makes the name like that of the second general; (v. 22.) but it ought to form part of the e, which is wanting in the following word.

Ver. 32. Hurai, rather than Heddai, (2 K. Ken.) though there is some doubt which is to be preferred. H.—Syr. and Arab. have Hiddai; but the Sept. declare for Hurai here, and the Aldine copy has Ouri also. 2 K. Ken.—Torrent. Heb. "of the torrents or vales of Gaas." C.—Abiel. 2 K. Abailbon, which seems to be the right word, as a transcriber may omit letters more easily than he can insert them. Bun and the end seems to have been written separate, and to have been translated "the son of," by Syr. and Arab. The particles al and ál, have also been frequently mistaken on account of their nearly similar pronunciation.—Bauramite. Heb. habacharumi, 2 K. habarchumi, where two letters are transposed, and v is omitted, as usual, in the latter book. H.—The former reading appears to be more correct, as the hero probably came from Bahurim, (bérim, 2 K. 3:16) and the Syr. and Arab. seem to have read correctly.—Salabonite. Sept. Σαλαβωνιτης (2 K.) Σαλαβωνι. Ken.—The translator of the latter book gives the Hebrew termination throughout, instead of the Greek; (H.) "whence the learned have drawn an unanswerable argument against that version's being the work of the same author." Ken.—They might as well prove that S. Jerom did not translate both these books. H.

Ver. 33. Gezonite. We know not the meaning of this epithet. C.—In 2 K. we read of the sons of Jassen, Jonathan, and Semma; (K.) but both seem to be incorrect; instead of Sept. "the son," or supposing m to be lost, at the beginning, "of the sons of Assem, Gouni," as Sept. read, instead of Genonite, which would leave this hero without any name. See C. 5:15. E is prefixed to this name, as it is to that of Manasses. Jos. 1:12.—Sage, should be Shamha, (Ken.) or Jonathan, the son of Samaa, the brother of David. He slew the monstrous giant, (C. 20:7) as Sabachai did another. Jonathan is mentioned also along with Asahel (2 K. 21) so that he deserves a place here among David's heroes.

Ver. 34. Sachar, mentioned C. 26:4.

Ver. 35. Eliphal should be Eliphelet, the son of Aasgai, the son of Machati, (H.) or of the country of Maacha, 4 K. 25:23. Ken.—Eliphal and Hepher cannot constitute two heroes, as that would derange the number 37. 2 K. 23:39. The copies of the Sept. vary much. H.

Ver. 36. Ahia, or rather "Eliam, the son of Achitophel, the Gilonite," 2 K. The name of the hero is lost here; and the latter part of his father's name (p) has also been mistaken for g, which it resembles.

Ver. 37. Hesro ends with u in the Heb. Yet some read more properly with i, "Hetzrai," as all the ancient versions have it, except the Vulg. (Ken.) some copies of which read Asra. Blanchini, Vind. 1740.—Carmelite. Sept. καρμηδι. The Δ might easily be mistaken for Λ, as the Greek bibles (Ken.) for some ages after Origen were written in capital letters, without accents. Montfaucon, Pref. to Hexap. p. 44.—Azbai seems preferable to Arbi, as the proper name seems also more correct than Pharai. 2 K. H.—The Vat. Sept. confounds both words in one "Ouraiverchi." We may apply to many of the proper names that severe censure which S. Jerom has passed upon the transcribers of the book of Chronicles. Ita in Græcis & Latinis cod: hic nominum liber vitiosus est, ut non tam Hebræa quam Barbara quædam & Sarmatica nomina conjecta arbitrandum eit, &c. ep. ad Domn. If this epistle be not genuine, the same doctor complains at least of the incorrect state of the Sept. Pref. in Paral.

Ver. 38. Joel seems better than Igaal, (2 K. H.) as we know there were some of this name under David, (C. 26:22 and 27:20) and all the versions agree here, but vary much 2 K. It is, therefore, more natural for us to adhere to that copy which has the greatest authority from the ancient versions. Ken.—Brother, relation, adopted child, (D.) or son, (2 K.) which seems more correct, as this is an usual expression. C.—This reason may rather lead us to conclude that the mistake being more natural, has been made by the transcriber of that book; particularly as we no where else read of Joel being the son of Nathan, but rather of Pedaiiah, &c.—Mibahar, or rather "Nathan of Tzoba."—The son, ought to be the proper name, "Bonni, (of Gadi. 2 K.) or the Gadite." Ken.

Ver. 41. Zabad. This name, with the following, is not found 2 K. where Elica occurs, though not mentioned here. C.—We have observed that Zabad took his place, and completed the number 37, v. 27.

Ver. 42. With him. Heb. “above him,” (Sept. Jun. Mont.) which must be applied to the rest of these 15 less valiant men. Ken.—Prot. agree with the Vulg. (H.) and Delany looks upon these 30 as a forth order of commanders in chief. But 30 with him would take 31, and why are only 15 mentioned? We have a regular gradation of officers, descending from Joab, the captain general. Ken.—These heroes are supplementary to those in the Book of Kings, and were stationed (C.) on the east of the Jordan, (D.) in their native country; (C.) which is true, at least (H.) with respect to several of them. Maacha, Aashtaroth, and Aroer were in these parts, (Jos. 13:9, 13. Ken.) as well as Mathana. Num. 21:18. C.

Ver. 44. Jehiel. The Masorets read so in the margin; but in the text they substitute u for i, improperly. See Sept. and C. 5:7, 8.

Ver. 45. Samri. Prot. “Shimri,” or margin, “the Shimrite,” as they deem the expression to be equivalent. But Shimri was rather the father of Jedihel or Jediael, and Joha.

Ver. 46. Mahumite. Prot. “Mahavite.” Kennicott would translate these last verses according to his corrections. 42 ... “Zabad, the son of Ahlai; (43) Adina, the son of Shiza, the Reubenite, and head of the Reubenites: But the thirty were his superiors. 44 Hanan, the son of Maacha; and Josaphat, the Mithnite. 45 Urzia, the Ashtarothite; Shema and Jehiel, the sons of Hotham, the Aroerite. 46 Jediel, the son of Shimri; and Joha, his brother, the Titzite. 47 Jeliel and Mahavite, and Jeribai and Joshaviah, the sons of Elnaam; and Ithmah, the Moabite; (48) Eliel, and Obed and Jashiel, the Metzobaites.” It will be easily perceived that this author frequently recedes from the Prot. version, as well as from the printed Heb. both of which are frequently erroneous. Perhaps the critical examination of these proper names, may appear to some unimportant. But the question respecting the perfect integrity of the Hebrew text deserves to be seriously considered; and every part of sacred history requires our attention. If the Prot. rule of faith be incorrect, what security can they have? We are not exposed to the same inconvenience, even though the Vulgate be susceptible of farther improvement. H.

1 PARALIPOMENON 12

Ver. 1. Siceleg, which had been given to David for a retreat. Hither many brave men came to join him.—Fled. Heb. “was shut up through fear.” C.—Sept. “was under anxiety.” H.

Ver. 2. Hand, like Aod. Judg. 3:15. M.—Brethren, of the same tribe. The opinion which they entertained of David, must have been very great, to make them expose themselves to such dangers. In adversity, true friendship and virtue shine the most. C.—The hand of providence is here conspicuous. T.

Ver. 4. Thirty. Heb. sheloshim, denotes “the officers” of the army. C.—Prot. style this hero “Ismaiah.”

Ver. 6. Jesbaam. Probably the second after Joab. C. 11:11. H.—Of Carehim. Heb. “the Korhites.” Ken.—So also the Sept. There were Levites, descendants of Core. M.

Ver. 8. Gaddi, a city of the tribe of Gad, (2 K. 23) from which many went to join David, when he was in the country of Moab, (M.) as others of the Gadites did, v. 14.—Mountains. A fierce countenance and swiftness were much commended in soldiers. “The eyes are always first conquered.” Primi in omnibus praeliis oculi vincuntur, says Tacitus, Mor. Germ. C. See Prov. 30:30, 2 K. 2:18. M.

Ver. 14. Thousand, after David had ascended the throne. C.—At Siceleg he had only 600. M.—Some suppose that each of these officers was worth 100 men, &c. Vatab.

Ver. 15. Month, Nisan. T.—Banks. This circumstance enhances their courage. Maundrel (Alep. p. 136) went to see the Jordan, 13th March, 1697, but the river was nine feet from the banks. Its rapidity has perhaps made its bed so much deeper, that it does not overflow so frequently at present. C.

Ver. 16. Hold, in Moab, (1 K. 22:4. D. M.) or to Siceleg. The people of Benjamin come with those of Juda, to avoid suspicion. C.

Ver. 17. Hands. At that time he had done no injury to any man. H.

Ver. 18. Spirit of God (C. or good will. D.) prompted Amasai, the chief of “the officers.” C.—Band, or “of a company.” H.

Ver. 19. Fight. They joined him after he had left the Philistines. C.—But he. Heb. “they helped them not.” Neither David nor his partizans were involved in this danger, which might have caused their fidelity to be suspected. 1 K. 29. H.

Ver. 20. Thousands: heads of the principal cities. Mic. 5:2. D.

Ver. 21. Rovers of Amalec, 1 K. 30:1.

Ver. 22. Of God; very great, (C.) particularly when Isboseth was slain 2 K. 5:1. H.—The angels are to us innumerable, Job 25. An army in concord is compared to them. W.

Ver. 27. Joiada had the post of Eleazar over the Levites, (Num. 3:32) and was at the head of the warriors of his tribe, while Abiathar was high priest. C.

Ver. 28. Of excellent. Heb. “of great valour.” Saul had appointed him in the place of Achimelec, and David permitted him to retain his dignity.

Ver. 29. Followed. Heb. “kept guard at the palace.” These guards submitted to David, like the rest, after the death of Isboseth. C.

Ver. 31. Manasses, west of the Jordan. See v. 37. H.

Ver. 32. Should, in agricultural pursuits, in which those of Issachar excelled. Gen. 49:14. Countrymen have often more skill about the weather, than the greatest astronomers, Virg. Georg. i. M. T.—Others think that these men could calculate when the festivals would occur, (S. Jer. Trad.) or they were well versed in politics, &c. See Est. 1:13.

Ver. 40. Nephthali. All, both far and near, contributed to regale the deputies. C.

1 PARALIPOMENON 13

Ver. 1. Consulted. David wished to give religion due splendour and authority, in his dominions; and he prudently contrives to obtain the general consent. H.—“Where there is no liberty, there is no religion;” and no change in religious matters should be attempted, without the consent of the Church. C.

Ver. 2. To us. In the first assembly, David’s motion was adopted, and a more general meeting, particularly of the priests, was convoked. H.

Ver. 3. Sought. Prot. “inquired not at it.” Yet it is certain that many resorted to the ark, at that time. But it was not treated with such honours as David now wished. H.

Ver. 5. Emath, from “the troubled river” Nile, (Jos. 13:3. C.) or Rhinocorura, (T. M.) to the northern extremities of the promised land, (H.) near Emesa.

Ver. 6. Hill. Heb. “to Baalah,” which was another name, as well as “Baslim,” for Cariathiarim. 1 K. 7:2. C.

Ver. 7. Brother. Heb. “Acho,” which has the same meaning. T.—Sept. Syr. &c. “his brethren.” C.

Ver. 9. Chidon. Alias, Nachon. Ch. 2 K. 6.—He had perhaps two names. D.—Syr. and Arab. “of Ramim.” C.—The ox. Prot. “the oxen stumbled.”

Ver. 11. Divided. Slain. See C. 14:11, 1 K. 15:32 and 2 K. 6:7. H.—The soul of brutes perishes; that of man is only divided from the body by death.

Ver. 13. Obededom. A Levite was judged more proper to guard the ark. C. 15:18.—Gethite. Because he had dwelt in Geth. W.

1 PARALIPOMENON 14

Ver. 1. Hiram. This embassy, and the war with the Philistines, took place before the ark was removed. C.

Ver. 2. Perceived, by divine revelation, or by his constant success, (M.) as well as by the presents of “the king of Tyre, and the unanimity” of all the people. D.—Over his. Heb. and Sept. on account of his people. Kings are more for their subjects than for themselves. C.

Ver. 5. Eliphalet and Noga are not mentioned. 2 K. 6:15. C. See C. 3:9. H.

Ver. 7. Baaliada, probably the same with Eliada. C.

Ver. 8. Seek him, with a design to oppress him, before his throne was established. H.

Ver. 11. Baalpharasim, “the god or master of divisions.” C.—The place was so called afterwards. D.

Ver. 12. Burnt, conformably to Deut. 7:25. These idols were commonly made of wood, and covered with plates of gold, &c. The Philistines took them along with them to battle, as the Hebrews carried the ark on many occasions. The Greeks, at the siege of Troy, had their gods on board their vessels; (Iliad ix.) and the Romans had theirs on their ensigns, in their wars.

Ver. 14. Pear or mulberry trees, (2 K. 5:23. C.) on the side where the idols were. T.

Ver. 15. Tops, or on the height. God sent an invisible army to David's assistance.

Ver. 16. Gazera, on the borders of the Philistines, near Azotus. C.

Ver. 17. All countries and nations, in the vicinity. H.

1 PARALIPOMENON 15

Ver. 1. Houses, or magnificent palaces, which afterwards caused him to be ashamed, seeing the ark was lodged under skins. 2 K. 7:10.—For it, entirely new. The old tabernacle was left at Gabaon. C. D.

Ver. 2. Levites, of the family of Caath, v. 13, Num. 4:5. He was rendered more cautious by the death of Oza. C.—For ever, as long as this law subsists. H.

Ver. 5. Brethren. Relations. D.

Ver. 8. Elisaphan, a Caathite, (Ex. 6:18, 22) as well as Hebron and Oziel. C.—Perhaps Caath was also called by the first name. D.

Ver. 12. Sanctified. Free from every legal uncleanness, continent, and washed. C.

Ver. 13. Struck us. He partakes in the misfortune of Oza. H.—The law through ignorance. You must attend and give proper directions. M.—Heb. "because we did not seek him with judgment," (D.) or, "after the due order." Prot.

Ver. 17. Heman, Asaph, and Ethan were masters of the first band of musicians, in the reign of David. They played on the cymbals of brass, v. 19.

Ver. 18. Ben. His name is omitted, v. 20, and in the Sept. The Syriac, &c. have "the son of Jaziel:" but we find the 9th Psalm addressed "to Ben, chief of the hand of young women," who sung and played on nables, v. 20. C.—And Jaziel, called Oziel, v. 20, as the Sept. have here. H.

Ver. 20. Zacharias, &c. presided over the second band, with nables, and Mathathias over the third, which had instruments of eight strings. The priests sounded the trumpets, (v. 24.) which Chonenias directed all the music, in this solemn processions. C.—Psalteries. Lit. “nables.” H.—The Vulg. sometimes renders it psalterion, at other times lyra, (M.) or symphonia. S. Jer. ad Dard. T.—Some have supposed that the word denotes bagpipes; but it was a stringed instrument made of wood. C.—Heb. “with nebalim over halamoth,” concerted things, or virgins, (Ps. 67:26) who sung the mysterious words of God. H.

Ver. 21. Ozaziu does not occur before. Sept. have Ozias both here and v. 18, after Jehiel. H.—Of victory, such as was customary on the like occasions.—For the octave. Heb. hasheminith, according to the Jews, means an instrument of eight strings; so when ten is mentioned, the Sept. frequently supply “strings.” Ps. 32:2. M.—Heb. “they had guitars, and presided over the eighth band to intone. All the bands formed four choirs, distinguished by their instruments, the cymbal, nable, cinnor, (or guitar) and trumpets. C.

Ver. 22. The prophecy. Singing praises to God is here called prophecy: the more, because these singers were often inspired men. Ch.—Heb. Massa signifies a song, (H.) elevation, (C.) burden. Syr. So the Vulg. has onus Moab, &c. the burden or dreadful prediction against Moab. C.—Prophecy often denotes no more than a melodious canticle. 1 K. 10:10. H.—Chonenias directed all this music. Sept. simply style him “prince of the Levites, prince of the musicians” (C.) or ἀρχὼν τῶν ᾠδῶν (who gave out the songs) “because he was intelligent.” H.

Ver. 24. Jehias is called Jehiel, v. 18 and 21. He, Obededom, Barachias, and Elcana, (v. 23.) were probably the four chief porters who attended the ark in arms; and others were, afterwards, stationed at the temple. C. 9:17. The two former took part also in the music, v. 21. C.—Perhaps two preceded and two went behind the ark, to keep off the crowd. M.

Ver. 26. Rams, in thanksgiving, that they had not been treated like Oza. C.—The Jews pretend that the ark was no burden to the Levites. T.—Love makes all duties easy. H.

Ver. 27. Linen. Heb. “a cloak of byssus,” or of the finest white linen. D.—Byssus has often occurred before in the Vulg. but we find the Heb. buts, here for the first time. It probably denotes the brilliant yellow silk taken from the fish pinna, of which S. Basil speaks. Hexa. vii.

Justinian was clothed with it, on account of its rarity and brightness. Procop. de fabric. Yet as it would hardly assume any colour but black, it was not so much sought after as the silk of Persia. Not only David, but all the Levites, were thus richly adorned; as the latter were at the dedication of the temple. 2 Par. 2:14. There was a manufactory of this byssus established by David. C. 4:21. That of Egypt was white, and is called schesch, or “cotton.” Ex. 16:4. C.—Ephod. Sept. “a stole of byssus,” or a long silken robe, (H.) which has been already expressed; (T.) or rather, the ephod was only a girdle, which was not peculiar to the sacred ministers. 1 K. 2:18. C.—Samuel, though a child, wore one. W.

Ver. 29. Heart, and reproached him for appearing without his regal ornaments, (H. 2 K. 6:20) as if he had been naked. No reproach could have been more unfounded, as we see David had on a robe of byssus, with the ephod. C.

Ver. 2. Lord, wishing them all felicity, and making them presents, like the master of a family, v. 43, and 2 K. 6:18. C.—Any superior may bless. W.

Ver. 3. Oil. The precise signification of the Heb. Ashisha, is not known. C.—Prot. “a flagon of wine.” H.—It denotes any thing “exhilarating.” T. D.

Ver. 4. Appointed, as a prophet, (H.) or by dispensation. The high priest has supreme spiritual power. Deut. 17:18. &c. W.

Ver. 5. Zacharias, at the head of the second band. These played on the nable and kinnor, as the women did not sing in the tabernacle. Jahiel should be Oziel, (C. 15:18, &c. C.) unless he be the same person. C. 15:18. H.—Instruments. Lit. “organs.” H.—Heb. “the instruments of nables.” Vat. M.

Ver. 6. Jaziel. We read Eliezer, &c. C. 15:24.—Continually. At the appointed times.

Ver. 7. Made. Heb. “gave first, to thank the Lord, into the hand of Asaph and his brethren this psalm,” (H.) in order the 104th; and from v. 23 we find the 95th in the Psalter, with some improvements. T.

Ver. 11. Power. The ark was frequently the instrument of God’s power; and his people are exhorted to present themselves to pray before it. C.—God seemed to dwell there, and often displayed his wonders. D.

Ver. 13. Israel. In Ps. 104. Abraham.

Ver. 22. Prophets. The ancient patriarchs ruled their families as kings, and directed them by word and example, like the most holy prophets. C.—Both are frequently styled anointed. H.

Ver. 27. Place. In Ps. 95:6. holiness and majesty in his sanctuary. Heb. “strength and beauty in,” &c. God is served in his tabernacle with piety.

Ver. 29. Sacrifice, of flour and wine.—Beauty. Heb. “in the beauty of his sanctuary.” Ps. Come into his courts: adore ye the Lord in his holy court.

Ver. 30. Presence. Here the psalm adds, say ye among, as v. 31.

Ver. 35. And say, &c. is not in the psalm; and it seems not to agree with the flourishing state of David’s kingdom: yet he might speak with the spirit of prophecy, or with that all his subjects might live in happiness and concord under him. C.—Others think that Esdras inserted these verses to be sung in the second temple, (Lyran. E.) when many still remained in captivity. Yet them may refer to the time of Christ. D.

Ver. 36. And sing. Heb. “and Alleluia,” or, “all ... said, (or shall say) truth and praise be to the Lord.”

Ver. 39. Sadoc was to minister at Gabaon, with Heman, Idithun, &c. while Abiathar, Asaph, &c. officiated at Jerusalem. C.—This regulation continued till towards the end of David’s reign, (H.) when fresh orders were given. C. 23. &c. We find Abiathar and Sadoc were both at Jerusalem, when David was obliged to flee. 2 K. 15:24 and 3 K. 1:7. The altar at Gabaon continued some time longer. 3 K. 3:3.

Ver. 43. Bless, or feast, (D.) with his family, on part of the sacred victims. H.

Ver. 1. Cedar. Such were esteemed the most magnificent, v. 6. See 2 K. 7.

Ver. 9. A place permanent and secure, while I have had no fixed abode. C.—No more, for a long time: and unless they provoke me by their crimes, as they did afterwards, and were exposed to more severe chastisements. Constant rest is not always expedient. T.

Ver. 11. Seed, even till Christ shall be born of the Blessed Virgin, of the family of David.

Ver. 12. Ever often means only a long duration. The dominion of Christ shall have no end. C.—The Church founded by this true David, (H.) falls heir to these promises. D.

Ver. 13. Thee. The posterity of Saul lost the throne. H.—If Solomon was reprobated, his children were permitted to reign. It is also presumed that he did penance; though this is not certain.

Ver. 17. Men. Who was ever more favoured by God than David? Heb. “Thou hast regarded me according to the estate of a man of high degree.” Prot. H.

Ver. 18. Known him. Treating him with love and tenderness, as a friend. How can David sufficiently testify his gratitude?

Ver. 21. Himself. Heb. adds, “and to make thee a name.”

Ver. 27. Begun. Heb. “be pleased, (H.) or thou hast had the goodness to bless.” Syr. “I pray thee bless.”

1 PARALIPOMENON 18

Ver. 1. Daughters. Villages (See 2 K. 8:1. M.) and dependant towns. W.

Ver. 2. Gifts. Heb. mincha, a word used to denote the offerings of bread, &c. Lev. 2. Here it signifies the tribute (C.) imposed on the conquered. H.

Ver. 3. Adarezer, or Adadezer, 2 K.—When he, the king of Soba, went to extend. Heb. “to strengthened his hand on the,” &c.—Hand often denotes power, extent, possession.

Ver. 4. Footmen. Heb. may well signify, “1000 chariot-horses and 7000 men who mounted the chariots and the horses.” We only find 1700 horsemen. 2 K. 8:4. But soon after it is added, David houghed all the chariot-horses. C.—They were thus rendered useless. The king was forbidden to keep many horses. D.

Ver. 5. Damascus. Heb. "Aram of Darmesek." Elsewhere the r is omitted.

Ver. 6. A garrison. Lit. "soldiers." This word has been lost by the neglect of some Heb. transcriber. C.—Prot. supply it. H.

Ver. 7. Quivers. Heb. "the shields," &c. The term is variously translated, 2 K.

Ver. 8. Chun, called probably Betath, and Berothai. 2 K.

Ver. 10. Adoram, or Joram, ib.—Desire. Heb. "to ask if all went well with him, and to bless him."

Ver. 11. Edom, or rather Syria, (Aram) which might easily be exchanged for Edom. 2 K. 8. David could not satisfy his devotion by building a temple; but he made preparations. Solomon left part of the treasures unconsumed, 1 Par. 26:26. C.—These effects, being destined for sacred uses, are said to be consecrated to the Lord. W.

Ver. 12. Edomites. David seems to have been present, and the victory is sometimes attributed to him. Joab afterwards slew 18,000. 3 K. 11:15 title of Ps. 9. S. Jer. Trad. C.—Pits. This place was fatal to that nation: there Amasias destroyed 20,000, 2 Par. 25:12. T.

Ver. 16. Abiathar and Achimelech had both names indifferently. Heb. reads Abimelech, which is a manifest mistake. The name of Abiathar perhaps ought to be in the place of Achimelech; as we know that he was the son of the latter, and the high priest under David. Some would translate, "and Abiathar, son of Achimelech."—Susa, or Saraïas, secretary.

Ver. 17. About. Lit. "at the hand of the king," to execute his orders, and to assist him. Sept. "vicegerents." Syr. "princes." They are styled priests. 2 K. 8:18.

1 PARALIPOMENON 19

Ver. 3. Land, or city, 2 K. 10:3. C.—What evils proceed from evil counsellors!

Ver. 4. From. Heb. "in the midst, above the thighs:" exposing them to derision. H.

Ver. 6. Done. Heb. "made themselves stinking." Sept. "that the people of David were covered with confusion.” The insult fell on all Israel.—Mesopotamia is not mentioned 2 K. as the troops perhaps did not arrive soon enough for the first battle, v. 16.

Ver. 7. Chariots. This number seems excessive, and it may have been put for infantry; the number of which, specified 2 K. was 33,000. But the troops of Mesopotamia are not there mentioned, and this supplies what was left defective. C.—The chariots may signify those who fought upon them, (M.) v. 18, Isai. 21:7. T.—Sometimes the whole number is specified; at others only a part.

Ver. 16. River, in Mesopotamia. Joab did not allow them time to arrive.—Sophach, or Sobac. Adarezer sent also to collect these forces. 2 K.

Ver. 18. Chariots. Lit. “chariot.” 2 K. has only 700, and 40,000 horsemen. C.—Ten men might be in each chariot. D.

Ver. 19. Went. Heb. “made peace with David.” The many petty kings who had hitherto been tributary to Adarezer, submitted now to the conqueror. C.

1 PARALIPOMENON 20

Ver. 1. Year. Heb. “at the return of the year,” in spring. C.

Ver. 2. Melchom. Sept. add the explanation, “their king.” It may also be referred to the idol of Ammon. H.—The massy crown was suspended over David’s head. T. D.

Ver. 3. Harrows. Heb. “cut them with saws, and with harrows; (H.) or, rollers of iron, and with saws.” But some other term was probably used, as we find saws before. C.—Prot. have “axes.” This exemplary punishment was in consequence of the violation of the law of nations. Abulensis pronounced it lawful. Tirin accuses David of a grievous sin of cruelty; observing that he was at this time involved in the sin of adultery: and people easily fall from one abyss into another. Cruelty and lust often go together. Yet it seems best to suspend our judgment. H.—David might only treat the most guilty in this manner. D.

Ver. 4. Gazer, which seems preferable to Gob. 2 K. 21:18.

Ver. 5. Adeodatus. Heb. “Elchanan, the son of Jair, of Lehem;” or, “slew Lechemi, brother of Goliath;” or equal to him in strength. C.—

Brother is here supplied, as it is wanting. 2 K. D.

Ver. 7. Rapha, head of the giants of Palestine. C.

1 PARALIPOMENON 21

Ver. 1. Satan. This shews that the Lord only (H.) permitted David's sin, (2 K. 24. W.) and in this sense only he is said to have instigated him; (D.) though we read this was done by the fury of the Lord, or by an evil spirit. H.

Ver. 3. Israel, who will be severely punished. C.—Sin is often used in this sense. Vatable.

Ver. 5. The number, &c. The difference of the numbers here and 2 K. 24:9 is to be accounted for, by supposing the greater number to be that which was really found, and the lesser to be that which Joab gave in; (Ch.) or the transcribers of this place have been inaccurate. C.

Ver. 6. Number. These might therefore escape the pestilence. D.—For. Heb. "because the king's word was abominable to Joab." We read that Benjamin was numbered unto David. C. 7:5, 11. But that might be on another occasion; or the register continued in the archives, and was not brought to the king. See C. 27:24. C.

Ver. 8. Iniquity. David was guilty, though he retained both faith and hope. W.

Ver. 9. Seer, or prophet, whom David kept at court and consulted. He was endued himself with the prophetic spirit.

Ver. 10. Three; a word omitted in Heb. but supplied by the Prot. H. —"I will bring three things upon thee." Sept.

Ver. 12. Three years' famine; which joined with the three foregoing years of famine, mentioned 2 K. 21 and the seventh year of the land's resting, would make up the seven years proposed by the prophet. 2 K. 24:13. Ch.—Perhaps it would be as well to acknowledge a mistake, (2 K. H.) on account of the similitude of the Hebrew words signifying three and seven: (T.) unless the prophet reduced the time from seven to three years; as in Ezechiel (4:15.) God mitigates the severity of his first threat. Sanctius.

Ver. 13. Men. Susanna spoke on a different supposition, (Dan. 13:23, Eccli. 2:22) of eternal punishment, in consequence of sin. David prefers to be punished by the hand of a tender father, rather than that of an enemy; (T. E.) and he does not wish to screen himself from suffering in this world, but offers himself to share in the chastisement of his subjects. H.

Ver. 15. Took. Heb. “repented of evil,” taking pity of unhappy victims.—Ornan, or Areuna. Ch.—He had been king of the Jebusites before David took Jerusalem. Mariana. T.

Ver. 18. Altar. Hence it appears that holy men erected altars by God’s command. D.

Ver. 20. Now. Heb. “and Oranan turned back.”—Angel. Sept. (Vat.) “the king and his four sons with him, along with Achabin.” Other editions have, “and his four sons hidden with him.” Arab. “and the king, being come near to Aran, he saw David and his,” &c. Syr. reads in like manner; but says nothing of the children either of David or of Ornan. We do not read that Ornan saw the angel, 2 K. but this circumstance may be here supplied. It is evident the Sept. have read melec, “king,” instead of malac, “angel.” C.—Eupolemus says the angel Dianathan shewed David were to build the temple. Eus. Præp. ix. 30.

Ver. 22. Worth. Heb. “give it me for the full price,” or “worth.” Sept. “the money was weighed.”

Ver. 25. Six hundred sicles, &c. This was the price of the whole place on which the temple was afterwards built: but the price of the oxen was fifty sicles of silver. 2 K. 24:24. Ch.—Or the fifty sicles were given for the threshing-floor alone. C. D.

Ver. 26. Fire, to testify his approbation. (W. T.) See Gen. 4:4, 2 Par. 7:1. C.—This altar represented the cross, on which the Victim of our reconciliation was offered. D.

Ver. 30. God. He performed what God had commanded. But he would have offered other voluntary victims at Gabaon, if he had been able. C.—The distance shewed the propriety of building the temple at Jerusalem, (D.) which was nearly in the centre of the country. H.

Ver. 1. The house. Or the place where the temple shall be built. M.—The miraculous fire convinced David that God had made choice of this spot.

Ver. 2. Proselytes. This is the first time that the word occurs in the Vulg. See Ex. 12:45. It means “strangers,” (C.) who were not allowed to live in the country, unless they would observe the natural law, and renounce idolatry. Rabbins.—These had embraced the Jewish religion. M.—They were the remnants of the people of Chanaan, (3 K. 9:20,) and were treated as public slaves, which could not have been done, with justice or policy, with regard to those who might barely wish to reside in the country. These strangers prefigured the Gentiles, chosen to build the Christian Church.

Ver. 3. Prepared. Syr. and Arab. “appointed blacksmiths from among the proselytes, to forge tools for cutting and dressing stone, &c.” But most follow the Vulg. C.—Closures is explained by the following word, which alone occurs in Heb. &c.—Immense. Heb. and Sept. “abundance, it was not weighed.” H.

Ver. 4. Number. Still we find that Solomon ordered more, as the structure was more magnificent than even David had imagined.

Ver. 6. Tender, (delicatus) weak and unexperienced. C.—Yet he might be 21 when he was crowned. T.—David began his preparations long before.—Lord. Heb. “must be (H.) for grandeur, excellence, fame, and beauty, through all countries” a sort of prodigy.—All. Heb. “abundantly.”

Ver. 8. Blood, of Urias, (S. Jer. and the Rab.) or rather, as David had already entertained the desire of building a temple before that event, (E.) the blood which David had shed in just wars, must be understood; as even that causes a person to be regarded as unclean. The soldiers were obliged to be purified before they could enter the camp. Num. 31:19. In the Christian Church, those are deemed irregular who have contributed to the death of the guilty, even as judges or witnesses. The Pagans entertained the like sentiments. C. Æneas dares not touch the sacred vessels and household gods, when he was stained with blood, shed in his country’s defence.

*Tu, genitor, cape sacra manu, patriosque penates
Me bello è tanto digressum et cæde recenti Attrectare nefas.* Æneid ii.

—So. Heb. “much blood in my sight.” H.—This expression enhances (D.) the greatness of the bloodshed; as when a person is said to be wicked, &c. before the Lord, it means in an extraordinary degree. The wars of David are frequently assigned as the impediment to David’s building the temple, C. 17:4 and 28:3. Joseph. &c. C.—They would not suffer him to have sufficient leisure, v. 18. (H.) 3 K. 5:3. Salien.

M.

Ver. 9. Peaceable. Heb. "Solomon," which has this meaning. C.—Herein Solomon was a figure of Christ, who is styled the Prince of peace. Isai. 9. W.

Ver. 10. Name. See 2 K. 7:13. M.—A son. The crimes into which Solomon fell, hinder us from explaining this literally of him. S. Paul refers the expression to Jesus Christ. Heb. 1:5. C.—S. Aug. (de C. xvii. 8 and 9.) observes that the promises were not perfectly fulfilled in Solomon.

Ver. 12. Understanding, (sensum.) Skill to resolve difficult questions. M.—That. Heb. "and appoint thee to rule." H.

Ver. 14. Poverty. Prot. "trouble." H.—David confesses that the immense sums which he had collected, were nothing in comparison with the greatness of God. He left more than was sufficient for Solomon to perfect the work, with still greater magnificence than he had planned out, v. 5. C. 28:2 and 29:2. &c. C.—Million. Josephus (vii. 14) reduces these sums to one tenth part, "of gold 10,000 talents, of silver 100,000;" so that it is "extremely probable that a cipher" was added to these numbers, in some very ancient Heb. copy. Brerewood computes that the sum mentioned here and C. 29:4, would amount to 841,125,000*l.* and maintains that the whole temple pavement, and all the vessels, might have been made of solid gold, without consuming it all. De pond, in Walton's Polyglot.—"If we take the preceding talents according to bishop Cumberland's computation, the sum total will be somewhat less: but, were we to reduce it to less than one-half, would not the sum of four hundred millions of money be immense and incredible?" Kennicott.—A learned Jew has written this marginal note in his Bible, 1661: "It is supposed, these talents are not to be reckoned like the Mosaic, for they would amount to 720 millions. But as the Scripture makes no difference, we have no other computation to go by." See Ken. diss. ii. If they were the same, the sum would exceed belief. Some have thought that they were only half. Mariana supposes the talents were only the weight of sicles, or four drachms; so that David left one million for the fabric. D.—But the relation given by historians of the riches of Sardanapalus, Cyrus, Alexander, Atabalipa, and some kings, who were not more likely to amass such treasures than David, make the account less improbable. Josephus (7:12) asserts, that "no prince ever left so great riches." He had extended his dominions on all sides, and imposed tribute on the conquered. He was very frugal, and had possession of the mines of Phunon, (Num. 21:10 and 33:43) and of Phœnicia. Deut. 33:25. Though the talent seems to have varied in other nations, it always consisted of 3000 sicles among the Hebrews, at least till the captivity. Ex. 38:25, 26. We find from 2 Par. 25:6, 4 K. 15:19. &c. that it formed a very considerable sum. Yet Villalpand calculates that all the gold and silver left by David, would be requisite for the ornaments and vessels of the temple. If, however, we grant that it would have sufficed to build a massive temple of gold, how much must be deducted to pay the workmen? &c. C. Diss. on the riches left by David, t. ii.—For all. Heb. Chal. Sept. “And to these add.” T.—He encouraged the princes to contribute; (C. 29) and here he exhorts his son to shew his liberality, if any thing should be found deficient. H.

Ver. 18. Saying is not expressed in Heb. “Is not the Lord,” &c.—And hath. Heb. “for he hath given the inhabitants of the land into my hand,” or power. H.—Almost all the neighbouring nations were subjected to David. C.—The Lord, who assisted his people, and filled the enemy with terror. M.

Ver. 19. Is on the point of being built. David was convinced that the work would not be much longer retarded, so that he speaks of it as present. H.

1 PARALIPOMENON 23

Ver. 1. Full, satisfied, in the last year of his reign, and the 70th of his age. D.—Cur non ut plenus vitæ conviva recedit? Lucret. iii.—Israel. This example was much followed by succeeding kings. C.—Yet this is controverted. Houbigant. H.

Ver. 2. Princes, heads of families, or officers of the army. C. 25:1. M.

Ver. 3. Numbered at the same time, when David caused his son to be crowned, and made these fresh regulations, v. 27, and C. 26:31.—Upwards, according to the plan given by Moses. David afterwards ordered people of twenty years of age, to begin to serve in the tabernacle, as it was now fixed, and consequently the labours were diminished. This tended to augment the splendour of the religious worship, and to edify the people, who could not attend so constantly, in person.

Ver. 4. Overseers. Heb. shoterim. Sept. “scribes.” Others suppose “lictors and executioners,” who attended the judges. Grotius.—These were functions from which the priests were exempted; (C.) so that the Levites alone are meant. M.—Judges. They had to decide the causes of the people. 2 Par. 29. D.

Ver. 5. David. Lit. “he.” Sept. “they.” Prot. “which I made (said David) to praise therewith.” H.

Ver. 6. Into 24 courses, like the priests, that each class might serve twice a year for a whole week. C. 24:31. T.—God had already made choice of the posterity of Levi; and David, with the princes, Sadoc, &c. disposed of them by lots, (C. 24:6) to serve in the tabernacle, and in the future temple. W.

Ver. 7. Leedan, or Lebni. Num. 3:18. M.

Ver. 8. Chief, head of the rest; (H.) or all these three were chiefs, (Jun.) no less than the sons of Semei, v. 9.

Ver. 9. Semei; perhaps (C.) sons of Joel. D.—The brother of Leedan had four sons, v. 10. M.

Ver. 10. Ziza. Heb. has “Zina,” but reads “Ziza,” v. 11. C.

Ver. 11. Children. All together were not more than the children of each of the preceding, so that they only formed one class. T.—It would have been too burdensome for them to have performed the same service with those who were far more numerous: (H.) therefore the sons of Semei were joined with the family of Leedan: (C.) or rather Jaus and Baria went together, as one family.—Counted. Heb. “in one class, according to their father’s house.” H.

Ver. 13. Minister. Heb. “to sanctify the holy of holies.”—His. Heb. “in his name,” with solemnity. Num. 6:23. The Levites might bless the name of the Lord.

Ver. 14. Levi, but not among the priests, (C.) though their father was an extraordinary priest, appointed by God to anoint Aaron. Ps. 98. D.

Ver. 15. Eliezer. His being uncircumcised, had almost proved fatal to his father. Ex. 4:24. M.—First. He might have other brothers, (C.) though the title may be given to an only son, v. 17, Mat. 1:25. Subuel was perhaps (H.) chief of a family, (C.) and was appointed over the treasury. C. 26:24. M.

Ver. 24. Old. See v. 3, and Num. 4:3.—And upwards; as long as they were able to serve. They were excused from carrying the tabernacle, &c. at fifty years of age. Num. 8:25. Abulens. M.—To those who were turned of thirty, the higher offices were entrusted; while the Levites began at twenty, to exercise themselves in things of less consequence, under the direction of their elder brethren. T.—The kings might declare, by the advice of the Sanhedrim, what laws were of a temporary nature. Grot. D.

Ver. 25. Ever. They will not have to carry, the sacred vessels about, as formerly. H.—In order that they may not be idle, we must therefore provide them some other employment, v. 28, &c. T.

Ver. 28. Place. Heb. “purifying all that is holy;” (H.) keeping clean all that is used about the sacred ministry. C.

Ver. 29. And the priests, &c. This is not found in Heb. or Sept. The Levites might prepare these things; though the priests alone were to offer them in sacrifice. T. C. 9:32, Lev. 24:8.—Others think that (C.) the priests received flour from the people, and baked it. M.—But S. Jerom follows the tradition of the Jews, intimating that the priests sowed the corn, and did every thing about the loaves of proposition. In Mal. 1:6.—Flour. Lev. 2:1.—Cakes. Ex. 29:2.—Roasting the first-fruits. Lev. 2:14. M.—Measure. A standard was kept in the temple, (Ex. 30:13. C.) to prevent any fraud. The Ediles at Rome performed the same office. T.—There were not two measures in the country, as that would have caused confusion. D.

Ver. 30. And the Levites. This also is omitted in Heb. “and to stand,” &c. as all the preceding offices pertained to the Levites, (H.) and priests were bound equally with them to praise the Lord.

Ver. 31. Lord. Music accompanied this service twice a day, as it did the sacrifices which were offered for the prince, or for the nation. Num. 10:10. C.—Rest. Heb. “the set festivals, by number, according to the order prescribed unto them continually,” &c. H.

Ver. 32. Brethren. Let them follow the directions of the high priests, who are of the same tribe. M.

1 PARALIPOMENON 24

Ver. 2. Before. Heb. “in the presence of.” See Lev. 10:2.—Priesthood, under Aaron. Eleazar succeeded him, and the posterity of Ithamar obtained the dignity under Heli.

Ver. 3. Ahimelech is styled also Achimelech and Abiathar, v. 6, 21 and C. 18:16. C.—Courses, twenty-four, which were to serve by lot, that no one might complain, as they were equally princes, v. 5. Hence S.

Dionisius styles Zachary “prince of the priests.” But the pontiff was over all. T.

Ver. 4. Houses. The descendants of Eleazar were far more numerous.

Ver. 5. Of God, great. Elohim also signifies “judges,” and we might translate, “princes of the judges.” Grot. D.—These men occupied the first dignities of the priesthood, and of the judicature, or they were princes in all sacred affairs. C.—They were to offer sacrifice, and to enjoy spiritual jurisdiction, in the house of God. W.—As their claims were therefore equal, the decision was left to lots. M.—It would have been otherwise difficult for all to be satisfied. See Jos. 7:14. C.

Ver. 6. Ithamar. All was done with the utmost order, and the priests took care to observe the regulation, till the end of the republic. Joseph. vii. 2 and con. Ap. i and ii, Lu. 1:5.—The family of Eleazar had many prerogatives over the rest, as it was longer in possession of the high priesthood, and more numerous; but that of Ithamar, gave pontiffs to the nation at the time of this regulation. The Heb. is very obscure, and is deemed incorrect. Cap. Grot. C.—Prot. “one principal household being taken for Eleazar, and one taken for Ithamar.”—The insertion of “one,” which is in the Sept. removes the difficulty. H.—The two families were enregistered alternately, (M.) till the eight families of Ithamar were done. H.

Ver. 10. Abia, the progenitor of S. John Baptist. Lu. 1:5. Yet whether his father was “chief of the priests” of his course, as S. Dion. asserts, or whether he sprung from Eleazar, or from Ithamar, is uncertain. T.

Ver. 19. Aaron, and his successors. The former might have given some directions, which tradition had preserved. C.

Ver. 20. Subael, grandson of Moses. C. 23:16.

Ver. 21. Rohobia was in the same degree, by Eliezer. M.

Ver. 23. And his. Prot. “the sons of Hebron, Jeriah, the first.” The words underlined, shew what omissions are in the text, (H.) which is probably corrupted, as well as the Sept. Jeria and Amarias were sons of Hebron. C. 23:19 and 26:31. Jahath may, therefore, be the same with Hebron. C.

Ver. 26. The son. Heb. “the son of Jehasia, or of Oziau ...” But the name of this son is lost. It is wonderful that the posterity of Gersom are passed over. C.—Prot. “the sons of Jaaziah; Beno.—27. The sons of Merari, by Jaaziah; Beno, and Shoam.” H.—Sept. vary, and the original text is supposed to be changed by some transcriber, (Capel.

&c.) as we read only of Moholi and Musi, v. 26, and C. 23:21.

Ver. 31. Over-against, in imitation of the priests, (C.) being likewise divided into twenty-four classes. T.—Both, &c. Heb. “the principal fathers over-against their younger brethren.” All the rest is omitted. Lots decided the place and functions both of father and children. H.

1 PARALIPOMENON 25

Ver. 1. Army; the chief magistrates of the state and of the church. T. C. 24:6, 31.—The priests, &c. were all divided into twenty-four classes, each having twelve masters to preside, v. 7. C.—Idithun, or Ethan. C. 6:44 and 15:19. W. 3 K. 4:31.—The twenty-four sons of these three, who were chief musicians under David and Solomon, presided over the bands: eleven other inferior masters helped to instruct the rest, v. 9.—Prophecy, or play on instruments.—*Harp*s. “Kinnor” means also the “guitar.” C.—Vulg. has, lyras. C. 15:16.—Psalteries. Heb. “nebalim.” M.—The Jews pretend that the singers were inspired commonly, when they sounded forth God’s praises in the temple, as Eliseus was, 4 K. 3:15. Lyrans. E.—But they may be said to prophesy, because they sung the composition of the prophets. W.—According. Heb. “and the number of the workmen, (or experienced musicians) according to their service, was.” H.—The chiefs of the twenty-four bands were carefully selected.

Ver. 2. King, who sat in a separate tribune. Asaph presided in the royal city, at court, and in the tabernacle, while some of the singers were fixed at Gabaon. C. 16:7, 37 and 41. C.—Heb. may signify, “at the king’s command. Pagnin.—He sometimes condescended to direct the singers, v. 6. H.

Ver. 3. Of Idithun; or, altering the punctuation, (D.) “Now the sons of Idithun, the first-born, Godolias (H.) Sori, or Isari, v. 11. Thus, the number six, will be complete: otherwise we much acknowledge that Idithun, the father, is counted with his children; or that a name is lost, perhaps that of Semeias, (v. 17. C.) as Sept. Alex. has Semei before Hasabias. H.—Harp, (kinnor.) This was the distinctive instrument of this band, as the horn was of Heman’s. C.

Ver. 5. Seer; a title usually given to the real prophets, who foresee future things. M.—Gad has this title. 2 Par. 24:11. But Heman’s office was to proclaim the words of God, with the sound of the horn. This musician had formerly been fixed at Gabaon, C. 16:41. C.—To lift up the horn, or to sing those psalms, which regarded the kingdom of David, and of Christ, as others were composed for the instruction of the people. T.—Daughters. These are specified, only because they joined with their brethren, in singing in the temple. Abul. q. 14. M.—At least, we find that there were bands of young women, in the solemn procession. H. C. 15:20, Ps. 67:26. C.

Ver. 6. Near. Heb. “under the hand of the king,” who presided over a band of musicians, as well as Asaph; (C.) or he directed all, particularly giving his instructions to Asaph, &c.—To wit in not in Heb. “by the order of the king to Asaph.” H.

Ver. 7. Eight, comprising the twenty-four princes, and the eleven secondary masters of each of the bands, or twelve times twenty-four, v. 1.

Ver. 8. Unlearned. Heb. and Sept. “the scholars.” H.—After the singers had been distributed into twenty-four classes, pretty equal in number, lots decided which of them should serve first, (M.) as had been done with the priests. C. 24:31. See C. 26:13.

Ver. 9. Asaph. Add, “to him, and (H.) to his sons, and his brethren, twelve,” who taught the rest. Unless these twelve be admitted, (T.) as in the sequel, (H.) the number 288 will not be found, v. 7. T.—Sept. is very confused: “And the first (entire) lot of his sons and brethren came out to Asaph, of Joseph, Godolias: the second Enia, his brethren, and his sons, twelve.” Heb. “the first lot came forth for Asaph to Joseph; the second to,” &c. Prot. In all the subsequent verses they read, “he, his sons, and his brethren, were twelve.” Why Asaph should be mentioned any more than Idithun or Heman, does not appear. Their children are placed indiscriminately by lot. H.

Ver. 14. Isreela; probably Oziel, v. 4. C.

1 PARALIPOMENON 26

Ver. 1. Porters, who guarded the temple, being stationed at the four gates. They were selected from the families of Core and Merari, (v. 19.) and were under C. five captains, two being placed at the gate leading from the palace, v. 16. H.—How many were appointed to follow the directions of these officers, we do not find. But 4,000 porters are mentioned, C. 23:5. Some guarded the treasury, &c. After the captivity, the same plan was adopted, C. 9. C.—Son, or descendant of Core, by Asaph, (H.) or Abiasaph, (C. 6:37) different from the musician. C.

Ver. 5. Him. Obededom, by giving him a more numerous posterity, than any here mentioned, v. 8. See 2 K. 6:11. C. T.

Ver. 6. Semei, who is called Semeias, v. 4 and 7. The last syllable is not lost in Heb. or Sept. H.—Valour. Their post was of a military nature, and required strength. Josephus says, some of the gates could hardly be shut by twenty men.

Ver. 10. He had not a first-born. That is, his first-born was either dead or not fit to be chief, and therefore he made Semri the chief, (W. Ch.) who was the second son (T.) of Hosa. Heb. “for, or though he was not the first-born, yet his father made him chief.” Sept. add, “of the second division,” but without reason, as they interpret, “keeping the command,” instead of Semri, the chief, which leaves us without a proper name. H.

Ver. 12. Lord. The companies succeeded each other every sabbath, but the chiefs were not changed. C.—The office of these men was most noble. From them were selected treasurers, overseers, prefects, &c. v. 16–32. T.—The lot decided only between the heads of families. D.

Ver. 14. Selemias: the first syllable is frequently neglected in Heb. C. 4:24. T.—Zacharias was the first-born of Meselema, v. 2. H.—A very. Heb. “a wise counsellor.” C.

Ver. 15. And. Prot. “To Obededom southward, and to his sons, the house of Asupim.” H.—This term may denote the “revenue;” where the offerings, destined for the support of the priests, were collected. Ex. 34:22. We find the same word used for the offerings received at the door of the temple. 2 Esd. 12:15. It may also mean the house “of the assemblies,” (C.) where the 72 judges of the Sanhedrim met. Villalp. T.

Ver. 16. Which. Heb. Shalecheth, (C.) or ssolcoth, (H.) “which leads or casts out” the filth from the temple. Villalp. Isai. 6:13. M.—But there were conduits for that purpose; and the meaning of the Vulg. is more accurate. C.—The palace lay below the tabernacle and the temple, (T.) on the west. Joseph. 15:14. C.—Ward. The centinels where opposite to each other, (M.) or at equal distances. All were replaced at the same time. C.—Two captains were stationed on this road, for greater respect to the king, (H.) and because the concourse and dangers were increased, v. 18. T.

Ver. 17. Six. This gate was the most frequented, (C.) and the king entered by it.—Council. Heb. asupim, as v. 15, “for the offerings two and two,” (H.) distinct from the porters.

Ver. 18. Cell. Heb. is not clearer: “at the chamber” (C. ‘at the house of the instruments’ for sacrifice. (M.) at Parbar. Prot.) of the west, at the ascent, two at each chamber.” C.—Prot. “at the causey, and two at Parbar.” This term is not in Heb. It resembles Parvar, or Pharurim, (4 K. 23:11) which is said to signify “suburbs,” in Chal. But it cannot have this meaning here: and these terms are probably borrowed from the Greek, πορτοια, a military “post;” so that we might translate “There were at the western post, four guards for the ascent, two at each post:” one perhaps was near the temple, (C.) the other at the palace gates. 4 K. 11:6. Sept. is more diffuse, but throws no light upon this passage. H.

Ver. 20. Now. Heb. and Sept. add, “the Levites:” the latter translate Achias, “their brethren.” H.—Vessels. Or vessels of the holy places, or of things holy. Vasa sanctorum. Ch.—Sept. “of the consecrated treasures.” C. 28:12. H.

Ver. 21. Ledan is called Leedan, (C. 23:8) son of Gerson. His first-born was Jahiel. This person is here styled Jehieli, and was chief of the Gersonites; at least the eldest branch.

Ver. 22. Brethren. Heb. and Sept. “brother.” In effect, we find that Joel was the son of Leedan. C. 23.—Zathan, whose name ends in m both in Heb. and Sept. may perhaps be his grandson. We often find sons in Heb. when only one is specified. Jehieli might adopt his two brothers; so that none of his own children are mentioned. H.—We may also translate: “(21) These are the sons of Ledan, the Gersonite. Out of Ledan, the Gersonite, came chiefs of families: Jehiel, (22) the sons of Jehiel, Zathan and Joel, his (Jehiel’s) brethren, were over,” &c. It appears that Jehiel was treasurer. C. 29:8.

Ver. 23. Ozielites. These are all the sons of Caath. C. 6:18.

Ver. 24. Moses. Many are passed over; (C.) or Subael acted by his children. M.

Ver. 26. Selemith was to guard the treasure, taken in war. C.—Dedicated. Lit. “sanctified,” by designating for holy uses. W.

Ver. 27. Wars. Heb. “out of the spoils won in battles, which they had set apart as sacred, to support the house,” &c. Sept. “that the building of the house of the Lord might not be retarded.” H.—Yet these spoils remained untouched by Solomon, who imitated this piety, as others did. 3 K. 14:26. The Romans adored Jupiter Prædator, as he was styled, because part of the plunder was allotted to him. Serv. in Æn.

iii.

*Irruimus ferro et Divos ipsumque vocamus
In prædam partemque Jovem.*

People vied with each other in the munificence of their presents.
Cæsar, Bel. Gall. vi. C.

Ver. 28. Samuel, while he was at the head of affairs. M.—Joab.
Though these three were not very religious, they concurred in promoting the splendour of the public worship, as that would at least procure them applause. H.

Ver. 29. Them. Heb. “for officers (shoterim, “scribes,” (H.) whose power was very great. C.) and judges.” The former are often placed first, as more honourable, so that they were not mere heralds or executioners. The administration of justice was chiefly in the hands of the Levitical tribe. C. 23:4. The sons of Hebron resided on the east, while those of Isaar and Oziel probably acted as judges on the western side of the Jordan, v. 30. C.—They were not confined to the temple, but taught the people the law of Moses in the cities abroad. M.

Ver. 30. Beyond. Heb. meheber means, “at the passage, or on either side.” Prot. “on this side Jordan, westward.” This would seem to designate the countries nearer Jerusalem. H.—But westward may also be understood with reference to Ruben, &c. so as to mean the parts along the river.—King. To decide both ecclesiastical and civil causes.
C.—They also inspected the preparations for the temple, and gathered the king’s tribute. Grotius.

Ver. 31. Jazer, a city of Gad, in Galaad. Adric. M.

1 PARALIPOMENON 27

Ver. 1. Now. This list is entirely of a political nature. It seems to have been made before David had obtained the throne of Israel, (v. 7.)
though perhaps the monthly division did not comprise 24,000, before that time. This regulation was very excellent, and enabled the king to have an army of 300,000 men, at a short notice. It was not attended with any material inconvenience to the people, as none were on service above a month.—Hands. Commanders in chief.—Captains.
Twenty-four in number, with 240 centurions under them.—Officers.
Heb. shoterim. Sept. “scribes,” whose employment is not well ascertained. They perhaps acted as commissaries, or kept an account of the king's troops, and reviewed them. C.—Sept. "and scribes serving the people, and the king's orders respecting the divisions, both coming in and going out, monthly, throughout the year. One division comprised 24,000 men.

Ver. 2. Jesboam. Heb. "Jashobham," as C. 11:11. He was the first after Joab, (H.) and a descendant of Pharez, like David, and waiting upon the king in the month of Nisan, which almost agrees with our March (M.) and April. H.—Zabdiel, the Hachmonite, may therefore denote his country; (Kennicott) or Zabdiel might be his ancestor, though the same man has frequently different names. We find several companions of this general in the sequel.

Ver. 4. Dudia, of Dodi, the father of Eleazar. C. 11:12. C.—After him, his substitute. T.—Heb. "and Macelloth, chief also of his course, consisting likewise of 24,000." H.

Ver. 5. Priest. This we read no where else, so that some understand, "a chief officer at court," 2 K. 8:18. C.—But he might be (H.) of the tribe of Levi. M.—His exploits are mentioned. C. 11:21.

Ver. 6. Company, in his absence, (H.) as lieutenant. Salien.

Ver. 7. After him. He acted under his father, and succeeded (M.) to Asahel's post, after Abner had slain him. 2 K. 2:23 and 23:24. C.

Ver. 8. Samaoth. Perhaps Samma, or Sammoth of Arodi, or Arari; places with which we are not acquainted, unless they denote some of his progenitors. Jazer is well known. C.—C. 26:31.

Ver. 9. Hari. Mentioned as one of David's brave men. C. 11:28.

Ver. 10. Phallonite, or of Phalti. 2 K. 23:26.

Ver. 11. Zarahi, or of Zara, the son of Tamar. C. 11:29. Sobochai slew the giant Saph, 2 K. 21:17.

Ver. 12. Jemini, or Benjamin. C.—The first syllable is neglected. M.

Ver. 13. Marai, or Marahai, sprung from Zara. C.

Ver. 14. Ephraim. Pharathon was in this tribe. M.

Ver. 15. Holdai, called Heled, the son of Baana. C. 11:30 and 2 K. 23:29.—Gothoniel. So the Sept. write Othoniel, (H.) so famous in the book of Judges, 1:13 and 3:9.

Ver. 16. Chiefs, by their birth-right. The former were chosen for merit.

T.—The tribes of Aser and of Gad are omitted, either because the list was not in the hands of the author, or it was overlooked by transcribers. C.—Rubenites, with whom Em. Sa joins the Gadites. M.

Ver. 18. Eliu. Probably the same with Eliab, the eldest son of Isai, (1 K. 16:7. C.) or the youngest but David, (C. 2:15) whose name is preserved by the Syriac, &c.

Ver. 23. Heaven. It would have seemed, therefore, as if David distrusted the divine promise, (H.) and attempted what was impossible (Grot.) or useless. C.—He had before offended, and hence would now only number those who were wanted. W.

Ver. 24. Number, those above 20; but he acted with reluctance, (T.) and the wrath of heaven prevented the entire completion of the king's order. C. 21:6 and 2 K. 24:9.—David. It would hence appear that the list was perfected, but not delivered to the king. The commissioners retained some of the lists; and, perhaps from these, Esdras has inserted what relates to Benjamin, (C. 7:6) as the account was not given in C. 21:6. C.—This list may, however, have been made at another time; as we are informed that Benjamin and Levi were not numbered. H.—The Book of Kings, where we find it, is therefore a different work. D.

Ver. 25. Treasures of gold, &c. as those of provisions had other officers. C.—Were in. Heb. and Sept. add, “the fields, in the cities,” &c. H.—This must be understood of corn; wine is mentioned afterwards. Nothing could give us a higher opinion of David's wisdom than these details.

Ver. 26. Ground, for the king. This was done at the expense of the nation, and by the people, no less than the vintage. 2 K. 8:12. The companions of Daniel were thus appointed to superintend the workmen of Nabuchodonosor. Dan. 2:49. Xenophon (Cyrop. viii.) styles such, ἐργῶν ἐπιστάτας, “men set over the works.” H.

Ver. 27. Cellars. Heb. “over the increase of the vineyards, for the wine cellars.” Prot. Wine was formerly kept in cisterns, in the vineyards, till it was taken into large earthen vessels, and placed in cellars.

Ver. 29. Saron, a fertile region at the foot of the mountains of Galaad; also a vale near the Mediterranean, (C.) in Ephraim, extending as far as Joppe. Adric. M.

Ver. 30. Ismahelite. People of that nation deal much in camels. C.—Ubil had embraced the Jewish religion, or perhaps he was originally an Israelite, but had acquired the title of Ismahelite by some exploit, or by residing long in the country. M.

Ver. 32. Man. Heb. “a writer.” He was a good politician and lawyer. Grot.—Sons, as tutors. D. C.—Jahiel was perhaps the brother of Jesbaam. C. 11:11. M.

Ver. 33. Friend. Chusai rendered the most signal service to the king, 2 K. 16:23 and 17:1. C.

Ver. 34. After, inferior, (Salien) as Achitophel’s advice was esteemed like an oracle, (C.) or Joiada, a chief priest, and Abiathar, the pontiff, succeeded to his place, after he had hung himself. T. D.

1 PARALIPOMENON 28

Ver. 1. Israel. These are more particularly described as princes of the tribes, (H.) twelve captains, &c. C. 27:1.—And his. Heb. “and of his sons.” C.—We may also understand this of the preceptors of the royal family. C. 27:32.—Officers. Lit. “eunuchs.” H.—Bravest; particularly those specified C. 11.

Ver. 2. Rising up from his bed, on which he lay, on account of his great age and weakness, while he addressed himself to his son; (3 K. 1:47. C.) or he rose from his throne, to honor this grand assembly. Heb. “stood upon his feet.” H.—Thought. Heb. “I, with my heart, thought to,” &c. C.—And, or which is the footstool. H.—The ark is often so called, because God was considered as sitting upon the wings of the cherubim, over it. Ps. 98:1. &c.—Building. No doubt what David left would have been sufficient. Yet Solomon thought that he could make something still more magnificent.

Ver. 3. Blood. See C. 22:8. C.

Ver. 4. Ever; for a long time, and to leave the throne to my posterity for many ages, and to the Messiah for ever. This expression is not always to be taken in its rigour. C.—Princes. Heb. “prince, or the ruler.” H.—This tribe had long possessed the greatest power, (C.) and the promise of the sceptre. Gen. 49. W.—The phrase often denotes a long time, but it is best understood of Christ. D.

Ver. 5. My son, by the mouth of Nathan. 2 K. 7:13. M.—Solomon was a figure of Christ, and his dignity was predicted. C. 17:11, 3 K. 1:13. C.

Ver. 7. If. The promises of the Old Testament were frequently conditional, and we always find the condition marked in some place; but those made to the Church of Christ, have no such limitation. H.—Day. Solomon was once faithful, and afterwards fell; it is uncertain whether ever to rise again. Hence it appears that the true children of God may become wicked. W.

Ver. 8. Seek. Wilful (H.) or supine ignorance will excuse no man. M.

Ver. 9. Know, with affection (H.) and faith; and him alone must thou serve. D.—Forsake him, and die impenitent. H.

Ver. 11. Description, impressed by God on David's imagination; (Cajet.) or rather planned out by the hand of God, (v. 19. Salien) as the law was written. H.—The Jews pretend that this plan was delivered to Moses, and handed down by Josue, &c. to David. E.—But why might not David receive it immediately from heaven? C.—Treasures. Lit. “cellars.” H.—The original term, Ganzac, is not Heb. We find Ganas (Est. 3:9) to signify a treasure, being derived from the Persian, Gaza. David gave, therefore, a description of the rooms to keep the treasures of the temple, or of the cellars for wine and oil. C.—Sept. “a pattern of the temple and of the houses thereof, and of the Zakcho, and of the upper rooms, and of the inner storehouses,” &c. H.—Inner, or most retired closets, (3 K. 20:30. C.) where the Levites slept. M.—Seat, where the ark was kept, and God was rendered propitious. H.

Ver. 13. Divisions, into twenty-four classes, (M.) which was done by God's order. H.—For all, that everything might be done with regularity. M.

Ver. 14. Weight, or sufficient for each, v. 15. H.—Some think he only left a memorial of what quantity of gold and silver would be requisite. It does not appear that Solomon used silver for the vessels, as he chose to execute his father's injunctions with still greater magnificence.

Ver. 15. Silver. David probably intended that five candlesticks would be made of this metal: but Solomon made all the ten of gold. 3 K. 7:49. There was one in the tabernacle. Ex. 25:31. C.—But the temple was more spacious, and a greater number was not prohibited. M.—According. Heb. “for the use of every candlestick.”

Ver. 16. Silver. Yet all the ten were composed of the purest gold, (2 Par. 4:12) as silver was too common, ib. 9:20. Moses had only two tables. C.—Diversity. Heb. “for each table.” Vat.

Ver. 17. Lions. S. Jerom seems to have read cephir, instead of the present cephor, which is rendered “a cup, or bowl.” 1 Esd. 1:10. C.—Sept. Alex. “and of the flesh-hooks, libation vessels and bowls; and the weight of the golden and silver vessels (kepphoure; a word which they do not translate) of each weight." H.—The change of i for u was very easy; and perhaps the basins were ornamented with representations of lions. D. M.—We do not find cephor used before, to denote any of the vessels of the tabernacle: but Esdras uses it, (C. 8:27) whence it is inferred that it is of Chal. extraction.

Ver. 18. Purest. Heb. "refined."—Lord. He was represented as riding in a chariot, drawn by Cherubim, (C.) or sitting on their wings. H.—Two, particularly, filled up the space between the walls in the most holy place, and covered the ark, and also the Cherubim made by Moses, 3 K. 7:23.

Ver. 19. These things, said he, is not in Heb. Sept. "All in the handwriting of the Lord, did David give to Solomon, according to the knowledge given to him from above, respecting the workmanship of the pattern." H.—David saw the pattern in a kind of ecstasy; (Salien. E.) or some prophet delivered it unto him, (C.) marked out by the hand of an angel, (T.) like the tabernacle given to Moses. D.

Ver. 20. Lord. Sept. add, "and I beheld, or behold, the pattern of the temple, and of the house and the Zakcho thereof, and the upper rooms and inner storehouses, and the house of propitiation, and the pattern of the house of the Lord: (21) and behold," v. 11. H.

Ver. 21. Thee. Heb. and Sept. "for all workmanship, every willing skilful man for any service, also all the princes, and the people entirely at thy commands." H.—The willing artificers are distinguished from those who were forced to work, though the former also received pay. C.

Ver. 1. Tender, not so much in years, for he was 22, but in comparison with David, and with reference to so great a work. M.

Ver. 2. Onyx, or "emeralds." C.—Sept. "soom," from the Heb. shoham.—Alabaster. Heb. puc. H.—The dark paint used for the eyes, has the same name. 4 K. 9:30, Jer. 4:30. Yet the stibium or stimmi, or alabaster, mentioned by Pliny, (xxxiii. 6.) was of a sliver colour, but not transparent. The stone here specified was probably alabaster, as it was used for the pavement. There is a very fine species at Damascus, and in Arabia, which was much sought after to decorate buildings. C.

—Chal. has “emeralds.” Sept. “stones of perfection, rich and various, and every precious stone, and much Parion.” H.—But Isai. 54:11, they translate the same term, “carbuncle.” C.—The stone might resemble the agate, which is beautifully shaded with clouds and other fanciful figures. T.—Paros: this is taken from the Sept. Heb. has simply, “and stones of ssiss.” H.—Whether it denote the isle of Chio, or that of Chitis, in the Red Sea, the former famous for marble, and the latter for topaz; or it may refer to Sais, a city of Egypt, which had most beautiful porphyry. Pliny xxxvi. 7. and xxxvii. 8.—But Paros, one of the Cyclades, was most renowned for its white marble. ib. xxxvi. 5.—Josephus (Bel. vi. 6.) informs us, that the temple was built of large white marble stones; so that it appeared, at a distance, to be covered with snow. C.

Ver. 3. Own. What he had already vowed, he esteemed no longer his. W.—Temple. Heb. “houses,” including the various apartments belonging to the temple. The sum which David had formerly set apart out of the spoils of war, &c. amounted to 835,000,000*l*. What he now adds, is 16,125,000*l*. sterling, according to Brerewood, who deems the sums exorbitant; and others have suspected that there is a mistake in the former numbers. We have seen with what foundation. C. 22:14. David was so convinced, that the sum which he had been able to collect was too small, that he exhorted the princes to contribute, with all their power, and set them this noble example, which they endeavoured to imitate. H.—He had collected some of the gold of Ophir, which was esteemed the best. C. See 3 K. 9:28. M.—We have before remarked, that Solomon went beyond the expectations of his father, and used no silver.

Ver. 5. Fill his hand, is an expression applied to priests, by which David imitates, that any one may now offer a species of sacrifice to the Lord. Judg. 7:5, Ex. 32:29. C. M.—He wishes them to act with generosity. H.

Ver. 6. Possessions, mentioned C. 27:25.

Ver. 7. Solids. Sept. “pieces of gold;” χρυσοῦς. Heb. adarcnim, which Prot. render “drachms,” (H.) after the Syr. &c. Others think that the Darics, used in Persia, are meant, though they did not exist in David’s time. Esdras might reduce the money to correspond with the coin with which his countrymen were then acquainted. 2 Esd. 7:70. Pelletier.—The Daric was equivalent to the golden sicle, which was only half the weight of one of silver, though this is not certain. C.—A solid was only the sixth part of an ounce, whereas the sicle weighed half an ounce, or four drachms.—Talents were always of the same weight, 125 Roman pounds. M.

Ver. 8. Gersonite; who, with his brethren, was treasurer. C. 26:22.

Ver. 9. Willingly. Their disposition was perfect: for God loves a cheerful giver. 2 Cor. 9:7. C.

Ver. 10. From. Sept. “from age to age;” (Pagnin, &c.) that is, throughout eternity: (M.) “for ever and ever.” Prot. Eternity has no parts. H.

Ver. 11. Magnificence. Thee we ought to magnify. David uses many words to express the sentiments of his grateful soul. M.

Ver. 12. Thine. Heb. and Sept. “of thee.” H.—Greatness. Heb. “to magnify and strengthen all.” M.—Our riches are thy gifts; and to thee we return a part, with gladness.

Ver. 14. Promise. Heb. “to offer so willingly in this manner?” H.—He is astonished at the rich display of gifts: but acknowledged that all was originally sent by God. In the same sentiments, we say in the mass, “We offer unto thee of thy own presents and gifts;” or, as the Greek expresses it, τα σα απο των σων. C.

Ver. 15. Strangers. We have nothing but what we have received from thee; and for how short a time! C.—No stay. Heb. “none abiding, (H. or) no hope” of being able to escape death, (C.) when we must leave all. How happy, therefore, are those who sent their treasures before them! H.—All are pilgrims, with respect to heaven. Heb. 13. W.

Ver. 17. Simplicity. Heb. “uprightness.” Sept. “justice;” (H.) a pure intention, which our Saviour styled a single eye. Mat. 6:22. T.

Ver. 18. This. Heb. “keep this for ever, in the imagination of the thoughts of the heart of thy people, and direct their heart unto thee. Preserve these good dispositions, which though has given them.” C.

Ver. 20. Then is not in Heb. or Sept. H.—The same term is used, to express the outward adoration which they shewed to God, and the civil respect which was due to the king: pari gestu, says Grotius, animo diverso. C.—How then will Protestants prove that we are guilty of idolatry, when we bow down before the cross, &c. unless they pretend to know the secrets of hearts? Prot. they “bowed down their heads, (Sept. knees) and worshipped the Lord and the king.” H.—The exterior set was the same, but the intention determined the application. See Ex. 20. W.

Ver. 21. And with. Heb. and Sept. “and their sacrifices of wine and victims, (or peace-offerings, to be eaten by the people. C.) in abundance for all Israel." H.

Ver. 22. The Lord, at Jerusalem, (M.) where the ark was then kept. H.—Second time: the first had been done with too much precipitation, in consequence of the attempt of Adonias; (3 K. 1:39. T.) or this took place after the death of David, that his successor might be invested with full power, (Grot.) and be acknowledged by all. H.—Priest. This at least only took place after the death of David, when Abiathar fell into disgrace. 3 K. 2:35. Both prince and priest must act by God's authority; and those who resist them, resist God himself. Rom. 13:1. C.—They are ministers of the Lord. H.

Ver. 24. Gave. Heb. "placed their hands upon Solomon." Sept. "were subject to him." C.—The latter words in the Vulg. explain the meaning of the ceremony. M.—It seems to have been similar to that used by Abraham required an oath of his servant. Gen. 24:2. Vassals placed their hands within those of their Lord, under whom they hold lands; (C.) and the descendants of the Germans testify their submission, by putting their hands between a person's knees. Grotius.—The nobles took the oath of fidelity to Solomon, by some such method. C.

Ver. 29. Gad, the seer "of David," as he is sometimes styled. These three were well acquainted with David, (C.) and wrote the two first books of Kings; (H.) or at least those books are compiled from their memorials, (C.) if their works be lost, (M.) which is uncertain. W.

Ver. 30. Under him in various tribulations, towards the end of his reign. Vatable, &c.—Those prophets recorded not only what regarded David, (H.) but also what happened of consequence, in other nations, with which he had any connections.—Of the. Syr. and Arab. "of his land, or among the kings of his race." C.—David reduced under his dominion not only the nations which dwelt in Chanaan, but all those which had been promised to Israel. H.

2 PARALIPOMENON

THE SECOND BOOK OF PARALIPOMENON

INTRODUCTION

As the former Book shews how David was chosen to rule over God's peculiar people, so this explains briefly the reign of Solomon, in the nine first chapters; and in the rest, that of nineteen of his successors, who governed two tribes till the captivity, while Israel was divided. W.

2 PARALIPOMENON 1

Ver. 5. Sought it: went (M.) to offer sacrifice, (T.) in the second year of his reign, A.C. 1013.

Ver. 6. Victims. Heb. "holocausts," either with his own hand, or by the ministry of the priests. See 1 K. 13:12. C.

Ver. 7. Night, after the victims had been offered. On this occasion, Solomon made this prayer, and was heard. 3 K. 3:5. C.

Ver. 10. People, as a king ought to do. M.

Ver. 13. Before. Heb. and Sept. "from before the tabernacle," which was at Gabaon. there was another at Jerusalem, where (H.) Solomon rendered homage to the Lord. C.

Ver. 14. Chariots. See 3 K. 4:26. No king of Israel kept such a multitude of horses. C.

Ver. 15. Sycamores are trees of small value, and not good for building. T.

Ver. 16. Coa may signify either some city, (Mariana) or an "exporium," where things are sold, as kuch means "a collection." T. 3 K. 10:28. Neglecting the points of the Masorets, we may well understand Coa, a city of Egypt, or an island of the Mediterranean. The Masorets read Mikve, instead of Micoa. D.

2 PARALIPOMENON 2

Ver. 1. Himself, worthy of his great empire. He deemed that which David had built too mean, though that pious king had been ashamed to dwell in such a magnificent palace, while the ark of God was under skins. 2 K. 7:2. C.

Ver. 2. Numbered, of the proselytes, v. 17. T.—Hew. The stones were made ready for use, as well as the wood, before it was brought to the temple. 3 K. 6:7.—Six. Only three are mentioned 3 K. 5:16. C.—But three hundred overseers of higher order are here included. T.

Ver. 6. Before him. For this purpose do I design to build. M.—Temples are more for our use than for God's, as none can be worthy of him. C.

Ver. 7. Purple. Heb. argevan, (H.) a Chal. word, of the same import as arguman, in Exodus.—Scarlet and blue were also species of purple. The finest sort was found between Tyre and Carmel. See Vitruv. vii. 13.

Ver. 8. Pine. Heb. algum, which rather denotes a species of fir, than the juniper-tree; though the domestic kind was tall, and used in edifices. C.—Arceuthina, “juniper,” is taken from the Sept. D.

Ver. 9. Exceedingly. Heb. “wonderfully great.” H.

Ver. 10. Wheat. Heb. adds, “beaten.”—Barley and wine are not specified 3 K. 5:11. C.—Measures, like the Roman amphora, contained 960 ozs. A. Lapide—Heb. has, “batim,” in both places; but 3 K. we find, “twenty cores of oil.” The satum, “measure,” was only one-third of the bath or epha. C.

Ver. 13. Father. Heb. Abi, is considered by some as the surname of Hiram. Pagnin, &c.—But he might have that title in consideration of his great skill, as Solomon gives it him. C. 4:16. We use master in the same sense. Sept. have, “servant,” (παῖδα) except the Roman edition, which agrees with the Heb. and reads, πατέρα. C.—Prot. “of Hiram, my father's;” (H.) supply servant, or architect. T.

Ver. 14. Dan, the city, as the widow as of the tribe of Nephthali. D.—Whose. Heb. “and his father,” (H.) or “this Abi.” C. See 3 K. 7:14.—Silk. Heb. “byssus,” which is the silk extracted from a fish, and not the fine linen of Egypt, or cotton which as sometimes this appellation. 1 Par. 15:27.—My lord, a term of civility.

Ver. 16. Floats. So the Sept. well express the Heb. raphsodoth, which seems to be borrowed from the Greek Ραψωδια, which denotes a collection of verses (C.) and was applied to Homer's poems, before they were collected. Ælian xiii. 14. Joppe was a port much used, (C.) though dangerous. Joseph. Bel. iii. 15.

Ver. 17. Had made, at the commencement of Solomon's reign, when David put such immense treasures into his hands. The second list was taken when the temple was begun. The proselytes were the remnants of the nations of the natives of Chanaan. The Jews foolishly pretend, (C.) that no strangers were allowed to embrace the law of Moses, under David and Solomon, for fear lest they might be influenced by self-interest rather than by the love of religion. Seldon, Syn. iii. 2. 5.

Ver. 18. Six. We read three, 3 K. 5:16.: people who where strangers, as the Israelites were not forced to work. C. 8:9. C.

2 PARALIPOMENON 3

Ver. 1. Moria, which signifies vision; (C.) the place pointed out to Abraham, (Gen. 22:2. S. Aug. de C. xvi. 32.) and to David. 1 Par. 21:15 and 22:1.

Ver. 2. Second. Heb. adds, (D.) “in the second day of the second month.” Prot. &c. H.

Ver. 3. By the first, or ancient measure, used before the captivity. The Babylonian cubit was a hand smaller, as Ezechiel (40:3) intimates. C.—Solomon used the same cubit as Moses, but doubled the proportions. M.

Ver. 4. A hundred. The Arab. and some copies of the Sept. read only twenty. Capellus and Toinard would substitute, ten cubits. A small change in the Heb. might occasion these variations. C.—In 3 K. 7:2 we find the height was thirty cubits: but that might be only to the first floor. Many think that the temple was 120 cubits high: but Salien (A. 3024) explains it of the four-square tower, (M.) in the front. C.

Ver. 5. House. between the most holy place and the porch, (T.) or it may comprise all but the porch. Heb. “he covered (or boarded) all this great house.” C.—Deal boards interspersed with those of cedar. 3 K. 6:9. T.—Fine, (obrizi.) Heb. “of Parvaim, which is probably the same as Sepharvaim, Ophir, &c. not far from Media and Colchis. C.

Ver. 8. Amounting to about, is not in Heb. H.

Ver. 9. Sicles. This weight seems enormous for each nail. Mariana supposes every nail weighed one sicle. But who will believe that only fifty were used? Heb. “And the weight of the nails was fifty,” &c. The Syr. and Arab. omit this verse entirely.—Chambers, or rather “the ceiling.”

Ver. 10. Work. Heb. “of the work of young men,” or resembling them. Munster—Sept. “the work of wood.” Vulg. lit. “of sculpture work,” (H.) as Le Clerc renders the original. Some moderns translate, “of a work like men in motion.” Mariana, Buxtorf—The cherubims were in an erect posture.

Ver. 11. Cubits, comprising the breadth of their body. Each occupied ten cubits.

Ver. 13. Toward. Heb. “inward;” looking at each other, (Ex. 25:20) or towards the altar of holocausts.

Ver. 14. A veil. Abulensis places it between the court and the holy: but Jansenius would have it before the holy of holies. It seems rather that there was a veil in both places, (Barad. t. ii. b. iii. 23. M.) as Josephus (viii. 2 and xii. 10.) clearly intimates; and S. Paul speaks of the second veil. Heb. 9:3. It is not certain which of them was torn at the death of Jesus Christ. Matt. 27:51. Cherubims; extraordinary figures. C.

Ver. 15. Five. 3 K. 7:15 we read each was eighteen cubits. It is probable that each was 17½ and the other half was for the crown, (C.) or cornice. H.

Ver. 16. In, or “as in.” Sa. M.—Protestants supply as. H.—Hundred, for one row, or 200 for both. 3 K. D.

Ver. 17. Booz. “Stability and strength” are derived from God alone. Thus Solomon designed to insinuate that God established the harmony of the universe. H.—An orrery, or globe, was therefore placed on each of these pillars. Parkhurst, in con.

2 PARALIPOMENON 4

Ver. 1. Altar of holocausts, much larger than that of Moses. The one which was built after the captivity, was a square of fifteen cubits. This of Solomon was only ten in height. A sloping ascent was made up to it, according to Josephus; (Bel. vi. 5. or v. 14.) or the steps were closed in, if we believe others. See Ex. 27:1 and 20:26. It is thought (C.) that the inside of the altar was filled with earth, (M.) or with rough stones: (Ex. 20:24. D.) but that is not certain, with regard to the brazen altar. See 1 Mac. 4:44, 47. C.

Ver. 2. Sea, or great brazen vessel, and some other things that were not in the tabernacle of Moses, whose plan was followed, but with greater magnificence. W.

Ver. 3. Oxen. In 3 K. 7:24 we read Heb. “knops,” (H.) or “apples.”—Of ten. Heb. “ten in a cubit.” Hence there must have been 600 heads of oxen, as the sea was thirty cubits in circumference, and there were two rows. C.—Others suppose that here were only five in each row, or only one in each cubit. See Vat. and 3 K. The Sept. and Syr. omit this verse. C.—Yet it is found in the best editions of the Sept. H.

Ver. 4. Cast. Heb. adds, “when it (the sea) was cast.” H.—They were done at the same time, (T.) and were perhaps intended to let out the water. The twelve oxen, which supported the sea, were not cast along with it. D.

Ver. 5. Three. 3 K. two, may specify the usual quantity that was contained, though the vessel would absolutely hold a thousand measures, or baths, more. H.

Ver. 6. Holocaust, as well as all the necessary utensils.—Priests. They did not bathe in the sea, but drew water into other vessels. The Chal. supposes that the work of Beseleel was for the high priest alone. C.

Ver. 9. Hall, (basilicam.) Sept. use the same term (αυλη) as just before is rendered court; and the Prot. make no distinction, though the Heb. terms be different. Sept. render chatsar, “the court” of the people. There, we know, that Solomon had his tribune. C. 6:13. Ezechiel (43:14) distinguishes two; the great, lower or outward, (H. chatsar) or court, and that of the priests, (H.) which he styles the less, &c. The principal door lay to the east.

Ver. 10. Right, though to the left of those who entered the temple.

Ver. 12. Pommels, (epistylia.) Heb. “cordons,” or rows of pomegranates, (3 K. 7:18) each consisting of one hundred; so that at the two pillars were adorned with a double row, both together would have four hundred. C.—The precise number is fixed at ninety-six for each row. Jer. 52:23. T.

Ver. 16. His father. Heb. Abib, which is considered by some as a surname, (M.) or the title may be given to Hiram, on account of his skill. C.—He is so called by the king of Tyre, (C. 2:13) for having instructed him in the true faith. W.

Ver. 17. Saredatha, or Sarthan, (3 K. 7:46) not far from Bethsan. 3 K. 4:12. C.

Ver. 21. Flowers. They represented lilies or other flowers (T.) full-blown, when the lamps were burning. All the branches were of pure gold. C.

Ver. 22. Mortars, to hold the fine flour. M.—And thus. Here the fifth chapter commences, in Heb. and Sept.

Ver. 1. God, under the care of Selemith. See 1 Par. 26:26. C.

Ver. 2. Ark. Another was not made, as that was most sacred and excellent. W.

Ver. 3. Day, the eighth. 3 K. 8:2.

Ver. 4. Levites, with the priests alternately; (ibid.) or the latter were all Levites, (C.) though higher in dignity, in the same manner as our bishops are priests.

Ver. 5. With the. “And” is omitted in Heb. but supplied by Prot. &c. from 3 K. H.

Ver. 9. Oracle, pushing out the veil, (H.) in the tabernacle of Moses, but not in the temple, which was of larger dimensions. C.—But if. Heb. “but they were not seen without. And there it is till this day.”

Ver. 10. Ark. See 3 K. 8:9. H.—The other things which had been placed in, or at least on the side of the ark, were now removed to the treasury rooms. T.

Ver. 11. Sanctified; free from all legal impediments to offer sacrifice. H.—Divided. Heb. “observed.” T.—Prot. “and they did not then wait by course,” which was the case also with the singers, &c. on this solemn occasion; as the number regulated by David for each week, would not have been sufficient. H.—The regulation had not yet been reduced to practice. M. C.—As yet (D.) at that time, is omitted (H.) by the Sept. (D.) and Heb.

Ver. 12. Linen, or “robes of silk.” Prot. “white linen.” H.

Ver. 14. Cloud. See 3 K. 8:10. M.—It is called the glory of the Lord, because its appearance was luminous and awful, being a symbol of the divine presence. H.

2 PARALIPOMENON 6

Ver. 1. Cloud: lit. “darkness.” H.—The promise had been made to Moses. Ex. 16:10 and 40:32. C.—God thus manifested his presence. W.

Ver. 12. Hands. Such external gestures promote attention in prayer; and hence were much used by holy people, at all times. W.

Ver. 13. Scaffold, (basim.) The Heb. (kiyor) is used for “a shell, (concha. T.) or bowl,” as the throne was probably of the same form, and was placed on a square pedestal, at the higher end of the court of the people, (C.) which is here styled the temple, (basilicæ) or “hall.” C. 4:9. Sept. αὐλης. Heb. chatsar, which denotes that great court where (H.) the body of the people stood bare-headed, before the Lord, (Grot. &c. C. 20:5) in the open air. D.—We are assured that the king himself never sat in his tribune. C.—Others reserve that privilege to him alone. H.—While he addressed the people, he turned towards them.

Ver. 19. End. Temples are erected for the convenience of men. C.—Solomon hopes that God will reward his good intentions.

Ver. 22. Altar; thus solemnly consenting to be punished by God, if he swear falsely. H.—This practice was not prescribed by the law, but took place when witnesses could not be procured, or when it was necessary to rely on the word of the accused.

Ver. 28. Blasting, or mildew, (æruugo & aurugo.) The first has the colour of brass, the other of gold. both have nearly the same import. M.—One of the terms is rendered, corrupt air; (3 K. 8:37. C.) as this is one of the great causes why both plants and animals do not thrive. Sept. “corruption of the air and king’s evil, or yellow jaundice:” ικτερός. H.

Ver. 29. Any. Heb. adds, “man, or thy people.” Sept. “and (that is) to thy.” See v. 32. H.—Both strangers and Israelites may there sue for mercy, and obtain it. C.—From this chapter, as well as from many other passages, it is evident that places consecrated to God, are more acceptable to him than other places; (W.) and here the prayers of the faithful are sooner heard, as they testify their unity. D.

Ver. 31. Fear thee, being filled with awe at the sight of thy judgments. C.

Ver. 33. House, that they may know that this is not only called, but is, in effect, the temple of the Lord, where he will display his power and goodness. H.

Ver. 38. Name. Hence arose the custom of turning towards Jerusalem and the temple, when the Jews poured for their supplications, in any country. 3 K. 8:44.

Ver. 41. Now, therefore. This is taken from Ps. 131:8. 9. 10. (M.) almost word for word. We do not find that Solomon spoke this, 3 K. C. —Place: lit. “rest.” H.—Come, O Lord, and dwell here.—Strength, by which thy wonders shine forth, and thy enemies are dismayed. The ark is styled the strength of Israel, Ps. 77:61 and 62:3.; and in the parallel passage we read, Thou and the ark of thy sanctification, or sanctuary, which is its highest ornament, and which thou hast sanctified, or required to be treated with respect.—Salvation, or justice, (Ps. 131) which is the surest method of obtaining happiness.

Ver. 42. Anointed. Cover not with shame the king, whom thou hast appointed, (H.) nor reject my prayer. T.—Mercies, which thou hast shewn, or rather (C.) the acts of virtue which thy servant displayed. Syr. &c. For thy servant David's sake, turn not away the face of thy anointed. Ps. 131. In consideration of his merits, grant my request. C.—Even Solomon, though at this time the object of God's complacency, disdains not to screen himself under the merits of the departed saints. H.

2 PARALIPOMENON 7

Ver. 2. Majesty; the cloud. For some time the priests were obliged to keep at a distance. They afterwards offered up many victims. C.

Ver. 3. Glory. The same word was before rendered majesty. H.

Ver. 4. Victims, by the hands of the priests: or they slew them themselves, and presented the blood and fat to be placed on the altar by the priests.

Ver. 5. Rams, including sheep and goats.—People, each in their proper sphere. The priests had the chief part, as the ministers of religion. The solemnity continued for a week, and many altars were erected in the court. C.

Ver. 6. Which music, or Psalms, (carminum) David had composed. H.—Because. This was the chorus of the 135th Psalm, which was sung on this occasion by some, while others played on their musical instruments. C.—Lit. "singing by their hands." Prot. "when David praised by their ministry." H.—As the temple was chosen by God for the place of prayer, so special forms of blessing, &c. are more agreeable to him. W.

Ver. 9. Solemnity of tabernacles, (M.) which ensued after the dedication was ended.

Ver. 10. Day. He had given them leave to depart, the day before. 3 K. 8:66.

Ver. 14. Face, to appease me, that I may look down upon them in mercy. C.

2 PARALIPOMENON 8

Ver. 1. After. Sept. "in which."

Ver. 2. Given back (T.) as he refused to accept of the present. Some think that (C.) Hiram gave these cities in exchange for the others. Salien. M.

Ver. 3. Emath, or Emesa, on the Orontes. This city had belonged to Thou, who cultivated the friendship of David. 2 K. 8:9. But after the death of these princes, it had given some offence to Solomon, who took it, as well as Palmira, or Thadmor, though not perhaps in person.

Ver. 4. Strong. Heb. "the cities of tents." Ex. 1:11. C.—Prot. "store cities," (H.) for corn, &c.

Ver. 8. Tributaries. Heb. also, "to work," at cutting stones, &c. 1 Par. 22:2. Some of their descendants returned from captivity. Ib. 9:2.

Ver. 10. Fifty. These were different from the 550 overseers. 3 K. 9:23.

Ver. 11. Into it. It was deemed improper for a pagan woman to reside in the same place. C.—She had perhaps pretended, at first, to be converted, but had lately given some signs of relapse. Salien.—Solomon was as yet far from communicating with infidels. W.

Ver. 14. And gate, at their respective posts. See 1 Par. 26. H.

Ver. 15. Treasures. The regulations of David were exactly observed. C.

Ver. 17. Asiongaber, which was called Bernice, (Joseph. viii. 2.) and now Suez. T.

Ver. 18. Ships; not perhaps from Tyre, but from the Red Sea. C.—Others think that he sent them by a canal, which opened a communication between the Mediterranean and Suez, (Huet) the distance of about ninety miles. Pliny ii. 68.—But this canal seems to have been made after the age of Solomon. Hence others imagine that the ships were taken in pieces, or conveyed by land, as has been sometimes done. Mahomet II. transported ships across the isthmus of Corinth. Alexander the Great conveyed on chariots the ships which had been used to cross the Indus, as far as the Hydaspes. Arrian vii. C.—Skilful mariners. They were the most expert, and the inventors of navigation. Prima ratem ventis tradere docta Tyrus. Tibul. See Wisd. 14:6.—Ophir, the kingdom of Pegu, in the East Indies, (T.) or some other distant land. H.—Fifty. Thirty are omitted, 3 K. 9:28, as they were expended in the voyage. C.—Yet the Heb. letters for twenty and fifty are extremely similar. D.

2 PARALIPOMENON 9

Ver. 1. Saba. See 3 K. 10:1. This queen resided in Arabia or Abyssinia. H.—Questions. They were not of a trifling nature, as she is commended by Christ. D.

Ver. 3. House; the royal palace, or rather the temple, which was much more magnificent than any thing in the East.

Ver. 5. Virtues. Heb. “words,” or of what regards thee (C.) and thy exploits. T.

Ver. 6. Fame. Heb. and Sept. “the fame which I had heard.” H.

Ver. 8. King of the Lord. Hence the style, “By the grace of God, king of England,” &c. has been adopted. Those deserve the name, who rule according to God’s will. W.—The kings of the Jews were more properly lieutenants of God, as the government was a theocracy. C. 13:8. &c.

Ver. 10. Thyine-trees, very odoriferous. C.—Heb. algumim: 3 K. almugim, as the letters are frequently transposed in Heb. D.—Huet thinks these were citron-trees, which did not produce fruit, but were used to make costly tables, and were a species of cedar.

Ver. 11. Stairs. Heb. “hands,” (D.) or banisters, from the palace to the temple. Junius.

Ver. 12. And many. Heb. “besides that which she had brought unto the king.” Prot. It is however certain that Solomon made use of many of her presents, and therefore he returned her others in greater profusion, or, as it is expressed, 3 K. besides what he offered her of himself of his royal bounty. H.

Ver. 13. Gold, each worth 5475*l*. (Arbuthnot) so that this part of the revenue alone would amount to 3,646,350*l*. sterling, annually. H.

Ver. 14. Beside. Heb. “besides that which chapmen and merchants brought.” Prot. The deputies appear to be the tax-gatherers. 3 K. 10:15.

H.

Ver. 16. Pieces. In 3 K. we read, three pounds.—Wood; or, “in the palace of the forest of Libanus,” (3 K. 10:17. C.) as it is expressed in the Sept. T.

Ver. 18. Arms. Prot. “stays.” H.—Heb. in 3 K. seems clearer and more correct. C.

Ver. 20. Days. We sometimes find the figure, hyperbole, used in Scripture for things unusual. C. 1:16. W.

Ver. 21. Tharsis. Any distant place was so called. T.

Ver. 25. Thousand. In 3 K. we read, 1400 chariots; and here Heb. has, “4000 stables, (C.) or stalls for horses and chariots,” (Prot.) and the Sept. “4000 mares for the chariots, and 12,000 horsemen.” H.—There might be ten horses in each stable. D.

Ver. 29. Seer. The works of these three are not extant. M.—The fall of Solomon is recorded, 3 K. 11. W.

2 PARALIPOMENON 10

Ver. 7. Please. 3 K. 12. “serve.” By a little condescension, thou mayest establish thy throne. C.—The people did not complain, till they saw the riches of the nation wasted on wicked women (T.) and idols. D.

Ver. 11. Scorpions; thorns, or scourges armed with hooks. Colum. iii. 10.—Roboam had not sense to despise the foolish advice of the young men. T.

Ver. 15. Will of God: not that the king should act foolishly, or the people rebel, but to effect what he had promised. H.—Syriac has well expressed the sense: “because this rebellion happened by the divine permission, that they might behold the truth of the prediction of Ahias,” (C.) and that the fault of Solomon might be punished. D.

Ver. 16. People. Heb. “and when all Israel saw that the king would not hearken unto them, the people answered the king, saying: What portion have we in David?” Prot.—Dwellings. Many ancient Latin MSS. here insert 3 K. 12:20. Lyran. &c. C.

Ver. 1. Chosen. Sept. “young,” (H.) as the Heb. term also signifies. T. —His. Heb. “the kingdom again to Roboam.”

Ver. 4. Will, to punish the disorders of Solomon, &c. See 3 K. 12:24. Gen. 45:8. God knows how to draw good out of evil, without approving the misconduct of men. H.

Ver. 5. Juda. This was now become a frontier country, and both kings were forced to erect fortifications. 3 K. 12:25.

Ver. 6. Etam, famous for fine waters and gardens, (Joseph. viii. 2.) about ten miles from Jerusalem, on the road to Hebron. It was fortified against the inroads of Simeon and Dan. C.

Ver. 11. Governors, of a military character. Heb. “captains, (T.) and store of provisions, (wheat) and of oil,” &c. such as would be requisite in a siege.

Ver. 14. Off. This was done at different times; so that almost all the Levites took refuge in the dominions of Juda. Yet some prevaricated. Ezechiel (44:12) only exempts the family of Sadoc. C.—The rest set before us a noble example to endure temporal loss, rather than to neglect the practice of religion, or to conform to a false one. W.

Ver. 15. Devils. Heb. “goats.” C.—Sept. express this by two names, “for the idols, and for the fools.” H.—The Mendesians of Egypt, solemnly worshipped the goat; and Pan was represented nearly in the same form. Yet it is probable that the Hebrews style the idols by this name out of derision. 3 K. 15:2. C.

Ver. 17. They, the pious refugees. T. C. 15:9.—Solomon, while virtuous.—Only is not expressed in Heb. or Sept. but it is sufficiently implied.

Ver. 18. Daughter. Heb. ban, “the son.” But bath, “daughter,” (H.) occurs properly in some MSS. as in the ancient versions. Leusden has here this very odd note: “perhaps by ban, (with a pathah) here both sexes may be understood.” Forte per ban hic intelligitur uterque sexus. Kennicott—Prot. substitute, “daughter.” H.

Ver. 20. Daughter, or grand-daughter, by Thamar. 3 K. 15:2. C.

Ver. 22. Head. Sept. “prince.” H.—Grotius maintains that Abia was the eldest. But all others are of a contrary opinion, and believe that Roboam derogated from the law, (Deut. 21:16. C.) as David had done, unless it was left to the option of the king to appoint whom he pleased for his successor. H.—Meant. Prot. supply, “he thought” which is found in the Sept.

Ver. 23. Because. Sept. “And he was magnified above.... and he gave them (cities, αὐταῖς) abundance,” &c. This may be all understood of Abia. But Heb. rather speaks of his father: “And he acted wisely, and dispersed all his other children, throughout the countries of Juda;” (H.) keeping them at a distance, to prevent any commotion, (C.) but making ample provision and procuring wives for them, perhaps at no small cost, as few might wish to be thus prisoners at large. T.—It was probably then the custom to educate the royal children in the noblest families. See 4 K. 10:1. C.—This would also tend to increase their father’s influence, and to make them better acquainted with the country, that they might be able to communicate all necessary intelligence. H.—Pagnin and Vatable insinuate, that Roboam “caused to be educated and dispersed some of all his children, throughout all the lands of Juda.” M.

Ver. 1. Israel, in his dominions. The kingdom of Jeroboam had long before apostatized, though there were still many true servants of God, who would not bend the knee before Baal, v. 12. H.

Ver. 3. Troglodites, who dwell in caverns, near the Red Sea. Pliny (v. 8. and vi. 29.) speaks of the city Suca, which in Heb. means a tent, as here we read succiyim, (H.) “dwelling in tents;” which some explain of the Arabs, who are called Scenites, on the same account. T.—People of this description, without any fixed abode, inhabited the Stony as well as the Desert Arabia. C. 14:14.

Ver. 7. A little help. I will not suffer them to be quite destroyed. Heb. also signifies, “shortly.” C.—Fall, (stillabit) like drops of water, even to the last. H.—How soon is God appeased! T.—Even when he punishes, he does not let the whole flood of his indignation fall upon the guilty. M.

Ver. 10. Bearers. Heb. “runners,” as the guards attended the king on foot.

Ver. 12. For even. Prot. “and also in Judah things went well;” (H.) or, “he spoke good words even to Juda.” C.—Sept. “for even in Juda there were good words, and in all pleasing.” Words are often put for works. H.—The Lord regarded the fidelity of some, and the humility of the princes. (C.—This advantage was derived from tribulation, that the king entered into himself, at least for a time: (H.) but he was not constant, v. 14. After the scourge was withdrawn, he presently relapsed. He had betrayed great cowardice, as even his son confessed; and had probably been treated with great indignity, (T.) as it was the custom with Sesac, or Sesostris, to chain the conquered princes to his triumphal car, and to leave obscene representations of women in the country. Joseph. viii. 4. Herod. ii.—Sesostris proceeded to the conquest of Asia. T.

Ver. 14. Lord, with sincerity, being actuated only by a servile fear. He died impenitent. C.

Ver. 15. And diligently. Heb. “in their genealogical accounts.” H. See C. 13:22.

2 PARALIPOMENON 13

Ver. 2. Michaia, alias Maacha. Her father had also two names; viz. Absalom or Abessalom, and Uriel. Ch.—Many had two names. T.—Of Gabaa, may refer to the women.

Ver. 3. War. The author of the new edition of S. Jerom mentions two MSS. and there are several printed editions, which reduce these numbers to one half. Castalio adopts this correction, asserting that the Greek and Josephus are on his side, which is not true. C.—We must however observe, that there is some doubt with respect to Josephus, (H.) as some of the oldest Latin editions acknowledge the smaller numbers; and Vignoles (i. 29.) conjectures, that the Greek copies did the same formerly, since Aborbanel “accuses Josephus of having made Jeroboam’s loss no more than 50,000, contrary to the Hebrew text,” v. 17. This learned author is of opinion, that the Jews sometimes expressed their numbers by figures, (Kennic.) analogous to those which the later Arabs borrowed from the Indians; though, in more ancient times, the letters of the alphabet had been used. Both customs seem to have prevailed; (Erpenius) and this may account for many variations, as the omission of a single cypher, resembling our period (.), might easily occasion much confusion. Kennicott (Diss. i. and ii.) seems to suspect, that the ancient versions have been made to agree with the corrupted Heb. no less than Josephus; and that many of the large numbers, recorded in Scripture, (which might countenance what we here read) are incorrect. See C. 17:13. 19 and 14:8. comp. with 16:1 and 25:6. comp. with 4 K. 13:7. It is certain (H.) many Latin MSS. confirm the edition of Sixtus V. which has the smaller numbers; and this is the case with most of the older MSS. and editions. How S. Jerom expressed it, we cannot easily determine. The editor of his works has been guided chiefly by the Memmian canon. See 2 K. 15:7. Lyran quotes S. Jerom, as reading 50,000; (v. 7) and it is so expressed in the Paris editions of 1534 and (H.) 1546, of the Heb. questions on Paral. But Erasmus doubts whether this be the genuine work of S. Jerom, (Ken.) or in the state in which he left it. If we consult the more ancient MSS. and editions, prior to that of Clement VIII. we shall allow that they are more favourable to the smaller numbers, on this occasion; and are more likely to exhibit the pure version of the holy doctor, (H.) as the later editions have had “the Heb. fountains” also in view. Kennicott—If however we adhere to the received numbers, (H.) we must remember that kings, at that time, led forth to battle all their subjects who were able to bear arms. Under Moses there were 600,000. David found 1,100,000 in Israel, and 470,000 in Juda, exclusive of Levi and Benjamin; (C. 21:5) or, at least, as it is expressed 2 K. 24:9 in all, 1,300,000. Asa was at the head of 580,000. C. 14:8. &c.

Ver. 4. Semeron, on which Samaria was afterwards built. Heb. reads, “Mount Tsemaraim.” There was a city of this name in Benjamin. C.—But this was a mount. Heb. “in Mount Ephraim.” H.

Ver. 5. A covenant of salt. That is, a firm and perpetual covenant. See Num. 18:19. Ch. W.—It seems this covenant was to be inviolable; and it had its effect, notwithstanding the crimes of many of the kings. The Arabs still regard the partaking of bread and salt as the most sacred covenant. C.—“The ancients prayed when they placed salt before their guests, that, as salt partook of two natures, so they might be cemented together in concord.” Tzetzez on Lycoph. H.—Abia speaks with much prudence, and with an air of piety, though his heart was corrupt. 3 K. 15:3. That of his adversary was still more so; and God granted victory to the former, to reward even the appearance of virtue in the king, and the sincere piety of some of his followers.

Ver. 7. Vain. The saem term is used as in Matt. 5:22. C.—Rekim, “stupid men.” H.—Sept. “pestiferous.” Syr. “impious.”—Heart. Prot. “young and tender-hearted.” H.—But Roboam was not very young; (3 K. 14:21) and we may adhere to the Vulg. C.—Sept. “he was a youth, and timid.” H.—Abia speaks of his father with little respect, and seems to have forgotten that he had laid down his arms in obedience to God’s order. C.

Ver. 8. And golden. These idols will enervate and render your great numbers useless. H.—We have a just cause and religion is on our side. C.

Ver. 9. Rams. These were sacrificed by the false priests, who acted in a very different manner from those of the Lord. Lev. 8 and 9. C.

Ver. 11. Table. It is hence inferred, that Sesac had only left one: (Lyran. Torniel.) but this does not follow. C. Salien.

Ver. 14. Trumpets, to invoke God's aid. Num. 10:9. M.

Ver. 15. Terrified. Sept. "struck;" God caused the victory to declare in favour of those who were only half the number. H.

Ver. 17. Five. Some Latin editions have 50,000, (C.) which number is found in some MSS. of Epiphanius. Hudson's Josephus.—Hentenius has the same, and only remarks five MSS. which had the greater number. See v. 3. H.—We do not read of such a slaughter in any one battle. But Israel made no resistance, and God assisted the four hundred thousand. M.—Valiant. Prot. "chosen." See C. 14:13. H.—So many were either slain or wounded. D.—Prot. intimate all were "slain." H.

Ver. 19. Bethel, the head of the calf worship; though Abulensis thinks it was another city, otherwise it would not have been spared. The calf continued there till the reign of Jehu. 4 K. 10:29. M.—Jesana; perhaps Senna, (Num. 34:4. C.) seven miles north of Jericho. Eus.—The versions read differently.—Ephron. The Masorets have Ephraim. C.—Prot. "Ephraim, with the towns thereof." H.—Josue (15:9) places Mount Ephron between Juda and Ephraim; and we find a town of the name, (1 Mac. 5:46) but on the other side of the Jordan.

Ver. 20. Him. Some think Abia, as Jeroboam survived him two years: but others, (C.) with greater probability, (D.) suppose that the latter is here specified, and that he fell a victim to the divine wrath, as the prophet Ahias had foretold. C.—Salien, A. 3081.

Ver. 22. Works. Prot. "sayings are written in the story of the prophets Iddo." H.—Modross properly means "researches," and was the title of the genealogical work of this prophet, from which this account is probably taken. C. 12:15. C.—The entire work is not extant. M.

Ver. 1. Years, dating from the fifth; as in the fifteenth year of his reign, Asa offered many victims, which had been taken from the enemy. C. 15:10. C.

Ver. 2. God, with respect to the external worship of the true God, (H.) though he had some faults. 3 K. 15:14.—Places, while he tolerated those which were intended for the service of the Lord, (C.) though illegally; and he even left the buildings erected by Solomon standing, (4 K. 23:13. T.) thinking they might be no longer dangerous. Salien.—Several other pious kings did the like, for which they deserved some reprehension; as they could not be ignorant, that this was considered as wrong by the more enlightened. Eccli. 49:5. T.—It was the king's duty to destroy the exterior practices of idolatry, while the priests and prophets were to instruct. W.

Ver. 5. Altars. Heb. “high places, and the Chamanim,” or temple of the sun. Lev. 26:30. C.—Prot. “images.” H.—Asa was encouraged to perfect the work which he had begun, by the exhortation of Azarias. C. 15:8. C.

Ver. 6. Time, as yet. T.—Admirable lesson for all to prepare for war in time of quite! H.

Ver. 9. Ethiopian. Some think Zara was a successor of Sesac; and the Rabbins say, that he “restored the spoils which the latter had taken.” Seder. xvi.—He at least, made the Jews some compensation for that loss. Perhaps he had been present in the expedition of Sesac, and was now animated with the same ambition. T.—It would be difficult for a foreign king to traverse Egypt with so large an army, (C.) unless he had conquered or intimidated the king of the country. H.—Hence some believe that the Ethiopia here in question, was a part of Arabia. C. Torniel.—But it is more probable that it lay south of Egypt, as the troops of Zara are joined with the Lybians. C. 16:8. Salien, A. 3094. T.—A king of Arabia would hardly have had so many subjects. C.—Three. Some would read thirteen, as Anai takes notice of the great number of chariots. C. 16:8. Jun. Malvenda. C.—But surely the number here specified is sufficient. The minds of men are very different. In the former chapter we find them complaining of the too great numbers! H.

Ver. 10. Meet him, fearing lest he should lay waste his dominions, as Sesac had done. M.—Sephata, or Sephala, a great valley to the west of Maresa, (C.) which is a city of Juda. M.—Sept. have, “in the vale north of Maresa.” H.

Ver. 11. Help. Heb. “to help; whether with many, or with those who have no power.” The same sentiment was expressed by Jonathas. 1 K. 14:6. Those who have God with them are secure of victory. C.—If God be with us, who is against us?

Ver. 12. Terrified. Heb. and Sept. “struck,” as he had done Jeroboam. C. 13:15. H.

Ver. 13. Gerara was on the southern borders, twenty-three miles from Maresa. Eus. C.—The Ethiopians were pursued perhaps for many days. T.—Destruction. Prot. “they they could not recover themselves.” Heb. “there was no quarter given;” or, “so that none were left alive.” C.—If this were the case, the number of the slain far exceeded that the Jeroboam’s army. C. 13. H.

Ver. 14. Gerara. The adjacent territory is now uncultivated. Jos. 13:3. —Great. Heb. “a fear of the Lord;” (v. 12) an extraordinary (C.) panic. H.—The Philistines had assisted the enemy, and therefore their cities were invaded; (M.) or these belonged to Zara. C.

Ver. 15. Destroyed. Heb. “smote also the tents of cattle.” Sept. “they cut in pieces the tents of cattle, the Amazons;” or, according to the Vat. copy, (H.) “the Alimazonians,” as they seem to have read aeli mánim, which may be well rendered, “the tents of the Mineans,” a people of Arabia. C. 20:1 and 26:7 and Judg. 10:11. C.—If these nations came to punish Asa, for banishing their foreign worship, (v. 12) as the Sieur de Folard thinks the sacred penman insinuates, (v. 5) we need not wonder that they met with such ill success, and that not one of them was spared, as God avenged his own cause, v. 12. 13. H.—We read of no cavalry here, though it is mentioned, C. 16:8. It seems not to have been considerable, as the people of Asia, the Greeks and Romans, trusted more to their infantry; and, in effect, no species of warfare is more costly to a state, nor less useful, than a multitude of horses, which were introduced in barbarous times. De Folard.

Ver. 1. Azarias is called Oded in Heb. 5:8. C.—But he was his son. H.—There was a high priest of the name of Azarias, about the same time. M.

Ver. 2. With him. He will continue thus to protect you, if you prove faithful. The Pelagians hence inferred, that man was to prepare his own heart for the reception of grace. But the text only speaks of external aid; and though it were understood of internal grace, (C.) we may merit an increase of grace, by a faithful co-operation (W.) with that which God has presented us. E. C.

Ver. 3. Shall pass, is not found in Heb. &c. and many supply, “had been.” D.—The Jews, and some interpreters, would explain all this of what had passed already; (C.) and this is the idea of the Prot. “Now, for a long season, Israel hath been without,” &c. H.—But the conclusion convinces us that this is a prediction; (v. 7) take courage. You shall not be involved in these miseries. Some explain the whole of the kingdom of Israel, which, from its commencement till after its final ruin, persevered in its rebellion against the true God. Sanctius.—Others think the kingdom of Juda was also concerned, and its state of captivity at Babylon foretold. Lyran.—But its full completion includes the latter ages, particularly after the murder of the Messias, (T.) and seems of the same nature as the prophecy of Osee, (3:4) as our Saviour himself insinuates. Mat. 24:6. 9. 13. C.

Ver. 4. And when. Sept. “and he shall convert them to the Lord, ... and shall be found by them.” H.—This will be verified in the last days. Rom. 11:26. M.

Ver. 5. Cometh in, in public or private transactions. See Lev. 26:36.

Ver. 6. Nation, both in the times of Baasa, who fought against Asa, and afterwards. For the same prophecy may be literally explained of more thing than one. M.—Distress. Our Saviour says, Then shall they deliver you up to be afflicted, &c. But he that shall persevere to the end, shall be saved.

Ver. 8. Azarias, the son, is omitted in Heb. and the Vat. Sept. which reads Adad, (H.) but it is supplied in the other editions, and in the Syriac, (C.) as v. 1. H.—Taken: we do not read on what occasion. C. 17:2. His father had seized upon Bethel, &c. C. 13:19. C.—Yet Asa waged war himself with the king of Israel.—Dedicated. Sept. “renewed,” as the altar had been neglected, or injured by the continual fire; (M.) or this was the extraordinary (H.) altar, which Solomon had used at the dedication of the temple. The multitude of Asa’s victims required more than one, v. 11. It is not probable that God’s worship had been neglected till the 15th year of this pious king, (v. 9) since even his wicked father was punctual in this respect. C. 13:11. Before, at the higher end of the priests’ court, to the east of the altar of holocausts. C.

Ver. 9. Simeon. This tribe was intimately connected with that of Juda, though many had revolted. Some afterwards returned, as they did from other parts, actuated either by motives of interest or of religion. C. 34:6. 3 K. 11:13. C.

Ver. 10. Month, Sivan, or May, when the feast of Pentecost occurs. M.

Ver. 11. Spoils, which they had sold, and now testified their gratitude. T.—Rams. Prot. “sheep.”

Ver. 12. He went. Heb. and Sept. “They proceeded, according to the covenant, to seek.” H.—They swore upon the altar, or passed between the divided victims. Gen. 15:9. 17. C.—This solemn act was usual, and more necessary in times of trouble. M.

Ver. 13. Said he, is not in Heb. &c. H.—Die, according to Deut. 17:7.

Ver. 15. Curse. Heb. “oath.” M.—Sept. “all Juda rejoiced on account of the oath.” H.

Ver. 16. Mother, or grandmother. C.—There were perhaps two of the name, and Abia had married one as well as Roboam. M.—Deposed, &c. Heb. “from being queen.” Sept. “he removed Maacha, ... that she should not minister to Astarte; and he cut the idol in pieces, and burnt it,” &c. H.—Syr. “because she had celebrated a feast to idols.” But it seems she had set up a stone, which Asa burnt. See 3 K. 15:13. C.—Priapus is added by the Vulg. to explain Heb. “the idol of, or in the grove,” (H.) Asera or Astarte. C.

Ver. 17. Israel, to the honour only of the true God. C. 14:2 and 3 K. 15:14. H.—Perfect, with respect to the external worship, (T.) or hitherto, (H.) though he offended afterwards. C. 16:7. 12. T.—Other altars, besides that at Jerusalem, might be dispensed with, (W.) by God’s authority. H.

Ver. 18. Vowed, in the wars against Jeroboam and Zara. See 1 Par. 26:27.

Ver. 19. Year. Usher dates from the separation of the two kingdoms; and this year corresponds with the 15th of Asa, v. 10. See 3 K. 15:16. C. Torniel, A. 3094.

2 PARALIPOMENON 16

Ver. 1. Six and thirtieth year of his kingdom. That is, of the kingdom of Juda, taking the date of it from the beginning of the reign of Roboam. Ch.—It was the 16th of Asa. We read that Raasa died in the 26th year of Asa. 3 K. 16:8. How then could he fight with him in the 36th? T.—Rama was on an eminence, and commanded the pass below. Baasa wished to cut off all communication with the kingdom of Juda, as he knew many of his subjects had emigrated for the sake of the true religion. C. 15:9. C.—He had taken the city from the tribe of Benjamin. T.

Ver. 3. There is, Heb. is indeterminate: “a league,” &c. Sept. “Make a league.... behold I have sent thee gold and silver. Come and drive away from me Baasa, king,” &c.—That. Prot. “go, break thy league.” H.—Asa induces the king of Damascus to act perfidiously. C.—Otherwise it is not unlawful to make use of the arms of infidels, unless where God has forbidden it. Grot. Jur. ii. 15. 9. Masius in Jos. ix. 15. —David had recourse to Achis, and the Machabees to the Romans. C. —Some kings are blamed for making leagues with the princes of Israel, because they had been warned to the contrary; and Asa was severely reprehended, as he had already received such assurances of the divine protection, (C. 14:12 and 15:7) that nothing but pusillanimity could have induced him (H.) to give away the sacred treasures, in order to obtain this aid of the Syrian king, v. 7.

Ver. 4. Nephthali. This seem preferable to the Heb. reading, 3 K. 15:20. C.—Prot. “all the store-cities.” Sept. “all the environs.” H.—Arab. “all the arsenals of the cities of Nephthali.”

Ver. 7. Syria. It seems more natural to read Israel. C.—But we must remember that Benadad was an ally of Israel; and if he had not been bribed, he would have come to the assistance of Baasa, (H.) and thus both might have fallen a prey to Asa, as the much greater forces of Zara had done. T.

Ver. 9. Behold. Prot. “run to and fro throughout the whole earth, to shew himself strong in the behalf of them whose heart is perfect towards him.” Sept. “to shew power in every heart full, or perfect, in his regard.” H.—Asa fell on this occasion through human frailty, but rose again by repentance.—Thee, as they were till the death of Baasa. 3 K. 15:32.

Ver. 10. Prison. Lit. “in bonds,” (nervum) made of leather thongs or nerves, (H.) or of iron, to confine either the neck or the feet. Isidor. orig. 5. ult.—Heb. “the house of disturbance.” Sept. &c. “prison.” Some explain it (C.) of the stocks to enclose the neck. Vatable.—Time, either because they expressed the same sentiments as the prophet, (C.) or because they disapproved of his imprisonment. T.—Sept. “Asa made havoc among the people,” &c. H.

Ver. 12. Most, &c. Heb. “till his disease got upwards,” (C.) to the head (T.) and heart, (H.) when the gout generally proves fatal. A. Lapidé—Sept. “till he was very ill:” (H.) a just punishment for his having confined the prophet in fetters; but of a temporal nature, as he sinned through passion, and died penitent, his heart being perfect (C. 15:17) all or the most part of his days, particularly in the last. W.—Rather. Heb. and Sept. simply, “physicians.” H.—Yet it was not the having recourse to them, with some degree of confidence, that is here reprehended, but the placing too much trust in men, (C.) and too little in God, the sovereign arbiter of life and death. H.

Ver. 14. Sepulchre. Heb. “sepulchres,” as there were many separate apartments in the same cavern. C.—Asa had prepared one cell, as David and Solomon had done. M. T.—Odoriferous (mertriciis.) Such as harlots delight in, (Prov. 7:16,) to entice the sensual. D.—Heb. zenim, may be derived from zana, fornicari. It denotes a mixture of perfumes. M.—But here the Vulg. read zunim. D.—Heb. and Sept. “they laid him on a bed, and filled it with aromatical spices, and with various sorts of perfumers’ ointments, and they made him a very great funeral, or (H.) burning.” Prot.—It is not clear whether the body was placed on a bed of state, and these perfumes were used to remove every disagreeable smell, or the body itself was rather consumed along with them, a practice which seems to have become more common since the days of Asa. Jer. 34:5. 1 K. 31:12. Amos 6:10. Joram was deprived of this honour. C. 21:19. C.—Sanctius adduces many examples, to prove that the spices were burnt only near the body; (T.) and the Hebrews generally preferred to inter the corpse. Corpora condere quam cremare è more Ægyptio. Tacit. Hist. v.

2 PARALIPOMENON 17

Ver. 1. Israel. In consequence of the civil broils, which ensued after the death of Baasa. The two kingdoms had been nearly equal.

Ver. 2. Numbers, who were kept on foot; probably as in the days of David.

Ver. 3. First. Before his fall: some copies add, “and last,” (La Haye) as the Gothic MS. used by Mariana does, agreeably to the Scripture style. D.—David began and ended well. H.

Ver. 5. Presents, as was customary, (1 K. 10:27,) or tribute. C.

Ver. 6. When. Heb. "And his heart was elevated in the ways of the Lord." He was endued with courage to undertake the great work of banishing all abuses out of his dominions, seeing that the people were well affected, and the Lord urged him forward. H.—He trusted no so much to his great army or riches, as to a good conscience, (T.) which made him fear no difficulties; (1 Jo. 3:21,) doubting not but God would grant him success, as he endeavoured to keep his laws. C.—Groves of idols, (M.) though he tolerated the high places, which had been consecrated to God. C. 20:33 and 3 K. 22:43. H.—Good works, rewarded by God, encouraged people to proceed in virtue. W.

Ver. 7. Princes. Political, (T.) to see that all paid attention to the proper teachers; (Mal. 2:7. C.) and thus to partake in that good work. M.—The princes might also give instruction by word (C.) and example. H.

Ver. 9. Book. The Pentateuch, or its abridgment, the book of Deuteronomy, (M.) which they read and explained. C.—People. It was not sufficient to destroy idolatry, (M.) unless the people were taught how to serve the true God. H.

Ver. 10. War. They had witnessed the fruitless attempt of Zara. C. 14:15. H.

Ver. 11. Philistines. Though they had been reduced by David, they had sometimes proved remiss in the payment of tribute.—Arabians, who lived near the Ethiopians, and the Dead Sea. C. 21:19. They had been subdued by Solomon, (3 K. 10:15) and were rich in cattle. Ezech. 27:21. The name is not so comprehensive as we generally make it. C.

Ver. 12. Houses. Prot. "castles." Heb. biraniyoth. Birah is properly a Chal. word, and is added after susan, to imply that it was a royal castle, (C.) or palace. (H.) 2 Esd. 1:1.—Sept. often use baris in the same sense. C.—It became a provincial word in Palestine, for a place shut up on all sides and built like a tower. S. Jer. ad Princep.—David calls the temple a palace (habbirah) for God. 1 Par. 29:1. C.—Josaphat employed his immense riches in beautifying the country, and erecting storehouses, v. 5.—Walled. Prot. "cities of store." H. See C. 15:4.

Ver. 14. Ednas was the chief of the five generals, who had under their command 1,160,000, (C.) besides the garrison soldiers, v. 19. H.—So great power and riches had not been seen in Juda since the days of Solomon. C.—They were not all on duty at the same time, but were able to bear arms (M.) when called out.

Ver. 16. Consecrated. Heb. "a volunteer of the Lord," (H.) serving at his own expence, (T.) or with remarkable zeal. C.—Perhaps he was of the tribe of Levi, (M.) or had taken the vows of the Nazarites, &c.

Ver. 17. After. Heb. and Sept. “And of Benjamin, Eliada, a valiant man of the army.” H.—It seems all were not chosen from Juda. M.

Ver. 19. King, at different times. Sept. “waiting upon” him, (H.) like the companies which David had appointed, (C.) but far more numerous. H.—The dominions of Juda were now pretty extensive, and well cultivated. The population must have amounted to near six millions, for whose support recourse must have been had to commerce. Rome had once almost four million inhabitants, and Cairo is said to contain seven millions, while China has two hundred millions. C.—We must reflect that many from the other tribes had taken refuge in the kingdom of Juda. T.—It would be too bold to suppose, with Kennicott, that so many numbers have been corrupted. H. C. 13:3.

2 PARALIPOMENON 18

Ver. 1. Affinity, taking Achab’s daughter for his son’s wife. T. C. 21:6. 3 K. 22.

Ver. 3. War. Josaphat was too complaisant. He was rebuked by the son of Hanani, as Asa had been by his father; (C. 16:7) and, not long after, Eliezer reproached him for joining in alliance with Ochozias,. C. 20. C.—He acted without an ill intention, and was more easily pardoned. W.

Ver. 14. Hands. He ironically (C.) alludes to the declarations of the false prophets. H.

Ver. 18. Ye. In 3 K. he addresses his discourse chiefly to Achab. C.

Ver. 20. Said. See 3 K. 22. The Rabbins pretend that the spirit of Naboth came forth. But it was satan, or an evil spirit. T.

Ver. 21. So. The Lord permits evil, but he does not approve of it. C.—Homer makes Jupiter send a deluding dream to Agamemnon. Iliad B. —The delusive predictions of impostors, are one great source of calamities. D.

Ver. 25. Amelech. Sept. and Syr. “to Joas, the commander, son of the father. H.—He had perhaps the government of affairs at Samaria, during his king.” Achab’s absence. T.

Ver. 27. People. Mark what I say. The event will quickly prove whether I am a prophet or an impostor. H.

Ver. 29. Dress. Prot. “disguised himself, and they went.” See 3 K. 22:30.

Ver. 31. Turned. Heb. “moved them from him.” They felt that he was under God’s protection; and discovered that he was not the king of Israel. H.

2 PARALIPOMENON 19

Ver. 2. Thou. Sept. “O king Josaphat, if thou helpest the sinner; or, wilt thou befriend one hated by the Lord?” Prot. “shouldst thou... love them that hate the Lord?” H.—The Donatists hence inferred, that it was not lawful to converse with sinners. But S. Aug. (c. ep. Par. 2:18) replied, that Josaphat was blamed for aiding Achab in the contempt of the true prophet, and for going to battle conformably to the predictions of impostors. Both kings offended, but in a different degree. W.—We must also keep at as great a distance as possible from the notorious enemies of God, as their conversation is dangerous. T.—Evil communications corrupt the best of manners. See Ps. 138. &c.

Ver. 3. Works. Sept. “words.” Prot. “things.” H.—The merit of Josaphat screened him from punishment. T.—Prepared. Sept. “directed.” M.—Syr. “disposed.” Faith teaches that we can do no good of ourselves, but that we have free will to choose either good or evil.

Ver. 4. Ephraim. This was the northern boundary, as Dan or Emath had been under David and Solomon. C.

Ver. 6. And whatsoever. Heb. “who is with you in the judgment.” The Lord will confirm you just decisions, and punish your injustice. H.—God stood in the synagogue of gods, or judges. Ps. 81:1. Judges ought not so much to regard man as God, when they pass sentence. C.—How then will the Anabaptists deny that a man may sit in judgment?

Ver. 7. Gifts. The contrary is the source of so much corruption. H.—It would be proper to inscribe this sentence on the walls of all courts of judicature, or rather on the hearts of all in office. T.—None but the true religion can produce such maxims. C.

Ver. 8. And the. Heb. “of the Lord, and for disputes among the people among themselves, (H.) and they returned, (v. 4) or dwelt at Jerusalem.” C.—Sept. “to judge the inhabitants of,” &c. Josephus (ix. 1.) says, “he returned.” Syr. “And being returned.... he exhorted.”

Ver. 10. Cities. He addressed the judges of the capital, to whom appeals might be made. C. M.—Kindred, with respect to inheritances and matrimonial cases. Heb. “blood,” or murder, whither casual or wilful.

Ver. 11. Amarias, (1 Par. 6:11) or rather Azarias, the father of Johanan. ib. v. 9.—Office, in civil matters. C.—Here is a plain distinction between the spiritual and temporal authority, instituted by God. Deut. 17. Num. 27. W. T.—Masters. Heb. shoterim, to execute the sentence; (D.) or “officers.”—You. Prot. “with the good.” H.

Ver. 1. Of the Ammonites; people sprung from them. Those who explain the Psalm 82 of this war, find many nations mentioned. Some of these, not daring to appear openly, assumed the name of Ammonites. Perhaps we should read (C.) Mannim. H.—Sept. “the Mineans,” who dwelt in Arabia Felix, upon the Red Sea, (Pliny vi. 28.) or rather the Maonians, in the environs of Gaza. C.—Some MSS. and Latin editions have “Idumeans,” which is conformable to v. 11, 23, and S. Jerom Trad. Lyran, &c. M.

Ver. 2. Sea of Sodom, (H.) or the Red Sea. D.—Syria, which comprised the country of Ammon. M.—Perhaps Edom might rather have been in the text, as we find no Syrians in this war, but many of the Idumeans. C.—Adom and Arom, (Syria. H.) have often been confounded. 4 K. 16:6. C.—Asasonthamar, “the palm-tree cottage,” (Bochart) between Jericho and the Dead Sea.

Ver. 3. Juda. The whole kingdom was concerned. Sometimes a fast was proclaimed for one city. 3 K. 21:9. Jonas 3:7. C.—They were accustomed to fast, not only to subdue the flesh, but also for other necessities. W.

Ver. 4. Prot. “to ask help of.” H.—Cities. Here we have an example of a pilgrimage to a holy place, as God is more willing to hear the virtuous in one place than in another. C. 6:7. &c. W.

Ver. 5. New court of the priests. Why it is so called, does not appear.

C.—Some understand the court for the women; (Salien) others, that for Gentiles. Le Clerc.—Probably some of the courts had been found too spacious after the schism, and had been neglected; but now, as many had returned to serve the Lord in the dominions of Josaphat, he had made some repairs. T.

Ver. 7. All, or the greatest part. Heb. “drive out the inhabitants.” H.

Ver. 9. Sword of. Prot. “as the sword, judgment, or,” &c. Sept. “the sword, judgment, death, famine.” All these are sent in punishment of sin. H.—The sword of the enemy is a judgment of God. M.

Ver. 12. Judge and punish them, as they fight against thee? C.—Enough. Yet we read that Josaphat had above a million soldiers; and he knew that his father had discomfited a greater army of Zara with half the forces. He thus puts us in mind that no power can stand against God’s will; and he endeavours, by humility, to obtain the protection of heaven. The invading army must, however, have been very numerous, to extort these expressions from a potent king, and to have thrown his whole people into such consternation. It could hardly be less than that of Zara; and thus, in the space of a century, above two millions and a half of idolaters perished by the hand of God, without Juda losing a single man, v. 29. C. 13:17. H.

Ver. 13. Children. Even the little infants were deprived of the breasts, on such emergencies, that their cries might be more affecting. H. Joel 2:16. Judit. 4:8.—The pagans of Ninive even made the cattle also fast. Jonas 3:7. C. S. Amb. ser. 40. T.

Ver. 14. Spirit of prophecy. M.—Jahaziel is known only by this event. C.

Ver. 16. Six. Some translate “flowry ascent.” C.—Prot. “the cliff of Ziz.” H.—If it had been Zin, we might understand the desert of stony Arabia, where Ptolemy places the town of Ziza. C.—But we may recollect that the army was already advanced as far as Engaddi; (v. 2,) so that it seems to have lain nearer Jerusalem. H.—Jeruel, “the fear of God,” which name was given to the place, in consequence of the panic with which God struck the enemy. S. Jerom. M.

Ver. 19. High. Rejoicing at the promised deliverance. C.

Ver. 20. Thecua, two mile east of Bethlehem, on the road to Jeruel. Adric. M.—Believe. Faith is the foundation of all good works; (Heb. 11) but not alone sufficient, as here the people fasted and prayed, and would have fought, if God had not dispensed with them. See Jos. 23. W.—We may also translate Heb. “trust.”

Ver. 21. Ever. This was usually sung in times of joy. C. 5:13. The army seemed thus to be returning victorious. C.

Ver. 22. Ambushments, placed by the Moabites, (M.) and Ammonites, (H.) against Juda. Some detachments of Mount Seir, perhaps, coming suddenly on them, were taken for foes, and slaughtered. H.

Ver. 24. Tower. Maspha, in the tribe of Benjamin, (C.) or some other (H.) eminence. M.

Ver. 25. Insomuch. Heb. and Sept. “Three days passed, while they gathered the spoils, because it was great,” (H.) “without weight,” or estimation. C.

Ver. 26. Blessing. SS. Jerom and Epiphanius place Caphar-barucha, “the field of blessing,” near Hebron, on the east. Hither Abraham attended the Lord, when he was going to destroy Sodom. Epist. Paulæ.

Ver. 29. Lands, in the vicinity. M.—Israel, as he had lately treated Zara. C. 14:13. H.

Ver. 33. Places, erected in honour of God, but displeasing to him. C. 17:6. H.—The good king perhaps attempted to take these also away, but was obliged to desist by the rebellious people. M.—Hence we find that they are here blamed. H.—They would not conform exactly to the law, (Lev. 17:3. T.) and the king was not able to bring all to perfection. W.—“It is better to pass over.... vices, than to shew which we cannot subdue.” Tacit. An. iii.

Ver. 34. Which. Sept. “who wrote a book of the kings of Israel.” H.—Jehu rebuked Josaphat, C. 19. C.—His book is not extant. M.

Ver. 35. Things: the victory over Ammon, &c. H.—Wicked. See C. 16:3.

Ver. 36. Tharsis; probably Cilicia, (C.) or some part of the ocean.—Asion-gaber was on the Red Sea; and ships would not have been built there, to trade on the Mediterranean. C. 9:21. T.

2 PARALIPOMENON 21

Ver. 2. Azarias. The only difference between this and the former name is, that the younger brother’s (H.) has u at the end, (C.) Azrieu. Prot. and Sept. make no difference, which we should nevertheless expect. H.—Juda. Heb. “Israel.” Sept. Syr. &c. agree with the Vulg. editions, though most of the ancient Latin MSS. have Israel. Josephat ruled over the principal tribes. Yet it seems probable, from the versions, that the Heb. formerly read Juda.

Ver. 3. Pensions. Heb. “precious things.” Sept. “arms.”

Ver. 4. Sword. This cruel policy (H.) has been very common in the East. C.—Israel. They had perhaps opposed his impious plans, animated by his brethren. God presently chastised him with the rebellion of Idumea; and though Joram gained a victory over Seir, (4 K. 8:21) he was not able to reduce the nation, being called off by other wars, v. 16. His own subjects at Lobna, a Levitical city in Juda, also abandoned him. Dreadful evils were denounced in a letter from the prophet Elias, who had been translated to paradise nine years before, and at last the honours of sepulture were denied to the wicked king. T.

Ver. 6. Achab. It is supposed by Jezabel. She might be grand-daughter of Amri. C. 22:2. The infamous Athalia is blamed for most of the evils which her husband committed.

Ver. 7. Lamp; heir and successor. C. Ps. 131:17.

Ver. 10. Day, when the author lived. See 4 K. 8:20.

Ver. 11. Fornication; idolatry. M.—Heb. “and compelled Juda.” Sept. “seduced.” Syr. “dissipated Juda.” C.—He used every art of seduction and violence to introduce idolatry, to the ruin of his kingdom. H.

Ver. 12. Elias. Le Clerc would read Eliseus. Grotius supposes that all passed in a dream. Others think that Elias had written the letter before his removal from the conversation of men, some years before, foreseeing the impiety of Joram, and leaving the letter with Eliseus, to be delivered unto him. M. Jun.—But the most common opinion is, that the prophet wrote it in paradise, (C.) and sent it to the king by an angel, &c. Seder. xvii. Bellarm. T.—Elias had been taken away in the 18th year of Josaphat, who reigned 25; so he shewed this special care of Joram and his kingdom, so many years after his assumption. W.—Thus the saints in heaven interest themselves in our defence. 2 Mac. 15:11. H.—Prophet. Heb. “And there came in him a writing of,” &c. C.

Ver. 14. Thee is not expressed in Heb. but it is in the Sept. and the king was not only afflicted with illness, but with the losses of his people and family. H.

Ver. 15. By little. Heb. “by reason of the sickness, (H.) day by day,” or in two years time, v. 19. C.—He was probably ill so long. H.—Agrippa and Antiochus were treated in the same manner, (C.) with a diarrhoea, (M.) or dysentery, (C.) the vitals being corrupted. Valesius 40.

Ver. 16. Philistines; who, it seems, had been obedient since the days of David.—Ethiopians, who lay west of the Arabians, from the Red Sea to the lower Egypt and the Nile, (C.) bordering on Madian. There was another Ethiopia to the south of Egypt. M.

Ver. 17. Joachaz, alias Ochozias, (Ch.) or Azarias, in Heb. C. 22:1 and 6. C.—The variation of names seems to originate in the mistakes of transcribers, very frequently. If we found in some profane author, that Philip had only one son, Ander-alex, left, and that this son, Alex-ander, succeeded him, we should readily allow that the first syllables had been erroneously placed last, (Kennic.) as on this occasion aéz-ieu stands for ieu-aéz. Sept. has here Οχοζίας; as the other versions have also Ochozias, (C. 22:6) instead of Azrieu, (H.) a name given to Ozias, king of Juda, when it belonged to the priests, as it here belongs to one of the captains. C. 23:1. Sometimes we find Aézie. 4 K. 9:16. Strange inconsistency! Kennicott. See 4 K. 14:21.

Ver. 19. And. Prot. “And it came to pass that, in the process of time, after the end of two years, his bowels fell out, by reason of his sickness: so he died of sore diseases: And his people made no burning for him,” &c. (H.) not that the body was usually consumed, but no aromatical spices were burned near it, (Sanctius. T.) as in the funeral of Asa. C. 16:14. C.—The point is controverted.

Ver. 20. Rightly. Sept. “unpraised.” Heb. “without any satisfaction;” or, “he departed unregretted,” oppressed with illness, and odious to all.—Kings. Joas, Achaz, Achab, and Manasses, were disgraced in like manner, after their death. The Hebrews then shewed their resentment, without fear. The like custom prevailed in Egypt, and kept many within bounds. No person could receive the usual honours of burial, if his accusers could maintain their charge against his character before a court of above forty people, assembled for the purpose. Calumny was severely punished. But the kings themselves were to stand their trial, while their corpse was placed in the porch of the monument, and the priest spoke their funeral oration. The people testified their approbation or discontent, “and many of the kings have been deprived of a glorious and legal burial, on account of the opposition of the multitude.” Diod. i. and ii. C.

Ver. 1. Arabians and Philistines. C. 21:17. H.

Ver. 2. Forty-two, &c. Divers Greek Bibles read twenty-two, agreeably to 4 K. 8:18. (Ch.) with the Syr. and Arab. The Rom. (C.) and Alex. Sept. have “twenty.” H.—Ochozias was the youngest son, and his father died at forty years of age. C. 21:20. C.—Others would date from the birth of Amri, (Broughton) or of Athalia. But is most probable that we should read 22, as 4 K. C.—The contradiction has so much perplexed the commentators, that Walton (prol. 36) puts it among the quædam ἀπορά; and De Dieu says, “I would rather plainly confess that this difficulty is to us inexplicable.” The error here, “is plainly owing to a mistake of one of the Heb. numeral letters,” c, being put instead of m, which was formerly more similar than it is now. “In Origen’s Hexapla, one of the Greek copies (probably that found in Caracalla’s time) reads here cb, by rendering the number 22, εἰκοσι καὶ δυο, all which proofs make the mistake indubitable, and strongly recommend this method of correcting it.” Kennicott.—Mariana, T. &c. had already suggested this plan, (H.) which is very plausible. D.—Ochozias might reign twenty years with his father, and only one alone. 4 K. 8:26. W.

Ver. 3. Pushed. Heb. and Sept. “was his counsellor to,” &c.

Ver. 6. Ochozias. So all the versions read. Heb. “Azarias,” is probably incorrect, unless this man had three names. C.

Ver. 7. For. Prot. “and the destruction of Ahaziah was of God, by coming to Joram.” God had decreed to punish him by the hand of Jehu. 4 K. 9.

Ver. 8. Out. Heb. “exercising judgment with.”—Brethren, who had been themselves slain by the rovers. Ochozias employed his nephews at court, and they expected that he would make some stay at Jezrahel.

Ver. 9. Hid in the kingdom of Samaria, (Malvenda) at Mageddo, where he was wounded; though he was perhaps put to death at Jezrahel. 4 K. 9:27.—Buried him, at Jerusalem.—Reign. Heb. “the house of Ochozias had no one to bear the weight of the kingdom.” The children of the deceased were too young, particularly as most of the princes were slain. C.—Human hope failed, but God’s providence kept David’s issue on the throne, till Christ appeared. W.

Ver. 10. All, except Joas, (v. 11, and 4 K. 11:1. C.) ninety-five years after Solomon’s death. Mariana. D.

Ver. 11. High is not expressed in Heb. or Sept. but he is supposed to have been the pontiff. H.

2 PARALIPOMENON 23

Ver. 1. Seventh. Vat. Sept. by mistake, has “the eighth.”—Encouraged, or “strengthened.” Sept. &c. H.—Captains, whether Levites, or ancient officers of the crown, who were dissatisfied with the usurper. 4 K. 11.

Ver. 2. Israel, of which Juda formed a part. M.—At the time when the author lived, Israel was destroyed, so that there was no danger of a mistake.—Jerusalem, on a sabbath-day, and most likely on one of the three great festivals: (C.) Salien (A. 3157) thinks at the Passover, to avoid suspicion. M.

Ver. 4. Do. Though God’s promise was absolute, human means were to be used. W.

Ver. 5. To the sabbath. That is, to perform in your weeks the functions of your office, or the weekly watches. Ch.—Porters. Sept. “even to the entrance gates.”—House, where Athalia resided, or in the apartments of Joas in the temple.—Foundation. Sept. “middle.” Syr. “of the cooks, or guards.” H.—It led from the palace up the steps, v. 21. M.—Perhaps it was also called Sur, 4 K.—But let. This seems to be transposed out of its place from v. 6.

Ver. 7. Slain. Athalia ventured to enter; but she was alone, and not much feared. C.

Ver. 8. High. Heb. “the priest dismissed not the courses.” H.—In case of right and necessity, we see here what the high priest could do, though otherwise he would not interfere. W.

Ver. 10. Altar of holocausts, in the court of the priests, while the people stood in their own court. T.

Ver. 11. Crown. Lit. “diadem.”—Testimony. This is explained in the following sentence, (H.) which is not in Hebrew nor in many Latin MSS. The Jews understand the phylacteries. Deut. 17:18.

Ver. 13. Step. Heb. hamudo, “his pillar,” to which he ascended by steps. D.—Entrance into the court of the priests; but the tribune stood in that of the people, where Joas was in his royal attire.

Ver. 16. Himself, as God’s vicegerent. C.—A double covenant was made between God and the people, and between the king and his subjects. D.

Ver. 17. Idols. Prot. “images.” H.—Those are wilfully blind who will not distinguish these from the images of Christ and his saints. W.

Ver. 18. David, which had been long neglected. 1 Par. 24. M.

Ver. 20. Upper gate of the guards, at the back or western end of the temple. C. 5:5.

2 PARALIPOMENON 24

Ver. 3. Him. Joas, as Prot. (H.) and most interpreters understand it, with the Syr. &c. Joiada was too old to think of marrying again, as the Rabbins would explain the Heb. conformably to the Sept. and Arab. “himself.” C.—Joas did not probably marry two at once. Salien, A. 3766.—Amasias was born of Joadan. C. 25:1. M.—The high priest considered Joas as his son, being married to his aunt. H.

Ver. 5. Money. The half sicle, (Ex. 30:13. 4 K. 12:4. C.) which at first was required for the tabernacle, and afterwards for the repairs of the temple. W.

Ver. 6. Chief “priest,” (v. 11,) where he is called the first. Heb. “the head priest.”

Ver. 7. Children. All but Ochozias had been slain by the Arabs. The plural is often put for the singular. S. Jerom (Trad.) explains it of the priests of the idols, whom Athalia cherished as her own offspring.

Ver. 10. That, &c. Heb. “till it was done,” according to the law. Pagnin.

Ver. 11. From day. Lit. “every day,” (H.) when the chest was replenished. M.

Ver. 14. And for. Heb. “and to offer,” such as (H.) “mortars.” Prov. 27:22. Eali is thus translated. C.—Prot. “and spoons and vessels.”

Ver. 16. Israel, particularly to those of the kingdom of Juda. H.—His, David’s, house, (M.) as he had restored the crown to his offspring.

Ver. 17. Worshipped. Heb. “bowed down to the king, and he hearkened to them.” H.—The Jews say that the princes flattered him with the title of god, as he had been educated in the temple. E.—But this is improbable. C.—They petitioned for leave to re-establish the worship of Baal, (M.) and paid greater honours to the king than were becoming. D.

Ver. 18. Idols. Heb. “sorrows.” Sept. “the Astartes and idols.” C.

Ver. 19. Them. Calling heaven and earth to witness (C.) the unity of God. H.—These prophets might have been performing their sacred commission ever since the reign of Josaphat; during which time Eliseus, Micheas, Jehu, and others, lived. C. 20:14 and 18:27. C.

Ver. 20. Priest, refers to Zacharias. Sept. “Azarias.” H.—It is not certain whether this was the person whom Jesus Christ speaks, (Mat. 23:35. C.) as S. Jerom believes; (ib.) or our Saviour alludes to one of the minor prophets, (T.) or to the father of the baptist. Baronius. H.—Sight. Heb. “above,” perhaps on the steps between the two courts. C.—To make. Heb. “therefore hath he forsaken you.”

Ver. 22. Require it. I commit my cause into his hands. M.—The vengeance of the Lord was not slack. H.

Raro antecedentem scelestum Deseruit pede pœna claudo. Horace.

Ver. 23. Damascus. Hazeal had before invaded Jerusalem. 4 K. 12:17. The Syrian army, which routed Juda, was comparatively small. C.—The idolatrous princes now received the due punishment of their crimes, v. 17.

Ver. 24. Shameful, is not expressed in Heb. But the putting a king to the torture, (v. 25.) and upbraiding him with his ingratitude and perfidy, was a great indignity. H.—He had probably entered into engagements with Hazeal, when he prevailed on him to depart, the year before. C.—Nabuchodonosor treated Sedecias in like manner. 4 K. 25:6. The author of the Heb. Trad. among the works of S. Jerom, (H.) asserts that the children of Joas were slain before his eyes, while the Syrians reproached him for the unjust murder of Zacharias. C.

Ver. 25. Servants. By whom the man is slain, who had murdered his spiritual father. W.—Son. Heb. “sons.” See v. 7. Some think that the brothers of Zacharias were slain, that they might not attempt to revenge his death.—Kings. These sepulchres are amazingly beautiful and spacious. The doors are six feet high, and formed, like the rest, of solid stone, cut in the most elegant manner. Doubdan 26. C.

Ver. 26. Moabites. Sept. read, “the Ammonite.... and Moabite.” See 4

K. 12:21. H.

Ver. 27. And. Sept. "And all his sons: for five came upon him," with the rest of the conspirators. H.—They have read differently. C.—Sum. Heb. "the greatness of the burden on him," (H.) imposed by the Syrians, (v. 24) or denounced by the prophets. Mossa is often taken for a prophetic menace. C.—More. Heb. "in the researches." Prot. "story of the book." Addo entitled his book Modross. C. xxii. 22. H.—Only some extracts from these works have come down to us. Esdras had them before him. The abridgments have occasioned their loss, as has been the case with many other excellent works. This was the more easy, as writing was not then so common. C.

2 PARALIPOMENON 25

Ver. 2. Heart, and with perseverance.

Ver. 5. Families. The officers were well acquainted with their soldiers; (C.) and all were more interested for each other's welfare, (D.) than they are in the present system. C.—Young. Prot. "choice men, able to go." H.

Ver. 6. Thousand. Yet "they were so greatly reduced, but a few years before, that there were.... only fifty horsemen," &c. 4 K. 13:7. Kennicott—That might be true, at one time, when the people fled from the king's banners, through fear. But they were still in the country, and God gave Israel a saviour. ib. v. 5. See C. 13:3 and 17:19. H.—Silver. This sum was very small, for so great a multitude. Salien suspects talents of gold are meant, though the soldiers were paid in silver. But the sum was only the hire for a short time; (M.) and was not distributed among the soldiers, who were to live on plunder, but went into the king's coffers, (C.) or belonged to the officers alone. Mariana. D.—The talent of silver was worth 34*l.* 3*s.* 9*d.* Arbuthnot.

Ver. 8. And. Heb. "But if thou wilt go, do; be strong; (he speaks ironically) God," &c. Sept. "if thou thinkest that thou art strong with these, the Lord," &c. Amasias ought to have known that no dependance was to be placed on Israel, while they despised God. C. 15:2.

Ver. 9. What will. Syr. &c. "What then is my crime in having given the," &c.—To the. Heb. or, "for the army." H.

Ver. 12. Rock, afterwards called Jecteel. Some take it to be Petra. 4 K.

Ver. 13. Samaria, the capital, where they had made their complaints to king Joas; and receiving no redress, began to plunder, as far as Bethhoron the lower, which Solomon had repaired, and his successors had retained, though it belonged to the territory of Ephraim. C. 13:5. Jos. 18:13. C.

Ver. 16. Art thou. Heb. adds, “appointed.” H.—The very character of prophet, authorized him to give counsel even to kings. Amasias had perhaps obeyed this prophet, (v. 7) but now his heart was puffed up with victory.—Kill thee, sixteen years hence.

Ver. 17. Another, and fight. He supposed Joas had connived at his subjects’ invasion, (v. 13. H. See 4 K. 14:8. C.) and he now required all Israel to submit to him. Josephus. T.

Ver. 18. Thistle. This fable insinuated how much Joas despised the insolence of his antagonist, (H.) and Amasias had soon reason to repent. T.

Ver. 20. It. Prot. “it came of God, that he might deliver them into the hand of their enemies, because they sought after the gods of Edom.” H.—The king was permitted to give ear to evil counsellors. C.—“Jupiter deprives those of understanding, whom he means to destroy.” Homer—The heart is hardened on account of former sins. W.

Ver. 24. Obededom, whose descendants guarded these treasures. 1 Par. 26:15. C.—Hostages. Prot. “the hostages also, and returned to Samaria.” H.—Some think that the kings of Juda had before detained these men. E.—Others suppose that Joas had taken many nobles, whom he exchanged for their sons. But this is all conjecture.

Ver. 28. David. Heb. “of Juda,” contrary to the Sept. Syr. &c. C.

2 PARALIPOMENON 26

Ver. 1. Ozias, called Azarias (4 K. 14:21. C.) improperly. H.

Ver. 2. Juda, till the reign of Achaz. 4 K. 16:6. It had revolted under Joram. C.

Ver. 4. Done. And was successful, as long as he attended to the high priest. Num. 27:21. W.

Ver. 5. God, or who had the gift of intelligence and prophecy from God. Heb. “who was intelligent in the visions of God.” Others have read birath, with the Sept. “in the fear,” or Chal. &c. “instructing in the fear of the Lord.” The Jews childishly understand Zacharias to mean the king himself, in the early part of his reign. Others suppose the priest, who was slain by Joas, is designated. Lyran.—But this was rather his son (T. Cajet. C.) and successor, as well as a prophet, who had therefore a more perfect knowledge of God; though none can comprehend his being. H.

Ver. 6. In. Prot. “about Ashdod.” Sept. “he built (or repaired) the cities of Azotus,” to keep under the Philistines, who had revolted under Joram. C. 21:16.

Ver. 7. Gurbaal. Gerera, (S. Jer. Trad.) or Gebal. Ps. 82:8. Sept. “the rock,” or Petra, in Arabia, where Stephanus places the Gabalenes.—Ammonites. Heb. mehunim. Sept. “Mineans,” (C. 20:1. H.) upon the Red Sea, (Steph.) or Mediterranean, (Pliny vi. 28,) or in Arabia Felix. Strabo. M.

Ver. 8. Gifts. Tribute. C. 27:5. C.—Victories. Prot. “the strengthened himself exceedingly.” H.

Ver. 9. Corner. Repairing what Joas had demolished. 4 K. 14:13. T.

Ver. 10. Wilderness, for the protection of shepherds. 4 K. 17:9.—Plains. Heb. “valleys, and in the plains husbandmen, and vinedressers in the mountains, and in Carmel; for he loved the earth, or husbandry,” like David. 1 Par. 17:25. &c.—Carmel, means, “the vine of God;” as both the mount in Juda, where Nabal resided, and that on the Mediterranean Sea, were famous for wine. Ozias probably cultivated the former mountain. C.

Ver. 11. Doctor. Heb. shoter. Sept. “judge.” Prot. “ruler.” H.—The term is commonly understood of one who executes the sentence of the judge. But this employment does not suit a general, (C.) though such a one might well command. It many denote any “officer.” H.

Ver. 15. Engines. They are here mentioned for the first time. C.—For the. Heb. “for he was wonderfully helped till he was established.” H.—He invented many things for the defence of his kingdom. C.

Ver. 17. Azarias. The prophet, who had hitherto kept the king (H.) within bounds, was now no more, v. 5. T.

Ver. 18. To thee. For usurping spiritual authority, the king was opposed by the high priest; and God confirmed the sentence of the latter, by striking Ozias with the leprosy; on which account, the was not only cast out of the temple, but also lost his kingdom, being obliged to live apart; (Lev. 13:46,) and after death, he could not be buried with his ancestors. W.

Ver. 19. Forehead. So that it could not be concealed. According to the rigour of the law, such an offender was to be slain. Num. 3:10 and 18:7. The leprosy was considered as equivalent, and is styled destruction, (v. 16,) and death. Isai. 7:1. M. See 4 K. 15:6.

Ver. 22. Prophet. Yet we find little concerning him in the prophecy of Isaias; so that the work has been lost, except what Esdras hath preserved. C.

Ver. 23. Leper. So much was the disease abhorred, (C.) as well as the king’s late conduct. H.

2 PARALIPOMENON 27

Ver. 2. Lord. Like Ozias, to offer incense. He was content with the royal dignity, without arrogating to himself that of the priests. C.—Transgressed. Heb. “acted corruptly,” on the heights. 4 K. 15:35. H.

Ver. 3. Gate, on the east, repairing (T.) and beautifying it so, (H.) that Jeremias (26:10,) calls it New. T.—Ophel, on the walls of the city, (C.) towards the eastern porch of the temple. Joseph. S. Jer. in Isa. xxxii. 14.—Here the Nathineans dwelt. 2 Esd. 3:26. C.—Kimchi, &c. translate, “a citadel.” T.

Ver. 5. Measures, (coros.) Heb. corim, also, (H.) means an “ass;” as this burden was sufficient for one, being equivalent to 30 Romans bushels. A. Lapide. M.—Give him. Sept. adds, “These things did the king of Ammon bring to him every year, in the first year, and in the second, and the third.” H.—After paying tribute three years, the Ammonites revolted, and were subdued by Joatham, as they had been by his father. C. 26:7.

Ver. 7. Wars, with Rasin and Phacee. 4 K. 15:37.—Juda. What concerned both kingdoms was carefully preserved; and Esdras informs us from what records he composed this work. C.

2 PARALIPOMENON 28

Ver. 3. Benennon, “the son of Ennom.” 4 K. 16.—Consecrated. Heb. “burnt.” H.

Ver. 4. Tree. Remarkable for its size and beauty; as the heathens supposed that some deity lay there concealed. Mariana. T.

Ver. 5. Booty. Heb. “number of captives.” H.—The two kings had besieged Jerusalem without success: (4 K.) but now their forces were divided. M.—The motives of this war were unjust. Mic. 2:8.

Ver. 7. At the same time, is not in Heb. (C.) or Sept. H.—Zechri, one of the generals of Phacee, slew the king’s son, &c. after the engagement. —Next. Joseph and Aman enjoyed the like dignity. Gen. 41:42. Est. 13:3. The high priests had also seconds. 4 K. 25:18. Sept. “vicar of the king.” C.

Ver. 9. Heaven, and cries for vengeance against you. Though God designed to punish his people, your cruelty will not be excused. H.—The effect of this remonstrance, shews that all the kingdom of Israel was not devoid (C.) of feeling and religion. H.—They set a noble example for Christian princes to follow after a victory. D.

Ver. 10. God, who forbids this. Lev. 25:43. Mic. 2:8. 9. Heb. “are there not with you, yea, with you, sins against?” &c. If Juda have deserved punishment, reflect if you also be not guilty, v. 13. Sept. “Behold, am I not here with you to bear witness to the Lord?”

Ver. 13. Our, is expressed in Heb. and Sept. These people justly confess that they stand in need of pardon, without adding fresh crimes. H.—The cruel treatment of the people of Juda, and the design to make them slaves, were grievous sins. C.

Ver. 15. Above. Heb. "by name." They deserved to be immortalized. H.—Anointed. This was very common, (M.) and refreshing. Celsus i. 3.

Ver. 16. Kings. Heb. "kings." But Sept. have the singular. 4 K. 16:7.

Ver. 17. And. Sept. "Because the Edomites had come, ... and taken many prisoners." Prot. "for again," &c. H.

Ver. 18. Gamzo. Syr. "Garam," perhaps Gaza, (C.) or a city south of Juda. M.

Ver. 19. Of Juda. Heb. "Israel." But the Sept. have "Juda." H.—The names are often used promiscuously. C.—For he. Sept. "because he or it had apostatised from the Lord."—Script. Prot. "he made Judah naked, and transgressed sore," &c. Thus were the idolatrous Israelites exposed to shame and misery, after they had adored the golden calf. Ex. 32:25. H.—In the Bacchanalian riots, the pagans threw off their garments, to shew that they trusted entirely in their false gods. T.—Achaz had plunged his country in distress, (C.) both of soul and body, (H.) by his scandalous deportment. C.—Of all help, is added by way of explanation; (T.) as God would no longer rescue his rebellious people from the hands of the enemy. H.

Ver. 20. And. Heb. and Sept. "And.... the king.... came against him, and smote him." Heb. continues, "but strengthened him not" in the end; though he had been invited, (v. 16. H.) and had actually made a diversion in favour of Achaz. But not being satisfied, he afterwards returned, and made cruel havoc in the country, imposing tribute upon the king, v. 21. 4 K. 16:7 and 18:7. It is therefore unnecessary to correct the Heb. with Grotius, to make it agree with 4 K. 16:7. Thus—he "came to his aid, and relieved him from his distress, (v. 21,) and granted him assistance."

Ver. 21. Gifts. Tribute. C.—Heb. "and gave it to, &c.: but he did not help him." H.

Ver. 22. Moreover. Sept. "but to distress him."—Wicked policy availeth nothing, but entails much evil. W.—King. Heb. "that king Achaz." The sacred writer thus stigmatizes the impious king, who grew worse the more he was scourged. H.—This was the monster, which could not be tamed. Amama.—Eva. "ille," is five times used as a reproach, and often to signify applause. Kimchi.—By himself, is an addition. Amama.—It gives us to understand (H.) that Achaz acted thus of his own accord. C.—Sept. "And king Achaz said, (23) I will studiously seek the gods of Damascus, who have buffeted me," &c. H.—This resolution he took while the arms of Rasin were formidable to him; but he put it in execution after the king of Assyria had delivered him, when he went to Damascus to return him thanks. 4 K. 16:10. This stupid blindness and impiety irritated God so much, that he abandoned Juda to the arms of the king, who had been called in as a protector. How could he expect aid from gods who had suffered their own country and people of Damascus to fall a prey to the invader! C.

Ver. 24. God: first through fear of the Assyrian, (4 K.) but afterwards he permitted it to continue in the same state of irreligion. C.—So easily do people fall into this abyss, who begin to neglect instruction! H.—Ezechias took care to open the temple again. C. 29:3. C.—None of the former kings had dared (H.) to prohibit the worship of the true God. T.

Ver. 27. Israel is put as comprising Juda. H. C. 20:34 and 24:16. &c. C.

2 PARALIPOMENON 29

Ver. 1. Abia. The last syllable is neglected, 4 K. 18:2. H.—Some assert that she was a descendant of the high priest, who had been stoned. S. Jerom, Trad. C. 24:20. T.

Ver. 3. Reign, in the assembly, which met to recognize his authority. Lyran.—Them, adorning them with plates of gold. 4 K. 18:16.

Ver. 4. Street, or court, before the eastern gate. C.

Ver. 5. Sanctuary, or temple, v. 7. The Jews suppose that idols had been placed in the very sanctuary: (Lyran) but why then were the doors shut? C.

Ver. 7. Sanctuary, or court of the priests, where the victims were slain. The blood of some was taken into the most holy place, on the day of expiation. C.

Ver. 8. Trouble. Heb. zu'ae, (H.) is rendered vexation. Isai. 28:19. Sept. "ecstasy." The Jews were frequently driven from their homes. M.—There were at a loss what to do, confounded and despised. H.

Ver. 9. Wives. C. 28:8. C.—So had the wives and family of king Joram been treated. C. 21. H.

Ver. 10. Covenant, swearing to observe the law given by Moses. M.

Ver. 11. Negligent. Heb. adds, “now,” when every thing tends to open your eyes. H.

Ver. 16. Cedron, as Josias did with the idolatrous altars. 4 K. 23:12. The priests brought what was unclean from the inner temple into the porch. H.—This labour lasted eight days, as the cleansing of the porches had done. C. D.

Ver. 17. Month, Nisan, corresponding with our March, (M.) when Ezechias began his reign. Salien, A. 3309.

Ver. 19. Defiled. Heb. “cast out (C.) in his.”—Forth. Heb. and Sept. “We have prepared and purified, behold they are,” &c. H.

Ver. 21. Seven. Only one was prescribed for sins of ignorance. Lev. 4:13. 22. S. Jer. Trad.—But the late transgressions were of a different nature; and the king consults his zeal, rather than what he was absolutely obliged to do.—Juda, to expiate the sins of the royal family, of priests, and people.

Ver. 23. They laid. The king and princes of the people confessed their sins. Lev. 4:15.

Ver. 25. Prophet. Moses had not required music, except on some occasions. Num. 10:10. But David acted by God’s authority. The institution was designed to promote piety, and a love for religious meetings. Such sacred ceremonies are not to be considered as human inventions, for it was, &c. They command our utmost respect. C.

Ver. 27. Prepared, or ordained. M.—Heb. “with the instruments, by David.”

Ver. 30. Princes of the priests. H.—Words; psalms. T.—Asaph, so famous for music. He had composed some psalms, (C.) and twelve bear his name. T.—But he might only have set them to music, (H.) or his band sung them. D.—Knee. Prot. “head.” Sept. “they prostrated themselves.”

Ver. 31. Added. Heb. and Sept. “answered,” a term used in Scripture, though no question had been proposed. H.—Filled. You are, in some sense, priests. Prot. “you have consecrated yourselves.” The people brought victims but the priests poured the blood round the altar, v. 34. H.

Ver. 33. Sheep, for peace-offerings. Jun. C.—They destined these victims for the use of the temple, (T.) that none might be wanting afterwards. C.

Ver. 34. Holocausts, as the law required. Lev. 1:6. See C. 35:11. The skin might be taken off other victims, by laics.—Priests. Syr. “The Levites were more timid, or reserved than the priests, to purify themselves.” C.—Both are indirectly accused of negligence. C. 30:15. The Heb. seems to give the preference to the latter, “for the Levites were more upright of heart, (Sept. willing) to purify themselves than the priests.” But the Alex. Sept. may well agree with the Vulg. The ceremonies attending the purification of both, may be seen Ex. 29:1. Num. 8:6. H.—The priests had not sufficient time to collect themselves with the purity required, on such a short warning; and the paucity induced the king to put off the Passover till the next month. C. 30:3. 15.

Ver. 36. Because. Heb. and Sept. “that the Lord had disposed his people, for the thing was done suddenly,” (H.) to place no obstacle to this sudden change from one extreme to the other, at a time when the king was scarcely established on the throne. C.—Thus the people of England rejoiced, when the Catholic religion was re-established by the means of queen Mary and cardinal Pole. Philips. 9.—But the minds of the people are very fickle. Regis ad exemplum totus componitur orbis. Still the joy may show, that all love for truth is “not extinct,” as the Cardinal argued from the people’s conduct. Poli. ep. H.

2 PARALIPOMENON 30

Ver. 1. Manasses. The pious king thought he might give a general invitation, without umbrage. King Osee was not so impious as his predecessors. 4 K. 17:2. Afflictions had made his people more docile. The Jews say (C.) that the golden calves had been taken away by the Assyrians, and that the king removed the guards, which had been placed to hinder his subjects from repairing to Jerusalem. M. Salien, A. 3305.—Ezechias writes privately to the house of Joseph, as the people were prouder on account of the royal dignity. S. Jer. Trad.

Ver. 2. Month. The Rabbins pretend that the king intercalated the second Adar, contrary to the rule and advice of the wise, and the that he ought to have allowed those who were pure to celebrate the feast in due time. Selden, Syn. ii. 1.—But the Caraites deny this pretended leap-year; and we see that Ezechias acted according to the advice of the princes, and that the Scripture praises his conduct. C.—Those who had a lawful impediment, were authorized to put off the feast till the second month. Num. 9:10. The nation was under this predicament, as they had not priests at hand, (T.) nor were they assembled. D.

Ver. 5. Many. None had kept the Phase this year. H.—But those of Israel had not done it for a long time. Grotius.—Heb. “for they had not long before done according to the Scripture.” Sept. “the multitude had not done,” &c. C.—Yet, even in the worst times, Tobias, (1:6) and other zealous souls, contrived to comply with their duty. H.

Ver. 6. Posts. Lit. “runners or couriers.” H.—King. Heb. “kings.” Phul and Thelgathphalnasar. The latter had taken away some tribes. 4 K. 15:20. 29. C.

Ver. 7. Destruction. Sept. “solitude.” Prot. “desolation.”

Ver. 8. Yield. Lit. “give your hands,” (H.) in sign of submission (C.) and fidelity. Sept. “give glory.”

Ver. 9. Brethren. God sometimes spares one for the sake of another. H.

Ver. 10. Zabulon. Aser and Nephthali lay more to the north. But they were also invited, as well as the few who might remain on the other side the Jordan. 1 Par. 5:26. At least, we find that some of Aser came, v. 11. Thus those, who had been invited last, came first, while Ephraim continued more stubborn; (v. 18) and the greatest part derided the messengers, as we still see too frequently verified in the days of the gospel. H.

Ver. 11. Yielding. Sept. “were converted.” Prot. “humbled themselves, and came.” H.

Ver. 12. Hand; grace (M.) and power, to endure such unanimity.

Ver. 14. Burnt, both vessels and altars. C.—To idols, corresponding with the Sept. “the false ones,” and is added by way of explanation, unless it be lost in Hebrew. The illegal (H.) altars had been set up by Achaz. C. 28:24. M.

Ver. 15. At length. Sept. “were converted.” Heb. “ashamed, and sanctified themselves.” H.—The ceremonies of purification for priests were longer, (C. 29:34) and the sacred ministers were ashamed to be outdone by the people. M.

Ver. 16. Levites, who received the paschal lambs from the unsanctified. M.—The law does not require the ministry of the tribe of Levi for this purpose, as each one might kill the paschal victim at home. But the people were not sufficiently purified on this occasion. Lyran.—At other times, laics killed the victims, if they were clean. Ex.

12:6. After the tabernacle was set up, the priests poured out the blood on the altar; and, in latter ages, they slew the victim according to Grotius. But the texts of Josephus (x. 5 and Bel. vi. 45. Lat. vii. 17. H.) are inconclusive; and Philo repeatedly assert that, on one day, the law authorizes all the people to sacrifice: and, though he lived at Alexandria, his testimony respecting a fact of public notoriety, is not to be rejected. Only the unclean applied to the Levites on this occasion, and the latter had no more right to sacrifice than the rest. C.

Ver. 17. For. Prot. “for every one that was not clean, to sanctify them unto the Lord.” Sept. “not able to be purified to the Lord.” H.—The priests alone continued to pour the blood on the altar, till the destruction of the temple. C.

Ver. 18. Ephraim and.... Issachar had not been mentioned before, v. 18. H.—Some indulgence was shewn to the tribes of Israel, which had been so long rebellious, for fear lest they should return no more; and because they had shewn a good will in procuring the Levites to slay the victims for them, as that was rightly judged a more sacred action than to partake of the feast. The law forbade, nevertheless, the unclean to approach to any thing sacred. Lev. 15:31 and 22:4. Num. 9:6. C.—But a dispensation was granted, (M.) as the Passover could not be celebrated in any but the first or the second month. The people had come with such eagerness, that they had not time to acquire the purity required. C.—They were however truly penitent, and God dispensed with them. W.

Ver. 20. Merciful; lit. “appeased.” Heb. and Sept. “healed.” S. Jerom (Trad.) says, “It was asserted that no unclean person could taste the Phase, but death presently ensued; and they understood that the Lord was appeased, because those who eat did not die.” H.—Heb. girpa may, however, denote that God “pardoned,” or did not impute the uncleanness to the people. Schindler, and C. 36:16 and Isai. 6:10.

Ver. 21. Days. It seems all the observances had been omitted in the first month. The Jews teach, that those who have complied with those prescriptions, which require no particular purity, are not bound to keep the festival for seven days, nor to abstain from leavened bread the second month.—That agreed. Heb. and Sept. “of strength,” sonorous, (M.) which they played on with all their force, or which sounded for the divine power. C.

Ver. 22. Heart; encouraged them to bear the fatigue for other seven days.—Lord; being of good dispositions, (C.) and able musicians. Sa. M.—Praising. Prot. “making confession to.” But the sense is the same. H.—During the seven days, unleavened bread and peace-offerings were used, v. 24. C.

Ver. 23. Joy, though not prescribed by the law. M.—This we should call a work of supererogation, (W.) which gives Prot. so much offence. H.

Ver. 25. Proselytes, who had embraced the Jewish law: the rest were not allowed to partake of the paschal victims. Ex. 12:48.

Ver. 26. Israel: as many of the tribes came to join with their brethren of Juda.

Ver. 27. Levites. These only applauded the solemn blessings, which were given by the priests. Num. 6:24. C.—God is said to reside in heaven, because he there displays his glory to the blessed. D.

2 PARALIPOMENON 31

Ver. 1. Manasses, whether king Osee consented, or the people of Juda followed the dictates of their zeal, neglecting the regular order of things, which forbids the subjects of one kingdom to interfere thus with those of another. Grotius. S. Aug. q. in Deut. 7. and 12.—If Ezechias gave orders, we may suppose that he was assured of his neighbour's consent. Josias (C. 34:6) followed his example after most part of Israel was led away captive, and the country obeyed the king of Assyria. C.

Ver. 2. Praise: lit. “confess.” H.—There is a confession of God's perfections, as well as of sin. W.—Gates, within their respective courts. C.—The Turks style the palace of their emperor, “the sublime porte.” H.—Camp, or temple. Sept. “in the gates, in the courts of the house of the Lord.” M.—Grabe has not in the gates. H.—We know that they did not sing there, but in the courts, (C.) or halls. H.

Ver. 3. Substance. Since David had place the ark in the palace of Sion, it seems the kings had furnished the solemn victims for morning and evening, on all the festivals. Solomon also engaged to do it every day; and his magnificence herein astonished the queen of Saba. C. 8:13 and 9:4 and 3 K. 9:25. Ezechiel (45) assigns revenues to the prince for this purpose; but, as the people were often without any, they paid each the third part of a sicle, to furnish the victims. 2 Esd. 10:32. C.—The king did not wish to exempt himself from contributing, while he required that the people should support the priests. The troublesome times had greatly impaired the revenues of the temple, &c. T.

Ver. 4. Portion. Lit. “parts,” (H.) first-fruits and tithes. M.—Lord, without being taken off by worldly cares. It would be well if Christian princes would make an adequate provision for the ministers of religion: (v. 16. T.) as the law of nature dictates, that those who serve the public should be supported by it. D.

Ver. 5. Honey for the priests, not for sacrifice. Lev. 2:11. It may include dates, or palm wine. See Pliny xiii. 4. C.—Forth; only wheat, barley, the fruits of vine, olive, pomegranate, fig, and palm-trees. R. Solomon. Lev. 27:30. C.

Ver. 6. Things, out of which the Levites had to give tithes to the priests. Lyran. Num. 18:26. M.—Vowed. Heb. “consecrated to.... God, and laid them in heaps.” H.

Ver. 7. Them, bringing from Pentecost till the harvest was ended.

Ver. 10. Sadoc, being his grandson, (1 Par. 6:12. C.) or the father of Sellum. Jun.—People, with abundance; so that more would belong to the priests. C.

Ver. 11. Storehouses. Sept. παστοφορια. Solomon had prepared such. T.—But they had gone to ruin, and others might be requisite. C.—The old granaries were to be repaired. M.—People brought their first-fruits to the temple: but the Levites gathered the tithes, and gave a share to the priests, and to those who were on duty. 2 Esd. 10:36.

Ver. 12. Second; his vicar or coadjutor. C. C. 26:11 and 28:7. M.

Ver. 13. High: lit. “pontiff.” H.—Heb. “captain.” He is styled first priest, v. 10. C.—To whom, &c. is neither in Heb. nor in the Sept. M. C. D.

Ver. 14. And of. Prot. “To distribute the oblations of the Lord, and the most holy things,” (H.) to the priests.

Ver. 16. Besides, (exceptis. C.) not to mention. H. See Lev. 23:38. Girls are included, v. 18. It is supposed (C.) that children were at the breast till they were three years old, and therefore no portion is assigned them before. Mariana.

Ver. 17. Upward. Ezechias followed the regulation of David, rather than that of Moses, who deferred the service till the 25th or 30th year. Num. 4:3 and 8:24. 1 Paralipomenon 23:24.

Ver. 18. To all. Prot. “the genealogy of all their little ones, their wives, and their sons, and their daughters, through all the congregation: for in their set office they sanctified themselves in holiness." H.—All complied with their respective duties; the people, the distributors, and the priests. C.

Ver. 19. Aaron. Heb. and Sept. add, "the priests," (M.) which is sufficiently understood.—And in. Heb. "of." H.

Ver. 20. God. This is the highest praise that can be given to a prince; and, in effect, we read there was none like him. 4 K. 18:5. C.—Sept. omit and truth. Ezechias loved it, and sincerely desired to serve the Lord. H.

2 PARALIPOMENON 32

Ver. 1. Truth, and sincere piety of the king, God was pleased to put him to trial; (T. M. D.) or, "after these things were established." Jun.—Sennacherib attacked Juda when Ezechias had been fifteen years on the throne, and till that time had paid the stipulated tribute. 4 K. 18:13. C.—He now probably refused to pay it any longer. Salien, A. 3319. M.

Ver. 2. Jerusalem; as many cities had fallen. The king entered into an agreement with the Assyrians, who soon broke it.

Ver. 3. City. The torrent Cedron afforded the only good supply of water. It was often dry, and was only three steps across, when full of melted snow or rain. The waters of Siloe and Gihon were collected in it. Yet it was no difficult enterprise for the king to turn the stream, and introduce the waters through the rock into a large reservoir, in the city, by the canal, which is mentioned 2 Esdras 2:14. Eccli. 48:19. The besieged were more frequently deprived of water. Judith 7:6. Babylon was taken by Semiramis, Cyrus, and Alexander, after they turned aside the waters of the Euphrates; and Cæsar obliged the town of Cahors to surrender, by intercepting the springs. Frontin. iii. 7. C.

Ver. 4. Land, Cedron, on the east; (C. M.) or it may be the Gihon, which supplies Siloe, v. 30. T.

Ver. 5. Without, of less strength.—Mello, the palace, which was strongly situated, and Ezechias added fresh fortifications. 2 K. 5:9.—Arms. Heb. "darts."

Ver. 6. Gate, where there was a room for assemblies. 2 K. 18:24. C.—Heart, in the most affectionate and pathetic manner. H.

Ver. 7. More: God and his angels, from whom he expected relief, and was not disappointed. 4 K. 6:16 and 19:35. C.

Ver. 9. Lachis, whence he sent Rabshakes. Other blasphemous letters were dispatched from Lobna, (v. 17) when Sennacherib was forced to go to meet Tharaca. 4 K. 19:9.

Ver. 12. His altars. Rabshakes was ignorant of the law, and upbraids the king for a commendable action. C.—Thus our adversaries foolishly blame us for keeping holy days and abstinence. H.

Ver. 17. He (Sennacherib) wrote, when he was going towards Egypt. Both master and servant employed the same fallacious argument; as if the true God and idols were all upon a level, and as if past success were a sure proof of future victories, v. 19. H.

Ver. 21. Army. Heb. “camp.”—Disgrace. The Jews pretend that he was deprived of his beard and hair, (S. Jer. Trad.) misapplying the text of Isai. 7:20. C.—Sword, to prevent their being offered as victims, to appease the idol and the people. R. Solomon. Lyran.—This happened some months after the king’s return to Ninive, when he had cruelly oppressed the captive Jews and Tobias, 1:24. T.

Ver. 23. Many; probably strangers. 3 K. 8:41.

Ver. 24. Sign. See 4 K. 20.

Ver. 25. Up, by riches, and the splendid embassy from Babylon. C.—Prosperity is more dangerous than adversity. W.—Few are able to bear good fortune with moderation. H.

Ver. 27. Arms. Heb. “shields.” Sept. “arsenals.”

Ver. 30. Underneath the walls of the city, making them run westward. C. 33:14.

Ver. 31. Wonder, at the defeat of Sennacherib; (Grot. D.) or rather the retrogradation of the sun, as the Chaldees studied astronomy with diligence. M. T. C.—Left him, in punishment of his vanity. H.—Heart. How feeble is man when destitute of the divine assistance! M.—God permitted, therefore, the king to be tempted, (C.) that he might know himself, and that others might have a true idea of him. D.

Ver. 33. Above, for distinction’s sake: (C.) meriti prærogativâ. S. Jer. Trad. M.—The cell was either higher than the rest, or a sort of pyramid was erected over the tomb of Ezechias. C.

2 PARALIPOMENON 33

Ver. 3. The host of heaven. The sun, moon, and stars, (Ch.) in imitation of the Phœnicians and ancient Chanaanites.

Ver. 5. Courts of the Gentiles and of Israel, (M.) though afterwards he also placed idols even in the court of the priests, v. 7. Salien, A. 3340. —But we find no express mention of the court of the Gentiles, till after the captivity; (C.) so that the two courts mean those of the priests and of Israel. Villalpand, Sa. &c.

Ver. 6. Valley. Heb. Ge-ben-hinnon, “the vale of the son of Ennom,” (H.) a Jebusite, who had formerly possessed that part of the valley of Cedron. M.—Syr. write Gena, whence comes γέννα a place at the foot of Moria, and the sink of the city. A constant fire was kept up to burn dead bodies. Kimchi. D.

Ver. 7. Graven. Prot. “a carved image (the idol which he had made) in,” &c. It seems to have been sacred to the grove, (H.) or a representation of Astarte, 4 K. 21:7. The ark was taken away, (C. 25:3) to make place for this impure deity, which had four (S. Basil) or five faces, (Euseb. Salien) that people might adore it on all sides.

Ver. 9. Seduced. Using the arts of seduction, as well as open force. Heb. “Manasses made Juda.... err,” 4 K. 21:16. There is a fund of malice in the human heart, which easily prevails on people to yield, on such occasions, if the grace of God do not support them. Yet, as they are not still without a sense of duty and religion, many will readily comply with the invitations of a pious king, when he earnestly endeavours to reform his people. But these conversions too frequently prove false and unstable. C. 29:36. H.

Ver. 10. Spoke, by his prophets. 4 K.

Ver. 11. Captains; probably Tharthan. A. 3328. About five years before, Asarhaddon had made himself master of Babylon, to which place the captive king was brought, in the 22d year of his reign. 4 K. 20:10. &c. Isai. 22.—And carried. Heb. “among the thorns, and bound him with fetters (Prot.) of brass; (Jun. &c.) or, “they took Manasses with a hook,” insidiously. He might have retired to some desert place, as the Israelites did, to avoid the fury of the Philistines. 1 K. 13:6. C.—Chains. Vatable says, “two.” M.

Ver. 12. Distress. “When he had been conducted to Babylon, and cast into a brazen vessel full of holes, over a fire, he called upon all the names of the idols, which he was accustomed to adore; and, as he was not heard, nor set free by them, he recollected what he had often heard repeated by his father: When thou shalt call upon me in tribulation, and shalt be converted, I will hear thee graciously; as it is written in Deut. (see C. 4:29. H.) and his prayer was thus heard by the Lord, and he was delivered and brought back to his kingdom, like Habacuc." S. Jer. Trad.—The author of the imperfect work on S. Matthew, (among the works of S. Chrys. hom. 1. H.) says, that Manasses was barely allowed as much barley bread, and water mixed with vinegar, as would keep him alive. Whereupon, remembering the Lord, he had recourse to his clemency, and a miraculous flame surrounded him, and dissolving his chains, set him at liberty. Saosduchin, the successor of Azarhaddon, probably restored him to his throne, some years after his captivity, or perhaps that very year, so that his repentance continued thirty-three years. C.—Prayed, a proof of the efficacy of sincere repentance. W.

Ver. 14. Without, including what is styled the second city; (4 K. 22:14,) or he perfected the works begun by his father, or repaired the wall which the Assyrians had thrown down, though we read not of their taking the city. C.—Fish-gate.... to Ophel, from the north-eastern corner, to the place opposite to the eastern gate of the temple. C. 27:3. M.—The fish-gate led towards Joppe, whence the city was supplied with fish. S. Jer. Trad.—It was also called David's gate, because it stood near this city. By it, the Chaldees afterwards rushed in. Soph. 1:10. T.

Ver. 16. And praise. Prot. "thanks-offerings." Sept. "a victim of salvation and praise." H.—The sacrifice might be accompanied with canticles.—Ps. 26:6, &c. C.

Ver. 17. God. Heb. adds, "only," and not to idols. H.—This worship was not superstitious, but it was illegal; and it is a misfortune, that Manasses had not as much influence to guide the people in virtue, as he had formerly, to induce them to follow his example in idolatry. C.—He could not prevail upon them to destroy the high places. M.

Ver. 18. Prayer, which is not extant in Heb. but in Greek and Latin. As yet it is neither received for canonical, nor rejected by the Church. W.—Israel. That kingdom had been overturned in the sixth year of Ezechias. There was now no need of distinguishing the kings of Juda from those of Israel. The former seemed to have claimed authority over the whole country. 4 K. 23:19. H.

Ver. 19. Contempt. Heb. "prevarication." Sept. "apostacy." M.—Chozai means "seers." Sept. Prot. H.—But it more probably signifies some particular prophet, (C.) Isaias, (S. Jer. Trad.) "Hanan," (Syr.) or “Saphan.” Arab. version. C.—This work, less than the book of the kings of Israel, is now lost. M.

Ver. 20. House, in his own gardens, and not with the other kings. Grot. C.

Ver. 22. Made, though he had afterwards destroyed them. Amon endeavoured to restore their worship, (C.) adoring the same idols, and making other statues in their honour. D.

Ver. 23. Sins, inasmuch as he died in his guilt. Prot. “but Amon trespassed more and more,” (H.) following the former bad example of Manasses, Jer. 15. D.

Ver. 25. Them. Heb. “all that had conspired against king Amon.” H.

2 PARALIPOMENON 34

Ver. 3. Boy; 16 years old. D.—The kings of Juda were in their minority, till they had completed their 13th year. Grotius.—Cleansed. Heb. and Sept. “in the twelfth year he began to purify,” &c. H.—The work was not brought to perfection till six years afterwards, v. 8. C. T.

Ver. 4. Idols. Heb. chammanim, (H.) “statues of the sun.” The term often denotes those open enclosures, where sacred fire was kept in honour of the sun. C.—Sept. “the heights above them.” Syr. “he destroyed the altars, idols, tigers, and temples, (5) the bracelets, little bells, and all the trees which had been consecrated to idols.” Arab. “the altars, idols, and leopards.”

Ver. 5. Priests, whom he slew upon the altars, 4 K. 23.

Ver. 6. He. Heb. “with their swords, (C. Prot. mattocks) round about,” (H.) or, “and in their deserts,” the inhabitants being removed. Sept. “in their places around.” Syr. and Arab. “in their public places.” All the interpreters have read differently from what we find in Heb. at present. Some may wonder that Josias should act thus, out of his own dominions. But the few Israelites who were left, had placed themselves under his protection; and as he made no ravages, and the Cuthites did not adopt the former superstitious practices of the country, they were not concerned to see the altars destroyed; nor were the kings of Assyria informed of, or interested to stop, these proceedings. C.—Josias followed the directions of the priests and prophets; (M.) and many believe that the Assyrian monarch had given these territories to him, to hold, as his vassal; (T.) or God restored them to the lawful king, (v. 9) having promised all those countries to the family of David, for the express purpose of keeping up his own worship among his chosen people, and for exterminating idolatry. H.

Ver. 8. Eselias, or Assia. This man is alone mentioned, 4 K. 22:3. C.

Ver. 11. Houses, or apartments of the temple, which were gone to decay. H.

Ver. 12. Of music is expressed in Heb. and Sept. H.—These Levites were chosen, because they were not so constantly employed in the temple, (C.) and they were not hired barely to inspect the works, and hence the expense was diminished.

Ver. 13. Masters: literally, “master porters.” Prot. “officers and porters;” all Levites. H.—Jahath, &c. directed them that carried burdens, (C.) as the Hebrew intimates; and in general, all the officers were chosen from the same tribe. H.

Ver. 17. Together: lit. “melted down,” as the Heb. and Sept. signify. Coin was not yet used. C.—But the pieces of money, of whatever description, were collected. H.

Ver. 22. Hasra. Olda’s husband’s grandfather is styled Araas, 4 K. 22. H.—Second part of the city, near the temple, or near the second gate, or between the two walls. D.

Ver. 28. Peace. The country enjoyed peace, as Pharaoh was gone; (M.) and Josias did not witness the evils here denounced. T.—This was a blessing. W.

Ver. 33. In Israel, who had fled into his dominions. See v. 6. C.—They. Sept. “he,” &c. Josias worshipped God with all his heart: but all Israel paid him, at least, an external adoration. H.

2 PARALIPOMENON 35

Ver. 3. By whose. Sept. “the powerful in Israel, that they might be sanctified to the Lord; and they put,” &c. Heb. “who instructed all Israel, the holy people of the Lord: Put,” &c. H.—No more. Heb. adds, “upon your shoulders;” (H.) whence it is inferred, that it had been carried about the cities of Juda, under the impious kings, who would not suffer it in the temple. C.—Some believe that it was kept in the house of Sellum, the uncle of Jeremiah, and husband of Olda. S. Jer. Trad. T.

Ver. 5. Families. Heb. adds, “according to the divisions of the families of the fathers of your brethren, the people, (H. or laics. C.) and the division of the families of the Levites.” All were placed, with great order, in the temple.

Ver. 6. Which. Heb. “of the Lord, by the hand of Moses,” which ordinances he has written down. M.

Ver. 7. In. Heb. “for the Passover-offerings, from the flock, lambs and kids, in number 30,000.” Et reliqui pecoris, is not expressed. H.—The small cattle might be intended for other sacrifices. M.

Ver. 8. Offered. Heb. “gave to the people.” H.—Rulers: the first alone was high priest. C.—Small cattle: literally, cattle of different sorts;” commixtim. Prot. supply, “small cattle,” which is not in Heb. H.—Syr. and Arab. have, “sheep,” but we had best follow (C.) the Sept. “sheep, both lambs and kids.” Either would suffice. Ex. 12:5.

Ver. 9. Cattle. Prot. again supply these words. Sept. have, “sheep.” H.

Ver. 11. Blood is expressed in the Sept. and understood in Heb. H.—With. Heb. and Sept. “from their hands;” (H.) receiving it from the officers, who might slay their own victims, (C.) unless they were unclean, (C.) 30:17. H.—Holocausts. Heb. and Sept. speak of the paschal lambs. H.—Holocausts were regularly to be flayed by priests. Lev. 1:6. The hurry of the solemnity, (C.) and necessity, here excused the Levites, (M.) if we understand proper holocausts. H.

Ver. 12. Separated. Sept. “prepared the holocaust to give; having taken notice to whom the victims belonged, before they took off the skin, (M.) or rather, separating these from the other peace-offerings. Tournemine.

Ver. 13. Victims. Heb. and Sept. “but the holy offerings they boiled.” See Ex. 12:9. H.

Ver. 15. Prophets. Heb. “seer.” But Sept. &c. read in the plural. These were “prophets of the king,” (H.) or masters of music. C.—Vulg. might insinuate that these three gave orders, as well as David. But they were in office under him, as people of the same name were, probably, under Josias. H.

Ver. 18. As Josias kept. He displayed greater liberality (E. See 4 K. 23:20) and devotion; and the festival had also been neglected for some time. W.

Ver. 20. Charcamis belonged to the Assyrian monarch, (Isai. 10:9) who subdued the empire of Babylon. C. 33:11.

Ver. 21. With me. Grotius thinks that Jeremias had given the order; and the author of Heb. Traditions, supposes that he forbade Josias to oppose Pharaoh, who, it seems, was assured of victory. C.—But this is uncertain; and Josias might justly suspect that the king of Egypt spoke without authority. H.—The augurs of the latter might declare the truth, (M.) though they could not dive into futurity. H.—Herodotus (i.) informs us, that Nechos fought against the Syrians, (or Israelites) in Magdelum, and took Cadythis, a city as large as Sardis, of Lydia; probably Jerusalem, (D.) or Cades. C.

Ver. 22. Prepared. Heb. “disguised himself,” like Achab; (C.) or set his army in array. Sept. “he was bent on fighting him.” H.—He supposed that Pharaoh intended to invade his dominions, and God would withdraw him from the world. W.

Ver. 24. After the manner of kings, is not in Heb. &c. H.—Curtius (iv.) informs us, that the Persian monarch had always a horse behind his chariot, to be ready in case of any accident.

Ver. 25. Lamentations. Some think that we have them in the Bible. Josephus, &c.—Others believe that they are lost. Salien, A. 3425.—Law, on the anniversary; (M.) or when any calamity occurs, the lamentations of Jeremias are used. T.—There were collections of such poems, as well as of canticles, for victory and marriages. C.

Ver. 27. Israel is placed first in Heb. and Sept. H.—The kings of Juda assumed the title, as the kingdom had been subverted above a century; and the wretched remains of Israel had retreated into the territories, (C.) or acknowledged their dominion. H.

2 PARALIPOMENON 36

Ver. 3. Him. Joachaz had attempted to defend himself, and had been conducted prisoner to Reblatha. 4 K. 23:33 and Ezech. 19:4. He was now deposed in from, and a tribute laid upon the people. C.

Ver. 4. Brother. From the time of David, the son had always succeeded his father. W.

Ver. 6. Babylon, but sent him back soon after; (T.) unless he altered his first design, (D.) and slew him disgracefully at Jerusalem. Lyran. E. C. 4 K. 23:5.—He allowed him to reign as a vassal other three years, but took Daniel, &c. captives. The seventy years of Jeremias, (25:11) are to be dated from this event. A. 3402. Usher.

Ver. 7. The vessels. Heb. and Sept. “a part of the vessels;” probably the most precious, (v. 10) breaking the rest in pieces, as he left none behind, v. 18.—Temple of his God. Dan. 1:2.

Ver. 8. In him. The Jews explain this of the diabolical characters forbidden, Lev. 19:28. Carthusian. R. Sal. &c.—But it may simply denote the hidden sins of the king, which God will bring to light, or his rebellious conduct. Amama. Gen. 44:16. C.

Ver. 9. Eight years old. He was associated by his father to the kingdom, when he was but eight years old; but after his father’s death, when he reigned alone, he was eighteen years old. 4 K. 24:8. Ch.—He only enjoyed the throne three months and ten days. T.—We must however observe, (H.) that the Alex. Sept. the Syr. and Arab. read here, eighteen. C.—“It is, in my opinion, a pity that the translators have not mended such apparent errata of the scribe of the present Heb. out of 2 K. 24:8, or out of Sept. or out of common sense.” Wall. Kennicott.—These eight years may be dated from the captivity, and not from the king’s birth. Usher. D.

Ver. 10. Year, in spring, when kings go out to war. C.—Uncle. Sept. “brother of his father,” which comes to the same sense, and was certainly the case. Heb. “his brother.” Abraham indeed gives the title to his nephew. Gen. 13:8. C.

Ver. 13. By God, to be faithful. T.—This enhances his crime.

Ver. 15. Early. Prot. “betimes, and sending: because,” &c. H.—Like a good master, God (T.) sent his servants to work at day-break, (H.) omitting nothing to induce them to return to him, that he might not be forced to punish them with severity. C.

Ver. 16. Remedy. All attempts to convert them proved in vain; (T.) and God, perceiving that they even despised his calls, became inexorable. C.

Ver. 18. Vessels. Only a few remained, to be restored by Cyrus, v. 19. C.

Ver. 20. Sons; Evilmerodac and Baltassar.—Persia; Cyrus, who subdued the country.

Ver. 21. Sabbaths, every seventh year. Lev. 25:2 and 26:43. Jer. 25:11 and 29:10.—Expired: not that the earth was quite neglected, all that time, from the third year of Joakim, A.M. 3398 till 3468. C.—But it was almost: particularly after the murder of Godolias, (M.) the public worship was at a stand, &c. H.—During this fifth age, the true religion subsisted invariable, not only in the kingdom of Juda, but also in that of Israel. See Worthington. H.

Ver. 22. First. Cyrus had ruled over Persia from A. 3444. He was now emperor of the east. A. 3468. C.—These two verses are repeated by Esdras, which evinces that he was the author of this work also, (T.) adding them when he restored (W.) or revised (H.) the holy scriptures. W.

Ver. 23. The Lord, (Jehova.) In Esdras we find yehi, “Let,” his God. H.—Up. The sentence is completed in the following book, which makes it probable that these verses are here inserted improperly, by some transcriber. The book of Chronicles, though for many ages the last in the Heb. MSS. was, perhaps, once followed by Ezra, as in Camb. MS. 1. (Kennicott) and as it is now in the Protestant version, taken from the Heb. H.

1 ESDRAS

THE FIRST BOOK OF ESDRAS

INTRODUCTION

This Book taketh its name from the writer, who was a holy priest and doctor of the law. He is called by the Hebrews Ezra, (Ch.) and was son, (T.) or rather, unless he lived above 150 years, a descendant of Saraias. 4 K. 25:18. It is thought that he returned first with Zorobabel; and again, at the head of other captives, in the seventh year of Artaxerxes Longimanus, with ample authority. Esdras spent the latter part of his life in exhorting the people, and in explaining to them the law of God. He appeared with great dignity at the dedication of the walls of Jerusalem. 2 Esd. 12:26. 35. We have four books which bear his name. C.—This and the following book of Nehemias, originally made but one in Heb. (S. Jerom, &c.) as the transactions of both those great men are recorded. The third and fourth are not in Heb. nor received into the canon of the Holy Scriptures, though the Greek Church hold the third as canonical, and place it first; (W.) and Genebrard would assert that both ought to be received, as they were by several Fathers. But they contain many thing which appear to be erroneous, and have been rejected by others of great authority, and particularly by S. Jerom. The third book seems to have been written very early, by some Hellenist Jew, who was desirous of embellishing the history of Zorobabel; and the fourth was probably composed by some person of the same nation, who had been converted to Christianity, before the end of the second century; and who injudiciously attempted to convert his brethren, by assuming the name of a man who was so much respected. Many things have been falsely attributed to Esdras, on the same account. It is said that he invented the Masora; restored the Scriptures, which had been lost; fixed the canon of twenty-two books; substituted the Chaldaic characters instead of the ancient Hebrew, Samaritan, or Phœnician. But though Esdras might sanction the latter, now become common, the characters might vary insensibly, (Bianconi. Kennicott, Dis. ii.) as those of other languages have done, (H.) and the sacred books never perished wholly; nor could the canon be determined in the time of Esdras. C.—As for the Masoretic observations and points, they are too modern an invention. Elias Levita, Capel. Houbigant, &c.—What we know more positively of Esdras, is, (W.) that he was empowered by Artaxerxes to bring back the Jews, and that he acted with great zeal. H.—This book contains the transactions of 82 years, till A. 3550. The letter of Reum, and the king's answer, (C. 4:7 till C. 6:19 and well as C. 7:12, 27) are in Chaldee; the rest of the work is in Hebrew. C.—We may discover various mysteries concealed under the literal sense of this and the following book. S. Jer. ep. ad Paulin. W.—Esdras is supposed by this holy doctor, as well as by some of the Rabbins, &c. to have been the same person with the prophet Malachy; (Button) and several reasons seems to support this conjecture, though it must still remain very uncertain. C.—Some think that (H.) Esdras wrote only the four last chapters, and the author of Paral. the six preceding ones. D.—But it is most probable that he compiled both from authentic documents. H.—Some few additions may have been inserted since, by divine authority. 2 Esd. 12:11, 22. T.

Ver. 1. In. Heb. “And (C.) or But in,” as 2 Par. 36:22. H.—Thus the historical works are connected. Spinosa infers, from this book being inserted after Daniel in the Heb. Bible, that the same author wrote both. But the order of the books in the Sept. and Vulg. is far more natural, (C.) and this has often varied in Hebrew, &c. Kennicott. See 2 Par. 36:23. H.—First. The design was only put in execution the following year. A. 3468.—Cyrus (Heb. coresh, (H.) or Koresch) means “the sun,” according to Ctesias and Plutarch. Josephus (xi. 1.) informs us that this prince became a friend of the Jews, in consequence of having seen the prediction of Isaias (44:28 and 45:1) fulfilled in his own person. He took Babylon, A. 3466, and established the Persian empire, which was subverted by Alexander. C.—he had before ruled over Persia 27 years, and only reigned three as sole monarch at Babylon. T.—The Lord; every good notion, even in infidels, proceeds from him. D.—Cyrus was one of the best and greatest conquerors of antiquity. He was the son of Cambyzes, by Mandane, princess of Media. Xenophon informs us that he died in his bed; (H.) and had been lately conquered. T.

Ver. 2. Earth, which had belonged to the king of Babylon. H.—This may be an hyperbole, or allusion to Isai. 45:1. M.—The dominions of Cyrus were very extensive, (Xenophon, Cyrop. i. and viii.) reaching from Ethiopia to the Euxine sea, &c. He acknowledges that he received all from the hand of God. Nabuchodonosor makes a similar confession of his supreme dominion; (Dan. 2:47) and the potentates of Egypt and of Rome, procured sacrifices to be offered to him. But what advantage did they derive from this sterile knowledge of his divinity? since they did not honour him accordingly, but wished to join his worship with that of idols; though the force of miracles and of reason must have convinced them that there is but one God. C.—House, or temple. Isai. 44:28.—Judea. So the Sept. read, but the Heb. has “Juda,” all along. The whole country now began to be know by the former name. H.

Ver. 3. He is the God, is placed within a parenthesis, by the Prot. But the pagans might suppose that God was attached to this city, like their idols; and the temple was not yet begun. H.

Ver. 4. Rest, who do not please to return. The Jews went at different times, and under the different leaders, Zorobabel, Esdras, and Nehemias. Many did not return at all. Cyrus allowed them full liberty. He permits money to be exported, particularly the half sicle, required Ex. 30:13, and all voluntary contributions for the temple. Grotius. C.—He also enjoins the prefects of the provinces, (v. 6, and C. 3:7) whom Josephus styles “the king’s friends,” to forward this work; and he even designed to perfect it at his own expence. C. 6:4.

Ver. 8. Gazabar means, “the treasurer.” Heb. Syr. C. Prot. 3 Esd. 2:19. H.—Son is not in Heb. &c. (M.) and must be omitted. T.—Sassabasar. This was another name for Zorobabel, (Ch.) given by the Chaldees, as they changed the name of Daniel into Baltassar. Euseb. Præp. Evan. xi. 3. T.—But others think that this was the Persian “governor (Junius) of Judea,” (3 Esd.) as one reside at Jerusalem, till the days of Nehemias. 2 Esd. 5:14. It does not appear that Zorobabel was invested with this dignity, before the reign of Darius Hystaspes. Agg. 2:24. C.

Ver. 9. Knives. Sept. &c. “changes” of garments. C.

Ver. 10. Sort. Sept. and Syr. “double;” yet of less value. C.—As no first sort had been mentioned, and some Latin MSS. read 2410, agreeably to 3 Esd. 2:12, and the truth, (Hallet) it may be inferred that “thousands were expressed anciently by single letters, with a dot ... over them.” Afterwards, when numbers were expressed by words at length, the b being thus reduced to signify “two,” was, of course, written shnim; but this word making nonsense with the following, has been changed into mishnim, a word not very agreeable to the sense here, and which leaves the sum total, now specified in the Heb. text, very deficient for want of the 2000, thus omitted. Kennicott, Dis. ii.—Josephus has, “30 golden cups, 2400 of silver.” H.

Ver. 11. Hundred. Only 2499 are specified. 3 Esd. reads, 5469. Josephus (xi. 1.) differs from all, reading 5210; which shews that the copies have varied, and that the Heb. is incorrect. C.—The use of number letters might cause this confusion. H. Capel. iii. 20. 13.

Ver. 1. Now. This catalogue is given again, 2 Esd. 7:6 and 3 Esdras 5:7 immediately (H.) after the long interpolated story (Kennicott) of the three guards, concerning the superior strength of wine, the king, women or truth, in which Zorobabel gains the victory, in favour of the latter. H.—The rest of the book is taken from other inspired writings; (Sandford) and this story may be borrowed Josephus: so that there is no reason for asserting “that one whole book is now lost out of the sacred canon.” Kennicott.—Yet this argument is by no means conclusive, as the Paral. consists of such supplements, &c. These three catalogues vary considerably, not only in the proper names, but also in the numbers, (H.) though they must have been the same originally, and still give the same total, 42,360. We cannot find that number at present, by above 8,400. In many cases, the disagreement consists of a single unit, hundred, &c. which may lead us to suspect that the Palmyrene, or the more ancient Sidonian notation, may have been adopted in some Heb. MSS. being used about the time of Christ. See Swinton's tables, (Phil. Trans. xlviii. and l.) where the Sidonian coins express the units by small perpendicular strokes; and the Palmyrene inscriptions only admit four of these together, having an arbitrary mark for 5: "the hundreds and units after the tens, are expressed in both, in the same manner as the single units." Kennicott, 2 Diss.—Cordell (MS. note on this author) disapproves of this mode of correcting, and says that the females are included in the total sum, being 12,542, not recorded in the separate sums. But this number seems too small, as there are generally as many of that sex as of the other. H.—Some find the total 31,583, which leaves 10,777 wanting to complete 42,360, as these could not make out their genealogies, or were of the ten tribes. In this chapter only 29,818 are specified, whereas 2 Esdras 7. has 31,089; the latter reckons 1765 unnoticed by Esdras, who has 494 not specified in Nehemias. The difference, that seems to make a reconciliation impossible, is what make these authors agree; for, if you add the surplus of each to the other, the same total, 31,583, will arise. Alting. ep. 59. This solution, though ingenious, is not solid or satisfactory. Rondet, t. v. p. 176.—De Vence rather thinks that the difference is to be laid to the charge of transcribers, or that some people enrolled themselves after the registers had been made up; so that they are only included in the general sum. H.—Some things may have been inserted from 2 Esdras, though here out of place, (Grot.) as we find similar anachronisms, 1 Par. 9:2, and perhaps Gen. 36:31. Nehemias may also have included those whom he brought back along with these; unless we allow that some one, by attempting to reconcile the two, has thrown all into confusion. It seems undeniable, that some additions have been made to the latter book. C. 12:11 and 22. The list given 1 Par. 9:4, comprises only those who came first from Babylon. C.—After this remark, it will hardly be requisite to specify all the variations of names and numbers. H.—"For what can be hence inferred, but that there are some arithmetical mistakes in Scripture, which no one denies?" Huet.—"Almost all who are conversant with ancient copies, agree in the decision of S. Jerom, as they cannot but perceive that some variations have crept in, particularly with respect to numbers and proper names." Walton.—Province, born in Chaldea, (M.) or rather belonging to Judea, which was now considered as a province of the empire, (C.) and paid tribute. C. 4:13. 2 Esd. 9:36. T.—In 3 Esd. we read, "These are they of Judea."—Nabuchodonosor had taken some of these; the rest were chiefly their descendants.—Juda now is used to denote Judea. H.

Ver. 2. Zorobabel was the prince, Josue the high priest. C.—There are 12 mentioned in 2 and 3 Esd. But here the sixth Nahamani, or Enenion, is omitted. H.—There represent the 12 tribes, (Kennicott) and were chiefs. M.—It is wonderful that Esdras is not here mentioned, as well as Nehemias, who led a company after him, many of whom are here recorded. C.—They might come to take care of their patrimony, and return into Chaldea, like Mardochai, (T. though it does not seem to be Esther's uncle. D.) and Nehemias, who is styled also Athersatha, v. 63. T.—Baana. 3 Esd. adds, "their leaders." H.

Ver. 3. Children. When this term precedes the name of a man, it means his offspring; (v. 3. 20) when placed before a city, it denotes the inhabitants, v. 21. 35. C.—The lay Israelites are placed here; then the Levitical tribe; (v. 36) the Nathineans, &c. v. 43. It is very difficult to decide when the names designate places, and when persons. M.

Ver. 5. Seven. 2 Esd. only 652. These arrived at Jerusalem; the rest altered their mind. Junius. C.—But 3 Esd. has 756: so that there is most probably a mistake somewhere. H.

Ver. 6. Moab. This seems to be the name of a place, where the descendants of Josue and Joab might reside; (C. 8:4. C.) or Phahath might have this title, on account of some victory, or residence in the country. His descendants, with those of Josue and Joab, where 2812, (T.) or 2818. 2 Esd. 7:11. C.—Josue. Prot. "Jeshua and Joab." H.—Some translate Pahath, "the chief of" Moab, &c. D.—Grotius suspects that to v. 68 may be inserted from Nehemias.

Ver. 13. Six. Other 60 returned afterwards with Esdras. H. C. 8:13.

Ver. 16. Ather. 3 Esd. Ator-Ezekios, 92: but 2 Esd. has Ater, children of Hezecias, 98. H.

Ver. 17. Besai. We should perhaps read Hasum, (v. 19. C.) then Besai, and afterwards Jora, who may be the same with Hareph. 2 Esd. 7:24. H.

Ver. 20. Gebbar. 2 Esd. Gabaon. 3 Esd. "Baitereus, 3005." H.

Ver. 22. Six. 2 Esd. puts the inhabitants of those two cities together, and makes 188, instead of the present calculation 179. C.—Netupha was in Ephraim. D.

Ver. 29. Nebo. 2 Esd. (7:33) adds, "of the other Nebo," as in some Latin copies a first had been mentioned, (v. 30) where we have Geba, (C.) here written Gabaa, v. 26. H.—Nebo belonged to some of the other tribes, as well as Phahath-Moab; which shews that some of the people returned, (C.) and are particularized, as well as the men of the three tribes of Juda, Benjamin, and Levi. H.

Ver. 30. Megbis. 3 Esd. “Niphis;” (C.) or, according to the Alex. MS. “Phineis.” H.—The verse is omitted 2 Esd. But Megphias occurs below. C. 10:20. Megabyse is a Persian name. Herod. iii. 20. and 160.

Ver. 31. Other Elam. The first is mentioned (v. 7) with exactly the same number. Is not this verse redundant? C.—Who would not be astonished? T.—3 Esd. omits this and the following name. H.

Ver. 33. Hadid. These cities were in the tribe of Benjamin. C.—Senaa was in Ephraim, eight miles from Jericho. Euseb.

Ver. 36. Josue, the high priest, v. 2.

Ver. 40. Odovia, called Juda. C. 3:9. C.

Ver. 43. Nathinites, “people given” (1 Par. 9:2. H.) by Josue, David, and Solomon. T.

Ver. 55. Servants, proselytes. 1 Par. 22:2. M.

Ver. 57. Pocereth-Hasebaim, in Heb. (C.) or “of Zebaim.” Prot.

Ver. 59. Thelmela, “the height of Mela, or of salt.” The river Melas empties itself into the Euphrates. Strabo xii.—The cities here mentioned were in Chaldea. Some of the ten tribes had probably been transported into Cappadocia, where Herodotus (ii. 35,) place some circumcised Syrians.—Thelharsa, or Thelassar, 4 K. 19:12.—Cherub, &c. were cities of Chaldea, (T.) or chief men; but as they had been carried away by Theglathphalassar, they had lost their genealogies, and could only produce circumcision as a proof that they were Israelites.

Ver. 61. Their name. The priest, Berzellai, assumed the name of the family, from which he had chosen a wife. H.—It was that of the famous old man, who was so hospitable to David. 2 K. 19:31. C.

Ver. 62. Priesthood. Those who cannot prove that they are priests, ought not to exercise the functions. W.—The Jews were particularly careful to preserve their genealogical tables, and transcribed them again after any very troublesome times. Joseph. c. Ap. 1, and in his own Life.—The Rabbins falsely assert that only the mother’s side was examined, and that the children followed her condition. C.

Ver. 63. Athersatha. Prot. marg. “the governor,” (H.) in the Persian language. D.—Nehemias had this title. 2 Esd. 8:9. H.—It means “a cup-bearer.” C. M.—3 Esd. “And Nehemias, who is also Atharias, said unto them, that they should not partake of the holy things, till a high priest, clothed with manifestation and truth, should arise." H.—Learned. Heb. "with Urim and Thummim." We do not find that God had been consulted, in this manner, since the time of David: and the Jews inform us that the ornament was not used after the captivity, (C.) as it had been, perhaps, concealed with the ark, by Jeremias. 2 Mac. 2:4. T.—Nehemias hoped that it would be soon recovered. In the mean time, he followed the spirit of the law, but with additional rigour, as it permitted such priests to eat consecrated meats. Lev. 21:22. It seems that this decision is out of its proper place, since Nehemias came 80 years after Zorobabel. C.—But he might have been present on this occasion, (H.) though he returned afterwards to Babylon, where he officiated as cup-bearer to the king. T.

Ver. 64. Forty-two thousand, &c. Those who are reckoned up above of the tribes of Juda, Benjamin, and Levi, fall short of this number. The rest, who must be taken in to make up the whole sum, were of the other tribes. Ch.—This explanation is given by R. Solomon. W.—But we have seen that cities belonging to the ten tribes are specified. See v. 1, and 29. H.—Some might not be able to make out their genealogies. C. v. 62. Yet some of these also are counted, v. 60. H.—The particular sums may therefore be incorrect. Josephus (xi. 1,) adds 102 to the number. C.—3 Esd. has, "But they were all of Israel from 12 years old and upwards, exclusive of boys and girls, (or male and female servants) 42,300." Grabe has in another character "sixty. The men and women servants of these, 7300." Then the Alex. MS. continues, "thirty-seven." So that without the addition it would give for the total, 42,337. Some copies (H.) have 40. C.—But the most correct (H.) read 60. Kennicott. The small number of servants and cattle shew that the people were poor. D.

Ver. 65. Servants. Probably strangers. C.—Yet the Hebrews might renounce their liberty. Ex. 21:6. H.—Hundred, comprised in the last number; (C.) or they belong to Israel, but were different from those mentioned v. 41. We find 45 more in 2 and 3 Esd. H.—These might be inserted by Nehemias, after they had proved themselves to be of the tribe of Levi. Tournemine.—There were in all 49,942. H.—So much was the power of this kingdom now reduced! Sulp Severus says above 50,000 of every sex and rank could not be found. H.

Ver. 69. Solids. Heb. darcemonim. H.—"Darics," worth as much as a golden sicle. Pelletier. C. 1 Par. 29:7.—Pounds, (mnas) or 60 sicles. M.—3 Esd. has "mnas" in both places.

Ver. 70. Some. The laics, mentioned from v. 2 to 35. H.

1 ESDRAS 3

Ver. 1. Month. Tisri, famous for the feasts of trumpets, of expiation, and of tabernacles. D.—The Israelites might spend four months on their journey, and two in making preparations for the feast of tabernacles, (T.) and in erecting huts for themselves. C.

Ver. 2. Josue, or Jesus, (Jeshua) the son of Josedec: he was the high priest at that time; (Ch.) the first after the captivity.—Salathiel, by whom he was brought up, though he was born of Phadaia. 1 Par. 3:19. C.—Prot. read Shealtiel.

Ver. 3. Fear. This must not prevent God's servants from offering sacrifice. W.

Ver. 7. Meat, in imitation of Solomon, 3 K. 5:11.—Orders. Heb. "permission." C.—Prot. "grant." H.

Ver. 8. Work. Heb. adds, "of the house." Josias had appointed the Levites overseers, 2 Par. 24:12. C.

Ver. 10. Hands; compositions, (H.) or ordinances. W.—The 135th Psalm was sung, (C.) or the 117th. Vatab.

Ver. 12. Temple. This second temple, though very large (2 Mac. 14:13) and magnificent, (Agg. 2:10,) never equalled the glory of the first, in its outward appearance, being also destitute of the ark, and perhaps of the Urim, &c. But the presence of the Messias gave it a more exalted dignity. C.—Joy. These different emotions of grief and joy filled their breasts, (D.) thinking how they had brought on the judgments of God by their transgressions, and that he was now appeased, and would enable them to have some sort of a temple. T.—As it was less beautiful than that of Solomon, Aggeus must be understood to speak of the Church of Christ. S. Aug. de C. xviii. 45. W.

Ver. 1. Enemies; Samaritans, and others, v. 9.

Ver. 2. Asor Haddan sent a priest to instruct these people, but Salmanasar had transported them into the country. C.—They continued for some time worshipping idols alone, and afterwards they consented to pay the like adoration to the Lord. 4 K. 17:24, &c. H.—It is clear, from their petition, that they had as yet no temple. The first was erected by them on Garizim, by leave of Alexander the Great, as a retreat for Manasses, brother of the Jewish high priest, and other who would not be separated from their strange wives. Joseph. xi.—Yet the Sam. Chronicle, lately published, seems to give a higher antiquity to that temple, and pretends that a miracle declared in favour of the place. C.—The fathers indeed adored there, (Jo. 4:20. Gen. 12:6,) and Josue erected an altar on Hebal, but the Samaritan copy says it was to be on Garizim. Deut. 27:4. Jos. 8:30. H.

Ver. 3. You, &c. Lit. “It is not for you and us to build.” But why might not these people assist in the work, as well as king Hiram or Darius? H.—Schismatics and heretics must not communicate in sacrifices with Catholics, (W.) nor must the latter have society with them, in matters of religion. The Jews feared lest the Samaritans might introduce the worship of idols, or claim a part of the temple, or at least boast of what they had done. T.—They were aware of the insincerity of these people. M.—The permission was moreover only granted to the Jews: (C.) but Cyrus had exhorted all to contribute; (C. 1:4,) and Darius, as well as his pagan governors, were not repelled with disdain. C. 6:13. This treatment caused the Samaritans to be more inveterate, though the Jews were always more unwilling to come to a reconciliation. H. —“For the Scripture did not say, the Samaritans have no commerce with the Jews,” says S. Chrys. in Jo. iv. The Jewish authors inform us, that “Ezra, &c. gathered all the congregation into the temple, and the Levites sung and cursed the Samaritans, ... that no Israelite eat of any thing that is a Samaritan’s, not that any Samaritan be proselyted to Israel, nor have any part in the resurrection,” &c. R. Tanchum. Lightfoot i. p. 598. Kennicott.—If this were true, it would be carrying their resentment too far; as we ought to promote the conversion of the greatest reprobates. But we have no reason to condemn such great men. They knew the character of the Samaritans, and wished to bring them to a sense of their duty, by this rebuke. H.

Ver. 5. Counsellors; ministers of the king, (C.) or governors of the provinces. T.—Cyrus, who was ignorant of their machination, (Josephus) being engaged in war with the Scythians. We may easily conceive what ill-disposed ministers may do, against the inclinations of their prince. C.—Darius, son of Hystaspes, who succeeded the false Smerdis, after five months’ usurpation. C.

Ver. 6. Assuerus; otherwise called Cambyses, the son and successor of Cyrus. He is also, in the following verse, named Artaxerxes, by a name common to almost all the kings of Persia, (C.) after Memnon. Diod. xv. Sept. “Arthasastha.” Arta signifies “great,” and xerxes, “warriour.”

Herod. vi. 98.—After Assuerus, some copies add, “he is Artaxerxes;” and Assuerus is so called in the Sept. of Sixtus. 3 Esd. 2:16. M.

Ver. 7. Artaxerxes may be the Oropastes of Trogus, (C.) or the false (H.) Smerdis. Herodot.—Beselam, &c. These governed the provinces on the west side of the Euphrates.—Syriac comprises the Chaldee, with which it has a great resemblance. It was spoken at the court of Babylon. Xenoph. vii. See 4 K. 18:26 and 2 Mac. 15:37 and Dan. 2:4.

Ver. 8. Beelteem. Syr. “the son of Baltam.” The term designates the office of Reum, “the master of reason,” president of the council, treasurer, &c. C.—Prot. “chancellor.”—From. Prot. “against.” H.—Heb. “concerning.”

Ver. 9. Counsellors. Sept. and Syr. “of our fellow-servants.” Chal. “colleagues.” This letter, and as far as C. 6:19, is in the Chaldee language.—Dinites, perhaps the Denarenians. Junius. 4 K. 17:24. C.

Ver. 10. Asenaphar, commonly supposed to be the Asarhaddon, though we know not that he caused any of these nations to remove thither, as Salmanasar certainly did. C.—The name of the latter occurs in some copies. Lyran.—River, Euphrates.—In peace. H.—The original, cehenth, is neglected by the Sept. and Arab. The Syr. reads, “Acheeneth.” Others translate, “at that time,” as if the date had been lost. Jun. &c.—Prot. “and at such a time.” H.—Others suppose the writers lived “at Kineeth.” Pagnin.—But who ever heard of such a place? Le Clerc takes it to mean “and the rest,” as if the title were curtailed. But it is more probable that the text ought to be Cetheth, as v. 17, and that we should translate, “beyond the river, (C.) as now, (11) unless this word ought to be here omitted, (H.) to Artaxerxes, the king, peace (and prosperity) as at present.” C.—Chal. sslum ucáth, “peace even now.” H.—So Horace says, suaviter ut unc est, wishing a continuation of happiness. 3 Esd. (2:17) joins the last word with v. 12, “And now be it,” &c. Cánoth may have this sense, (C.) and consequently no change is necessary. H.

Ver. 11. Him. This is a gloss. C.—Greeting. Prot. “and at such a time.”

Ver. 12. Rebellious. The Jews had shewn themselves impatient of subjection, contending with the kings of Assyria and Babylon, whose territories were now possessed by the successors of Cyrus, v. 15. H.

Ver. 13. Revenues. Sept. &c. include all under the term of “tribute.”

Ver. 14. Eaten. Chal. “on account of the salt, with which we have been salted, from the palace.” The king’s officers were fed from his table. Salt is put for all their emoluments; (C.) and hence the word salary is derived. Pliny xxxi. 7. We may also translate, “because we have demolished the temple, and because,” &c. Kimchi. Grot. &c. But this seems to refined. C.—Prot. “Now because we have maintenance from the king’s palace, and it is not meet,” &c. To have neglected their master’s interests, would have betrayed great ingratitude and perfidy; particularly if they had entered into a covenant of salt, or solemnly engaged to be ever faithful servants, as the nature of their office implied. Num. 18:19. 2 Par. 13:5. H.—Palace, being honoured with much distinction. Delrio, adag. 215.

Ver. 15. Fathers, the preceding emperors, Nabuchodonosor, Salmanasar, &c. H.

Ver. 16. Possession. Sept. have simply, “peace.”

Ver. 17. Greeting. Prot. “peace, and at such a time,” which has no great meaning. H. See v. 10.

Ver. 19. Seditions: so are styled the just efforts of the Jews, to keep or to regain their liberty. C.

Ver. 20. Kings; only David and Solomon. M.—They had made some on the east side of the river pay tribute, though the king may speak of the countries on the west.

Ver. 21. Hear. Chal. “give command,” &c.—Further: lit. “perhaps.” H.—This was a private edict, which might be rescinded. Dan. 6:7.

Ver. 23. Beelteem, is not in Chal.—Arm, or “force.” Prot. H.

Ver. 24. House. They went beyond the order, which only forbade the building of the city, v. 21.—Darius, A. 3485. C.—He was the son of Hystaspes, (S. Jer.) and not Nothus, the sixth from Cyrus, as Sulpitius and Scalinger believe. T.

1 ESDRAS 5

Ver. 1. Addo was grand-father of the prophet, whose writings are extant. C.—Both prophesied in the second year of Darius. M.

Ver. 2. Them. Aggeus had rebuked the people for building houses for themselves, while they neglected the temple. The work was hereupon resumed without any fresh order from the king; as the edicts of the usurper, Oropastes, were considered as null, and the Jews only answer the governor, that they had been authorized by Cyrus, v. 13. 17.

Josephus, and 3 Esd. 3 and 4:47. assert that Darius had given leave. C. M.

Ver. 3. River, over all Syria, &c. This man had not been bribed, but acted with great moderation, and in compliance with his duty. C.—Counsel. Chal. “order ... to make up this wall.”

Ver. 4. In. Sept. “Then I (or they; εἶπον. The Syr. and Arab. declare for the latter) said thus to them: What,” &c.—We gave. Chal. “what are the names?” H.—It seems Thathanai asked this question, v. 10. The Jews might give in the names of Zorobabel, Josue, Aggeus, &c. C.

Ver. 5. Ancients. Sept. “captivity of Juda.” H.—Divine Providence favoured the undertaking. Delrio adag. 216. M. Ps. 32:18.—His eye sometimes threatens ruin. Amos 9:8. C.—God did both on this occasion. W.—Hinder. Chal. “cause them to leave off, till the matter came to Darius, (H.) and his decision was brought back;” (C.) or Prot. “and then they returned answer by letter concerning this matter.” Sept. “and they did not molest them, till the sentence should be brought to (or from) Darius; and then it (word) was sent to the tax-gatherer, concerning this affair.”

Ver. 8. Unpolished. Prot. “great.” H.—Heb. “to be rolled.” See Vitruv. x. 6. Sept. “choice stones.” Kimchi, &c. “marble.” C.—3 Esd. “polished and precious stones.” H.—Yet the Vulg. seems more conformable to C. 6:4 and Agg. 2:2. M. Ribera.—Walls, every fourth course. 3 K. 6:36. C.

Ver. 13. Built. It did not appear that this edict had been revoked; (C.) nor could it be changed, if it had been passed by the advice of the Lord. H.

Ver. 14. Governor. Sept. “over the treasury.”

Ver. 16. In building, being pretty far advanced, though for some time past it had been at a stand. H.—It is not probable that Zorobabel said this, but the author of the letter added it, as he supposed the Jews continued to do some little. C.—He desired to favour their cause, yet so as not to irritate the Samaritans. M.

Ver. 17. Library. Sept. “treasury-house.” Arab. “for the archives.” It is called “the house of books.” C. 6:1. C.

Ver. 1. Library. Prot. "house of the rolls, where the treasures were," &c.—Babylon. In the city, the search was fruitless: (Vatab.) but in the kingdom, the record was discovered. M.

Ver. 2. Ecbatana. Chal. achmetha, signifies "a jug, or chest." C.—"They found in the chest of the palace, under the inscription of Media." Munster. Pagnin.—"And a roll was found (some add, in Amatha) in the city, in a chest, (or tower; Βαρελ) and this memorial was written in it." (Sept.) Prot. style the place, "Achmetha." H.—Arab. "Athana." Syr. "Ahmathane." The memoirs of Cyrus had probably been conveyed to Ecbatana, which was built by Dejoces, the first king of the Medes, and greatly enlarged by his successor, Phraortes. C.—Province. Media now only formed a province of the empire. T.

Ver. 3. And ... foundations is not found in Sept. Syr. and Arab. but it is in Chald. The temple was thus of larger dimensions than that of Solomon, which was only 30 cubits high, and 20 broad inside. 3 K. 6:2. The Rabbins assign 100 for each, (Tr. Middot. iv. 6.) speaking perhaps of the temple rebuilt by Herod, with still greater magnificence. Josephus allows 100 in height, and 60 in breadth. But the Scripture only speaks of 54 cubits breadth, and 99 in length including the adjoining edifices. C.—Breadth, from the front to the end of the holy of holies, which we should call the length. T.—This temple was lower than Solomon's by one half, (2 Par. 3:4. M.) unless those 120 cubits refer only to a tower. H.

Ver. 4. Unpolished, to correspond with the polished stones and cedar employed by Solomon. 3 K. 6:36. M.—Prot. "great stones." See C. 5:8. —Charges. It appears that the Jews furnished money and meat to pay for the wood. C. 1:4 and 3:7. Some annual sum might be assigned by Cyrus, either for the building, or for the daily holocausts. C.

Ver. 5. Placed formerly, before the destruction of the temple. Prot. "and place them in the house of God."

Ver. 8. Hindered. Thus Darius trod in the footsteps, or perhaps exceeded the liberality of Cyrus. H.

Ver. 9. Complaint. Prot. "without fail," (H.) or "delay." Mont. C.

Ver. 11. Nailed. Prot. "hanged." Sept. "covered with wounds, or fastened on it." H.—Some think that the criminal was to be scourged. De Dieu.—"Let him be hanged on the wood, which shall stand upright, after his house shall have been demolished." Vatable.—Such was the custom of the Persians. Grot.—Aman perished on the gallows, which he had erected in his own house for Mardocheus. Est. 7:9.—

Confiscated. Prot. "be made a dunghill for this." H. Syr. &c.—We find some examples of such a treatment. 4 K. 10:27. Dan. 3:5, and 9:6. The effects of those who were condemned to die, in Persia, were generally confiscated. Est. 3:13 and 8:11 and 9:14.

Ver. 14. Artaxerxes, one of the seven who overturned the power of the magi; (Usher, A. 3483) or rather the king of Persia, who lived some time after this, and was very favourable to the Jews. He sent Esdras (A. 3537) and Nehemias (A. 3550) with great powers into the country. C.

Ver. 15. Adar, corresponding with our Feb. and March. M.—In the latter month they celebrated the Passover, v. 19.—Darius. Hence twenty years had elapsed from the first foundation. They might continue to embellish the temple other twenty-seven years, as the Jews assert; (Jo. 2:20,) unless they speak of the repairs made by Herod, (Baronius. T.) or exaggerate, (Grot.) being under a mistake. Salien, A. 3537.

Ver. 17. Goats, which had not left off sucking. M. Numb. 7:87.—Israel. The Sam. Chronicles assert that the tribes returned, as the prophets had foretold, and the sacred history seems to suppose: (C.) which may be true of many, (H.) though the greatest part remained in captivity. C.

Ver. 18. Moses. Num. 3:8. David had perfected the plan, 1 Par. 23. &c. H.

Ver. 19. And. Here the author resumes the Heb. language. C.—Captivity, from which they were released, v. 17. H.

Ver. 20. One man, with zeal and unanimity; so that a second Phase was not to be celebrated. 2 Par. 30:3.

Ver. 21. To them, becoming proselytes, and receiving circumcision. Ex. 12:48.

Ver. 22. Assyria. The successors of Cyrus now ruled over those countries, (C.) which had belonged to the most potent Assyrian and Chaldean monarchs; and therefore the titles are given to them indiscriminately. T.

Ver. 1. Things, sixty-eight years after the journey of Zorobabel. C.—Salien adds ten years more. H.—Artaxerxes Longimanus. M. T.—Son, or great grandson of Saraias, who had been slain 121 years. Esdras was still living, in the days of Nehemias. Many persons are omitted in this genealogy. The immediate descendants of Azarias may be found, 1 Par. 6. Similarity of names has occasioned many mistakes. 3 Esd. 8 reckons only eleven persons between Aaron and Esdras; and 4 Esd. 1 has eighteen; whereas here we behold sixteen generations, and 1 Par. twenty-two. C.

Ver. 5. Beginning of the Jewish republic.

Ver. 6. Went up, a second time. 2 Esd. 12:1. W.—Ready. Heb. mahir, “diligent,” &c. H.—Scribe, not so much noted for his skill in writing fast, or drawing up deeds, as for his knowledge of the divine law. C.—The gospel sometimes gives the title of scribe to the doctors of the law. Matt. 22:35, with Mark 12:28. It is peculiarly due to Esdras, who gave a correct copy of the Scriptures, and wrote them in a different character, leaving the ancient one to the Samaritans, that the people might be less connected. Bellarm. De Verb. xx. 1, citing (T.) the most learned Fathers and Jewish writers. C. Diss.—The author of 4 Esdras (14:19,) intimates that the sacred books had been all destroyed, and were dictated again to Esdras by the Holy Spirit. But this book is not of sufficient authority to establish so dangerous an opinion; (H.) which is refuted by the whole context of the Bible, in which we see that the law was never forgotten. C. Diss. D.—As Esdras was inspired, what additions he might make, must be accounted divine and authentic. C.—Hand; protection, (Delrio, adag. 217,) or inspiration. M.—God can incline the heart of the king, (Prov. 21) to accomplish his decrees. H.

Ver. 9. Month. Thus four entire months were spent on the journey, as they did not go the shortest way, and had much baggage, &c. C.

Ver. 10. Heart. Thinking continually (M.) how he might keep the law himself, and direct others. H.—It would be well if all would thus teach by example, like Jesus Christ, who began to do and then to teach. H.—Judgment. Both these terms express the same thing. M.

Ver. 11. Of the edict, is a farther explanation of the letter. H.

Ver. 12. Kings. This title was placed on the tomb of Cyrus, (Strabo xv.) and denoted a very powerful king. Artaxerxes had many tributaries in Media, Sidon, &c. The kings of Assyria had before assumed such pompous titles. Osee 8:10. C.—The most learned, comes later in the original Chald. H.—“The priest, scribe of the law, ... perfection, (health and happiness, (C.) or consummate in learning, &c. H.) as at present." C.—Gemir uceheneth, "perfection (Castel. Lexic.) even now." C. 4:10. Prot. "perfect peace, and at such a time." H.

Ver. 14. Counsellors. Interpreters of the laws. Joseph. xi. 6.—The number seems to have been established at the courts of the Assyrian and Chaldee monarchs. Tob. 12:15. We find their names, Est. 1:10, 14. The history of this queen happened in the reign of Darius Hystaspes. C.—Hand. By this he was to pass sentence, v. 25. H.—The Jews were authorized to follow their own laws (C.) under the Persian dominion, v. 26. T.

Ver. 16. Babylon, which the Chaldees may freely give. M.

Ver. 20. By me. Heb. "to spend, take it out of the king's treasure-house." Sept. adds, "and from me."

Ver. 22. Salt was used in all the sacrifices. Lev. 2:13. In 3 Esd. no mention is made of oil or salt; but we read, "and all other things in abundance."

Ver. 24. Nathinites. 3 Esd. "sacred slaves." H.—Artaxerxes confirms the immunities granted by the law of God, (Num. 3:6. 12,) by the kings of Egypt, (Gen. 47:22,) and by all nations to the ministers of religion. C.

Ver. 25. River. 3 Esd. "In all Syria and Phenicia." H.—Hitherto, it seems, the royal judges had decided all affairs of consequence, which required any public chastisement.

Ver. 26. Banishment. Heb. lit. "eradication" by death or exile, (C.) or by being cut off from all society. C. 10:8. De Dieu.—Sept. "correction." H.

Ver. 27. Blessed. Here the author begins to write again in Heb. and in the following verse, Esdras speaks in person. C.

1 ESDRAS 8

Ver. 2. Hattus. He was of the royal family, (H.) as the former were descendants of the two sons of Aaron. C.—The great numbers which were persuaded to return from Babylon, signify the conversions made by holy preachers. V. Bede. W.

Ver. 5. Sons. Sept. and Arab. add, "of Zathoe, Sechenias, the son of Aziel." The Syr. supplies the name of "Gabo, the son of Nahzael," which seems to have been lost. C.—Junius translates, "of the descendants Sechenias N. son of Jahaziel."

Ver. 10. Sons of. Sept. supply "Baani," whose name occurs, C. 2:10, and is here visibly wanting. C.

Ver. 13. Last. Coming after their brethren. C. 2:13.

Ver. 14. Zachur. Heb. and Sept. "Zabud." C.—Two letters have been mistaken. H.

Ver. 15. Ahava. This river (v. 21 and 31) runs through the territory of the same name, called Hava; (4 K. 17:24) the people of which exchanged places with the Israelites. Esdras makes a circuit to prevail on some of the latter to return with him, unless he began his journey from Susa. Babylon comprises all that country. C.—None there, who were not priests, v. 2. Lyran. M.

Ver. 16. Sent. Sept. "&c. "to Eliezer," &c. in order to give them his orders what to say to Eddo, who presided at Chasphia, as the sequel shews.—Wise men, instructors of the people, (2 Par. 35:3. C.) Levites. M.

Ver. 17. Chasphia. The Caspian mountains, between Media and Hyrcania. Here the Nathinities were forced to labour, under Eddo. The service of the temple would be far more eligible. C.

Ver. 21. Fast it seems for eight days, so that they departed on the 12th, v. 31. M.—It will not suffice to leave sin, we must also do works of satisfaction. W.

Ver. 22. Forsake him. Apostates are treated with the greatest severity. M.—Esdras thought that the glory of God was at stake, and he would not shew any diffidence in Providence, or scandalize the infidels. C.—We ought not to ask princes for what we should despise. D.

Ver. 26. A hundred. Heb. adds, "talents," vessels of silver. H.—Some Rabbins suppose there were only 100, each of this weight, which is not probable. All the silver vessels, of different sizes, weighed 100 talents. There was the same quantity of golden vessels. C.

Ver. 27. Solids. Heb. adarconim. Darics, equivalent to the golden sicle. C. 1 Par. 29:7.—Best. Prot. "of fine copper, precious as gold." It might resemble the Corinthian brass, or aurichalcum, (H.) composed of gold, silver, and brass melted together, in the burning of Corinth, by L. Mummius. Pliny xxxiv. 2.—Yet no such Corinthian vessels have come down to us; so that the account seems fabulous; and, at any rate, the city was not taken in the days of Esdras, but A. 608 of Rome. We cannot say whether he speaks of copper, brass, &c. C.

Ver. 35. Israel. Some of the different tribes certainly returned. C. 6:17.

Ver. 36. Lords, (satrapis.) 3 Esd. "to the royal officers and governors of Cœlosyria and Phenicia; and they glorified," &c.—Furthered, by their assistance (H.) and praise. They formed their sentiments, as is usual, by those of the king. C.

1 ESDRAS 9

Ver. 1. Abominations, or sins, (M.) marrying with infidels, contrary to the law. Ex. 34:15. Deut. 7:3. D.—Malachy (2:11) reprehends this conduct, and threatens both rulers and people who tolerate it, with God's indignation. W.

Ver. 2. First. Or "was in this first transgression," incurred by those who returned with Zorobabel; or "was concerned in this very heinous transgression;" in transgressione hac prima. C.—Prot. "hath been chief." 3 Esd. "and the leaders and grandees partook in this illegal affair, from its commencement." Sept. "and the hand of the chiefs was in this transgress, in the beginning." This would greatly increase the difficulty of reformation. Some of the princes were however ready to undertake the work, and had preserved themselves from the two general contagion. H.—All marriages with the Moabites, &c. were prohibited, if the women remained infidels. Ex. 34. T.

Ver. 3. Coat, (tunicam) or inner garment. H.—Mourning. Heb. "astonished." Syr. Mont. C. Prot.—Sept. "alone." 3 Esd. "pensive and in grief." H.—Arab. "not uttering a word." See Job 1:20 and 2:8. This was the ordinary posture of people in sorrow. Isai. 3:26. C.

Ver. 4. To me, in the court of the temple. C. 10:1. M.—Sacrifice, which was offered last of all, about sun-set. Ex. 29:38. The Jews commonly protract their fasts till the stars appear. Leo, p. 3, art. 8.

Ver. 7. At this day. Notwithstanding the favourable decrees of Cyrus, &c. the greatest part of the people continued in captivity, being dispersed, some into Egypt, others into distant countries, beyond the Euphrates. C.

Ver. 8. As a. Prot. "for a little space, grace hath been shewed from the Lord,” (H.) and yet we are again irritating Him! C.—A pin, or nail, here signifies a small settlement or holding; which Esdras begs for, to preserve even a part of the people, who, by their great iniquity, had incurred the anger of God. Ch.—Allusion is made to the pins which fasten down a tent, (Isai. 33:20 and 54:2) or hinder a ship from being carried from the shore, (Tigur. M.) on which utensils are hung up, (Tournemine) referring to the magistrates, who were now of the same country. T. Isai. 22:21. Delrio, adag. 218.—Sept. “a support.” Heb. yathed, denotes also a walking-stick, nail, &c. M.—Eyes, fill us with joy, in perfect security.—Little life, free us from danger. C.—Esdras is afraid to ask for the impunity of all, but only begs that a small part may be spared, like a nail or post from a house, which may serve to rebuild it. W.

Ver. 9. Fence. Heb. gader, “the name which the Carthaginians” gave to Cadiz, “as it signifies a fence,” or an inclosure. Pliny xxii. C.—Some Latin MSS. read spem, “hope.” Lyran.—The Tig. version understands the wall of Jerusalem, built in a hurry. M.—But this was not perfected, (H.) if begun, till the time of Nehemias. 2 Esd. 1:3. C.—God gave his protection to the people, (H. Delrio, adag. 219.) by the king of Persia. T.

Ver. 11. Mouth, like a vessel brim-full. M.—Prot. “from one end ot the other.” H.

Ver. 12. Peace. Alliance, (M.) or advantage. See Ps. 121:8. Moses had thus proscribed the Moabites, &c. as he had done the people of Chanaan still more severely. The Israelites were to execute God’s decrees. Deut. 23:6. C.—The obstinate idolaters were to be exterminated.

Ver. 13. Saved us. Prot. “hast punished us less than our iniquities deserve and hast given us such deliverance as this.” Sept. “hast made our transgressions light,” (H.) not weighing them with rigid severity. C.

Ver. 14. That. Heb. “should we again break, &c ... Wouldst thou not be angry?” &c.

Ver. 15. To be saved from our iniquities, which are still upon us. H.—We confess that, if we should be treated according to our deserts, we could expect no redress. But we trust in thy mercies, which have hitherto supported and brought us back from slavery. C.

Ver. 1. God, in the court of the people, before the eastern gate.

Ver. 2. Sechenias. 3 Esd. calls him “Jechoias.” See C. 8:5. The name of Sechenias is not found among the transgressors; (v. 20) but that of Jehiel is, v. 26. It seems, however, that the former returned with Esdras, and speaks in the name of the people, to encourage them to confess their guilt, (C.) unless his name be omitted. M.—Repentance. Heb. “yet there is hope, (Prot.) or an assembly of Israel.” Du Dieu.

Ver. 3. Covenant. The marrying with strange women seemed to have annulled the covenant of God.—Of them. The children were to follow the mothers, as in other unlawful connections. Their being suffered to remain behind, might have had dangerous consequences. C.—The custom of divorcing was then in force, (T.) and the Jews looked upon all as null, which was done contrary to the law; (V. Bede. E. C. Grot.) though here the law was only prohibitory. Cajet. T.—As all was directed by the will of God, the dictates of humanity would not be disregarded (C.) on this trying occasion. H.—The children might be placed in houses for education. Cajet. T.

Ver. 4. Thy part. The high priest not acting, (M.) Esdras was appointed chief, (H.) and his abilities were universally acknowledged. C.

Ver. 6. Before. 3 Esd. “the court or hall of the temple.” H.—Eliasib. His son and successor is styled Joiada. 2 Esd. 12:10. The same person had often many names, (C.) or Johanan might be a younger son. M.—Josephus (xi. 5.) says, that Esdras went to the apartments of John and Eliasib. H.—Esdras, though sent extraordinarily by God, repairs to the son of the priest, as S. Paul conferred with other apostles. Gal. 2. W.

Ver. 8. Away. Heb. and Sept. “subjected to anathema,” (C.) and utterly destroyed; (H.) or, according to some editions of the Sept. and Josephus, “consecrated to the temple.” Esdras exercised the power which had been entrusted to him. C. 7:16.

Ver. 9. Ninth. Casleu, (Zac. 7:1) which corresponds with our November and December. M.—Street. Court, which afforded as yet no shelter from the rain. C.—This would tend to punish them for their sin, and to make them more sensible to it. W.

Ver. 11. Confession. Sept. “give praise;” which is done by repentance and virtue. M.—Confess your faults, and submit to the justice of God. Jos. 7:19. C.

Ver. 14. Cities. It is not clear whether the rulers went to the different cities, or the principal men of each gave information, and caused the guilty to appear before Esdras, at Jerusalem. H.

Ver. 16. So. Cajetan improperly concludes, that the sentence was not put in execution; because Nehemias (C. 13:23.) complains of such marriages. C.—But the guilty might have resumed their women. H.—Went. Heb. “were separated.” H.—By making a small change, we may translate, with 3 Esd. “and Esdras separated or chose the men.” Josephus seems generally to have followed the Greek of 3 Esd. The Syriac says there were 20 judges.

Ver. 19. Hands. Thus the Persians confirmed their most solemn engagements. C.

Ver. 25. Israel. Laymen, (C.) not of the tribe of Levi. M.

Ver. 30. Moab. The inhabitants of this town, as well as of Nebo, (v. 43) are specified.

Ver. 44. Children. Heb. may be, “and some of these women had exposed their children.” But most follow the Sept. and Vulg. 3 Esd. 9:36, “and they ejected them with their children.” None was spared. C.—One great inconvenience of such connections is, that the offspring is illegitimate. W.—Only 17 priests, 10 Levites, and 86 laymen, are stigmatized as guilty of this scandal; yet these fill Israel with confusion, and Esdras with extreme affliction. H.

2 ESDRAS

THE BOOK OF NEHEMIAS;

commonly called THE SECOND BOOK OF ESDRAS

INTRODUCTION

This Book takes its name from the writer, who was cup-bearer to Artaxerxes, (surnamed Longimanus) king of Persia, and was sent by him with a commission to rebuild the walls of Jerusalem. It is also called the Second Book of Esdras, because it is a continuation of the history begun by Esdras, of the state of the people of God after their return from captivity. Ch.—Genebrard believes that the latter wrote the work. But how long must he thus have lived? and how come the lists to vary so much? C.—We may allow that these variations are owing to the mistakes of transcribers, (1 Esd. 2:1) for the writer of both works was certainly inspired. Esdras lived a long time along with Nehemias; (C. 12:35) and he may have left memorials, as well as the latter, from which the present work seems to be compiled. H.—Some additions have been made since the days of Nehemias, articularly C. 12 to v. 26, or at least (C.) the five last of these verses. Capel. Chron. —The passage cited from the commentaries of Nehemias, (2 Mac. 2:13) is not to be found here; which shews that we have not his entire work, but only an abridgment, in which the author has adopted his words, with some few alterations. The fifth chapter seems to be out of its place, and also the dedication of the walls. C. 12:27. Nehemias was a person in great favour at the court of Persia; and of high birth, probably of the royal family, (Euseb. Isid. Genebrard in Chron.) as most of the ancients believe that all who governed, till the time of the Asmoneans, were of the tribe of Juda. Hence he styles Hanani his brother, (C. 1:2) and declines entering into the temple. C. 6:11. His name never occurs among the priests; and though we read 2 Mac. 1:18. 21, jussit sacerdos Nehemias, (T.) the Greek has, “Nehemias order the priests;” ἱερεῖς; (C. Huet. D.) and the title of priest sometimes is given to laymen at the head of affairs. H.—In this character Nehemias appeared, by order of Artaxerxes: and notwithstanding the obstructions of the enemies of Juda, rebuilt the walls of Jerusalem, and returned after twelve years to court, making a second visit to his own country, a little before the death of the king, whom he probably survived only one year, dying A. 3580, about thirty years after he had been appointed governor. C.—In the two first chapters, we behold his solicitude for the welfare of his country, in the ten following his success, and in the last what abuses he corrected. W.—He renewed the covenant with God, (C. 9 and 10) sent for the sacred fire, and established a library at Jerusalem. 2 Mac. 1:19. 34 and 2:13. H.

2 ESDRAS 1

Ver. 1. Words, or transactions written by Nehemias. M.—Helcias, or Heb. and Sept. “Chelcias.”—Casleu, the third of the civil year. 1 Esd. 10:9.—Year of Artaxerxes, (C.) after he was associated with his father on the throne; (T.) or rather the death of Xerxes. From this period the seventy weeks of Daniel are dated, (D.) or from the 23rd of Artaxerxes, and the 28th of Xerxes, (T.) as above three years must have been consumed in making preparations for the walls, &c. Josephus xi. 5.—The name of Nehemias, “comforter of God,” as well as his being sent by a king to build, &c. prefigured Jesus Christ, sent by God to comfort and establish his Church. Ven. Bede. W. H.—Susa. Heb. “in Susa, the palace,” where the kings of Persia resided in the months of winter, (Athen. xii. 1.) and of spring. Xenoph. Cyr. viii. Curt. v. 8.—Here Darius probably kept his court at other times. Est. 1:2. C.—Susa was situated on the river Coaspes, between the provinces of Babylon and Persia. D.

Ver. 2. Hanani, a relation, whom Nehemias brought back. C. 7:2.—Came. Some Latin copies add, “to me,” (Lyran) as if a deputation had been sent; but of this the text is silent. C.

Ver. 3. Province of Judea, subject to the Persians, as it was afterwards to the Romans; though, at present, they were allowed to have governors of their own nation. M.—Reproach, on account of the surrounding enemies. H.—Fire, recently; (M. See 1 Esd. 4:12 and 11:9) or rather by Nabuchodonosor; as the kings of Persia would not suffer the city to be fortified, for fear of a fresh rebellion. Lyran. T.—We find that little progress (C. 2 and 4. C.) had at least been made in the work, though the blame must rather be laid on the enemies of Israel, than on several of the kings of Persia, who seem to have authorized the undertaking, which Cambyses, or Smerdis, had for a time interrupted. They only specify, indeed, that leave was granted to build the temple. But they allowed them to erect houses for themselves, which could not have been done to any purpose, among so many enemies, unless they had been defended by some sort of fortifications. H.

Ver. 4. Days; about four months, till Nisan. C.

Ver. 6. They. Heb. and Sept. “we have sinned.” M.

Ver. 7. Vanity. Heb. “we have been corrupted.” Vat. “we have dealt very corruptly.” Prot. H.—The author of the Vulg. has read e for é. C.—Sept. “we have been very dissolute, or weak.”

Ver. 9. World. Lit. “of heaven, or the sky,” (H.) which seems to the vulgar (C.) to rest upon the horizon. T. See Deut. 30:4.

Ver. 10. Redeemed, or liberated from great evils. M.

Ver. 11. Man; (virum) the great king, (H.) Artaxerxes. C.—Cup-bearer; Athersatha. 1 Esd. 2:63 and 2 Esd. 7:65.

2 ESDRAS 2

Ver. 1. Year. It seems the Persians began the year with Tizri, since both Casleu (the third) and Nisan (the seventh month of the civil year) fall on the twentieth of the king.—Wine. These kings drunk only that of Syria. Strabo xv.—People of distinction were appointed cup-bearers; and even the children of kings did not esteem the office beneath them. Herod. iii. 34. Athen. x. 6. Homer, &c. C.—I was. Prot. “I had not been before-time sad in his presence.” H.—Heb. lit. “I was not evil.” Sept. “an enemy, or stranger.” Arab. “disagreeable.” Syr. “sorrowful.” Sept. also, “there was not another (οὐκ ἦν ἑτερος) present,” C. 5:6. S. Jerom seems not to have read the negation. H.

Ver. 2. Is not. Heb. “nothing but sorrow of heart;” (Syr. C. Prot.) or rather, thou art meditating only treason. Sept. “This is nothing but wickedness of heart,” (H.) which often shews itself on the countenance. The king might suspect that he was giving him poison. M.—Hence Nehemias feared, (C.) dreading such suspicions, (H.) and aware lest the company might frustrate his good design, as contrary to the interests of the crown. T.

Ver. 3. Live; an usual salutation. Dan. 3:9 and 5:10. So Ælian (var. i. 32.) says, “O king Artaxerxes, mayst thou reign for ever.”—Father, v. 5. He knew that the Persians shewed great regard to the dead, (C. T.) whose bodies they sometimes cover with wax, and keep in their house, (Cic. Tusc. i. Alex. Genial iii. 2.) or inter. Herod. i. 140.

Ver. 4. Heaven, a fervent ejaculation, in secret, (T.) to touch the king’s heart, (C.) and to enable me to speak in a proper manner. M.

Ver. 6. And, &c. In private the queen might dine with her husband, but not in public. Est. 1. C.—Queen; probably Esther, if she were married to this king. M.—But this is uncertain. H.—Usher thinks it was Damaschia, mentioned by Ctesias. C.—Time, when I should return. Some king eight or ten years, and returned into Judea towards the end of the reign of Artaxerxes. C. 13:6. C.—He perhaps asked permission to visit Jerusalem for only a short period, at first, but his presence being deemed necessary, he was permitted to continue there as governor full twelve years. M.

Ver. 7. Over; give me a guard, (H.) or accompany me to Jerusalem. M.

Ver. 8. Forest. Heb. pordes, “paradise,” or garden planted with trees. Pliny (v. 23.) mentions a “paradise,” in Coelosyria. Grot.—But Nehemias might petition to be supplied with cedars from Libanus, (T.) as they had been given for the temple. 1 Esd. 3:7. H.—Tower. Heb. bira, means also “a palace or temple.” It may designate the porch of the temple, which was 120 cubits high; (2 Par. 3:4. C.) though that had been lately repaired by Esdras. M.—Others think the doors of the courts are meant, as they were as strong as those of towers. Vatab.—They were not yet finished. C. 10:9. Many believe that (C.) Nehemias speaks of the royal palace, which had been almost contiguous to the temple, (M.) where he intended to build one for himself, while he should reside in the city. T.—But this might give umbrage to the king. C.—He could not, however, intend his favourite to remain without a suitable palace; and the latter seems to have designed not only to repair that which Solomon had founded, but also to erect another house for the governor. H.—Good hand; favour, (M.) and powerful aid. H.

Ver. 10. Horonite, a native, not (C.) a petty king (Grot.) of Horonaim, in the country of Moab. Jer. 48:3. He must have been very old, if he lived till the temple was built at Garizim: (Josephus and Scaliger) but Petau supposes that there were two of the name.—Servant; an officer appointed over the Samaritans, as well as Sanaballat. The Persian monarchs styled all their subjects servants or slaves. C.—Grieved. Thus unbelievers repine when any one endeavours to propagate the truth, (H.) or to establish the Church. W.

Ver. 12. Any man, at Jerusalem, (v. 16) though he had informed the king, v. 8. H.—No beast; that none might be alarmed.

Ver. 13. Valley of Cedron, on the east, (C.) or west, near Calvary. M. T.—Dragon. Heb. Tannin, or “great fish,” which might be kept there, unless the fountain was famous for the appearance of some dragon, or the water proceeded from the mouth of a brazen one. Sept. have read thanim, “figs.” The fountain of Siloc might have many names. C.—Viewed. Sept. “I walked upon the wall of Jerusalem, which these men are demolishing or clearing away,” &c. H.

Ver. 14. Aqueduct, or reservoir, made by Ezechias. 2 Par. 32:30.

Ver. 15. Torrent of Cedron, having gone round the city. C.

Ver. 16. Magistrates. Sept. “guards.” Seganim denotes various officers. C.—Work, or to any workmen. H.—None were now employed. T.

Ver. 18. Hand. God had manifested his goodness and power, at the court of Persia. W.

Ver. 19. Arabian governor. He afterwards accuses Nehemias. C. 6:6. C.

Ver. 20. Answered. Sept. “returned them an account (λογον) ... we are his pure servants, and we will build.” H.—Part, or business. 1 Esd. 4:4.—Justice, or right to the city. C.—You may mind your own affairs. T.—Remembrance. It was esteemed a high honour to be a citizen of Jerusalem. Ps. 86:5.

2 ESDRAS 3

Ver. 1. Priest, the third since the captivity, son (C.) or brother of Joachim. Lyran.—Flock-gate, near which was probably the miraculous pool. John 5:2. But the situation of these gates is not ascertained.—Sanctified it, beginning the work (C.) with some religious ceremonies. Junius.—It was designed to protect God’s temple; and therefore, when finished, they dedicated it (W). with solemnity, as they did all the walls. C. 12:27. The like custom is observed on laying the foundation-stone of our temples. H. Sanctified may also mean, cleared away the rubbish. Vatab. T.—Hundred. Heb. Mea.—Cubits is not in the original, Sept. or Syriac, (C.) though it seems to be understood. The ancient Jerusalem had twelve principal gates, four east, north, and west. There were none on the south, where Mount Sion lay. T.—The priests and others undertook this work, considering their eternal as well as their temporal inheritance. D.

Ver. 6. Old gate, or of the judges, who there assembled. Lyran.

Ver. 7. For the. Heb. “for (C. or) unto the throne of the governor on this side of the river.” Prot. H.—These people worked near the palace, which had been built for the Persian governor, who came to administer justice, till the time of Esdras. C. 5:15 and 1 Esd. 7:25. Perhaps the governor of Syria had (H.) assisted the Jews, unless Nehemias himself be meant. M.

Ver. 8. Goldsmith and perfumer, are plural in Heb.—Left, 400 cubits, (T.) as the wall was not demolished, (M.) having been repaired by Ozias just before the coming of the Chaldees. 2 Par. 26:9. T.—Heb. “they pushed forward, (repaired, C. or) paved, (Du Dieu) or fortified Jerusalem unto the broad wall.” Prot.—The Sept. copies vary: some read, they placed, (restored) εθηκα. Complut. But the Rom. edition has, “they left.” D.

Ver. 9. Street. Prot. “of the half part,” (H.) belonging to Benjamin. Sellum was the inspector of that part which fell to the share of Juda, v. 12. C. 4:19. Grotius.—Jerusalem, like all great cities, was divided into parts. C.

Ver. 10. House. Thus he would be induced to do the work more perfectly. M.

Ver. 11. Built. Heb. “repaired the other piece,” or the part of the wall which corresponded with half a division, as in the following v. 12. 15. 24. &c.

Ver. 12. Alohes, “the enchanter,” (C.) as he could perhaps enchant serpents. Grot.—Daughters, who forwarded the work, as they had no brothers. M.

Ver. 14. Bethacharam, in the tribe of Benjamin. Jer. 6:1.

Ver. 15. King's garden. This fountain is mentioned, Isai. 8:6. Jo. 9:7.—Steps. The place was steep. C. 12:36.

Ver. 16. Labour, by Ezechias, for a reservoir. 2 Par. 32:4.—Mighty men of David, (1 Par. 11:10) or the king's guards, (C.) or the garrison. M.

Ver. 17. Ceila, in the tribe of Juda. He inspected the workmen from this place.

Ver. 19. Strong corner, noted for some fortress, tower, (C.) or arsenal. Vatab. D.—Sept. “the ascent connecting the corner.” H.

Ver. 20. Mount Sion. M.—Heb. and Sept. “earnestly repaired;” (H.) being indignant at the negligence of his neighbour, or undertaking his work with zeal. C.

Ver. 22. Plains. Sept. “from Chechar,” retaining the original term cucar, which means “a plain.” It lay in the environs of Jerusalem. C. 12:28.—Of the Jordan, is not in Heb. &c. C.—They might be natives of that place. Sa. Vat. M.

Ver. 26. Ophel. A very strong tower. See 2 Par. 27:3 and 33:14.—East of the great court of the temple, from which it was not remote, as Esdras here harangued the people. C. 12:36 and 3 Esd. 8:1. Out of the gate was a pond of water, (C.) for the service of the temple. M.

Ver. 28. Horse-gate, by which the king's horses were led to water, at the torrent Cedron. It was near the temple and palace. 4 K. 11:16. C.—Some Rabbins assert that people were obliged to alight here, and to go on foot to the temple. Lyran.

Ver. 29–30. After him, Semaia; as the Sept. &c. intimate; and not (C.) “after me,” as if Nehemias spoke of himself, as some Heb. copies require. Jun. Grotius.—Treasury, or “room.” Pagnin.—Judgment. Sept. “Maphekad.” Heb. mopkod. Prot. “miphkad,” (H.) may signify “command, review,” &c. We can only guess at the reason of this appellation. C.—Perhaps the cause of the Nathinities were here decided, (M.) as well as those of others. It seems to be the same with the watch-gate, (C. 12:38) and led not out of the city, but into the street of the Nathinities. T.

Ver. 2. Multitude. Heb. and Sept. “army.” C.—Silly. Lit. “feeble.” H.—Sacrifice, at the dedication. T.—Day, in so short a time, as their present vigorous proceedings seem to promise, notwithstanding their feeble condition, and the paucity of their numbers. H.—But no: we shall have time enough to hinder them, (M.) if the nature of their materials do it not for us. H.—Raise. Heb. “revive;” a word used for reparations of walls, &c. C. Delrio, adag. 221.—Sept. “heal.” God's providence did not permit the enemy to rage, till the work was greatly advanced; so infidels laugh at the attempts of your priests to restore religion, which nevertheless flourishes. W.

Ver. 3. Leap over. Heb. Sept. &c. “break down.” C.—Bitter sarcasm, which excites the indignation of Nehemias! T.

Ver. 4. Captivity. Since they have not learnt to commiserate others. C.

Ver. 5. Face. Punish the obstinate. T.—He does not wish that they may continue impenitent. C.—But, on that supposition, he approves of the divine justice, and foretells what will happen. E.—Revenge was equally criminal under the old law, as it is at present. But the servants of God express their approbation (C.) of his inscrutable counsels. The imperative in Heb. is often used for the future tense. H.—Mocked. Prot. “provoked thee ... before the builders.” Sept. omit most of this and the following verses; having only, “Do not hide thyself, with respect to wickedness.” H.

Ver. 6. Thereof, all round; as masons were stationed in different parts, (v. 19) and not barely on one side of the city. C.—Tobias alludes to the present lowness of the walls, v. 3. H.

Ver. 8. Together, to the number of 180,000, according to the Jews; who say that they were terrified, at the excommunication pronounced by 300 priests against them, while 300 young men sounded trumpets; and they fled, leaving Nehemias at liberty to continue the work. It is a pity that we have no foundation for this in Scripture. C. See 1 Esd. 4:3. H.—The Samaritans durst not openly attack the Jews, who were under the protection of the Persian monarch. But they endeavoured clandestinely to injure them, (T.) and to prepare ambushes. H.

Ver. 10. Juda. Some of the Jews, (M.) who were dispirited at the greatness of the work and the threats of the enemy.—Burdens. Sept. “of the enemies.” Arab. “the Jews were strengthened, there were many porters, but they could not finish the work.” C.—Rubbish to be removed. T.

Ver. 12. Ten times, frequently. M.—Places, among the Cuthites.—Whence they. Prot. “ye return unto us, they will be upon you.” Heb. the second person is put for the third, which occurs in the Sept. &c. though they refer it to the enemy. “They come up from all places against us.” H.—De Dieu would translate, “return to us,” cultivate the friendship of Sanaballat; or “return home,” and leave off this work. The sense of the Vulg. is the most easy, and the best. C.

Ver. 13. Place. Heb. adds, “below.”—Round. Heb. “on the hills.” H.—To remove the apparent contradiction, (C.) Prot. supply, “and on the higher places.” Sept. “in lurking holes,” σκεπτινοίς.

Ver. 14. Remember. These are the most powerful arguments to encourage an army. H.

Ver. 16. Their. Heb. “my servants,” (M.) half of whom only wrought, while the rest stood guard. If we adhere to the Vulg. we must suppose that Nehemias altered his first plan, and ordered almost all to be ready to fight or to labour, as occasion might require, v. 17. C.—In. “Over, (H.) or behind all the family of Juda,” (Vatab.) encouraging the people by word, and sometimes by example. T. M.

Ver. 17. Sword. Heb. “dart.” C.—The expression seems to be proverbial. So Ovid makes Canacea speak, “My right hand holds the pen, my left the sword;” (H.) while I write, I am on the point of killing myself. C.

Ver. 18. By me, when the enemy appeared. M.

Ver. 20. For us. Yet we must act with prudence and courage. H.

Ver. 22. Midst. Before they had gone home. C.—Let us. Prot. “that in the night they may be a guard to us, and labour on the day.” H.

Ver. 23. Clothes, even to sleep.—Only. Sept. Compl. “man and his arms to the water.” H.—They went armed to fetch water; (Malvenda) or they had their armour and water always at hand. Junius, &c.—Heb. “each kept his dart at the water.” It may have various senses. C.—Prot. agree with the Vulg. “saving that every one put them off for washing” (H.) them, or themselves. T.

2 ESDRAS 5

Ver. 1. Cry. V. Bede (iii. 21) complains of some pastors who neglect the flock, but exacted revenues. May not the same complaint still be made? W.

Ver. 2. Very. Syr. “and our brethren are too numerous” to find meat.—For, &c. Heb. Sept. &c. “by force.” Abenezra, &c.—Yet most people explain it in the sense of the Vulg. It was permitted to sell children in extreme distress, Ex. 21:7. Grot. C.

Ver. 3. Let us. Prot. “We have mortgaged.”—Famine, or “hunger.” H.

Ver. 4. Let us. Sept. Mont. “We have borrowed” on usury, contrary to Ex. 22:25. The Jews were still obliged to pay tribute.

Ver. 5. Brethren, who are still in captivity, or we are of the same nature as the rich, (C.) who so cruelly oppress us. M.

Ver. 7. Against them, as a private rebuke would not suffice. T.

Ver. 8. Redeemed, by paying the ransom to the Babylonians, or by using all our endeavours to procure the releasement of our brethren. C.—For us. Prot. “or shall they be sold unto us?” H.—A true pastor practises what he preaches to others. W.

Ver. 11. For them, to the Persian governors, v. 14. H.—Nehemias remits this pension, which was before paid by the people, and exacted by the rich. Wolphius.—Du Moulin asserts that there is no question of usury, which the Jews always abhorred, much less of that which the Romans called the 100th, (C.) consisting in the payment of 12 per cent, (T.) or one every month. M.—Heb. “Give back to them,” (H.) that they may enjoy those things.

Ver. 12. Oath of them. Priests, in private, (M.) who were not innocent; (T.) or these were witnesses of the oath taken by the rich. Piscator.

Ver. 13. Lap, or skirt of my robes. T.—Such figurative actions were very common. Thus a Roman ambassador at Carthage, folding up his garment, said he brought peace or war. Livy 21:18. C.—Said. Behold how easily was that effected at Jerusalem, which the Romans could never perfectly bring about, after the most violent riots! T.

Ver. 14. Not eat, out of pity for the poor. M.—He was supported by the king, (C.) or by his own patrimony. H. v. 11.

Ver. 16. Wall, pleading no exemption, but making my servants work. C.—Though no particular portion was assigned to him, he helped all. T.—No land, as I might have done, on advantageous terms. H.—Rare example of disinterestedness! He praises himself without vanity, only to induce others to follow the same course. So Moses, David, S. Paul, and others acted. Num. 12:3. &c.

Ver. 17. Men, my brethren, not (C.) Persians. Grot.—Them; ambassadors. M.—If Nehemias behaved with such generosity for twelve years, he must have been very rich; or he received a great pension from the king, or voluntary and abundant contributions from the rich.

Ver. 18. Wines. This was only produced, in abundance, on extraordinary occasions; for the people of the East do not drink wine at every feast. Eccli. 31:17. C.—Yearly. Sept. “Moreover, loaves of extortion I did not seek, because a hard servitude lay upon this people.” H.

Ver. 19. Good. A good conscience confidently hopeth for a reward. W.

Ver. 2. Make. Prot. “meet together.” H.—When the adversaries of faith find themselves unable to suppress it, they offer peace: so when Protestants began, and where they are still weak, they would have none persecuted for any opinions in religious matters; “but where they are strong they hardly grant toleration to Catholics.” W.—This has been no where more observable than in these islands, where the spirit of persecution has not yet subsided, though banished from most other countries. See Dr. Milner’s 4th let. to a Preb. Debates in Parl. 1810, &c. H.—Villages. Most of the Lat. editions, before Sixtus V. read, in vitulis in campo uno, (C.) “with sacrifices of calves in some one field.” H.—Perhaps Cephirim, (T.) or copirim, “villages,” (H.) may be the name of a place in the plain of Ono, (T.) which is styled the valley of craftsmen, (C. 11:35. C.) in the tribe of Benjamin, near the Jordan. Adrichomius.—Mischief, by taking or killing. M.

Ver. 3. You. This was one, (H.) though not the principal reason which hindered him. It is often adviseable not to seem to suspect any evil.

Ver. 5–6. Letter. Heb. Sept. and Arab. add, “open:” but this word is not in Syriac. The letter might be an order to appear, or might be left open to signify that the bearer was a man of confidence, from whom Nehemias might receive any farther information; unless it was sent in this manner out of contempt.—Gossem, the Arabian governor. C. 2:19. C.

Ver. 7. Prophets. This was false; though, no doubt, the true prophets who lived at that time, would promote the laudable undertakings of Nehemias. H.—To counteract their influence, the enemies hired Semaia and Noadiah, v. 10 and 14.—Together, that thou mayst clear thyself; (Vatab.) or that we may repress these rumors, lest the king should suspect us of any connivance. The first sense appears to be preferable. Nehemias did not take the information as a piece of civility. C.—The enemies left it ambiguous, whether they would not join their forces with his, in case he meant to revolt. M.

Ver. 9. I. Heb. “Now, O Lord, strengthen my hands; (Jun. &c.) or, “now strengthening my hands, (C.) I went,” &c. Sept. &c. agree with the Vulg. H.

Ver. 10. Went, being invited. T.—Semaia, of the twenty-third course of priests. 1 Par. 24:18. M.—Privately. Heb. “who was shut up,” like a recluse, (H.) to deceive the people, by the appearance of superior sanctity, and by an imitation of the true prophets. C.—Some translate hatsur, “bound by vow,” (1 K. 21:7) to protect the governor; (Malvenda) but this seems too far-fetched. C.

Ver. 11. Should. Lit. “Does one like me retire from his post? And who like me shall enter the temple and live?” H.—It is unlawful for a layman to flee into the part of the temple assigned to the priests. Yet into this he had been invited, as the court of Israel was not perhaps yet secured. Those who suppose that Nehemias was a priest, say (C.) that he refused to flee, lest he should intimidate the people by his cowardly departure. T. M.—Semaia might also have a design upon his life, when they should be alone.

Ver. 12. Understood, by the nature of the suggestion, and the manner in which he heard the refusal. Aggeus, or some of the true prophets, might also inform him, (C.) or a supernatural light irradiated his mind, unless human sagacity sufficed. T. M.

Ver. 13. Sin, by taking any false step, so as to offend the people.

Ver. 14. Prophet. Heb. “the prophetess.” C.—Prot. “My God, think thou upon Tobiah, ... and on the prophetess Noadiah.”

Ver. 15. Elul, the last of the civil year, corresponding with our August and September, when the walls were dedicated. C. 12:27.—Days. Josephus (xi. 5.) says, “two years and three (Greek four) months” (H.) had been spent in perfecting the work. Cajet.—Others date from the reception of the letter, v. 5. Vatab.—But the work only lasted the time here specified, as the materials were at hand, and some of the walls were standing, while the rocks defended other parts; and the city was not then so large as it was afterwards. C.—The whole people wrought almost day and night, and Nehemias encouraged them with all his power. T.—Thus Alexander the Great built the walls of New Alexandria, on the Tanais, 60 stadia, or near 6000 paces (C.) long, in less than twenty days; (T.) and Cæsar perfected other works, before Alise, &c. with equal expedition. Bel. Gal. 1. and vii.—The Romans, at the last siege of Jerusalem, surrounded the city with a wall 5000 paces long, and with thirteen towers, in three days. Jos. Bel. vi. 13. C.

Ver. 18. Mosollam, one of the builders. C. 3:4. M.—These two powerful men had consequently acted contrary to the laws of God, and the covenant of Esdras, with respect to marriages. They might fear the resentment of the zealous governor. Dangers from false brethren, (2 Cor. 11:26) wars without, and fears within, generally assail the servants of God. H.

Ver. 2. House: “the citadel;” (Tigurin) “palace.” Vatab.—The Sept. retain the original, Beria, (H.) which signifies a palace, (Pagnin) concerning which Nehemias had spoken. C. 2:8. M.—But as it was not yet built, the house, being placed alone, more properly signifies the temple. We read of Zacharias and Jehiel, who occupied the same post (C.) as Hananias. 2 Par. 35:8. H.—He was next to Eliasib, the high priest. C.

Ver. 3. Sun. Lit. “the heat of the sun,” or perfect daylight. H.—They. Syr. and Arab. “while it was still day,” (C.) or the sun shone. Before dusk the gates were shut, to prevent any improper person from entering. H.—House, on the walls. C.—These things protect a city; as grace a guard over the senses, and watchfulness do the soul. W.

Ver. 4. Not built, sufficient for so great a multitude. C.—They lodged under tents, or in huts. H.

Ver. 5. Heart, inspired me to provide inhabitants for the city, as was afterwards done by lot. C. 11. T.—Written. Hence it seems evident that Nehemias here only transcribes this ancient record, of those who came under Zorobabel, and consequently this chapter sought to agree with 1 Esd. 2. as well as with 3 Esd. 5:9, (H.) which is now strangely corrupted; so that it can throw no light upon the matter. C.—Some think that various catalogues were taken, at Babylon, at the first coming to Jerusalem, (M.) and at the dedication of the temple; (T.) and that Nehemias refer to a different one from that of Esdras. Sa. Lucas. T.—Others suppose that changes were introduced, as the families were increased or diminished, in the time of Nehemias; (T.) who, therefore, judged it necessary to write a fresh catalogue, but only adjusted the old one to the present circumstances, including probably the names of those who had returned with Esdras, or with himself. C.—This seems contrary to the text, a book of, &c. and it would perhaps be as well to allow that the variations arise from transcribers, as all allow that many of the names and numbers are corrupted. H.—The similarity of Hebrew letters for different numbers might easily occasion this; as we cannot suppose but Esdras would be able to give the total of sixty particular sums. Watson, let. 5.

Ver. 33. Other Nebo. We find no first mentioned; but in the ancient Latin edition, Nebo occurred instead of Geba, v. 30. See 1 Esd. 2:29. Sept. and Arab. omit, “the other.” This Nebo may be Nob, or Nobe, in the tribe of Benjamin. C.

Ver. 43. The sons; or, “who were the sons (filiorum) of Oduia.” H.

Ver. 65. Athersatha; Nehemias, (C.) as he is called in Chaldee. 1 Esd. 2:63. M.

Ver. 68. Their. Heb. Rom. Sept. Syr. and Arab. omit this verse; but it is found in the Alex. Sept. and even in the Rab. Bible, printed at Venice, 1564, as well as in the 1st and 3rd Esdras, (C.) and it is inserted by Protestants. H.

Ver. 69. Hitherto. This is not in the original, or in the other versions. It is inserted in the margin of some Lat. MSS. and entirely omitted in others of great authority. The gloss might have been placed after v. 64. C.—Yet some of the following verses seem also to be copied from 1 Esdras. H.—S. Jerom informs us from what sources the work was compiled, which is all declared canonical by the Church, (W.) whether written by Esdras or by Nehemias. H.

Ver. 70. Athersatha; that is, Nehemias, as appears from C. 8:9. Either that he was so called at the court of the king of Persia, where he was cup-bearer, or that, as some think, this name signifies governor; and he was at that time governor of Judea. Ch.—Rom. Sept. insinuates that the princes gave these things “to Nehemias.” C.—Alex. Sept. “They gave for the work, unto Athersatha.”—Prot. “The Tirshatha gave,” &c. H.—Thersa means, “he fed,” and satha, “he caused to drink.” T.—The A, at the beginning, is only the article. H.

2 ESDRAS 8

Ver. 1. Were in, or had been at home, (H.) after the dedication of the walls, (C.) till they assembled (H.) at the beginning of the civil year, on the feast of trumpets, which was a day of rejoicing, (v. 9. Num. 29:1) the festival of the new moon. Riberia. M.—Gate, near the temple. C. 3:26. C.—Moses; the pentateuch. M.—He is not desired to restore what was lost. T.—As many copies had been preserved by the prophets, which Esdras revised. W.

Ver. 2. Women, who were in a separate place.—Understand, being come to the use of reason. C.

Ver. 3. In plainly. Prot. “therein, before the street.” H.—Esdras probably read select pieces from Leviticus, &c. but principally from Deuteronomy. M.

Ver. 4. Step. Heb. “wooden tower.” C.—Prot. “pulpit,” (H.) made in the form of a cup,” (C.) like the cior, or tribune of Solomon. 2 Par. 6:13.—Mosollam. We should imagine that this was not the person who had given his daughter in marriage to the son of Tobias. C. 6:18. H.

Ver. 5. Stood, out of respect, as we do while the gospel is read. See Num. 23:18. C.

Ver. 8. Understood, by those who were near enough, and were skilled in Heb. (H.) though many began to forget that language; (C. 13:24) and for their benefit, an explanation was given in Chaldee, (v. 9.; Calmet) or Syriac, the vulgar tongue after the captivity. Pure Hebrew was still retained in the public liturgy. T.—Thus the Catholic Church retains the use of the language first use in the conversion of the respective people, whether Greek, Latin, &c. while she takes care to explain to the people what is necessary, in their own language. Any change might be attended with more serious inconveniences than benefit. Our Saviour never blamed this practice, which subsisted among the Jews in his time, no more than that which obliged the people to keep without, while the priest offered incense, &c. Luke 1:10. 21.—And plainly. Prot. “and gave the sense, and caused them to understand the reading,” as much as they were able, though many would, no doubt, still find difficulties, as we at present. H.

Ver. 9. Interpreted. S. Jerom renders the same term, made silence, (v. 7) as it was the office of the Levites to keep the people in awe, v. 11. C.—Prot. “taught.” They had also (H.) to instruct. 1 Esd. 8:16. M.—Weep. The Jews had only one feast for mourning, the day of expiation. On all the rest, a holy joy was commended. For the same reason, the Church does not fast on such days. C.—Law, reflecting on the threats denounced against transgressors, which they had so lately witnessed. T.

Ver. 10. Wine. Heb. and Sept. “things.” Syr. and Arab. have simply, “drink.”—Portions. The Greeks styled them, μερίδες; and the Latins, sportulæ. The custom prevailed not only among the Jews, (Est. 9:19) but also among Christians and pagans. Moses frequently exhorts the people to invite the poor; (Deut. 16:14) and S. Paul blames the rich Corinthians, for giving no part of their feast to them. 1 Cor. 11:21.—Strength. By this holy joy, we shall be encouraged to perform all our duties. C.—Sept. “Be not downcast, because he (the Lord) is our strength.” H.

Ver. 13. Law, concerning some difficulties, particularly the manner of keeping the ensuing festival. T.—Thus Christ explained to his disciples what he had spoken to the people. H.

Ver. 15. And that. This is not expressed in the law, though it was probably practised. C.—Some translate, “And they proclaimed,” &c. Vatable.—Beautiful. Lit. “very or most beautiful.” H.—Heb. “of oily wood.” Sept. “cypress.” Syr. “nut-tree.” Others understand the pine, (Pagnin) balm, (Mariana) citron, (H.) or any other species of branches, which might then be used. C. T.

Ver. 16. House, which was flat. H.—The tents might be erected in any place; in the open air. T.

Ver. 17. Done so, with such alacrity, though they had displayed more magnificence. See the meaning of similar expressions, 4 K. 23:22. C.

Ver. 18. Assembly. Lit. “the collect.” H.—Heb. “the day of retention;” the people being kept at the temple. C.—Sept. “the dismissal;” as they were afterwards permitted to depart. H.—See Lev. 23:26.—It was probably on this occasion, that the sacred fire was found again; (2 Mac. 1:18. C.) and also the ark, the tabernacle, and the altar of incense, which had been hidden by Jeremias. 2 Mac. 2:4. Torniel, A. 3610. Cano, &c.—But this is not so certain. H. C. Diss.

2 ESDRAS 9

Ver. 1. Month; Tizri, the day after they had sent away those women, (C.) whose company now covered them with confusion. H.—They were moved to compunction, by the hearing of the law, read by Esdras. M.

Ver. 2. Stranger; idolatrous women. H.—True repentance requires the works of mortification, and particularly the removal of all occasions of sin and disorderly pleasures. W.—The reformation had been commenced under Esdras, but some had relapsed. 1 Esd. 10:3. C.—The true born Israelites would have no society with the sons of infidels. T.—Fathers, that they might not be punished for them. Ex. 20:5. C.

Ver. 3. Stand, to hear the law, out of reverence; (M.) or the Levites ascended the pulpit to read, four times in the day. T.—After each lecture psalms were sung, (C.) to praise God, and to declare the sins of the people, and their sincere repentance. H.—On days of mourning, the Jews assembled four times to pray, and thrice on other days, by the institution of Esdras. Maimonides. See Acts 3:1.—On their fasts, they refrained from all meat, as well as from work, spending their time in prayer. They began at the first hour, and continued their exercises of devotion till the third, when they recommenced for other three hours. They did the like at the sixth and ninth hours; hearing the law, then prostrating themselves to confess their sins. Afterwards they rose to join with the Levites in praising the Lord. C.

Ver. 4. Step, erected by Esdras. C. 8:4.—Josue, &c. These Levites are mentioned again, (v. 5) with some variation. Bani is called Bonni; Sebania, is Hasebnia. C.—Perhaps some of them might be different, as there seems to be no reason for thus changing their names so soon. There are eight persons in both places. Sept. have, “Jesus and the sons (Bani) of Kadmiel, Sachania, son of Sarabaia, the sons of Chanani, &c.; (5.) and the Levites, Jesus and Kadmiel said, Arise, &c. (6.) and Esdras said, Thou,” &c. H.

Ver. 5. To eternity. Existing. Sa.—Bless him continually. M.—Let one generation after another praise his holy name. H.

Ver. 6. Of heavens. The highest, (C.) and most glorious (H.) residence of the Eternal.—Host. Stars (C.) and angels, (M.) which are like his guards.—Life, or being. If the Levites had adopted the sentiments of the Persians, that the stars were animated, this does not prove the truth of that opinion, which has nevertheless been maintained by many. Gen. 1:18. C.—The expression is used for preserving, (Ps. 40:3. M.) re-establishing, &c. C. 4:2. C.

Ver. 7. The fire of the Chaldees. The city of Ur, in Chaldea, the name of which signifies fire. Or out of the fire of tribulations and temptations, to which he was there exposed. The ancient Rabbins understood this literally, affirming that Abraham was cast into the fire by the idolaters, and brought out by a miracle without any hurt. Ch.—The Chaldees adored fire, (S. Jer. q. Heb. in Gen. xi. 31) and the Persians probably imitated them. Strabo xv.—The emperor Heraclius destroyed their Pyreia. Suidas.—S. Jerom translates Ur of the Chaldees, in all other places. Amama.—Sept. “the country of,” &c. C.—It is supposed that he sacred fire preserved in this city, gave name to it, (Ur, “fire,”) as Heliopolis was so called, from the particular worship of “the sun.” H.—Abraham, to imply some mystery. Gen. 17. W.—See Isai. 43:27.

Ver. 10. A name, Glorious, (M.) and to be feared by all. Ex. 14.

Ver. 14. Sabbath. Which it seems had not been observed by them before, (Ex. 16:23. C.) at least not with such exactitude. H.

Ver. 15. Hand. Promising with an oath, (Gen. 14:22. M. and 22:16. C.) or displaying thy power. H.

Ver. 17. Their head. Or appointed a leader instead of Moses, (Num. 14:4. M.) or an idol. Ex. 32:1. Sept. “they gave a beginning, or a chief to return.” Syr. “their heart returned to their crimes.” C.—Prot. “and tin their rebellion appointed a captain to,” &c. They turned their back upon the promised land, and set their faces to return into Egypt. H.—

Sinners are not deprived of free-will. W.

Ver. 18. Blasphemies. By attributing the perfections of God to a senseless idol. Prot. follow the Sept. “provocations.” Neatsoth (H.) properly implies words of an insulting nature. C.

Ver. 20. Spirit. The conducting angel. M.—God enlightened and moved the hearts of the people, by his grace; which he gave in abundance to Moses. C.

Ver. 21. Worn. So as to be sore, (H.) or without shoes. M. See Deut. 8:4. C.—Prot. “their feet swelled not.”

Ver. 22. Lots. Heb. “them (the Chanaanites, or as it is more commonly understood, the Israelites,) into corners.” C.—Sept. “by lot they possessed,” &c. H.—Sehon was king of Hesebon. Num. 21:26. C.

Ver. 24. Land. From which most of their fathers were excluded by death.

Ver. 25. Goodness. Prosperity was their ruin, (H.) as Moses had foretold. Deut. 32:15. C.—“Empire is easily retained by the same arts by which it was procured: but when idleness takes the place of industry, when lust and pride banish continence and equity, fortune is changed with manners.” Sallust, Grot.

Ver. 26. Earnestly. Lit. “called to witness” (H.) themselves, (Jos. 24:21) or heaven and earth. Deut. 4:26 and 30:19. C.—Blasphemies. See v. 18. M.

Ver. 27. Saviours. Josue, (C.) and more particularly the judges, (M.) David, &c. C.

Ver. 28. Rest from their enemies. H.—The interval between their relapses was very short. C.

Ver. 29. Shoulder. Slipping from under the burden of the law. H.—It seems this and the following verses chiefly regard the ten tribes, which proudly rebelled against Juda, (C.) and against the Lord. H.

Ver. 30. Years, 254; during which time God had not ceased to recall his people to a sense of their duty, but all in vain.

Ver. 32. Labour. Receive it in satisfaction. C.—Heb. “let not all the trouble seem little before thee;” as if it were not enough to appease thy anger, when borne with proper dispositions and faith. H.—Assur. Thelathphalassar, who led some of the tribes into captivity, as Salmanasar did the rest. During this period, the whole nation was involved in misery, (C.) from which they had not been liberated even when the author wrote, v. 36. H. 1 Par. 5:26. M.

Ver. 33. Truth, fulfilled thy promises. We have broken the covenant.

Ver. 36. In it. Tributary to Persia. C. 5:4 and 1 Esd. 7:24 and 9:9. C.

Ver. 37. Tribulation. As we cannot enjoy the fruits, being so heavily taxed, and obliged to work in person for the king of a foreign country. C.

Ver. 38. Because. Or “considering all these things,” as chastisements due to our transgressions, we are resolved now to reform our conduct, (H.) and to comply more exactly with the covenant, which we will now solemnly renew. A copy was probably deposited in the temple, signed by the princes, (C.) in the name of all. H.—Malachy (1:4) seems to allude to this covenant. C.

2 ESDRAS 10

Ver. 1. Athersatha. Heb. hatirshatha. Prot. “the tirshatha,” cup-bearer, or governor, highly (H.) “privileged” and honoured by Artaxerxes. W.—Heb. “And over those who were sealed, (C. Sept. or who sealed the deed. H.) Nehemias, the cup-bearer.” Esdras, Eliasib, &c. were also princes. C.—It is not easy to account for the omission of their names. M.—They may be designated by different titles. An aristocracy, mixed with oligarchy, was the present form of government. The advice of the ancients, and of the people, was taken. C.—Hachelai, is less properly styled Helchias; (C. 1:1) where the Sept. read Chelchias, or Achalia, (Heb. chacala) as well as here.

Ver. 8. Priests. All, at least after Nehemias. H.

Ver. 14. Pharos. Many of these are mentioned as returning from Babylon. C. 7:8. 11. &c.

Ver. 28. Lands. Idolaters, (H.) namely, the proselytes. M.—Daughters. These did not all subscribe in person, but by the hands of the intelligent, and chief men, (v. 29) or, (C.) as the Sept. seem to understand, these went through the different ranks of the people, and received their oaths. E. M.

Ver. 29. Understand. Heb. mebin, “the teachers,” or Levites. 1 Esd. 8:16. M.—Promising. Heb. “clave to their brethren;” and they promised with a curse to transgressors, and with an oath to walk, &c. H.

Ver. 30. And. In all covenants, the articles which have been chiefly broken, are specified. W.

Ver. 31. Holy day. The contrary practice is therefore sinful. H.—Year. Not cultivating the land. Lev. 25:4.—Hand. No debts were to be demanded. Deut. 15:1. M.

Ver. 32. Third part. About 9*d.* (H.) on account of the poverty of the people. C.—They afterwards paid half a sicle, or 1*s.* 2*d.* conformably to the law. Ex. 30:13. Mat. 17:23. H.—Before the captivity, the kings of Juda provided sacrifices, (2 Par. 31:3) and after, the Persian monarchs supplied what was requisite, in favour of Zorababel and Esdras. C. 6:8 and 7:21. But these grants had been recalled, or were not well executed.

Ver. 34. Wood. The Nathinites had performed this office till the captivity. But not their numbers were too small. C.—The people therefore brought the wood. The Levites, with the Nathinites, carried it into the temple, and the priests laid it upon the altars; all being regulated by lots. Lyran.—Hence the feast called Xylophoria, was instituted about the month of August, as we may gather from Josephus. The Rabbins say that the priests cut the wood, from March till the 15th of July.

Ver. 35. Every tree, of seven species; the pear, apple, fig, apricot, olive, palm, and vine trees; besides wheat, legumes, &c. C.—For three years the fruit was deemed unclean. Lev. 19:23. M.

Ver. 37. Meats. Heb. “paste.” Num. 15:20. C. and 23:17.—Ground, or the produce. M.

Ver. 38. With. To observe that all is done according to the law. Num. 18:26. C.

2 ESDRAS 11

Ver. 1. Lots. Those who had a mind to fix their abode at Jerusalem, received every encouragement. But some were compelled, that the city might regain its ancient splendour, and become the bulwark of the nation. Josephus (xi. 5.) says, that Nehemias built at his own expense houses for the priest and Levites, who chose to reside there.

Ver. 2. Blessed. Applauding their zeal and disinterestedness, as the city was yet only a heap of ruins. C.—Some from the other ten tribes returned; but the transactions of three tribes are more particularly noticed. V. Bede. W.

Ver. 3. Solomon. See 1 Esdras 2:55 and 1 Par. 9:2.

Ver. 4. Benjamin, as well as of Ephraim and Manasses. 1 Par. 9:3. The difference between this last record and the present, arises from Nehemias including many who returned with Esdras and with himself. C.

Ver. 5. Silonite. Of the son of Sela,. 1 Par. 9:5. T.

Ver. 9. Second. Vicegerent of Joel, (C.) or commander of a second part of the city. Syr.

Ver. 11. Achitob had the inspection over the Levites and treasures. Eliasib was then pontiff. C.

Ver. 13. Amassai. Or (1 Par. 9:12.) Maasai, the son of Adiel, the son of Jezra, the son of Mosollam, the son of Mosollamoth, the son of Emmer.

Ver. 14. The mighty, for riches and power; on which account this family was conspicuous.

Ver. 15. Semeia. The ancient Latin MSS. read Sebenia. Martinay.

Ver. 16. Outward. For repairs of the temple, cultivation of the lands given by vow; also to buy provisions, sacred vestments, &c.

Ver. 17. Praise. Master of music. C.—Heb. “chief to begin the thanksgiving in prayer.” Syr. “leader of the Jews in prayer.” H.

Ver. 21. Gaspha, were chiefs of the Nathinites. C.—Heb. “over the,” &c. Ophel was their place of residence. C. 3:26.

Ver. 22. Overseer. Lit. “bishop.” Heb. pekid, which has the same meaning. H.—Christians styled him who was at the head, bishop; as the Athenians did their chief justice. Grot. E. C.

Ver. 23. King's. David's, (C. 12:24,) or perhaps the Persian monarch, who had appointed a maintenance for the priests, &c. 1 Esd. 6 and 7. C.—Order. Heb. “that a certain portion should be for the singers, due for every day.” Prot.

Ver. 24. People. They addressed themselves to him, (H.) and he gave an exact account to the king (C.) of Persia. M.

Ver. 25. The houses. Heb. “and for the dwellings, (C.) or villages.” Pagnin. M.—Villages. Lit. “daughters,” which is often used in this sense. H.

Ver. 26. Jesue. This, and many of the other critics, had changed names, or were not built in the time of Josue. C.

Ver. 30. Bersabee. The southern extremity of Juda, (M.) unto the valley on the east of Jerusalem. Adric. 186.

Ver. 34–35. Lod. Built by Samad. 1 Par. 8:12. It is called Lod-Hadid. C. 7:37.—Ono had the same founder, and stood in the valley of craftsmen. C. 6:2, and 1 Par. 4:14.

Ver. 36. Portions. The Levites dwelt in the cities assigned to these two tribes. C.

2 ESDRAS 12

Ver. 1. Priests. But not all, as some are omitted. See v. 7. 22, &c.—Josue, or Jesus, the high priest.—Esdras, the famous scribe, who is supposed to have returned to Babylon, and to have been living under Nehemias, who came to Jerusalem 81 years after Zorobabel. If, therefore, Esdras was only 20 years old at the former period, he must have lived above 100 years, (C.) which is not improbable. Lyran. T. &c.—He returned again with many of his countrymen, by the king’s leave. W.

Ver. 7. Chief. Heads of the 24 great families. 1 Par. 24:18.

Ver. 8. Hymns. To preside over the bands. C. 11:17. C.

Ver. 9. Office. Heb. “in the watches,” each in his turn, (Vatab.) “daily.” Sept. M.

Ver. 10. Joacim. These are some of the successors of Josue, (M.) who were high priests till the time of Jeddoa, or Jaddus. W.

Ver. 11. Jonathan, is called *Johan*an by S. Jerom, (in Dan.) Josephus, &c.—Jeddoa. The Jaddus, who went to meet Alexander, in his pontifical attire, and was graciously received by him; as the monarch revered in his person the God of the Hebrews, who had formerly appeared to him in this manner, to encourage him to undertake the conquests of Asia. Josephus xi. 8.—Some think that the names of Jonathan and Jeddoa, and the v. 22, 23, and 24, have been inserted since the time of Nehemias; as he must have lived 140 years, to see the conquests of Alexander. T. Petau. N. Alex. T. 2 Dis. 7.—He could not be less than 20, when he returned in 3550. Jaddus met Alexander in 3672; consequently, at that time, Nehemias was 142 years old. But if he died at the commencement of the reign of Darius Codomannus 3668, he would still be 138. C.—Yet this longevity is by no means incredible, v. 1. C. 13:28. H.—Usher (A. 3602) maintains that Johanan was pontiff under Memnon.

Ver. 12. Saraia had given his name to one of the principal families, at the head of which was Maraia, at this time. The Latin MSS. Sept. and Syr. style him Amaria.

Ver. 17. Phelti was chief of two families, (C.) or perhaps the name of the head of Miamin (H.) is lost. Vatable.—And, is not in Heb. “of Miniamin, of Moadiah, Pittai,” Prot. H.

Ver. 19. Jodaia. The same name is written Idaia, v. 6, and 21.

Ver. 22. Persian. Surnamed Codomannus, (H.) Condomanus, (Grot. C.) or Natus, under whom Jaddus was born, though he was pontiff under the former. Usher, A. 3553.

Ver. 23. Chronicles. Not those which are now extant: but some records which regarded the families of the priests. See 1 Esd. 2:61.—The son, or grandson of Eliasib. The author refers to others records, v. 26. C.

Ver. 24. Order. Heb. “ward over-against ward.” One company kept guard while another retired. M.

Ver. 25. Entrances. These are not distinctly mentioned before. See 1 Par. 26:15. 17. Ezec. 40:8. C.—Sept. have only, after order, or him, v. 25. “When I assembled the door-keepers, (v. 26,) in the days of Joakeim.” H.

Ver. 26. Scribe. Could these records have any greater authority than Nehemias himself? It seems, therefore, that this had been added by a later hand, whose testimony is perfectly authentic and inspired. C.—Nehemias might also refer to some records which he, or some other, had drawn up. H.

Ver. 27. Wall. Some time before, (Usher. C.) or now, when the houses were completed. V. Bede. T.—Places, for greater solemnity. The ancients deemed “the walls and gates sacred things, the property of no man.” Justinian, l. sacra loca.—Ovid describes the superstitious rites, with which the Romans laid the foundations of their cities, on some lucky day.

Ver. 30. Were purified first, that they might purify the rest. H.—Priests were obliged to abstain from wine, and from their wives, while they were on duty. See 2 Par. 29:34, and 35:2, &c. Levites were to wash their garments. Lev. 8:21. All lepers, &c. required a certain purification, ib. v. 2. 6 and Num. 19:16. Care was taken that no dead body was found on the walls. These were probably sprinkled with water, &c. like the tabernacle. Lev. 8:11.

Ver. 31. Choirs. This is not expressed in Heb. and Sept. but must be understood. Prot. “great companies of them that gave thanks. Whereof one went.” H.—The princes led the way, then the priests sounded the trumpets, (Num. 10:8) the Levites sung, and were followed by the people. All were divided into two equal parts, and went round half the city. C.—They set out from the dunghill-gate, on the west, and proceeded to the watch-gate, on the east, v. 38. M.

Ver. 35. Esdras, mentioned v. 33, was the chief personage, at the head of this company. H.

Ver. 37. And, &c. Prot. “And the other company of them that gave thanks.”—And upon. Heb. “beyond.” This company (H.) proceeded northward. C.

Ver. 38. Watch-gate. Syr. and Arab. “great gate,” by which they came down.

Ver. 42. Great. Numerous, or victims of a large size, oxen, &c.

Ver. 43. Thanksgiving. S. Jerom, Sept. and Syr. have read in a different manner from the present Heb. (C.) which has, “for the tithes to gather into them out of the fields of the cities, the portions of (or by) the law assigned to the priests, &c. Tora, “law,” has been read, toda, “thanksgiving,” by S. Jerom; and sarim, “princes,” has been substituted for sadim, “fields.” H.—The Syriac admits the second reading. C.—Sept. omit the first entirely. “For the tithes, and for the collections in them, brought to the princes of the cities, being the portions for the priests,” &c. H.

Ver. 44. Expiation. Or the legal purifications, (M.) when necessary. H.

Ver. 45. Asaph was master of music in the reign of David. M.

Ver. 46. Sanctified. That is, they gave them that which by the law was set aside, and sanctified for their use. Ch.—The Levites paid a tithe to the priests, (C. 10:38 and Num. 18:26. C.) as the people did to them.

2 ESDRAS 13

Ver. 1. That day, is often used for an indefinite time. H.—It is not probable that all this happened when the walls were dedicated. After that event, Nehemias rather went to court, and remained there about ten years. During his absence, many abuses crept in, which he endeavoured to remedy, (v. 7) perhaps on the solemn day of tabernacles, when the law had been read.—Ever, (Deut. 23:3) so as to marry. C.

Ver. 3. Stranger. Heb. hereb, “mixture,” (H.) infidel women and their offspring.

Ver. 4. Over this things, &c. Or, he was faulty in this thing, or in this kind. Ch.—He was the source of all this evil. Heb. “and before this Eliasib,” &c. It is probable that he was a different person from the high priest, (Usher) who had married his grandson to the daughter of Sanaballat, the intimate friend of Tobias. C.—The latter was a persecutor, and prefigured heretics, as Nehemias did our Saviour, who drove traffickers out of the temple. V. Bede in Esd. L. iii. 19. W.

Ver. 5. He. Eliasib, or Tobias. The original is also ambiguous. Eliasib probably permitted Tobias to furnish himself apartments in the temple, where, by law, he was not allowed to enter. Hence the priests, being deprived of their support, were forced to retire. C.—Tobias rented the apartments, and was steward of the priests’ revenues. T.

Ver. 6. Days. Prefixed (C. 2:6.) I asked. Heb. “was required to attend by the king,” for about ten years. After which period, I returned and found such disorders. Some believe that Nehemias had been at Babylon, a long while before the 32d year of the king.

Ver. 8. And I. Nehemias acted as governor, and performed the duty which the high priest neglected. C.

Ver. 9. Storehouses, which had been profaned by the presence of a pagan. M.—Sacrifice. Heb. mincha, “offerings of flour, fruits, and liquors,” which were kept in the storehouses, as well as frankincense. Eliasib had caused these things to be removed, to make place for Tobias. C.

Ver. 10. Country. Heb. “field,” that he might cultivate it, (H.) and get food. M.

Ver. 11. Pleaded. Accusing them of treachery, in not opposing the wicked attempt.—Have we. He placed himself in the number of the guilty, in order to soften the reproach. Sept. &c. C.—“Why is the house of God forsaken?” Prot.

Ver. 14. And his. Heb. “its offices,” and for the good of the sacred ministers. H.

Ver. 15. Treading. Syr. and Arab. “travelling.”

Ver. 16. Tyrians. Who had established themselves there, for the sake of commerce, though the chosen people ought to have kept them at a great distance, for fear of seduction. C.

Ver. 18. Fathers. Though warned by Jeremias, 17:21. M.

Ver. 19. At rest. People travelling no longer. C.—Heb. “shaded, or in the dark.” Before Friday night on, the sabbath commenced, and then the gates were shut. H.—On the. Heb. “before the sabbath.” M.

Ver. 21. On you. To punish you, (C.) for thus endeavouring to tempt the people. H.

Ver. 22. Gates. The Levites would more conscientiously discharge their duty, (M.) and restrain the people, so that they might keep the day holy. H.

Ver. 23. Azotus. In the country of the Philistines.

Ver. 24. Half. In the same family, some spoke the Philistine (Vatable) or Phenician language: others the Hebrew; which, though it resembled the other very much, was still sufficiently distinct to be noticed. The children might also speak a jargon, composed of both languages. It is probable that, at this time, many of the common people spoke the Chaldee language, so that it was necessary to interpret pure Hebrew to them. C. 8:8.

Ver. 25. Curse, or excommunicated them, (C.) the guilty parents. H.—Shaved. Heb. and Sept. “plucked off their hair,” by the roots, for greater torment. Sometimes quicklime was then sprinkled on the head, (C.) as adulterers were treated at Athens. Schol. Aristoph.—King Artaxerxes changed this punishment, and ordered that his officers should be forbidden to wear the tiara instead. Domitian caused the hair and beard of Apollonius to be shaven. Philost. iii. 14. C.—That they. Heb. “Ye shall not,” &c.

Ver. 27. Also be. Heb. “hearken unto you;” (Prot. H.) or “Have ye not heard the evils which fell upon our fathers (C.) for doing all?” &c. H.

Ver. 28. One. Manasses, brother of Jaddus. Joseph. xi. 8.—Sanaballet, noted for his enmity towards the Jews. C. 6:1. He obtained leave of Alexander to build the famous temple on Garizim, for this son-in-law. He must have been 150 yeas old when Alexander laid siege to Tyre, A. 3672. Esdras and Nehemias were noted for their great age. Yet some would suppose that there were tow of the name of Sanaballet; and Josephus says that the one in question was appointed governor of Samaria by Darius, the last king of the Persians. This opinion is adopted by Usher, A. 3972. T. &c.—But there is still a difficulty to know whether it be necessary. C.—From me. In revenge he set up an opposition altar. H.—He had contracted a marriage, which was unlawful for all, and entailed degradation upon priests.

Ver. 31. Wood. Conformably to the regulations mentioned, C. 10:34. C.—Good. A just man may confidently beg for a reward. W.—Amen, is not found in Heb. &c. The Holy Spirit records the praises of Nehemias. Eccli. 49:15. His political and moral virtues must ever assign him an exalted rank among the true Israelites. Like Jesus Christ, he rebuilt Jerusalem, reformed the nation, was the mediator of a new covenant, defended the rights of the priesthood and of all the people. C.

APOCRYPHA

The third and fourth Books of Esdras, and the prayer of Manasses, (W.) are found in many Latin Bibles, (H.) and translated in that of Douay, (W.) as works of dubious authority. Calmet also inserts the third and fourth books of Machabees. H.—Protestants class under the same head the books of Tobias, Judith, Wisdom, Ecclesiasticus, and Machabees, (W.) with Baruch, and parts of Esther and Daniel, &c. H. —They acknowledge that they are, “holy and worthy to be read in the Church, but not sufficient to prove points of faith.” The truth is, they find them too opposite to their creed; as S. Augustine (prædest. SS. C. xiv.) observes was the case with some heretics, who rejected the Book of Wisdom. W.—The pretence that these Books were not admitted by many ancient Fathers, would equally strike out of the canon the Epistle to the Hebrews, those of S. James and S. Jude, the second and third of S. Peter, and of S. John, and the Apocalypse, the authority of all which was formerly warmly controverted, (H.) and only admitted by degrees: (W.) paulatim tempore procedente meruit auctoritatem. S. Jerom, in Jacobo.—This holy doctor doubted (Prideaux) whether the book of Judith was canonical, till he found the decision of the Council of Nice. The declaration of the Church is the only sure rule by which matters of this nature can be decided. H.—“I would not believe the gospel, unless I were influenced to do it by the authority of the Catholic Church.” S. Aug. c. ep. Fund. c. 5.—This Church has spoken in favor of the controverted Books of the Old Testament, as much as for those of the New; so that the inconsistency of Protestants cannot pass unnoticed. If they had asserted that they appealed only to the private spirit, they might have been acceptable at least to fanatics; but now they attempt to follow the Catholic rule, and yet reject it the next moment! If we would relinquish all the parts ‘of Scripture which have been called in question, what book would be safe? Some have been indeed more universally admitted, and may therefore be styled protocanonical, while the deuterocanonical books were recognized rather later; and after all difficulties had been maturely discussed, as has been the case with other articles of faith. But the declaration being promulgated sooner or later, does not alter the truth. The will of God, notified to us by his Church, is our infallible guide. This is the canon, or “rule,” (H.) to regulate our imperfect knowledge. S. Aug. c. Faust. xi. 5 and c. Crescon. ii. 32.—In this sense the Council of Carthage, (A. 419) styles these contested books, “canonical and divine:” and the ancient Popes, Innocent I. and Gelasius, as well as S. Aug. (Doct. 2:8.) S. Isidore, (Etym. vi. 1.) and others, place them on a level with the other parts of Scripture, as has been done by the general Councils of Florence and of Trent. If the Jews did not admit them into their canon, it was because they were not extant in the Hebrew language, (H.) or known when the canon was closed by Esdras, (Huet. D.) or afterwards. H.—Besides, who sees not that the canon of the Church is preferable to that of the synagogue? W.—Otherwise how shall we receive the New Testament. H.—Many of the Fathers referred only to the Jewish canon, when they gave catalogues of the sacred books. C.—We shall find that they generally admitted the authority of what the Protestants style Apocrypha, and that they were far from considering them (H.) as “romances,” (Fagius) or inducements” to vice and superstitious practices, under the semblance of virtue,” (Button) as some have now the boldness to assert. They might well shew so much deference to the judgment of the majority of Christians, as to abstain from such censures. H.

TOBIAS

THE BOOK OF TOBIAS

INTRODUCTION

This Book takes its name from the holy man Tobias, whose wonderful virtues are herein recorded. It contains most excellent documents of great piety, extraordinary patience, and of perfect resignation to the will of God. His humble prayer was heard, and the angel Raphael was sent to relieve him: he is thankful, and praises the Lord, calling on the children of Israel to do the same. Having lived to the age of one hundred and two years, he exhorts his son and grandsons to piety, foretells the destruction of Ninive, and the rebuilding of Jerusalem: he dies happily. Ch.—The Jews themselves have a great regard for the book of Tobias; (Grot. Sixtus Senens. viii.) which Origen (ad Afric.) says they “read in Hebrew,” meaning probably the Chaldee, (C.) out of which language S. Jerom translated it, preferring to displease the Pharisaical Jews, rather than not to satisfy the desires of the holy bishops Chromatius and Heliodorus. Ep. t. iii. W.—The Greek version seems to have been taken from another copy, or it has been executed with greater liberty by the Hellenist Jews, between the times of the Sept. and of Theodotion. C.—Huet and Prideaux esteem it more original; and Houbigant has translated it in his Bible, as the Council of Trent only spoke of the Latin editions then extant; and S. Jerom followed in his version the Hebrew one of a Jew, as he did not understand the Chaldee. H.—The Syriac and the modern Hebrew edition of Fagius, agree mostly with the Greek, as that of Munster and another Heb. copy of Huet, and the Arabic version, both unpublished, are more conformable to the Vulgate. The most ancient Latin version used before S. Jerom, was taken from the Greek; and the Fathers who lived in those ages, speak of it when they call the book of Tobias canonical. S. Aug. leaves it, however, to adopt S. Jerom’s version, in his Mirrour. The copies of all these versions vary greatly, (C.) though the substance of the history is still the same; and in all we discover the virtues of a good parent, of a dutiful son, and virtuous husband, beautifully described. H.—“The servant of God, holy Tobias, is given to us after the law for an example, that we might know how to practise what we read; and that if temptations assail us, we may not depart from the fear of God, nor expect help from any other.” S. Aug. q. 119. ex utroque Test.—The four first chapters exhibit the holy life of old Tobias, and the eight following, the journey and affairs of his son, directed by Raphael. In the two last chapters they praise God, and the elder Tobias foretells the better state of the commonwealth. W.—It is probable that both left records, from which this work has been compiled, with a few additional observations. It was written during (C.) or after the captivity of Babylon. E.—The Jews had then little communication with each other, in different kingdoms. Tobias was not allowed to go into Media, under Sennacherib; and it is probable that the captives at Babylon would be under similar restrictions; so that we do not need to wonder that they were unacquainted with this history of a private family, the records of which seem to have been kept at Ecbatana. The original Chaldee is entirely lost, so that it is impossible to ascertain whether the Greek or the Vulg. be more conformable to it. The chronology of the latter seems however more accurate, as the elder Tobias foretold the destruction of Ninive, twenty-three years before the event, which his son just beheld verified, dying in the 18th year of king Josias. The accounts which appear to sectaries to be fabulous, may easily be explained. Houbigant.—Josephus and Philo omit this history. C.

Ver. 1. Tobias, “good God,” (T.) is styled Tobis, by the ancient Latin version and S. Ambrose, and Tobit by the Greek and Syriac. These copies and the Heb. give a genealogy which does not agree. C.—Grabe’s edit. “The book of the words (or transactions) of Tobit, Son of Tobiel, son of Ananiel, son of Adouel, (MS. has Nave) son of Galaël, (MS. Gamael) of the seed of Asiel, of the tribe of Nephthali, (2) who was made captive in the days of Enemessar, king of the Assyrians, from Thisbe, (MS. Thibe) which is on the right properly (MS. of Kudis. H. or Cades, capital. C.) of Nephthali in Galilee, above Aser. I, Tobit, walked in the ways of truth and of justice all the days of my life.” H.—Nehemias and the prophets frequently speak of themselves in the first person. The truth of the history is the same. D.—Beyond, or behind; (post. H.) as the Hebrews speak with reference to a man turned towards the east. Hence this way would be on the west, and Sephet on the north.

Ver. 2. Salmanasar. When Osee was conquered, A. 3283. See 4 K. 17:6.—Truth. His constancy in the observance of the true religion was so much the more wonderful, as he was rich, and lived among the wicked. C.

Ver. 3. Kindred. Greek adds, “who went along with me ... to Ninive.”

Ver. 4. Younger. “Very young,” (H.) or the youngest of those who administered their own affairs. The parents of Tobias were deceased. C.—Greek, “when I was young in my country, in the land of Israel, all the tribe,” &c.

Ver. 5. All, or the greatest part; (H.) for some still feared God; (C. 2:2. W.) and the Greek of C. 5:14 or 19 informs us that Ananias and Jonathan accompanied Tobias. H.—Greek is more diffuse. C.—(4) “All the tribe of Nephthali, of my father, departed from the house of Jerusalem, which city had been chosen from all the tribes of Israel, for all the tribes to offer sacrifice; and the temple of the tabernacle of the most High was sanctified, and was built forever; (5) and all the tribes, apostatizing together, sacrificed to Baal, to the heifer; (Comp. ed. to the power of Baal) and the house of Nephthali, of my father, likewise. (6) And I alone went frequently to Jerusalem, at the feasts” (H.) of the Passover, &c. M.—The other versions are nearly similar. C.—But we cannot specify all these variations. H.—The number has induced some to conclude, not improbably, that there were two originals; (T.) the Syriac by the elder, and the Chaldee by the younger Tobias. Justiniani.—But this is destitute of proof. C.

Ver. 7. Strangers. See Deut. 14:28. M. Lev. 27:30. C.—Greek, “And the third I gave to whom it belonged, as Debbora, my father’s mother, ordered me, as I was left an orphan by my father; (9) and when I was,” &c. H.

Ver. 9. Man. The Jews married young: but the time was not fixed. C.—After. Greek, “Tobias.” They always style the father Tobit. H.

Ver. 11. Ninive, called Ninus by Pliny, &c. M.—It was so large, as easily to receive a whole tribe, which was sold for slaves. C.

Ver. 12. Meats, such as had been immolated to idols, (M.) or were forbidden to the Jews. C.

Ver. 14. And he. Greek, “I was his marketter,” (H.) to provide provisions for the palace. “He set me over all he had, till the day of his death.” Munster.—But this Hebrew author has probably exaggerated the matter, to make Tobias appear as great as he could. These editions add no more, continuing, (15) “And I went into Media, and I deposited with Gabael, or Gabelus,” &c.

Ver. 16. Rages means “rupture,” by frequent earthquakes, and was (M. C.) the residence of the Parthian kings, in spring, (Athen. xii. 2.) in the mountain, separating their country from Media.—Honoured for his salary. C.

Ver. 17. Money. People might formerly make use of what was merely deposited in their hands. Ulpian.—The old Latin version has, “I committed to him ten talents in gold.”

Ver. 18. Time. Salmanasar reigned fourteen years; seven after the captivity, which to people in distress would appear long. C.—Gr. “And after Enemessar was dead, Sennacherib, his son, reigned in his stead; and his ways ceased, (or his high roads were stopped) and I could no longer go into Media.” H.—We find nothing in history to confirm this stoppage: (C.) but it might be in consequence of the wars. Houbigant. See the preface. H.—Israel. This hatred was augmented, after the unfortunate expedition into Palestine. C. M. 4 K. 19:35.

Ver. 19. Goods, under Sennacherib; though he was now deprived of his place. C.—Greek, Syr. and Heb. insinuate, that this happened under his predecessor. H.

Ver. 20. Slain, by order or connivance of Sennacherib. M.—Tobias buried the dead, out of charity, and the belief of a future resurrection. Hence arises the respect for tombs and the relics of the saints. C.—The pagans imagined that the souls could not rest till their bodies were interred. Homer, Virgil vii. &c. C.

Ver. 23. Loved him, even of the Assyrians. The Jews were not able to afford him shelter. M.

Ver. 24. Forty. Arabic, twenty-five; Gr. and Syr. fifty; other Gr. copies, fifty-five days. Fagius says Tobias was hidden nineteen days. It seems, therefore, we should date these forty-five days from the return of Sennacherib.—Sons. See 4 K. 19:37 and Isai. 37:38. C.—Gr. adds, “and they fled to the mountains of Ararat, and Sacherdoc, (our Assaraddon) his son, reigned in his stead; and he appointed Achiachar Anael, the son of my brother, over all the accounts of his kingdom, and over all his government. And Achiachar petitioned for me; and I came to Ninive. But Achiachar was cup-bearer, (Alex. MS. receiver of wine) and keeper of the ring, and governor and keeper of accounts; and Sacherdonosos gave him the second place. But he was my nephew. And when I returned to my house, and my wife Anna, and my son Tobias, were restored to me, at the feast of Pentecost,” &c. H.—This seems contrary to v. 23. Yet the Heb. copies agree in this particular, and mention the dignity of Akikar. But we may judge what credit these additions deserve. C.—They merit some attention, as they may be original. See Pref. H.

Ver. 1. House. The law authorized such feasts. Deut. 12:12 and 14:28. Tobias complied with it, by inviting also the poor servants of God. Gr. "I lay down to eat." This custom prevailed in the East. C.

Ver. 2. Tribe. Gr. "brethren indigent, and who remembers God." H.—All had not given way to idolatry. W.

Ver. 3. Street. Asarhaddon did not protect the Israelites, which renders the elevation of Akikar to the highest dignities suspicious. C.—But the king and his minister might not be able to prevent all murders. H.—Fasting. The ancients seldom eat anything before noon. Gr. "Before I had tasted, I leaped up and took him to a house, till the sun should be set," (H.) to prevent any danger from the Assyrians. M.—If he did not employ another, he must have eaten alone, being rendered unclean. This seems to have been the case; and hence he did not enter his own house, but lay down by the wall. C.—Gr. and Heb. mention, that he washed himself before he eat. H.

Ver. 9. But. This version is not in Greek or Heb. C.—True zeal is not repressed by fear, as charity expels it. 1 Jo. 4. W.

Ver. 10. Now. Gr. "And that very night I was."—He came. Gr. "I lay myself down, being defiled, beside the wall of the court, and my face was uncovered." H.—The touching the dead rendered a person unclean. Num. 19:11.

Ver. 11. Swallow's. Gr. denotes "sparrows," or any other small birds: στρουθια. Serarius.—Eyes. Gr. observes that they were "opened." Heb. "by chance." Yet "hares, and many men, sleep with their eyes open," (Pliny xi. 37.) as was here the case. S. Athan. Synops.—If not, the dung might insinuate itself by rubbing. It is extremely caustic. Vales. 42. Aldrov. 17. &c.—The blindness of Tobias was only a suspension of sight. C.—Blind. Gr. "white specks or skins came upon my eyes, and I went to the physicians, but they afforded me no relief. But Achiachar fed me (H.) till I (or he) went to Elymais;" Heb. of Fagius, "into Germany." C.—Almniim. H.

Ver. 12. Now. This is omitted in Greek and Heb. as far as v. 19. S. Ambrose says beautifully, that Tobias "was more grieved that he could yield no assistance to others, than for the loss of his sight."

Ver. 15. Kings. So Job's three friends are here called, because they were princes in their respective territories, (Ch.) like the petty kings of Palestine, in the days of Abraham and of Josue. They are styled kings in the Greek version of Job. C.—Relations, (parentes.) His father and mother were dead. W.

Ver. 18. Saints; Abraham, &c. Thus Mathathias encouraged his children; (1 Mac. 2:50) and no argument can be more forcible.

*Dice puer virtutem ex me, verumque laborem
Sis memor, et te animo repetentem exempla tuorum Et pater Æneas et avunculus excitet Hector. Æneid xii.*

—Life eternal. These grand truths were more developed, as the Messiah was nearer at hand.

Ver. 19. Work. This was usually the employment of women. The great charities of Tobias, physicians, &c. had reduced him to poverty.

Ver. 20. Kid, which had not left off sucking. Greek adds, that this was given besides the usual wages. M.

Ver. 21. Theft. He was the master of the family, and knew that there was no money in the house, so that he was not guilty of rash judgment, (M.) though his wife might naturally be offended.

Ver. 22. At. Gr. “but she said: It was given to me in addition to my wages. Yet I did not give credit to her, and I ordered her to restore it to its owners; and I blushed for her. But she replied: Where are thy alms-deeds and thy just works? Behold, all things are known with thee. Then, through grief, I wept,” &c. H.—Hope in God, who nevertheless leaves us in distress. M.—She indirectly finds fault with Providence, which increases the grief of Tobias; or, at least, she insinuates that he must have been a hypocrite, as the friends of Job unjustly argued, from his being afflicted. H.

Ver. 1. Then, retiring, v. 25.—Tears. He manifests no degree of impatience. C.

Ver. 2. Judgment. Even in punishing, God remembers mercy, (H.) and never fails to perform what he has promised.

Ver. 3. Parents, so as to punish me on their account. M.—The Scripture frequently seems to indicate that this is the case; (Ex. 20:5) and the Church still prays, Remember not, O Lord, our offences, nor those of our parents. C.—But children are only punished when they imitate the wicked conduct of their ancestors: they may be afflicted, though innocent, as their virtue will thus be tried, and shine more gloriously. H.—The pagans, being convinced that God can be guilty of no injustice, and perceiving that people who appeared to be free from sin were yet unhappy, concluded that they were explaining the sins committed in another world. Plotin. ii. 13. Origen, prin. iii. C.—This might arise from a confused notion of original sin. Pascal's Thoughts. H.

Ver. 6. Peace. Gr. "that I may be dissolved, and return to the earth; (lit. become earth) because it is more advantageous for me to die than to live, since I have heard false reproaches, and am much grieved. Command that I may be freed from this necessity, to go to my eternal place." H.

Ver. 7. Rages. In the Greek it is Ecbatana which was also called Rages. For there were two cities in Media of name of Rages: Raguel dwelt in one of them and Gabelus in the other. Ch. M.—Profane authors mention a Rages in the vicinity of Ecbatana. Diod. Bib. 19.—It may here denote the province. W.

Ver. 8. Asmodeus, "the fire of Media." Heb. "king of the devils," of that country, exciting people to lust, (M. Serar. q. 8.) and destroying them. W.—Unto her. Gr. and Heb. intimate, when they first entered the nuptial chamber. C. 6:14.

Ver. 9. Murder. Gr. "Dost thou not understand that thou hast suffocated thy husbands. Thou has already had seven husbands, and has not received the name of any of them. Why dost thou strike us on their account? If they be dead, go along with them. May we," &c. H.

Ver. 10. At. Gr. and Heb. "Hearing these things she was much grieved, so as to be unable to breath; (H. ωστε απαγξασθαι) or, on the point of strangling herself." Grot. C.—But this interpretation is groundless, (Houbigant) and very injurious to Sara. H.—She could not entertain the thought without sin. Yet the Jews had very relaxed notions on this head. Judg. 16:30. 1 Kings 31:4. God approved the conduct of Sara. C.—Gr. continues, "and she said, I am the only daughter of my father. If I do this thing, (as the servants suggested) it will be a disgrace for him ... and she prayed before the window; and said, Blessed," v. 13. H.—There is no mention of the three days. Heb. and Syr. also omit v. 16 to 24. C.

Ver. 13. Name. Gr. "Blessed art thou O Lord, my God, and blessed the name of thy glory, holy and glorious for ever. May all thy works praise thee for ever." H.—As she prayed for a long time, the Vulg. gives some sentences; and the Gr. and Heb. others. Serar. Salien. M.

Ver. 15. Earth. Holy men have thus desired to die, as was the case with Moses, Elias, Job, and S. Paul provided God was willing. M.

Ver. 16. Coveted, through impure love. Gr. “I am pure from all the sin of a man, and I have not defiled my name, nor the name of my father, in the land of our captivity. I am only child,” &c. H.—Lust: a very high ecomium; which Sara mentions without vanity, placing her confidence in God. M. Prov. 20:9.

Ver. 17. Play, lasciviously, (M.) or dance. Hugo. Ex. 32:1.

Ver. 21. Crowned. Jam. 1:12.—Delivered from falling, (M.) and in due time from affliction. H.

Ver. 25. Raphael, “the medicine of God.” He is invoked not only for health, but also in journeys. C.—Both. Gr. and Heb. of Fagius add, “Tobit, by taking away the white film, and to give Sara ... for a wife to Tobias ... and to bind Asmodeus, the wicked devil; because Tobias was to have her. At the same hour, Tobit returning entered his own house, and Sara ... descended from her upper room.” H.—Lord, by the angel. Acts 10. Apoc. 5. W.

Ver. 1. When. Gr. and Heb. and the old Vulg. (C.) “That very day Tobit remembered the money which he had deposited with Gabael ... and said within himself, I begged for death; why do I not call Tobias, my son that I may declare it to him before I die? And calling him, he said: Son, if I die, bury me, and despise not thy mother.” H.—He gives him fourteen instructions, in imitation of Moses and David. 3 K. 2. W.

Ver. 3. Life. S. Aug. (Conf. x. 34) cries out, “O Light, which Tobias had in view, when these corporal eyes being closed, he taught his son the way of life.”

Ver. 5. By me. Gr. adds, “in the same sepulchre,” like the patriarchs. Pope Leo decreed: statuimus unumquemque in sepulchro suorum majorum jacere.

Ver. 7. Substance. Be not liberal of another’s property. Gr. adds, “and let not thy eye be envious, when thou givest alms.” Do it generously. C.—The same doctrine of the reward of good works, occurs Dan. 4:24. W.

Ver. 9. Little. God regards the affections more than the gift. C.

Ver. 11. Sin, provided faith, &c. be not wanting. M.—When the Scripture seems to attribute salvation to one virtue, to faith, repentance, &c. it always presupposes that the heart is free from all mortal guilt. H.—Alms deeds may procure a fresh supply of graces. M.—Darkness, or hell, which is thus represented. Matt. 8:12 and 22:13. Eph. 6:12.

Ver. 12. Give it, with true charity. 1 Cor. 13:3. C.

Ver. 13. Crime, or any commerce with another. H.—Gr. and Heb. add, conformable to the law, (Ex. 34:16.) “And take not a strange woman, who may not be of thy father’s tribe, as we are the sons of the prophets, Noe, &c ... All these married from among their brethren, and were blessed in their children, and their seed shall inherit the land.” H.

Ver. 14. Perdition of the angels, of Adam, &c. C. Gen. 3:5. M.

Ver. 15. At all, after sunset. Deut. 24:14.

Ver. 16. Another. Behold the grand maxim of fraternal charity. Matt. 8:12. Alex. Severus was so much pleased with it, that he had it often repeated by a herald, and inscribed on public edifices. What thou wouldst not have done to thee, do not thou to another. Lamprid.—Gr. and Heb. add a caution against drunkenness and drunken companions. Fagius has another against revenge; and the old Vulg. “give not way to wickedness.”

Ver. 17. Eat. Gr. “give.”—Naked. Gr. adds, “give in alms all thy superfluities, And let not thy eye repine,” &c. as v. 7.

Ver. 18. Burial, or sepulchre. See Bar. 6:26. Eccli. 7:37 and 30:18. The Jews followed this custom, which was common to the pagans, but from very different motives. The latter supposed that the souls fed on such meats. The Jews, and afterwards Christians, did it to feed the indigent, that they might pray for the deceased. These feasts were sometimes abused, and on that account forbidden by S. Ambrose, to whose authority S. Monica submitted. S. Aug. Conf. vi. 3. See Const. Apost. viii. 24. C.—Just man, who may be supposed to have died in God’s peace. H.—It is of no service to pray and give alms for the damned.—Wicked, so as to encourage their evil conduct. M.—Works of mercy extend to the dead. W.

Ver. 20. Abide. Gr. “prosper,” (M.) or “be directed. For every nation has not counsel: but this same Lord bestows all good things. And whensoever he will, he humbles, as he pleases. And now, my son, remember my commands, and let them not be effaced from thy heart. Now, also, I make known unto thee the ten talents of silver, which I deposited with Gabael,” &c. H.

Ver. 21. And I. The Gr. &c. take no notice of this, (C.) nor of the following verse. H.—The virtuous dispose of their temporal effects by will, &c. W.

Ver. 23. We lead. Gr. “if we grow poor. Thou hast much if thou fear,” &c.

TOBIAS 5

Ver. 2. I cannot. Gr. “as I know him not; and he gave him the handwriting, and said to him: Seek,” &c. H.—The Gr. &c. had not before noticed this token. C.—Hitherto Tobit had spoken in the first person. H.

Ver. 5. Beautiful; resplendent with celestial majesty. C.—Gr. “he found Raphael, who was an angel, and he knew it not, and said to him: Canst thou go with me to Rages, of Media, and art thou acquainted with the places?” H.—This angel prefigured Jesus Christ, who took indeed Our human nature. V. Bede. W.

Ver. 7. Israel. This is not in Greek, &c. But the old Vulg. has, “Raphael answered, of the children of Israel, thy brethren, I am come hither for work,” (H.) or employment. C.

Ver. 8. Often. Gr. “lodged with Gabael, our brother, and Tobias,” &c.

Ver. 11. He saluted. Gr. “they saluted each other.” H.—The rest till v. 16, is omitted also in Syr. and Fagius. But the Heb. of Munster nearly agrees with the Vulg. C.

Ver. 18. But lest. Gr. Comp. “and Tobit said, brother, I wish to know thy race and thy name. But he replied, I am of the race of Azarias, and of Ananias, who is also thy brother.” Whitaker would have this to be a lie. H.—But the apparitions of angels are not to be examined by the ordinary rules of life. They take the name of God without scruple, as they acted in his name. Gen. 31:11. C. M. T.—Azarias. The angel took the form of Azarias; and therefore might call himself by the name of the man whom he personated. Azarias, in Hebrew, signifies the help of God; and Ananias, the grace of God. Ch.—Tobias had not inquired whether he was a man or an angel, as Houbigant answers the objection of Prideaux. H.—The “help and medicine of God” nearly correspond. W.

Ver. 19. Thy family. Gr. Syr. &c. add, “Thou art my brother, of a noble and good race. For I know Ananias and Jonathan, sons of the great Semei, as we went together to Jerusalem to adore, carrying the first-born, and tithes of the produce; and they did not join in the error of their brethren. Thou art of a great stock, brother. But tell me what reward I shall give thee? A drachm a day, and what may be requisite for thee and for my son. And I will give more than the hire if you return in health. And they agreed; and he said to Tobias, Be in readiness for the journey, and may you be directed: and his son prepared the requisites for the journey,” &c. H.

Ver. 22. Then all. It was not easy to procure provisions on the road.—Together. Gr. and Syr. add, (C.) “and the dog of the child with them.”

Ver. 27. Angel. This was the persuasion of the ancient Hebrews, approved by the gospel. Mat. 18:10. Some of the fathers also believed that each person had an evil angel tempting him to sin. Orig. S. Greg. Nys. Vit. Mosis. Cassian, col. viii. 17. C.—But this opinion is discarded. H.

Ver. 1. Dog. Gr. and Heb. specify this circumstance, (C. 5:22) but not here. Those who attack the authority of this book, infer that such a trifle would not be noticed by the Holy Spirit. C. 11:9. Yet Homer mentions the fawning of the dog upon Ulysses, after he had been 20 years from home; and the gravest historians record instances of the fidelity of dogs. C.—Night, or stage, mansione, (H.) at a caravansera, or house where travellers might stop all night, and sometimes, though seldom, might be supplied with necessaries. Herodotus (v. 52.) mentions several in the kingdom of Persia.

Ver. 2. Feet. Gr. “to bathe.”—Fish. The learned are of opinion that this was the fish which Pliny calls callyonymus, (l. xxii. ch. 7.) the gall of which is of sovereign virtue to remove white specks that grow over the eyes. Ch.—Other fishes have the like virtue; and as the aforesaid has no scales, and is not above a foot long, it could not be lawfully eaten by the Israelites, nor could it suffice for ten days’ provision, v. 6. Lev. 11:10. Others, therefore, prefer (C.) the sea-calf, (Brado) the hippopotamus, (Grot.) the crocodile, (Carthus.) whale, (Theophylact.) sturgeon, or silurus. Bochart, Anim. iv. 15.—But there are great difficulties with respect to all these; and Fran. George adopts the sentiment of the Rabbins in favour of the pike, which seems the least objectionable, as it has scales, gills, and cannot live long out of water, v. 4. It grows to a great size in the Tigris, and its gall is good for the eyes. C.

Ver. 3. And. This verse is not in Greek. Tobias and the fish were both in the water. C.

Ver. 4. Take him. “It,” would be as proper.—Gill. Gr. “Seize the fish, and the boy got the better of the fish, and threw it upon the land.” H.—Heb. also omits the gill and the panting, (C.) circumstances which would invalidate the opinions of many respecting the nature of this fish, v. 2. H.

Ver. 5. For thee. Gr. “carefully.” H.—The rest is omitted also in the Heb. of Fagius. C.

Ver. 6. Flesh. S. Paul uses the like expression, (1 Cor. 15) as well as Pliny ix. 15. W.—Took. Gr. and Fagius, (C.) “eat, and both went on till they came near to Ecbatana.” H.—From Ninive to Rages would be 10 or 12 days’ journey. C.

Ver. 7. Tell. Gr. “What is the heart, the liver, and the gall of the fish for?” H.

Ver. 8. Its heart, &c. The liver, (v. 19.) God was pleased to give to these things a virtue against those proud spirits, to make them, who affected to be like the Most High, subject to such mean corporeal creatures, as instruments of his power. Ch.—God sometimes makes use of things as remedies which have, naturally, a different effect; as when Christ put clay on the eyes of the blind man. Jo. 9. The things which the angel ordered were salutary, by God’s appointment. W.—They could not act directly upon a spirit: but they might upon the person troubled by one, as Saul was relieved by music. C. Diss.—The smoke was a sign of the devil’s expulsion, and of the efficacy of prayer; or rather, God subjected the proud spirits to such weak elements. Serar. q. 3. M.—Gr. “and he said to him, respecting the heart and liver, if any demon or wicked spirit be troublesome, make these smoke before a man or a woman, and the person shall be troubled no longer.

Ver. 9. Gall. This is generally allowed by physicians to be most excellent, particularly that of the callyonymus, and of the hyena, (Vales. Phil. 42. Galen 10. M.) and silurus, &c. so that one objection of the adversaries of this book falls to the ground. Houbigant.

Ver. 10. And. Gr. “But as they approached to Rages, the angel said to the young man: Brother, to-day we shall lodge with Raguel, and he is thy relation, and he has an only daughter, by name Sara: I will propose that she may be given to thee for a wife, because the inheritance belongs to thee, and thou art the only one of her kindred. The girl is beautiful and prudent. Now, therefore, give ear to me, and I will speak to her father, and when we return from Rages, we will celebrate the nuptials. For I know Raguel, that he will not give her to another man, comformably to the law of Moses, or he will incur death; because thou art entitled to the to the inheritance before any other. Then,” &c. v. 14. H.—The law regulated the marriages of heiresses, (Num. 36:6) though not under pain of death. C.

Ver. 14. Died. Gr. “were destroyed in the nuptial chamber, (νυμφη). And as I am my father’s only son, I fear lest, approaching to her, I should die like the former; because a demon is in love with her, which hurts no one but such as approach to her. Now, therefore, I fear lest I should die, and bring down the life of my father and mother upon me to their grave.” H.—If this text may be styled Scripture, it only records the opinion of Toby. (C.) or what he had “heard.” H.—Many grave authors have been of the same persuasion that devils could be enamoured with mortal beauties: (C.) talesque asseverant ut hoc negare impudentiæ esse videatur. S. Aug. de C. xv. 23. Delrio, Magic. 2.—But this opinion is now almost entirely abandoned. Many who have testified such things, may have experienced only some diabolical illusions. The devil could not love the beauty, nor the virtue of Sara. But he was permitted by God to exercise his malice against those who would have gratified their impure desires. C.—We may perhaps decide to peremptorily on the nature of devils with which we are little acquainted. As they are susceptible of pride, anger, &c. why may they not also give way to some subtle kind of mental impurity? Houbigant.

Ver. 15. To hell. That is, to place where the souls were kept below, before the coming of Christ; (Ch.) as the just had not yet access to heaven. See Gen. 37. W. Gr. adds, “and they have no other son to bury them.”

Ver. 16. Raphael. Gr. “said to him: Dost thou not remember that thy father ordered thee to take a wife of thy kindered? Now then hearken to me brother; for she shall be thy wife. Mind not the devil. For this night she shall be given in marriage to thee; and if thou enter the nuptial chamber, thou shalt take the ashes of incense, and shalt place thereon some of the heart and liver,” &c. v. 19. H.

Ver. 17. Mule, which are very libidinous. Ps. 13.—Power. Yet he is not always permitted to kill them, as God often allows them time for repentance, or surrenders them to draw down heavier judgments. M.—“The devils can do no more than God secretly permits;” (S. Aug. de C. ii. 23.) and “God justly suffers the wicked to fall victims to their iniquitous appetites.” S. Greg. mor. ii.

Ver. 18. Days. No morality could be more pure. The Christian Church has given similar counsels, in the Capitulars of France, and of Erard, archbishop of Tours, and in many rituals published in the 16th century. The council of Trent only advises people to approach to the sacraments of penance and the Holy Eucharist, three days at least before marriage. The Greeks, in their third council of Carthage, (c. 13) order the first night to be spent in continence.

Ver. 19. Lay. Gr. adds, “some of the heart ... and make it smoke, and the devil shall smell, and flee away, and shall not return for ever.” H.—This is contrary to reason, say our adversaries. But though devils be incorporeal, may they not be affected by certain bodies, as our souls are when our limbs are hurt? The angel chose this sort of usual exorcism, that those who were present might be convinced of the devil’s departure. As the devils abuse the works of the creation, it was convenient that they should be punished by them; as they submit to magical operations, they must feel the power of such exorcisms (Houbigant) as are authorized by God and his Church. H.

Ver. 20. Society (copulatione.) He then obtained this blessing, though he knew not his wife till the fourth night. W.—His marriage resembled that of the patriarchs. C.—Gr. “But when thou shalt go to her, arise both, and cry to the merciful God, and he will save and have pity on you. Fear not, for she was prepared for thee from eternity; and thou shalt save her, and she shall go with thee; and I flatter myself that thou shalt have children of her. And as soon as Tobias heard this, he loved her, and his soul was much attached to her: and they arrived at Ecbatana.” H.—Some may wonder that Tobias did not ask for the consent of his parents. But the angel reminded him of his father’s injunctions, (C.) and spoke in such a manner, that he was convinced his counsel was from God. H.

Ver. 1. Joy; though as yet he only took them for Israelites. M.—Gr. “and they came to the house of Raguel. But Sara met them, and saluted them, as they did her, and she introduced them into the house.”

Ver. 2. Anna. Gr. and Heb. Edna, “pleasure.”—Cousin. Gr. adds, “Tobit.” H.—It is not certain that they were cousin-germans. C.

Ver. 5. My. Gr. “our brother. But they replied: We know him. And he said: is he well? But they answered: He is both alive and in health. And Tobias said; He is my father.”

Ver. 7. Went. Gr. “leaped up.”—A. Gr. “my good ... man. And hearing that Tobit had lost his sight, he was grieved, and wept.”

Ver. 9. After. Gr. “and they gave them a cordial reception. And they slew (sacrificed) a ram of the flock, and placed much food before them,” (H.) to shew their regard. Gen. 18:6. C.—“But Tobias said, to Raphael: Brother Azarias, mention what thou saidst to me on the road, and let the affair come to perfection. And he explained the matter to Raguel. And Raguel said: Eat and drink, and be merry. It behoveth thee to have my child. Yet I will lay the truth before thee. I gave my child to seven husbands, and when they entered in to her, they died the very night. For the present, therefore, be merry. And Tobias said: I will taste nothing here, till you produce and place her before me. And Raguel said: Take care of her henceforth, according to judgment: (H. or the law. C.) you are brother and sister. May then the merciful God grant you the greatest prosperity. And he called Sara, his daughter, and she came to her father: then taking her by the hand, he gave her,” v. 15. H.—S. Ambrose (Off. iii. 14.) reads in the same manner, (C.) and commends the candour of Raguel in disclosing the truth, though it might have prevented his daughter from marrying; (W.) a case where people allow themselves (C.) too much liberty, in concealing defects. H.

Ver. 14. Moses. It was not so much in force during the captivity, particularly as Raguel had only moveables; and therefore the seven former husbands had not been near relations. M.—It was a disgrace to refuse marrying a relation, who was an heiress. Num. 36:6. Ruth 4:6. C.

Ver. 15. Hand. This was the mode of confirming agreements, in Media. Alex. Genial v. 3.—The custom prevailed in marriages, (Lament. 5:6. Isai. 62:8) as it does still among Christians.—It. Gr. “her for a wife to Tobias, and said: Behold: take care of her according to the law of Moses, and go to thy father. And he blessed them. And he called Edna, his wife, and taking a book, wrote a note, (H. or contract. C.) and sealed it, and they began to eat.” H.—It was almost universally the custom to have such writings, particularly where polygamy prevailed. The wives of lower condition were taken without formality. C.

Ver. 18. Chamber. Different from that where they kept the feast, and perhaps (H.) not the same with the nuptial chamber, which had been so unfortunate, in order that Sara might not be so much alarmed. C.

Ver. 19. Wept, at the recollection of what had happened. M.

Ver. 20. And she. Gr. adds, “received the tears of her daughter; and said, have confidence, child.”—For the. Gr. “instead of this sorrow, have a good heart, daughter.” H.

TOBIAS 8

Ver. 1. To her, in the nuptial chamber. See Gen. 29:23.

Ver. 2. Bag, (cassidili) resembling a wallet or pannier, for provisions. C.—Liver. C. 6:8. This mystically represented the Passion of Christ, by which the devil is expelled from men’s hearts. S. Aug. ser. 28, de Sanct. Prosper, promis. ii. c. 39. W.—Gr. “and he took the ashes of incense, and placed thereon the heart of the fish and the liver, causing them to smoke. And when the devil perceived the odour, he fled to the highest parts of Egypt, and the angel bound him,” (H.) confining his malice to those deserts. Jesus Christ insinuates that the devil walks through dry places. Mat. 12:24. The angel was not seen to absent himself: C.—This country was chosen as being very remote from Media. Houbigant.—It was afterwards sanctified by the presence of many Christian solitaries. H.—Our adversaries laugh at this account. But surely Christ has used similar expressions of binding the devil, who cannot molest people, when he is not present; (Houbigant) or do any thing without the divine permission. C. 6:17. H.

Ver. 4. Then. Gr. “and when they were shut up together, Tobias ascended the bed, (κλινης, on which it was customary to sit, (H.) or rather according to the Rom. edition, he rose from the bed) and said, Arise, sister, and let us pray, that the Lord may take pity on us. And Tobias began to say," v. 7. H.—The rest is omitted. C.

Ver. 7. Lord. Gr. "Blessed art thou, the God of our fathers, and blessed is thy name, holy and glorious for ever. May the heavens and all thy creatures bless thee." H.

Ver. 8. Of. Gr. "And gavest him Eve for his wife, an assistant, and a support. From these all the seed of men was formed. Thou didst say, It is not good for man to be alone: Let us make for him a helper like unto himself. And now Lord," &c.

Ver. 9. Only. Gr. "for truth," resolving to be ever faithful to her. H.—We cannot read the pure sentiments of Tobias and Sara, brought up in the midst of infidels, without surprise. Nothing more perfect could be required of Christians (C.) in the married state. H.—S. Aug. (Doct. x. and xviii.) adduces this text to shew the true intent of marriage.

Ver. 10. And. Gr. "Order pity to be shewn me, and that I may grow old with this woman. And she said along with him, Amen. And they both slept the night," probably on separate beds, v. 15. H.

Ver. 11. It. Gr. "Raguel arising, went and dug a grave, saying, lest this man also should die. Then Raguel came to his own house, and said to Edna, his wife."

Ver. 14. Dead. Gr. "alive. But if not, that I may bury him, and no body may know," The custom of burying too soon ought to be avoided, as many have thus been consigned to the tomb before they were really dead!

Ver. 15. Together. In the same chamber, (H.) or with their clothes on. Serar. q. 21. The Vulg. specifies that the three first nights were to be spent in continence. But the other versions are silent on this head. C. —Gr. "And the girl entered, having opened the door, and found the two sleeping; and going out, she told them that he was alive. And Raguel blessed," &c.

Ver. 17. And. Gr. "saying, Blessed art thou, O God, in all pure and holy benediction; and may all thy saints, and all thy creatures, bless thee. Yea, may all thy angels, and thy elect, bless thee for all ages. Blessed art thou, because thou hast filled me with joy, and it has not happened as I suspected: but thou hast done unto us according to thy great mercy. And," v. 19.

Ver. 19. Make. Gr. "Shew them mercy, Lord. Perfect their life in health, with gladness and mercy. But he ordered his domestics to fill up the grave, and he made them a marriage feast for fourteen days. And," v. 23. The ancient Vulg. seems rather more conformable to the present. "Raguel ordered his wife to make several loaves, and going himself to the flock, he brought two cows and four rams, and ordered them to prepare a feast. He called Tobias, and swore to him, saying, Thou shalt not depart hence these 14 days, but remain here eating and drinking with me, and shalt fill with joy me and my daughter, who has been greatly afflicted. Receive half of my goods, and thou shalt return safe and sound to thy father; and after my death, and that of my wife, thou shalt have the other half." H.—Gr. and Heb. mention nothing of the beasts slaughtered, or of Raguel's testament. C.

Ver. 21. Journey. He expected that Tobias would proceed to Rages. M.

Ver. 23. Adjured. Gr. "said to him before the two days of the marriage were accomplished, with an oath, that he should not depart till the 14 days of marriage were over; and then taking half of his goods, he might depart in health to his father, and receive the rest when I and my wife shall be no more." H.—Weeks. The usual term was doubled, (Gen. 29:27) on account of the mercy shewn to Sara, and her marriage. M.

TOBIAS 9

Ver. 1. The angel. Gr. "Raphael, and said."—I pray. Gr. "Take with thee a servant and two camels," v. 6. H.

Ver. 3. Rages. Tobias remained in the province of the same name. C. 3:7. W.—And to. Gr. "Bring me the money and him to the marriage feast."

Ver. 5. Whose. Greek, "that I should not go out, and my father," &c. v. 4. H.—Tobias finds out an expedient to shew his respect for God, his father, and his friend, (C.) without retarding the business for which he came.

Ver. 6. And received. Gr. "But he produced the coffers sealed up, and gave him, and they set off early together, and came to the wedding, and Tobias blessed his wife," (H.) by removing the source of her disgrace. The Heb. of Fagius is equally concise in this chapter, omitting all the rest. C.—Munster has only, "Raguel wept, embracing Tobias, and said, Blessed be the Lord God of Israel, who has made thee (Sara) marry this man. May he, in his mercy, grant you male children, who may employ themselves in the law of the Lord.”

Ver. 12. Lord. Not giving too much way to pleasure, (H.) or gluttony, as Plato beautifully commends. Leg. vi. Serarius. W.

Ver. 1. But. Gr. “And Tobit, his father, counted each day; and as the days of the journey were ended, and they did not come, Tobit said, Is he not put to shame?” (H.) and refused payment? C.—Old Vulg. and Prot. “detained.”

Ver. 3. He. Gr. “He was much troubled. But his wife said to him, the boy is come to an untimely end, since he tarries; and she began to mourn for him, and said, I am not, or am I not full of solicitude, my son, that I have let thee go, the light of my eyes and Tobit?”, v. 6. Without this interrogation, (H.) the Gr. seems to be corrupt; (C.) and ως, “how,” or ολ, “woe,” should be put instead of ου, “not.” Drus. Grot. &c. “Now I care for nothing, my son, since I have let thee go, the light,” &c. Prot.

Ver. 6. That. Gr. “and she said to him, Be silent, deceive me not. My son is lost: and she went out daily into the road without, by which they departed. In the day time she eat no bread, and the night she spent in bewailing her son, Tobias, till the 14 days of the wedding were finished, which Raguel had adjured him to tarry there. And,” v. 9. H.—Thus the converted Jews lament that Christ should so long abandon their nation, while some hope like Tobias, and others are in more suspense, like his wife. V. Bede.—So Catholics, in countries fallen into heresy, are in great distress for their brethren; (Rom. 9) While some more confidently hope that God will enlighten our nation again, as sight was restored to old Tobias. W.

Ver. 8. Raguel. Gr. “Tobias,” as v. 9, which is transposed.

Ver. 9. Days. It would require 42, (T.) or 38, (Torniel) or 34 days, (Salien. M.) to perform what is here recorded. H.—But it would be difficult to ascertain the precise time. To go from Ninive to Ecbatana would occupy eight or ten days. C.—If, therefore, the parents of Tobias expected that he would return in about 20 days, they might well wonder at the 14 days’ delay occasioned by the marriage. The distance might prevent him from giving notice of this event. Gr.

“Dismiss me, because my, &c.... no longer hope to see me again. But his father-in-law replied, Stop with me,” &c. v. 8. H.

Ver. 10. When. Gr. “And Tobias said, No; but dismiss me to my father and mother. Then Raguel rising up, gave him Sarra, his wife, and half his goods, bodies, beasts, and silver.” This expression, bodies, (H.) or men generally denotes slaves; but it may also be put for others, (C.) who were in the train of Sara. Grot.—Safe. Gr. “with blessing, saying, May God prosper you, children, the God of heaven, before I die; and he said to his daughter, Honour thy father and mother-in-law, they are now thy parents. May I hear a good report of thee, and he kissed her; and Edna said to Tobias, dear brother, May the Lord of heaven re-establish thee and grant me to behold thy children by my daughter, Sarra, that I may rejoice before the Lord; and behold, I place my daughter with thee as a deposit, and thou must not grieve her. Afterwards she departed, and Toby also blessing God, and he made his journey prosperous and blessed. Raguel, and Edna, and his wife.” H.—The Jews still adopt many customs similar to those which we here behold, as this is a most excellent description of a holy marriage. Serarius. C.—Some also prevail in the Christian Church, though marriage is now become more holy, and a sacrament. Cat. Rom. q. 22.—The proper intent of the contract, and many rites accompanying it, may be seen in the preceding chapters. W.

Ver. 1. Charan. Not the residence of Abraham. Gen. 12:4. Syr. reads, “Bazri,” or “Carrac.” Old Vulg. ibat Caracha, quæ est civitas in Ninive. Arrian places Carcha in Assyria, and Ptolemy mentions a Characa in Susiana.—Midway. At this rate, the distance from Ninive to Ecbatana would be 22 days’ journey. But it is not half so much for a man travelling expeditiously. C.—Tobias had much luggage. Leaving it with his wife, (H.) he went from this city to Ninive in three or four days, v. 18. C.—Gr. “and he travelled on till he came near to Ninive. And Raphael said,” &c.

Ver. 3. If. Gr. “Let us go quickly before thy wife, and prepare the house.” H.—This would be necessary, for the reception of so many goods, as well as to relieve the anxiety (C.) of the aged parents, and prevent surprise.

Ver. 4. And. Gr. “Take now in thy hand the gall of the fish. And they went on. And the dog followed close up to them; (H. Syr. “ran before them." C.) and Anna."

Ver. 6. Cometh. Gr. adds, "and the man who went with him."

Ver. 7. To. Gr. "I know, Tobias, that thy father will open his eyes. Ancient, therefore, the gall upon his eyes, and feeling the smart, he will rub and remove the white specks, and shall see thee." H.—God. This laudable custom was observed by the ancient solitaries, and prescribed by the rule of S. Benedict, c. 53.

Ver. 9. The dog, &c. This may seem a very minute circumstance to be recorded in sacred history; but, as we learn from our Saviour, (S. Matt. 5:18) there are iotas and tittles in the word of God, that is to say, things that appear minute, but which have indeed a deep mysterious meaning in them. Ch.—V. Bede. S. Jer. in Isai. lvi. 8. S. Aug. con. Faust. xxii. 56. W.—The other versions relate this event, v. 4.

Ver. 10. And. After v. 7, Gr. adds, "and Anna running before, fell upon the neck of her son, and said to him, I have beheld thee, son; henceforth I may die. And they both wept. And Tobit went out towards the door, and he stumbled. But his son ran up to him, and took hold of his father, and spread the gall upon his father's eyes, saying, Have confidence, father. But as soon as they began to smart, he rubbed his eyes, and the white specks came off like skins from the corners: and beholding his son, he fell upon his neck, and wept. Then he said," v. 17. H.

Ver. 14. Hour. This is not in the other versions. C.—It would intimate that the operation was natural. M.—Yet some think that the cure was too instantaneous; (Drusius) or that the miracle consisted in the revelation of a remedy, till then unknown. Serarius.—The effect seems to have been of the same nature as that produced by the heart, &c. C. 6:8. W. C.—Estius believes that the optic nerve was entirely burnt. If the external coat of the eyes was only covered with a sort of skin, it might be removed by the gall of several fishes. C.—Callionymi fel cicatrice sanat & carnes oculorum supervacuas consumit. Pliny xxxii 4. M.

Ver. 17. Lord. Gr. "Blessed be God, and blessed be thy name for ever, and blessed be all thy holy angels; because thou hast scourged, and hast shewn mercy, and," &c.

Ver. 18. Days. Or perhaps hours; (H.) as the other versions intimate that Sara Arrived the same day. C.—Gr. "And his son entered, rejoicing, and related to his father the great things which had taken place in Media. And Tobit went out to meet his daughter-in-law, rejoicing, and blessing God, to the gate of Ninive. And those who saw him walking were astonished, because he saw. And Tobit confessed before them that God had taken pity on him. And as Tobit approached to Sarra, his daughter-in-law, he blessed her, saying, Mayst thou come with safety, daughter. Blessed be God, who has brought thee to us, and blessed be thy father and thy mother. And there was joy among all his brethren at Ninive. And,” v. 20. H.

Ver. 20. Achior. Gr. “Achiachar,” mentioned C. 1:24. This text insinuates that he was also styled Anael (H.) and Nasbas, and was the nephew of Tobit. Grot. C.—Gr. “And there came Achiachar, and Nasbas, his brother’s son, and the wedding of Tobias was kept in joy for seven days.” H.

Ver. 21. Joy. Old Vulg. adds, “and many presents were made to him.”

Ver. 1. What. Gr. Heb. and Syr. C. “See thou give the man who has come with thee his hire, and something must be added to it;” (H.) as he had promised (C. 7:19) a drachm a day, (C.) and more if they returned safe. H.

Ver. 2. Said. Gr. “Father, I shall not be hurt if I give him half of what I have brought, since he has conducted me safe back to thee, and has healed my wife, and brought my money, and likewise has cured thee. And the old man said, he justly deserves it. And he called the angel, and said to him, Take half of what you have brought, and depart in health. Then,” v. 6.

Ver. 6. Said. Gr. “Calling the two, in private, he said to them.”

Ver. 7. Hide. Gr. “To bless God, and to extol his name, exposing with honour the words of God, and delay not to confess unto him. For,” &c. H.—The Old Vulg. greatly abridges the remainder of this book, having only, “Then Raphael having called the two Tobies, said to them, Since thou hast not delayed to arise, and to leave thy meals to bury the dead, I have been sent to try thee to heal thee, and to deliver thy daughter-in-law. I am Raphael, one of the angels who assist and appear before the brightness of God. Hereupon the two Tobies were startled, and fell prostrate on the ground, and were seized with fear. And Raphael said, Fear not, Peace be with you. Bless the Lord all the days of your life, and sing his praises. You thought that I eat when I was at table with you. But you saw with your eyes; (H. only a vision.

C.) wherefore bless the Lord upon the earth, and praise his goodness. As for me, I return to him who sent me. Write down all that has happened. The angel having spoken thus to Tobias, the latter wrote this prayer as a monument of his joy, and said, Blessed be the Lord, who is great in eternity, because his reign endures for ever. It is He who strikes, and who shews I mercy, who conducts to the grave, and who, by his majesty, rescues from the greatest miseries; and no one can withdraw himself from his hands. End of Tobias the just.” H.—King. Secrecy is the soul of human councils, to prevent an enemy from thwarting our designs: but nothing can withstand the divine power. It is therefore proper to testify our gratitude for favours received, as the ancient saints have done by their canticles. C.

Ver. 8. Alms. Gr. adds, “and justice. Better is a little with justice, than much with iniquity.” H.—Fasting and alms are like the wings of prayer. W. See C. 4:11.

Ver. 9. Everlasting. This word is not found in Greek, though sufficiently implied; as liberality does not always secure a person’s life, or temporal happiness. C.—Gr. “Those who perform alms-deeds and justice, shall be filled with life. But sinners are enemies,” &c.

Ver. 10. Soul. If this were understood of the present life, nothing could be less accurate, as the wicked often prosper. See Ps. 10:6. Jo. 12:25. C.

Ver. 11. I. Gr. “I will not hide from you any word or thing. I said then, It is good to conceal the mystery of the king, but glorious to manifest the works of God. And now, when thou and thy daughter-in-law, Sarra, did pray, I brought forward the memorial of your prayer before the holy one.” H.—The angels are represented as God’s ministers, offering our prayers to him. Apoc. 8:3. C. S. Aug. W.—Philo styles them ambassadors. Socrates says, “every demon (or good spirit) is between God and mortals.” Plutarch.—Inter homines cœlicolasque, vectores hinc precum, inde donorum. Apuleius de Deo Socrat. C.—Gr. continues, “and when thou didst bury the dead, in like manner, I was present with thee; when thou didst not delay to rise and leave thy dinner, that going thou mightest cover the dead; in thy good work, thou wast not hidden from me: but I was with thee. And,” &c. v. 14. H.

Ver. 13. Thee. This rule is invariable, that the good may advance in virtue, and set a pattern to the world, (Heb. 2:18 and 12:6. Acts 14:21. C.) and cancel their smallest faults.

Ver. 14. From the devil, is not in Greek. H.—In this history, as well as in other parts of Scripture, we have convincing proofs of the good which each one receives from his angel guardian, and from the other blessed spirits. See S. Luke 15 and 16. S. Chrys. in col. hom. 3. S. Aug. de Civ. Dei. xi. 31. &c. W.

Ver. 15. Raphael. We know also the names of Michael and Gabriel. All others are apocryphal; such as Uriel, Saltiel, Jeadriel Barachiel, &c.—Seven. This number is clearly specified by S. John, Apoc. 1:4. A mass in their honour was approved by Pius IV. It is supposed that the seven deacons in the Church of Rome, and of Jerusalem, were instituted in imitation of them. The kings, Assuerus, &c. had seven chief officers. Est. 1:10. C.—Lord, ready to fulfil his orders, as innumerable other angels, of inferior degree, are likewise. M. Dan. 7:10.—These were the princes of the heavenly court. S. Jerom (con. Jovin.) admits only seven orders of angels. C.—Gr. “I am Raphael, one of the seven holy angels who offer up the prayers of the saints, and go out before the glory of the Holy One. And they were both troubled,” &c. (H.) at so unusual a thing, (M.) and filled with reverential awe. H.—They might also suspect that death would shortly follow. C. Gen. 16:13.

Ver. 17. Be. Gr. “shall be with you. But praise God: for I came not of my own accord, but by the will of our God. Wherefore praise him for ever.”

Ver. 19. I. Gr. “I appeared to you all the days; yet I did not eat nor drink. But you beheld a vision.” H.—Having an aerial body, he made the provisions disappear, as the sun melts snow. Gen. 18:9. C.—He might swallow, though he had no need of meat, (S. Aug. de Civ. Dei. xiii. 22.) or digestion, (Grotius) so as to convert it into his substance. M.—Men. I constantly enjoy the beatific vision. Mat. 18:10. C.

Ver. 20. It. Gr. “And now confess to God, because I ascend to him who sent me. Write ye all these occurrences in a book. And they arose, and beheld him no longer; and they proclaimed the great and wonderful works of God, and how the angel of the Lord had appeared to them.” H.—Almost all interpreters infer from this injunction, (C.) that the work before us was originally composed by these holy men. H.

Ver. 1. Tobias. Gr. “Tobit wrote a prayer for exultation, and said.” H.

Ver. 2. Hell; death. M.—Out of hell there is no redemption or return. H. 1 K. 2:6.

Ver. 4. Therefore, is not in Greek. H.—But God had the good of the Gentiles in view, that they might become acquainted with his law, and behold the conduct of his saints, Tobias, Esther, Daniel, &c. (C.) as well as to punish his people. H.—Temporal afflictions are sometimes for the spiritual good of others. W.—Gr. “because he has scattered you among them. There shew forth his grandeur, and extol him before everyone living: for he is our Lord and God, our Father for ever. Yea, he hath chastised us in our iniquities, again he will have mercy, and will gather us from all nations where he has scattered us, if ye be converted to him with all your heart, and with all your soul, to act sincerely. Then he will turn towards you, and will not hide his face from you; and ye shall behold what he will do with you, and ye shall confess to him with all your mouth, and bless the Lord of power, and extol the king of ages. I,” &c. v. 7. H.

Ver. 5. Mercy. He can discover nothing in the sinner. C.

Ver. 7. Nation; the Israelites, (M.) whom he has chastised. H.—Ninive was still flourishing. Yet the Greek seems to refer to the Assyrian idolaters, (C.) or to both. Gr. “and I shew his power and magnificence to a sinful nation. Who knows if he will love and shew his mercy to you? I exalt my God, and my soul magnifies the King of heaven, and shall gladly proclaim his greatness: let all speak and confess to him in justice.”

Ver. 11. Jerusalem. What is prophetically delivered here, and in the following chapter, with relation to Jerusalem, is partly to be understood of the rebuilding the city after the captivity, and partly of the spiritual Jerusalem, which is the Church of Christ, and the eternal Jerusalem in heaven. Ch.—It would seem that Jerusalem arid the temple were now destroyed, which is contrary to chronology, as Manasses had not yet began to reign, (C.) and Tobias died when he had been on the throne fifty-two years. Houbigant.—But the Greek shews that (C.) he speaks prophetically: (W.) “Jerusalem, holy city, He will chastise thee for the works of thy children, and again he will shew mercy on the children of the just. Confess to the Lord, for he is good; and bless the king of ages, that his tabernacle may be again rebuilt in thee, with joy.” H.—The Heb. of Munster had only a few verses of this and the following chapter. C.

Ver. 12. Call. Gr. “cause thy captives to rejoice in thee, and love in thee all the distressed unto eternity.”

Ver. 13. Thou. Gr. “Many nations from afar shall come to the name of the Lord God, with presents in their hands, presents for the king of heaven; race after race shall praise thee, and give exultation. They,” &c. v. 16. H.—How many potent monarchs of Persia, Egypt, Rome, &c. honoured the temple of Jerusalem! How many wars have been carried on by Christian potentates, to rescue that favourite spot out of the hands of infidels! all out of respect for Christ. These priests are still better verified in his Church, to which the powers of the earth have submitted, (C.) esteeming it an honour and happiness to be members of this holy society. H.

Ver. 14. Holy. This soil has been carried into distant countries, out of reverence, (4 K. 5:17. S. Aug. de Civ. Dei xxii. 8.) and has been honoured with miracles. S. Greg. Turon. i. 7.

Ver. 16. Despise. Gr. “hate thee, and blessed shall be those who love thee for ever.” H.

Ver. 17. But. Gr. “rejoice, and exult for the children of the just, because they shall be gathered together, and shall bless the Lord of the just.” H.—The people of God, in the old law, have often this title, as those of the new are styled saints. Both have a claim to this prediction. The Jews became more faithful after the captivity, so that the most cruel persecution of Epiphanes could not overcome their resolution; and the world was astonished at the courage of the martyrs, and the exemplary conduct of the primitive Christians. C.

Ver. 18. Peace. Gr. adds, “blessed are those who have mourned on account of thy chastisements, because they shall rejoice, beholding all thy glory, and their joy shall endure for ever.” H.

Ver. 19. Thou. Gr. “God, the great king: For Jerusalem,” &c. v. 21. H.—Troubles. This regards only the heavenly Jerusalem. W.

Ver. 20. Seed. Hence it appears that Tobias did not speak of an approaching event, (C.) or at least he wished that his posterity might be set free.

Ver. 21. Emerald. Gr. adds, “and precious stone: thy walls, and towers, and battlements, of pure gold. And the streets of Jerusalem shall be strewed with beryl and carbuncle, and stone from Souda.” H.—This description resembles that of Isaias, (54:11) who lived a little before. S. John (Apoc. 21:10) represents the church in the same ornaments, denoting the merits of Christ and the virtues of his saints. All are convinced that such expressions are not to be taken in the literal sense. C.

Ver. 22. Alleluia. A sound of praise. S. Aug. (ep. 86.) means, "Praise ye the Lord (H.) with joy." W.—It is disused in times of penance. C.—Gr. adds, "and they shall praise, saying, Blessed be God, who has exalted it for ever."

Ver. 1. Words. Gr. "confession; (or hymn of praise) and he was 58 years old when he lost his sight, which he recovered eight years after, and gave alms, and continued to fear the Lord God, and to confess unto him. Now he arrived at a very advanced age," 158, v. 10. H.—But this chronology must be abandoned. All the versions disagree; and perhaps there may be none perfectly accurate. C.

Ver. 2. Two. Arab. and Schol. History, read "twelve."

Ver. 5. Seven. Gr. Comp. and Alex. as well as Fagius, have only "six."

Ver. 6. The. Gr. "Son, take thy children. Behold, I am grown old, and my life is hastening to an end. Depart into Media, my son, for I believe all that the prophet, Jonas, spoke concerning Ninive, that it will be overturned. But in Media there will be more peace for a time, and that our brethren in the land will be scattered from the good land; and Jerusalem shall be deserted, and the house of God in it will be burnt, and shall be abandoned for a time; and they shall build the house, not like the former, till the times of the world or age be accomplished; and afterwards they shall return from the captives, and shall build Jerusalem gloriously; and the house of God shall be built in it, and the edifice shall be glorious for ever, as the prophets have spoken concerning it; and all the Gentiles shall turn truly to fear the Lord God, and shall undermine (and destroy) their idols; and all the Gentiles shall bless the Lord," &c. v. 9. H.—This text is of importance, as it specifies the name of Jonas, and is quoted by S. Jerom; (ibid.) though Nahum (3:8) and Sophonias (2:13) also foretold the destruction of Ninive. It speaks of the future, and not of the past ruin, of the temple, which certainly took place after the death of Tobias. C.—The prophets, however, frequently speak of future events, as if they were past, to shew the certainty of their predictions. H.

Ver. 8. In it. Let the Jews shew when this was accomplished. We can easily point out the nations converted from idolatry to the Church of Christ, as the prophets foretold. Jer. 3:17 and 16:19. C.—It cannot, therefore, be understood of the temporal Jerusalem. W.

Ver. 9. And. Gr. "And his people shall confess to God, and the Lord shall exalt his people, and all shall rejoice who love the Lord God in truth and justice, shewing mercy to our brethren. And now, son, depart from Ninive; for what the prophet, Jonas, spoke, shall surely be accomplished." H.—This prediction was conditional, as was also the pardon of the people, who were justly punished for their relapse. M.

Ver. 10. Seek with diligence, not barely doing what you are commanded. H.—Gr. is much more diffuse. C.—"But do thou keep the law and the ordinances, be a lover of alms-deeds, and just, that it may be well with thee. Bury me with decency, and thy mother with me, and tarry then no longer at Ninive. Son, behold what Aman (Syr. Acab.) did to Achiachar, who fed him, how he conducted him from light into darkness, and what return he made him. Now, Achiachar met with safety: but he received his due, and he went down into darkness. Manasses gave alms, and was rescued from the snare of death, which was laid for him: but Aman fell into the snare, and perished. And now, son, behold the effects of alms-deeds, and how justice brings deliverance. While he was speaking these things, his soul failed upon the bed: but he was 150 years old, and he buried him honourably." H.—The allusion to Aman seems improper, he lived many years after the captivity; (C.) or rather it may refer to some other history (Houbigant) with which we are not acquainted. H.

Ver. 14. And. Gr. "And when Anna, his mother, was dead; he buried her with his father. But Tobias departed with his wife and sons to Ecbatana, to Raguel, his father-in-law, and lived to an honourable old age; and he buried honourably his father and mother-in-law, and he inherited their substance, as well as that of his father, Tobit." H.

Ver. 15. Fifth. Including himself. He might see the offspring of his great grandson, if he lived only 70 years after his marriage. C.

Ver. 16. Nine. Syr. 107. C.—Gr. "But he also died at the age of 127, at Ecbatana, of Media; and he heard, before his death, of the destruction of Ninive, the citizens of which Nabuchodonosor and Assuerus led captives; and he rejoiced over Ninive before he died." We have been more particular in giving the Greek text of this book, because some look upon it as an original; and we should wish to lose no particle of the word of God, which is more precious than gold. Tobias might applaud the execution of divine justice without any private resentment. H.—Ninive was taken by Nabuchodonosor, who acted for his father, Nabopolassar, with whom Astyages, king of the Medes, was leagued. They took the city in the reign of Chinaladan, or Sarac, A. 3378. It also fell a prey to its enemies, under Sardanapalus, A. 3257; as the inhabitants did not persevere in sentiments of repentance, which they had entertained at the preaching of Jonas, in the reign of Phul. Hence God revealed its destruction to Tobias. C.—With joy, may refer to the surviving friends, who rejoiced interiorly at his felicity, while they wept for their own loss; or it may be understood of the deceased; who, like his father, (v. 4. C.) rejoiced in the Lord, and in performance of good works.

Ver. 17. Kindred. Behold the influence of good example; (H.) and a proof that the true religion failed not in Israel much less in Juda, or the Church of Christ. W.—The virtues of these two holy men are truly deserving of applause and imitation. They thought and acted in perfect conformity with the gospel. The father might represent the old law, under all its inconveniences, while the son holds forth the light of Christ, and banishes the devil. C.

JUDITH

THE BOOK OF JUDITH

INTRODUCTION

The sacred writer of this Book is generally believed to be the high priest Eliachim, (called also Joachim.) The transactions herein related, most probably happened in his days, and in the reign of Manasses, after his repentance and return from captivity. It takes its name from that illustrious woman, by whose virtue and fortitude, armed with prayer, the children of Israel were preserved from the destruction threatened them by Holofernes and his great army. It finishes with her canticle of thanksgiving to God. Ch.—He was a chief officer at court, under Ezechias, (4 K. 18:18. H.) before he was high priest, assuming his father Helchias's name. Many suppose that he was the author of this Book, as Josephus informs us that the priests recorded the most remarkable transactions. But this would prove that they wrote all the histories of the Bible. S. Jerom (in Agg. 1:6.) seems to believe that Judith left these memoirs. Yet we have no certain proof of the author. Josephus passes over this history, as he professed to exhibit only the

Heb. books. Ant. x. 11. Prol. &c. S. Jerom doubts not but this was written in Chaldee, from which language he translated it; unless he caused it to be first explained to him in Heb. as he did the Book of Tobias. C.—He might, however, have attained sufficient knowledge of the former language, which is so like the Hebrew, before he undertook this work. H.—He professes to give “the sense,” rather than a verbal translation. The Greek must have been taken from another copy, and is followed by the Syriac, in which we find some passages more exact than in the present Greek copies. The original is entirely lost. It might have removed many difficulties. Those however which are started by our adversaries, are not unanswerable. Grotius would suppose that this work is only a parable, representing the state of the Jewish church under the persecution of Epiphanes. But this singular notion has no foundation; and if it had, the authenticity of the Book would not be endangered, as the parable both of the Old and New Testament are certainly true, and written by inspiration. C.—Luther styles it a poetical comedy; (Pref. et Sympos. 29.) but both Jews and Christians have esteemed it as a true history: (W.) and this innovator (H.) allows, that “the Book is beautiful, and written by an inspired prophet.” C.—The Fathers have looked upon it with the utmost veneration; and S. Jerom, though he was at one time under some doubts, placed it on a level with the Books of Ruth, and Esther, &c. Ep. ad Principiam.—It is admitted by Origen, Tertullian, S. Chrys. S. Hilary, V. Bede, &c. as the history of a most valiant matron, delivering God’s people from a cruel tyrant. W.—Some place this event under Cambyzes, son of Cyrus; (Euseb. S. Aug.) others under Xerxes, (Torniel) or Darius Hystaspes, (E.) or Ochus: (Sulp. Severus) but the opinion which has been given above is more accurate; (C.) or rather Bethulia was saved, while Manasses was in captivity, (in the 10th year of his reign) and the high priest administered affairs in his absence. At this point, Judith might be thirty-five years old. She lived seventy years afterwards; and many days (perhaps eight years more) passed before the country was invaded by Pharaoh Nechao. C. 16:30. Thus Manasses survived 45 years, Amon 2, Josias 31; total 78. This chronology removes every difficulty. Houbig. Pref.—If true, it seems probable that the work would be originally in Heb. as the Chaldee was used only after the captivity, (H.) which may be farther proved from C. 1:12. Greek. Houbigant.—Protestants prefer to translate this and the other apocrypha from the Greek. M.

Ver. 1. Now, refers to the internal purpose of the author. S. Greg. hom 2. in Ezech. W. Many of the books begin with And; shewing their connection. This work formed a part of the general history. The building of Ecbatana likewise took place soon after the destruction of Ninive, mentioned in the preceding book.—Arphaxad. He was probably the same as is called Dejoces by Herodotus; to whom he attributes the building of Ecbatana, the capital city of Media; (Ch.) or Arphaxad, more resembles both in name and actions the second king Phraortes or Apharaartas, (Montfaucon and Houbig.) who fortified and embellished the city. C.—Ecbatana, or Agbata, which in Arabic signifies “variegated;” (Bochart) as the seven walls, rising one higher than another round it, were marked with one white, two black, three red, four blue, five dark red, six silver, seven gold. Herod. i. 98. C. See Tob. 3:7.

Ver. 2. Hewed. Gr. adds, “three cubits broad and six long.” The ancients aimed at solidity in their architecture, as appears from their ruins. C.—High. Salien (A. 3345) thinks there is a transposition, and that the walls were 70 cubits high. M.—What need was there of such a breadth? Gr. allows 70 in height, and 50 in breadth, which seems more proportionate. Old Vulg. has 60 cubits high, and 50 broad. On the walls of Ninive, three chariots might fight abreast, (C.) and six on those of Babylon. Ctesias.—Feet. Projecting from the wall, to remove an enemy. M.—Gr. “and the towers thereof he placed above the gates 100 cubits, and the foundation was 60 cubits broad. And he made the gates to rise 70 cubits, being 40 cubits in breadth, to send out the armies of his mighty men, and to draw up his infantry.” H.

Ver. 4. Gloried. Fool, this night wilt thou perish. Luke 12:20. W.

Ver. 5. Nabuchodonosor. Not the king of Babylon, who took and destroyed Jerusalem, but another of the same name, who reigned in Ninive; and is called by profane historians Saosduchin. He succeeded Asarhaddon in the kingdom of the Assyrians, and was contemporary with Manasses, king of Juda. Ch.—He might be the same with Asarhaddon, who resided at Ninive in the 20th year of his reign. After the defeat at Bethulia, the Medes recovered part of their power, under Cyaxares I. who was succeeded by Astyages and Cyaxares II. with whom Cyrus was associated in the empire. Xenophon.—Asarhaddon spent the latter years of his life at Babylon, of which he had made himself master. Houbigant.—The Jews frequently give names to foreign princes different from those by which they are known in profane history. See Tob. ult. H.—Him. Gr. afterwards (v. 12) insinuates, that he prevented any from mounting the throne of Media, till this work was written, “he transfixed him with his darts, and destroyed him till this day.” Houbigant.

Ver. 6. Ragau, near Rages. Tob. 1:16. M.—Syr. “Dura,” mentioned Dan. 3:1. C.—Jadason, or Mount Jason, above the Caspian gates; (Strabo xi.) unless it may be the city Jassu, in Armenia. Gr. has “the Hydaspes,” a river of India, though Curtius (v.) places it near Susa; confounding it with the Choaspes.—Elicians. Gr. “Elymeans,” perhaps the same with Pontus. Heb. Ellasar. Gen. 14:9. Various battles were fought during this war, which the Greek intimates lasted seven years. C.—That version also would represent those and various other nations coming to meet Nabuchodonosor, who hereupon sent his ambassadors to all in Persia, and westward to Cilicia, &c. As they were treated contemptuously, he swore that he would revenge himself. But first he attacked Arphaxad, took and sacked Ninive, slew the king, and then abandoned himself with his army to pleasure in the conquered city, “120 days.” H.

Ver. 8. Esdrelon. Syr. “Jezrael,” which is the usual name in Scripture. Jos. 17:16.

Ver. 9. Jesse, or Gessen, where Joseph placed his brethren. Gen. 46:34.

Ver. 11. Refused. Gr. adds, “and did not come to help him in the war, because they feared him not, (H. supposing he would have enough to do with Arphaxad) as he was but like their equal, or as one man. C.

Ver. 12. Countries. Those who were subject to him did wrong in refusing aid. But the Jews were under no such obligations; and God espoused their cause the more, as the king set up for a deity. C. 3. C.—He had at first entertained thoughts of universal dominion, (H.) being elated by his victory, like other conquerors.—Aufferre, trucidare, rapere falsis nominibus imperium, atque ubi solitudinem faciunt, pacem appellant. Tacit. Agric.

JUDITH 2

Ver. 1. Thirteenth. Gr. 18th.—Month. Nisan, in spring.

Ver. 2. Secret. Lit. “mystery.” Tob. 12:7. C.—Abditos principis sensus exquirere illicitum. Tacit. An. vi.

Ver. 3. Empire. “The thirst of empire and riches is an old and deep-rooted cause of making war.” Sallust. Frag.—Gr. adds, “and they (counsellors) judged that all flesh must be destroyed of those who had not complied with his order.” H.—God laughs at the vain designs of men. C.

Ver. 4. Armies. Gr. adds, “and the second after himself,” in the kingdom. M.—Casaubon suspects that this drunkard was the king mentioned in history, as having lost the kingdom of Cappadocia, by attempting to introduce the dissolute feasts of Baccus. Polyb. xxxii. ap. Athen. x. 11.—He made his attack first upon this country, v. 13.

Ver. 5. Commandment. Gr. adds, he must demand “earth and water,” as an acknowledgment of his dominion, and that all necessities of life belonged to him. This custom prevailed in Persia. Herod. iv. 123. Polyb. xix. Brisson iii.

Ver. 9. Syria: part of which, it seems, had submitted. C.—Gr. “and corn for every man, in abundance,” (H.) for fear it should be carried off in the countries which he invaded. M.

Ver. 11. Archers. Gr. adds, “a mixed multitude,” not bearing arms. Ex. 12:38.

Ver. 12. When. Gr. “and they proceeded from Ninive, three days’ journey, to the plain of Bektileth,” or Bagdania, in Cappadocia, between Mount Argee and Taurus. Strabo (xii.) assures us that Argee is the highest mountain in the country, from which the two seas of Cilicia and the Euxine may be seen. C.

Ver. 13. Melothus, or Melita, built by Semiramis, (Pliny vi. 3.) in the same country.—Tharsis, or Cilicia, peopled by the son of Javan.—Ishmahel, on the Euphrates, east of the Desert Arabia.

Ver. 14. Mambre. Gr. “Abrona, (C.) or Arbonai;” (H.) that is, from the river Chaboras to the Persian Gulph, or sea. C.

Ver. 15. Japheth, or Joppe, now Jaffa. Serarius.—Gr. “he cut in pieces all who opposed him; and he came to the borders of Japheth, which are on the south, over-against Arabia.”

Ver. 16. Carried. Greek, “surrounded ... and burnt their tents, and plundered their folds for cattle:” μανδρας. H.—Madian lay to the east of the Dead Sea. C.

Ver. 17. Harvest. The rapidity of his conquests was astonishing, as all this had been done in six or seven weeks, v. 1. But Holofernes probably sent his lieutenants into different parts at the same time. C.—Caused. Gr. “he burnt all their fields, and destroyed their flocks and herds, and plundered their cities, and put to the sword all their young men."

Ver. 18. Land. Gr. adds, "on the sea-shore, in Sidon, ... Ascalon," &c. H.

JUDITH 3

Ver. 1. Kings. Gr. "they sent to him ambassadors, with proposals for peace, saying: Behold we, the servants of Nabuchodonosor, the great king, lay before thee; use us as thou thinkest best," &c. These proposals were made by those on the sea-coast, from Sidon and Tyre to Ascalon, from whom Holofernes took "the choicest men," being received with honour, v. 10. H.—Syria, &c. These are not specified in the Greek.—Sobal, or Soba, (1 K. 14:47) near Damascus, where Ptolemy (v.) places Samoulis.—Lybia seems too remote, and had not been attacked: some therefore would read Lycia, or Lygia, (Herod. vii. 72.) or rather Lydia, (C.) which Holofernes had "cut in pieces," according to the Greek. C. 2:13. H.

Ver. 2. Great. This was his usual title. Dan. 2:30. 4 K. 18:19. C.—Slavery. Yet they make an unconditional submission. H.—It is better for us to submit to servitude than to be slaughtered like our brethren. M.

Ver. 3. Sight, at thy disposal. Gen. 13:9. Prov. 15:11.

Ver. 10. Lights. Torches were used to testify joy. 2 Mac. 4:22.

Ver. 11. Though. Greek, "He demolished all their borders, and cut down their groves."

Ver. 13. Called. Gr. "Worshipped by all nations, and that all their tongues and tribes might call him god." H.—Behold to what lengths ambition may be carried. If he had only claimed a place among the other pagan deities, his title was as good as theirs. C.—He is a figure of Antichrist; for whom all heretics pave the way. 2 Thes. 2. W.

Ver. 14. Apamea, on the river Orontes, between which and the river Eleutherus, lay the Mesopotamia here mentioned.—Idumeans, or to "Rama," near Gabaa, which was on the north of Jerusalem; whereas Idumea lay far to the south. C.—Yet (H.) Gabaa may designate a mountainous country, as 1 K. 7:1. (M.) and there is no reason why Idumea might not have felt the power of Holofernes, as well as Madian, &c. H.—The order of conquests is not observed, (M.) for while the commander-in-chief was in one place, his generals were dispersed into different parts. He had now advanced as far as Gabaa of Saul, (H.) when meditating a serious attack upon Egypt, he thought proper to concentrate his forces; little expecting to meet with such a check at Bethulia. C.—Gr. “He came to Esdrelon, near Dotaia, (or Dothaim, north of Sichem) which is opposite the great saw of Judea,” or the range of mountains of Ephraim. C.—Old Vulg. “of Juda,” dividing it from Idumea. The kings of Israel had fortified the defiles. 3 K. 15:17.

Ver. 15. Took. Gr. “encamped between Gaba and Scythopolis, (Bethsan. Jos. 17:11) and he was there a month of days, to collect all the burden of his army.”

Ver. 1. Juda, whither those had retreated who had escaped the fury of the Assyrians, under Theglathphalassar, &c. H.

Ver. 2. Temples. Surrendering would not secure these things; so that their very life and religion were at stake. Resistance, in other circumstances, would have been rashness. C.—Gr. adds, “because they were recently come up from captivity, and lately all the people had been collected out of Judea, and the vessels, and the altar, and the house, had been purified from profanation,” (H.) to which they had been exposed under Manasses, (C. 5:23. C.) who with several of his subjects had been made prisoner, and was now at Babylon; or, if returned, (H.) was wholly taken up with the concerns of his soul, and committed the care of affairs to Eliachim. See Joseph. x. 4. 2 Par. 33:12. 16. C.

Ver. 3. Samaria, though an enemy’s country, as the danger was common. M.—Ezechias and Josias seemed to claim a right over the country. 2 Par. 30:1. &c. 34:6 and 33.

Ver. 4. War. Gr. adds, “as the harvest was just ended.”

Ver. 5. Priest. Gr. “the great priest in Jerusalem, in those days, wrote to the inhabitants of Betouloua, (H. Bethulia, in the tribe of Simeon) and of Betemestham, (Bethsames. C.) which is over-against Esdrelon, and the plain near Dothaim, giving orders to seize the mountainous ascents, by which there was a passage into Judea; and it was easy to stop their progress, as the passage was narrow, and would not admit above two men at once." This reminds us of the heroic resistance which Leonidas, with his 300 Spartans, made to the millions in the army of Xerxes, at Thermopylæ. H.—It seems that Jews attempted to defend these defiles. They had received the orders before the enemy encamped near Scythopolis.

Ver. 6. Them. Gr. adds, "and the senate of all the people of Israel, which sat at Jerusalem." Serarius thinks that Manasses was busy fortifying the city, and had committed the rest of the kingdom to Eliachim, (M. W.) who received such high commendations. Isai. 22:20. C.—But is more probable that he was at Babylon. Houbigant.

Ver. 7. Wives. Gr. adds, "and their little ones, and beasts, and every sojourner, and hired servant and slave. They put sackcloth on their loins, and every man, woman, and child, and the inhabitants of Jerusalem, fell prostrate before the temple, and sprinkled ashes on their heads." The very beasts were covered with sackcloth, to denote the general sorrow. H.

Ver. 8. Priests. Gr. "and they spread their sackclothes before the Lord, and arrayed the altar with sackcloth." H.—This spectacle must have made impression on the most obdurate. C.

Ver. 9. Off. Lit. "divided" from their husbands, (H.) or among the victors. M.—Gentiles. Gr. adds, "and God heard their petition, and rescued them from their affliction; and all the people fasted many days in all Judea and Jerusalem, before the sanctuary of the Lord all mighty; and the high priest, Joachim, and all the priests who stood before the Lord, and ministered to the Lord, having their loins girded with sackcloth, offered the accustomed holocaust and the vows and presents of the people, and ashes were upon their caps, and they cried to the Lord with all their power, to look down graciously upon all the house of Jerusalem. And," C. 5.

Ver. 10. Israel, before the approach of the enemy. H. v. 5.

Ver. 15. Clothes, conformably to the advice of Joel, 1:13. C.

JUDITH 5

Ver. 1. Mountains. Gr. adds, "and had fortified every summit of a high mountain, and had placed scandals in the plains," obstructing the passage (H.) with ditches, trees, (C.) and snares of every description.

H.

Ver. 2. Ammon. Gr. adds, “and the satraps of the maritime country,” (H.) the Philistines, who had submitted like the rest.

Ver. 3. Them. Gr. adds, “Ye sons of Chanaan tell.” He was not acquainted with their origin: the title belonged only to the Phœnicians, (C.) who might also be present. H.

Ver. 4. East. Gr. “west,” which seems more accurate, unless Holofernes was on the sea-coast, (C.) or that part of the country went by this name, as it does at present. H.—He was not absolutely unacquainted with the Jews, but spoke in contempt, (v. 27. W. M.) and wished to know if they had formed a league with the Egyptians, &c. C.

Ver. 5. My. Gr. “the mouth of thy slave.” H.

Ver. 6. Chaldeans. Abraham was a native of Ur. Gen. 12. C.—This tended to conciliate the favour of the general, who as of the same country. M.

Ver. 9. Heaven. Gr. adds, “the God whom they had known, and they (the Chaldean idolaters) cast them out from the face of the gods, and they fled into Mesopotamia, and dwelt there many days: (H. that is, about two years. C.) and their God commanded them to leave their abode, and to go into the land of Chanaan; and they dwelt there, and were enriched; ... and when,” &c.—There. Gr. “and where there till they returned; and there they became innumerable.” H.

Ver. 10. Oppressed. Gr. “craftily inveigled them.” Ex. 1:10.

Ver. 11. Plague. Gr. adds, “for which there was no remedy. And the Egyptians cast them out from among them. And God dried up the Red Sea before them, and conducted them to Mount Sinai and Cades-Barne, and cast out all the inhabitants of the desert; and they dwelt in the land of the Amorrhites, and exterminated all the Hesebon, by their power. Then crossing the Jordan, they took as their inheritance all the mountainous parts, and ejected the Chanaanite, Pherezite, Jebusite, Sichem, and all the Gergesites, and dwelt therein many days. And,” v. 21. H.—The environs of Sichem belonged to the Hevites. C.

Ver. 14. Rested. This is attested, Deut. 32:10 and Jer. 2:6. M.

Ver. 16. Overcame, in the days of Josue, (M.) at Jericho, &c. H.

Ver. 22. Battles. He seems to speak of the captivity of Manasses, (W.) of the ten tribes, and of the loss sustained by Achaz. 2 Par. 28:5. M.—

By many. Gr. “exceedingly; and they were led captive into a land which was not their own, and the temple of their God became as a pavement, and their cities were taken by the enemies. But now, returning to their God, they are come up from the places to which they had been scattered, and have possession of Jerusalem, where is their sanctuary; and they have inhabited the mountainous country, for it was a desert.” H.—Our adversaries would infer from this, and similar passages, that the siege of Bethulia could not have taken place till after the captivity of Babylon; and this many Catholics allow. But the proof is not conclusive, as all this might be verified under Manasses: (C.) “the temple was trampled on,” (Syr. εγεννηθη εις εδαφος) and profaned. See C. 4:2 and 1 Mac. 3:51 and Luke 21:24. It had been pillaged by Sesac and the Assyrians, and had stood in need of great repairs under Ezechias, Josias, &c. Several of the Israelites had escaped from the hands of their oppressors, (2 Par. 34:9) and the Jews had regained their strength after the captivity of Manasses, (C.) having retired before into their strong holds in the deserts. H.

Ver. 25. Cannot. Gr. “let my lord indeed pass by, lest their Lord should cover them with a shield, for their God is for them, and we,” &c.

Ver. 26. All the. Gr. “all the people round the tent murmured; and the great men of Holofernes, and all who dwelt in the maritime country, and in Moab, threatened to cut him to pieces. For we shall not fear the children of Israel. Lo! a people without power, strength, or army in battle array! We shall then go up, and they shall be for food to all thy army, lord Holofernes. And,” C. 6.

Ver. 27. Who. They speak thus through indignation, though they knew Achior well enough. W.—Their blasphemous presumption was soon punished. M.

Ver. 29. Other. This foolish attempt was not peculiar to this king. The great Nabuchodonosor was infected with the same vanity, (Dan. 6:7) and was imitated by many of the Persian monarchs, and by Alexander. Persas non piè tantum sed etiam prudenter Reges suos inter deos colere: Majestatem enim imperii salutis esse tutelam. Curtius viii. Yet most of the Greeks could not brook such flattery, though they were not influenced by religion, but by reason, and their own haughty temper. See Justin vi. Mart. x. 62.

Ver. 1. Achior. Gr. adds, “before all the populace of the strangers.” And who art thou, Achior, before all this company of foreigners, and the sons of Moab? and what are the mercenaries of Ephraim, that thou? v. 2.

Ver. 2. To shew. Gr. “and who is God but Nabuchodonosor? He will,” &c. H.—They allow the title to none but their king. Neither will God admit of any rival. W.—The generous advice of Achior was highly resented. Charidemus, who spoke with the like boldness to Darius, when Alexander approached, was even put to death, though the king repented when it was too late. Curt. iii. Diod. xiv.

Ver. 6. People. Gr. “my slaves shall station thee on the mountainous country, and in one of the cities on the ascents, (of which thou hast so much spoken) and thou shalt not perish till thou perish with them. But if thou believest in thy heart that they will not be taken, let not thy countenance fall. I have spoken, and nothing that I have said shall be without effect.”

Ver. 7. Bethulia. Travellers, depending on the uncertain traditions of the country, generally place this fortress in the tribe of Zebulun, about three miles west of Tiberias. See Brochard. &c. But S. Jerom places it near Egypt; (Vita Hil.) and the Scripture speaks of Bethul, in the tribe of Simeon, (Jos. 19:4) to which Judith and the ancients belonged. Holofernes left his camp near Scythopolis, (C. 7:1) when he proceeded (C.) to attack the southern countries. H.

Ver. 11. And. Gr. adds, “Chabris, the son of Othoniel, and Charmis, the son of Melchiel.” M.—The former is, in effect, mentioned C. 8:9. C.

Ver. 15. Pride. God will not fail to reward those who trust in him, (H.) and to humble the presumptuous. W.—Saints. Syr. “sanctuary.” This version and the Greek have only, “Look upon the face of the persons (or things) sanctified unto thee on this day. And they consoled Achior, and praised him greatly. And Ozias took him from the assembly to his own house, and made a feast (lit. drinking) for the ancients, and they invoked the God of Israel to assist them during all that night.” H.

Ver. 18. With us, observing the true religion. M.

Ver. 20. Over. The Jews eat nothing before night, and then no abstinence is prescribed, (C.) as the fast is at an end. H.

Ver. 21. The church. That is, the synagogue or place where they met in prayer. Ch.—For such places were established, particularly after the captivity, though some have denied that there were any synagogues, even in the days of the Machabees. See Mat. 4:23. Est. 4:16. C.

JUDITH 7

Ver. 2. Twenty. Gr. seventy; Syr. sixty-two. C.—Two, &c. Gr. twelve, as above. C. 2:7. M.—Syr. twenty-two. Some of these texts must be inaccurate. C.—Yet the cavalry of Holofernes (H.) might be increased, since he began the war.—Taken. Syr. “servants, and those who had joined them in great numbers.”

Ver. 3. Hill side, on the coast of the Mediterranean, leaving the mountains of Ephraim, (C.) which were so strait, (H.) on the left, as well as Jerusalem, as he intended to go into Egypt. Bethulia alone opposed his progress. C. 6:7.

Ver. 4. Of them. Gr. adds, “were greatly afraid, and each one said to his neighbour: Now these will consume (Complut. shut up) the face of the earth, and neither the high mountains, nor the vales, nor the hills, will bear their weight. Then taking their arms, and lighting fires upon their towers, they kept guard all that night: but the second day, Holofernes brought out all his cavalry against the Israelites, in Bethulia, and he reconnoitred the ascent of thier city, and came to the fountains of their waters, and took them; and leaving a guard of soldiers, he returned to his men,” &c. v. 8. H.—The Syr. is also silent about the aqueduct and the small springs. C.—The servants of God first humble themselves, and then take arms, confiding in God. W.

Ver. 6. An aqueduct: the fountain must therefore have been on a higher ground than the city, though the latter was on an eminence. C.—Yet water may be forced to ascend by pipes. H.

Ver. 8. Children of. Gr. and Syr. “the chiefs of the sons of Esau,” as Idumea had been conquered. C. 3:14. They omit Ammon, and after Moab subjoin “the generals of the maritime countries;” Tyrians and Philistines. H.

Ver. 10. Spring. Gr. and Syr. intimate that the Ammonites and Moabites, with 5,000 Assyrian infantry, guarded the springs: the rest of the army, according to the old Vulg. was stationed in the plain. Gr. and Syr. specify over-against Dothaim, which seems too remote; (C.) though such an immense army might cover a great part of the country, as all would not be necessary to besiege Bethulia; and it was agreed only to blockade the place, in order that no men might be lost, and the army might be ready to march against the more distant and powerful nations of Egypt. Another detachment was (H.) “southward, at Ecrebel, (Syr. Ekarbat, probably Akrabim, the ascent of the scorpions) near Cush, (or Arabia) which is above the torrent Mochmur, (Syr. Peor, or Bezor. C.) and the rest of the army of the Assyrians encamped in the plain, and covered the face of the earth.” H.

Ver. 11. Days. Gr. “and all the collection of the Assyrians continued round them ... thirty-four days.” H.—Old Vulg. “twenty-four days.” Syr. “two months and four days.”—Measure. Gr. adds, “the infants, women, and young men fainted, and fell down dead.” H.

Ver. 13. Hands. We shall be treated as miserable slaves. C.

Ver. 15. Assemble. Gr. “call them, and give up all the city to plunder to the,” &c.

Ver. 17. Conjuring. Gr. “and the sins of our parents, that he may not treat us thus to-day,” and deliver us up to death. H.

Ver. 18. Saying. Gr. “And Ozias said to them: Take courage, brethren,” v. 23. H.

Ver. 23. Five. Sulpitius reads, fifteen. C.—But instead of decim, we should read demum. H.

Ver. 25. Spoken. Gr. and Syr. add, “and he dispersed the people to their tents, and they went upon the walls and towers of the city, and sent their wives and children home. And they were under great humiliation in the city.”

JUDITH 8

Ver. 1. Idox. Gr. “ox,” &c. All the versions disagree, as the copyists have probably taken in part of v. 3 too soon, supposing that the genealogy of women was never given. S. Fulgentius (ep. ad Gallam) differs from all, giving the ancestors of Manasses as the same with those of Judith. C.—Simeon, the son of Ruben. In the Greek it is, the son of Israel. For Simeon, the patriarch, from whom Judith descended, was not the son, but the brother of Ruben. It seems more probable, that the Simeon and the Ruben here mentioned are not the patriarchs, but two of the descendants of the patriarch Simeon: and that the genealogy of Judith, recorded in this place, is not carried up so high as the patriarchs. No more than that of Elcana, the father of Samuel, (1 K. 1:1) and that of king Saul. 1 K. 9:1. Ch.—Others think that Judith descended from Ruben, by her father, and from Simeon, by her mother; (E.) or that, instead of son of Ruben, we should read “brother.” But as we know that Judith calls Simeon her father, (C. 9:2) it is more likely that Ruben has been placed for Israel, as it is in Syr. S. Fulg. &c. This correction is maintained by Bellarmine, Salien, M. C.—Thus both Judith and her husband were of the same tribe, the former by Salathiel, the latter by Sarisadai. C.—Innumerable are the mistakes in the proper names, in Scripture. H.—Some of these might have had more than one. Gr. has Sarasdai, (Compl. “Saladai;” Alex. Sept. “Salasadai.”) instead of Simeon, son of Israel: (C.) Alex. “Jeél,” which is probably a contraction for Israel. H.

Ver. 2. Who. Gr. adds, “of her tribe and family, and he died in the days,” &c.

Ver. 3. Died. Gr. “fell upon his couch; (Grabe adds, “an died in Betuloua, his own city,”) and they buried him with his fathers, in the field between Dothaim and Balamo.” H.—These places seem to be added without reason, as they were too remote from Bethulia. C.

Ver. 4–5. Six. So the old Vulg. Gr. and Syr. have, four months.—Private. Gr. “a tent on the roof,” that she might look towards Jerusalem, and pray with less distraction. Absalom lay in such a situation. 2 K. 16:22. C.—In which. Gr. “and she put sackcloth,” &c. v. 6. H.—It was a rough sort of garment. C.—Judith led a most religious life, in prayer, hair-cloth, and fasting, all the year, except on the festivals. W.

Ver. 6. Loins. Gr. “and she had on the garments of her widowhood, and.” H.—She laid these aside. C. 10:2. C.—Life. Gr. “widowhood, except the day before the sabbath, and the sabbaths, and the new moons, and feasts, and days of rejoicing of the house of Israel.” H.—Syr. and old Vulg. omit, “the day before the sabbath;” and perhaps it may not have been in the original, the Greek translator having inserted it conformably to the practice of his times. It was then prescribed to abstain from fasting, that the joy of the festival might not be impaired, (Grot.) and because it would be necessary to taste what was made ready for the sabbath; (Skikard, Purim) or rather because, as the festival began on Friday, between the two vespers, or from three to six in the afternoon, during the equinoxes, the fast could not be rigorously observed on Friday. C.—New moons were days of rejoicing. M. 1 K. 20:5.—The Jews kept two days together, for fear of missing the day on which the moon really appeared. Several feasts were also prescribed perhaps before this time, on the 1st and 22nd of Nisan, &c.

Ver. 7. Of oxen. Gr. Syr. &c. add, “and fields, and she lived on them.”

Ver. 8. Her. “The reputation of chastity in women is tender, and, like a beautiful flower, presently withers at the least blast, and perishes; particularly when they are at an age prone to vice, and destitute of the authority of a husband, whose shadow is the safeguard to a wife.” S. Jer. ad Salvinam.—The Scripture could not give Judith a greater character. C.—How few can obtain it at present, though their virtue may be most pure, detraction is so keen! H.

Ver. 9. When. Gr. and Syr. “and she heard of the evil discourses of the populace against the magistrate, as they lost courage on account of the scarcity of water; and Judith heard of all the words of Ozias to them, how he had sworn to them that he would deliver up the city to the Assyrians after five days. Then sending her maid, whom she had placed at the head of all her possessions, she called Ozias,” &c. The following verses give the same sense as the Vulg. though in other words, and with some additional circumstances. H.

Ver. 13. Pleasure. She blames the magistrates for taking a rash oath, pretending to fathom the designs of God, and to fix a time for him, and not attempting to make any resistance, though the welfare of the whole nation, and the sacred things, depended on their exertions. C.—They had been assured that God had heard their prayer, (C. 4:9) and had often witnessed a miraculous interference of Providence. In other circumstances (H.) the magistrates would not have been to blame, though Judith might think them so; (Serarius. See v. 26. M.) and, in effect, they ought rather to have died than thus to have exposed all to certain ruin. W.

Ver. 15. Man. Gr. “But do not you govern the designs of the Lord, our God, for God is not to be menaced like a man, nor forced to give an account like the son of man.” H. Num. 23:19.

Ver. 18. For. Gr. “As there has not arisen in our families generations, nor is there at this day either tribe, or family, or populace, or city among us, adoring gods made with hands, as it happened in days past;” in the former part of the reign of Manasses. All had begun to open their eyes, at the sight of the dreadful catastrophe. H.

Ver. 20. Let. Gr. “Wherefore we hope that he will not despise us, nor those of our race; nor, if we be taken, will Judea be so styled, our sacred things will be plundered. He will require his profanation at our mouth,” &c. She shews the dread consequences which will ensue from the rash oath, and from such dastardly conduct under trial. H.

Ver. 21. Brethren. Gr. adds, “Let us shew our brethren that their soul depends on us, and the holy things, and the house, (temple) and the altar, are supported by us.” These were not therefore demolished. C. 5:22. H.—“Yea, let us give thanks, above all, to the Lord our God, who tries us like our fathers. Remember,” &c.

Ver. 23. Jacob. Gr. adds, “in Mesopotamia ... because he does not take vengeance on us, as he made them pass through fire to examine their heart. But the Lord, for an admonition, chastises those who approach to him. And Ozias,” v. 28. H.

Ver. 25. Destroyer. As this word is not used elsewhere, (W.) S. Paul seems to allude to this passage, (1 Cor. 10:10) as Judith does to various punishments (Num. 11:1 and 14:12 and 20:4. C.) inflicted by an angel. M.

Ver. 26. Suffer, as if to shew our impatience (H.) and anger against God. M.

Ver. 28. Words. Gr. adds, “for it is not to-day only that thy wisdom has appeared, but from thy earliest days all the people has known thy prudence, as the formation (H. Syr. the thought. C.) of thy heart is good. But the people was much oppressed with thirst, and they forced us to ... take an oath, which we shall not break. Now,” &c. H.—It hence appears that Judith was not very young; and as many desired to marry her, (C. ult. Gr.) we may conclude that she was of a middle age, or about thirty-five. Houbigant.

Ver. 29. God. Gr. adds, “and the Lord will send rain to fill our reservoirs, and we shall faint no longer. And Judith replied: Hear me, and I will perform an action which shall come to the ears of all future generations of our race. You,” &c. v. 32. H.—She did not tell what she was going to do. C.

Ver. 32. Servant. Gr. abra, commonly (H.) denotes a maid of honour, (W.) or companion, though sometimes it is applied to people of loose morals. This servant had probably the administration of the affairs of her mistress, v. 9. C.—Pray. Gr. “as you ... the Lord will by my hand look,” &c.

Ver. 33. And till. Gr. “for I shall not tell you, till what I am about be accomplished. And Ozias, with the princes, said to her.”

Ver. 34. Departed. Gr. adds, “from the tent to their respective stations.”

JUDITH 9

Ver. 1. Oratory. Of such our Saviour speaks, Matt. 6.; and Baronius at large. A.D. 293. W.—Gr. “But Judith fell prostrate, and sprinkled ashes upon her head, (Syr. adds, and tore her tunic) and uncovered the sackcloth which she had on. That evening the incense had just been offered, in the house of the Lord, at Jerusalem. And Judith cried aloud,” &c.

Ver. 2. Gavest him a sword, &c. The justice of God is here praised, in punishing by the sword of Simeon the crime of the Schemites: and not the fact of Simeon, which was justly condemned by his father. Gen. 49:5. Though even with regard to this fact, we may distinguish between his zeal against the crime committed by the ravishers of his sister, which zeal may be considered just: and the manner of his punishing that crime, which was irregular and excessive. Ch.—The former is here commended. W. M.—Yet Simeon was not blameless. God put the sword into his hand as he makes use of tyrants; in which sense Nabuchodonosor is styled his servant. Jer. 25:9. Ezech. 29:18. Gen. 24:2. 25.

Ver. 3. And. Gr. “For thou didst say: It shall not be so: and they did it because thou hadst given their princes unto slaughter, and their bed, which had perceived their deceit, unto blood; and thou didst slay the slaves with the princes, and the princes on their thrones; and thou gavest,” &c. H.—This style seems rather poetical. Grot. C.

Ver. 4. Of old. Gr. “before these, and these, and what followed, and is at present, and things to come, thou hast foreseen.” All events depend on Thee. “For the things which thou hadst decreed were at hand, and said: Behold, we are here.” H.

Ver. 5. Judgments. All is foreseen: nothing can resist the decrees of God. C.

Ver. 6. As. Gr. speaks not of the Egyptians: “For behold the Assyrians are multiplied in their power, and exalted on account of their cavalry; they have boasted on the strong arm of the infantry, have trusted in their shield, and bow, and sling; and they have not known that thou art the Lord, making an end of wars: Thy name is Lord; break their force, by thy power,” &c. v. 11. H.

Ver. 7. Them, as they were not able to come to action during the night. Ex. 14.

Ver. 13. Lips, or with my endearing speeches. M.—She meant innocently to engage the affections of Holofernes, (H.) and prays that he may receive her in that manner, as he might have done without sin. But when he abused his free-will, God turned his sin to the good of others. See Ex. 7. S. Aug. ser. 288. W.—Gr. “Give that power which I have devised to the hand of me, a widow. Strike the slave by the lips of my delusion, (or by my ensnaring words) with the prince; and the chief, with his minister, break their haughtiness by the hand of a female, v. 15. H.—This prayer seems contrary to sound morality, as well as the indiscreet conduct of Judith, in exposing herself to danger, though her intention was good. C.—But are not stratagems lawful in war? See 2 K. 15. Is it sinful for a woman to endeavour to captivate the heart? The situation might be dangerous, but it was not criminal; and Judith was certainly determined to yield to no dishonest proposals. God therefore approved of her designs, and enhanced her beauty. C. 10:4. H.

Ver. 16. Horses. Gr. “the potent, but thou art the Lord of the humble.”

Ver. 17. And. Gr. “give my word and deceit to be a wound and a scar to them, who, against thy covenant and sanctified house, and the summit of Sion, ... have devised cruel things, and do for all thy nation according to thy power and strength; for there is no other to shield Israel but Thou.”

JUDITH 10

Ver. 2. House. Gr. adds, “where she spent the sabbath and festival days, she rolled up her,” &c. H.—She remained in her oratory therefore only on other days. C.

Ver. 3. Body. Compl. Gr. “mouth.” But other editions seem more accurate. H.—Best. Gr. “thick,” probably the myrobalanum of Pliny xii. 21. and xiii. 1.—Bonnet, or mitre, tied with ribbands, hanging down behind, like those of bishops.—Sandals, highly ornamented, and worn by people of quality. C.—Lilies, pendent from the neck. Grot.

Ver. 4. And. Gr. “and she was richly adorned, so that she might captivate (literally, deceive) the eyes of whatever men should behold her. And,” v. 5. H.—The fathers highly extol her virtue, and shew was, no doubt, actuated by the purest motives. Yet she might be guilty of some indiscretion. Even the working of miracles would not prove the contrary, as wicked priests may confer the sacraments; and Moses was reprehensible the moment (C.) before (H.) he wrought a miracle. Num. 20:10. Mat. 7:22. God inspired her with the laudable design of freeing her country, but the means were left to her own choice. C.—The making use of this rich attire was not, however, sinful in itself; and we have no right to suspect that Judith gave any way either to vanity or to sensuality. How many ladies of quality are dressed so as to enchant all those who are not upon their guard! Yet, provided they observe due modesty, who will blame their rich attire or perfumes? H.—Judith might lawfully desire to marry Holofernes for the good of her nation, (M.) as Esther became the wife of Assuerus, though an infidel. The general seemed even willing to become a convert. C. 11:21. H.

Ver. 5. Bottle; made of leather, (C.) used for carrying wine. Pollox. M.—Corn. It was eaten either steeped in water or mixed with oil.—Cheese. So the Syr. reads. Gr. “pure loaves.” C.—Why she took her provisions with her, she explains. C. 12:2. M.

Ver. 7. Her. Gr. adds, “with her countenance and robes changed.”

Ver. 8. But. Gr. “And they said to her, May God, the God of.”—With. Gr. “For the glory of the Israelites, and the exaltation of Jerusalem; and they adored God. And she said to them, Order the gate of the city to be opened for me, and I will go out to accomplish what you were talking about to me. And they commanded the young men to open for her; and they did so. But Judith and her maid went out. And the citizens looked at her while she descended the hill, till she had passed the valley, when they lost sight of her; and they passed along straight through the vale, and the advanced guard of,” &c. H.—It appears that there was still day-light, (C.) or the moon shone brightly. H.

Ver. 12. Because I knew, &c. In this and the following chapter, some things are related to have been said by Judith, which seem hard to reconcile with truth. But all that is related in Scripture of the servants of God, is not approved by the Scripture: and even the saints in their enterprizes may sometimes slip into venial sins. Ch.—By means of mental reservation, we may exculpate her from lying. Serar. M.—But this expedient is bad and childish. H.—She might speak ironically, (Carthus.) or prophetically. Raban. Glossa, &c.—Still it might be an untruth, (C.) to be excused, like stratagems in war. M.—How often does an enemy give out that he is going to march to some place, when he intends to go quite another way! H.—I knew. Gr. “Because they are about to be given up a prey to you. Therefore, I come to Holofernes, general in chief of your army, to inform him of the truth, and to shew," &c. H.—She spoke many things certainly true, and others which would probably have taken place, if God had not sent relief. W.

Ver. 15. Lord. Gr. adds, "and now proceed to his tent, and some of us shall give thee into his hands. But if thou stand before him, let not thy heart fear, but tell him this, and he will treat thee well. And they selected 100 men, and surrounded her and her servant-maid, and conducted her to the tent of Holofernes. And they ran from all parts of the camp, as soon as her coming was made known, and they came round her as she stood without the tent of Holofernes, till they had told him of her. And they were astonished at her beauty, and at the Israelites, and said to each other, Who," &c. v. 18.

Ver. 18. That we. Gr. "For it is not expedient to leave one man of them alive, lest they should delude all the earth." (Old Vulg. omits the negation.) "And all who slept near Holofernes, and all his servants, came out and introduced her into the tent;" (H. which was divided into two apartments. Heraclides) "and Holofernes was reposing on a bed in the canopy, (or inner room) which," &c. H.—The curtain was intended to keep off gnats. M. Anthony imitated this delicacy.

*Interque signa (turpe!) militaria,
Sol aspicit conopæum.* Hor. epod. ix. C.

Ver. 20. After. Gr. "And they told him of her, and he came out to the forepart of the tent, and silver lamps preceded him, (H.) either for grandeur, as they did the kings of Persia and the emperors of Rome and of the Turks, or because it was still dark." C.—"But as soon as Judith came in sight of him and of his ministers, they all were astonished at the beauty of her face; and falling prostrate, she adored him, (with civil respect) and his servants lifted her up." H.—S. Fulgentius (ep. 2.) judges, with great probability, that Judith was now about 40 years old.

JUDITH 11

Ver. 1. King. Gr. adds, "of all the earth."

Ver. 3. Why. Gr. "And art come to us? For thou art come for thy own safety. Take courage, for thou shalt live this night and henceforth, as no one shall hurt thee, but shall do thee good, as the servants of my lord, Nabuchodonosor, the king, are treated."

Ver. 4. Handmaid. Gr. adds, “and I will tell no untruth to my lord this night, for,” &c.—Thing. Gr. adds, “and none of the projects of my lord shall fail.” H.—All that Judith said was true in her sense, though the enemy did not understand her properly. So Josue lawfully entrapped the citizens of Hai. S. Aug. q. 10. in Jos. 8. W.

Ver. 5. Liveth. She imitates Joseph, (Gen. 42:15) and Eliseus; (4 K. 2:4) and speaks the truth, as the general had subjected many to his master. M.—Her speech was not superstitious, but shewed a civil respect. C.

Ver. 7. To him. Gr. intimates that she advised him to follow his counsel. “For our nation is not punished with the sword, unless they sin against their God. But now let not my lord be at a loss what to do. For death has fallen upon them, and sin has taken possession of them, so that they have irritated God by their folly,” &c. v. 10. This might also be true, though they had not fallen into idolatry (C. 8:18. H.) at Bethulia. M.

Ver. 8. Prophets. Though this had been threatened by the ancient prophets, (H.) we cannot pretend to specify which she means. C.

Ver. 10. Famine. They might have provisions, but they would be useless, on account of excessive thirst. M.

Ver. 11. Drink. Gr. “and all that God had forbidden them to eat by his laws, (H.) without making any distinction between the clean and unclean. Grot.—Blood was prohibited even before the law. Gen. 9:4. Lev. 17:14. C.

Ver. 12. Oil. Gr. may explain this. “And the first-fruits of corn, and the tithes of wine and of oil, which they had reserved as sacred for the priests, standing in Jerusalem, before our God, they had decreed to consume; though none of the people ought so much as to touch these things. Yet they have sent to obtain permission of the senate at Jerusalem, where the people have done the like. And when they shall have obtained an answer, they will fall to work, and then they will be abandoned to be destroyed by thee.” H.—She insinuates that her countrymen are in the utmost distress, and not much attached to religion; (C.) though in extreme want the distinction of meats is not to be enforced. H.

Ver. 13. Tell. Gr. “To perform with thee a feat which will astonish all who shall hear of these things. For thy handmaid is religious, and serveth the God of heaven day and night; and now my lord, I am,” &c.

Ver. 14. God. Gr. adds, “in the night, in the valley.”

Ver. 15. He will. Gr. "They shall have completed their sins."—Tell thee. Gr. adds, "and thou shalt go out with all thy forces, and none of them shall resist thee; and I will bring thee through Judea, over-against Jerusalem, and will place thy throne in the midst of it, and thou shalt drive them like sheep," &c.—Dog. This is proverbial. Ex. 11:7. C.—All Israel was at rest after the death of Holofernes. Judith brought his head in triumph through the country. The promise of dominion (H.) was ironical. 3 K. 22:15. M.

Ver. 16. God. Gr. "My foreknowledge; and I was sent to inform thee." H.—She flatters Holofernes with the idea that he is under the special care of heaven. C.

Ver. 20. That. Gr. "To increase our strength, and to bring destruction on those who have despised my lord."

Ver. 21. Because. Gr. "And now thou art comely in thy appearance, and good in thy discourse. If then thou perform what thou hast spoken, thy God shall," &c. H.—It is hardly probable that he spoke in earnest. Perhaps he did not know that the true God allowed of no other. Being captivated with Judith's beauty, and perceiving that she was attached to religion, he had a mind to remove all her objections to his person. C.

JUDITH 12

Ver. 1. And bade. Gr. "and ordered a bed (or table) to be prepared for her, to eat of his own meat, and drink of his wine," (H.) that her beauty might be enhanced, (Dan. 1) and to honour her. M.

Ver. 2. Upon me, as these meats had been offered to idols; (W.) or she might fear they had, and wished to avoid all scandal. 2 Mac. 6:21. Tob. 1:12. C.

Ver. 3. Thee. Gr. adds, "for there is none of thy race."

Ver. 4. Which I. Gr. "he."—Which. Gr. "and she slept till midnight and she arose at the morning watch." H.—The mode of counting by hours prevailed after the captivity. C.

Ver. 5. And. Gr. "and she sent to Holofernes, saying: May my lord please to order that thy handmaid may go out to pray. And," &c. v. 6. H.—She had prepared him to grant this request before: but out of civility, and that he may have greater confidence in her, she asks again. The choice of a retired place for prayer is very commendable, but she made choice of the fields, that she might go out of the camp afterwards without being suspected. C.

Ver. 6. Chamberlains. Gr. "life-guards, not to hinder her; and she remained in the camp three days." H.

Ver. 7. Water. Gr. "in the camp;" perhaps she washed only her hands and face. C.

Ver. 9. Pure, from forbidden food. W.—Evening. Thus she continued to fast, to draw down the blessing of God. C.

Ver. 10. Servants. Gr. adds, "only, and he did not call any of those whom he usually employed," (H.) that they might not witness his excesses. Vagao, or Bagoas, the Persian name for an "eunuch," or chief officer; though such were generally to wait on the ladies.

Quem penes est Dominam servandi cura Bagoæ. Ovid, Amor. ii.

—Eunuch. Gr. and Syr. add, "who was appointed over all his affairs. Persuade the Hebrew woman who is with thee to come to us, and to eat and drink with us. For we deem it shameful to dismiss such a woman, without having commerce with her; and if we do not attract her, she will deride us."

Ver. 12. Merry. This would pave the way for greater liberties. C.—Gr. adds, "and to become this day as a daughter of the Assyrians, standing to wait in the house of Nabuchodonosor." He probably alludes to those courtezans (C.) who sung at night, before the palace, &c. Athen. Dip. xii. 2. The Persians admitted women to their feasts, though they were generally excluded in the East. Est. 1:12. Herod. v. 18.

Ver. 14. Best. Gr. "a boast, or matter of exultation." H.—This answer seems to shock our delicacy. Did she not understand the meaning of the eunuch, which was sufficiently plain? She only passed a compliment, which always implies a tacit condition, if the thing be practicable and honest: as the words might have two meanings, she was bound in charity to interpret them in the best sense. C.—It was surely lawful to be merry. M.

Ver. 15. Garments. Gr. adds, "and all her female ornaments; and her servant came and spread on the ground, before Holofernes, the fleeces which she had received from Bagoas, for her daily use, to eat lying upon them. And coming in, Judith fell prostrate." H.—The custom of sitting on the ground, upon skins, to eat, is very ancient, (Targum, Est. 1.) and is still observed by the Turks. The kings of Persia let none eat with them at the same table. Heraclides. Athen. v. 10.—The character of drunkenness, with which this nation has been branded, seems not unfounded. C.

Ver. 16. Her. Gr. adds, “company; and he had sought an opportunity of deluding her, from the day when he first beheld her.” He justly, therefore, fell into the snare which he had laid.

Ver. 20. Life. Gr. adds, “in any one day,” (H.) at supper. M.

JUDITH 13

Ver. 1. Doors. Gr. adds, “without,” yet so that Judith could open them. C.

Ver. 4. Drunk. Gr. “drowned in wine.”

Ver. 5. The. Gr. “her chamber.”—Watch. Gr. adds, “her coming out, as on other days; for she had said she would go out to pray, and she had told this to Bagoas. And all had departed,” &c. All these precautions were necessary. H.

Ver. 6. Judith. She seems not to have disclosed her secret even to her companion, taking the whole upon herself.—Lips. Gr. “in her heart.” C.—Yet the Jews generally use some words, (H.) thinking that prayer too cold, which is barely mental. Grotius.

Ver. 7. Raise up. If Bethulia had been taken, perhaps (H.) Jerusalem had also fallen. W.

Ver. 8. Pillar. Gr. κανονι, “the rule,” (C.) or pole on which the arms were hung. Hesychius.—Sword, (acinace) used by the Persians, (M.) and shorter than the Greek or Roman sword. C.—If she had not been inspired by God to act thus, like Aod, (Judg. 3) it would be difficult to excuse her, in thus hurrying a many, in the most wretched state, before the judgment-seat of God. H.

Ver. 10. Canopy, to convince all that it was the head of Holofernes. M.—Body, on the ground; (C. 14:14) perhaps to cut off the head more easily, (C.) and that it might appear more ghastly H. at the first entrance. T.

Ver. 11. While, having composed herself, (H.) and done every thing necessary to prevent detection. M.

Ver. 13. Open. Gr. repeats, “open ye now the gate; God, our God is with us, still to shew power in Israel, and strength against the enemies, as he hath done to-day.” H.

Ver. 14. That. Gr. “they hastened to descend to the gate of their city, and called,” &c.

Ver. 15. Had now. Gr. “it was a paradox to them that she should come, and they opened the gate, and received them.”

Ver. 16. And she. Gr. “said to them with a loud voice: Praise God, praise, yea praise God, because he hath not withdrawn his mercy from the house of Israel, but hath destroyed our enemies by my hand this night.” H.

Ver. 19. Drunkenness. “The fasting of one woman overthrew an innumerable host of drunkards. S. Amb. de jej. ix. W.

Ver. 20. And abiding. Gr. “for my face has deluded him to his ruin, and he has not committed sin with me, for defilement and shame. And all the people were much amazed; and bowing down, they adored the Lord, and said, with one accord: Our God, thou art blessed, because this day thou hast brought the enemies of thy people to nought.” H.—Judith’s guardian angel defended her; as Jacob’s did him. Gen. 48. W.

Ver. 23. Prince, in that town, though Manasses was king. M.—Gr. “Ozias said.”

Ver. 25. Praise. Gr. “hope.”—For that. Gr. “and may God make these things turn to thy eternal exaltation, to regard thee for good; because thou hast not.”—Ruin. Gr. adds, “walking aright in,” &c. H.

Ver. 27. And. This is related after v. 5, in the following chapter, in Gr. Syr. and the old Vulg. (C.) and indeed it seems to be there in its proper place.—Head, or general. H.

Ver. 29. Fear. Astonished (M.) at the instability of human things, and admiring how God had rescued him from the threatened danger.

Ver. 30. Reverenced. Lit. “adored;” a word often used in this sense. H.

JUDITH 14

Ver. 1. Walls. Gr. adds, “upon the pinnacle.” H.

Ver. 2. Beneath. Into the valley; but make your appearance just out of the walls, as if you were rushing upon the enemy. Gr. adds after arms, “and you shall appoint a leader over them, as if descending into the plain to the advanced guard of the Assyrians; but ye shall not go down. Then these seizing all their armour, will go to the camp, and awaken the leaders of the Assyrians, and they will run to the tent of Holofernes, and shall not find him. Then fear shall seize upon them, and they will flee before us. Whereupon ye, and all who inhabit the confines of Israel, shall follow after, and strew them in their paths,” slain and wounded, v. 6. H.

Ver. 6. Then. Gr. &c. “But before ye do this, call to me Achior, the Ammonite, that seeing, he may recognize the contemner of the house of Israel, and the man who sent him away to us unto certain death. And they called Achior from the house of Ozias. But as soon as he came, and saw the head of Holofernes in the hand of one of the assembly of the people, he fell,” &c. as C. 13:29, 30. “Blessed art thou in every tent of Juda, and in every nation. All who shall hear thy name shall be amazed. But now tell me what thou hast done during these days. And Judith, in the midst of the people, informed him of all that she had performed, since the day of her departure till the time when she was speaking. She had no sooner ended her speech, than all the people set up a loud shout of joy in their city. Then,” &c.—Leaving. Gr. “He believed in God greatly, or with the utmost sincerity. H.—Hitherto Achior had only considered the Deity as the peculiar God of Israel, (C.) or as the common gods “revered by all nations;” (Virg. xii. Servius) but not as the only supreme Being. He now becomes a proselyte, not merely, like Naaman, to adore one God; but also to observe all the rites of the Jewish religion. The latter was a matter of choice. C. 6:18. It is not still clear that he could enjoy the privileges of the nation as a magistrate, or even marry, (C.) which shews his greater fervour. Grotius.—It is certain that no nation could be forbidden to worship God. Deut. 23:3. S. Thomas (1. 2. q. 105. a. 3.) believes that a dispensation was granted to Achior, (C.) so that he might be treated like an Israelite in all respects. Serar. q. 1. M.—The evinces that only the impenitent Ammonites, &c. were excluded from the Church. W.—With. Gr. “till this day.”

Ver. 7. With. Gr. “In companies, to the ascent of the mountain.”

Ver. 8. Ran. Gr. “Sent to their officers. But they went to the leaders and captains of thousands, and to every chief among them, and they proceeded to the tent of Holofernes, and said to his chief steward: Awaken now our lord, for the slaves have been so bold as to come down to offer us battle for their utter ruin. The Bagoas,” &c. v. 13. H.

Ver. 12. Mice. They speak contemptuously of their foes, like the Philistines. 1 K. 14:11. M.

Ver. 13. Into. Gr. “In, knocked at the hall, (αυλη, or antichamber) of the tent, for he suspected that he was sleeping with Judith. But as no one answered, he opened and went into the bed-chamber, and found him thrown upon the floor, dead, and his head taken from him, and he cried,” &c.—Curtain, which separated this apartment from the rest, (H.) and hung before the door, as Heraclides describes the tent of the Persian kings. Holofernes assumed the like importance, and was treated almost as a deity. C.—Hence he must not be awaked, in a rude manner. H.—Civility requires that we should knock modestly at the doors of the great. C.

Ver. 16. Said. Gr. “cried aloud, the slaves have prevaricated. One,” &c. H.—Perhaps he thought that Judith had introduced some of the Jews. C.

Ver. 18. Cry. Gr. adds, “and shouting of them (the captains) in,” &c. H.

JUDITH 15

Ver. 1. All. Gr. “Those who were in the tents heard, they were astonished at the fact; and fear and trembling fell upon them, and there was not a man remaining before his neighbour; but rushing out, with one accord, they fled through every path, in the plains and in the mountains; and those who were encamped in the high places around Bethulia, (H. the Moabites, &c. C. 7:8. C.) fled. Then every warrior of Israel rushed out upon them, and Ozias,” v. 5.

Ver. 5. Israel. Gr. adds, “informing them of what had been accomplished, and that all might pour upon the enemies, to cut them off. But when the Israelites heard this, they all, unanimously, fell upon them, as far as Chobai: (H. Hoba. C.) in like manner those from Jerusalem came up, and from all the mountainous country; for they also were informed of what had happened in the camp of their enemies; and the men of Galaad and of Galilee scattered them with great slaughter, till they had passed Damascus and its boundaries.” H.—As the enemy fled without a leader, we may easily imagine what carnage would ensue. C.

Ver. 7. The. Gr. “their spoils, and were greatly enriched.” H.—Mariana suggests that we should read honestati, which is used in this sense, (Eccli. 11:23) instead of onustati, loaded.

Ver. 8. They. Gr. “The Israelites, returning from the slaughter, took possession of the remainder, and the villages and cities, both in the mountains and champaign country, took many spoils; for these was great abundance. But Joachim,” &c.

Ver. 9. Came. Gr. adds, “and the senate of Israel, residing at Jerusalem, came.” This alludes to the sanhedrim. Grotius.—But, it seems, its institution was posterior to the captivity, and we may understand the principal men of the city, or of the priests. C.—To see. Gr. adds, “the good things (Compl. to confirm or lay a foundation for, the good things) which God had done to Israel, and to see Judith, and speak peace with her.” Prot. “to salute her.” H.—Joachim is the same with Eliacim; El being only prefixed. T.—He is the Sadoc II. or Odeas of Josephus; (Reinec.) and succeeded Sobna both in spiritual and temporal power. Isai. 22. Bellarmin.

Ver. 10. She. Gr. “They were gone into her apartment, they,” &c.—Art

the. Gr. adds, "great joy, and the great boast of our race; because thou hast done all these things with thy hand, thou hast procured the good of Israel, and God hath been pleased with them. Be thou blessed by the omnipotent Lord for ever." H.—Judith was a figure of the blessed Virgin, to whom these praises chiefly belong. Fulbert. W.

Ver. 11. Chastity, &c. This is not in Syr. &c. and though, generally speaking, celibacy was not esteemed honourable among the Jews, yet chastity was so much the more admired, as it was more uncommon. A widow was deserving of praise for not lightly entering upon a second marriage. C.—Those who abstain from it, were respected, like virgins, by the Romans. Val. Maxim. ii. 1.

Ver. 13. Thirty. Gr. "And the people plundered the camp thirty (Syr. three) days." The camp of the Assyrians was in various places, and the people waited a month before they began to divide the spoils among all, according to their laws. Num. 31:27 and 1 K. 30:24. C.

Ver. 14. But. Gr. "And they gave to Judith the tent of Holofernes, and all the silver plate, and beds and basins, and all his furniture, which she taking, place upon her mule, and put to her chariots, and heaped them thereon; and every woman of Israel ran to see her, and they blessed her, and danced in her honour. Then she took some thyrsus (H. or branches entwined with ivy, &c. C.) in her hands, and gave to those women who accompanied her; and they crowned with olive both her and her attendant; (maid, or Alex. Sept. "and she was crowned with olive, and her mule;" Grabe substitutes "female companions,") and she went before all the people, leading the dance of all the women; and every man of Israel followed in arms, with crowns, and with hymns in their mouth. Then," &c. C. 16. H.—The bearing of green branches, on such occasions, was very common. Lev. 23:40. 2 Mac. 10:7. Mat. 21:8. Hence Tacitus (Hist. v.) supposed that the Jews adored Bacchus. But there was nothing here of the immodesty, which generally attended the pagan festivals. We only find this instance of women being crowned with olive. But this tree was very proper, as it was used in rejoicings: Ramo felicitis olivæ; (Virg. vi.) on which Servius remarks, olivæ, arboris festæ. At certain races in Greece, women who gained the victory, were thus crowned; (Alex. Genial v. 8.) and it was used by the Roman cavalry on the ides of July, and in ovations. Pliny xv. 4.—The processions of the Church often admit of similar ornaments in honour of God, (T.) and to promote piety. H.

Ver. 1. Sung. Gr. "Gave out this confession, in all Israel: and all the people echoed this praise;" (H.) either repeating the whole after her, or singing the first verse as a chorus. Ex. 15:20. 1 K. 18:6. 1 Par. 16:8. C.—Saying. Gr. "And Judith said: Begin ye to my Lord." H.—It is time for us to break silence, and to sound forth the praises of God. C.

Ver. 3. Wars, or destroying armies. H.—God is often represented as a mighty warrior. Isai. 1:24. Jer. 2:20. Rom. 9:29. C.—This passage is quoted by S. Ephrem (ser. de 2. Adv.) as a part of Scripture. W.—Lord is. Gr. "For he has drawn me from the hands of my persecutors, into his camp, in the midst of the people." H.

Ver. 5. Mountains of Cilicia, and through the defiles of Libanus and Hermon, on the north of Palestine, by which road they were forced to come. The desert Arabia was impassable for a large army. C.—North, including to the east. H. Isai. 14:13. Jer. 1:13. Ezech. 1:4.—Torrents, drinking them up, as Sennacherib boasted; (4 K. 19:24) and the Greek assert the same of the army of Xerxes. Herod. vii. 108.

Epotaque flumina Medo Prandente. Juv x.

The Gr. seems to insinuate that the Assyrians "stopped up the springs," to distress the country, as Philopator did. C.—Valleys. Gr. "hills."

Ver. 6. To make. Gr. "that he would throw my children at the breast, on the pavement, and make," &c. H.

Ver. 7. Stuck. Lit. "hurt him, overturning all his projects, (C.) as the Greek (ηθετησεν) intimates. M.—Him. Gr. "them, by the hand of a woman: For," &c.

Ver. 8. Men; soldiers. C. 14:6. Gen. 14:24.—Titan. So the Sept. renders Raphaim. 2 K. 5:18. The Greek translator of this work seems to have read the poets, who pretend that the Titans attempted to take heaven by storm. C.—Neither such giants as those who lived before the flood, (Gen. 6) nor such as were seen after, (Num. 13. W.) attacked Holofernes. H.—Neither does the Vulgate give any authority to poetic fictions, but only adopts terms which are best understood. T. S. Jer. in Amos v. 8.

Ver. 9. And put. Gr. "for the exaltation of those who laboured in Israel."

Ver. 10. Crown. Gr. “mitre,” or ribband, ornamented with jewels. C. 10:3. Syr. “net-work.”—New. Gr. “linen stole,” which was a long robe, usually of linen, and worn both by men and women. C.—Deceived him; as he would make love to her, and thus give her an opportunity to perform what she had designed. H.—She was not actuated by the desire of being admired, but sought to deliver her people, v. 9. M.

Ver. 11. Sandals. The bandages which tied the shoe-soles (H.) to the feet, were most ornamental. Isai. 3. The city of Antylla was assigned to furnish sandals for the queens of Egypt. Herod. xii. 98. C.—With. Gr. “a sword (acinace) passed through his neck.”

Ver. 12. Medes. This is the first mention of these two nations, who afterwards became so famous. Nabuchodonosor had overcome Phraortes. C. 1. C.

Ver. 13. Then. Gr. “Than my lowly ones (H. she speaks thus contemptuously of the Assyrians. C.) howled, my weak ones cried out through fear; they raised their voice, and were overthrown.” H.—Others think that she is speaking of her fellow-citizens, (T.) or both. H.

Ver. 14. Damsels; young boys. Syr. “they run them through, as if they had been damsels.”—Children, or “slaves.” Syr. Being this overtaken, what could they do but sue for pardon? C.—Before. Gr. “of the Lord,” &c.

Ver. 15. Let. Gr. “I will sing a new hymn to the Lord. Lord, thou art great.” H.

Ver. 17. Spirit, and they. Gr. “he built” the world. Gen. 1:8. Ps. 32:9. C.

Ver. 18. Waters, by earthquakes and storms. Job 9:5. Isai. 5:25. Ps. 17:8.

Ver. 19. Great. Gr. “treated mercifully by thee: for little with thee is all sacrifice, for the odour of sweetness; and all fat is but the least for thy holocausts. But he who fears the Lord, is ever great.” H.—This text is remarkable, as it shews (C.) that no sacrifice can please God, without interior holiness. Outward magnificence will be otherwise rejected with contempt. W.

Ver. 20. He will visit them, is not in Greek, and only expresses the same again. H.

Ver. 21. Flesh, which is thus punished for ever, (S. Aug. de Civ. Dei xxv. 4.) while the soul is still more tormented with the loss of God's vision. W.—The bodies of those who persecute God's people, will not only be thrown out with ignominy, but the impenitent shall suffer eternal torments. These worms and fires do not cease. They are not merely figurative, but real, according to the Fathers. Serar. q. 1. T. Essais de Mor.—Though the damned have not yet their bodies, they are no less affected with pain; as people who have lost a member, often seem to feel pain in it. That our soul should even now suffer, when the body is hurt, depends on God's appointment. The Jews spoke of eternal torments in similar terms. Eccli. 7:19. Isai. 66:24. Mar. 9:45.

Ver. 22. And. Gr. "But as soon as they arrived at Jerusalem, they adored God; and when the people were purified, they offered their holocausts, and free gifts, and presents." H.—They stood in need of purification, as they had shed blood, and had touched so many things of the Assyrians, which were to them unclean. C. Num. 31:24.

Ver. 23. An anathema of oblivion. That is, a gift or offering made to God, by way of an everlasting monument, to prevent the oblivion or the forgetting of so great a benefit. Ch.—Yet some would read (C.) oblationis, instead of oblivionis. T.—Gr. and Syr. say nothing of oblivion. The Scriptures, and pagan histories, are full of such monuments of gratitude, to perpetuate the memory of benefits received from above. C.—Gr. "to the Lord, all the vessels," or furniture. C. 15:14. H.—Joseph called one of his sons, Manasses, because God had caused him to forget his former toils. Gen. 41:51. M.—Judith's husband had the same name; and this victory made her forget past sorrow. H.

Ver. 24. Three. Syr. "one entire month." C.—Joy. Gr. "and Judith remained with them."

Ver. 25. Was made. Gr. "returned also to Bethulia, and dwelt on her own possessions; and in her time, was honourable throughout all the land."

Ver. 26. Chastity. Gr. "many desired to have her, (H. in marriage. W.) but no man knew her," &c. H.—She again practised the same mortifications which she had done before. Suidas. C.—Husband. Gr. adds, "when he was removed to his people. And proceeding, (to the temple, or advancing in age) she was very great, and she grew old in her," &c. H.—She probably went up to Jerusalem at the great festivals. M.

Ver. 28. Five. Suidas alone reads, "fifty." Some would suppose that Judith lived 105 years after her husband's death; so that she might have been in all 125 years old. But she would thus have survived the siege of Jerusalem under Nabuchodonosor; (C.) and the text does not require this sense. H.—See Ex. 12:40. T.—Free; as she had been her assistant in such a glorious work. M.—Died. Gr. adds, “in Bethulia; and they buried her in the cave of her husband, Manasses.” See C. 8:3.

Ver. 29. Seven days. The usual term; (Eccli. 22:13) but it was extraordinary for the whole province (C.) to mourn for an individual. Gr. and Syr. add, “And she divided all her possessions, before her death, among the nearest relations of her husband, Manasses, and among her own,” (H.) which was very equitable, as she had no children, (C.) we may suppose. T. H.

Ver. 30. Years. Gr. “days.” See the pref. H.—Judith was a widow near seventy years, shewing an excellent pattern to all in that state. Notwithstanding the many inducements which she might have had to marry again, she chose to abstain, for greater perfection. Mat. 19 and 1 Cor. 7. W.—From the death of Holofernes (A. 3348) to that of Josias, (A. 3394) only forty-six years of peace would occur in Juda. Hence Hardouin would suppose that the text speaks of the kingdom of Israel. But it would be hard to prove that it existed at that time, after the ten tribes had been led away. A. 3283. As the Scripture does not specify how old Judith was when she addressed Holofernes, (C.) she might be sixty-five. Vitre.—If, therefore, we should make this peace last till the coming of Nabuchodonosor, to attack Jerusalem, about forty-six years might elapse before the period here assigned. C.—It is, however, much more probable, (H.) that the peace subsisted from the 11th of Manasses to the death of Josias, 73 (Gr. 78) years; (T.) and that she was not above forty when she performed her exploit; as she was then styled a beautiful girl, (C. 12:12) and many desired to marry her. H.—No instance can be produced, of the Jews entering into such contracts with those who were past child-bearing. Freret, who seems afraid to allow this book the same authority as the additions to Daniel, though both are equally rejected by Protestants, supposes that Bethulia was besieged in the 11th or 12th year of Josias; and, of course, that Judith would then be about eighty-four years old! Houbigant.

Ver. 31. But. This is taken from the Chaldee of S. Jerom, though omitted in the old Vulg. as well as in the Gr. and Syr. We find no express mention of this festival in the Jews' Calendar, (C.) though no one can doubt but it once was kept. D.—It probably ceased during the captivity; as that, in memory of the victory over Nicanor, (which was kept in the days of Josephus, xii. 16.) has been long since abolished, (

C.) with many others. D.—Many suppose (C.) that the feast of Judith concurred with that of the new fire, when the temple was renewed under Judas the Machabee, on the 25th of Casleu, (Salien, &c.) in December, though the victory of Judith was obtained about August. The point is not easily decided. As the festival was of human institution, it might be abrogated by the same authority. C.—In Judith we behold a widow indeed, such as the apostle commends. 1 Tim. 5:3. (S. Jer. ad Furiam.—We may also raise our minds still higher, and contemplate in her a glorious figure of the Christian Church, which is spotless; and by the practice of all virtues, overcomes the power of persecutors, giving all the glory to God. After victory, she continues in silence to practise her former austerities, which render her secure in peace and terrible in war. C.

ESTHER

THE BOOK OF ESTHER

INTRODUCTION

This Book takes its name from queen Esther; whose history is here recorded. The general opinion of almost all commentators on the Holy Scripture, make Mardochai the writer of it: which also may be collected below from C. 9:20. Ch.—He and the queen were certainly authors of the letter, (H.) enjoining the celebration of the feast of Purim, or “lots,” which is the ground-work (C.) of the present narration. D.—The compiler has also had recourse to the archives of the kingdom of Persia: so that his work has all the authority that can be required of a profane historian; and being moreover inspired in all its parts, we cannot refuse to receive it with the utmost respect. Those additions which are not now in Hebrew, (C.) though they were perhaps formerly, (W. Origen. D.) have been carefully preserved by S. Jerom, and were recognized by the ancient Vulg. as they are at present by the Greek, without any distinction. Lysimachus, the Greek translator, was probably the author of them. C. 11:1. C.—The objections of Capellus against this “Greek scribbler,” as he is pleased to style him, despising the judgment of both Jews and Christians, are in general very unaccountably borrowed (H.) from the Latin version, and are easily refuted. Houbigant.—Those Jews, who have rejected this work entirely, with Melito, (Eus. Hist. iv. 26. S. Greg. Naz. &c.) ought not to prevail against the consent of the majority, (C.) expressed in the Councils of Laodicea, Carthage, Trent, sess. 4, &c. To read this book according to the order of time, we should begin C. 11 v. 2, &c. C. 1. 2 and 12 and 3 to v. 14; then we find the distress of the Jews in the rest of that chapter, and in C. 13 to v. 8, and their delivery in C. 4 to 9 v. 17, and C. 13 v. 8, &c. and C. 14. 15 and 16. The consequences of these events are recorded C. 9 v. 17, &c. to C. 11:1. (W.) with which verse the book ends, in the Greek editions. H.—They vary considerably, as did the copies of the ancient Vulgate, which called forth the complaints of S. Jerom, Pref. But the Church has distinguished what was spurious from the genuine word of God; so that the doubts of Lyran, Sixtus, (Bib. viii.) &c. respecting the fragments at the end of the book being not canonical, ought no longer to be indulged; much less can the boldness of many Lutherans, (C.) and particularly of Le Clerc, (Houbigant) be tolerated, who represent the whole work as a mere fiction. The Jews have a greater respect for it than for any of the prophets; whose works, they say, will perish at the coming of the Messiah: whereas this will subsist with the books of Moses, and the feast of Purim will never be abolished. C. 9:28. Maimon.—Ben. Gorion (ii. 2.) admits the additions. But Josephus is silent about them, as he probably did not find them in his copy. C.—He recites, however, both the epistles of Assuerus. Ant. xi. 6. D.—It is not agreed whether these events happened before or after the captivity. But it is now most commonly supposed, that Esther was married to Darius Hystaspes, A. 3489, about the time of the dedication of the temple. C. 14:9. He had been on the throne six years, and reigned other thirty. See Herod. vii. 4. C.—Josephus thinks that Esther was the queen of Artaxerxes Longimanus, who was a great friend of the Jews. D.—The Thalmud attributes this work to the great Synagogue, consisting of Esdras, Mardochai, Joachim, &c. and, as various persons might write the same history, the Greek, with the additions, seems to be taken from one copy, and the Hebrew from another rather more concise, (Huet. D.) but equally inspired. H.

Ver. 1. In. Heb. “and in.” In this manner the books of Scripture are usually connected. Sept. place first the dream of Mardochai. C. 11:2. C.—Assuerus. Sept. Artaxerxes; as C. 16:1. The former is the title of Median, the latter of the Persian, monarchs. This king reigned over both nations, and was most probably Darius Hystaspes, the third king of the Persians, (T.) who subdued India, &c. Herod. C. T.—Some understand Cambyses, (1 Esd. 4. Genebrard) or Xerxes (Scalig.) or Artaxerxes Longimanus, (Bellarm. Salien) or Memnon, (Euseb.) or Ochus. Serarius.—But (C.) the author of 3 Esd. 3:1 and 4:43. seems clearly declared for Hystaspes. T.—Though that work be not canonical, (D.) it may claim some authority, as an ancient history. H.—This king gave orders for the building of the temple. 1 Esd. 6:1. 14.—India. Part had been (C.) subject to Xerxes. Herod. iv. 44.—Ethiopia, beyond Egypt, paid an acknowledgment. Cambyses had taken possession of this country. C.—Some understand a part of Arabia to be meant. D.—Seven: 120 had been regulated by Darius, the Mede. Dan. 6:1. H.—The number might vary as the monarch chose. D.—Herodotus (iii. 89.) only specifies “twenty.” But he speaks of large departments, to which he intimates that several others were subordinate. C.—Provinces. Heb. medina, “seat of judges.” H.—Prefecture. M.

Ver. 2. Captial. Heb. “palace, (Prot. H.) or castle,” (C.) may also signify “a capital.” Mont. &c.—Hystaspes founded this ancient royal city of Persia, (Pliny vi. 27.) or he greatly embellished it. C. Ælian, Anim. xiii. 18. T.—He seems to have resided here almost constantly. The preceding kings (C.) spent the winter in this warm climate, and perhaps the spring. See 2 Esd. 1:1. They spent other parts of the year at Ecbatana and at Babylon. C.

Ver. 3. Reign. When he was solemnly crowned, again, (T.) or removed his court, (C.) and dedicated this new capital, with feasting, &c. H.

Ver. 4. Days, or a full half year, according to their reckoning. Nabuchodonosor, after his victory over Arphaxad, (Judith 1) feasted 120 days; Dionysius of Syrachuse, 90; (Aristot.) Solomon seven; (3 K. 8:63) and David three; when he was recognized by all Israel. 1 Par. 12:39. The Gaul, Ariamnes, gave a fest to all his countrymen for a whole year. Athen. iv. 13.—The Roman emperors sometimes treated all the citizens of Rome, and Alexander did the like to 9000 of his chief officers for one day. But the magnificence of Assuerus surpasses all the rest. The Persians were famous on this account.—Persicos odi, puer, apparatus. Hor. i. Ode 38. C.

Ver. 5. Expired, (Feuardent) or in the last week. M. C.—King. The Persian monarchs delighted in agriculture. Cyrus the younger, planted trees at Sardis, and never ate till he had taken some exercise of this or of a military nature. Xenoph. Memor. Cicero Senect.

Ver. 6. Were. Prot. “where were,” white, green, and blue hangings.—Ivory. Heb. “silver.” H.—Beds, to lie down on at table; though sitting was formerly the fashion. Gen. 43:33. The other custom prevailed among the more luxurious nations, and was observed in our Saviour’s time, each person reclining upon his left arm, and having his feet behind the next. T.—These beds were made very low, in Persia; so that Alexander had one put under his feet, when he sat on the throne of Darius, as he was not so tall. Curt. v. 7.—Their magnificence was surprising. Herod. ix. 81. C.—Variety, in Mosaic work. T.—They lay upon sheep skins. Chal. Sept. “and the beds (or coverlets) were transparent, with various flowers, and full-blown roses, all round.” H.

Ver. 7. Vessels. When Lysanias had taken the camp of Mardonius, and beheld the rich vessels, he could not help expressing a surprise that people possessing such advantages, should come to molest the Lacedemonians, who lived so poorly. Herod. ix. 79.

Ver. 8. Neither. Heb. “and the drinking was according to the law.” Gr. “was not according to the pre-established law;” (H.) as the usual custom was altered, on this occasion; and thus both may be accurate. The Persians had commonly a king of the feast, whose orders all were obliged to obey in drinking. Hor. i. Ode 4. Eccli. 32:1.—This was an occasion of quarrels, (S. Jer.) and of intoxication. Agesilaus followed the example of Assuerus. Darius, and Cyrus the younger, gloried in being able to drink much wine without being deranged. C.

*Reges dicuntur urgere culullis,
Et torquere mero, quem perspexisse laborant,
An sit amicitia dignus.* Hor. ad Pison.

Among friends, these “absurd laws” were laid aside.

*Siccat inequales calices conviva, solutus
Legibus insanis.* Hor. ii. Sat. 6. C.

This may suggest to Christians, that they ought not to urge any to get drunk, (S. Aug. ser. 231. de Temp.) lest they should be condemned by the very heathens. W.—Would, and thus prevent disorders as much as possible. Athen. x. 6.

Ver. 9. Vasthi. Sept. Astin. H.—Serarius suspects she was the king’s sister, or daughter, as such marriages were common in Persia. T.—The name is not very different from that of Atossa, the daughter of Cyrus, who was married to Cambyzes, Smerdis, and Darius; to the latter of whom she bore four children. Herod. iii. 68. and vii. 3.—This prince had other wives, particularly Artistona, (C. our Hadossa, (H.) or Esther) whom he espoused a virgin, and love the most. Herodotus seems to confound her with Atossa.—Dwell. Some Greek copies have “in her own palaces.” Usher.—It was proper for women to be more retired. M.—The men feasted in the open air. H.

Ver. 10. Wine. From the king’s excess, and the haughtiness of Vasthi, God took occasion to advance Esther, and to deliver his people. C.—Mauman. Sept. “Aman.” T.—But the names vary. The Persians seem to have had a predilection for the number seven, v. 14. C. Gr. “the seven eunuchs, ministers (deacons) of Artaxerxes.”

Ver. 11. Head. But without any other covering. Chal. Sulpitius entertained perhaps the same idea. Stulto rege consultior, pudens, virorum oculis spectaculum corporis præbere jussa, abnuvit. H.—Some Greek copies assert, very improbably, (C.) that she was sent for “to be crowned queen.”—Beautiful. “The Persian ladies were noted for beauty,” (Ammian) insomuch that Alexander called them eye-sores, oculorum dolores. Curt.—Only prostitutes appeared publicly at feasts. Macrob. vii. 1. S. Amb. de Elia. i. 15.—In effect, Vasthi’s refusal conformable to the laws of the country. Josephus. Plut. in Themist.—Her offence consisted, therefore, rather in her haughty carriage or words. H.—For the proposal was neither decent nor safe for the king, (Grot.) as the history of Candaules shews. Herod. i. Not. Var. in Sulp.

Ver. 12. Fury. This is the usual consequences of excess. W.

Ver. 13. According. Heb. “knew the times, (for so was the king’s custom with those who knew law and judgment.) And the next,” &c. H.—These were the magi, more particularly versed in the constitutions of the country. The Persians commonly held their consultations over wine. Herod. i. 133.—Sept. “and the king said to his friends, Thus has Astin spoken; do therefore, in this affair, law and judgment. Then came forth to him Arkesaios and Saresthaïos, and Malesear, the princes of the Persians and Medes, men near the king, and who sat first after the king. H.—The old Vulg. places Mardochæus first. These seven counsellors were perhaps styled the king’s relations,” (Brisson i. p. 171.) and administered justice; as even the kings referred their causes to them. Plut. Artax. &c.

Ver. 16. Mamuchan. Old Vulg. “Mardochæus.” Yet the Jews say this was the infamous Aman; and one Greek copy has Bilgaïos, (C.) and Arabo, “Mouchaios.” C. 3:1 and 12:6. He was the youngest, but spoke first, as was sometimes the case.

Ver. 18. Wives. Gr. τυραννίδες, “princesses, or female tyrants.”—

Slight. Sept. “dare to slight their husbands. Wherefore if,” &c. H.—Just. Heb. “enough of contempt and indignation.” This may be referred either to the king or to the women’s husbands. The example will prove a source of continual quarrels. C.—Brentius approves the decision of this parasite; though S. Amb. &c. think that the queen was justified by the laws, which the king had no right to infringe, to gratify his drunken humour, v. 10. Luther would also wrest this text in favour of adultery, p.ii. Devort. p. 177. W.

Ver. 19. Altered. This regarded the more solemn acts, signed by the counsellors. Dan. 6:17. Grotius.—Some decrees were neglected or changed. C. 8:9. 1 Esd. 4:5. 21 and 6:1. C.

Ver. 21. Counsel. It was very inconclusive; (M.) and even supposing the queen were guilty of some indiscretion, the punishment was too severe. M. Grotius, v. 11. H.

ESTHER 2

Ver. 1. Suffered. He began to repent. The Persians used to deliberate when warm with wine: but their decrees were not ratified till they had examined them again the next day. Herod. i. 133.—This was not the case here; the king divorced his wife without any delay. C.—Sept. intimate that he presently lost thoughts of her. “He no longer remembered Vasthi with any affection, reflecting what she had said, and how he had condemned her.” H.—But the Alex. copy agrees with the Heb. C.

Ver. 2. Beautiful. Thus Abisag was brought to David. 3 K. 1:2. The Turkish emperors select women from all their dominion, without distinction of noble or ignoble; as all are their slaves.

Ver. 3. House. Distinct from the palace, v. 14.—Women’s. Heb. “things for rubbing, (C.) or purification;” (H.) such as perfumes, but not clothes.

Ver. 4. Commanded. Heb. “did so.”

Ver. 5. Jew. He was of the tribe of Benjamin. But all went by this name, after the captivity. Mardochai had probably returned from Jerusalem, seeing things were unfinished there. 1 Esd. 2:2. C.—Semei, who cursed David. Chal.—Cis. The head of the royal family of Saul; whence authors have concluded that he and Esther were of royal blood, (C.) and descendants of Miphiboseth. T.

Ver. 6. Who. This may refer to Cis, the great-grandfather of Mardochai, if we postpone this history till the latter end of the Persian monarchy. D.—But it more naturally applies to Mardochai himself, who (C. 11:4. T.) was led captive 80 years before, being then perhaps 10 years old, so that he would now be only 90; an age when many are fit for great things. C. Cic. de Senect.—He might even have been an infant when taken, and of course would not be much above 80 when he came into such favour. H.

Ver. 7. Brothers. Josephus, (xi. 6.) the old Latin version of the Syr. Abenezra, &c. suppose that Mardochai was uncle to Esther. But the Heb. Syr. Gr. and Chal. assert that he was only her cousin. Sept. “daughter of Aminadab, (or rather Abihail, v. 15) his father’s brother, and her name was Esther; and after her parents were dead, he educated her for a wife;” εἰς γυναῖκα, as some Rabbins also maintain, believing she was an heiress. Yet other Greek copies, Heb. &c. read, “he educated her as a daughter, θυγατέρα: for the damsel was very beautiful.” He had probably adopted her. C.—Edissa. Heb. hadassa, (H.) or hadassah, signified “of myrtle.” M.—Esther, “a sheep.” C.

Ver. 9. And he, Egeus, commanded the under eunuch. T.—Heb. “he quickly gave her her things for purifications, (v. 3) and her portions, with seven maids, suitable for her, out of the king’s house; and he charged her and her maids to dwell in the best of the women’s house,” (H.) where things were the most commodious. C.

Ver. 10. Would. Heb. “had not declared.” He was not influenced to treat her thus on account of her royal extraction. H.—In effect, the Jews were despised. C.

Ver. 11. Court. He was one of the life-guards. C. 11:3. T.—This situation enabled him to disclose a conspiracy, (v. 23 and C. 12:5) as he often went to enquire after the health of Esther. C.

Ver. 12. Turn. This was rigidly observed, in that country, where polygamy prevailed. Gen. 30:16. Herod. iii. 69.—The wives were “shut up in separate apartments,” (Just. i. 9.) in the remotest parts of the palace. C.—Twelfth. A full year elapsed before they could be admitted.—A sweet. Prot. “other things for the purifying of the women.” H.—It would be difficult to form an adequate idea of the luxury of the Persians, if the Scripture had not informed us. The kings were not satisfied with one wife. Assuerus had 400; (Josephus) and Darius Codomannus carried 360 with him, in his expeditions. Curt. iii. —Parmenio took an incredible number of his concubines, at Damascus. Athen. xiii. 9.—They were not all treated alike, but all were very sumptuously adorned. Cities were allotted to furnish one with sandals, another with girdles, &c. Cic. in Verrem. v. C.

Ver. 15. Abihail. Sept. "Aminadab, brother of Mardochai's father." H. v. 7.

Ver. 16. Tenth. Sept. and old Vulg. "twelfth month, which is Adar." Tebeth corresponds with December and January. C.—Notwithstanding all exertions, Esther had been near four years in preparing; (T. C. 1:3. C.) unless some years had elapsed before she was brought, v. 12. H.—She was guilty of no sin in becoming an inferior wife of the king. M. T.

Ver. 17. Crown. Lit. "diadem," (H.) which was a bandage "of purple, striped with white," by which the queen was distinguished from the other wives. C.—The king wore "a four-square cidaris," with a similar ornament. Alex. Genial. i. 27.—Only one queen was chosen from all the wives, and she was "adored" by the rest. Dion. Athen. iii. l.—Though God had forbidden marriages with infidels, (C.) at least with those of Chanaan, (H.) a dispensation might be granted, (Ex. 34. T. 2 K. 3. W.) for a greater good. Esther was not puffed up with her exaltation, and refrained from all forbidden meats. C. 14:15. C.—If she be the Artystona of Herotous, (vii. 69. H.) as it is most probable, (T.) her two sons, Arsames and Gobryas, had a command in the famous expedition of Xerxes. Usher, A. 3524. C.

Ver. 18. Servants. Sept. add, "seven days, and he magnified the nuptials of Esther." H.—Rest, from labour. C.—Sept. "remission to all his subjects," of tribute, as was sometimes done. Herod. iii. 66. T. C.—Gifts, on Esther. Chal. Malvenda.

Ver. 19. And. Sept. "But Mardochai," &c. H.—They say nothing of the gifts, v. 18.—Second. The same process had been observed before, when Vasthi was chosen. C.—Mardochai was perhaps then one of the king's guards. H. v. 11. T.—This second inquiry is here specified, to introduce the following account. M.

Ver. 20. Commandment. No one interrogated her, as she had been educated as Susa, and was taken for a Persian lady, v. 10. M.

Ver. 21. Bagathan, or Bagatha and Thara. C. 12:1. One of the chief counsellors was called Bagatha. H.—But these two were porters, (C.) or guards, of the king, (Sept. Grot.) or of the treasury. Vatab.—Some Gr. copies and the Chal. insinuate that they were displeased at the advancement of Mardochai. The latter supposes that they meant also to poison Esther. C.—It appears that they wished to make Aman king, (M.) and the detection was always resented by him. C. 12:6. C.

Ver. 22. Notice of it, from Barnabaz, a Jew in the service of one of them. Josephus, xi. 6.—He might also hear some suspicious words. R. Calom. W.

Ver. 23. King. Such histories were preserved with great care. 1 Esd. 6:1. C.—Sept. “the king ordered a memorial to it to be kept in the royal library, for the praise of Mardochai’s good will.” H.—The latter also wrote an account. C. 12:4.

Ver. 1. Aman means, “a disturber.” H.—Who. Sept. add, “Bougaios, or Gogaïos.” Gog designates Scythia, where Aman might have been born. Pliny (4:12) places there the lake and river Ruges. But the Bugean, in Greek, may mean, “greatly puffed up:” or it may stand for Bagoas, “an eunuch,” (Judith 12:11) like Putiphar.—Agag, the king of Amalec. 1 K. 15. This title, like that of Macedonian, (C. 16:10) is probably used out of contempt, as the Jews frequently styled their enemies, “race of Chanaan.” Ezech. 16:3. Dan. 13:56. C.—Sulpitius takes Aman to have been a Persian. His Amalecite ancestors may have fled before Saul into Macedonia, though he himself resided in Persia, so as to belong to all those nations. T. M.—Throne. Thus were Joseph and Joakim exalted. Gen. 41:40 and 4 K. 25:28. C.—The Persians gave places according to merit, (H.) or as a reward. Brisson.

Ver. 2. Worship him, with divine honours, as he required, in imitation of the kings. Judith 3:13. On certain solemn occasions, the latter at least exacted this respect from their subjects. But the pious Jews avoided appearing at such times, or the kings dispensed with them. The mere bending the knee, out of civil respect, would not have been objected to; and Mardochai says, he would not have refused to kiss the footsteps of Aman. C. 13:12. C. S. Tho. 2. 2. q. 84. T.—But he could not give such worship as was claimed by the minor gods. W.

Ver. 4. Resolution. The did not mean to injure Mardochai, who had an employment at court. C. 12:5. C.—Jew, and of course hindered by his religion from giving divine worship to any man. M.

Ver. 6. Counted. Sept. “consulted how to exterminate all the Jews in the kingdom.”—Assuerus. Heb. adds, “the people of Mardochai.”

Ver. 7. Lot. The Persians were much addicted to divination. The superstitious Aman, though he would appear a deity, was to be regulated by lots! Providence caused almost a whole year to intervene, before the cruel execution was to commence. C.—Reason began to shew the futility of divination, (Cicero) but the Christian religion alone has been able to counteract its baneful influence. C.—India is till much infected with it. Bernier.—Phur. Heb. “they cast Pur, that is the lot, before Aman.” H.—The explanation intimates that Pur is a Persian word. D.—Yet Pagnin maintains that it means in Heb. “to crush,” a wine-press, or vessel; and the lot, which is thrown therein. M.—Tickets, with the names of the twelve months, were probably drawn; and after the month was thus determined, Aman put in the urn as many tickets as it had days, and was directed to pitch upon the 13th. Sept. have the 14th, both here and v. 13. C.—How preposterous was the (H.) fury of this man, thus to decide upon the day before he had the king’s leave! W.

Ver. 8. Another, as the ten tribes were from Juda, or rather (H.) they were scattered about the empire. C.—Heb. “and dispersed; and their laws are different from all other people’s; neither do they observe the king’s laws: therefore it is not for the king’s profit to tolerate them.” H.—These are the old calumnies repeated by Tacitus, (Hist. v.) and ably refuted by Josephus. c. Ap. Almost all Israel still continued about Media. Few had taken advantage of the decree of Cyrus.

Ver. 9. Talents. Heb. &c. add, “of silver.” M.—If the Heb. talent be meant, this sum would be immense for an individual; (C.) though Aman might expect to raise it by the confiscation of the Jews’ effects, v. 13. Some think he speaks of the Babylonian talent, on which supposition the sum would amount to twenty-one millions of French livres, (Bude. C.) or of the Attic one, which is worth half the Heb. talent. The king might thus be prevented from thinking that the tributes would be lessened. T.

Ver. 10. Ring, to transfer his power to him, for the time. Gen. 41:42. Alexander gave his ring to Periccas, and was generally supposed thus to designate him for his successor. Justin. xii. See 1 Mac. 6:14. 15.

Ver. 12. Lieutenants. Lit. “satraps.” Heb. achashdarpene, “courtiers,” (H.) or those who are int he presence of his majesty, or porters. C.—They were entrusted with the care of the different provinces. H.

Ver. 13. Messengers. Lit. “runners.” H.—Posts were first established in Persia, and were the admiration of other nations, though nothing compared with ours, as they were not regular, nor for the people. They called these messengers Astandæ, or Angari. Mat. 5:41. Darius Condomanus was one of these postilions, before he came to the crown. C.—At first the kings had people stationed on eminences, at a convenient distance, to make themselves heard, when they had to communicate some public news. Diod. xix. p. 680.—Cyrus afterwards appointed horsemen, to succeed each other. Xenophon, Cyrop. viii.—Cæsar made some regulations on this head, which were perfected by Augustus and Adrian; but being neglected, Charlemagne strove to restore them: yet it is thought that the posts were not established, in France, till the reign of Louis XI. C.

Ver. 14. Letter. It should appear here, as it is in Gr. but the Heb. &c. omitting it, the Vulg. give it, C. 13:1.

Ver. 15. Jews. Heb. “but the city of Susan was in perplexity.” Gr. “troubled.” C.—Even the pagans could not view such a cruel decree, without horror. H.

ESTHER 4

Ver. 1. Shewing. Sept. old Vulg. and Josephus, “a nation which has done no wrong, is to be cut off.” The eastern nations were accustomed to such marks of sorrow. Jon. 2:6. The citizens of Susa tore their garments, and cried aloud, for many days after the defeat of Xerxes. Herod. viii. 98.—The domestics of Darius and Alexander tore also their hair, &c. after their masters’ death. Curt. iii. and xi.

Ver. 2. Sackcloth. Gr. adds, “and ashes.” Such an appearance was deemed disrespectful. God forbids his priests to act thus. Lev. 21:1. See Gen. 41:14. Yet the miserable ought not to be entirely excluded from the king’s presence, as he ought to be their protector.

Ver. 3. Edict. Lit. “dogma;” H. a word used in this sense, (Acts 15:16) and by Demosthenes, &c. T.—Mourning. The most effectual means of redress, is to do works of penance for past transgressions. 1 Cor. 11:31. W.

Ver. 4. Her, concerning the unusual distress of one of the courtiers. They knew not, (M.) perhaps, that he was related to her. H.

Ver. 7. Money. Heb. “the sum of money.” Sept. “then thousand talents.”

Ver. 8. Entreat. Sept. “to put in a counter-petition, and entreat,” &c.—People. Sept. add, “and country, remembering the days of thy lowly state, how thou wast fed by my hand; for Aman, the second after the king, has spoken against us, to have us destroyed. Call then upon the Lord, and speak to the king for us, and rescue us from death.” H.—This servant must have been very trusty, as the secret was confided to him, respecting the nation to which the queen belonged. M.

Ver. 11. Inner court, with regard to many others around, though there was one still more retired, (T.) where the king alone could enter. This admitted the light only by the door, before which hung a curtain, so that the king could see (C.) who came into the hall of audience, (H.) without being seen. None durst come even to this antichamber, without being called. It was also death to appear with their hands out of their sleeves, (Cyrop. ii.) or to sit down, (Diod. xvii.) or look at any of the king’s wives in the face, &c. Plut. Artax.—This gloomy retirement was intended to keep up the idea of his majesty being something more than man. H.—Apud Persas persona regis, sub specie majestatis, occulitur. Justin. i.—The king’s secret cabinet (C.) resembled, in magnificence (C. 15:9) the description which Ovid has given us of the palace of the sun. T.—It was covered with gold and precious stones. Here he continued, almost inaccessible, and business was despatched slowly. C.—Agesilaus, king of Sparta, shewed how ridiculous these customs were, by acting quite the reverse, appearing frequently among his subjects, and granting their just requests without delay. Xenophon.—Thirty. She might apprehend that the king’s affection was beginning to cool. God was pleased thus to try her the more. H.

Ver. 13. Only. Aman would contrive to effect her ruin with the rest.

Ver. 14. Occasion. Wonderful confidence! Gr. “if thou wilt not hearken (C. to me; (H.) or, if thou obstinately despise) at this time, the Jews shall be assisted and protected by some,” &c. H.—As this. So Joseph was raised up in Egypt, (C.) that he might save all his family. H.

Ver. 16. Pray. Heb. “fast.” They might take some refreshment in the evening, (Lyran) of dried meats. Joseph. Grot.—Few constitutions could have done without any thing. Yet after two nights and one full day were elapsed, Esther ventured to go to the king. C. 5:1. We have here another instance of places for prayer. Judith 6:21. The old Vulg. has, “publish a fast, and tell the ancients to fast. Let the infants be kept from the breast during the night, and let no food be given to the oxen and other animals, while I and my maids shall fast,” &c. Then at the end of this chapter, in the Sept. follow the prayers of Mardochai and of Esther, (C. 13:8 and C. 14. H.) which is their proper place. C.

ESTHER 5

Ver. 1. And. Instead of these two verses, the Sept. place (H.) what we have C. 15 with some small variation from the present account in Heb. But there is nothing incompatible with the truth. C.—The king might be at first displeased; but, seeing the effect which it had upon Esther, he might feel his former sentiments of love rekindle. C. T.—House, or inner apartment, C. 4:11. The throne was surprizingly magnificent, yet inferior to that of Solomon. 3 K. 10:18. C.—It was formed of gold and precious stones, with a curtain over it of purple and other colours. Athen. xi. 2.

Ver. 2. Golden. “It is not this golden sceptre which saves the kingdom,” said Cyrus, “but faithful friends are the most true and secure sceptre for kings.” Cyrop. viii. C.—Kissed. Heb. “touched.” H.

Ver. 3. Kingdom. C. 7:2. This compliment only (C.) meant, that every rational (H.) request should be granted. Mar. 6:23.

Ver. 4. Prepared. It was not prudent to declare her request, when many improper persons were present; and Aman was not there. M.—She thought that the hilarity, occasioned by innocent feasting, (H.) might be a means of obtaining more effectually what she wanted. M.—If the prudence of this world suggest much address, why may not virtue employ the same arts for good purposes? Esther had to obtain two great points; to make the king retract his edict, and to abandon his favourite. She is afraid therefore of being too hasty, (C.) and invites the king again, to increase by this delay his desire to of knowing her request, and that he might bind himself to grant it more effectually. W.—She invites Aman alone, who would thus be more envied by the other courtiers; (Lyran) while she manifested an open disposition, and disdained to accuse the absent. T.

Ver. 6. Wine. The Persians did not drink till the end of the feast, (as the Turks are said to do at present. Tavernier) when they fall upon wine without any moderation. Ælian, Hist. xii. 1.

Ver. 11. Children. After military glory, this was deemed the greatest. The king sent presents yearly to those who had most children. Herod. i. 136.

Ver. 12. But me. It was thought very singular, when Artaxerxes invited his own brothers. Plut.—But when he also admitted a foreigner, the nobility became jealous, as that honour was reserved for the king’s relations. Athen. i.—Dine, or feast. Only one meal was taken, (Herod.

vii. 120.) and that in the evening. C.

Ver. 13. Whereas. Sept. “all these things do not satisfy me, while I behold,” &c. Such is the insatiable nature of ambition! H.—Gate. He does not clearly mention that he wanted to be adored. M.

Ver. 14. High. This was to increase the shame. Hence Galba condemned a Roman citizen to be hung on a high white cross. Sueton. ix.—The Jews formerly burned a man in effigy with a cross, pretending to do it in detestation of Aman, but in reality to deride our Saviour, till the emperors forbade the custom. C. 9:21. C. Just. and Theodos. C.

ESTHER 6

Ver. 1. Sleep. Anxious what Esther could desire. Sept. “But the Lord removed sleep from the king that night.” H.—Providence watched over the welfare of his people.—Chronicles. The king took particular care (C.) to have their benefactors mentioned in history and rewarded. Herod. viii. 85. Assuerus had not recourse to musicians, &c. wisely (T.) reflecting that history is the most pleasing and useful amusement. Cicero, &c. T.—God directed him on this occasion, as his eye never sleepeth. Josephus. W.

Ver. 3. No reward at all. He received some presents from the king; (C. 12:5) but these were so inconsiderable in the opinion of the courtiers, that they esteemed them as nothing at all; (Ch.) and they were not specified in the history. C.

Ver. 4. Inner court. To which only such favourites and noblemen had access. Herod. iii. 72. and 84. This king had himself come thither with six others, when they conspired to destroy Smerdis. Heb. &c. read, “the outward court,” in which Aman was, till he heard the king was awake, and called for him. C.

Ver. 8. Apparel. Gr. “of byssus,” which was very superb. C. 15:9. The king alone could wear the tiara upright. The nobles wore it hanging backwards. Cyrus allowed his nobility to appear in purple, but he would have only his own robes striped with white. Cyrop. viii. Curt. iii.—The kings often made presents of garments, &c. to ambassadors, and to those who were styled “their relations.”—Horse: 200 such appeared in the train of Cyrus, with golden bits, which none were permitted to use without special leave.—Head. Gr. seems to refer this to the horse, which might indeed have a sort of crown. But the golden one was more probably worn by the person honoured. C. 8:15.

Ver. 9. Nobles. Lit. “tyrants.” H.—But this word was not formerly odious; as it only denoted “a prince.” Pars mihi pacis erit dextram tetigisse tyranni. Æneid vii.—Abuse of power caused it to become hateful. T.

Ver. 10. Spoken. The distinction was not for one day only. Mardochai might afterwards wear the tiara, &c. God thus clearly manifested that he would resist the proud, and give grace to the humble. S. Jam. 4:6. The exaltation of Joseph in Egypt, (C.) and lately of Daniel at the court at Babylon, (T.) was hardly less wonderful. Gen. 41. Dan. 6. C. —We may easily conceive the astonishment which would fill the breast of Aman, as well as of Mardochai, on this occasion. The Greek published by Usher, has expressed these sentiments; (H.) and the Chaldee has added many embellishments, which are of no authority. C.

Ver. 12. Covered. To hide his shame, (T.) as Demosthenes did, when the people kissed him. Plutarch. See 2 K. 15. Ezech. 12:6.

Ver. 13. Wise men. Probably the magi, who concluded, from the first miscarriage, that he undertaking would prove abortive, (C.) as they were also informed of God’s protection given repeatedly to the Jews. Sept. “because the living God is with him.” Chal. They might have heard of the fate of Sennacherib and of Holofernes, (C.) or of God’s promises, (Gen. 13 and 15) unless they were guided by human prudence. W.

Ver. 14. As. Thus from morning till noon, (T.) or night, had this petty god (H.) been forced to stoop to the meanest offices, and durst not say a word in opposition. T.—He would gladly have now absented himself from the feast, (M.) with the idea of which he had been enraptured. H.

ESTHER 7

Ver. 1. Drink. Wine was only used at great feasts. Eccli. 31:17. Water was served up first, from the river Choaspes only. The king and his eldest son were allowed to drink of “the golden waters,” of which they alone had 70 fountains. Athen. xii. 2.—Their wine was brought from Chelbon, near Damascus. Id. i. 22. Ezech. 27:18. C.

Ver. 3. People. She was more concerned for these than for half of the kingdom. Hence all fasted and prayed, and Esther obtained their deliverance. W.

Ver. 4. Perish. Three terms of the same import express the greatness of the misery. H.—King. Whose revenue will be greatly impaired, (C.) and character injured, for having given such power to a monster. H.—The kings of Persia had taken many precautions not to be thus deluded, having appointed officers, who were styled “the eyes and ears” of the king, purposely to obtain all necessary information. But these eyes were often darkened; these ears were often deaf, (C.) and unwilling to act with fidelity; (H.) though their diligence in make secret transactions known, caused the people to look upon their kings as gods. Apul. Mund. Cyrop. viii. C.

Ver. 5. What. Heb. “where, who durst entertain this design?” H.

Ver. 6. Astonished. Horror of a guilty conscience is the first punishment. S. Chrys. W.

Ver. 7. Set. Heb. “of the palace,” (H.) belonging to the queen. C.

Ver. 8. My own. Heb. “will he force ... in the house?” H.—Those who know with what jealousy the Persians treated their wives, so at to punish with death those who crossed the road before the queens, (Plut. Artax.) or touched them, will not wonder at the indignation of Assuerus, (C.) though his suspicions were groundless. H.—Aman wished to incline the queen to shew clemency, (M.) and intercede for him. He threw himself as a suppliant at her feet, as she lay on the bed at table. H.—Face. His crime was notorious; no trial was requisite, and the kings could treat their subjects as slaves. It was customary to cover the faces of those who were led to execution. Philotas was thus conducted into the presence of Alexander. Curt. vi.

Ver. 9. Harbona. Cr. “Bougathan.” H.—He had been to call Aman to the feast. Jos.—Little dependance is to be had on false friendship, when a man is disgraced. W.—Upon it. His body was perhaps afterwards exposed in the street. C. 16:18. It is not clear that he was nailed to the cross, though this custom prevailed in the country. 1 Esd. 6:11. Alexander crucified many satraps. Curt. ix.—The old Vulg. observes that the wife and ten children of Aman suffered with him. C. 9:6. C.

Ver. 1. House, and furniture. Sept. "all the possessions of Aman, the devil," (accuser, &c. H.) which were confiscated for treason; and no one had a better title than the queen, whose life had been in such danger. Yet she did not touch the estates of the children, v. 13. C. 9:10.—King. in the place of Aman. C. 9:4 and 10:3.—Uncle, or cousin. C.

Ver. 2. Aman. It seems the traitor had hitherto kept possession of it, and sealed the king's edicts, as Mardochai was now to do, v. 8.—House. Heb. &c. "of Aman," to whom it had belonged. C.

Ver. 3. Down. such reverence is due to God's representatives, whatever heretics may say. Jude 8.

Ver. 5. To him. Heb. adds, "and I be pleasing in his eyes," which had been expressed just before. Yet she might insist on this point, as it shewed a greater regard for the king's pleasure.—I beseech. Heb. "let it be written, to reverse the device of Aman, the son," &c. H.—When the edict was not sealed by the nobles, it might be altered; (C. 1:19) and at any rate, when the king had been visibly imposed upon, in an affair of such consequence, justice dictated that it should not be enforced. C.

Ver. 7. Durst. Heb. "laid." He had sufficiently manifested his intention to destroy them, though he had not been able to injure any one. H.

Ver. 8. This. Heb. "no one may reverse the letter," &c.

Ver. 9. Third. Rom. Sept. "first ... Nisan," ten days after Aman's decree, who seems to have been presently brought to judgment. Yet two whole months might easily elapse, (C.) and ten days more, before this contrary edict was dispatched. H.—The day of slaughter was still remote. M.

Ver. 10. Posts, who had a right to make use of any person's horse, &c. M.—Who. Prot. "on horseback, and riders on mules, camels, and young dromedaries." H.—The original terms greatly embarrass interpreters. C.—Sept. have simply, "he sent the writings by letter-carriers, ordering them to follow their own laws in every city, to help themselves, and treat their adversaries and opponents as they pleased, on one day ... the 13th ... of Adar. This is a copy," &c. C. 16. H.

Ver. 11. Spoil. This was retaliating, as they were to have been treated in like manner. C.—Such were the barbarous customs of the country. H.—It might not still be lawful thus to involve the innocent with the guilty, though the king did not ill in allowing the Jews to stand up in their own defence. 2 K. 21:6. Some think that they were only to prevent the execution of the former edict, which could not be revoked. See C. 3. C.—A form of trial was observed. C. 16:20. M.

Ver. 15. Cloak. The kings wore one of purple, over their purple and white tunic. Cyrop. viii.—Gr. have “diadem.” C.

Ver. 17. Ceremonies. Becoming acquainted with the sanctity of the law, and the protection which God gave to his people. M.—Heb. “the Jews had joy and gladness, a feast, and a good day, and many of the people of the land became Jews; for the fear of the Jews,” &c. Prot. H.

ESTHER 9

Ver. 1. As. Heb. “(which is the month of Adar) when the king’s command and edict drew near to be executed, in that day when the enemies of the Jews hoped to have power over them, (though it turned out that the Jews had dominion over those who hated them)” H.—To revenge, &c. The Jews, on this occasion, by authority from the king, were made executioners of the public justice, for punishing by death a crime worthy of death, viz. a malicious conspiracy for extirpating their whole nation; (Ch.) so inscrutable are the judgments of God, who never wholly abandoned his people! The old Vulg. passes over the first 19 verses, with the 24th, 25th, and 28th. C.—In this whole history we cannot but admire the Providence of God. W.

Ver. 3. Extolled. Prot. “helped.” Sept. “the king’s secretaries honoured the Jews.” H.

Ver. 6. Sons. It seems as if they had been slain with their father, v. 10. See C. 7:9. C.—Yet, as the contrary would appear from C. 16:18, we may suppose that they were at least H. imprisoned till this time, for a more exemplary punishment, while all the rest of the family perished with Aman. Serar. Salien. M.—These are the kindred, specified nine months before. C. 16. T.—Some Masorets childishly (H.) write these ten names one over another, and with greater and lesser letters, to shew that they were hung one above another, and that the guilt of all was not the same, but the youngest son was the most malicious. Kennicott, Ver. 10. Goods, in any place, (T.) that they might not appear to be actuated by the desire of riches, (C.) to fall upon the innocent. How often does this fatal cause blind Christian conquerors! The sons of Aman were married, and had separate establishments. C. 8:1.

Ver. 13. Susan. Aman's influence had been the greatest there, and had stirred up many enemies of the Jews, who were to be carefully sought out. H.—If we should consider only the dictates of clemency, we should think that the Jews were too eager in their revenge. But when we reflect, that their enemies had intended to destroy them all, and to seize their effects, we shall allow that they did not exceed the limits of justice, as they acted by royal authority, and abstained from touching any effects of the deceased. C.—In the capital, 800 men fell victims to their fury. But as the citizens of that place were probably the most guilty, we must not imagine that other cities would be treated with the like severity. H.—Gibbets, for a terror to the wicked. M.—This disgrace was not unusual. C. 16:18. Polycrates was treated thus. Herod. iii. 125.

Ver. 16. Lives. In many cases they would probably be attacked, as Aman's edict was perhaps still in force, as well as that of Mardochai. Hence both parties would be upon the watch. H.—Seventy-five. Rom. Sept. has only 15,000. Complut. 10,035. C.

Ver. 19. Meats, not only to the poor, but to all their friends, v. 22, and 2 Esd. 8:10. C.

Ver. 21. Receive. Prot. "establish this among them, that they should keep the 14th ... yearly." 2 Mac. 15:37. H.—None were obliged to keep more than one of these days, according to their respective dwellings. The 14th was for the provinces, the 15th for the Jews of Susan, v. 18. T. C. W.—Yet it would seem that both days were enjoined, v. 27, 28. H.—The Jews still observe, them, as they gratify their vanity and vindictive spirit. The 13th is kept a rigid fast, for all above sixteen, for twenty-four hours, during which they eat nothing. C.—If that day should be a sabbath, or its eve, they fast on the 11th or 12th. Drusius.—The day before the festival they give alms to their poor brethren, enjoining them to consume the whole in making good cheer. Each person must then contribute the half sicle, (Ex. 30:13) which is bestowed on those who undertake a pilgrimage to the land of promise. At night, when the feast commences, they light the lamps, and begin to read the Book of Esther, as soon as the stars appear. They use an old parchment MS. roll, and, in the five places, the reader shouts with all his might, running over the names of the ten sons of Aman with all haste, to shew that they all died in a moment. Whenever Aman is mentioned, the children beat the benches with mallets; and formerly they used to strike at a stone, on which his name was cut, till it broke, v. 31. After the lecture, they take a repast at home. Early the next morning they return to the synagogue, and read the account of Amalec from the Pentateuch, and repeat the Book of Esther, with the aforesaid ceremonies. The rest of the day they spend in merriment. Their teachers allow them to drink till they are unable to distinguish the name of Aman from that of Mardochai. Basnage, vi. 15.—They also change clothes, in contradiction to the law; (Deut. 22:5) and were formerly accustomed to crucify a man of straw, which they burnt with the cross, till Christian emperors put a stop to them; as it was concluded, from their curses, &c. that they had an eye to our Saviour. C. See C. 5:14. H.

Ver. 25. And. Heb. “But when she came.” Sept. “and how he came to the king, asking leave to hang Mardochai. But his machinations against the Jews, turned upon his own head; and so,” &c. H.

Ver. 28. Ceremonies. The king also enjoined (C. 16:22) all his subjects (T.) to keep a day of rejoicing, (H.) as the death of Aman was deemed a public benefit. C.

Ver. 29. Second. The first might be the edict, (C. 8:9) or else the provisional establishment of the festival, as it could not have general authority till it was ratified by the high priest; after which, this second letter was dispatched. C.—Sept. “and queen Esther, daughter of Aminadab, &c.... wrote all that they had done, and also the confirmation of the epistle of Phrourai.” They should say Phurim, as the former word means “guards.” Heb. “wrote with all authority, to confirm this second letter of Purim;” (Prot. H.) or rather, “this letter, Phurim, of which this is a copy.” The Rom. Sept. only add for this and their advice; (C. Ed. Alex. “for their health and counsel.”) and Esther established for ever, and wrote as a memorial: My nation,” &c. H.

Ver. 30. Peace: receive these glad tidings, and faithfully observe the injunctions. C.

Ver. 31. Fasts and cries. See v. 21. C.—Prot. “the matters of their fastings and their cry: and the decree of Esther confirmed these matters of Purim, and it was written in the book.” H.—This feast, instituted by Mardochai, was accepted and observed by the Jews as a constitution agreeable to, and not contrary to the law. Deut. 4:2 and 12:32. W.

ESTHER 10

Ver. 1. Land. He conquered many countries on the continent, and several to which he could not come but by water, which the Jews call islands, whether they were surrounded on all sides by the sea or not. Heb. has not the word all: but as the expressions are indefinite, they are usually taken in this sense. Yet we must not suppose, that the dominion of Assuerus extended over the whole world, no more than that of the Romans, who were styled masters of it. Before this king, the provinces had not paid tribute, but gave what they judged proper. But Darius laid a heavy tribute upon all, that, when half was afterwards remitted, they might esteem it a favour. The Persians hence looked upon him as a trafficker: καπηλος. Herod. iii. 89. and iv. 44. and vi. 7. &c. C.—Providence punished them for thirsting after the possessions and blood of the Jews. T.

Ver. 3. Seed. Benjamin (Itin.) informs us, that both he and the queen were buried in the chief city of the Medes, which he calls “the great Hamda;” perhaps the province Mardochæa, (or Αμορδακαι. Ptol. v. 20.) near the Persian gulf, may have been called after this statesman. T.

Ver. 4. Then Mardochai, &c. Here S. Jerom adviseth the reader, that what follows is not in the Hebrew; but is found in the Sept. Greek edition, which the 72 interpreters translated out of the Hebrew, or added by the inspiration of the Holy Ghost. Ch.—He says, “What is extant in Heb. I have faithfully translated. What follows I found in the Vulg. edition, contained in the Greek language and character: and in the mean time, or waving all dispute for the present, (interim) this little chapter was inserted at the end of the book, which, according to our custom, we have marked with an obel or spit.” H.—These fragments (H.) which the Sept. might have in Heb. or wrote by inspiration, (W.) are not in Chal. or Syr. and the old Latin version, taken from the Greek (C.) of Lysimachus, (C. 11:1. H.) is inserted by S. Jerom. C.—Things. He attributes the salvation of the Jews to God alone. H.—Reflecting on the fall of Aman, (T.) he recollects a dream which he had formerly had. H.

Ver. 5. A dream. This dream was prophetical and extraordinary, otherwise the general rule is, not to observe them. Ch.

Ver. 6. And was. Sept. “and there was light, and the sun and much water.” The light enabled him to discern the progress of the little fountain. Yet it was not absurd that the water should appear luminous, like the sun, as it was intended to shew the wonderful exaltation of Esther. H.—She extinguished a great fire, which threatened ruin. M.

Ver. 10. Lots. Alluding to the Purim of Aman; (C. Capel.) or rather these are only mentioned, v. 13. Houbigant.—Gr. “He had therefore made two lots ... and the two lots came to the hour and time and day of judgment before God, and for all nations." H.

Ver. 11. Time. From all eternity (T.) God had ordained to save his people; and this he declared to his servants, by shewing him two lots. H.—This became more intelligible after the event, (T.) like other predictions. H.

Ver. 12. Mercy. Gr. "justified." But this often means, shewed mercy. Ex. 34:7. C.—The book concludes in Greek with the first verse, which we have in the following chapter, though some editions seem (H.) to have had that remark (D.) of the Alexandrian Jews, (C.) at the head of the book. H.

ESTHER 11

Ver. 1. Cleopatra. So the kings and queens of Egypt were styled after Lagus; whence we can only gather, that this translation was brought after the reign of Alexander, and most probably under Philometer, the sixth of his successors. He was a great admirer of the Jews, and employed one Dositheus as his general, who might be the priest here mentioned; as such an office was not incompatible with his character. T.—Usher is of this opinion. See Jos. con. Ap. ii. But would he then be mentioned as if he had been a person almost unknown? C.—We may say that he only raised himself by merit, after this time. H.—Philometer reigned 177 years, B.C. The Sept. (C.) who gave their version in the 7th year of Philadelphus, (S. Epip.) were not the authors of the Greek edition of Esther; (C.) or perhaps, they may have adopted this of Lysimachus, (Huet. D.) as far as it went; the letter of Purim being only the groundwork of this history. If they did, Lysimachus must have lived before the time of Philometer; or what seems as probable, (H.) that the celebrated version has been made by different authors, and at different times. Hody.—Jerusalem. Here S. Jerom subjoins, "This beginning was also in the Vulg. edition, which does not occur in Hebrew or any interpreter," (H.) except the Sept. W.—This must be referred to what follows.

Ver. 2. Second year, the same when Darius gave an edict for building the temple, (1 Esd. 4. T.) and the year before the great feast, (C. 1:3) when the Jews little thought of such danger hanging over them. C. W.—Benjamin. C. 2:5 we read Jemini, which shews that they have the same import. T.

Ver. 3. Court, afterwards. C.—He had a dream in the second year. Houbigant.

Ver. 4. Juda. This has been noticed already. C. 2:5. But we need not be surprized at such repetitions. We find the like in the books of Moses, and 1 K. 16:10 and 17:12. &c. H.—S. Jerom says, “Librum Esther variis translatoribus constat esse vitiatum,” or, various historical documents may have been improperly inserted in the Greek, though they be true; and therefore S. Jerom has rightly removed the to the end. Houbigant.

Ver. 7. Cry. While Aman was full of indignation against Mardochai, and the latter would not submit to adore him, the various nations of the empire were instigated to fall upon the Jews. H.

Ver. 10. Waters. Esther, by her tears, extinguished the rising flame. W.

Ver. 11. Rose up. A bright sun (T.) represented God, (C.) or the king. Grotius.

Ver. 12. Signify. He was convinced that it was from heaven. C.

ESTHER 12

Ver. 1. At that time, is not in Greek. Capellus therefore argues in vain against the Greek author, as if this event took place in the 2d year. Houbigant.—The expression often occurs in Scripture, without determining the precise time. H.

Ver. 2. When. Gr. “for he heart their deliberations.”—Told, by the mouth of Esther. C. 2:21. H.

Ver. 5. Palace, as an officer.—Presents, of small value. C.—The king had inquired, (Gr. C. 6:3.) “What glory or favour have we done to Mardochai? and the ministers replied: Thou hast done nothing to him,” to honour him as he deserves.

Ver. 6. Bugite, may refer to some town of Macedon. C. 3:1.—Honour. Yet he might be still more exalted, after the conspiracy was detected; (Houbig.) as the king little suspected that he was concerned in it. H.—Death. It is thought that they wished to place Aman, or some Macedonian, on the throne. C. 16:12. 14. C.—This reason for the malevolence of Aman, might be unknown to Mardochai. C. 13:12. Houbigant.—The former was either a favourer of traitors, or perhaps of the same conspiracy. W.

ESTHER 13

Ver. 1. “Hitherto,” S. Jerom observes, “the preface extends. What follows, was placed in that part of the volume where it is written, And they, &c. (C. 3:13 where the edict should naturally appear. C.) which we have found only in the Vulg. edition.” H.—Josephus produces this edict at length, but with some variations, (C.) which are of no importance. H.

Ver. 2. World. This is an exaggeration. Princes are flattered with high titles, but none more so than those of the East. C.—Quietly. Lit. “in silence.” Gr. “undisturbed by the stormy billows, (ακυμαντους) at all times; and that the kingdom might be rendered quiet, and the roads unmolested, to the very extremities; that peace, which is desired by all men, may be renewed.” How amiable are these dispositions, which ought to be cherished by all princes! We might then hope soon to see peace restored. H.

Ver. 3. After. Gr. “of all kingdoms as a reward, Aman shewed me,” &c. Josephus, “the second after me, for his fidelity and confirmed good will.” C.—It is a great hurt for a king to be governed by one counsellor. Prov. 15:22. W.

Ver. 4. A people. Gr. “a certain perverse people, mixed with every tribe through,” &c.—New. Gr. “opposite to those of every nation, which always casteth aside the edicts of the kings, so that we cannot extend to them that upright and blameless dominion which we exercise over you.”

Ver. 6. Second. Gr. “our second father.” C.—Compl. “the second after us, shall be all extirpated by,” &c. H.—This king is represented as very stupidly giving orders for the destruction of a nation which he never names; (Capel.) but he intimates that Aman would do it, in whom he placed the most unbounded confidence. H.—If the latter had any suspicions of the queen’s being of that nation, he might very prudently abstain from mentioning the Jews even to the king, contenting himself with describing them so that they would easily be known by his agents; and, in effect, the king sufficiently pointed out the Jews, by saying that they followed laws different from all the world. Houbigant.—Infidels generally represent them as a wicked race, enemies to all but their own nation. Tacitus, &c.—We need not wonder if Catholics be painted in the same colours, as the devil is still the same. H.—Fourteenth. Josephus has the same day, though the 13th is specified in Heb. &c. (C. 3:12) and in the Gr. and Vulg. C. 16:20. We must, therefore, allow that the Jews might be slaughtered on both days, or that the Greek is incorrect in this place. C.—Salien thinks it would not be lawful to spare the Jews any longer than the 14th day; (M.) or the carnage was to cease on the 14th, as it did at Susa. C. 9:17. 19. T.

Ver. 7. Hell. Prot. “grave.” The king only wanted to send them out of this world. At the end of this verse, S. Jerom says, “Hitherto is given the copy of the epistle. I found what follows after that place where we read, So Mardochai, &c. (C. 4:17) yet it is not in Heb. nor does it appear in any of the interpreters.” H.—He means, Aquila, &c. For he plainly asserts before, that it was in the Septuagint, which he calls the Vulgate; and all know that his version was taken from the Heb. The Church reads this prayer of Mardochai, (T.) in the mass, against pagans, (W.) and 21st Sunday after Pentecost, &c. so that this is a part of Scripture which the Council of Trent will not suffer to be rejected. T.

Ver. 14. To a man; “as if,” says Capellus, “the salutation and civil honour be not quite different from adoration and religious worship, which must be given to God alone. Neither did Haman demand religious adoration, but only salutation and civil honour ... To bend the knee is frequently used in civil honour, nor is it necessarily understood of religious worship.” May our English Protestants deign to borrow this grain of common sense from one their foreign brethren, when they attempt to impugn the respect given by Catholics to the saints. H.—“We grant that Aman did not require religious worship: but as the civil respect which he claimed, was to be performed in the same manner as the Jews worshipped God, Mardochai would not wound his own conscience, or that of his people.” Houbigant.—Yet it is by no means clear that Aman did not insist on being worshipped as a god. It is evident that Mardochai understood him, at least, in that light. C. 3:2. H.

Ver. 17. Inheritance. Lit. “line,” (H.) as it was usual to measure land with lines. M.

ESTHER 14

Ver. 1. Fearing. Gr. “caught in the agony of death.” The old Vulgate has many variations in this chapter. C.—This prayer should be placed after that of Mardochai, at the end of C. 4. M.

Ver. 2. Ointments. Gr. “instead of the proud sweets, she filled her head with ashes and dust.” Such as might be soon cleansed again. H.—Torn. Gr. “curled hair,” (στραπτων τριχηων. H.) some of which she cut off. See Lev. 19:27 and 21:5. Houbig.

Ver. 4. Hands; very imminent. I am ready to expose my life. Ps. 118:109. C.

Ver. 5. Heard. Old Vulg. often repeats, “from the books of my fathers;” adducing the various instances of protection which God had shewn to his people, Noe, Abraham, Jonas, the three children, Daniel, Ezechias, and Anna: which intimates that Esther made the sacred books the subject of her frequent meditations, as good people ought to do. H.

Ver. 7. For. Gr. “since we have extolled,” &c. Esther had not been guilty herself of this prevarication; but too many of the people had. H.

Ver. 8. But. Gr. Compl. “Yea, thou hast placed (or rather as the Alex. MS. reads, they have placed) their hands upon the hands of their idols, (H. making league together. C.) to tear away the decree of thy mouth,” (H.) and to put in execution the projects of (M.) the devil. H.

Ver. 10. Idols. Gr. “of the vain things, and to render wonderful for ever,” &c.

Ver. 11. Not idols, as they are often here designated, (C. and 1 Cor. 8) being only the imaginations of men. W.—Destroy. Gr. “Make an example of the man, who had begun (H. evils. C.) against us.” H.—She throws the blame upon Aman, and not upon her husband. C.

Ver. 12. Gods. Gr. “nations, and Lord of all power.” H.

Ver. 13. Lion. This expression seems not sufficiently respectful. Capellus.—But why might not Esther use it with regard to one, who was raging against her people more than any lion, as S. Paul applies it to Nero, probably after her example? Houbigant. 2 Tim. 4:17.—David also thus styles Saul and his persecutors in general. Ps. 7:3. &c. C.

Ver. 15. Stranger. Only those near Chanaan were forbidden to marry; and S. Paul commends Eunice, who had espoused an infidel. Capel.—But this was not the reason of his commendation; for he ordains, Bear not the yoke with infidels. A pious woman might, therefore, very well refrain from such contracts, to which the Jews, at this time, were in a manner forced. Still Esther might have a conjugal love for her husband, (Houbig.) though she would have preferred to marry one poorer of her own religion; and here she only submitted to the designs of God, in raising her to such an elevated station. M.

Ver. 16. Sign. The diadem. It was no sin to wear it. Capel.—What then? May not a pious prince despise such ornaments, raising his mind above them? Houbig.—Silence, when I am alone. Nothing could give us a higher idea of Esther's virtue and greatness of soul, as her elevation did not make her forget herself. C.

Ver. 17. Me. Ought she to have been thus affected towards her husband? Capel.—Undoubtedly: as the meats and the wine had been offered to idols. Houbig.

ESTHER 15

Ver. 1. S. Jerom says, "These additions I also found in the Vulg. edition." H.—This history is more succinctly related. C. 5. C.—Her. Lit. "And he commanded her (no doubt Mardochai did Esther) to go," &c. The parenthesis was added by S. Jerom. H.

Ver. 2. Remember. This is not here in Greek, but more regularly. C. 4:8. C.

Ver. 3. Death. S. Jerom subjoins, I found there "also what follows."

Ver. 4. Day. Gr. adds, "as she had finished her prayer."—Wore. Lit. "of her ornament." But the Greek has properly, (H.) "of her mourning." M.

Ver. 5. Glittering. Gr. "and was resplendent after," &c.

Ver. 6. As if. Gr. "as being delicate. But the other followed, holding up her garment. But she, blushing in the height of her beauty, with a cheerful and most lovely countenance, felt the pressure of fear on her heart."

Ver. 10. Eyes. Gr. adds, "with glory," with which he was surrounded. This made him at first resent the coming in of women uncalled, till her perceived Esther, and saw her fainting. H.—Capellus would represent this conduct of the king as ridiculous, and contrary to the true history. But this is false: and he improperly renders αἰωνιασας, regem concidisse & animo defecisse; as if the king had fallen down in a swoon; whereas it only means that he experienced those sentiments of anxiety which every good husband would do on the like occasion. Houbig. C. 5:2.—Assuerus had at first only perceived the maid, who went before the queen, and the hall was very spacious. Houbig.—Pale. Gr. “in a fainting-fit, and she leaned upon the head of her maid, (Abra.) who was going before.”

Ver. 11. All. Gr. “being in an agony, he,” &c.—Caressed. Gr. “comforted her with words of peace, and said to her, What,” &c. H.

Ver. 12. Brother; (united by the closest bands. Cant. 8:1. C.) Gr. “Take courage, Thou,” &c.

Ver. 13. Others, is not expressed; (H.) and Esther might well suppose that she was included, as she probably was, (C. 4:11. Capellus) though the king now altered his mind. Houbig.—Gr. “our decree is common,” made for our subjects. According to the Roman law, the empress enjoyed the like privileges as her husband. C.

Ver. 14. Then. Gr. “and taking the golden septré, he laid,” &c.

Ver. 15. Why. Gr. “speak to me; and she said to him.” H.

Ver. 16. Angel. The Chaldees had the same notion as the Jews about angels; and the latter never shewed more devotion towards them than after the captivity, when the Scriptures speak more plainly on this subject. Jacob compares his brother Esau to an angel, (C.) or to God. Gen. 33:10. See also 1 K. 29:9 and 2 K. 14:17. H.

Ver. 18. Almost. Lit. “almost dead.” Gr. “she fell in a fainting fit.”

ESTHER 16

Ver. 1. From India to Ethiopia. That is, who reigneth from India to Ethiopia. Ch.—S. Jerom writes, “The copy of the letter of king Artaxerxes, which he wrote in favour of the Jews, to all the provinces of his kingdom, which also is not in the Heb. volume.” It should properly occur, C. 8:13, as it does in Greek. The edict is well written in that language, which has induced a belief that it is not a translation. C.—But that is no very strong argument. H.

Ver. 2. Princes. Gr. “Beneficent.” Luke 22:25. C.—Gr. “Many of those who have been the most honoured by the kindness of the beneficent, have increased in folly, and not only endeavour to injure our subjects, but, unable to hear the weight of favours, devise schemes against their benefactors.”

Ver. 4. Neither. Gr. “And they not only take away gratitude from among men, but elated with good fortune, which they had not before experienced, they flatter themselves that they will escape the sentence of an all-seeing God, levelled against the wicked.” H.—Artaxerxes insists with reason on the ingratitude of Aman, as it was a crime punishable by their laws; (Cyrop. i. Brisson ii. p. 250.) and the Persian kings were particularly careful to reward those who had done them good. C.

Ver. 5. And. Gr. “For oftentimes fair speeches, or (H.) revenge, (παράμυθια. Isai. 1:24. C.) has made several of those who have been in authority, and entrusted with the affairs of their friends, partakers in the spilling of innocent blood, and involved them in irremediable calamities, by the wicked craft of those who purposely lead astray the unsuspecting benevolence of governors.” H.—Josephus (xi. 3.) gives nearly the same sense: (C.) “For some of these, being placed in power by their friends, and bearing a private hatred towards some, have deluded their princes by false reasons, and by accusations have persuaded them to stir up the wrath of those who have done no wrong; on which account, they have been in danger of perishing.” This author was not, therefore, unacquainted with the fragment, or part of the history, before us. H.

Ver. 7. Proved. Gr. “may be seen, not so much from ancient histories, as we have observed, but more so, if ye examine what wicked things have been done recently, by the fault (or cruelty) of those who have been unworthily in command: and if ye attend, in future, that we may without trouble settle our kingdom in peace for all men. For though we make some changes, yet we make a discernment of what falls under our inspection, and other things with more equity.” He intimates that the former decree of Aman had been subreptitious.

Ver. 10. Now. Gr. “For as Aman, of Amadathos, a Macedonian, a stranger to the real blood of the Persians, and of a very different character from our goodness, and who, though a stranger to us, partook of that philanthropy which we have for every nation, insomuch as to be styled,” &c. H.—At this time the Macedonians were hardly known. Capel.—But this may be questioned, as their kingdom was of ancient date. Houbigant.—some think that the Asiatic Macedonians may be designated. Hardouin. Pliny v. 30. 31.—These, however, may have been so called only after the conquests of Alexander. This king fought against the Greeks, of whom the Macedonians formed a part. T.—The name may here be placed only for a stranger. C.—Staining. The faults of ministers often redound to the disgrace of those who employ them. M.

Ver. 12. Life. This he might only suspect; (C.) or his machinations with the two porters, might be declared after his disgrace. H.—Capellus thinks it improbable that Aman intended to murder the queen, as he was so much elated at being invited by her to a feast, &c. But his schemes were various: (Houbig.) and who can pretend to say what would have satisfied his cruelty and ambition? H.

Ver. 14. Without. Gr. “abandoned.” H.—Macedonians; or to himself, who was of that nation. It was not necessary to call over forces, as Capellus would suppose.

Ver. 16. God. Cyrus had styled him, “the God of heaven.” Houbig. 1 Esd. 1. H.—But Darius embraced the true religion, and adored God. T.—Fathers. “Hystaspes was not a descendant of Cyrus, but he was of the same royal stock.” Just. i. Herod. iii. 85.—And is. Gr. “by the best disposition. You will therefore do well not to make use of the letter, sent by Aman.” The edict could not be repealed; (Capel. Houbig.) though this seems doubtful, when it was manifestly subreptitious, (M.) unjust, and not sealed by the nobles. C.

Ver. 18. Gibbets. Aman was thus treated, several months before his ten sons. C. 7:10 and 9:6. Yet all the family might still be seen hanging, when this edict was dispatched. Houbigant suspects that this and the following verses properly belong to the letter written by Esther and Mardochai. The arguments are not very cogent. H.

Ver. 19. Laws. This was privilege often desired. Joseph. xiii.4.

Ver. 20. Kill. Gr. “take revenge on those who in the day of distress shall fall upon them, on the 13th.”

Ver. 21. Sadness. Gr. “destruction of his chosen race, into,” &c. H.

Ver. 22. Days. A festival was kept in memory of the destruction of the maji, in which this king was a principal actor. Herod. iii. 79.—The Persians were ordered to keep the 13th of Adar, on account of the preservation of the royal family, and the ruin of a great enemy. C.

Ver. 23. All. Gr. “Salvation is to us, and to all well-affected Persians: but a memorial of destruction to all who are traitors to us.”

Ver. 24. And. Gr. “But every country or city throughout the kingdom, which shall not comply, shall be consumed with the spear and fire in wrath.”—Beasts. Gr. adds hyperbolically, “and birds, and also be accounted most abominable for ever.” H.—Similar expressions occur in the prophets, to denote an entire destruction. Jer. 9:10. &c. Mardochai and Esther have left us in this work the most perfect example of virtue. The latter is given us a pattern of Christian sovereigns, and a figure of the Church. S. Jerom ad Paulin. (C.) and prol. in Sophon.—Like Judith, she proved the salvation of her people, and the ruin of their adversaries. Nothing could be more striking, (W.) or visible, than the hand of God in these transactions. H.—Esther was also a type of the blessed Virgin, by whose intercession the head of the serpent is crushed, and letters of grace succeed to the handwriting that stood against us. S. Thomas, prol. in ep. Cath. W.

JOB

THE BOOK OF JOB

INTRODUCTION

This Book takes its name from the holy man, of whom it treats; who, according to the more probable opinion, was of the race of Esau, and the same as Jobab, king of Edom, mentioned Gen. 36:33. It is uncertain who was the writer of it. Some attribute it to Job himself; others to Moses, or some one of the prophets. In the Hebrew it is written in verse, from the beginning of the third chapter to the forty-second chapter. Ch.—The beginning and conclusion are historical, and in prose. Some have divided this work into a kind of tragedy, the first act extending to C. 15., the second to C. 22., the third to C. 38., where God appears, and the plot is unfolded. They suppose that the sentiments of the speakers are expressed, though not their own words. This may be very probable: but the opinion of those who look upon the work as a mere allegory, must be rejected with horror. The sacred writers speak of Job as of a personage who had really existed, (C.) and set the most noble pattern of virtue, and particularly of patience. Tob. 2:12. Ezech. 14:14. Jam. 5:11. Philo and Josephus pass over this history, as they do those of Tobias, Judith, &c. H.—The time when Job lived is not clearly ascertained. Some have supposed (C.) that he was a contemporary with Esther; (D. Thalmud) on which supposition, the work is here placed in its chronological order. But Job more probably live during the period when the Hebrews groaned under the Egyptian bondage, (H.) or sojourned in the wilderness. Num. 14:9. The Syrians place the book at the head of the Scriptures. C.—Its situation has often varied, and is of no great importance. The subject which is here treated, is of far more; as it is intended to shew that the wicked sometimes prosper, while the good are afflicted. H.—This had seldom been witnessed before the days of Abraham: but as God had now selected his family to be witnesses and guardians of religion, a new order of things was beginning to appear. This greatly perplexed Job himself; who, therefore, confesses that he had not sufficiently understood the ways of God, till he had deigned to explain them in the parable of the two great beasts. C. 42:3. We cannot condemn the sentiments expressed by Job, since God has declared that they were right, (ib. 5:8) and reprimands Elihu, (C. 38:2) and the other three friends of Job, for maintaining a false opinion, though, from the history of past times, they had judge it to be true. This remark may exculpate them from the stain of wilful lying, and vain declamation. Houbigant.—However, as they assert what was false, their words of themselves are of no authority; and they are even considered as the forerunners of heretics. S. Greg. S. Aug. &c. T.—Job refutes them by sound logic. S. Jerom.—We may discover in this book the sum of Christian morality, (W.) for which purpose it has been chiefly explained by S. Gregory. The style is very poetical, (H.) though at the same time simple, like that of Moses. D.—It is interspersed with many Arabic and Chaldaic idioms; (S. Jer.) whence some have concluded, that it was written originally by Job and his friends (H.) in Arabic, and translated into Heb. by Moses, for the consolation of his brethren. W.—The Heb. text is in many places incorrect; (Houbig.) and the Sept. seem to have omitted several verses. Orig.—S. Jerom says almost eight hundred, (C.) each consisting of about six words. H.—Shultens, in 1747, expressed his dissatisfaction with the labours of all preceding commentators. To explain this book may not therefore be an easy task: but we must be as short as possible. H.—Those who desire farther information, may consult Pineda, (W.) whose voluminous work, in two folios, will nearly (H.) give all necessary information. C.

Ver. 1. Hus. The land of Hus was a part of Edom; as appears from Lament. 4:21.—Simple. That is, innocent, sincere, and without guile, (Ch.) in opposition to hypocrites and double dealers. C.—Heb. Tam, “perfect.”

Ver. 3. Sheep. Heb. including “goats,” which are equally valuable in that country for milk.—Camels. These animals were used for riding in those barren sands, where they can travel for four days without water; and that which is muddy is best for them.—East, in the desert Arabia. Sept. add at the end of the book, that Job was king; and he seems to have been independent, (C.) and to have had other kings who acknowledged his authority. Pineda. C. 29:7. &c.—Each city had its own king in the days of Abraham and of Josue. Job, or Jobab, resided at Denaba. Gen. 36:32. C.

Ver. 4. His day of the week in succession; (Pineda) or each on his birthday, (Gen. 40:20. Mat. 14:6. Grot.) or once a month, &c. The daughters of Job were probably unmarried.

Ver. 5. Blessed. For greater horror of the very thought of blasphemy, the Scripture both here and v. 11, and in the following chapter (5:5 and 9) uses the word bless, to signify its contrary. Ch. 3 K. 21:10.—Thus the Greeks styled the furies Eumenides, “the kind,” out of a horror of their real name. Even those who are the best inclined, can hardly speak of God without some want of respect, (C.) in the midst of feasts, where the neglect of saying grace is also too common. H.—Sept. “they have thought evil against God.” Every kind of offence may be included, to which feasting leads. M.

Ver. 6. The sons of God. The angels, (Ch.) as the Sept. express it. C.—Satan also, &c. This passage represents to us in a figure, accommodated to the ways and understandings of men, 1. The restless endeavours of satan against the servants of God. 2. That he can do nothing without God’s permission. 3. That God doth not permit him to tempt them above their strength: but assists them by his divine grace in such manner, that the vain efforts of the enemy only serve to illustrate their virtue and increase their merit. Ch.—A similar prosopopeia occurs, 3 K. 22:19. Zac. 1:10. C.—Devils appear not in God’s sight, but sometimes in presence of angels, who represent God. S. Athan. q. 8. ad Antioch, (W.) or some ancient author.—The good angels can make known their orders to them. Zac. 3:1. Jude 9. Both good and bad spirits may be considered as the ministers of God. C.—They appear in judgment; though the latter could not see the Lord.

Ver. 9. In vain, without recompense. H.

Ver. 11. Face, like a hypocrite, (Sanctius) or rather curse thee openly,

Ver. 12. Hand. God permits evils. W.—The devil can do nothing without leave. C.

Ver. 15. Sabeans, descended from Abraham, in the desert (C.) or happy Arabia. These nations lived on plunder. Pliny vi. 28. M.

Ver. 16. Heaven, or the air, where the devils exercise a power. Ephes. 2:2.

Ver. 17. Chaldeans. Some copies of the Sept. read “horsemen.” These nations inhabited the other side of the Euphrates, but made frequent incursions to plunder their neighbours. C.

Ver. 20. Head. Heb. torn his hair, and rolled in the dust. Bochart. Isai. 15:2. &c. C.—The fathers oppose this example to the apathy of the stoics. S. Aug. de Civ. Dei. i. 9. Rom. 1:31.

Ver. 21. Thither. To that earth from which all are taken. H.—Ista terra gentes omnes peperit & resumet demum. Varro.—Ut ater operiens. Pliny ii. 63. See 1 Tim. 6:7.—As ... done. Some copies of S. Jerom omit this, which is borrowed from the Sept. C.

Ver. 22. By his lips, is not in Heb. but occurs C. 2:10.—God. Much less did he blaspheme, as satan had said, v. 11. He did not consider all as the effect of chance, or like a mere philosopher. His thoughts were regulated by religion and the fear of God. C.—The virtue of Job was so much the more wonderful, as he lived among the wicked. S. Greg. He bore patiently with the loss of all things: and English Catholics have often imitated him. W.—He might well record his own good actions, the gifts of God, being moved by divine inspiration, like Moses, &c. S. Greg.

JOB 2

Ver. 1. Day. Job had been under trial for some time, perhaps a year. C.

Ver. 2. Through it. Seeking whom he might devour. 1 Pet. 5:8. H.

Ver. 3. Simple. Plain-dealing, mild, and without guile. S. Greg. W.—Without cause. This may form a new sentence. H.—Thy proposal and attempts are vain. C.—Job has not deserved this treatment. S. Chrys. &c.

Ver. 4. Skin: a proverbial expressing, denoting that a man will part with any thing sooner than his life, (C.) or health. H.—Satan hints, that if those inestimable blessings should be endangered, (C.) Job would shew his real sentiments. H.—Skin was formerly used instead of money, at Sparta. Senec. Ben. v. 14. &c. Yet perhaps not in the time of Job.

Ver. 6. Life. Afflict him with any species of illness; but do not kill him, (C.) nor inspire him directly with wicked thoughts. Grot.

Ver. 7. Ulcer; the leprosy: and even with that species which is called the venereal disease, which may be contracted without any crime. Job was afflicted with a complication of the most painful and disgraceful disorders. Pineda. C.

Ver. 8. Potsherd. His nails were worn, and poverty had left him nothing else.—Dunghill. Heb. “ashes.” H.—S. Chrysostom represents this place as visited by pilgrims, instructive and more brilliant than any throne. Hom. 5. ad Pop. Ant.—Sept. add, “upon the dung, without the city: and after a long time had elapsed, his wife also said to him, How long wilt thou wait, saying: Lo, I will still tarry a little while, expecting the hope of my salvation? For behold thy memory is perished from the land, thy sons and daughters, the pains and labours of my womb, whom I brought forth in labour and sorrow, to no purpose. But thou sittest in the open air, the night long, amid the corruption of worms, while I wander like a slave, seeking for one place and house after another, in expectation of the sun setting, that my labours may cease, and the sorrows which now surround and hold me fast. But speak thou some word to (or against) the Lord, and die.” H.—This addition has been omitted in the Comp. edition, to make it like the Vulg. (C.) though it is found in all the Greek copies (Nobilius) and fathers, and also in several Latin Bibles. It seems, however, to be only a gloss of some transcriber. The devil had not destroyed this wife, as she would prove one of his most powerful auxiliaries. C.

Ver. 9. Bless. She speaks with cruel irony. C.—Curse God, that he may take away (S. Basil) thy miserable life; or, after taking this revenge on such unjust treatment, put an end to thy own existence. Beza and Amama excuse this woman, though condemned by Job. They pretend that she only meant to insinuate, like the rest of his friends, that he must be guilty of some grievous crime, which she urges him to confess, giving glory to God, before it be too late. H.

Ver. 10. Foolish. The same word often means impious, (C. 1:22) and ignorant, (H.) or “delirious.” Aquila. Ps. 13:1.—Lips. The Jews assert, without reason, that he was guilty in his heart. C.

Ver. 12. Heaven. This denoted mourning or indignation. Jos. 7:6. Acts 22:23.

Ver. 13. Seven days, &c. They sat with him for a good part of the day, and of the night, during seven days: and spoke nothing all that time that could give him any uneasiness. Ch. M. Olympiad.—They mourned for him as if he had been dead. Their mutual grief was too great for utterance. But the text seems to intimate that they remained with Job, all this time. Scultet. C.—Their design in coming was really to afford him consolation; but being under a mistake, respecting the conduct of Providence towards mankind, (C.) they erred involuntarily, (T.) and by attempting to prove their assertions, as if none but criminals could be so grievously afflicted, they eventually insulted the holy man. Tob. 2:15.—They argued on the principle, “that under a just God no one is miserable, unless he have deserved it;” not reflecting that god sometimes puts his best servants to the trial, that their merit and glory may increase. Notwithstanding their piety and learning, they became therefore the devil’s most powerful agents unawares: (C.) and though they were not properly heretics, as they acquiesced when better informed, they were a figure of them, by drawing from many undeniable truths false inferences, and by a parade of learning, and of new things. S. Greg. Mor. iii. 24. and v. 18.—They also judged rashly of Job’s secret behaviour. W.

Ver. 1. Cursed his day. Job cursed the day of his birth, not by way of wishing evil to any thing of God's creation; but only to express in a stronger manner his sense of human miseries in general, and of his own calamities in particular. Ch.—He has these only in view: though, in another light, it is better for a man to be born, and to undergo any misery, that he may obtain eternal rewards. H.—Some allowances must be made for extreme pain, and for the style of the Eastern (C.) poetry. H.—Jeremias, (20:14.) Habacuc, (1:2) the psalmist, and even our Saviour in his agony, made use of such strong expressions. Mat. 26:39 and 27:46. Some heretics accuse Job of impatience and blasphemy. The devil, therefore came off with victory; and the praises given to Job's patience are false. He might offend by some degree of exaggeration. C.—But even that is by no means clear. Time past could not be recalled, nor receive any injury by the maledictions. H.

Ver. 7. Praise, by the appearance of the stars. C. 38:7. C.

Ver. 8. Day. The nations of Ethiopia, under the line, curse the sun as their greatest enemy. Strabo xvii. Pliny v. 8.—They also brave the fury of the leviathan or crocodile. C. 40:27 and 41:1. Ps. 73:14. The natives of Tentyra, upon the Nile, were supposed to be a terror to that monster, or they were very courageous in entangling and pursuing it. Seneca q. 4. 2. Pliny viii. 25.—Leviathan. Prot. "their mourning." De Dieu rejects this interpretation, substituting "and thou, leviathan, rouse up," &c. The fathers generally understand the devil to be thus designated. Sept. "he who is about to seize the great whale," (H.) or fish, which they also explain of the conflict of Satan with Jesus Christ." Origen, &c.

Ver. 10. Nor took. Sept. "for it would then have freed my eyes from labour."

Ver. 11. In the. Heb. "from the womb," (H.) or as soon as I was born. C.—He seems to have lost sight of original sin, (v. 1) or there might be some method of having it remitted to children unborn, which we do not know. H.

Ver. 12. Knees, by my father or grandfather. Gen. 30:3. Iliad ix. C.

Ver. 13. Sleep. So death is often styled.

Olli dura quies oculos et ferreus urget

Somnus: in æternam clauduntur lumina noctem. Æneid x.

Ver. 14. Consuls. Heb. "counsellors," or any in great authority. Sept. "kings, the counsellors of the land, who rejoiced, boasting of their swords." The same word, choraboth, (H.) means both swords and solitudes. D.—Those great ones had prepared their own tombs, which were usually in solitary places; (C.) or they had filled all with their extensive palaces; and removed the people to a distance. H.

Ver. 15. Houses, while alive; (C.) or their tombs were thus enriched with silver, (M.) as this practice was not uncommon, v. 22. Joseph. xiii. 15.—Marcian forbade it. S. Chrys. complains it subsisted in his time. Orat. Annæ. C.

Ver. 16. Light; dying in the womb. He expresses a desire that he had been thus prevented from feeling his present miseries and danger of sin. H.

Ver. 17. Tumult. In the grave they can no longer disturb the world. M. —In strength. Sept. “in body.” Both heroes and labourers then find rest, (C.) if they have lived virtuously. H.

Ver. 18. Bound in chains, like incorrigible slaves, (C.) or debtors. Cocceius.—These were formerly treated with great severity. Luke 12:59. C.

Ver. 21. Not. They feel the same eagerness for death as those who seek for a treasure; (C.) and when death is at hand, they rejoice no less than those who discover a grave, in which they hope to find some riches, v. 15, 22.

Ver. 22. Grave, full of stores, or the place where they may repose. H.

Ver. 23. To. Why is life given to? &c. The uncertainty whether a man be worthy of love or hatred, (Eccl. 9:1) and whether he will persevere to the end, is what fills Job with distress; though we must trust that God will suffer none to be tempted above their strength. 1 Cor. 10:13. —He finds himself surrounded with precipices, and in the dark. C.—So God often tries this faithful servants. D.

Ver. 24. Sigh, through difficulty of swallowing, (Pineda) or sense of misery. H.

Ver. 25. Fear. In prosperity he feared the assaults of pride. Now he is in danger of yielding to impatience and despair. C.

Ver. 26. Dissembled my sufferings, making no complaint, not only during the seven days that his friends had been with him, but long before. Heb. and Sept. “I was not in safety, nor at rest; neither was I indolent: (H. in the administration of affairs. C.) yet trouble came.” H. —I have enjoyed no peace, since the wrath of the Lord has found me. C.—In such a situation, Job might well beg to be delivered, (H.) and to pray that those things which obstructed his repose in God might be removed; considering them not so much as the works of God, as the effects of sin. Pineda. W.—In this light he cursed his birth-day, and will no longer look upon it as a joyful and happy day. D.

Ver. 1. Themanite. People of this city, about twelve miles from Petra, in Arabia, were renowned for wisdom. Jer. 49:7. Bar. 2:22. Pythagoras therefore visited this country. S. Cyr. con. Jul. x.—Eliphaz attempts to prove that no innocent person is chastised. He does not speak of small faults, to which any person may be exposed, and which God may severely punish. But he will have Job to be a great offender, at least in secret, and represents himself in too advantageous a light; though he was really a good man, and meant well. C.—But this did not exempt him from sin, (C. 42) no more than Eliu. C. 32. Bonum ex integra causa; malum ex quolibet defectu; as theologians agree. H.

Ver. 2. Conceived? and to which the speech of Job had given occasion. M.—Sept. “Who shall bear the force of thy words? For if thou,” &c. H.

Ver. 4. Knees. It is just that thou shouldst apply thy instructions to thyself. M.

Ver. 5. And thou. Sept. “and has touched thee. But thou makest haste” (H.) to flee. Heb. “art consternated.” We may easily prescribe for others, but when we are sick we know not what to do. C.

Ver. 6. Where? Sept. “Rather is not thy fear foolishness as well as thy hope, and the innocence of thy path?” H.—Is not all hypocrisy? M. C.—Many of the assertions of Job’s friends are true, but their inferences are false. M.

Ver. 7. Destroyed? They never were eternally. But Abel and many other just persons, have been exposed to tribulation in this world, (W.) for their greater improvement. Yet Eliphaz falsely concludes from the sufferings of Job, that he must have been a criminal. C.—If any one should now hold the same opinion, we should deem him very ignorant or foolish. But we have observed, (Pref.) that this was not so obvious at that time. Cain, the giants, Her, Onan, Sodom, &c. had been made examples of divine vengeance. But a new order of things was now commencing. Houbigant.

Ver. 8. Reap them. He insinuates that Job now reaps what he had sown. Gal. 6:8.

Ver. 11. Tiger. Heb. Layish, means also an “old lion.” Sept. μυρηκολεων, “ant-lion,” which some have deemed fabulous, improperly. Bochart, vi. 5. Ælian, xvii. 42.—Eliphaz tacitly accuses Job of violence and pride. Ven. Bede. C.

Ver. 12. Private. Heretics pretend such obscure visions, rather to get credit than to edify others. S. Greg. v. 18. W.—Many suppose that Eliphaz was guilty of feigning; but the greatest part think that he had truly seen a vision, but did not draw the proper conclusion from it. C.—Prot. “Now a thing was secretly brought to me, and mine ear received a little thereof.” H.

Ver. 13. The horror. Heb. “thoughts,” while I considered the cause of thy distress. C.

Ver. 15. Spirit: angel, or gentle breeze. C.

Ver. 16. And I. Prot. “there was silence, and I heard a voice.” Marg. “a still voice.” Sept. “But I heard a breeze and a voice.” H.

Ver. 17. Maker. It is thought that these were the words of the angel. If God punish without cause, may not the sufferer esteem himself the better of the two? You must therefore be guilty. C.—Job would never dispute; but God was infinitely more pure than man, who may nevertheless be free from grievous sins. W.—The highest angel has nothing but what he has received from God, in comparison with whom he is still as a mere nothing. But this does not prove that Job was a criminal, or that he pretended to arrogate to himself any excellence, independent of the giver of all good gifts. He did not assert that he was impeccable: yet, with God’s grace, he might be innocent. C.

Ver. 18. Angels, who fell, as the fathers explain it. E. T.—Heb. “behold, he put no trust in his servants, and his angels he charged with folly.” C. 15:15 and 25:5 and 2 Pet. 2:4. Prot. H.

Ver. 19. Foundation. Children of Adam, whose bodies are taken from the dust. M.

Ver. 20. Understandeth. Heb. “regardeth.” Sept. “can help himself.” H.—Man is justly punished because he does not reflect on what he ought. C.

Ver. 21. And they. Heb. “doth not their dignity pass away with them? They die without wisdom.” H.—This is but too frequently the case of the great ones of this world, who never discern true from false riches. C.

Ver. 1. Saints. This is a proof of the invocation of the saints (C.) and angels. H.—The Jews often begged God to have mercy on them for the sake of the patriarchs. 2 Par. 6:42. C.—Eliphaz, therefore, exhorts Job, if he have any patron or angel, to bring him forward in his defence. M.—Sept. “Invoke now if any one will hear thee, or if thou perceive any of the holy angels,” (H.) as I have done. M.—He extols himself, to correct the pretended presumption of his friend, (C.) and other defects, which none will dare to deny, as he supposes. See S. Greg. v. 30. W.

Ver. 2. Foolish and ... little, here denote the wicked, as in the book of Proverbs. C.—He accuses Job of anger (M.) and folly. C.

Ver. 3. And I. Sept. “But presently their subsistence was eaten up.” I envied not their riches: but judged they would soon end. H.

Ver. 4. Gate, in judgment. M.

Ver. 6. Ground. If you had not sinned, you would not suffer. C.

Ver. 7. Bird. Heb. “sparks fly up.” H.—You can no more then expect to pass unpunished, since it is impossible for man to be innocent! (C.) and, at any rate, labour is inevitable. M.—We must gain our bread by the sweat of our brow. W.

Ver. 8. I will, or if I were in your place, I would sue for pardon. C.—Prot. “I would seek unto God,” (H.) under affliction. M.

Ver. 15. Mouth; detraction and calumny. C.

Ver. 19. In six, mentioned below; (M.) or in many, indefinitely. C.—Both during the six days of (M.) life, and at death, God’s grace delivers us. S. Greg. W.

Ver. 21. Scourge. Ecclus. (26:9 and 28:21) has the same expression. See Jam. 3:6. C.—Calamity, from robbers, as the Heb. shod, (H.) intimates. The word is rendered destruction, vastitate, v. 22. M.

Ver. 23. Stones, so as not to stumble; or, the rocks will be a retreat for thee.

Ver. 24. Beauty does not mean his wife, as some grossly imagine, (C.) but a house well ordered. M.—Heb. “thy habitation.” Yet Sanchez adopts the former sentiment. In effect, the habitation includes all the regulation of a wife and family. H.

Ver. 26. Abundance. “With loud lamentations.” De Dieu.—“In full age, like as a shock of corn cometh in its season.” Prot.—After a life spent in happiness, thy memory will not be obliterated. Many shall bewail thy loss. H.

Ver. 27. Which thou. Sept. “And what we have heard: but do thou reflect with thyself what thou hast done.” H.—What had been revealed to Eliphaz was very true. Yet his conclusions were unwarrantable. C.—How confidently does he speak of his own knowledge, and how great must have been his disappointment, when God condemned him of folly, and sent him to be the prayers of that very man whom he now considered as a wretched sinner! H.

Ver. 2. My sins, &c. In the Heb. my wrath. He does not mean to compare his sufferings with his real sins; but with the imaginary crimes which his friends falsely imputed to him: and especially with his wrath or grief, expressed in the third chapter, which they so much accused. Though, as he tells them here, it bore no proportion with the greatness of his calamity. Ch.—Job does not deny but he may have transgressed. C. See C. 7:20.—But his is not conscious of any mortal offence; such as his friends insisted he must have committed, as he was so cruelly tormented. H.—Some deny canonical authority to the words of Job, because God reprehended him. But S. Greg. (Mor. vii.) says, Ab æterno judice casurus laudari non potuit. D.—“The man who was on the point of falling, could not be praised by the eternal Judge;” (H.) and it seems to be a mistake that Job erred, (Houbig.) though asserted by many. See C. W. &c.—Wrath. Heb. “O that my grief (H. or complaints. C.) were thoroughly weighed, and my calamity laid in the balances together.” Prot. H.—A just man confesses his own sins, but not those which are wrongfully laid to his charge. W.

Ver. 3. Heavier. The figure hyperbole is frequently used in Scripture, to give us some idea of what surpasses our understanding. Job intimates that he punishment was incomparably greater than his sins. As he and other saints, particularly our Saviour and the blessed Virgin, have thus patiently suffered more than they had deserved, these merits form part of that treasure of the Church, out of which the pope and bishops are empowered to dispense indulgences, to release people from the pains due to sin, either in this world or in purgatory. W.—Sept. “Yea, these (sorrows) are heavier than the sand of the seashore.

But, it seems my words are wicked." H.

Ver. 4. Rage. Heb. "poison," (H.) or "venom;" (Chal. M.) as it was customary to use poisoned arrows. C.—Sept. "When I begin to speak, they pierce me. For what! Does the wild ass continually bray, except when he is in quest of food?" H.—It is easy for those to be silent who suffer nothing. The wild asses were so common in those parts, (C.) that Herod sometimes slew 40 in a hunt. Joseph. Bel. i. 16.—Many fabulous account have been given of them. Some are still found in Ethiopia resembling a mule, except in the ears, and beautifully striped with grey, black, and reddish colours. Bernier.

Ver. 6. Salt. I wonder not that you should consider my lamentations as insipid; I now find some consolation in them, v. 7. C.—Or can. Heb. "or is there any taste in the white of an egg?" (Prot.) or in blue milk? (Mercer) or "in the spittle, which a man swallows in a dream?" See Isai. 28:8. If pain did not extort these complaints, should I find any pleasure in them? C.—Sept. "is there any taste in vain words?" Can I hear your arguments without indignation? H. M.—Some MSS. add, "For to a hungry soul even bitter things appear to be sweet," from Prov. 27:7. C.

Ver. 9. Off, and release me from this state of misery and danger. H.—He is ready to die cheerfully, if it be God's will. C.—Sept. "May the Lord, who has begun, wound me, but not take me away finally. Yea, let my city, over which I have exulted, be my grave. I will not spare, for I have not belied a word of my holy God." H.

Ver. 11. End. Sept. "time." I am too weak and short-lived to bear all this. H.—I can perceive no end. M.—Keep. Prot. "prolong my life." H. —"What is the extent of my soul, to reach so far?" C.—Longanimity is the characteristic of a great soul. H.

Ver. 12. Brass. This is proverbial. Homer (Iliad A) says, "Attack the Greeks; their skin is neither of stone, (C.) iron, or brass." Those who are aware of their own frailty, ought not to expose themselves to dangerous company, particularly to those of the other sex.

Ver. 13. Myself. "Have I not placed my trust in him?" God alone. H.—All my other friends have abandoned me, v. 15. C.—Can they wonder if I express my grief? H.—Familiar. Heb. "is wisdom removed far from me?" H.—Has my strength abandoned me, so that I cannot be recognized? C.

Ver. 16. Them. They shall run from a less to a greater evil. C.—Sept. "Those who respected me, have now fallen upon me, like snow or ice;

(17) as when it is consumed with heat, it is no longer known where it was: (18) thus I have been abandoned by all, lost and expelled from my house.” Consider, (19) Heb. continues, in the comparison of the torrents, (15) “which are hidden by the ice and snow,” and are left dry and of no service in summer, when most wanted. H.—So these friends stood by me only in the days of my prosperity. C.—Luther and the Dutch version follow the Vulg. Amama says, improperly. He proposes that of Pagnin, “which (torrents) are darkened by the ice. Snow is concealed in (Mont. upon) them.” H.

Ver. 18. Entangled. Like meandering streams, my friends act crookedly. M.

Ver. 19. While. Till the torrents subside, when the caravans from these towns of Arabia may pass on. Job may also address his friends, (C.) and bid them consider how few had taken any notice of him. M.—Prot. “the troops of Tema looked, the companies of Sheba waited for them.”

Ver. 20. I. Heb. “they had hoped” to pass along. H.

Ver. 21. Come. Heb. “are good for nothing.” C.—Prot. marg. “like to them.”

Ver. 25. Why. Heb. “How strong are the words of truth!” C.—Whereas. Prot. “But what doth your arguing reprove?” What part of my discourse do you find erroneous? Sept. “But it seems the words of the man of truth are deceitful. Yet I do not beg from you (a word or) strength.” H.

Ver. 26. Wind. Job humbles the vanity of Eliphaz. C.—Sept. “nor shall your rebuke silence my words: for I will not admit the sound of your discourse. Nay, you rush,” &c.

Ver. 30. Mouth. He engages their attention. C.—Heb. “Cannot my taste discern perverse things,” (Prot. H.) or “the evil” which I endure? My complaints are not surely unfounded. C.

JOB 7

Ver. 1. Warfare. Heb. “is it not determined” (H.) for some short space, as the Levites had to serve from 30 to 50 years of age; (Num. 4:3 and 8:25) and the days of a hireling are also defined and short. Isai. 16:14. Amama.—No soldier or hireling was ever treated so severely as

Job. Yet they justly look for the term of their labours. Sept. have πειρασθιον. Old Vulg. tentatio. "Is not the life of man a temptation?" C.—Palæstra, school, or time given to learn the exercise of a soldier and wrestler; or of one who has to prepare himself for a spiritual warfare, and for heaven. H.—Are we not surrounded with dangers? and may we not desire to be set at liberty? The Vulg. is very accurate, (C.) and includes all these senses. H.—A soldier must be obedient even unto death, and never resist his superior. W.—Hireling, who has no rest till the day is spent. C.

Ver. 3. And have. Heb. "they have appointed for me." C.—God treats me with more severity, as even the night is not a time of rest for me, and my months of service are without any present recompense. H.

Ver. 4. And again. Heb. "and the night be completed, I toss to and fro," (H.) or "I am disturbed with dreams, (C.) till day break." Vulg. insinuates that night and day are equally restless to a man in extreme pain. H.—As I find no comfort, why may I not desire to die? M.—I desire to be dissolved, as being much better, said S. Paul.

Ver. 6. Web. Heb. "the weaver's shuttle." C. 16:23. Isa. 38:12. H.—The pagans have used the same comparison. But they make the three daughters of Necessity guide the thread of life. Plato Rep. xii. Natal. iii. 6.—Sept. "my life is swifter than speech." Tetrapla, "than a runner." C.—Hope. Heu fugit, &c. Ah! time is flying, never to return! H.

Ver. 7. Wind. What is life compared with eternity, or even with past ages? C.—"What is any one? Yea, what is no one? Men are the dream of a shadow," says Pindar; (Pyth. viii. Σκιᾶς ὄναρ ὀνθροποι) "like the baseless fabric of a vision." Shakespeare.

Ver. 8. Eyes, in anger, (C.) or thy mercy will come too late when I shall be no more.

Ver. 9. Hell, or the grave. M.—He was convinced of the resurrection. But he meant that, according to the natural course, we can have no means of returning to this world after we are dead.

Ver. 10. More. This may be explained both of the soul and of the body. Ps. 102:16. The former resides in the body for a short time, and then seems to take no farther notice of it (C.) till the resurrection.

Ver. 11. Mouth. I will vent my bitter complaints before I die. H.

Ver. 12. Sea. Ungovernable and malicious. Some of the ancients looked upon the sea as a huge animal, whose breathing caused the tides. Strabo i. Solin xxxii.—They represented its fury as proverbial.

“Fire, the sea, and woman are three evils;” and they call the most savage people sons of Neptune. Agel. xv. 21.—Am I so violent as to require such barriers? Am I capacious, or strong enough to bear such treatment? C.

Ver. 15. Hanging. Prot. “strangling and death, rather than my life,” or Marg. “bones.” H.—Any species of Death would be preferable to this misery. C.—Who would not entertain the same sentiments, if the fear of worse in the other world did not withhold him? But Job had reason to hope that his sorrows would end with his life. H.—It is thought that he was dreadfully tempted to despair. C.—Yet he resisted manfully, and overcame all attempts of the wicked one.

Ver. 16. Hope of surviving this misery. H.

Ver. 17. Magnify him, or put his to such severe trials. He is not worthy of thy attention. C.—Heb. 2:6. H.

Ver. 18. Suddenly. During his whole life, he is exposed to dangers; (C.) of if, at first, he taste some comfort, that is presently over. The greatest saints have experienced this treatment. H.

Ver. 20. Sinned. I acknowledge my frailty. M.—How may I obtain redress? C.—Job’s friends maintained that he was guilty. But he does not acquiesce in their conclusion, that these sufferings were precisely in punishment of some crime, though he acknowledges that he is not without his faults. H.—Shall. Heb. also, “what have I done to thee?” I have only hurt myself. But this reasoning is nugatory. Though God loses nothing by our sins, they are not less offensive to him, as the rebel does his utmost to disturb the order which he has established. The sinner indeed resembles those brutal people, who hurl darts against the sun, which fall upon their own heads. C. 3:8. C.—Opposite, as a butt to shoot at. H.—Myself. Heb. was formerly “to thee,” till the Jews changed it, as less respectful. Cajet.—Sept. still read, “and why am I a burden to thee?” (H.) as I am under the necessity of complaining, in my own defence. C.—I throw my grief upon the Lord, that He may support me. Ps. 54:23. 1 Pet. 5:7. Pineda.

Ver. 21. Be. He lovingly expostulates with God, and begs that he would hasten his deliverance, lest it should be too late. C.

JOB 8

Ver. 1. Suhite, from Sue, the son of Abraham, who dwelt in the desert

Arabia; (Gen. 25:2) though several suppose, without reason, (C.) that Baldad resided at Sueta, in Coelosyria. M.—He was the second in age and dignity. Pineda.

Ver. 2. How long. He seems tired with hearing, (H.) and accuses Job of want of moderation, representing him as a hypocrite, (C.) and an obstinate defender of his own opinion, against the better judgment of Eliphaz; (M.) though he was in reality only a constant asserter of truth. W.

Ver. 3. Just. He begins with the same principle as Eliphaz, which nobody denied. But he does not reflect, that God may cause even the just to be afflicted, for their trial and improvement.

Ver. 4. Iniquity, and suffered them to perish. C.

Ver. 6. Peaceable. Justice and peace shall kiss. H.—Prosperity will attend the righteous. C.

Ver. 9. That. Heb. “because our days.” H.—Baldad strives, in vain, to prove what nobody contested. But he does not come to the point, and shew that Job was guilty. Past histories might have informed him that the just are often persecuted, like Abel, Abraham, Jacob, and Joseph. C.—It is true, these were afterwards comforted in honour, except the first, who was slain, and better off in the other world. But Job might hope for the same treatment; and no man can be pronounced happy or miserable till his death. After a storm a calm frequently ensues; as Baldad might have seen verified in the person of his friend, if he had waited patiently, and not judged so peremptorily from equivocal arguments. H.—We must allow, however, that what he said had been generally true. Houbigant.

Ver. 11. Sedge-bush, or flag. Heb. achu; so called, because from one root many brothers (as it were) spring. Sept. style it Βουτομον, as it was usually “cut for oxen.” Gen. 41:2. Parkhurst. H.—As plants die without suction, so do those who depart from God. M.

Ver. 12. Herbs, for want of moisture. C.—Sic transit gloria mundi. H.—The prophets often compare the prosperity of the wicked to grass, (Ps. 36:2. Jam. 1:10) and Baldad ranks Job with them.

Ver. 14. Him, the hypocrite, or God. C.—Both shall one day condemn the ill use of riches. H.

Ver. 15. He. The spider, or rather the hypocrite, who will not be able to screen himself, by his possessions, from the wrath of God. C.

Ver. 16. Seemeth. Heb. “he is green before the sun” beat upon him.—Rising, ortu, for horto, (H.) as the Heb. &c. have “garden,” (M.) with some Latin editions. He had compared the wicked to a rush without moisture. But the just is like a plant in a fine garden, which is not hurt by the sun beams. It will grow even among stones, (C.) and may be transplanted without danger, v. 19. H.—The whole may be, however, a continuation of the former simile. The rush will presently be scorched, as if it were thrown among stones, and its place will know it no longer, v. 18. M.

Ver. 19. Joy. Sept. “the catastrophe of the wicked, for another shall spring,” &c. H.

Ver. 21. Until. If thou be simple, (H.) or irreproachable, (C.) God will make thee exult. H.—Until, &c. M.—He will restore thee to thy former state of affluence. C.

JOB 9

Ver. 2. God. Job answers both his friends, and with admirable humility acknowledges that in God’s sight he is full of defects; but not of such a nature as to fall (C.) under the cognizance of man. I am not conscious to myself of anything; but ... God is the judge. 1 Cor. 4:4. H.

Ver. 3. Thousand. Ps. 142:2. “Woe even to the praise-worthy life of man, if God judge without mercy.” S. Aug. H.

Ver. 4. Resisted. Heb. and Sept. “hardened himself against him.”

Ver. 5. Removed, by earthquakes. Pliny ii. 83. C.—In Calabria, 5th Feb. &c. 1783, during the most destructive and dreadful earthquake, a level valley was removed entire about a mile, and a hill, with the trees still growing, was projected down a declivity half a mile, and another above four miles. Sir W. Hamilton.—Sept. “who makes the mountains grown old, and they know not who overturns them in his wrath.” H.—Kings and empires fall to ruin at his command. C.

Ver. 6. Pillars. These are represented as fixed in the waters. Prov. 8:29. Ps. 17:16. &c.

Ver. 7. Seal. So that they appear not. He alludes (C.) to masters confining their servants with seals, before locks were invented. Macrob. vii. 3.—From these noble effects of God’s power, Job takes occasion to humble himself. C.

Ver. 8. Heavens, like a tent. Ps. 103:2. These nations lived under tents; (C.) and beholding the magnificent one which God had spread over the heads of alol, Job, in rapture, (H.) wonders that he should have created such a pavilion for his servants.

Ver. 9. Arcturus, &c. These are names of stars or constellations. In Hebrew, Hash, Cesil, and Cima. Ch.—And chadre theman, (H.) the “bottom or seals of the south,” which were to him invisible, being the Antarctic constellations. The ancients were acquainted only with these four, (Homr, Virg. Æn. iii. &c.) which denoted the four quarters and seasons. C.—Ash, Arcturus, “the bear’s tail,” near the north pole, (H.) rules in autumn, when the year begins (C.) in Arabia. Cesil, (H.) or Orion, on the west, styled by astronomers “the heart of the scorpion,” rises about the autumnal equinox, and presides over winter; (C.) and Cima, (H.) the Hyades, or the seven “rainy” stars, do over spring, the “pleasing” season, as Cima denotes, (C. 38:31) when navigation commences. “The Seals of the south,” designate summer. C.—We must not, however, imagine that Job countenances poetical fables; (S. Jerom in Amos v. 8) or that he called the constellations by these names, Arcturus, &c. C.—Heb. “who makes the fire, the spirit, and the light,” Cima. C. 38:31. H.—The creation of these seems grander than the making of any constellation, and all the stars had been asserted to be the work of God, v. 7. What connection is there between the names assigned by the Rabbins and the Heb. terms? R. Abraham observes that the last is “a northern star, causing heat, and producing fruit.” Parkhurst.—The Arabs were convinced of the influence of the stars; (C. 38:31) and living under a sky generally without clouds, could easily observe them. Roger. ii. 2. and 15.—Sanchez asserts, that the peasants in Spain can point out the stars by name. C.—Inner. Prot. “the chambers.” They agree with the Vulg. in the other names. Sept. “who makes the Pleiads, and Hesper, and Arcturus, and the store-rooms of the south? H.—They are styled inner with respect to us, who cannot see them.

Ver. 11. Understand, as he is a spirit; (M.) and not that God is changeable, but his works and judgments are above our comprehension, and we are always liable to change. Hence the proud erroneously think themselves to be in favour; while the humble, on the contrary, keep at a distance, and still sue for pardon, when their sins have been forgiven. Luke 18:13. Eccle. 2:1. C.

Ver. 13. God. Prot. “If God will not withdraw his anger, the proud helpers do stoop under him.” Sept. “For he is not turned aside by wrath;” (or Rom. edit.) “God, whose anger cannot be averted,” (H.) unless we repent: (C.) “under him the whales below heaven bend.” H.

—Perhaps they may have had some notions, like the Rabbins, respecting Leviathan; and S. Jerom may have alluded to the fable of the giants placed under mountains; (Æn. iii. and ix. C.) or to Atalas propping the skies. H.—World. Great heroes, (C.) Kings, (Pineda) angels, (M.) who move the spheres, (W.) or devils. Eph. 6:12. Cajetan.

Ver. 14. What? Heb. “Much less shall I answer him, choosing even my words with him.” H.—This is the conclusion from the display of God’s power. C.—No eloquence will persuade him. H.—Though not conscious of any sin, Job will not justify himself (1 Cor. 4. W.) before God. H.

Ver. 16. Voice. So much am I beneath his notice. How unjust were the aspersions of Job’s friends, who accused him of presumption and blasphemy! C.—No one ever spoke with greater humility (H.) and respect of God’s absolute dominion. C.—He will attribute nothing to his own prayers, as he is still in the dark. M.

Ver. 17. Without cause. That is, without my knowing the cause; or without any crime of mine. Ch.—To argue from my afflictions, that I am a criminal, is unjust. C. 2:3.

“Notions mistaken, reasonings ill apply’d,
And sophisms that conclude on either side.” Pope, Pleasures, &c.

Ver. 19. Equity. Heb. “if judgment, who will appoint me a time,” (H.) or “set me before him,” and undertake my defence? Who will dare to sit as judge between us?

Ver. 20. Condemn me, as this conduct would appear presumptuous. C.—Sept. “if I be just, my mouth will utter impiety,” (H.) in declaring it. Olymp.

Ver. 21. Life, under this uncertainty and affliction. M.

Ver. 22. Consumeth. Eccle. 9:2. H.—This principle is incontrovertible. W.—I do not retract it. M.—The misery inflicted on the just, is not contrary to the goodness of the Almighty. Job perfectly discovered this truth, which puzzled his enlightened friends, and most of those who lived before Christ; (Ps. 72:2. Jer. 12:1. C.) and even Job himself was not fully convinced of the motives of the Providence, till God had explained them. Houbigant. C. 42.

Ver. 23. Innocent. Having expressed his sentiments clearly, now he mentions what he could desire under the pressure of misery. M.—Seeing the danger of falling, to which he was exposed, he begged to be delivered by death. We are taught by our Saviour to pray, Lead us not into temptation. Matt. 6:13. God does not laugh at our sufferings, but he acts like a surgeon, and cuts without minding our complaints. Ridere Dei est humanæ nolle afflictioni misereri. S. Greg. C.—Heb. “If the scourge slay suddenly, he will laugh at the trial of the innocent.” Prot. H.

Ver. 24. Wicked one, (H.) the devil, (M.) or any impious person who enjoys prosperity. He, (C.) or even God permissively, covered the face, (H.) by bribes; so that judges pass sentence unjustly.—Then. If it be not the devil, (M.) or God. C.

Ver. 25. Good, of late. Heb. “they see no good.”

Ver. 26. Carrying. Heb. lit. “of desire,” belonging to one person, or full of goods, which he desires to carry quickly to market. M.—Chal. agrees with us. But most interpreters var. Pagnin retains the original, ebe; (H.) supposing the rive Abeh, or Avah, is meant. It certainly implies expedition; “they have hastened like (C.) the eagle to its prey.” Sept. “Is there any trace of ships, or of an eagle flying in quest of food?” H.

Ver. 27. Sorrow. I cannot entirely repress it. C.—The more I strive, (H.) the greater is my pain. M.

Ver. 28. Works. Heb. “sorrows.” I dread their increase, and fear impatience. Even in the midst of prosperity, Job offered sacrifice, lest the sins of his children should be laid to his charge.

Ver. 29. Vain. Why have I endeavoured to repress my grief in silence? God does not forbid us to complain, but only to murmur. C.—Sept. “Since I am wicked, why did I not die?” H.—Should a wretch be even suffered to live” S. Chrys.

Ver. 30. Snow. Nitre bring off the dirt better. Chal. “soap.” Heb. bor, is supposed by many to be the Borith of Jer. 2:22. Snow-water was also used through delicacy in summer. Petron. Sat.

Ver. 31. Abhor me. This striking expression intimates something extremely filthy. God will make his servants discern many stains, even when they have aimed at the greatest purity. C.

Ver. 33. There. Sept. “O that an umpire, (or mediator) were between us, and one arguing and giving ear in the midst of both!”

Ver. 35. Fear him. Sept. “and I shall not fear, but speak. For I am not conscious to myself of injustice.” H.—The dread of incurring God’s displeasure makes me prefer to be silent; and if I had no other reason, this fear would suffice, as I should not be master of myself under such anxiety and pain. C.—If my sufferings were at an end, I should take courage, and speak in my own defence, (M.) in answer to my false friends. H.

JOB 10

Ver. 1. Life. Job had intimated a fear to proceed any farther. C.—But perceiving that he had not convinced his friends, he continues his discourse (H.) in still stronger terms, yet so as to acknowledge the justice of God. C.—Speech against. Heb. “complaint upon, (H.) or respecting myself,” I will deplore my misfortunes, (C.) or I will say no more about them. M.

Ver. 2. Judgeth. Heb. “contendest with me,” as with an enemy? Is it to punish some fault, or only to make thy grace shine forth? C.

Ver. 3. Calumniate permissively, by treating me in such a manner, that others lay false crimes to my charge. Heb. “oppress and despise the work.”—Wicked, who are ready enough (H.) to assert that virtue is useless, (C.) and that God mindeth not human affairs. My affliction will confirm them in their false notion, (H.) and my friends will triumph as if their arguments were well founded. The devil will also exult. C.—He knew that God could not be guilty of calumny, and inquireth why he is afflicted. W.

Ver. 4. Seeth, judging only of the exterior. T. v. 6.

Ver. 5. Days, sometimes denote judgments. 1 Cor. 4:3. Is God liable to change, like men, or does he stand in need of time to examine them, or fear lest they should escape? C.—Is it necessary for him to prove his friends, to know their real dispositions? Sanctius.

Ver. 7. Shouldst. Heb. and Sept. “Thou knowest that ... and there,” &c. H.—It would be vain for me to appeal to any other. C.

Ver. 8. Sudden, like a potter’s vessel? Job was reduced to misery all at once. C.—He acknowledges that God may destroy him as his creature; but that character encourages him to hope for mercy, grace, and glory. W.

Ver. 10. Milked. Heb. “poured me out as milk, and curdled me like cheese?” H.—See Wisd. 7:1. The ancients explained our origin by the comparison of milk curdled, or cheese; (Arist. i. 10. Pliny vii. 15.) which the moderns have explained on more plausible principles. C.—Yet still we may acknowledge our ignorance with the mother of Machabees. 2 Mac. 7:22.

Ver. 12. Thy fatherly visitation (H.) but still preserved my life. C.

Ver. 13. Rememberest. Sept. “canst do all things.” Heb. “this is with thee.” H.—I am convinced that thou still regardest me with affection, though it would appear as if thou hadst forgotten me. C.

Ver. 14. Iniquity? Punishing me for the sins which seemed to be pardoned. C.—Heb. “If I sin, then thou makest me, and wilt not suffer; (H.) or if thou hast not pardoned my iniquity: (15) And,” &c. C.

Ver. 15. Woe. Thou wilt not suffer me to pass unpunished. C.—Head. I will adore in silence. C. 9:15, 31. Ven. Bede. C.

Ver. 16. Pride. If I give way to pride, thou wilt pull me down, though I were as fierce and strong as a lioness. Heb. “for it (affliction) increaseth. Thou huntest me.” Prot.—Returning. Heb. and Sept. “again.” H.

Ver. 17. Witnesses, afflictions; (M.) “wounds.” Pagnin. T.

Ver. 20. Lament. Heb. “take comfort,” (H.) or breath. C.—Repentance is always necessary, but more particularly at the hour of death. W.

Ver. 21. Death, to the grave, or to hell, (C.) if my sins deserve it. H.

Ver. 22. Horror. At death all distinction of ranks is at an end. T.—Heb. “where the light is as darkness.” Prot. Sept. “To the land of eternal darkness, where there is no sound, nor life of mortals to see.” H.

JOB 11

Ver. 1. Naamathite. Sept. “the Minean,” in Arabia Felix, or rather of the Meonim, not far from the Themanites. Judg. 10:11. Sophar was probably a descendant of Sepho, styled by Sept. Sophar, (Gen. 36:11 and 1 Par. 1:36) brother of Thaman, and grandson of Eliphaz, the son of Esau. C.—He speaks with greater insolence than the two others, (Pineda) and inveighs against Job, insisting that he can be punished thus only for his crimes. C.

Ver. 2. Much. The speeches of Job seemed tedious to him, because he was not of his opinion. M.—He might have applied to himself and his friends the fault of talking too much, as they all spoke many things to no purpose, whereas Job went straight to the point. W.

Ver. 3. Men. Heb. “shall thy lies make men keep silence?” Sept. “Blessed be the short-lived son of a woman. Speak not much, for there is no one to give sentence against thee.” H.—Mocked, by not acquiescing to their solid arguments, (M.) and speaking with much animation. Pineda.

Ver. 4. Sight. Job had just said the reverse. C. 9:2. S. Chrys.

Ver. 6. Law. Heb. Thushiya, (H.) “the essence” of any thing. Hence it is explained, “law, strength, comfort,” &c. We might translate, “and that the reality of thy crimes deserved double punishment,” &c. The obligations of the natural, and also of the written law of Moses, with which Job was (C.) perhaps (H.) acquainted, (C. 22:22) are very numerous and difficult. The ways of Providence are not easily understood, though some are obvious enough. He rewards and punishes. C.—Sept. “for it is double of what has come against thee, and then thou wouldst know that thy sins are justly requited.” Prot. “that they are double to that which is: Know, therefore, that God exacteth of thee less than thine iniquity deserveth.” 1 Esd. 9:13. H.

Ver. 7. Perfectly? If not, it is rash to find fault. M.

Ver. 11. It? to inflict punishment. Sept. “he will not overlook.” H.

Ver. 12. Is. Heb. “is he heart? or wise, (C.) he who is born like a,” &c. Shall he assert his independence, or pretend to be wise? H.—The Hebrews place wisdom in the heart, as we do courage. C. 12:3. Prov. 2:2. &c. C.

Ver. 13. But. Heb. “If thou direct thy heart, &c. Thou mayst lift up thy face,” (v. 15. H.) without fear. 2 K. 2:22. C.

Ver. 14. Iniquity. Of this Job was not conscious, and therefore could not confess it. W.

Ver. 15. Without. Sept. “as clean water, thou shalt pass away corruption, and shalt not fear.”

Ver. 17. Brightness. Sept. “But thy prayer, like the day-star and life, shall arise to thee from the south, or as at noon-day.” Heb. “Thy age (H.) shall appear clearer than the noon-day, and darkness like the morning.” Prosperity shall succeed, (C.) when thou shalt think all lost. M.

Ver. 18. Secure, dying full of hope. Chal. Heb. “thou shalt dig,” (for water, which was there a great treasure. Gen. 21:25 and 26:15) or to fasten down thy tent, (C.) “and rest secure.” H.

Ver. 19. Face. Luther translates “shall flatter thee.” The Dutch version, which is taken from Luther’s, has mistaken a letter, and rendered “shall flee before thee,” which shews the danger of translating without recurring to the originals. Amama.

Ver. 20. Soul, because hope deferred causeth pain to the soul. Prov. 13:12. M.—Heb. “their hope shall be the sorrow, or the breathing out of the soul.” C.—Prot. “the giving up of the ghost.” Margin, “a puff of breath.” C. 18:14. H.

JOB 12

Ver. 2. You. Heb. “truly you are the people, and wisdom will die with you!” This irony is very sharp. C.—“Are you alone men? or shall?” &c. Sept. Syr.

Ver. 4. Mocked. He retaliates on Sophar, (C. 11:3. H.) who had very seriously exhorted Job to call on God, as if he had been ignorant of this duty. C.—God will one day force the wicked to retract their false notion, in despising his servants. Wisd. 5:3. W.

Ver. 5. The lamp. Such is the just man, who under affliction is (H.) exposed to the ridicule of men who live at their ease.—For. Heb. “to fall.” C.—Sept. “It was appointed for me to fall under others at the time fixed.”

Ver. 6. Abound. Heb. “are at peace.” C.—The prosperity of the wicked is therefore no proof that they are pleasing to him. H.—All nature testifies that God exercises a sovereign dominion over his works. He may therefore cause the just to suffer, though they be guiltless. This is one of Job’s grand maxims. C.

Ver. 11. Taste. For this no master is requisite; so I stood in no need of your information, (C.) of such trite remarks. H.

Ver. 12. Ancient. He rather chides the youth of Sophar for offering to give him lessons. Old age is indeed commonly wiser and more experienced. Yet, what is man’s knowledge compared to that of God!

Ver. 17. To a. Heb. “to be despoiled” of their wisdom and riches. C.—Sept. “into captivity.” H.—Crafty plotters at last fall into such misconduct, as to be derided by men of the meanest capacity. W.

Ver. 18. Looseth. Sept. “setteth kings upon the throne,” &c.—Belt. This was usually very magnificent, and a military ornament. See that of Pallas described. Æn. x. Job intimates that God derives kings of their authority, at pleasure. Heb. may also signify that he looseth the bond or prisoner of kings, and reduces themselves to slavery. C.—Things never remain long in the same state. H.—Even kings are sometimes obliged to beg. M.

Ver. 19. Without. Heb. “despoiled.” Sept. “captives.” Cohanim, may comprise both sacred ministers and civil princes. 1 K. 8:18. All are equally subject to God. C.

Ver. 20. Speakers. Permitting them to speak deceitfully, (C.) or causing their oracles to be contemned. H.—Heb. “he withdraws speech from men of confidence.” C.—Neemanim, (H.) ambassadors or prime ministers. Num. 12:7. He disconcerteth the best concerted plans.

Ver. 21. Relieveth. Heb. “ungirdeth (disarms) the strong.” C.—Sept. “but the lowly (humble) he has healed.”

Ver. 22. Of death. Tsalmaveth (H.) may perhaps simply denote darkness. C.—God bringeth to light the most hidden things. H.

Ver. 23. Multiplieth. Heb. Sept. and Syr. “deceiveth,” (C.) suffering them to confide too much in their strength, so that they fall an easy prey. H.—How many nations, once so powerful, are now fallen; while others of no account have risen to eminence!

Ver. 24. Changeth. Heb. “taketh away the heart,” or prudence “of princes.” Hence they follow the most absurd counsels. Isai. 29:19. C.—No way. This was the case of Pharaoh, when he pursued the Israelites into the sea; (T.) and the like may rationally be feared by those princes, who attempt to make innovations in the true religion, or in the sound laws of a kingdom. M.

Ver. 1. All, without your information. C.

Ver. 3. Reason. Heb. “to dispute with, or before God,” concerning the matter which we have in hand. He appeals to God, as to the judge of all.

Ver. 4. Having. Heb. “But ye are sewers of lies.” C.—Sept. “unskilful surgeons, (who, instead of sewing up a wound, increase it) and all of you doctors of evil;” vain empirics.—Maintainers. Prot. “ye are all physicians of no value.” H.

Ver. 5. Men. Prov. 17:28. If you had been silent, you might still have had the reputation of wisdom. C.

Ver. 6. Judgment. Heb. “pleading” before our common judge. H.

Ver. 8. Accept. Heb. “will you not be seized with fear?” Olympiodorus translates, “will you stand in his presence, and dispute with him?” C.—Sept. “Are you sent to be judges?” &c. or, do you suppose that you hope to gain his favour? C.—He knows the state of my soul best; then I myself: but you are quite in the dark. W.

Ver. 9. Or. Heb. “Is it good that he should examine you, would you escape?” C.

Ver. 10. His. Heb. “persons.” Because you see me afflicted, you infer that I am guilty; and think this mode of judging most honourable to God, whom you wish thus to please. H.—But he stands not in need of lies; (C.) and something farther is still to be proved. H.—You judge rashly, as if you designed to please a prince, (M.) without examining the cause of the accused. H.

Ver. 12. Necks. Sept. “body.” Heb. also, (H.) “heights,” (C.) or “fortifications.” Grotius.

Ver. 13. Whatsoever. Heb. “come what will.” Sept. “that my anger may cease.” H.

Ver. 14. Why you seem to ask do I thus eagerly desire to die, (H.) as if I wear tearing my own flesh, and exposing my soul to danger, (W.) like a madman? T.—Is it not better for me to address myself to God, that he would hasten my departure, than thus to tear my flesh with my teeth? C.—Some have supposed that Job really did so in extreme anguish, (V. Bede) the leprosy occasioning such an insupportable irritation. H.—But the expression insinuates an interior anguish or despair; (Isai. 49:26) in which sense Pythagoras enjoins, “no to eat the heart.”—Hands, in imminent danger of death. Ps. 118:109.—S.

Gregory explains it in a moral sense: "It is to manifest the intention of the heart by the actions." H.

Ver. 15. In him. Heb. lu is read, though lo, "not," is written in the Heb. text. H.—Protestants, &c. follow the sense of the Vulgate, and Junius comes to the same, as he reads lo with an interrogation: "Should I not hope in him?" Luther and the Belgic version go astray: "Behold he shall kill me, and I cannot expect," or hope; I am resolved to die: which words indicate "extreme impatience." Amama.—Sept. "If the powerful (or Lord) lay [not] hands on me, since it is commenced? No: but I shall speak and arraign [you] before him," &c. The words not and you are thus placed in Grabe's edition. H.—Ways. I do not pretend that I am quite blameless. C.—Prot. "I will maintain (Marg. prove or argue) mine own ways before him." H.—I will hope, like Abraham, even against hope, to shew that I am not actuated by despair: yet I will continue to declare my innocence, v. 16. T.

Ver. 16. Hypocrite. If I were such, I should not dare to appeal so boldly to his tribunal. C.

Ver. 17. Truths. Lit. "riddles" to you. Heb. achavathi, (H.) means "instructions," &c. C.

Ver. 18. Just. He was in extreme anguish, yet still trusted in God. W.

Ver. 19. Peace. It will be some consolation to explain my reasons. If I am fairly overcome, I shall die with more content. C.

Ver. 20. Only. He makes the same petition to God as C. 9:34 and 33:7. H.

Ver. 23. Offences, which might be hidden to Job himself. W.—He speaks to God with the freedom which he had requested, desiring to know if he were really guilty, (C.) that he might give glory to him, (H.) by an humble confession.

Ver. 26. Bitter. The judge wrote down the sentence; which he read, or gave to his officer. C.—Youth, for which I thought I had satisfied. H.

Ver. 27. Stocks, in which the person's legs were sometimes stretched to the sixth hole; (C.) at other times, the neck was confined. M.—Some translate the Heb. "in the mud," which agrees with the other part of the verse.—Steps. Heb. and Sept. "roots," or ankles, which retain the prints made by the stocks.

Ver. 28. Rottenness. Sept. "an old vessel," or skin, to contain wine, &c. C.—My condition might excite pity. M.

JOB 14

Ver. 1. Man. He exposes to God the common miseries of mankind. C.—They cannot avoid many miseries in their short life, yet may be brought to heaven. W.

Ver. 2. Shadow. Pulvis et umbra sumus. Hor. iv. Ode 7. “Come then, ye men, whom nature condemns to spend your days in darkness, ye who resemble the leaves, are of little strength, formed of mud, shadow-like, ... of a day’s duration, miserable mortals, men like dreams, attend to the immortals.” Aristoph. Avib.—Most of these expressions occur in Job, Ps. 101:12. Wisd. 2:5. Eccle. 2:23. &c.

Ver. 3. With thee. He seems beneath God’s attention: (Arist. Met. viii. 9. Cicero, Nat. ii.) but as the knowledge and other attributes of the Deity are infinite, he must necessarily attend to the whole creation. The moral actions of men being also infinite in their object, tending to God, or contradicting his ordinances, they are not beneath the consideration of an infinite Being. C.

Ver. 4. Seed, is not expressed in Heb. “unclean.” It may refer to Adam. There is no contagion in the seed to infect the soul, as Tertullian supposed; it is only unclean in the cause, as every person who is born according to the common course of nature, becomes a child of Adam, and partakes in his original sin. The Scholastics. T.—Only art. Essence itself. Carthus.—“The justification of the sinner is a greater miracle than the creation of the world.” S. Aug. ibid.—The birth of Jesus Christ was free from stain; (Luk. 1:35) as was also the conception of his virgin Mother, by the power of God; (M.) and his grace, as it is piously believed. H.—He alone can purify man. C.—Heb. “who can produce what is clean out of the unclean? Not one.” Or Chal. “Is there not one?” Sept. “For who shall be pure from corruption? Not so much as one: (5) though his life be only of one day upon earth.” The more ancient Fathers have generally quoted the text in this manner, to prove original sin; (H. S. Cyp. Tert. S. Deo. Mag. in Nat. i. &c. T.) and Bellarmine almost does the same, (Grat. iv. 4.) observing that the Sept. have taken in three words from the following verse: “though his days are few.” Yet there are some words which are not in Heb. though the doctrine here maintained is indubitable. Amama.—Job was fully convinced of it, and adduced it as plea for mercy. It also tends to keep us in the most profound humility and watchfulness, to resist the motions of concupiscence. C.—Man,

“Now too late,
Saw the rash error, which he could not mend;

An error fatal not to him alone,
But to his future sons, his fortune's heirs." Blair's Grave. Milton, x.
151. H.

Ver. 6. Hireling, who rejoices at being permitted to rest a little. So, before death, suffer me to have some relaxation. C. 7:1.

Ver. 8. Dust. After being even exposed to the air, for a long time, some branches will take root, like the rose of Jericho, the willow, &c.

Ver. 9. Scent, or light touch. Dan. 3:94. M.

Ver. 10. Is he? Will he naturally come to life again?

Ver. 11. Sea. There would be no supply of rain for the fountains. Eccle. 1:7. All would continue dry: so when the blood is once gone, life is at an end. See 2 K. 14:14. C.—The water cannot go back. M.

Ver. 12. Till. At that time, the general resurrection will take place. Vat. Scultet.—But people will never revive, according to the course of nature. In S. Matt. 5:18. Ps. 71:7. till is used in this sense. C.

Ver. 13. That thou mayst protect me in hell. That is, in the state of the dead; an din the place where souls are kept waiting for their Redeemer; (Ch.) and in the grave, where the body awaits the resurrection. H.—These words are repeated in the office of the dead, in the name of the souls in purgatory. Carthus. a. 34.—They are adduced in proof of limbo. But sheol denotes also "the grave." Amama.—What then? The soul is not confined there. It must consequently be explained of the lower receptacle for souls, as well as of the grave. H.

Ver. 14. Dead. Shall one in a condition nearly as bad, like myself, be restored to health? Yes, I entertain this hope. C.—Thinkest thou, is not in Heb. or Sept. The latter speaks (H.) clearly of the resurrection. C.—"For if a man die, shall he revive, having completed the days of his life? I wait (for thee) till I be again." Grabe. H.—Warfare. C. 7:1.

Ver. 16. But. Heb. "Mark out, (C.) or dost thou not observe my sin?" This fills me with terror, (H.) unless thou shew mercy.

Ver. 17. Cured. Heb. "sewed up." This method and sealing was in use to keep things of value, before locks were invented. C.—Sept. "thou hast noted if I had transgressed unwillingly, αἰών." Yet God will not make us accountable for what we cannot help.

Ver. 19. Man. Heb. and Sept. "the hope of man." H.—He must not expect to be more privileged than all other things, which time consumes. C.—Job again deplores human misery. M.

Ver. 20. Strengthened. Sept. “driven away.” Pagnin, &c.—“Thou wilt treat him harshly.” C.

Ver. 21. Or dishonour. He cannot naturally be informed. M.—God may, however, reveal to souls departed, what may increase their accidental happiness or misery. H.—Hence the Church prays to the saints. Job is speaking chiefly of the body in the grave, and of what appear exteriorly. During life man cannot foresee the state of his children; not in the other world, would their condition render him happy or otherwise. C. Mercer.—Sept. “If his sons be many, ... or ... few, he knows not.” H.—He is not affected in the same manner as he would be, if living. W.

Ver. 22. Over. Heb. “within him.” H.—During life man is full of cares, and presently he is consigned to the dreary tomb, v. 19. C.

JOB 15

Ver. 2. Heat. Heb. “east wind,” (H.) or give vent to passion. H.—Eliphaz now rebukes Job without any reserve. C.—He was perhaps displeased at the comparison used by the latter. C. 13:4. Baldad had also hinted that Job’s discourse was nothing but wind. C. 8:2. H.—Being unable to answer his arguments, he reviles him as an enemy of God. W.

Ver. 3. Equal. God, who is far above thee. Heb. “Will he (the wise) argue with less words, or with speeches which are nothing to the purpose?” C.

Ver. 4. God. Another, after thy example, will assert his own innocence under affliction, and will not fear, nor have recourse to God by humble prayer. Behold the dangerous consequences of thy principle. C.

Ver. 5. Blasphemers. Heb. “of the crafty,” which is sometimes taken in a good sense. Sept. “thou hast not distinguished the speeches of the princes.” Thou hast not shewn respect to our admonitions, (C.) or understood our meaning. H.—Thou rather choosest to imitate those false sages, who strive to deceive the world. Abuse could hardly be carried to greater lengths than it is by this man; who before spoke with some moderation. C. 4. C.

Ver. 7. First. Is thy experience so great, (M.) or art thou the most excellent of men? To hear thee we are but novices. C. 13:5. C.

Ver. 8. His. Heb. “dost thou restrain wisdom to thyself? Sept. “or has wisdom come to thee?” H.

Ver. 10. Fathers. Heb. and Sept. “father.” H.—Eliphaz always speaks first, and hints that he was as old, perhaps older, than Job; who had rather found fault with the youth of Sophar. C. 12:12. He also boasts that they, or their country, furnished master of great wisdom and experience than even Job’s father. C.

Ver. 11. Thee. This would not be difficult, (T.) if thy presumption did not prove an obstacle. Thou makest small account of those comforts or of our advice, trusting in thy own justice. C.—Sept. “Thou hast been chastised little, considering thy sins. Thou hast spoken with excessive insolence.”

Ver. 12. Why. Sept. “What has thy heart dared, or what have thine eyes brought thee?” Heb. “what do thy eyes wink at?” (H.) through pride and disdain. Ps. 34:19. Prov. 6:13. C.—We need not wonder that Eliphaz should misunderstand the looks of Job, (H.) since he gives such a false notion of his speeches. C.

Ver. 14. Just. Few are free from all spot; but venial sins do not hinder a man from being styled truly virtuous. W.

Ver. 15. Unchangeable, of his own nature, and during this life. C.—Heb. and Sept. “is not trusted by him,” till they have been tried, (H. C. 4:17. None is good but God alone. Mar. 10:18) in comparison. T.

Ver. 16. Water, with the utmost avidity and unconcern. Prov. 10:23 and 26:6.

Ver. 17. Seen. He had before given himself out for a prophet. Perhaps he may only mean to deliver what he had been taught, or had learned by experience, v. 18. His observations are in themselves just; but the application to Job is no less insulting. C.

Ver. 18. Wise. Prot. “which wise men have told from their fathers, and have not hid it.” C. 8:8. The authority of tradition was then very great; and why should it now be despised? H.

Ver. 19. Them. Their antiquity, courage, and purity of morals must consequently be greater, as they have preserved themselves from the inroads of strangers. C.

Ver. 20. Proud; uncertain. Heb. “in pain.” H.—Sept. “numbered,” or few. Gen. 34:30. These are the maxims which Eliphaz had received in a vision, or from the ancients, v. 17. The description of a tyrant’s life was admirably verified in Dionysius, of Syracuse, (C.) and in our Cromwell, (H.)—

“—pale and trembling in the dead of night.” Pope.

—who rarely lodged two night in one chamber. Clarendon.—Such live in dread, (H.) and seldom die a natural death.

Ad generum Cereris sine cæde et vulnere pauci Descendunt reges et siccâ morte Tyranni. Juv. x. 113.
Nocte dieque suum gestare in pectore testem. Juv. xiii.

They bear always about the witness, “conscience.” H.—They distrust every one, and are hated by all.

*Districtus ensis cui super impia
Cervice pendet,* &c. Hor. iii. Ode 1.

—These miseries are incident to the wicked, but are improperly addressed to Job. W.

Ver. 26. And is. Heb. “even upon the thick bosses of his buckler.” H.—God thus seizes his antagonist, who, like Pharaoh, swells with pride. C. Deut. 32:15.

Ver. 28. Heaps, by his ambition and fury, (C.) and exactions, (Cajet. M.) till the king chooses to rebuild the cities. Vatab.

Ver. 31. That he. Heb. and Sept. “for vanity shall be his reward.” H.—If he would repent, he might still be safe. M.

Ver. 32. Hands; strength and prosperity. C.—Sept. “his branch shall not grow thick.” H.

Ver. 33. First. Heb. “unripe.” H.—He shall derive no aid or comfort from his young family.

Ver. 34. Congregation, or family.—Bribes. Lit. “presents,” which H. frequently were not given freely, but extorted as a real tribute. C.—Sept. “for the death of the wicked is a martyrdom,” or proof of his impiety. “But fire shall consume the houses of the present (or bribe) receivers.”

Ver. 35. Sorrow. Heb. “mischief.” H. See Ps. 7:15. Isai. 49:4.—The tree is known by its fruit. Eliphaz sufficiently insinuates, that he is speaking of Job. C.—His, or “its,” the congregation’s womb, v. 34. Prot. “their belly.” H.

Ver. 2. Comforters. “Job’s friends or comforters,” are become proverbial, to denote people who do the contrary to what they seem to promise. H.—Never did men sustain worse the character of comforters. They all magnify their knowledge and piety, and make the most absurd application of their principles to Job’s condition. C.—He was not ignorant that tyrants and wicked men were often, may generally till the age in which he lived, visited with visible judgments. H.

Ver. 3. Windy, inconclusive arguments. They all entertain a mean opinion of their adversaries, as they did not agree in the application of the propositions. Hence though they might be true, they were nothing to their present purpose. C. 15:3. H.—Trouble. You can speak without any pain: but the case is far different with me. M.—Heb. “what emboldeneth thee to answer?” H.—Who asks thee for advice? C.—True friends will give it without upbraiding, or laying false crimes to the charge of any one. W.

Ver. 4. My soul. If you had experienced my state of misery, (H.) I surely would not have behaved thus to you. C.

*Facile, cum valemus, recta consilia ægrotis damus:
Tu si hic sis, aliter sentias.* Terent. Andria.

Ver. 5. Wag, or shake my head out of pity. C. 42:11. Nah. 3:7. The same sign often indicates astonishment or contempt. Ps. 21:8. Matt. 27:28. C.

Ver. 7. But. Heb. “If I speak,” &c.

Ver. 8. Limbs. Heb. “company,” (H.) or family. The assemblage of my limbs is also disordered by the leprosy.

Ver. 9. Against me, in your opinion, as if I were guilty of lies. Heb. “my leanness bears witness, my falsehood has risen up against me and answered me to my face;” which may be understood in the same sense as the argument of Eliphaz. He is designated by the false speaker; (C.) unless we explain it of the wrinkles, which falsely indicated that Job was advanced in years, or of the malady; whence it was gathered that he must be a criminal. M.—Prot. “my leanness riseth up.” H.

Ver. 11. Cheek. His friends seemed so enraged, as to be disposed to do so. C.—These expressions were strikingly verified in Christ. M.—The outrages may also be attributed to the devil; (C.) or, by personification, to the malady of Job. M.

Ver. 14. Lances. Heb. “archers.” Sept. “they have encompassed me, throwing lances into my veins, or loins, not sparing,” &c. H.—Bowels. Heb. and Sept. “gall,” being afflicted with a dysentery. S. Thomas explains it of his children, who were slain. H.

Ver. 16. Flesh. Heb. “horn.” Sept. “strength.” H.—I have lost all my beauty and splendor, and have put on the garments of penance. C.

Ver. 17. Dim. Heb. and Sept. “covered with the shadow of death,” (H.) greatly impaired. Some have almost lost their sight by weeping; and death seemed ready to close Job’s eyes. C.

Ver. 18. Hand, which has not been defiled with any injustice. M.—When. Heb. “and my prayer was pure.” I never neglected this sacred duty, (C. 1:5) as my friends accuse me. C. 15:4. H.—They continued in their false accusation: so he repeats the same true answer. W.

Ver. 19. In thee. Let the cry of my blood, which issues from my wounds, and the injury which my reputation has suffered, come before the throne of God. Calumny is a species of murder. See Gen. 4:10. C.—If I be really guilty, I am willing to remain unburied. Let the dogs lick up my blood. Cajet.—Cry. Let the hills re-echo my sufferings. Pineda.

*Et quodcumque meæ possunt narrare querelæ,
Cogar ad argutas dicere solus aves.* Propertius.

Ver. 21. Full. Heb. “scorners.” Therefore I appeal to inanimate things; and, above all, to God, who cannot give a wrong judgment.

Ver. 22. Judged. Heb. “might plead.” H.—Earthly judges may be compelled to pronounce sentence publicly. Job is afraid lest the justice of his cause should remain undecided, till death overtook him, v. 23. Pineda.

Ver. 23. Years. Heb. and Sept. “of number.” Pauperis est numerare pecus. H.—Like a man under affliction, Job repeats what he had said. C. 14:5. M. and C. 10:20. H.

JOB 17

Ver. 1. Spirit. Heb. “breath is corrupt,” (H.) or spent. I cannot breathe without the greatest difficulty. C.—Only. Sept. “But I want the grave, and do not obtain it." H.

Ver. 2. Not sinned. That is, I am not guilty of such sins as they charge me with. Ch.—Heb. "the wicked were not with me" in friendship at any time. Prot. "Are there not mockers with me?" H.—Job was doubly afflicted, with corporal pain and calumny: yet hopeth in God. W.

Ver. 3. Fight. I am secure under thy protection. Heb. "who will strike hands with me?" or stand bondsman for my debt? Prov. 6:1. Who will take my place? You accuse me of weakness and of impiety: but how would you act, if you were treated in the same manner? C.

Ver. 4. Understanding. They will not answer for me. They are not of such a generous disposition; nor can they distinguish between the punishment of guilt and the trial of virtue. C.

Ver. 5. He. My friend. C.—Heb. "speaketh flattery," (H.) or promiseth to caress me, while he neglects his own children. But the sense of the Vulg. and Chal. seem preferable. My friends speak as if they could do any thing, and as if no trial would stagger their resolution. But they durst not be in my situation for a short time. C.—Like hunters, who have promised their children some prey, my friends will not, however, gain the victory over me. M.

Ver. 6. Example. Prot. "a tabret." H.—The people sing over my misfortune. Lam. 3:14. I am represented as a victim of God's just indignation. C.—Sept. "a laughter," or laughing-stock. H.

Ver. 7. Indignation of God, or of myself. M.—Nothing. Heb. "as a shadow." C.

Ver. 8. Hypocrite. If you condemn me, I shall comfort myself with the approbation of the righteous, and still maintain my station. H.—Men of sense and virtue will tremble at the judgments of God, and will never join the crowd of scoffers. C.

Ver. 10. Man. He offers to dispute with them again, and convince them of folly; (M.) or rather he here concludes his address to them, and invites them to change their preposterous judgments.

Ver. 11. Thoughts, or fine projects of living happy a long time. C.

Ver. 12. Day. Sleep flees from me. M.—All is in confusion.—After. Heb. and Sept. "light is near in the face of darkness." H.—I still hope for relief.

Ver. 13. Hell. Seol. The region of the dead. Ch.—Prot. "grave." H.—But this text proves that there was a place of rest called hell. W.—He speaks here chiefly of the body. C.—Mors ultima linea rerum est. Hor.—“Death is the end of all.” H.—If I refrain from complaining, still I cannot expect to be restored to health.

Ver. 14. Sister. I am nearly related to such things, and ready to drop into the grave, as my flesh is already devoured by worms. M.

Ver. 15. Who. Heb. “who shall see my hope?” I wish all might witness it. H.—But I expect no redress on this side of the grave. C.

Ver. 16. Deepest pit. Literally hell. Ch.—Heb. “We shall go down to the bars of the pit, when we shall rest together in the dust.” My hope may be frustrated by death; (H.) or you, my friends, must also go to the house of eternity. C.

JOB 18

Ver. 2. Understand ye. Teach this man to comprehend what we say. He deigns not to address Job in person: but repeats most of his former remarks respecting the wicked, as if they were unquestionably applicable to Job. C. 8. C.—Heb. “mark ye.” Sept. “do thou attend.” H.—Baldad speaks to many who might be of Job’s opinion, as he was a figure of the Church, defending the common cause; while his friends, like heretics, speak both true and false things. S. Greg. xiv. 1. W.

Ver. 3. Reputed. Sept. “silent as four-footed animals before thee? (H.) without discipline or understanding.” C. 17:4.

Ver. 4. Thou. Heb. “He teareth his soul in his fury!” H.—This is spoken with an air of contempt, as if Job were mad. C. 13:14. C.—Place. We should expect to see such effects, as soon as we would allow that God punishes thee, without thy being guilty. Hitherto he has treated the wicked only with such rigour. Still thou wouldst assert that thou art a singular example of an innocent man under oppression! C.

Ver. 6. Light; prosperity, (M.) offspring, &c. C.

Ver. 7. Step. He shall be greatly embarrassed, (M.) like a man in a narrow pass, (C.) beset with thorns. H. Prov. 4:12.—Sept. “the weakest have made a prey of his possessions. H.

Ver. 8. Meshes, (maculis) or holes of the net. M.—The more he strives to get out, the more he gets entangled. C.

Ver. 9. Thirst: the greedy hunter. C.—Heb. “the robber.” H.

Ver. 11. Fears. Hunters used to place loose feathers round the wood, except where the gin was laid, in order to frighten the prey into it.

Puniceæque agitant formidine pennæ. Georg. iii.

Jer. 48:44. "Like timid stags, while you avoid the moving feathers, you are entrapped in the strongest nets." S. Jerom, c. Lucif.—Every thing tends to fill the poor beast with alarm. So the devil, conscience, and enemies on all sides, best the wicked. C.

Ver. 13. First-born denotes the best, or the worst. H.—Death. Heb. "of death," the devil, or a premature death, and most cruel enemy. C.—Sept. "But death devours his most beautiful things." H.

Ver. 14. Confidence. Sept. "health."—Let. Prot. "and it shall bring him to the king of terrors;" (H.) or, "thou (O God) shalt," &c. Sept. "let him be in the greatest (C.) want, on account of a royal accusation," (H.) of high treason. C.

Ver. 15. Tent, when he is gone to purify it.

Et veniat quæ lustret anus lectumque locumque, Præferat et tremulâ sulphur et ova manu. Ovid. Art.

—Yet Moses does not mention sulphur as a thing proper for purifications. Some think that Baldad hints that his house will be destroyed with lightning, or rendered uninhabitable by a loathsome smell.

Ver. 16. Harvest. Heb. also, "branch;" (C.) his family, (M.) and all on which he trusted. C.—All must be destroyed, root and branch.

Ver. 20. Them. Lit. "the first," who were witnesses of his misery. H.

JOB 19

Ver. 3. Ten times; very often.—Oppress me. Heb. word occurs no where else, and is variously translated. It may signify, "to dig a pit for me." C. 6:27. Ps. 6:6. Job repeats nearly what he had said before, only with greater vehemence. He admits that Providence treats him in an unusual manner. Yet he still retains an assured hope, and arraigns his adversaries before the divine tribunal. C.—Yet he rather hesitates; (v. 4, 6) and this species of ignorance is the folly of which he, at last, accuses himself. C. 42:3. It was no real fault, ib. 5:8. H.

Ver. 4. With me. I alone am answerable for it. But I am no wiser for your remarks. If I have sinned, have I not been sufficiently punished? C.—Sept. “Yea, truly, I was under a mistake; and the mistake still remains with me, to have spoken a word which was not becoming. But my speeches are erroneous and importunate.” He talks thus ironically. H.

Ver. 5. Reproaches, which I endure, as if they were a sure proof of your assertion. H.—I must therefore refute you. C.

Ver. 6. With an equal judgment. S. Gregory explains these words thus: Job being a just man, and truly considering his own life, thought that his affliction was greater than his sins deserved; and in that respect, that the punishment was not equal, yet it was just, as coming from God, who give a crown of justice to those who suffer for righteousness’ sake, and proves the just with tribulations, as gold is tried by fire. Ch. —He knew that God would surely give a just reward. 2 Tim. 4. S. Greg. xiv. 16. W.—The friends of Job had too contracted a notion of Providence, supposing that the virtuous could not be afflicted. Job allowed that the ordinary rules were not here observed. Heb. “the Lord hath perverted or overthrown me.” C.—This gave him no small uneasiness. If the thing had been as plain as it appears now to us, he might have refuted all with a bare denial. Houbigant.

Ver. 7. Hear. Jeremias makes the same complaint, Lam. 3:8. C.

Ver. 12. Troops: (latrones) “free-booters,” (H.) or “soldiers.” Sanctius. —Those nations made a practice of plundering one another’s territories, without any declaration of war. Mercury and Autolychnus are praised for thefts of this description. Odys. xix. See Judg. 11:3. Sept. “his temptations (C. or militia; περπατηρία) came rushing together upon me; lying down (H.) in ambush, (C.) they surrounded my paths.” H.

Ver. 17. Entreated. Prot. add, “for the children’s sake of mine own body.” Sept. “I invited with flattering speeches the sons of my concubines. (18) But they cast me from them for ever. When I arise, they speak against me.” H.—Interpreters generally suppose that Job speaks of the children by his inferior wives: though he might have some at home by the first wife, who were not old enough to be invited to the feast, with those who were destroyed. C.

Ver. 18. Fools; wicked men, (M.) or the meanest of the people, (C.) whom (H.) these unnatural children (C.) resembled. Heb. “young children.” Prot. H.

Ver. 19. Some. Heb. “men of my secret.” Sept. “who knew me;” my most intimate friends.—And he. Heb. and Sept. “They whom I love are.” H.—These ungratefully joined with the rest, in turning their backs on their benefactor. W.

Ver. 20. Teeth. I am like a skeleton, so strangely emaciated, and my flesh corrupted: even my bones are not entire. H.—Heb. “I have escaped with the skin of my teeth.” Only my gums are left. My bones cut the skin. Sym. “I tore my skin with my teeth.”

Ver. 22. Flesh? acting with the like inhumanity towards me. Am I not then sufficiently tormented in you opinion, that you insult over my distress? C.

Ver. 24. In a. Heb. “lead, in the rock for ever.” Prot. Sept. have, “for ever,” after book, (v. 23) and subjoins, “with a writing instrument of iron and (or) lead, or be engraven on the rocks for a memorial.” Grabe insinuates that before there was only, “and on lead, or be engraven on the rocks.” H.—Instrument, (celte) means “a chisel,” (H.) like cœlum from cœlo: “I engrave.” Pineda.—S. Jerom, (ad Pam.) and the late editor of his works, retain this word, as the older editions of S. Greg. did; (C.) though certè, “surely,” has been inserted instead, from several MSS. by the Benedictines. H.—Ancient MSS. and Latin Bibles have more generally the latter word. But the received editions are supported by many MSS. (C.) and the Sept. ἐγγλυφηναι, expresses as much. Celtis est, γλυφειον. Amama. Casaub. in Athen. vii. 20. p. 556.—An inscription, in Dalmatia, has the same sense: Neque hic atramentum vel papyrus aut membrana ulla adhuc; sed malleolo et celte literatus silex. “Here as yet was neither ink, nor paper, nor any parchments; but a flint stone was lettered with a mallet and a chisel.” The former modes of writing were not, in effect, invented by the days of Job. C.—But it was long very usual to make use of lead. Pineda.—What he desired to have written in such durable characters, (H.) was the following sentence, in proof of his unshaken confidence in God, and as a refutation of his friends, who accused him of despair and blasphemy, (C.) as also the whole history of his conflict. His desire has been granted. T.

Ver. 25. Redeemer may be understood of the Deity, without confining it to the second Person; (Isai. 41:14 and 49:7. Piscator) though it may have a more peculiar reference to Christ: (Junius. H.) in whom he believed, as the Redeemer of all mankind. C.—Earth. Yea, ere long I shall be restored to health, (S. Chrys. Grot.) as an earnest and figure of the resurrection. Nothing is more common, in Scripture, than for the same prophecy to have a double accomplishment; one soon after it is made public, and another more sublime and remote. Job seemed to have no expectation of surviving his present misery, (v. 7, and C. 7:7 and 24:15) unless God now revealed it to him, as a figure of his future resurrection, founded on the hope of our Saviour's, which he expresses in much clearer terms. Heb. "I know that my Redeemer is living, and that he will raise himself one day upon the earth," (C.) like a conqueror, (H.) or wrestler, having overthrown his antagonist: (Amama) or, "he will stand the last upon the earth, or dust," (Piscator) ascending his throne, to judge all. Deodat.—Yet Luther translates, "and one day he will raise me up from the earth;" which is not conformable to the Heb. Others explain, "he ... will place (26) this, my skin, after they (worms) shall have ruined it." Pagnin. Mont.—But Amama suspects that the latter is not in earnest. Pineda defends the Vulg. and observes that yakum (H.) may signify, "will raise" himself, or "me;" the latter being at least a consequence of the former, if S. Jerom did not read it me in his copy. So S. Paul argues; If Christ be risen, we also shall rise again. Sept. "For I know that he is eternal, who will set me free," (H.) by death, (C. or redemption; εκλυειν) "upon the earth."

Ver. 26. And I. Sept. "But he will raise up my body or skin, which has sustained these things. This now has been accomplished for me by the Lord; (27) which I know within myself, which my eyes have seen, and not another. For all things are accomplished in my bosom." I am as fully convinced of this glorious event, (H.) as if it were past. C.—Heb. "and though, after my skin, worms destroy this body, yet in my flesh shall I see God." Prot. or in the margin, "After I shall awake, though this body be destroyed, yet out of," &c. Various other interpretations are given. H.—But we had as well adhere to the Sept. Vulg. &c. D.—God. Sixtus V. and some other editions, add "Saviour." C.—Job would see the Messiah by the eyes of his prosperity. S. Aug. or Faustus, ser. 234. t. v. App. Sanctius.—He hoped also to see God face to face in glory (C.) though not by means of his corporeal eyes, (H.) and to be restored to favour, so that God would no longer turn his back on him., C. 42:5. S. Gregory, when legate at Constantinople, convinced the patriarch Eutychius, by this text, that after the resurrection, our bodies will be palpable, and not aerial only. C.—It contains an express profession of Job's faith, on this head. We shall rise the same in substance. W.

Ver. 27. Myself. Heb. "for myself," and for my comfort; not like the reprobate, who shall see their judge to their eternal confusion. Job insists so much on this point, that he shews he is not speaking merely of the divine favour being restored to him, in the re-establishment of his health and affairs, but that he raises his mind to something more solid and desirable, of which the former was only a faint representation. C.—“No one since Christ has spoken so plainly of the resurrection, as this man did before the coming of the Messias.” S. Jerom, ad Pam.—This. Heb. “though my reins be consumed within me;” (Prot. H.) or, “my reins (desires and tender affections) are completed in my bosom.” C.

Ver. 28. Let us. Sept. “Why do we contend against him? and the root of the word (reason) we shall find in him.” He provokes us to speak thus. H.—Hebrew reads, “in me.” But the Chal. &c. “have him,” as the sequel requires; unless Job speak this in his own person. I am ready to answer you; or, have you really discovered in me any grounds for your virulent attack? C.

Ver. 29. Know. Sept. “And then they shall know that their power is nowhere;” or, “where is their substance?” Grabe. H.—Job menaces his friends with God’s judgments, as they had done him. C.

JOB 20

Ver. 2. Therefore. From this concession which thou hast just made. M.—Various. Heb. “Hence do my thoughts cause me to answer, and for this I hasten.” Sept. “I did not thus suspect that thou wouldst contradict these things,” &c. H.—Sophar only speaks this second time; and he produces little new, but begins with an air of more moderation, as if the arguments of Job had made some impression upon him. C.—He attempts to prove that the wicked have no comfort long; which is true in one sense, as all time is short, though they may prosper all their lives, as Job corrects his observation. C. 21:13. W.

Ver. 4. I know. Heb. and Sept. “dost thou not know?”

Ver. 6. Pride. Sept. “presents.” H.—Riches may be meant by pride. C.

Ver. 7. Hill. Heb. “his own dung.” H. Prov. 10:7.

Ver. 8. Fleeth. The poets assign wings to sleep and to dreams. Homer, &c. Isaias (29:7) describes a man who dreams that he is eating, and finds himself hungry when he awakes. Such is the live of the avaricious, (C.) and of all wicked people. H.

Ver. 9. Behold him, as if it were susceptible of resentment, and entered into the views of God. C. 7:10. Ps. 36:3–5. C.

Ver. 10. Be. Heb. “seek to please the poor, and his hands shall restore their goods,” which the wicked had gotten by oppression. H.

Ver. 11. Vices of, is not in Heb. but must be understood. H.—Youth. Some translate, “hidden.” Sophar perhaps accuses Job of some secret abominations, for which he was afflicted with the venereal disease. At least, nothing is more common than to see people brought to old age and infirmities unnumbered, (C.) before their time, in consequence of riotous living in their youth. H.—Youth may also denote the sin in which we are born, which is the source of all our maladies, and is always dragging us towards the grave. C.

Ver. 12. Evil of any king, and particularly (H.) injustice, which at first seems sweet, but will prove in the end a mortal poison. C.—The unjust will be forced to restore his ill-gotten goods, or suffer eternally for the neglect, v. 14, 18. H.—Habitual sins are also overcome with most difficulty, v. 11. M.

Ver. 16. Head. Heb. “venom.” Sept. “the wrath of dragons.” C.—Vipers. The same Heb. term is elsewhere rendered basilisk, or asp. The precise import of such things is not easily ascertained. Pineda.—Tongue. The ancients thought that serpents communicated the venom by the tongue, or sting. Moderns think they do it rather by the teeth. C.

Ver. 17. Butter. The impious may have a short-lived pleasure, but it will not give perfect satisfaction. The poets use similar expressions. C.

Mella fluent illi, ferat et rubus asper amomum. Virg.
Flumina jam lactis, jam flumina nectaris ibant. Met. i.

Ver. 18. Suffer eternal torments. C.—Heb. “according to his substance, shall the restitution be, and he shall not rejoice.” Prot.

Ver. 20. Them. Death will overtake him, like the rich man. Luke 12:20. C.

Ver. 21. Continue. Heb. “no one shall look for his goods.” The sinner eat up all in his life-time, or saw his possessions slip from him. H.—At least, he shall not take them with him to the grave. C.

Ver. 23. May. Heb. “And when he shall be about to fill his belly,” like king Baltassar, death shall hurry him away. C.—Rain. Sept. “hurl sorrows upon him,” (H.) by an untimely death, followed with eternal hunger and thirst. Thus was treat the rich glutton. Luke 16:22. C.

Ver. 24. Brass; of which metal the strongest bows were made. Prot.

have, “steel:” (H.) but brass was used by the ancients for the same purpose. C.—This proverb shews that those who endeavour to escape from men, fall into the hands of God. Delrio. Adag. 9, t. ii.

Incidit in Scyllam cupiens vitare Charbydim. Virg. M.

Ver. 25. The sword is, occurs not in the Vulg. (H.) though it be in the Compl. and Sixtine editions. C.—Heb. “It is drawn, and cometh out of the body; the glittering sword cometh out of his gall; terrors are upon him.” Prot. “May likewise the dart come out through his body,” &c. H.—Ones. Heb. “Enim; giants, who formerly inhabited the land of Moab, near the eastern Idumea. Their name might be placed for any cruel enemies. C.

Ver. 26. Darkness, or misery. C.—Sept. “Terrors upon him, (26) and all darkness may await him.” H.—He shall find no means of escaping. C.—Kindled. Heb. “blown.” S. Gregory observes that hell-fire is corporeal, but very different from our material fire. Chal. &c. explain this passage in the same sense. It may also intimate interior anguish, (C.) lightning, (Vatable) pestilence, (Grot.) and every species of calamity. C.—Tabernacle, in hell. M.—We may also translate, “he who is left,” (H.) the offspring shall be also miserable. M.

Ver. 27. Heavens, as his sins have cried for vengeance. Gen. 18:20. C.—All creatures shall fight against the wicked. M.

Ver. 28. Exposed. Heb. “the bud, (C.) or increase of his house, shall depart,” (H.) and be led away into captivity, (C.) and ruined. Sept. “Let final destruction draw away his house, and the day of wrath overtake him.”

Ver. 29. Doings. Lit. “words.” Heb. “of his decree.” H.—This is what he may expect for him impiety both in words and actions. C.

JOB 21

Ver. 2. Do. “After your opinion.” M.—Sym. “hear.” Sept. “may this be for your consolation,” (Heb.) which I shall receive from you, or which you may make use of, if you should be afflicted (C.) as I am. H.—Job undertakes to show that the wicked are sometimes suffered to enjoy a long prosperity.

Ver. 4. Troubled. Heb. “Why is not my spirit shortened” by death, if your assertion be true? (H.) or why may I not be “troubled,” since I have to deal, not with an enlightened judge, but with men who are under the greatest prejudices? C.—I seem to you to dispute against God. Have I not then reason to tremble? v. 6. H.—Though he disputed with men, it was concerning Providence and eternal things. W.

Ver. 5. Hearken to. Lit. “look steadfastly on me.” H.—Compare my present with my former condition, and do not pretend to fathom God’s judgments; which fall me also with astonishment, when I consider why the virtuous are distressed, and the wicked prosper, v. 7.—Mouth be silent. Harpocrates, the god of silence, was represented in this posture; and Virgil says, Intentique ora tenebant. Æneid ii.—Sept. “upon the cheek,” like men in deep consideration. C.

Ver. 7. Riches. This is what fills me with great anxiety. Yet it quite destroys the force of your argument, (C.) since you pretend that the prosperity of the wicked is never of long duration. We see them, however, live to an advanced old age, (H.) continually offending God, and annoying their neighbours. C.—Sept. “yea, they grow old in riches.”

Ver. 8. Sight. The Jews esteemed this as the greatest blessing and mark of God’s favour. Yet it was also equivocal, as it was often possessed by the wicked. C.

Ver. 9. Rod. Divine judgments. M. Ps. 72:5.

Ver. 10. Cattle. Lit. “ox,” bos. Prot. “their bull gendereth, and faileth not.” H.—But Bochart explains it of the cows’ bringing forth every year. C.—Ox is used in the same sense, both by sacred and profane authors. H.—A great part of the riches of these nations consisted in cattle. Ps. 143:14. Zac. 8:5.

Ver. 11. Their. Sept. “They continue like eternal sheep, as if they and their flocks would never die. C.—And play, is to shew the nature of the dance. It is not in Heb. H.—The children are healthy and sportive. M.—Sept. “they play before them.” H.

Ver. 13. Moment. Sept. “in the rest of the lower region, αδου, they shall be laid,” (H.) in the grave. M.—A sudden death, without agony or sickness, (H.) was the choice of Julius Cæsar, the night before he was slain. Repentinum inopinatumque prætulera. Sueton.—But the enlightened servant of God would rather desire time to do penance, and to prepare for death. For who shall presume that he has that charity which banisheth fear? C.—Hell. The same term is used for the place where the damned are tormented, as for that where the souls of the just waited (C. 7 and 17) for their Redeemer’s coming. But here

Job is speaking of the apparent happiness of the wicked; (H.) and only alludes to the grave, (C. M.) or comfortable death and burial of the reprobate: though, at the same time, he may declare that their souls are buried in hell. H.

Ver. 14. Ways. The too common effect of riches. Prov. 30:8. Eccli. 5:2.

Ver. 16. Because, is not in Heb. “Lo, their good is not.” They are not possessed of true riches, or of good sense. Alex. Sept. “For good things were in their hands: but the works of the impious are not pure.” No: the more they possess, the greater is their perversity. Grabe substitutes ουκαθοπα, for καθαρα; God “does not behold” the works, &c. which is more conformable to the other editions; and thus the blasphemies of the impious are continued. H.—When we are not sensible of our wants and dependance, we think less on God. C.—Hand, or power, they are only the gifts of God; far be then such sentiments from me. C.

Ver. 17. How often. When do we witness the downfall of the wicked? Mercer.—Or, in a contrary sense, how often are they miserable as well as the just? Such things are, therefore, a very equivocal argument, to prove either side of the question. Those who are afflicted, and cling closer to God, must be accounted virtuous and happy; while that prosperity is fatal which is an occasion of our neglecting his service. C.—Job answers his own questions, v. 7. If the wicked be happy for a time, their future state is deplorable, and often they forfeit even their temporal advantages. M.

Ver. 19. The sorrow. Prot. “his iniquity.” Marg. “that is the punishment.” H.—The children shall share in his punishment, (C.) when they have been partakers, or imitators of his injustice. H.—Know his offence, and whether there be a God (C.) and Providence. M.

Ver. 21. And if. Heb. “when” he is cut off in the midst of his days: he does not regard the happiness or misery of those whom he leaves behind. H.—The children are rather taken away for his punishment, while he is living, as their misery would not touch him in the grave. M.

Ver. 23. Hale, or healthy. Heb. “in perfect strength.” H.—Sept. “simplicity, or folly.” S. Aug. reads with the old Vulg. “in the strength of his simplicity, (C.) or innocence. H.—These outward appearances prove nothing for interior piety or wickedness. C.

Ver. 24. Bowels. Prot. “breasts” (Marg. “milk-pails”) are full of milk. But the Sept. Bochart, &c. agree with the Vulgate. Job describes a corpulent man (C.) living in luxury, like the glutton. H.

Ver. 25. Any. Heb. “ever having eaten with pleasure.” H.

Ver. 27. Me. I perceive you are not convinced; and what you say respecting the wicked, is pointed at me. M.

Ver. 28. Prince. Job, (M.) or rather the tyrant, whose lot we know is miserable, as he falls a victim of God’s justice. C. 20:7.

Ver. 29. Way. Travellers, who have seen foreign countries, (Vatab.) or any one that may be passing, (Sanchez) will answer this objection (H.) in my favour. M.—They will all agree in testifying that the wicked prosper, even for a long time. C.

Ver. 30. To the. He will be requited indeed, at last; or rather, when others are in the utmost danger, he will be protected as it were by God. Sept. (C.) or Theodotion, “the wicked is kept on high,” χουφιζεται. All from v. 28 to 33 inclusively, is marked as an addition to the Sept. by Grabe, who has supplied many similar omissions, of which Origen and S. Jerom complained. H.

Ver. 31. Done. Man is afraid, and God defers to take cognizance. C.

Ver. 32. Dead. Heb. “the sheaves,” being quite ripe for harvest, and even in the tomb, the tyrant retains some sore of pre-eminence, as he is buried with honour, an set like a more elevated sheaf, to inspect the rest. C.—Godiss, is rendered by Prot. “tomb,” (margin) “heap.” But (C. 5:26) where only the word occurs again, we find “a shock of corn,” and this comparison seems very suitable here. The damned shall watch, alas, when it will be to no purpose, among the heap of fellow-sufferers, who would not think while they had time to repent. After millions of night spent thus without sleep or ease, we may imagine we hear their mournful lamentations from the depth of the abyss. Always misery! and never any hope of ease! H.—“Eternity,” says Bridayne, (ser. in Maury’s Eloq.) “is a pendulum, the vibration of which sounds continually, Always! Never! In the mean while, a reprobate cries out: What o’clock is it? And the same voice answers, Eternity!” Thus at last the wicked shal awake from the sleep in which they have spent their days; (H.) and their watching, restless, and immortal souls (S. Thom.) will bitterly lament their past folly. What profit will they derive from the honours paid to their corpse by surviving friends, (H.) even though they be embalmed, and seem to live in marble statues? Pineda.

Ver. 33. Acceptable to the gravel of Cocytus. The Hebrew word, which S. Jerom has here rendered by the name Cocytus, (which the poets represent as a river in hell) signifies a valley or a torrent: and in this place, is taken for the low region of death, and hell: which willingly, as it were, receives the wicked at their death: who are ushered in by innumerable others that have gone before them; and are followed by multitudes above number. Ch.—Isaias (14:9) and Ezechiel (32:21) describe the splendid reception in hell of the kings of Babylon and of Egypt, nearly in the same manner as Job does that of any sinner who has lived in prosperity. C. 38:17. He gives life to the whole creation, in the true spirit of poetry. C.—The rich man is represented as tenderly embraced by his mother earth; (C. 1:21. H.) the very stones and turf press lightly upon him; as the ancients prayed, Sit tibi terra levis. Heb. “the stones or clods of the torrent (C.) shall be sweet to him, and he,” &c. H.—S. Jerom has chosen to mention a particular river, instead of the general term nel, “a torrent or vale,” to intimate that Job is speaking of the state after death.—Cocytus is a branch of the Styx, a river of Arcadia, of a noxious quality, which the poets have place in hell. Pineda.—Sept. “The pebbles of the torrent became sweet to him, and in his train every man shall come, and unnumbered men before him.” Alex. MS. has “men of number;” the two first letters of ἀναριθμητοι being omitted. H.—The Church reads in her office for S. Stephen, Lapides torrentis illi dulces fuerunt: ipsum sequuntur omnes animæ justæ. Many explain this passage of Job as a menace. The wicked have carried their insolence so far as to (C.) give orders to (H.) be buried with the utmost pomp: but in the other world, they shall be thrown ignominiously among the other dead. S. Greg. &c. C.—They were little moved with the thought of death, as it was common to all. But what will they think of eternal misery? H.

Ver. 34. Vain. These arguments shew that your assertions are destitute of proof, and afford me no comfort. C.

Ver. 2. Knowledge. How then canst thou dispute with God?

Ver. 3. Profit. God rules all with justice or with mercy: since, therefore, he punishes, it must be for some guilt, and not for his own advantage. But he might still chastise for the good of man, or to manifest his own power. Jo. 9:3. God also punishes the sinner for the wrong which he does to himself. S. Aug. Conf. iii. 8. Any one may discover the sophism of Eliphaz. If God were indifferent with regard to our virtue, who would be able to advance one step towards him? C.—Man is unprofitable indeed to God, but he may reap great advantage from piety himself; and this is what God desires, as well as his own glory. Mat. 5:17. W.

Ver. 4. Fear. Thus malefactors are condemned, that they may no longer disturb society. But may not God afflict the just, though he have nothing to fear? C.

Ver. 5. Iniquities. He adduces no fresh arguments, but boldly taxes Job with many crimes, which a person in his station might have committed. He rashly concludes that he must have fallen into some of them at least. C.

Ver. 6. Pledge. Heb. "person." Debtors might be sold. Matt. 18:30.

Ver. 7. Water. Job's disposition was the reverse. C. 29:15. Such inhumanity would hardly be conceived possible among us. But he Idumeans were guilty of it; (Num. 20:18. Isai. 21:14) and if it had not been probable, Eliphaz would not have dared to speak thus. C.

Ver. 8. It. Heb. and Sept. intimate that Job accepted persons, and gave sentence in favour of his rich friends. H.

Ver. 9. Arms; possessions, condemning orphans unjustly.

Ver. 11. Waters, and misery, (C.) which such conduct deserved. H.

Ver. 12. Stars: and of course, that his Providence regardeth not human affairs. C.—When an infidel observed, "I think the gods are too great to want my adoration," Socrates well replied, "The greater they appear to thee, the more oughtest thou to treat them with respect and honour." Xenophon, Memor.

Ver. 14. Doth. Heb. "seeth not." Sept. "is not seen."—Poles, on which the whole machine seems to turn. C.—"Hipparchus intimated that there would be a time when the hinges, or poles of heaven, would be moved out of their places." Colum. i. 1. Heb. and Sept. (according to Origen's edition, v. 13 to 16) "he walketh about in the circuit of heaven." H.

*Immortali ævo summâ cum pace fruatur
Semota a nostris rebus, sejunctaque longè.* Lucret.

This was the error of the Egyptians, (Arist. Mun. 84.) which Eliphaz unjustly lays to the charge of Job, as heretics often impute condemned tenets to Catholics. W.

Ver. 15. Wicked. Sept. Alex. "just." But Grabe substitutes unjust; (H.) as otherwise, Eliphaz would argue against his own principles: unless just be put ironically for hypocrites. C.—Wilt thou imitate the ancient giants, before the deluge? C.

Ver. 16. Flood. Heb. “river,” (Sept. C.) or “flood.” Prot. This does not certainly allude to the deluge, though Job could not be unacquainted with an event (H.) which appears in the writings of the most ancient pagan authors. Grot. Relig.

Ver. 18. From me. He thus insinuates that Job entertained such sentiments, though he seemed to condemn them. C. 21:16. C.—Sept. “is far from him,” God.

Ver. 19. Shall. Sept. “saw.” The Jews explain this of Noe, who saw the ruin of the giants with pity, mixed with joy, as he approved of the divine judgments. Vatab. &c.—The just can thus rejoice, only on this account; as they would not be just if they were devoid of charity. S. Greg. Ps. 57:11 and 106:42. C.

Ver. 20. Their. Heb. “our.” C.—“Whereas our substance is not cut down.” Prot. H.—But the Sept. and Chal. agree with the Vulg. which gives a better sense.—Fire, which consumed Sodom, &c. C.

Ver. 22. Law of Moses, (Rabbins) or rather (H.) the natural law, which teaches that God is just, and deserves to be adored. He addresses Job, as if he had acknowledged no law or restraint.

Ver. 24. Gold, to build and adorn thy habitation, v. 23. Heb. “He will give thee gold instead of dust; (or more abundant) yea, gold of the torrents of Ophir.” The Phasis is said to roll gold dust, which is of the purest kind. Gen. 2:11. C.—“Thou shalt lay upon gold as dust, and the gold of Ophir, as the stones of the brooks.” Prot. H.—This is an exaggeration, (3 K. 10:27. C.) and a sort of proverb, intimating that strength and plenty should succeed to infirmity. The foundations should be the hard rock, instead of earth, &c.

Ver. 25. Silver. Sept. “But he shall purify thee, as silver, which has passed the fire.” H.

Ver. 26. Face, with confidence of being in favour and accepted. C.

Ver. 27. Vows, after obtaining thy requests. M.—

Et positis aris jam vota in littore solves. Æn. iii.

Ver. 28. Decree. Thy projects shall succeed. Sept. “But he shall appoint for thee the rule of justice.” H.

Ver. 29. Glory, as the gospel declares. Mat. 23:12. The Heb. is more perplexed. “When men are cast down, then thou shalt say, there is lifting up.” Prot. (H.) or “when thy eyes shall be cast down, they shall say to thee, Arise.” C.

Ver. 30. Innocent. Heb. “He shall deliver even the man who is not innocent, and that for the sake of the purity of thy hands.” Chal. Jun. &c.—God will even spare the guilty, to manifest the regard which he has for the intercession of the saints. These interpreters have taken ai in the same sense as ain, which is the case, 1 K. 4:21. C.—Others explain, “He shall deliver the island of the innocent, and it is delivered by the pureness of thine hands.” Prot. This also would shew the merit and protection of the saints, as a whole island may owe its safety to one of God’s servants. In effect, the would stands by the prayers of the saints. H.—All that has been said from v. 21 tends to shew that God favours his friends; and, consequently, that he would never have punish Job, if he had not been guilty. C.

JOB 23

Ver. 2. Bitterness. Instead of comfort, he only meets with insult from his friends. He therefore appeals to God, (W.) but with fear. C.—Scourge, is not in Heb. M.—But it explains the meaning of “my hand,” (H.) or the heavy chastisement (S. Greg.) which I endure. M.

Ver. 6. Nor. Prot. “No, but he would put strength in me.” He would enable me to stand my trial. H.—He would lay no falsehood to my charge.

Ver. 7. Victory. Before such a judge I should hope to be acquitted. Job must have been well convinced of his innocence. For woe to man, if God treat him according to the rigour of his justice! C.—Sept. “For truth and reproof are with him. But, oh! that he would bring my judgment to an end.” H.

Ver. 8. East, or Heb. “before ... if behind I cannot perceive him.” C.—Where, then, shall I find this just judge? v. 3. H.

Ver. 9. Right, southward.—See. The southern part of the heavens, or the antarctic stars would not be discerned in Idumea. C. 9:9. C.—Job speaks in a human manner, as he was not ignorant of God’s immensity. M.

Ver. 10. Fire. They had not a stone, like the Greeks, to try gold. C.

Ver. 12. Lips, given to Noe, (Gen. 9:5) or to Moses. This work was written by a Jew, who dresses up the sentiments of Job in his own style. The holy man was also acquainted with the Mosaic dispensation, though he was not bound to observe the ceremonial part of it. C.—His words, may, however, be verified, though he speak only of the natural law, or of that which was preserved by tradition of the patriarchs, as both proceeded from God. H.—Hid. Prot. “esteemed ... more than my necessary food.” H.—Sept. agree with the Vulg. The ancients placed in their bosom what they greatly esteemed. The Turks still use it as a pocket. Thevenot xxii. C.

Ver. 13. Alone. Self-existent. Heb. “in one thing,” or resolution. He is immutable: all I could say would avail nothing. C.

Ver. 14. With him, to punish me afresh. Heb. “when he shall have appointed me my portion, he shall still have many such.” He may treat me as a slave, allowing me only a certain portion of meat. Prov. 30:8 and 31:15. C.

Ver. 17. Face. My afflictions have not yet taken away my life, as might have been expected. H.—I am less affected with my miseries, than with the dread of God’s presence, v. 15, 16. C.

Ver. 1. Days, when he will be punished. M.—They are convinced it will be sometime: while the wicked flatter themselves with impunity. W.—Job has already shewn that his complaints had not been excessive, and that they were extorted chiefly by the dread which he had of God. He now comes to prove that he had not denied Providence. For though he asserted that the wicked were sometimes at ease, he maintained that there was another world, where all would be set to rights. Without this the book would be inexplicable. C.—Know him. Sept. “the impious.” H.

Ver. 2. Marks. This was a heinous offence, (Deut. 19:14) which Numa punished with death. Halyc. i. C.—And fed. Sept. “and those who fed them.”

Ver. 4. Poor, by oppression, not allowing them to get their bread, or to walk on the same road. C.—And have. Heb. and Sept. “the meek ... have hidden themselves together.”

Ver. 5. Others. Heb. “Behold as,” (H.) which may be explained of these oppressors, or rather of the poor, who are forced to flee before them to seek for food. C.—The Vulg. and Sept. seem more favourable to the former supposition. H.

Ver. 6. Not, is omitted by the Prot. H.—Heb. “they reap in the field food for the cattle.” C.—His. Heb. “the wicked man’s vineyard.” H.—They do not examine whether the person whom they plunder be just or not. C.—Sept. “they have reaped before the season the field which was not theirs. But the poor (helpless men) have laboured in the vineyards of the wicked without wages or meat.” H.

Ver. 7. Cold. Heb. is still ambiguous, as it may be understood either of the oppressor or of the poor. The cruelty here reprobated is contrary to the law. Ex. 22:26. C.

Ver. 8. Stones, for their bed, though they be so wet. H.

Ver. 9. Robbed. Heb. and Sept. “snatched from the breast.”—Stript. Sept. “knocked down.” Heb. “taken a pledge of, or seized the poor.” C.

Ver. 10. Corn, which they had gleaned for their daily sustenance. Heb. also, “the poor, perishing through hunger, carry the sheaf” of the rich.

Ver. 11. Of them. Heb. “of corn, and thirst while pressing out their olives.” C.—Prot. “they take away the sheaf from the hungry, (11) which make oil within their walls, and tread their wine-presses, and suffer thirst,” (H.) not being allowed to taste any thing, though the law of Moses would not suffer even the ox to be muzzled. Deut. 25:4. The rich look on without pity, taking their rest at noon, amid the heaps which really belong to the poor, whom they force to labour for them.

Ver. 12. Suffer. Heb. “and God suffers no disorder,” according to you. C.—Sym. “God inspireth not folly: but they have,” &c. v. 13. Sept. “But why does he not regard,” (H.) or punish these things? C.

Ver. 13. Light of reason and humanity. C.—Pineda understands that they have sought darkness, (v. 14) to do evil. But this expression would be too harsh. C.—Heretics, acting against their own conscience, are stricken with blindness, so that they see not the truth. S. Greg. xvi. 26. W.

Ver. 14. Thief. Oppressing the poor, (Ven. Bede) and taking away their bread. Eccli. 34:25.

Ver. 15. Face. Sept. insinuate “with a mask.” Prot. “disguiseth his face.”

Ver. 16. Themselves. The band of robbers had marked out their prey.

H.—Heb. “In the day time they lie concealed, and know not the light.” C.—Sept. or rather Theodotion, from whom v. 15 to 17 is taken, “They have sealed themselves up during the day.” If we should read εαυτοις, Heb. lamo, we might translate as well “they marked them out for themselves.” H.—The adulterer had made his arrangement with the faithless woman, when he should break into the house. M.

Ver. 17. Death. They are as much afraid of the light as others are of profound darkness. C.—They dread being detected. H.

Ver. 18. He is light, &c. That is, the adulterer, that he may not be perceived and discovered, steps as nimbly and as light as if he were walking upon the waters. Or the sense is: he is as light, that is, as swift and nimble as the running waters.—By the way of the vineyards. That is, by the way where he may meet with fruit and blessings. Ch.—The wicked are always inconstant. C. Isai. 57:19.—He deserves no temporal nor eternal happiness. If he were deprived of the former, he might perhaps endeavour to escape the torments of hell. H.

Ver. 19. Let. Heb. “Drought and heat consume the snow waters; so doth the grave those which have sinned.” Prot. Ch. H.—The wicked die quickly, and without a lingering illness. Piscat.—What foundation, therefore, has the hell of cold as well as of fire? says Amama. S. Jerom (in Matt. 10.) observes, “We read very plainly in the Book of Job that there is a double gehenna, both of too much heat and of too much cold;” the latter occasions the gnashing of teeth. Mat. 8. Carthus.—“In this world people pass through a medium or temperate state. But in hell, they pass from the excess of tormenting cold to that of burning fire; they will know no medium, because in this life they proceeded from one vice to another, even to the heat of lust. Albertus Magnus. H.—Therefore they are punished with torments of a contrary nature. W.—They go from the coldness of infidelity to the heat of heresy; (S. Greg.) from one calamity to another. Sa.—Sept. “For they have torn away the arm of the orphans. Then his or their sin has been remembered, and, like a dew-drop, he has disappeared. H.

Ver. 20. Sweetness. These will inherit him; (H.) for here all his pleasures will terminate. C.

Ver. 21. Fed the barren. That is, the harlot. Or else, he hath fed; that is, he hath fed upon the barren; that is, the poor and desolate. Ch.—He has not had posterity, but pleasure, in view, when he married. Rabbins.—Sept. agree with the Vulg. H.—But most explain the Heb. “He hath oppressed the barren;” which may denote those whose husband and children have been slain. C.—No good, but even dealt with them dishonestly. Cajetan.

Ver. 22. Down. Heb. “taketh along with him his guards for his defence. He riseth and is not sure of his life,” fearing lest his enemies may still overpower him. This is a description of the tyrant’s continual anxiety. C.—Prot. “And no man is sure of life,” may intimate that the wicked put all men in danger. H.—He who puts others in fear, must also be alarmed. M.

Ver. 23. God. Sept. “being sick, let him not expect to be healed, but he shall fall under sickness.” Heb. “Though it be given him to be in safety, whereon he resteth, yet his eyes are upon their ways,” (Prot.) or “he has given (H.) himself, or appointed them (guards) for his defence, and rests on them; yet his eyes,” &c. He suspects the fidelity of his servants. C.—Pride. Man abuseth by his free-will the time which God had allowed him to repent from former sins. Rom. 2. W.

Ver. 25. And set. Sept. and Prot. “and make my speech nothing worth.” H.—This conclusion come frequently. C. 9:15 and 17:15. Job defies his friends to shew the fallacy of his arguments, or that the wicked do not enjoy prosperity, though they may be inwardly miserable. C.

JOB 25

Ver. 1. Answered. He directs his attack against Job’s desiring to plead before God, and gives a wrong statement of his request, which he also attempts to refute, by urging the same inconclusive arguments as before. C.—Blind and obstinate disputers still repeat the same objections; (W.) as Protestants do against the Catholic doctrines, which have been so often and so ably defended. H.

Ver. 2. Places. Directing all the heavenly bodies with perfect harmony. C.

Ver. 3. Soldiers. The works of the whole creation, particularly the stars and angels. M.

Ver. 4. Clean. Job had used a similar expression, as well as Eliphaz. C. 4:17 and 14:4 and 15:15. The holy man did not assert that he was free from sin, but only that God did not punish him (C.) so dreadfully (H.) on that account, and that he has just reasons for afflicting his servants, if it were only to manifest his own power and glory. C.

Ver. 5. Sight, compared with him. The most beautiful things in nature are nothing; and of course, the most just are all imperfection, when

JOB 26

Ver. 4. Life. Sept. also seem to understand this of God. C.—Job does not blame his friends for undertaking to approve the ways of Providence, but for condemning himself (S. Chrys.) rashly, (H.) and, with an air of haughtiness, endeavouring to restrain him from pleading his cause before the divine tribunal. M.—Heb. “Whose spirit came from thee?” Prot. (H.) Did I receive my life, or do I seek advice from thee? C.—God stood in no need of Baldad’s wisdom (W.) no more than Job. H.

Ver. 5. With them. The less and greater fishes, (M.) or rather the giants and others who were buried in the waters of the deluge, and are confined in the dungeons of hell. The poets speak in the same manner.

*“Hic genus antiquum terræ, Titania pubes, Fulmine dejecti fundo voluntur in imo.
Aliis sub gurgite vasto, Infectum eluitur scelus aut exuritur igni.”* Æn. vi.

—Homer (Iliad viii.) and Hesiod (Theog.) place the giants at the extremity of the earth, in the utmost darkness. See also Prov. 9:18. Isai. 14:9. C.

Ver. 6. Hell. The grave.—Destruction. Heb. abaddon. H.—S. John (Apoc. 9:11) styles the bottomless abyss; (C.) or its angel, (H.) Abaddon, or Apollyon. It may here be called destruction, (C.) as all its victims are lost for ever to every thing that is good. The obscurity of the grave, and even that of hell, can hide nothing from God.

Ver. 7. North pole, which alone was visible in Idumea, and continued unmoved, while all the stars performed their revolutions. C.—Nothing. Terra, pilæ similis, nullo fulmine nixa. Ovid, Fast. vi. C.—All tends to the centre, (M.) by the laws of attraction. Newton, &c. H.

Ver. 8. Clouds, as in a vessel or garment. Prov. 30:4.

Ver. 9. Over it. The firmament, with all its beauty, is but like a cloud, to conceal from our feeble eyes the splendor of God’s throne.

Ver. 10. End. Till the end of the world, the ocean will respect these limits. H.—The ancients looked upon it as a continual miracle that the world was not deluged, as the waters are higher than the earth. Jer. 5:22. Amos 5:8. S. Bas. and S. Amb. Hexem. Cicero, Nat. ii.—Philosophers have explained this phenomenon. But it is still certain that the power and wisdom of God preserve the equilibrium, without which all would return to the ancient chaos. C.

Ver. 11. Heaven. The mountains are so styled by Pindar; and the poets represent them supporting the heavens. Totum ferre potest humeris minitantis orbem. Petron.—Yet others understand that power which keeps all things together, (C.) or the angels, to whose rule the ancients attributed the celestial bodies. S. Greg. Ven. Bede, &c.

Ver. 12. Together, at the beginning. Gen. 1:9. Heb. “By his strength he has divided the sea; and by his wisdom he has pierced the proud, or Egypt.” Rahab, (H.) or Rachab, is often put for Egypt; (Ps. 88:11) and all would naturally have concluded that the fall of Pharaoh was pointed at, if it had not been supposed that Job lived before that event. That is, however, dubious. Isaias (51:9) uses the same terms in describing the fall of this tyrant. C.—Yet the Sept. translate, “the whale,” (H.) or some sea monster, which God holds in subjection, (Pineda) like the weakest creature. H.—The foaming billows (M.) are likewise subject to his control. H.

Ver. 13. Heavens, with stars, &c. Ps. 32:6. Wisd. 1:7. God also sends winds to disperse the clouds, that the heavens may appear. C.—Artful, (obstetricante) “being the midwife.” The least things are ruled by Providence. W.—Serpent; a constellation, lightning, the devil, or rather the leviathan. Isai. 27:1. Drusius. C.—Sept. “by his decree, he killed the apostate dragon.” H.—But there is no need of having recourse to allegory. C.

Ver. 14. Drop. This comparison is often applied to speech. Deut. 32:2. Isai. 55:10. If the little that we know of God’s works give us such an exalted idea of his greatness, what should we think if we could fully comprehend his mysteries? C.

JOB 27

Ver. 1. Parable: speaking in a figurative poetic style, Num. 23:7. Job grants that God generally punishes the wicked, but he maintains that he also chastises the just; and hence admonishes all to revere his judgments and wisdom, and to decline from evil; which truths must always subsist, whatever may be the conduct of Providence. C.—

Parables do not always imply similies, but sometimes pithy, and profound sentences, spoken by the wisest men.

Ver. 2. Judgment. Chal. “my rule of judging.” Sept. “Live the Lord, who hath judged me thus.” Sym. “hath despised my judgment.” The expression seems very harsh, and may be one of those which God blames. C. 40:3. E. C.—Yet we shall examine that point later. C. 42. H.—He may only mean that he is so well convinced of his innocence, that he calls God to witness it, (C.) and adores his ways, (H.) in not permitting him to appear before his tribunal, (C.) to justify himself; (M.) so the he is abandoned to the rash judgments of others. C. 34:5. Isaias (40:27) and Sophonias (3:15) speak in similar terms. C.—God deferred passing sentence, for Job’s greater trial. W.

Ver. 3. Nostrils: while I live. H.—Gen. 2:7. Ezec. 37:14. C.

Ver. 5. Till. Never will I abandon this path, (H.) nor will I yield to your reasons, (C.) or cease to defend myself. M.—It would have been contrary to justice and charity, (H.) as well as to truth, to confess a false crime. W.

Ver. 7. Enemy, or opponent. Heb. “my enemy shall be,” &c. H.—In effect, those who maintained the contrary to what Job taught, favoured the cause of impiety, as they represented God never punishing his servants, &c. (C.) which is contrary to experience; (H.) though it was not so evident at that time. Houbigant.—Job is so far from thinking riches a proof of sanctity, that he rather would wish his enemy to have them, (M.) as they are too frequently an incentive to sin. H.

Ver. 8. Soul, in death: What will it profit? &c. Mat. 16:26. All this proves demonstratively another world. C.

Ver. 9. Him. Like Antiochus, the wicked pray only through fear of punishment, and their request is therefore rejected. 2 Mac. 9:13. M.

Ver. 11. Hand, or grace of God.—Hath, how he acts, and with what design. C.—Quid disponat Deus. S. Aug.

Ver. 13. Portion. This you have repeatedly asserted; and (H.) I acknowledge it is generally, but not always, the case. C.

Ver. 14. Bread. Sept. “if they grow up to manhood, they shall beg.” Ps. 36:25. H.

Ver. 15. In death; without honour. Sanctius.—Weep for him. Sept. “his widows no one shall lament, or pity.” H. Ps. 77:63. M.

Ver. 18. Moth. Heb. “as the polar star.” Jun.—But the Chal. &c. translate with the Vulg. which agrees better with the latter part of the verse. The moth devours another’s property, like the wicked man, who lodges commodiously, though not at his own expense.—Keeper of a field, or of a vineyard. C.—Sept. “His house has slept away like a moth, and what he has kept (or his riches) like a spider.” H.—The moth demolishes its own house, and is then disturbed, (M.) or thrown with the rotten wood into the fire.

Ver. 19. Nothing. His riches are all left behind! The men of riches have slept their sleep, and have found nothing in their hands. They awake as from a dream, (C. 20:8. H.) and then they form a true estimate of things. M.—God chiefly punishes the wicked in death. Ps. 75. W.

Ver. 20. Night. Darkness often denotes disgrace and misery.

Ver. 22. And he (God) shall, or Sept. the wind, (C.) “shall fall upon him.” H.—Flee. Yet he will not escape, (M.) though he flee with all expedition. H.

Ver. 23. Place. God having waited patiently a long time, at last displays the effects of his indignation, with a sort of contempt. Prov. 1:26. Ezech. 5:13. C. Ps. 2:4. M. Pineda.—Every passenger who shall witness his fall, and his now abandoned place, shall also testify his approbation. H.

JOB 28

Ver. 1. Silver. Heb. “Surely there is a vein, or mine, for silver.” H.—The sagacity of man has discovered all these things. Wonderful also is the instinct of animals, v. 7. Yet wisdom comes from God alone; and those act rashly, who pretend to dive into his counsels in punishing his creatures and ruling the world. C.

Ver. 2. Stone. Prot. “and brass is molten out of the stone.” H.—“When brass comes out of the mine it resembles stone, and being mixed with earth is refined in the fire.” Pliny xxxvi. 27. M.—All this process would require much ingenuity and time. Tubalcain was a great artist before the deluge; (Gen. 4:22) but we cannot tell who were the inventors of these things, though (C.) the Greeks have specified the names of some who introduced these metals into their respective countries. Pliny vii. 56. H.

Ver. 3. He (God) hath, &c. H.—Darkness, before which these inventions could not be made; (M.) or, man has been able to measure the hours of day and night by the shadow of the sun, and by other means. He always strives to perfect his works, and examines with care the mines which lay concealed in the most profound obscurity. C.—Precious stones and metals lie the deepest. M.—From the consideration of these beautiful works, men ought to raise their minds to the Creator, and wisely rest in him alone. W.

Ver. 4. At. Nations are separated by waters from each other. C.—Some, like the Chinese, keep all strangers at a distance. H.—But the industry of man breaketh through all barriers. Heb. “a river separates a foreign nation forgotten by travellers; but these waters cannot stop man: they flow away.” C.—“The flood breaketh out from the inhabitants, even the waters; forgotten of the foot, they are dried up; they are gone away from men.” Prot. “Sand cuts off a torrent: but those who forget the way of justice, have become infirm, and have been instable among mortals.” Sept. H.—Travellers are sometimes parted by a swelling torrent; (Sa) and waters, bursting forth suddenly, change the roads of man. W.

Ver. 5. In its, &c. Heb. and Sept. “and under it is turned up as it were fire,” which lies in it. H.—Fire, like Sodom; to which event Job alludes, C. 22:20. C.—The furnaces to melt various metals have taken the place of corn, and occupy the land. M.—Men have extracted bitumen, &c. even from the lake of Sodom. Pliny vii. 15.—Nothing escapes them. C.

Ver. 6. Sapphires. The best are found in Media, in the country of the Taphyri, (Ptol.) or Raspires. Herod. iii. 94.—Gold. This precious metal, like all others, is found in the bowels of the earth, (H.) and in the bed of rivers, in Ophir, Peru, &c. C.

Ver. 7. Path of these metals, (M.) or a path in general. H.—They fly, as beasts roam about, without keeping the high road; yet never miss their way, or fail to return to their own place, though they may have crossed the sea or woods, and been absent many months. This instinct is one of the wonders of nature. C.

Ver. 8. Merchants, who go the shortest road. H.—Heb. “of lions,” which find their deans without asking for the path. C.

Ver. 9. Roots, in quest of precious metals. M.—“Imus in viscera terræ et in sede Marium opes quærimus.” Pliny xxxiii. pæf.

Effodiuntur opes, irritamenta malorum. Ovid, Met. i.

Ver. 10. Rivers. Or, the waters lodged in the mines. M.—He hath even cut canals through the hardest rocks, (H.) and sunk wells. C.

Ver. 11. Searched, by diving; (C.) or, Heb. “he bindeth the rivers from flowing;” diverting their course by dams, &c. This is another proof of the power of man. C.—Labor omnia vincit. Hor.

Ver. 12. Understanding, of supernatural things, which teaches us to love God, and to comprehend his counsels. This is very different from the human sagacity of which he has been speaking; and this is the gift of God alone. C.

Ver. 13. Price. It has none, like other precious things. Bar. 3:15.—In delights is not expressed in Heb. or Sept. C.—But to live in misery is hardly to be accounted living, (H.) and the addition restrains the proposition, as some men possess this treasure, though not those who take no pains (C.) to mortify corrupt nature. H.—Chal. “it is not found in the land of the proud, whose life is spent in sin.” C.—True wisdom is found, not in natural, but in supernatural, things. W.

Ver. 15. Finest, obrizum, which has the colour of fire. Pliny xxiii. 3. The old Vulg. and Sept. read “locked-up gold,” aurum conclusum, (C.) and the Heb. Segor, (H.) “that which is shut up,” like things of value: gold is sometimes specified, 3 K. 6:20.

Ver. 16. Dyed, &c. Heb. cethem ophir, (H.) “the shut up” (gold, though the Vulg. Sept. &c. vary in the interpretation) “of Ophir.” This country was famous for its gold. C.—Its situation is not clearly ascertained. S. Jerom seems to have placed it in India, which Josephus, “in the golden country,” now Malacca.—Stone. Prot. onyx. Heb. shoham (H.) means, probably, the emerald. Gen. 2:12. C.—But these names are very indeterminate. Theodotion, from whom grater part of this chapter is inserted in the Sept. has “the gold of Ophir, and the precious onyx and sapphire.” H.

Ver. 17. Gold. This is the third time it has been mentioned, according to its different degrees of excellence. Hence it is called by the most common name, (C.) zahab. H.—Crystal was formerly more “transparent” than we have it at present. C.—Zecucith (H.) denotes something of this kind. C.

Ver. 18. Things. Heb. Ramoth and Gabish (H.) are terms much controverted. The first may denote the unicorns, (Deut. 33:17) and the latter the thunderbolt, or ceraunia, which were in high request. Pliny xxxvii. 9. Ezechiel (13:11 and 27:16) mentions the former as carried by merchants to Tyre. These stones, which fell from the sky, were used by the Parthian magi, &c. for secret purposes. They have given rise to many fabulous accounts. Those which are to be seen, are by no means beautiful. C.—Yet if the people esteemed them, Job might well include them among other things of most value. Prot. “No mention shall be made of coral, or of pearls, for the price of wisdom is above rubies.” H.—The latter part of the verse would be rather, “the fishing for wisdom would be more difficult than that for pearls;” (C.) or, “the extraction of wisdom is above the drawing for of peninim.” H.—The pinna is a kind of fish which is fastened to the bottom of the sea, by roots, of which the byssus was made. 1 Par. 15:27. Pearls were commonly found in the Persian Gulf, near Idumea. The art of diving for them, and extracting them from the fish, was very difficult, but nothing in comparison with the labour requisite to discover wisdom. The ancients describe some pearls of a reddish gold colour. Athen. iii. 13. Jer. Lam. 4:7.—Adam, which is interpreted red, in Jeremias, means also any thing very shining; in which sense the word purpureus is used. Hor. vi. Ode 1. Bochart, Anim. p. 2, b. v. vi. (C.) and t. iii. 681. 91. The opinion of this author seems preferable to that of Hutchinson and Cooke, who would translate peninim (H.) by “loadstones or magnets,” which the former says are like “reddish clay,” though they are really of a dusky iron grey, sometimes tinged with brown or red. This complexion would not be very beautiful. Yet the Nazarites are compared to peninim, (Lam. 4) and to snow, (Parkhurst) as they were of a most fair red and white, like pearls. H.—Though the ancients seem to have been acquainted with the loadstone or magnetic needle, particularly the Phenicians (Odys. viii. 556.) and Chinese, for many ages, yet it was never so common as to form a popular comparison. Aquila renders the word in question, περιβλεπτα, “conspicuous things;” and pearls were certainly highly valued by the Jews, &c. Parkhurst, in pone.—Theodotion, in the Sept. “draw forth wisdom before the inmost things.”—Both these versions agree with the Vulg. as the most precious goods are kept out of sight. H.—Yet the deepest mines of gold do not require so much diligence and sagacity for us to discover and possess them, as wisdom does; but, in return, it will abundantly recompense the man who finds such a treasure. Eccli. 6:19 and 24. Pineda.

Ver. 19. Ethiopia, on the east of the Red Sea. Pliny (vi. 29.) mentions the isle of Chuthis, which was also famous for the topaz.—Dying. Heb. cethem, (H.) which we have observed relates to gold, v. 16.

Ver. 22. Destruction. Heb. abaddon, which is before (C. 26:6) used to signify the bottomless abyss. There, too late! the dead become acquainted with the value and nature of wisdom. H.—But their knowledge is imperfect, and of no use to us. C.

Ver. 25. Measure. He regulates the winds, and know the drops of water, (H.) which to man is impossible. Prov. 16:2.

Ver. 26. Storms; or Heb. “for the lightning, which attends thunder.” C.

Ver. 27. It. All the works of God proclaim his wisdom. H.—He never made an acquisition of it, but possessed it from all eternity. Prov. 8:23.

Ver. 28. Understanding. This is the duty of man, and a thing of the utmost importance. This teaches us to adore God’s judgments (C.) in silence. H.—It is the most important instruction of the whole book. Pineda.—Man must consider God’s works to fear Him; and by avoiding evil, and doing good, (W.) to shew true wisdom. H.

JOB 29

Ver. 2. Me. Job perceiving that his friends made no reply, (C.) and yet did not appear satisfied, (H.) explains how he had behaved in prosperity, in answer to the insinuations of Eliphaz; (C. 22:5) and what miseries he now experienced; though he maintains these were not inflicted on account of his sins. He continues this discourse in the two next chapters. C.—He wishes to be restored to his former state, for his own vindication, (H.) and that he might exercise the works of mercy. Ven. Bede.

Ver. 4. Youth. Heb. also “autumn or winter,” which are seasons of repose, when people enjoy the fruits of their labours.—Tabernacle, and all consulted me as an oracle. C.—Sept. “when God made the visit of my house,” (H.) and filled it with blessings, like that of Obededom, 2 K. 6:12.

Ver. 6. Butter. Many understand “cream.” But butter was used to anoint the body, as well as oil. Non omittendum in eo (butyro) olei vim esse, & Barbaros omnes infantesque nostros ita ungi. Pliny ix. 41.—Oil. These hyperbolical expressions denote the utmost fertility. Gen. 49:11. C.—Sept. have “milk.” On all sides, Job could behold his rich pastures and cattle, (H.) so that he might have washed his feet in butter and milk. The rocks also were covered with olive trees; (M.) or the stone used for a press made the oil gush forth. Cajet. Sa.

Ver. 7. To the gate. Sept. “early.”—Chair, or throne, where Job sat in judgment. H.—It appears evident that he was the prince in his city. Idumea had at first several petty kings at the same time. Gen. 36:15.

C.—But Job had several princes (ver. 9. H.) under him. Pineda.

Ver. 11. Gave. Sept. “winked,” through approbation. C.

Ver. 16. Diligently, not passing sentence at random. I also endeavoured to do justice to those who durst not make any complaint. The prince ought to have an eye to all things. C.

Ver. 17. Prey, which he had extorted from the poor. M.

Ver. 18. Nest, in security, and among my children. C.—Palm-tree. Sept. “But I said, my youth shall grow old like the shoot of the palm-tree: I shall live a long time.” This is clearly the meaning of this version, (H.) as appears from the word στελεχος, “a shoot (C.) or trunk.” M.—Yet as φοινιξ, signifies also “a Phœnician, and the phœnix,” some have explained this passage of the latter, which seems agreeable to the mention of a nest. Many fabulous accounts have been given of this bird, of which only one is supposed to exist at a time, rising from its parent’s ashes; which, if true, (C.) would have been very (H.) beautifully applicable to a future resurrection. S. Clem. ep. 1 Cor. S. Amb. de fide Res. ii. 59, &c. See Solin, xlii. Tacit. Ann. vi. This uncertain bird may have been confounded with the bird of Paradise. Palm-trees live a long time, and multiply shoots all round them surprisingly. Pliny xiii. 4. and xvi. 44.—Yet the Scripture never elsewhere uses the term eul for this tree. The moderns generally translate, “I shall multiply my days like the sand,” which is a very common expression. C. Diss.—The following verse seems, however, favourable to the sense of the Sept. and Vulg. though the heavy nature of sand, which “remains” in its place, might serve to express the confidence which Job had of continuing for a long time in the midst of prosperity. H.

Ver. 19. Harvest. Prot. “branch.” Ps. 1:3. Isai. 18:4. H.

Ver. 20. Bow, strength. I thought my glory would never end. M.

Ver. 23. Shower, in autumn, at which season only, and in spring, it rained in those countries. C. Deut. 11:14. M.—It would, of course, be very acceptable after the drought of summer. Prov. 16:15.

Ver. 24. Earth, with neglect. C.—My attendants could scarcely believe their own eyes, through joy, (H.) when I assumed a more familiar air with them. C.—They still revered my authority. M.

Ver. 25. With. Heb. “in his army, like one comforting people in mourning.” H.—Job was not merely as, or like a king, but also one in effect; exercising the power, (v. 7) and wearing the royal robes, v. 14.

JOB 30

Ver. 1. Flock, to watch over them. Sanchez. C.—I had so little confidence in them, (H.) or they were so very mean. C.—They were not as well fed as my dogs. Nicetas.—Job does not speak this out of contempt, as he was affable to all. But this proverbial expression denotes how vile these people were. M.—Even the most contemptible, and such as were not fit to have the care of dogs, derided him. W.

Ver. 2. And they. Heb. “Their old age is perished.” They were good for nothing all their lives. C.

Ver. 3. Who. Heb. “solitary in,” &c. Yet these vagabond (H.) people now insult over me. C.

Ver. 4. Grass. “There (in Crete, where no noxious animal, no serpent lives) the herb alimos, being chewed, expels hunger for the day;” admorsa diurnam famem prohibet. Solin. 17.—The Heb. malliuch, is rendered halima, by the Sept. (H.) and Bochart would translate, “who gather the halima from the bush.” C.—Prot. “who cut up mallows by the bushes, and juniper roots for their meat.” H.—Yet all agree that the latter is not proper for food. C.—Rethamim may (H.) designate any “shrubs or wild herbs,” as the Sept. and Symmachus have explained it. C.—Perhaps the very poor people might use the juniper or broom roots for food, (M.) or to burn in order to prepare their victuals. H.—The Arabs and Spaniards still use the word retama for “the birch-tree.” Parkhurst.

Ver. 5. Who. Sept. “through excessive hunger. Robbers rushed upon me.” Prot. “They were driven forth from among men; (the cried after them as after a thief.)” H.

Ver. 6. Gravel of the torrents. M.—Heb. “in the rocks,” living like the Troglodites. H.

Ver. 7. Pleased. Heb. “brayed.” C.—Briars. Prot. “nettles.” They were driven from the society of men and forced to abscond. H.

Ver. 8. And not. Heb. “viler than the earth.” Prot.

Ver. 9. Bye-word. “Proverb.” H.—They speak of me with contempt. C. 17:6.

Ver. 10. Face. This most people explain literally; while some, (C.) as Job was herein a figure of Christ, (M. Matt. 26. W.) think that the expression denotes the utmost contempt; (S. Greg. &c.) or that the people spit upon the ground (C.) for fear of contracting any infection; (H.) and because lepers were held in the utmost abhorrence. C.

Ver. 11. For he. Prot. "Because he hath loosed my cord, and afflicted me, they have also let loose the bridle before me," (H.) being no longer under any restraint. Sometimes it was customary to put bits into the mouth of a person who was led to execution. Isai. 37:29. C.—The Heb. plural, have put, insinuates the plurality of persons in God, (W.) though it may be as well referred to the enemies of Job.

Ver. 12. Forthwith. Heb. pirchach seems to be translated (H.) by three terms, rising, calamities, and forthwith, as it denotes "a bud" which suddenly appears. C.—Sept. Βλαστον, "On the right hand of the bud they rose up." H.—Heb. "Youth stood up on the right," to accuse me; (Ps. 108:6) or, "Scarcely had I begun to flourish, when they rose up," &c. The days of prosperity soon vanished, (C.) and young men were ready to insult the distressed, and, as it were, to trip them up. M.—Sept. "they stretched out their feet and trampled upon me, that they might destroy me." H.—They seem to have read (C.) regliem, "their feet," though the two last letters are now omitted in Heb. H.

Ver. 13. Help them, or me. C. Sept. "they took off my garment." H.—Job seemed to be besieged, and could not escape. C.

Ver. 14. Down, (devoluti sunt.) They have proceeded to aggravate my misfortunes. H.—"They came upon me as a wide breaking in of waters: in the desolation they rolled themselves upon me. Prot.

Ver. 15. Nothing. Heb. "terror." H.—Desire. Heb. "princess," reason. C.—Prot. "soul." Sept. "my hope has flown away like wind." H.

Ver. 16. Fadeth. Heb. "is poured out," (H.) ready to take its flight. Ps. 41:5.

Ver. 17. They that. Heb. "my sinews take no rest." Sept. "are dissolved." H.—The worms prey upon me, and I am like one in a raging fever. C.

Ver. 18. Coat. The worms are so numerous, (M.) or my enemies pour upon me. C.—Sept. "with great power He (God; Prot. my disease) has seized me by the garment." Theodotion adds, "He has taken hold of me like the collar of my tunic;" (H.) which corresponds with our shirt, and had an opening at the top. C.

Ver. 19. I am. Heb. "He hat cast me into the mire;" (Prot.) or, "He regards me as dirt; my portion is on the earth and dust." H.—All look upon me with horror and contempt. C.

Ver. 20. Not is supplied by Prot. in the second part of the verse from the first; (H.) as this construction is not unusual in the Heb. Sept. "they have stood up, and have considered me," (C.) to procure my entire ruin. H.

Ver. 22. Dashed me in pieces, as if I had been raised so high for that purpose. Heb. "thou hast dissolved my substance," wisdom, &c. The signification of tushiova (H.) is very indeterminate. C. 5:12. C.—"Thou hast cast me far away from salvation." Sept. and Theodot. H.

Ver. 23. Liveth. Death is a relief to a just man in tribulation. W.

Ver. 24. Consumption. Thou dealest mercifully with other people: but all the effects of thy anger fall upon me, even here. Sept. "O that I might lay hands on myself, or desire another to do this for me!" Heb. has nothing similar; but is very obscure: "He will not, however, stretch forth his had to the grave; and when they are wounded, they are healed." C.—Prot. "grave, though they cry in his destruction." H.—The grave is more desirable than such a life. There the dead are freed from the miseries of this world. C.

Ver. 28. Mourning. Heb. "blackened without the sun." H.—Bile has disfigured my countenance, through excessive sorrow, v. 30. The dark olive complexions of the Jews and Arabs would be more susceptible of these effects. C.—Indignation. I have not given way to passion, though I allowed full scope to my groans. Sept. H.

Ver. 29. Brother of dragons, &c. Imitating these creatures in their lamentable noise. Ch.—I was like those beasts which retire in order to lament. W.—The dragons his dreadfully, when crushed by the elephant; (S. Jer.) and the young ostriches, being abandoned, make great lamentations. M. Delrio, t. ii. adag. 18.—This comparison occurs, Mic. 1:8. Natural history does not, however, represent these animals as very plaintive. The former term may denote sea monsters, or crocodiles; thannim: (Sept. syrens) and "the daughters of the yahana," signify "swans," (Isai. 13:21) though commonly rendered ostriches, as they are by the Sept. &c. C.—Prot. have, "owls." But we may adhere to the Vulg. H.

Ver. 31. Weep. I have exchanged my sons of joy for mourning. M.

Ver. 1. I made. Job is compelled to proclaim his own praises, for his vindication, as S. Paul was, being at the same time convinced that he had only done his duty. Luk. 17:10. This is the third part of his discourse. Having given a picture of his prosperous and of his miserable condition, he observes that the latter was not inflicted in consequence of any misconduct, since he had always been attentive to avoid (C.) the most remote danger of offending God, or his neighbour. H.—That I. Heb. “for why should I think upon a virgin?” H.—Why should I expose myself, (C.) by indiscreet looks, (H.) since the passage from the eye to the heart is so easy. Eccles. 2:10. M.—In the warfare between the flesh and the spirit, Job deemed this precaution necessary, (W.) and was thus preserved from carnal thoughts. S. Greg. xx. 2.

Ver. 2. High, if I should give way to such unchaste thoughts. M.

Ver. 3. Aversion of God. Hebrew “strange punishment.” Prot. Incontinence is a source of much mischief, and of the most dreadful punishments, as the deluge and fate of Sodom evince. H.

Ver. 5. Vanity, or hypocrisy, (C.) so as to overreach others. M.

Ver. 6. Simplicity, and “uprightness.” Tummathi. H.

Ver. 7. Eyes. Sixtus V. read, “If my eye hath followed my heart.” C.—Job kept the utmost restraint both upon his eyes and heart, that no evil impressions from exterior objects might cause his ruin. Num. 15:39. H.—Hands, from presents, (C.) or injustice, particularly that of impurity. H.

Ver. 9. Door, to seduce his wife. C. M.

Ver. 10. Let. Heb. “Let my wife grind for another, and let others bend over her,” urging her to work like the meanest slave. C.—Sept. “Let my wife please (Grabe substitutes λ of ρ, and reads αλεσαι, grind for) another, and my little children be brought low.” H.—Yet the sense of the Vulg. is most followed. Eccli. 47:21. Lam. 5:13. Ausonius (epig. 5) says, molitur per utramque cavernam. C.

Ver. 11. This adultery, to which I might have given way, and that of others with my wife, (H.) which would have been a requital, of which I could not indeed have complained, (M.) but which is nevertheless a most heinous offence. H.—Iniquity. Heb. “a crime of judgment,” or capital. Gen. 38:24. C.—The canons of the Church (H.) have ranked adultery with murder and idolatry, which shews the horror in which it is held. C.

Ver. 12. Spring; the children. Eccli. 23:35. Wisd. 4:3. C.—Prot. “all mine increase.” H.—Adulteresses were formerly consigned to the flames. The injured husband would resent the offence, and even dislike her former children. Love is also like a fire, and those who entertain it, may soon consume all their substance (M.) in feasting and presents. Above all, the fire of God’s indignation in hell will still pursue the libidinous.

Ver. 13. Me, in private; as slaves had no redress in the common courts of judicature. We cannot but admire Job’s humility, and noble sentiments of God, (C.) whose majesty will eclipse all human grandeur, and place the master and the servant on the same level. S. Greg. S. Aug. de Civ. Dei. x. 25. Eph. 6:9. Col. 4:1.

Ver. 16. Wait, and not give sentence in due time, (H.) but frustrated her expectation. M.

Ver. 17. Alone. This was objected to S. Chrysostom. C.—But his conduct proceeded not from pride or avarice. H.—The ancient patriarchs delighted much in the exercise of hospitality; and Tobias (4:17) exhorts his son to invite the poor. Cœna, or “supper,” received its name from many eating “together,” while people dined alone. Plut. Sym. viii. prob. 6.

Ver. 18. Womb. I was of a compassionate disposition, with which I always corresponded. S. Greg.—Heb. “from my youth, pity (ceab, which Prot. translate “as with a father.” H.) grew up with me; and from my birth I have preserved it!” C.—Prot. “From my youth he was brought up with me, as with a father, and I have guided her (the widow, margin) from my mother’s womb.” Sept. “I fed him as a father, Theodotion adds, and was his leader from,” &c. It was my earliest delight to assist the afflicted orphan and widow. H.

Ver. 20. Blessed me for clothing. M.

Ver. 21. Gate, in judgment, (C.) where I was the supreme judge, (H.) and none could resist me.

Ver. 22. With. Heb. “from its bone,” at the elbow. Sept. C.

Ver. 23. Bear. I knew that he would resent the injury, though I might, for a time, oppress the weak.

Ver. 24. Fine obrizo. Heb. cethem. C. 28:15. H.

Ver. 27. Rejoiced. Heb. and Chal. "been seduced" to idolatry. M.—The worship of the sun and moon was most ancient. Ezec. 8:16.—Mouth, to testify respect and admiration. This custom prevailed in many nations. Lucian (dial. de sacrific.) observes that this only sacrifice of the poor was not disregarded. The Syrians still extend their hands towards the altar, and then apply them to their mouth and eyes, when the body and blood of Christ are offered in the Mass. Life of M. de Chateuil. C.—Sept. (26) "Do I not see the shining sun eclipsed, (H.) and the moon disappear, for light does not belong to them," but to the Creator, from whom we have every thing; (C.) so that we should not swell with pride. Theodotion adds, (27) "and if my heart was secretly deceived." Sept. continue, "if indeed, putting my hand to my mouth, I kissed, (28) this would also be imputed to me as a great transgression, because I should have acted falsely before the most high God." H.—He will admit of no rival; hence the man who admits another god, denies Him. M.—Job repels the charge which had been indirectly brought against him. W.

Ver. 29. Rejoiced. Heb. "lifted up myself." Sept. "said in my heart, well, well;" euge. H.—These sentiments of perfection shew that the same Spirit animated those who lived under the law of nature, as well as those who were favoured with the Mosaic or Christian dispensation. C.

Ver. 30. For. Sept. "Then let mine ear hear my curse, and may I fall a prey to the whispers of my people."

Ver. 31. Filled. If my servants have not testified sufficient affection for me, (H.) because I kept them under restraint, and obliged them to wait on my guests, (M. S. Greg.) I still would not omit that duty; (v. 32. H.) or if they gave way to the greatest excesses of rage, so as to threaten to devour me, I refrained from wishing any evil to my enemy, v. 30. C.—Others suppose that Job's domestics urged him on to revenge, and spoke as if they were ready to eat his enemies; (Cajet. T.) while some explain the expression in a contrary sense, to denote the extreme attachment of Job's servants to his person; in which manner the Church uses it, speaking of Christ's feeding us with his own body and blood. C.—Sept. "If frequently my maids said who?" &c. Heb. "said not, oh! that we had of his flesh! we cannot be satisfied." Prot. H.—Have I given my servants any reason to utter these expressions?

Ver. 33. A man. Heb. "Adam," who, to excuse himself, threw the blame upon Eve. Gen. 3:12. C.—His posterity have too frequently imitated his example. The name of Adam often designates any man. H.—It was requisite that Job should assert his sincerity, that his friends might not suppose that he was actuated by self-love or obstinacy to defend his innocence. C.—Sept. “If falling into an involuntary fault I hid my sin, (for I feared not the crowd of people, that I should not plead before them) but if I let the needy pass my gate with his bosom empty.” Theod. xxxv. subjoins, “who would give me a hearer? but if I did not revere the hand of the Lord.” Sept. go on, “the bond which I had against any one, if I placed on my shoulder, as a crown, and read, an did not rather tear it, and give it up, taking nothing from my debtor. If,” &c. v. 38. According to this version, Job insists on his pity for the distressed, and shews that he had no reason to fear. But the Hebrew is more conformable to the Vulg.

Ver. 34. Have not. Heb. “that I kept silence, not going out of doors” to defend the innocent. H.—Moses commands judges to do their duty without fear. Ex. 23:2. People in such situations ought to be uninfluenced by hatred, love, &c. Cæsar says, justly, (in Sallust) “qui de rebus dubiis consultant, ab odio, amicitia, ira atque misericordia vacuos esse decet. Haud facillè animus verum providet, ubi illa officium.”

Ver. 35. He himself. Heb. “my adversary would write a book.” His very accusation would establish my cause, provided he adhered to the truth. C.—I would carry it about as a trophy. H.—A book. The judge wrote down the sentence. Job appeals to God, and fears not being condemned.

Ver. 36. Crown. This shews that something pliable was then used to write on. The people of the East still lift up to their heads such letters as they respect. Chardin Perse, p. 218. See 4 K. 9:12. C.

Ver. 37. To a. Heb. “as a prince would I approach to him,” and not fear my adversary. H.

Ver. 38. Mourn, as if I possessed the land unjustly, or had committed some crime.

Ver. 39. Money. Or paying for them. M.—And have. Prot. “or have caused the owners thereof to lose their life.”

Ver. 40. Thorns. Prot. “cockle.” Marg. “loathsome weeds.” H.—The precise import of the word is not known; but it means something “stinking.” C.—Sept. Batos, “a briar.” H.—Ended. Many Latin editions omit these words with S. Gregory, &c. The old Vulg. has & quieverunt verba Job, as a title. C.—Sept. place at the beginning of the next chapter, “And Job ceased to speak. His three friends also left off contending with Job; for Job was just before them.” Grabe substitutes “himself,” as they were not perhaps yet convinced. H.—Job, however, addresses his discourse no more to them, but only to God, (C.) acknowledging some unadvised speeches; (W.) or want of information. H.

JOB 32

Ver. 1. Himself. They thought it useless to say any more.

Ver. 2. Buzite, a descendant of Buz, the son of Nachor. Gen. 22:21. C.—Of, &c. Sept. “of the country of Hus.”—Ram. Chal. “Abraham;” (M.) or rather (H.) this is put for Aram. Sym. “Syria.” 2 Par. 22:5. Some suppose that Eliu spring from Aram, the son of Esron, of the tribe of Juda. Others think that (C.) he was the same with Balaam. S. Jer. Ven. Bede.—He is never ranked among the friends of Job, as he perhaps did not come from a distance. His speech, or good intention, is not condemned by God; and Job seems to have acquiesced in what he said. C.—This silence of the latter might rather proceed from a just (H.) contempt, as Eliu said nothing to the purpose; many of his observations being palpably false, and others not at all controverted. Yet with his private spirit he comes forth, not much unlike Prot. and Puritans, who pretend that they will overturn the Catholic faith by arguments which have escaped the sagacity of all preceding ages! W.—God also did not let Eliu pass entirely unnoticed; but, in one line, showed his displeasure: (C. 38:2. Houbigant) as Job perhaps did likewise, by repeating the same decision. C. 42:3. H.—Eliu vainly explains why he had not spoken before. He arraigns Job for asserting his own innocence, though the holy man only maintained that he was not punished thus for his crimes, according to the laws of vindictive justice; (C. 27:2) much less did he pretend that he was juster than God, (C. 35:2) as his adversary asserts; taking thence occasion to praise the divine wisdom and power, as if Job had called them in question. C.—God, whose eyes behold the smallest faults. M.—Heb. “rather on, or (H.) above God.” C.—This young man, who was learned and proud, is the pattern of those hot disputants who set themselves above their elders. S. Greg. xxiii. 2. W.

Ver. 3. Found. Heb. “produced an answer, but had still condemned Job;” (H.) or, “had made Job wicked,” by giving him occasion to blaspheme, in order to defend his own righteousness. C.—Sept. “they took it for granted (or laid it down as a fact, εθεντο) that he was a wretch.” This was not true: (H.) but they had also doe their best to prove it. C.—Job. Almost all the Rabbins assert that the original copies read Jehova, “the Lord;” (H.) and that the Masorets changed it, to avoid the apparent blasphemy; as if the three friends had rendered themselves guilty by not answering Job. But the Chal. &c. are silent on this head, and Abenezra allows that the change is very doubtful. C.

Ver. 6. Hanging. Heb. “I fest a reverential awe, (Sept. I was silent) and durst not shew,” &c. H.

Ver. 8. Spirit, which is communicated to the young, as well as to the old. M.

Ver. 9. Aged: πολυχρονιοι. Sept. Rabbim, “the Rabbins,” (H.) the “great ones,” placed in authority. These are not always the wisest, as understanding is the gift of God, and not attached to rank. C.

Ver. 11. Disputing. Heb. “searching out words,” or arguments. H.

Ver. 12. None. A notorious piece of arrogance, to esteem himself wiser than any of his own sect, or of his adversaries. W.

Ver. 13. Man. You seem to think this a convincing proof that Job is guilty: (Ven. Bede. H.) but it is no such thing. You would fain excuse yourselves from saying any more, for fear of causing him pain, which is already very great; and you vainly imagine that you may thus leave him to be judged by God. We must however convince Job. C.

Ver. 14. He; Job, or God. I do not pretend that I have had any revelation, like Eliphaz and Sophar. C. 4:12 and 11:5. Job has addressed himself to you; (C.) but I shall not answer him as you have done. M.—Those who neither believe Catholics, nor their own teachers, but rely on the private spirit, think that the answers which have been given to others, on the same points, do not regard them. S. Greg. W.

Ver. 15. They. Eliu speaks thus contemptuously of the three friends, as if they had been absent. In the former verse he spoke to them: now he turns to Job. Heb. “they were amazed.” H.

Ver. 18. Me. And forces me to speak. Jer. 5:24 and 20:9. Thus Juvenal describes a great talker. Tunc immensa cavi spirant mendacia folles.—Conspuiturque sinus. Sat. vi. C.

Ver. 19. Vessels, made of skins. Heb. oboth. H.

Ver. 21. Man. Heb. “give flattering titles unto man.” Prot. “I do not respect a mortal.” Sept. (H.) “nothing shall make me conceal the truth: I will give things their proper names.” Job seemed to him to have arrogated to himself the perfection of God, in maintaining his own innocence. C.—He promises to stand up in defence of the Almighty, (M.) as his advocate. C.

Ver. 22. Away. I shall therefore speak with the utmost caution, (H.) as one who must shortly appear before the divine tribunal. M.—Heb. “For I know not how to call things by their surnames, (C.) or titles of vanity; (H.) If I do, may my Creator soon (C.) take me away.” Sept. “I know not how to admire the face. If it be not so, the worms shall consume me.” H.

JOB 33

Ver. 3. Sentence. Some Edit. have scientiam, “knowledge,” with the Heb. C.

Ver. 4. Spirit. We are therefore equal. M.—Thou canst not fear being overpowered with the divine majesty, in this dispute. C. 13:21. C.—Life. Sept. “instruction.” H.

Ver. 6. Formed. Job had expressed a desire to plead before a man. C. 9:32 and 13:19 and 31:35. Eliu offers himself to maintain the cause of God. C.

Ver. 7. Wonder (miraculum.) Heb. “terror,” (H.) in allusion to Job’s words. C. 9:34.—Eloquence. Heb. “hand.” C.—Sept. “the dread of me shall not cast thee down, nor my hand be heavy upon thee.” Arrogant men esteem their own observations as something wonderful. S. Greg. W.

Ver. 9. In me. Job had not said so in express terms, though he had said something to the same purpose. But he had sufficiently explained himself, and Eliu could not be ignorant that he only meant that his present sufferings were not proportioned to his guilt. C.

Ver. 10. Complaints. Something similar had indeed come from Job’s lips; (C. 14:17 and 20:21) not that he pretended that God sought to find him guilty without cause; but he meant that He treated him as an enemy, for some secret purpose. C.

Ver. 11. Stocks. C. 13:14 and 14:16. Eliu interprets the words in the worst sense, though Job had only expostulated with God on the treatment which he received, testifying a great love and confidence in him. He acknowledges some want of knowledge. C. 42:3. C.

Ver. 12. Man: so that he is not obliged to explain his reasons. M.

Ver. 13. Because. Sept. "Thou hast said, Why has not He heard every word of my pleading or judgment." Aquila and Theod. "for all his words are unanswerable." Prot. "He giveth not account of any of his matters." H.

Ver. 14. Time. One decision ought to suffice; and God had declared Job innocent. C. 1:8. &c. W.—His decrees are immutable; and yet thou wouldst have him to explain his conduct, as if he could be under a mistake, and correct it. He manifests his will, and it is our business to be attentive. We cannot expect that he should speak twice, though he does so frequently in his great mercy. Heb. "God speaketh once, and he regardeth not a second time." C.—Sept. "But the second time, (15) a dream," &c. H.—Eliu specifies three methods by which God declares his will; (v. 26) 1. By vision; 2. by afflictions; 3. by the voice of angels, or of preachers, v. 19, 23.

Ver. 15. Beds. It seems prophetic dreams were not then uncommon.

Ver. 16. Instructeth. Heb. "sealing," that they may not mistake such a favour for a common dream. C.

Ver. 17. Him. Sept. "his body from the fall [of iniquity.]" Grabe. H.

Ver. 19. Also. This is the second method of instruction. Eliu pretends that Job had thus been visited by God, and had not understood his meaning.

Ver. 21. Bare. The skin will scarcely cover them. He will appear ghastly, like a skeleton. C.—Heb. "his bones ... shall stick out." Prot. H.

Ver. 22. Destroyers; the worms in the grave, (H.) or to sickness, (M.) "which bring on death." Pagnin mortiferis.

Ver. 23. Angel, by secret inspirations, (S. Tho. T. &c.) or a man sent by God, to announce the truths of salvation. Mariana.—Man's, or "to man." C.—Heb. "a messenger with him, an interpreter, one ... to declare to man his uprightness." Prot. (H.) "If there be any merit in him, the angel comforter, chosen from a thousand accusers, is ready to declare to the son of man his rectitude." Sept. "If there be a thousand destroying angels, not one of them shall hurt him; if he consider in his heart to be converted unto the Lord. Though he (the angel) lay before man his reproof, and shew his folly, He (God) will take hold of him, that he may not die. He will renew his flesh as the plaster of a wall, and fill his bones with marrow: (25) he will make his flesh soft, like that of an infant, and will place him in manhood among men.” H.—But this is different from the Heb. C.—The intercession of angels is very powerful. They are represented as suggesting motives, which prevail on God to shew mercy, v. 24. H.

Ver. 25. Consumed. Heb. “fresher than a child’s,” (H.) as was the case of Naaman. 4 K. 5:14.

Ver. 26. And he. It is ambiguous whether this refers to God or to man. C.—But both shall see each other with joy. The penitent will be restored to as much favour as if he had never sinned. H.

Ver. 29. Times, or often. God instructs man by visions, sickness, and the intercession and inspirations of angels, v. 14. C.

Ver. 30. Living, both soul and body, delivering them from adversity. C.

Ver. 32. Just, and to be so indeed. M.—How much would his vanity be mortified, when Job answered him only with silence! (H.) though he urged him to reply so often. W.

JOB 34

Ver. 3. Taste. The most accurate philosophers attribute this faculty to the tongue, (C.) rather than to the throat, guttur. Heb. “mouth or palate.” H.—But Eliu speaks agreeably to the notions of the vulgar. C.—Intellectus saporum cæteris est in prima lingua, homini et in palato. Pliny xi. 37.

Ver. 5. Judgment. C. 27:2. Job had used this expression, but only to intimate that strict justice did not take place, as he thought his faults had not deserved so severe a chastisement. He did not pretend that God was unjust, or that he was quite blameless; and he had so explicitly declared his sentiments, that Eliu could not well be ignorant of them. C.

Ver. 6. There. Sept. “he has been deceived;” εψευσσατο. Heb. “I will convict my judge of lying;” or (C.) Prot. “should I lie against my right?” H.—Job, in the excess of grief, had expressed himself forcibly. C. 19:6 and 23:7. But great deductions must be made from such hyperboles; and he had frequently praised the mercy and justice of God, and his just punishment of the wicked. He had indeed excepted himself from the number; and Eliu ought to have proved that he was wrong in this respect. But he seems to have all along evaded or mistaken the point under dispute. C.—Arrow, which pierces me. H.—The deferring judgment was not a subversion of it, as Eliu would argue,. C. 27:2. W.

Ver. 7. What. This may be a continuation of Job's speech, who seemed to assert that none had ever been insulted like himself, nor borne it with greater patience; (C. 16:4) or Eliu reproaches him with talking scornfully to his friends and to God. C.

Ver. 8. Goeth in. Sept. insert a negation, which is not found in Heb. Chal. &c. They may be understood to speak ironically. C.—“Who committeth no sin, nor iniquity, nor has had any society with lawless people, so as to walk with wicked men.” H.

Ver. 9. With him, and strive to please him. Horrible blasphemy! of which Job was incapable: as if God were a cruel master, and threw us into despair. He had asserted that God punishes the wicked, and often treats his friends with the like severity, (C. 9:22 and 30:26) in this world: which is very true. C.—Sept. “Say not that man is visited. He is indeed visited by the Lord.” H.—Eliu wrests Job's words, in order that he may have something to say against him. S. Greg. xxiv. 25. W.

Ver. 13. Earth? If God cannot be unjust, hat he given the administration of the world to some other, who may have been deceived? This will not be asserted. Heb. “who hath visited the earth for him?” or, “who hath set him over the earth?” Is he a hired judge, who may be bribed?

Ver. 14. To him, and examine his conduct with rigour: there is scarcely a moment of our lives in which he would not discover a just reason for withdrawing his hand, and suffering us to die. Ps. 103:29. C.

Ver. 17. Judgment. How can we hope for redress from God, while he condemns his conduct? M.—How can we bring Job to a sense of his duty, since he entertains such perverse notions? Heb. “Shall he hold dominion, who hates justice?” If God be unjust, does he deserve our adoration? (C.) or, “ought not the person to be put in prison, who resists judgment?” Grot. “If thou dost not think that He who hates crimes, and destroys the impious, is eternal and just?” Sept. H.

Ver. 18. Who. Theod. in Sept. “wicked is he who says to the king, thou actest contrary to the law; and to the rulers, thou most impious.” H.—Apostate. Heb. “Belial.”

Ver. 19. Tyrant. This title is not always odious. It formerly was given to all princes, and came to be used in a bad sense, on account of the misconduct of some kings of Sicily. Tyrannus a rege distat factis, non nomine. Sen. Clem. xii.—Heb. “the rich more than the poor.” H.—God fears not to rebuke even the greatest princes, and dost thou dare to arraign his justice? C.

Ver. 20. They, the wicked, whatever may be their station in life. H.—God takes off the tyrant (C.) when he least expects it, as well as the poor. H.—Troubled, or make an insurrection. C.—This often proves the ruin of tyrants. H.—Hand, by the destroying angel. C.

Ver. 22. Death, or the most obscure recess. H.

Ver. 23. Man. Heb. “He will not lay upon man (C.) more than right (Prot. H.) to,” &c. After once passing sentence, all is over. C.—When man has fallen into sin, he cannot with a god grace contend with God. C.

Ver. 24. Stead. Where are not the ancient Assyrians, Carthaginians, &c. who once made such a figure in the world? C.—Sept. “glorious and sudden, and unnumbered.” The next eight verses are taken from Theodotion. H.

Ver. 25. Night, calamities. At once the shall be oppressed. C.

Ver. 26. Sight. Lit. “in the place of the beholders,” (H.) in public. C.

Ver. 27. All. Prot. “Any of.” The wicked observed none of God’s commandments as they ought. He that offends in one become guilty of all. Jam. 2:10.

Ver. 29. Condemn, either God or the person whom he approves. Does not he exercise dominion over all? C.—Men. Lit. “all men.” Heb. “a man.” God may destroy either a part or the whole of creation. Sometimes whole nations or cities are cut off, and the deluge nearly swept away all mankind. H.

Ver. 30. People. A hypocrite denotes one infected with all sorts of crimes. S. Iræn. v. 24. Such a king is sometimes given to punish a wicked people. Ose. 13:11. Isai. 3:4. This sense is beautiful, and followed by the Chal. Sept. &c. We may explain the Heb. in like manner, by neglecting the Masoretic points. C.—Prot. “That the hypocrite reign not, lest the people be ensnared.” H.—Heb. “He overturns the throne of hypocrites, on account of the scandal of the people,” or “he delivers the people from servitude.” The sense of the Vulg. seems preferable. C.—Eliu insinuates that Job had been a hypocrite and an oppressor; but God exculpates him. W.

Ver. 31. Seeing. Heb. "Thou shouldst have said to the Lord, I have suffered enough: (C.) I will not offend." Prot. H. v. 32.—Turn. He had undertaken to plead God's cause. C.

Ver. 33. It, my iniquity. M.—Will God make thee accountable for it? H.—Yea, if thou keep silence, (C.) thou wilt seem to connive at it. H.—He wishes to engage Job to speak. Heb. may be translated many ways. C.—Prot. "Should it be according to thy mind? He will recompense it whether thou refuse, or whether thou choose; and not I. Therefore speak what thou knowest." H.

Ver. 36. Father. From God all the rights of a father spring. Ephes. 3:15. C.—Sept. "No indeed: but learn Job, answer not like fools." Prot. "my desire is, (marginal note, my father) that Job may be tried unto the end, because of his answers for the wicked." H.—He has imitated their wicked discourses; let his chastisement deter others. C.—The sequel seems to intimate, that Eliphaz is here styled Father. M.

Ver. 37. Fast, and pressed by arguments. M. C.—Heb. "since he adds crime (C. Prot. rebellion) to his sin, and clappeth his hands among us, and multiplieth his words against the Lord." Eliu concluding that Job was obstinate, (H.) invites his friends to join in prayer, that he might be still more severely chastised, to make him enter into himself. Such a strange petition might possibly proceed from charity. But Eliu had given too many proofs of passion, to allow this interpretation. Had he evinced that Job as a criminal? and were not his sorrows already too great, so that he might rather have prayed that God would alleviate them, or grant him more patience?

Ver. 2. God. Eliu being greatly mortified at Job's silence, uses still more provoking expressions, and pretends to refute one of the holy man's assertions, which never escaped his lips, though he had complained that God treated him as an enemy, and with more severity than his sins deserved; (C. 6:2. C.) or, that his affliction was greater than his sin. C. 23:7. &c. Eliu therefore calumniates him. W.

Ver. 3. Please thee, since thou punishest the guiltless. M.—If I sin. Job had not said so, but it seemed to follow from his expressions. C. 21:7. See C. 22:3. Whether sin be committed and punished, or not, what does it profit God? C.—His sovereign perfections require that he should not let sin pass unnoticed, and Job never entertained an idea to the contrary.

Ver. 4. Thee. I will shew that you are all wrong. H.—I will supply what the three have left imperfect. C.

Ver. 5. Thee. Thy sin cannot hurt, nor thy virtue add any thing to God. He is not therefore actuated by resentment, or jealousy, but by justice. C.—He revenges the injury done by the sinner to himself, v. 8. S. Aug. Conf. iii. 8.—The inference is therefore wrong, (C.) that God will not regard the sins or punishment of men, because he thence derives no profit, v. 3. H.—The strong sentences of Eliu agree not (or are ill-applied) to the blessed Job. S. Greg. xxvi. 7. W.

Ver. 9. Out. The wicked shall cry out, through vexation, but still they will not address themselves to God, v. 10. Why are the abandoned, but because He takes cognizance of all?

Ver. 10. Songs. Arab. “thoughts,” by means of visions. Chal. “where is the Lord, in whose presence the angels sing canticles of praise in the night?” C.—Sept. “who has ordered the night watches;” (H.) the stars, which display the power of God? His servants also are filled with interior joy, even in the midst of afflictions. C.

Ver. 11. Air: and yet the wicked make not use of their understanding, to have recourse to God under distress. C.

Ver. 13. Vain. Heb. “falsehood.” He will not relieve the hypocrite, who does not cry to him with sincerity. This conduct shews that God acts with discretion, and hears people according to their deserts. C.

Ver. 14. Before him. Try whether the assertion be true. H.—Only change thy life, and hope in him, and thou wilt see the good effects. C.

Ver. 15. For. Prot. “But now because it is not so, he hath visited in his anger; yet he (marg. Job) knoweth it not, in great extremity.” H.—In this world, God punishes not with rigour. C.

Ver. 16. Knowledge. I have shewn that God punishes or rewards according to our deserts, and is not indifferent about our sins. If Job have not experienced the divine bounty, it is because he has not deserved it. C.

JOB 36

Ver. 3. Beginning. Heb. “afar” from that God, who is ancient, and not of human invention; (Jer. 23:23) or from the consideration of the heavens. Nothing could be more magnificent than the descriptions which conclude this fourth part of the discourse. C.

Ver. 4. Lie. Every orator will promise to speak the truth, and will do so sometimes to gain credit. W.—Shall be. Heb. “is with thee.” Thou art not devoid of sense, and thou wilt (C.) surely approve my reasons, which are suggested by the God of all knowledge. H.

Ver. 5. God. Sept. “Know that the Lord will not cast away the innocent.” Theod. continues to v. 12: “The mighty, in strength of heart, (Wisd. 6) will not make the impious live, and will render judgment to the poor.” H.—They seem to have read Thom, which is now wanting in Heb. C.—“Behold God is mighty, and despiseth not any: mighty in strength and wisdom.” Prot. H.—Eliu begins to prove that God administers justice to all equally. C.

Ver. 7. Just. Heb. Syr. &c. “the just man, he will place him with kings on the throne.” C.—Exalted, or “extolled” for ever, if they have done well. W.—He always disposes of kingdoms. M.

Ver. 9. Violent, while in power and on the throne, or because even in a private station, their will has risen up in rebellion against God. H.—Poverty and afflictions are scourges, which are often inflicted by mercy, to bring us to a sense of duty. C.

Ver. 10. Ear, by secret inspirations, or by the admonition of pastors. C.—Afflictions will also speak louder to them than any orator. H.

Ver. 12. Folly. Heb. “without knowledge.” He speaks of princes, (C.) and of all the wicked, who have not known the day of their visitation. H.—They shall suffer the punishment prepared for fools or wicked men. M.

Ver. 13. Bound, in misery and evil habits. They will not have recourse to God by humble prayer, though they perceive his displeasure, and design in punishing them.

Ver. 14. Storm. Heb. and Sept. “in youth,” (H.) being suddenly cut off, without having deplored the sins of their youth. C.—Effeminate. Heb. “the consecrated” to prostitution. Eliu compares those who will not attend unto God, to the most infamous characters. C.—Sept. “and let their life be taken away by the angels” (H.) of death. C. 33:23. C.—He may allude to the impure Sodomites. M.

Ver. 16. He shall. He would have prevented thee from falling into this irremediable distress, if thou hadst imitated the poor who trust in Him. C.—Yea, he will still restore thee to favour, if thou wilt repent. H.—He will fill thee with joy and plenty. M.—Foundation. Hebrew, where there is not straitness. Prot. He would have rescued thee from distress, and set thee at large. H.—The psalmist often speaks in the same language. C.

Ver. 17. Recover. Thou shalt be treated as thou hast treated others. Heb. is not well understood. It may be, “Thou hast spoken like the impious; but judgment and justice rule. (18) Beware lest wrath overtake thee, so that thy prayers may not avert it. (19) Will He regard thy cries, thy riches, gold or strength?” C.

Ver. 19. Without, or before thou be forced by tribulation. M.—Lay aside all sentiments of pride, (S. Greg.) or keep in awe the mighty, who administer justice in thy name. M.—Prot. “Will he esteem thy riches? No, not gold, nor all the forces of strength.” Sept. “Let not a willing mind incline thee unjustly to the prayer of the needy in distress.” H.

Ver. 20. Prolong not the night, &c. Prolong not causes that are brought before thee, but dispatch, by early rising, the business of them that come up to thee. Ch.—Sept. “and all the men of power do not withdraw in the night,” from just punishment. Theod. adds, “that the people may come up against them,” to demand vengeance. Do strict justice both to the rich and to the poor, without pity or fear. H.—This text is very obscure; and the Heb. may have different meanings, which do not, however, seem well connected with the rest. “Plant not after night, when people retire home;” (C.) or Prot. “are cut off in their place.” H.—Delay not to banish temptations, or they will increase. S. Greg. xxvi. 38. W.

Ver. 21. Iniquity, or blaspheming, (C. 34:37. M.) and murmurs, to which alone thou hast given way since thy fall. C.

Ver. 22. Lawgivers. Heb. more, “a master.” In Chal. “a sovereign.” Grot. Sept. “what potentate is against him?” H.—What art thou, to dare thus to resist him? C.—S. Gregory (xxvii. 1.) explains this as a prediction of Christ, “or singular lawgiver.” God is most able to punish transgressors, and willing to reward those who obey his laws. W.

Ver. 24. Not, is omitted in Heb. and Sept. “Remember that thou magnify his work, which men behold;” Prot. (H.) or “thou hast magnified,” formerly. Do so again.—Sung. The memory of great exploits was commonly preserved by canticles. C.

Ver. 25. All. The rest of this chapter, and the five first verses of the next, seem to be inserted in the Sept. from Theodotion. "Every man sees in himself how many mortals are wounded," &c.—Off, in the stars, &c. or in ancient times, what wonders God has performed. C.—The works of God are like a ladder, by which we may ascend to the knowledge of him. M. Wisd. 13. H.

Ver. 27. Floods. God causes the water on the earth to evaporate, (C.) to form the clouds, (H.) which afterwards fall in torrents. M.—Theod. "the drops of rain are numbered by him," &c. C. 26:8.

Ver. 29. If. Heb. "Also can any understand the spreading out of the clouds, the elevation or noise of his pavilion?" H.—What could be more magnificent than the throne of God! C.

Ver. 30. Ends. Lit. "the hinges," or poles, cardines. H.—Heb. "roots;" Aristotle (Meteor. ii. 1.) and Hesiod (Theog. 727,) use the same term, (C.) to denote the fountains which supply the sea. H.—Who ever discovered these deep recesses? Eliu describes a thunder-storm, when the sea is covered with darkness. He intimates that the pavilion of God, though hidden from us by the clouds, is not destitute of light. C.—God inhabits light inaccessible. H.

Ver. 31. Mortals. Heb. "in abundance." H.—By thunder he overwhelms many nations, while by moderate rains, he causes the earth to fructify (C.) and nourish mankind. M.

Ver. 32. Hands, or clouds, which are compared to a hand. 3 K. 18:44. He opens his hand, and light appears. This expression denotes the utmost facility with which a very surprising thing is effected.—To come. Heb. "by this obstacle." He alludes to the sun's eclipse, as if God's hand covered its disk. C.—Prot. "He ... commandeth it not to shine, by the cloud that cometh betwixt."

Ver. 33. To it. The tabernacle of God is designed for his friends. Heb. is very obscure. "Thunder announces the rain, and the very animals know it;" (Virgil describes their signs, Geor. i.) or "His thunder announces from above the clouds his wrath to men." C.—"The noise thereof sheweth concerning it, the cattle also concerning the vapour."

JOB 37

Ver. 1. This thunder, the effects of which are so terrible, that it is often styled the voice of God. C. Ps. 28. M.—The consideration of rewards (C. 36:33) stimulates the good, while thunder strikes the heart with terror. W.

Ver. 3. Earth. Lightning appears from the east to the west. Mat. 24:27.

Ver. 4. After. Light travels faster than sound, (H.) though thunder and lightning are produced at the same instant. C.—Found out.

Philosophers can only propose their conjectures on the cause of thunder. This sense is confirmed by the Greek, Chal. &c. Heb. may be, “he delays not;” C.—Prot. “he will not stay them;” (H.) rain commonly falling soon after thunder. As the latter is occasioned by the collision of clouds, when they come to a certain distance from the earth, the heat causes them to dissolve into showers, which augments at each crack. C.—Sept. “For he has done great things, which we have not understood.” This is connected with C. 36:24. Then we read, (v. 7.) “that man may know his own weakness.” All the intermediate verses have been supplied by Origen from Theodotion, or others. H.

Ver. 7. He sealed up, &c. When he sends those showers of his strength; that is, those storms of rain, he seals up; that is, he shuts up the hands of men from their usual work abroad, and confines them within doors, to consider his works; or to forecast their works; that is, what they themselves are to do. Ch.—We are all the servants of God. He marks us in the hand, as such. Isai. 44:5. Ezech. 9:6. Apoc. 13:6. The Romans marked soldiers with a hot iron in the hands. Veget. i. 8.—The abettors of chiromancy have hence vainly pretended that they can discover each person’s future in the lineaments of his hands. C.

Ver. 8. Den. Foreseeing the tempest and retreating for shelter.

Ver. 9. Parts. The south, (C. 9:9) whence storms commonly came in that country, (C.) from the sea or desert of Idumea. H. Ps. 77:26. Zac. 9:14. Isai. 21:1.—North wind or pole. W.—Yet the south seems to be designated; (v. 17 and C. 38:32) though cold comes from the north, in Idumea as well as here. C.—Mezarim, is rendered by Prot. “north.” Marg. “scattering winds.” Sept. ἀκρωψηριων, “summits” of mountains.

Ver. 10. Abundantly. He cause it to freeze or rain at pleasure. H. Ps. 147:17. M.

Ver. 11. Corn requires rain. H.—Light. As they are transparent, they do not hinder the sun from appearing. Heb. “the brightness of the sky disperses the clouds, and the clouds shed their light” in the rainbow, (v. 15. Grot.) or lightning. Jun. C. M.—Prot. “Also by watering, he wearieth the thick cloud, he scattereth his bright cloud, (12) and it is turned round about by his counsels, that they may do whatsoever,” &c. God prohibits or gives rain. H.—Nothing is left to chance. C.—He directeth the clouds as a master does his ship. W.

Ver. 13. Tribe. Hebrew also, “for correction.” H. Amos 4:7.—Land of promise. Ps. 67:10.

Ver. 15. Light: the rain-bow, according to the best interpreters; or the lightning. C.

Ver. 16. Paths. Heb. “the balancing of the clouds, the wondrous works of Him whose knowledge is perfect?” C. 36:4. Dost thou know what suspends the heavy clouds in the air? C.

Ver. 17. Are. Heb. “How thy,” &c. It is also beyond thy comprehension, why thou shouldst be too hot when the south winds blows (H.) moderately, though tempests generally proceed from the same quarter, v. 9. If thou art in the dark, respecting these things, which thou feelest, how canst thou pretend to fathom and condemn the counsels of God? C.—Job was far from doing either. His friends rather undertook to explain God’s reasons for punishing thus his servants, which Job acknowledged was to him a mystery, (H.) till God had enlightened him. C. 22:3. Houbigant.

Ver. 18. Brass. Heb. “Hast thou with him stretched out (or beaten, as brass, tarkiang; which word Moses uses for the firmament) the heavens, which are as solid (Chal. and like) a molten looking-glass?” which was formerly made of metal. Ex. 38:8. The Hebrews looked upon the sky as a sheet of brass; and the poets speak of the brazen heaven. Pindar. Nem. vi. Iliad A.

Ver. 19. Darkness. Thou who art so learned, give us some information, what we may blame in the works of God. Cutting irony! C.

Ver. 20. He shall be swallowed up. All that man can say, when he speaks of God, is so little and inconsiderable in comparison with the subject, that man is lost, as it were swallowed up in so immense an ocean. Ch.—The man who should dare to mention what I could reprehend in God’s works, would soon be overwhelmed with majesty. C.—Alphonsus IX. king of Leon, (A.D. 1252) surnamed “the wise and the astronomer,” said “he could have given some good advice respecting the motions of the stars, if he had been consulted by God;” meaning to ridicule some vain systems of philosophers, then in vogue. Dict. 1774. H.

Ver. 21. Light; being hindered by the clouds, and dazzled when they are removed. Yet we presume to judge of the secrets of Providence! C. —Away. As there is a constant vicissitude of these things, so there is of happiness and misery. M.—Sept. “For the light is not seen by all. It is refulgent in beauties, as that which comes thence upon the clouds." If, therefore, this light does not pervade all places, why should we wonder that all do not understand the ways of God? H.

Ver. 22. Gold. Sept. "from the north, gold-coloured clouds. Above these, great is the praise and honour of the Almighty." H.—When the wind blows, the clouds are dispersed, and the sky appears serene. Each country has its peculiar advantages. In the north, Ophir, &c. may boast of gold: but what ought to be most conspicuous in the praises given to God, is an humble fear. Pindar begin his Olympic Odes somewhat in the same style. C.—"Water is excellent, and gold ... But if, dear heart, thou wilt sing of games, regard no other star ... as brighter than the sun ... nor shall we celebrate any game more excellent than that of Olympia." H.—God disposes of all things as he pleases. He makes the golden day succeed a tempest. But it is our duty to praise him with awe, whatever he may ordain. This is the epilogue. Pineda.—Man must praise God with fear, as he cannot do it sufficiently. W.

Ver. 23. Worthily. Heb. "the Almighty, we cannot find him out," (H.) or comprehend his nature or mysteries. C.

Ver. 24. Fear him, and receive with respect whatever he shall appoint. H.—And all. Heb. "he fears not any that are wise of heart." He knows that the most intelligent (C.) must confess their ignorance, when they attempt to examine his divine nature. Simonides being desired by Hiero to express his sentiments on this subject, always requested more time to consider of it. Quia, inquit, res videtur mihi tanto obscurior, quanto diutius eam considero. Cicero, Nat. i. 60. Selectæ e Prof. i. 3. —"With thee (says S. Aug. Conf. i. 6.) stand the causes of all instable things," &c. H.—Those who are really wise, will therefore adore God's judgments in silence, while the presumptuous will be forced to yield. This is the excellent conclusion of all that had been said. Pineda.—The sentence is beautiful, but ill-applied (H.) to Job. Philip. See Prov. 3:7. H.—He convinced the other three with sound arguments, "and this last and most arrogant disputant with silence." W.

Ver. 1. Then. Sept. "After Eliu had ceased to speak." H.—Lord. That is, an angel speaking in the name of the Lord. Ch.—The name Jehova (H.) here occurs, though it never does in the speeches; whence many have inferred that the Lord spoke in person; which argument, however, is not conclusive; and that this work was written after the apparition in the burning bush. C.—The Heb. edition would at least be given after that event.—Whirlwind, designed to strike the senses, (H.) and to represent the distressed condition of Job. Pineda.—This awful appearance imposed silence upon all. H.—Some think that a time was allowed for reflection and repentance, before God passed sentence; but the Sept. &c. seem to suppose that the cause was decided as soon as Eliu had ended his discourse. C.—God discusses the controversy, and gives sentence in favour of Job. W.

Ver. 2. Words. Many explain this as a condemnation (C.) of the last speaker, (D.) who would otherwise pass without any reproach, (H.) though he had spoken with less reserve than the rest. C.—Pineda allows that this opinion is very plausible; but he thinks that Job himself is reprehended, not for any grievous offence, but for indiscreet expressions. C. 41. The context also seem to require this, as Job take it to himself. C. 39:33. C.—The change of persons might rather imply the contrary: Who is this? Eliu. 3. Gird up thy loins. Job. H.—Can we admit that the devil got the victory; or, that God falsely declared that Job had spoken right? C. 42. Houbigant.—Did not the latter maintain the truth with greatest zeal, while his friends certainly mixed unskilful words or inferences with sentences of the greatest consequence? His face I will accept, that your folly be not imputed to you; for you have not spoken right things before me, as my servant Job hath. C. 42:8. Heb. “Who is this that darkeneth counsel, by words without knowledge?” Prot. “Who is the who concealeth counsel from me, keeping words in his heart, and thinketh to hide from me?” Sept. Eliu pretended to explain the counsels of God, and perhaps did not utter all that he had in his mind; but God condemns the very harbouring of thoughts, which are contrary to truth and justice. H.—Job’s friends laboured under great prejudices, and condemned him without cause, (C.) thinking that they were doing a service to God, like those who put the apostles to death, and persecuted Catholics on account of their religion. But this plea will not excuse them. Here one line suffices to refute the long harangue (H.) of Eliu; (S. Greg. Ven. Bede. T. &c.) though we have observed, (H.) some understand the words to be addressed to Job, as a rebuke for his too warm expressions. S. Chrys. S. Aug. &c. C.—The remainder of the discourse is designed for Job’s instruction. H.—Hoc (Eliu) despecto ad erudiendum Job verba vertuntur. S. Greg.

Ver. 3. Loins, like one about to engage in an arduous task, (H.) or journey, (C.) to explore the ways of divine Providence. H.—Answer my reasons, if thou art able. C.—Heb. “make me know.” H.—Only the Creator hath perfect knowledge of all his works, as may appear by induction or example: 1. of inanimate; 2. of living things, v. 39. W.

Ver. 4. Foundations. The Hebrews placed the earth in the centre of the universe, resting upon nothing, (C. 26:7 and 36:30) or upon itself. See Hesiod, Theog. 325. C.—These questions seem intended to shew, that if God has created all things for man, he will not surely neglect to watch over him. M.

Ver. 5. Upon it. He speaks of the world as of a vast house, (C.) or palace, (M.) in which the Architect has shewn his art. H.

Ver. 7. Sons. Sept. “all my angels.” Hence it appears that the angels were among the first of God’s works, formed probably at the same time with the heavens, (C.) or light. Gen. 1:3. H.—The praise of the stars is figurative, (C.) as they tend to raise our hearts to God by their beauty, (H.) whereas that of the angels is real. C.

Ver. 8. Shut. Heb. also, (H.) “facilitated the birth of the sea,” as a midwife. Grot. C.—Forth. Sept. “raged.” H.—God represents the waters ready to overwhelm all when first produced out of nothing, if he had not shut them up in the abyss, like a child in a cradle, or a wild beast in its den, v. 10. C.

Ver. 9. Mist. So Moses says darkness was on the face of the abyss. Obscurity covered it, as swaddling bands do a child’s body. C.

Ver. 10. Set. Prot. “brake up for it my decreed place.” Marg. “established my decree upon it;” (H.) or, “I gave order to break it,” against the shore. Jer. 5:22. Amos 5:8.

Ver. 12. Place. Thou art but as yesterday: where is thy power? C.

Ver. 13. And didst. Some explain Heb. “that it (Aurora) might spread at once to the extremities of the earth. Then the wicked flee before it;” as they hate the light. C. 34:26. Jo. 3:20. C.—Sept. and Prot. may be understood in this sense. H.—Allusion may also be made to the shaking of a sieve, to separate the wheat from the chaff; (Amos 9:9. Luk. 22:31. C.) or of a carpet, to clean it from the dust. D.—Did God ask thee to help him to exterminate the wicked? The short digression in these three verses, shews the punishment exercised on offenders. It is not contrary to the true spirit of poetry. M.

Ver. 14. Seal. Men, formed to the image of God, shall die; and others shall be place in their stead, (M.) with as much ease as an impression is made upon clay. H.—Garment. The body seems to be the clothing of the soul, and will be changed. Ps. 101:27. M.—Chal. “their form will be changed to clay, and they shall resemble a tattered garment.” Heb.

“their seal shall be changed like clay,” &c. All their glory shall perish. C.—Sept. “hast thou taken earth or clay, and formed a living creature, and endued it with speech on the earth?” Is man the workd of thy hands? H.

Ver. 17. Doors? Sept. “through fear; or have the porters of hell flown away at thy sight?” H.

Ver. 19. Darkness. The poetical style of this book represents these things as real beings, in the same manner (C.) as the house, (v. 20) or palace of the sun, &c. are described by the ancients. H.

Ver. 23. War. Hail, &c. are like the arrows of God. Jer. 10:13 and 50:25. C.

Ver. 24. Heat. Heb. kadim, (H.) the “east.” Sept. “south wind.” Perhaps the east winds produced the same bad effects in Egypt, as the south wind did in Judea; (C.) or this noxious burning wind might proceed from the south-eastern point of both countries. H.

Ver. 25. Noisy. Heb. “for lightning, which accompanies thunder?” By these questions, respecting things which to man are impossible, and many inexplicable, God humbles (C.) the pride of the human heart. H.

Ver. 26. Dwelleth. This shews the magnificence of God, (M.) at least. H.

Ver. 31. Pleiades. The seven stars.—Arcturus. A bright star in the north. Ch.—The same terms occur, and are explained, C. 9:9. H.

Ver. 32. Day-star. Heb. mazzaroth, (H.) corresponds with the “inner parts of the south;” (C. 9:9) though some translate, “the signs of the zodiac, or the influences,” &c. The antarctic constellations could not be seen in Idumea, while those of the north pole (C.) must appear to those who live on that side of the line, (H.) as the perpetual sentinels of the sky.—Evening-star. Heb. “Wilt thou make hayish and her daughters go to rest?” These indicate the arctic stars. Here two quite opposite stars are meant; (C.) though (H.) with us the evening and morning star be the same, being so styled according as it appears after or before the sun. M.—Prot. “Canst thou bring forth Mazzaroth (Sept. also retain the original term, Μαζουρωθ) in his season, or canst thou guide Arcturus, with his sons?” The former term signifies things “scattered,” the planets, (H.) or “the grains of gross air dispersed” to all the extremities, which returning to the centre, occasion cold. C. 37:9. Parkhurst.

Ver. 33. Reason. Heb. “dominion,” (H.) or influence upon the earth.

Mathematicians thought they had discovered these laws, and the number of the stars; but daily experience evinces their error. M.

Ver. 34. Voice, to mimic the thunder of God, (C.) or to order it to rain. H.

Ver. 36. Understanding. That is, to distinguish the hours of the night. Ch.—Sept. “Who gave to women the knowledge of the loom, and the art of embroidering?” H.—It was the part of women to weave, as appears from the conduct of queen Penelope. But the best interpreters translate, “Who has placed wisdom in the reins, or who hath given understanding to the heart,” or soul? C.—God gives wisdom to man, and an instinct to cocks, (H.) or the skill, of which the former is deprived, (W.) to know the approach of day. D.

Ver. 37. Sleep. The ancients have celebrated this harmony. Cic. Somn. Scip.—Sept. “Who numbereth the clouds in wisdom, or hath bent the sky down to the earth?” Prot. “or who can stay the bottles of heaven?” H.—Canst thou cause it to rain, or to be fair? (C.) or make the celestial bodies (H.) rest from motion? W.

Ver. 38. Together. When was the water separated from the earth? H.—Where wast thou when I gave consistency to the rocks? C.

Ver. 39. And satisfy. Sept. “or fill the souls of the dragons?” H.—Here Heb. edit. commence the following chap. (C.) and are followed by Prot. (H.) and others, as the proof of God’s superior knowledge begins to be established by the consideration of various animals. W.

Ver. 41. Wandering. Sixtus V. reads vagientes, (C.) “crying like children.” H.—The ravens presently drive their young away to seek for fresh habitations. Pliny x. 12. Ps. 146:9. C.—If God provide for such creatures, He will shew still greater attention to man. W.

JOB 39

Ver. 1. Goats (Ibex. Heb. Yahale. H.) frequent rocks, and places which are almost inaccessible to man. C.

Ver. 3. Roarings. They pretend that these animals bring forth with great difficulty. Ps. 28:9. Vatab. &c.—Aristotle (v. 2. and vi. 29.) asserts, that they receive the male bending down, as Heb. may be here explained. “They bend, they divide their young,” as they have often two; “and they leave their strings” at the navel, &c. C.

Ver. 4. Feed. Being weaned very soon. Pliny viii. 32.

Ver. 5. Wild ass, described, C. 6:5. The industry of man cannot make this beautiful and strong animal serviceable to him. The like would be the case (C.) with many others, if Providence had not ordered it otherwise. H.

Ver. 6. Barren. Lit. “salt.” H.—This is of a nitrous quality, which renders those countries barren. The salt in snow and dung gives warmth and fruitfulness.

Ver. 9. Rhinoceros. See Deut. 33:17. Num. 23:22. Sanchez says they are untameable. M.—But this is not true, when they have been taken young. Malvenda. C.

Ver. 10. Valleys, or furrows. Can he be made to harrow?

Ver. 13. Hawk. We may also read, “Is the wing of the ostrich like?” Sept. or Theod. “The bird of Neelasa is rejoicing, if she take the Asida, &c. the Neessa.” H.—Heb. is variously translated, “The ostrich lifts itself up with its wings, which have feathers, as well as those of the stork.” Bochart.—It flutters, running like a partridge, swifter than any horse. Adamson.—“Canst thou give to the stork and the ostrich their feathers,” which form all their beauty? C.—Prot. “Gavest thou the goodly wings upon the peacock, or wings and feathers unto the ostrich?” H.—The import of these names is uncertain. M.—Renanim, (from Ron, “to cry, or move quickly,”) may signify peacocks, ostriches, &c. Chasida, “a stork, (H. Jer.) falcon, (W.) or heron; notsa “a hawk, or a feather.” H.—The first term occurs no where else, and may denote any singing birds or grasshoppers, as the last may be applied to the ostrich, which has “wings,” though it fly not. Grot. C.—Acknowledge the wisdom of Providence, which has thus enabled such a huge animal to travel so fast. M.—See Parkhurst, álcs. H.

Ver. 14. Dust. This might help to hatch them. C.—Heb. “earth, and warmeth them in the dust.” Prot.

Ver. 16. Ones, or eggs which she leaves. C.—Ælian (xiv. 6.) asserts that this bird will expose her own life to defend her young. Yet the neglect of her eggs, will suffice to make her deemed cruel. Lam. 4:3. H.—Her. Other birds leave their nests through fear; (C.) but this, after sitting a while, will depart carelessly, (H.) and if she meet with other eggs on her road, will take to them, thus rendering her own useless. Bochart.

Ver. 17. Understanding. This bird has a head disproportionately small; insomuch, that Heliogabalus served up the brains of 600 at one supper. It greedily eats iron, &c. which may help its digestion, as sand does that of other birds. C.—When it is hunted, it hides its head only, as if this would be a sufficient defence, (Pliny x. 1.) and is taken alive by a man, clothed in the skin of an ostrich, who moves the head with his hand. Strabo xvi.—All which proves its stupidity. C.

Ver. 18. High. With her head erect, the ostrich is taller than a man on horseback. Pliny x. 1.—Its wings are used like sails, and enable it to run as fast as many birds can fly, (C.) while it hurls stones at the pursuer with its feet, so as frequently to kill them. Diod. ii.—Rider, as they can travel with equal speed. M. v. 13.—Adamson (Senegal) placed two negroes on one, and testified that it still went faster than any English horse. H.

Ver. 19. Neighing. Heb. “thunder,” to denote the fierceness of the horse; or “with a mane,” (Bochart) “armour,” (Syr.) or “terror.” Sept. C.—Wilt thou enable the horse to neigh, (M.) when he appears so terrible? H.

Ver. 20. Up. Heb. “frighten,” (H.) or “make him leap.” Bochart. C.—Nostrils. Sept. “of his chest, or shoulders, is boldness.” H.—This inspires the rider with courage, and the enemy with fear. But the Vulg. is more followed. C.

Frænoque teneri

Impatiens crebros expirat naribus ignes. Silius vi.

Ver. 21. Hoof. Ploughing, or rather prancing, through impatience. C.—Boldly. Heb. “he exults in his strength,” being sensible of glory and commendation. C.—Non dubiè intellectum adhortationis et gloriæ fatentur. Pliny vii. 43.

Ver. 23. Shield, or lance. Jos. 8:18. C.—The din of armour does not disturb the horse, which has been inured to such things. H.—It is of singular courage. W.

Ver. 24. Ground. This expression is still used by the Arabs, to denote velocity. Grotius.—Sept. “in wrath he will make the earth disappear.” H.—

Mox sanguis venis melior calet, ire viarum

Longa volunt latumque fugâ consumere campum. Nemesianus.

—Account. Heb. “believe that,” or “stops not when.” He is so eager to rush forward to battle.

Si qua sonum procul arma dedêre,

Ver. 25. Ha. Lit. “Vah,” a sound of joy, (M.) or of contempt. Sept. The trumpet having given the sign, he will say, Well: Euge. Nothing could be more poetically descriptive of the war-horse. H.

Ver. 26. Feathered. Heb. “fly.” H.—South, at the approach of “winter retiring” to warmer regions. Pliny x. 8.—Sept. “spreading her wings, looking unmoved, towards the south.” The hawk alone can stare at the sun, and fly to a great height. Ælian x. 14.—Hence the Egyptians consecrated this bird to the sun. C.—The eagle is of the same species, and has the same properties. H. Aristotle mentions 10, and Pliny 16 species of hawks. W.

Ver. 28. Access. See Abdias 4. Arist. anim. ix. 32.

Ver. 29. Off. The eagle was remarkably (C.) quick-sighted, (W.) as well as the serpent. Hor. i. Sat. iii. Homer, Il. xvii.—They say it can discern a fly or a fish from the highest situation; (Bochart) and if its young seem dazzled with the sun-beams, it hurls them down as spurious. Pliny x. 3.

Ver. 30. Blood, gushing forth from the animals, which the eagle brings. M.—S. Chrysostom explains this of the vulture, (Mat. 24:28. C.) which is of the same species. M.—Some eagles will not touch carcasses, but others are greedy of them. Pliny x. 3. Prov. 30:17.—There. Our Saviour quotes this passage. Lu. 17:37. C.

Ver. 31. Went on. Sept. “answered.” This was the conclusion drawn from the display of God’s wonderful works. If we cannot sufficiently admire them, why should we be so much surprised, as Job acknowledged he was, at the ways of Providence? It would, therefore, be better to keep silence, v. 35. H.

Ver. 32. Be so. Receive instruction, or (C.) instruct him? Wilt thou learn to admire my works? (H.) or dost thou attempt to give me any information? C.—Him. Heb. “it.” Sept. “shall he decline judgment with him who is competent?” ἰκανον. Theod. adds, “the man who accuses God, shall answer it,” or stand his trial. H.

Ver. 34. Spoken inconsiderately. If we discuss all Job’s words, (saith S. Gregory) we shall find nothing impious spoken; as may be gathered from the words of the Lord himself; (chap. 42 v. 7, 8) but what was reprehensible in him was the manner of expressing himself at times, speaking too much of his own affliction, and too little of God’s goodness towards him, which here he acknowledges as inconsiderate, (Ch.) or rather as the effect of inculpable ignorance; (H.) as the present order of things being then novel, confounded the sagacity both of Job and of his friends. The wicked had formerly been the victims of justice, but henceforth, says Job, (Heb.) “if it shall not be so, who can convince me of lying?” C. 24:25. Yet he did not perfectly discern the intention of God, in abandoning his servants to the power of satan, till the Lord himself had explained it in the parables of behemoth and leviathan. Then Job testified his conviction and entire submission. C. 42:5. Houbigant observes that the Vulg. is perhaps less accurate here, and C. 42:3 as God exculpates Job, v. 8. Yet the latter might entertain fear at least, of having exceeded in words, after such pungent question. We may translate, (H.) Heb. “Behold I am vile, (C.) what shall I answer thee?” Prot. or Sept. “Why am I still judged, being admonished and rebuke by the Lord, hearing such things?” (Grabe, after Origen, marks with an obel what follows, as not found in Heb.) “I, who am nothing, what answer shall I then give to these things?” H. —If we discuss all Job’s speeches, we find nothing spoken wickedly, but only a species of pride, in talking too much of his sufferings, and too little of God’s goodness and justice, which he ought to have confessed. S. Greg. xxxii. 3. W.

Ver. 35. One. Sept. “Once I have spoken, but I will not add again.” H. —I have spoken too much, but I will be more cautious. Heb. “I have spoken one thing, and I will not answer; (C.) yea, two things, but I will go no farther.” Many of my observations may be too strong, as I am not perfectly aware what may be the designs of Providence in my regard. H.

Ver. 3. Judgment. Job had frequently acknowledged that God could not be in the wrong. But he had expressed himself in to forcible language, of which God makes him, as it were, ashamed. C.—Sept. “rejestest thou not my decision? yea, dost thou think that I have judged thee in a different manner, in order that thou mayst appear just?” H.

Ver. 6. Scatter. Sept. is shorter: (C.) “Send angels or messengers in wrath, and humble every insulting person. 7. Extinguish the proud, destroy the wicked at once. 8. Hide them in the earth together, and fill their faces with shame.” H.

Ver. 8. Pit, or grave. Cause the earth to swallow them up, and I will confess thy power. C.

Ver. 10. Behemoth; the elephant, (Ch.) “as some think.” Prot. marg. H.—This is the most common opinion, though Sanchez explains it of the bull; and Bochart, after Beza and Diodati, declares in favour of the hippopotamus, (C.) or “river horse.” Parkhurst even thinks Bochart has proved this “to a demonstration.” The sea or river horse, (H.) is an amphibious animal, (C.) found in the Nile and Indus, and said to have the feet of an ox and the teeth of a boar, but not quite so sharp, while the neighing, back, mane, and tail, resemble those of a horse. Its hide, when dry, is said to resist even a musket-ball. Button. Dict.—We find a good description of this animal in Watson, p. 91. But the plural Bemeth, female (H.) “beasts,” seems more applicable to the elephant, on account of its great size, as it is designated by θηρία, or Bellua, by the Greek and Roman authors. Suidas. 1 Mac. 6:35. Pliny viii. 3.—It may have received the name of elephant from (C.) alp, “to lead or teach,” (H.) on account of its great sagacity and strength. All that Job says of behemoth, may be well explained of it. The Fathers have supposed, thta the devil is meant: but we stick to the literal sense. C.—He may, however, (H.) have been hinted at by this name, (W.) as well as by that of leviathan. Houbigant.—With thee, on the same day, or as well as thee. Amama.—Grass. The elephant does so, and is by no means savage. C.—Sept. “Yet, behold, near thee wild beasts, equal to oxen, eat grass.” H.—The spontaneous productions of the earth, and branches of trees, afford the principal sustenance to satisfy the prodigious stomach of the elephant; which is frequently twelve feet high, and of a dark colour. A sword can pierce it in the back or sides. It has small eyes, eight teeth, and two tusks; which last are sometimes above a hundred weight each, and being cast every tenth year, (Button) afford ivory. The proboscis serves it instead of hands to collect the smallest grain, or to defend itself. H.—The female goes with young a whole year, and the duration of its life is generally supposed to be above a hundred. Elephants inhabit warm climates, and were formerly much used in war, to carry wooden towers, from which twenty, or even thirty, men might throw darts. 1 Mac. 6:37. Button.—If this greatest and most temperate of all beasts be overcome by the unicorn, or led by the nose, how much more will God enable man to overcome the devil? W.

Ver. 11. Loins. The towers were fastened here by an iron chain.—Belly. Yet it is nowhere so easily wounded. 1 Mac. 6:45. Pliny viii. 20.—Hence some would translate Heb. “and its pain in the belly,” (C.) as it is only subject to an inflammation and flux; profluvium alvi. Pliny. Ælian xvii. 44.—But the original rather denotes the parts of generation, which lie concealed, (Arist. anim. ii. 1. and v. 2.) and are styled the strength. Gen. 49:3. Deut. 21:17.

Ver. 12. Tail, which is very small, and without hair. C.—Vavassor rather thinks “the trunk” is meant. D.

Ver. 13. Gristle. Heb. again, “bones.” C.—Sept. “back-bone, like cast iron.”

Ver. 14. Beginning, or prince. H.—The elephant may be considered as the king of beasts for strength, agility, gratitude, longevity, &c. None approaches so near to man. Pliny viii. 1. C. Lipsius, 1 ep. 50. Amama. —Sword; which is the rhinoceros, killing the elephant under the belly with its horn; (Pliny viii. 20. Grot.) or God seems to have entrusted his sword to the elephant, for the destruction of his enemies. Nothing can withstand its fury, as it overturns houses and trees with its trunk. Jun. C.

Ver. 15. Play. No animal is of a milder nature. It never attacks, unless in its own defence. When a crowd of other beasts obstruct its passage, it removes them quietly with its proboscis. Pliny vi. 9. &c.

Ver. 16. Places, insomuch that Ælian (iv. 24.) styles it a “beast of the marshes.” It is fabulous that it is forced to sleep against a tree, as if it could not rise without much difficulty. C.—Sept. (14) “This is the beginning or chief (αρχη) of the creation of the Lord, being made for his angels to play with, or beat. Departing to the craggy rock, it has made sport for the quadrupeds in the field. It sleepeth under all sorts of trees; near the reed and papyrus, and the boutomon, or ox-herb.” H.

Ver. 18. Wonder. Heb. “make haste,” taking time to render it muddy. Ælian xiv. 44.—It can drink a great deal at once, and then abstain for a week. C.—Run. Heb. “he may draw.” Sept. “may knock at his mouth,” (H.) in vain, (C.) as long as it can breathe by holding by holding its trunk out of the water. Arist. ix. 46.—Theod. in the Sept. “If there should be an inundation, it shall not perceive. It confideth that, or when, the Jordan shall knock at its mouth. He shall take it by its eye; saying snares, he shall bore [its] nose.” H.

Ver. 19. Stakes. Serpents attack the eyes of the elephant, and sometimes drag it by the trunk into the deep, where it is drowned. Pliny viii. 12. Solin xxxviii.—Others read with an interrogation: “Shall one take?” &c. Will any one dare to attack it openly? The elephant is taken by stratagem, either in pits covered with a little earth, or by a tame elephant in an inclosure, and (C.) lying on her hack to receive the male. Arist. anim. v. 2.—When he has entered, the gate is shut, and the animal is tamed by hunger; being thus taken by his eyes. Judith 10:17. Chal. “They pierce his nostrils with bands.” Thus other animals are led about, (v. 21) and the elephant might be so treated in those days; though of this we have no account. C.—Prot. “his nose pierceth through snares;” or marg. “will any bore his nose with a gin?” Here they conclude this chapter, which commences C. 39:31 in Heb. But the Sept. agree with us. H.

Ver. 20. Leviathan: the whale, or some sea monster. Ch.—Prot. marg. “or a whirlpool.” H.—But some animal is designated; and Bochart understands the crocodile, which agrees very well with the context. The Thalmudists also say that the calbish is a small fish, which gets into the throat of the leviathan. They mean probably the ichneumon, which kills the crocodile by that means. Leviathan, “the winding serpent,” (C.) often denotes the dragon or crocodile, (Ps. 103:26. Isai. 27:1) which frequents the Nile. H.—It can live as well by land as under water, (Watson, p. 293) and hence may be translated, (H.) “the coupled dragon.” Parkhurst.—Moses mentions the choled, (Lev. 11:29) which the Sept. and most others translate, “the land crocodile:” but what could induce the Prot. “to render it tortoise, we are at a loss to determine.” Crocodiles lay about sixty eggs, like those of geese, in the sand, the warmth of which soon hatches them. Their bodies are covered with scales, which are scarcely penetrable, except under the belly; and they are between twenty and thirty feet in length, running very fast, straight forward, though their feet be short, and they cannot turn easily. They have several rows of sharp teeth, which enter one within another, and their throat is very wide. Button.—The same word may however denote whales, (Parkhurst) which are the greatest fishes with which man is acquainted. H.—They may also be styled coupled dragons, because many smaller fishes accompany them, and they are well protected by scales, &c. M.—This huge fish, perhaps the whale, representing the devil, is subject to God. W.—Cord. The crocodile may be taken, but with the utmost hazard; though the Tentyrites attacked it without fear. C. 3:8. Herodotus (ii. 70.) says it may be caught with a hook, baited with hog’s flesh, while the fisher has a pig grunting, at which the crocodile come open-mouthed. Having swallowed the hook, it is drawn to land, and its small eyes being filled with dirt it is easily slain. But the method was not yet invented, or was deemed too rash in Job’s days.

Ver. 21. Buckle. Lit. “bracelet,” (armilla. H.) or ring. Horses were thus ornamented, (Virg. vii. 7.) and other beasts led about. But this fierce animal could not be tamed. Heb. “Wilt thou put a rush through its gills, or nose, or pierce its jaw with a thorn?” like those little fishes which are thus brought fresh to market. C.

Ver. 22. Will it lay aside its ferocity, (H.) and flatter thee? M.

Ver. 24. Handmaids? or little girls. C. Sept. "Wilt thou tie it like a sparrow for thy boy?" H.

Ver. 25. Friends. Heb. also, (H.) "enchanters." C.—Frigidus in pratis cantando rumpitur anguis. Virg. Ec. 8.—Sept. "the nations."—Merchants. Sept. "the generation of the Phœnicians (Heb.) of Chanaan, (H.) famous for merchandise, (C.) insomuch that the name is used for any merchant. H.—Will they salt the crocodile for sale? C.—Its flesh was much liked. Herod, &c.

Ver. 26. Cabins, (gurgustium) the reservoir or basket. C.—Prot. "Canst thou fill his skin with barbed prongs, (for which they have now irons) or his head with fish spears?"—But this is hardly the meaning of the original. C. 41:6. Heb. "wilt thou fill tents with its skin, or the fish net, with its head?" to catch other fish, or to cover thy tent? &c. The skin is very hard, except under the belly. C.—One defended itself against 36 men, who fired at it six times in vain. Herera.—Sept. "a whole fleet collected would not carry off the skin of its tail." H.—They seem to speak of the whale. C.—Theodotion adds, "and its head in fisher boats." H.

Ver. 27. Speak. Heb. "do." H.—Thy rash attempt will prove thy ruin. If thou escape, thou wilt not dare to engage again. C.—Sept. "Wilt thou lay thy hand upon it, remembering the battle with its body? and let it not be done any more. (28.) Hast thou not seen it, nor been astonished at what has been said?" H.

Ver. 28. Down, whoever engages in the conflict, (M.) except the bold citizens of Tentyra. All the rest are terrified at the very sight. Hence the Egyptians have ever given divine honours to the crocodile. C.

JOB 41

Ver. 1. I. Heb. "None is so fierce that dare stir it up." H.—Cruel, or rash, like those to Tentyra. C. 3:8. C.—This monster is terrible to those that flee, while it retires from the pursuer.—But only these people dare to attack it. Pliny viii. 25.—"I will not ask the crocodile to revenge me of my enemies," as some might do in a rage, through impotence. H. Sanchez. M.—Countenance, even though they might overcome the crocodile. God is here speaking. Sept. "Dost thou not fear, since it is ready for thee, (Grabe substitutes, "me," for who will resist me?" or, "who shall stand against me, and live? All," &c. v. 2. H.—God ruleth not with cruelty, like a tyrant, but with justice, ease, and power. W.

Ver. 3. Supposition. This is explained by the Fathers as spoken of the devil. Amama.—But the Hebrew may signify, that God will reward each one according to his deserts, and that Job had consequently no reason to complain; or it means, that the strength and beauty of the crocodile should be made known. C.—“I will not conceal his parts, nor his power, nor his comely proportion.” Prot. “I will not keep silence on his account, and the word of power shall take pity on his equal.” Theod. in Sept. H.

Ver. 4. Garment, or the skin. M.—Who shall look steadfastly, or dare to take off its skin?—Mouth. Prot. “Who can come to him with his double bridle?” (H.) though it be of the greatest strength; or, who will enter its jaws, or put bits in them? It is reported that the Tentyrites jump on the crocodile’s back, and having thrown a piece of wood into its open mouth, like bits, which they hold with both hands, they conduct it to the river side, and kill it. Pliny viii. 25.—Sept. “Who would enter the wrinkles of his breast, (C.) or the folds of its coat of arms?” which may allude to the almost impenetrable scales of the leviathan. H.—Sym. “Who will enter the folds of its scales?” The crocodile can open its mouth so wide as to swallow a heifer, or to let a man stand upright. C.—Each jaw is furnished with thirty-six teeth. Vansleb.

Ver. 6. Body. Sept. “entrails are like brazen shields.” Prot. “His scales are his pride shut up together, as with a close seal.” H.

Ver. 9. Sneezing. When the whale breathes, it causes the water to foam. Pineda. M.—The eyes of the crocodile are also (H.) very bright, when out of the water. Pliny viii. 25. They appear first, and therefore were used as an hieroglyphic of Aurora, (Horus i. 26.) or of the morning star. H.—Syr. “His look is brilliant.” Arab. “The apples of his eyes are fiery, and his eyes are like the brightness of the morning.” Sept. “like Aurora.” C.—Olaus (xxi. 5.) says, “that they eyes of the whale shine at night, ... and at a distance, are taken by fishermen for great fires.”

Ver. 10. Fire, when they spout water, (M.) or pursue their prey open mouthed. This description is extremely poetical, like that of anger. 2 K. 22:9. C.

Ver. 11. Smoke; breath, or streams of water sent upwards.

Ver. 12. Breath, like bellows, v. 10. M.

Ver. 13. Neck. Some deny that the crocodile has any, being formed like a lizard. But it is a dispute about words. The animal turns with difficulty, so that Thomas Gage assures us he escaped one by going in different directions.—Want. It ravages a whole country. Heb. “fear.” C.—Prot. “sorrow is turned into joy before him;” which seems strange. Sept. “destruction runs before him.” H.—The poets place fear, carnage, &c. in the train of Mars. C.

Ver. 14. Place; though people may shoot at him, they will make no impression. C. 40:20, 26. H.—If God send his thunderbolts at him, the monster must however perish. C.—Sym. “His flesh being cast for him, as in the foundry, (molten) is immoveable.” H.—Yet God destroyeth him whom man cannot overcome. W.

Ver. 15. Stone. Pineda understands this of the whale’s heart. Others suppose that it alludes to its cruel and fearless temper. M.—The Arabs call a valiant man, “heart of stone.” C.—Smiths. Prot. “as a piece of the nether millstone,” (H.) which must be larger and more compact than that which is above. C.—Sept. “He hath stood immoveable as an anvil.” H.

Ver. 16. Angels. Elim. That is, the mighty, the most valiant, shall fear this monstrous fish, and in their fear shall seek to be purified, (Ch.) by contribution. Sanchez.—R. Levi has given a ridiculous exposition, which is adopted by Sa (Amama) and others, (H. see Ezech. 2:7. Arist. iv. prob. 32.) as the natural consequences of fear. C. M.—The Fathers refer this to the fall of Lucifer, when the other angels might tremble for their own safety. H.—Angels with reverent fear honour God’s power, and his most perfect servants are filled with apprehensions at his judgments; as the most valiant are terrified at the sight of this huge fish. W.—Sept. “If he turn, there is fear among the wild quadrupeds, jumping on the land.” Heb. “When he raiseth up himself, the mighty are afraid: by reason of breakings, they purify themselves.” (Prot.) or “spoil themselves,” (C.) expecting nothing but certain death. Amama.

Ver. 17. Plate. Prot. “habergeon.” The precise nature of these arms is not known. C.—Neither offensive or defensive weapons can avail. M.—All agree that the crocodile can be pierced only under the belly. C.

Ver. 19. Are. Lit. “are turned into stubble,” as in Heb. H.—They have no more effect. M.

Ver. 20. Hammer. Sept. σφύρα, means also, “the bottom of a rock.” This would not overwhelm the whale; as some are represented like floating islands. Prot. “darts.” H.—Chal. “axe.” Others have, “the ballista;” an instrument to throw stones. C.

Ver. 21. Under him. He shall not value the beams of the sun: and gold to him be like mire. Ch. M.—Heb. “sharp stones (or potsherds) are under him; he spreadeth (or lieth upon) sharp-pointed things, as upon the mire.” H.—He is not afraid of being hurt.

Ver. 22. When. Heb. “a pot of ointment.” This boils out very much. C.—The flesh of the crocodile has also the smell of musk; (Bochart) and Peter Martyr asserts, that Columbus found some in America, which plunged into the water, and left behind them the odour of musk or castor. When they are wounded, they give the same perfume to the sea, or rather to the waters, where they abide. The Hebrews style all deep rives and lakes, seas. C.—Crocodiles were kept in the lake Mœris, being adored and honoured as gods. Herod. ii. 69.—Sept. “He deems the sea as a vase of ointment; (23) and the Tartarus of the abyss, like a prisoner.” Theod. adds, “He hath considered the abyss as a walk.”

Ver. 23. The deep as growing old. Growing hoary, as it were, with the froth which he leaves behind him. Ch.—The Vulg. has well expressed the force of the original, and shews the rapidity with which the crocodile moves. C.—Prot. “one would think the deep to be hoary.” The devil transforms himself into an angel (H.) of light. D.

Ver. 24. Power. Heb. and Sept. “none like him on earth,” for bulk.—One. Sept. “made to be played with, or beaten, by my angels.” H.

Ver. 25. He is king, &c. He is superior in strength to all that are great and strong amongst living creatures: mystically it is understood of the devil, who is king over all the proud. Ch. S. Greg. xxxiv. 4. and 17. W.—Hence Job perceived that God has also now permitted this cruel foe to exercise a dominion over him, and to pull him from his high station, though innocent. H.—This would henceforward be more frequently the order of Providence, and therefore he expresses his entire resignation. C. 42. Houbigant.—Pride: the strongest and fiercest animals. H.—The crocodile has been seen encountering even the elephant, and gaining the victory. He is king of all fishes. Sept. “of all in the waters.” Chal. “of all the sons of the mountains:” or Theod. “of arrogance.” This may particularly denote the Egyptians, as the crocodile was one of their gods; and people are often styled after them. Num. 21:29. Jer. 48:46. C.—Pharao even means “a crocodile,” in Arabic. Bochart, Anim. p. ii. b. v. 16.—He is styled simply, the proud. Ps. 88:11. C.—The pride of the Egyptians was notorious. Ezech. 32:12. C.

Ver. 2. I know. So the Keri orders us to translate, with all the ancient versions, as the Heb. text has, “thou knowest;” which Prof. Chappelow and Schultens deem more “sublime,” though one would think it was hardly “sense.” Kennicott.—Hid. Heb. “of thine can be hindered.” All thy orders must be obeyed. It is in vain to keep silence: (C. 39:34.) I will confess openly thy justice and power. H.—He acknowledges his error, in not having before spoken enough of a just Providence. W.

Ver. 3. Who. Heb. “Who is he that hideth counsel without knowledge?” Prot. This seems to allude to the words of God. C. 38:2. Each of my friends has only rendered the ways of Providence more obscure, and I myself have not perfectly understood them. H.—Unwisely. See C. 39:35. W. D.—Heb. “without knowledge, thing wonderful to me, which I knew not.” H.—Now I comprehend that thou didst not afflict me, but hast given me into the hands of the enemy, as thou wilt hereafter do others of the greatest virtue, that their patience may shine the brighter, and be rewarded. I need inquire no father, now I see thy design plainly, v. 5. He does not accuse himself of any sin or false assertion, but acknowledges his infirmity in not having understood this before, v. 6. Houbigant.—Sept. “I have been told what I knew not, things great and wonderful, of which I was not apprized.” H.—Who can deny God’s providence? D.

Ver. 5. Seeth thee. Some have thought that God now manifested himself from the cloud. Euseb. Dem. i. 4. Titalman, &c.) But all now agree that he only enlightened his understanding, and made known his designs more clearly. C.—Job now perceived that he had spoken too boldly, in saying, Hear, and I will speak, &c. v. 4. The rest of this book is in prose. T.

Ver. 6. Reprehend. Heb. and Sept. “vilify.” H.—I recall the obscure expression which has occasioned my friends to mistake. D.—Penance. Heb. “groan.” Sept. “pine away, I look upon myself as dust and ashes.” Such are the sentiments which every one will entertain the nearer he approaches to the divine Majesty. H.—I no longer assert my innocence, but wait patiently in my present forlorn condition, till thou shalt be pleased to dispose of me. How much would the reputation and authority of Job sink, if some of his assertions had been destitute of truth, particularly as the sacred author does not mention which they were! But God exculpates his servant, v. 8. Houbigant.—Chal. “I have despised my riches, and I am comforted with respect to my children, who are now reduced to dust and ashes.” I find a consolation in submitting patiently to my sufferings, which I may have deserved on account of my unguarded speeches. C.—Job waits not for God's answer, v. 4. He at once feels an interior light, and is resigned. H.—He had defended the truth against men: now, with more resignation, he is content to suffer, and does penance for himself and others. W.

Ver. 7. Two friends. It is astonishing that Eliu is not also reprehended, as he was no better than the rest. Some answer, that god had passed sentence upon him first. Others maintain, that he spoke with greater dignity of God's judgments, and that his ignorance was blameless; while others remark, that he was connected with some of the three friends, or only came accidentally to enter into the debate. God gives sentence in favour of Job, though with some reproof for his manner of speaking.—As. They had maintained false doctrines, and shewed a want of due respect and compassion for their friend; (T.) whereas Job's assertions were true. C.—How then can he be accused of denying the divine justice, or of speaking disrespectfully of Providence? God seemed to interrogate him on this account, though he approved of his sentiments, because some might draw such inferences from his words as all his friends did. But Job entertained no such ideas. He was not guilty of such folly, v. 8. Sept. "Thou hast sinned, and thy two friends, for you have spoken in my presence nothing true like my servant Job."

Ver. 8. Offer. Sept. "Thou shalt make an oblation, καρπωμα, for you." H.—Yet holocausts seem to have been the only species of sacrifice before Moses. The number seven, has always been in a manner sacred; (C.) being doubled, it shews the greatness of the offence. S. Greg. W.—Job was to present these victims to God, (C.) as the priest and mediator, (D.) of whom God approved. He officiated for his family, (C.) and was the most honourable person there. H.—It seems Job was not present when God gave this injunction; perhaps some time after their debates. C.—Pray. Behold the efficacy of the prayers of the saints, even while upon earth. How much greater will it be, when their charity is greater and unfailing! H.—The many sacrifices would not have sufficed, if Job had not joined his prayer, as S. Chrys. (or 5 con. Judæos) observes. His mediation did not derogate from God's mercy, under the law of nature; not does that of other men injure Christ's under the law of grace, 2 Cor. 1:11. We have here also a proof that both sacrifice and the devotion of the offerer, have their distinct effects; opus operatum, and opus operantis, as the schoolmen speak. Thus Job was honourably acquitted, while his friends were justly rebuked. Eliu needed no express condemnation; as what God says to one, must be applied to another in the same circumstances. C. 33:14. Protestants are therefore inexcusable, who preach a doctrine not only condemned in their fellows, Luther, &c., but long before in ancient heretics: as the justification by faith alone was in the apostles' time, the rejection of the ceremonies of baptism, of confirmation and penance, in the Novatians, &c. See S. Cyp. iv. ep. 2. W.—Face. Sept. “For I would not accept his face, and if it were not on his account, I had surely destroyed you. For you have not said to me any thing good (Rom. true.) against (or concerning, κατα.) my servant Job.” They acted both against charity and truth. H.—Before. Prot. “of me the thing which is right.” The words underlined were not so in the earlier edition by Barker, printer to James I. (1613) where some of the marg. translations are also omitted, v. 14, &c. The matter is of no farther consequence, than to shew that alterations have taken place since the days of James I. who Bible is supposed to be the standard of the English Church. The marginal version is also frequently neglected altogether, (A. 1706) though the authors seem to have looked upon it as equally probable with that in the text. Pref. H.

Ver. 10. Penance. Heb. “return.” He resolved to restore him to his former prosperous condition, while he prayed for those who had so cruelly exercised his patience. C.—Prot. and Vatable, “the Lord turned the captivity of Job:” so any great distress may be styled, though Job was in a manner abandoned to the power and bondage of satan. Sept. “But the Lord gave an increase to Job, and while he was praying for his friends, He forgave them their sin. And,” &c. H.—Twice, excepting children, who were living (W.) with God. Rabbins. S. Greg. &c.—Some also include the years of Job's life, but that is not clear, (see Spanheim, c. 7. C.) though not improbable; as he might very well live twice as long as he had done, if we suppose that the was about (H.) 50 when he was so much distressed (Petau); and thus arrived at the age of 140, v. 16. H.

Ver. 11. Brethren. Who had before shamefully abandoned him. C. 6:13. C.—Bemoaned. Lit. “shaked their heads at him,” (H.) out of pity, (M.) or astonishment, (T. C.) at his fallen state, and at the present change for the better. They helped to restore him to affluence, in conformity with the will of God, who caused their presents of multiply. The kindred and friends of Job were undoubtedly numerous. H.—Ewe. Kesita, “lamb,” as most of the ancients agree, (Spanheim) or a piece of money, (Bochart) marked with the figure of a lamb. Grot. See Gen. 33:19. C.—Ear-ring. Heb. Nezem, an ornament (H.) “for the nose,” still very common in the East. Sym. adds, “it was unadorned,” (C.) or plain. Sept. “a piece of gold worth four drachms, and not coined,” ασημον. H.—Oleaster supposes that the nose was perforated, like the ear. But the ornament would thus be very inconvenient, and we may rather conclude that it hung down from the forehead upon the nose. S. Jer. in Ezec. xvi. Pineda.

Ver. 12. Asses. Sept. “droves of,” &c. which would greatly increase the number.

Ver. 14. Dies, &c. “Day ... cassia ... and horn of antimony.” Heb.—Yemima ... Ketsiha ... Keren hapuc. This last may signify (H.) “horn of change,” (Pagn.) in allusion to Job’s different states. M. D.—Sometimes we find the Latin names retained, and at other times translated. It would perhaps be as well to give their force uniformly in English, or rather to insert the original terms, if they could be now properly expressed. But that is impossible. Prot. Jemima, “handsome as the day.” Kezia, “superficies, angle, or cassia.” Keren-happuch, “the horn or child of beauty.” The marginal explanations are given at least in the edit. Edinb. 1787. H.—Cassia, an aromatic herb, which is perhaps not now found to be found in Europe, Matthiol. in Dios. i. 12.—The Arabs like to give such names to their children. Spanheim, Hist. Job.—Cornustibii, (Heb. Puc) means a sort of paint, used to blacken the eyelids, (4 K. 9:30) or a precious stone, Isai. 54:11. Chal. “brilliant as an emerald.” She was so styled, on account of her great beauty, (C.) in which she was not inferior to her two sisters. Sept. “Horn of Amalthea,” (H.) or of plenty, (C.) which is not an approbation of the fable, but to show the abundance which Job now enjoyed. Nicetas.—Cassia might remind him of the bad smells to which he had been exposed. M. T.

Ver. 15. Daughters. Sept. Alex. adds, “and sons.”—Brethren. This was contrary to the custom of the Jews, (Num. 27:8) but conformable to the Roman laws, and to the Koran. Sur. 4. C.

Ver. 16. Years, in all, as Judith is said to have dwelt in the house of her husband 105 years; though it is agreed that she only lived that space of time. H.—Authors are much divided about the length of Job’s life. Some suppose that he was afflicted with the leprosy at the age of 70, for several months, (T.) or for a whole year, (C.) or for seven, (Salien) and that he lived twice as long after his re-establishment, in all 210. C. T. Sept. “Job lived after his chastisement 170,” (Grabe substitutes 140 years. Then he marks with an obel as redundant) “but all the years which he lived were 248;” and adds from Theod. “And Job saw his sons and their children, even the fourth generation.” H.—The old Vulg. had also 248 years; while some Greek copies read 740. But Grotius thinks the life of Job was not extended beyond 200. Petau and Spanheim say 189, (C.) and Pineda 210, or rather 280, years. Yet the life of man, in the days of Moses, his contemporary, was not often longer than 120; so that if we allow Job 140, he would be an old man, and might see the fourth generation, v. 10. H.—The Greeks celebrate his festival on the 6th, the Latins on the 10th of May. Pineda.—Days. Here a long addition is found in the Greek, Arab. and old Vulg.; and Theodotion has also inserted it in his version, as it seems to contain a true and ancient tradition, (see Eus. præp. ix. 25.) though the Fathers have properly distinguished it from the inspired text. It stands thus in the Alex. Sept. with an obel prefixed: “But it is written, that he shall be raised again, with those whom the Lord will restore to life.” He, this man, as it is translated from the Syriac book, lived in the land of Ausites, (Hus.) on the borders of Idumea, and of Arabia, and was before called Jobab. But marrying an Arabian woman, he begot a son by name Ennon. But his father was Zareth, a descendant of the sons of Esau, and his mother was Bossora; (Arab, a native of Bosra) so that he was the 5th (Arab the 6th) from Abraham. Now these were the kings who reigned in Edom; over which country he also ruled. First, Balac, son of Semphor; (others have Beor) and the name of his city was Dennaba. After Balak, Jobab, who is called Job. After him, Assom, a leader from the country of Theman. After this man, Adad, son of Barad, who slew Madian in the plain of Moab; and the name of his city was Gethaim. But the friends who came to him were, Eliphaz, [son of Sophan] of the sons of Esau, king of the Themanites; Baldad, [son of Amnon, of Chobar] of the Auchite tyrant; (Grabe substitutes the tyrant of the Sauchians, as they call our Shuhites) Sophor, king of the Mineans.” What is marked with crotchets, (H.) has been probably taken from Theodotion. See the Greek Catena. What follows occurs in the Alex. MS. C.—“[Theman, son of Eliphaz, he, as the Syriac book is rendered, lived in the land of Ausites, on the borders of the Euphrates. His former name was Jobab, but Zareth was his father, from the sun rising.”] or eastern country. H.—Job might very well be the 5th or 6th from Abraham, if he were a contemporary with Moses, as Levi and Amram would live at the same time with Rahuel and Zare; (See 1 Par. 1:35, 44.) so that this tradition agrees with history. But what is said of the Syriac version is not so certain. C.—Some think the Syriac or Arabic was the original text, as the Greek seems to indicate, οὗτος ἐμνηνεύεται ἐκ τῆς Συριακῆς Βιβλίου, ἐν μὲν γῇ κατοικῶν, &c. The passage at the end, where this is repeated, may be an interpolation, as the latter part seems rather to belong to Job. For how could Theman have both Eliphaz and Zareth for his father? Grabe therefore, marks it as such. It would be too long for us to transcribe (H.) the praises which the Fathers have given to Job, and the resemblance which they have discovered between him and Jesus Christ. See Heb. 4:15 and 13:12. Tert. patient. S. Chrys. hom. xxxiv. in Matt. S. Ambrose, in Ps. xxxvii. 21 observes, that his behaviour on the dunghill was the greatest condemnation of satan, who fell by pride, though so highly favoured. C.—Besides the literal sense of this book, which displays the trials and victories of Job, we may consider him as a lively figure of Christ; who was perfectly innocent, and yet a man of sorrows: we may raise our minds to the contemplation of the greater glory which will attend the bodies of the just, after the resurrection; and, above all, we may discover lessons of morality, enforcing the observance of every virtue, and particularly of patience and resignation. S. Greg. &c. W.—The books of Machabees, which are the only remaining pieces of sacred history, might have been here inserted, as they are in Calmet's edition, that so all the historical part might come together. But is is more common to place those books after the prophets. They only relate a few of the transactions which took place during the 400 or 500 years preceding the Christian era. The rest must be borrowed from Josephus, or from profane authors. It would, however, be proper to read those books, and to have an idea of that period, before we attempt to explain the prophecies. PSALMS

THE BOOK OF PSALMS

INTRODUCTION

The Psalms are called by the Hebrew, Tehillim; that is, hymns of praise. The author, of a great part of them at least, was king David; but many are of opinion, that some of them were made by Asaph and others, whose names are prefixed in the titles. Ch.—These, however, are not unquestionably of divine authority, though they deserve to be respected. C.—S. Jerom (ad Cyprian) says: "Let us be convinced that those labour under a mistake, who suppose that David was the author of all the Psalms, and not those whose names appear in the titles." Paine is not, therefore, the first who has made this discovery. Watson. 2 Par. 29:30.—Psalm 76 compared with Psalms 38. 64. 70. 111. 125. 136 and 145 seems favourable of this opinion, (C. T. &c.) which is contrary to S. Ambrose, &c. The matter is not of great moment, as all confess that the 150 Psalms were dedicated by the Holy Ghost. D.—S. Aug. (de Civ. Dei. xvii. 14.) attributes all the Psalms to David; and it seems best to adhere to this opinion, as it is most generally received. M.—Our Saviour cites the 109. Psalm as belonging to David, (Matt. 22:44) agreeably to the title; and the 2d Psalm is also attributed to him, by the apostles, (Act. 4:25) though it have no title at all, no more than the first. H.—It has generally been asserted, that when a Psalm is in this position, it must be referred to the author who was mentioned last. But Bellarmine calls this in question: and the titles of themselves afford but a precarious argument, either to know the author or the real import of the Psalm. 100.—S. Jerom himself (ad Paulin.) seems to suppose that David was the writer of all the Psalms, (W.) and that he has left us compositions which may vie with those of the most celebrated pagan bards. In effect, nothing could excel the harmony of these divine hymns, to judge even from a translation. Fleury.—What then would they be in the original? The difficulty of coming to a perfect knowledge of the author's meaning, arises chiefly from the variety of translations and commentaries, which have been more numerous on this work than any other. To examine all minutely, would require more volumes than our present limits will allow. The version which we have to explain, is not that which S. Jerom made from the Heb. and which possesses the same intrinsic merit as the rest of his works: but the Church has declared authentic the holy doctor's corrected (H.) version from S. Lucian, (Bellar. T.) or from the Sept. as the people had been accustomed to sing the psalter in that manner; and it would have been difficult for them to learn another. C.—A critical examination would show, that the Sept. have not so often deviated from the original as some would pretend. See Berthier, &c. Pellican extols the fidelity of our version on the Psalms, though he was a Prot. Ward. Err. p. 6.—When therefore we offer a different version, we would not insinuate that the Vulg. is therefore to be rejected. The copiousness of the Heb. language, (H.) and on some occasions the uncertainty of its roots, or precise import, (Somon. Crit.) ought to make every one diffident in pronouncing peremptorily on such subjects. Let us rather adhere to the decision of the Church, when it is given on any particular text; and when she is silent, let us endeavour to draw the streams of life from our Saviour's fountains, and read for our improvement in virtue. H.—No exhortations could be more cogent, than those which we may find in the Psalms. They contain the sum of all the other sacred books, as the Fathers agree. S. Aug. S. Bas. &c. To understand them better, we must reflect upon what key or string they each play. Expositors discover ten such stings on this mysterious harp: 1. God; 2. his works; 3. Providence; 4. the peculiar people of the Jews; 5. Christ; 6. his Church; 7. true worship; 8. David; 9. the end of the world; 10. a future life. On some of these subjects the Psalm principally turns. The titles, composed by Esdras, or the Sept. (W.) or by some other, (C.) will often point out the subject; and if that be not the case, the context and other parts of Scripture will (W.) commonly (H.) do it. W.—The greatest stress must be laid on these. C.—An intimate acquaintance with the history of David, and with the Jewish and Christian religion, will also be of essential service to enable us to penetrate the hidden treasures contained in these most heavenly canticles. H.—David excels all the pagans in point of antiquity, as he lived 100 years before Homer. His natural genius led him to follow the pursuits of poetry and music; (1 K. 16:23) and God inspired him to compose these poems, as works in metre are more easily remembered, and make a more pleasing impression upon the heart. Hence Moses and other prophets adopted the same plan, both in the Old and the New Testament. The pious king not being permitted to build the temple, made nevertheless all necessary preparations for it; and among the rest, procured 288 masters of music to train up 4000 singers. 1 Par. 23:25. He foresaw that these Psalms would be of service, not only on the Jewish festivals, but also in the Christian Church, (Ps. 56:10. &c.) gathered from all nations, (W.) among whom he sings by the mouths (H.) of the clergy, who are commanded daily to sing or recite some of these Psalms. W.—The psalter takes its name from an instrument of ten strings, resembling the Greek L, (Ven. Bede) and sounding from above, to insinuate that we may (W.) here learn to observe (H.) all the decalogue, and to aim at heaven. If difficulties present themselves in the perusal of these sacred writings, we must remember not to trust private interpretation, (2 Pet. 1) but to the doctrine of the Church, (Jo. 14:16. 1 Cor. 12) which we may find in the works of the holy Fathers, (S. Aug. Doct.) and exercise ourselves in humility, when any thing occurs above our comprehension. S. Greg. xvii. in Ezech. W.—We must pray with all earnestness to the Father of Lights, and surely no prayers can be more efficacious to obtain what we want, than those which he has here delivered. Whether just or sinners, whether in joy or sorrow, we may here find what may be suitable for us. H.—In hoc libro spiritualis Bibliotheca instructa est. Cassiod.

PSALM 1. (BEATUS VIR.)

The happiness of the just: and the evil state of the wicked.

Theodoret observes that this psalm has “no title in Heb.,” and some have attributed it to Esdras, when he collected the psalms into one book. But the Compl. Sept. reads, "A psalm of David;" "without a title among the Hebrews." The Fathers attribute it to David, and suppose that he speaks particularly of Joseph of Arimathea, or of Jesus Christ; though the Jews refer this high encomium to Josias. Jeremias (17:7) has imitated this psalm, which may be considered as a preface to all the rest, and an abridgment of the whole duty of man. C.—Blessed. Heb. also, Manifold are (H.) "the blessings" (Pagnin) both for time (H.) and eternity. W.—Ungodly, who mind no religion, or a false one. H.—Heb. "inconstant."—Sinners, who are still more obstinate. C.—Pestilence. Heb. "scoffers," who are the most dangerous sort of people, boldly deriding all religion, and maintaining atheism. There is a beautiful gradation here observed, showing the fatal consequences of evil company. If the virtuous associate with one even of the least contagious, the infection presently catches him, and he is soon introduced among the more dissolute, where he stops with little remorse, till at last he even glories in his shame, and becomes a champion of impiety. 1 Cor. 15:33. H.—These three sorts of wicked people may designate pagans, Jews, and heretics. S. Clem. Stron. ii. S. Jerom. C.—He is on the road to heaven, who has not consented to evil suggestions, nor continued in sin, so as to die impenitent. W.

Virtus est vitium fugere, et sapientia prima. Hor. i. ep. 1.

—The suggestion, delight, and consent to sin, are here rejected, as well as every offence against God, ourselves, or our neighbours. Hopper.

Ver. 2. Will. He is wholly occupied and delighted in keeping God's commandments. W.—This distinguishes the saint from him who only refrains from sin through fear. C.—Qui timet invitatus observat. S. Amb.—Yet even servile fear is of some service, as it restrains exterior conduct, and may, in time, give place to filial reverence. H.—Meditate, and put in practice. M.—Night. The Jews studied the books of the law so earnestly from their childhood, that they could recite them as easily as they could tell their own names; (Josep. c. Ap. 2. Deut. 6:6) and is it not a shame that many Christians should be so negligent, that they have never so much as read the gospels! (C.) though they be eager enough after idle books. The sacred writings are the records of our inheritance. They shew us our true destination, and deserve to be most seriously considered from the beginning to the end. H.

Ver. 3. Tree. Probably the palm-tree, the emblem of a long life. Job 28:18. The tree of life is watered by the river of living waters, proceeding from the throne of God, who is the source of all grace.

Apoc. 22:1. Lu. 21:33. Jo. 4:14. C.—Those who make good use of favours received, are continually supplied with fresh graces. W.—And. In the office-book a new verse begins here, though not in Heb. which the Vulg. follows. They were not marked by the sacred penman.—Prosper, and be rewarded hereafter, though the just man even among the Jews might be here afflicted. Prosperity was only promised to the nation, as long as it continued faithful. Individuals were in the same condition as Christians. They were to trust in the promises of futurity, though some have very erroneously asserted, that there is no mention of eternal felicity in thee holy canticles; (Berthier) Ferrand says, hardly in the Old Testament. C.—All this verse might perhaps be better understood of the tree. “And its leaf ... and whatever it shall produce,” faciet (fructum). H.—Some trees are always covered with leaves, like the palm-tree, &c. M.

Ver. 4. Not so. Heb. “but are like the chaff which the wind driveth away.” H.—They are inconstant (S. Jer.) in the good resolutions which they sometimes form. H. Job 21:18.—The good corn remains, but they are tossed about by every wind, and their memory perishes with all their children and effects. C.—They yield to the slightest temptation. W.

Ver. 5. Again. So as to gain their cause, (Amama) or to make opposition; as the Heb. yakumu, “stand up,” with defiance, intimates. H.—They are already judged, (Jo. 3:18) and can make no defence; they being separated from the just, like goats, Kimchi (though he is defended by Amama. H.) and some other Jews, falsely assert that the souls of the wicked will be annihilated, and that only the just Israelites will rise again. Buxtorf. Syn. 1.—But this is very different from the belief of the ancient Jews, who clearly assert the truth respecting future rewards and punishments. 2 Mac. 7:9. 14. 23 and 36. Wisd. 5:1. Josephus. or 4 Mac. 10. See Job, &c.—The Fathers have adduced many such proofs from the other parts of Scripture, which they had read with as much attention as modern critics. C.—Council, (M.) or rather “counsel,” as the same word, βουλή, is used by the Sept. as v. 1. (C.) though the Heb. hadath, here be different, and mean a council, or assembly. M.—Sept. and Vulg. may be understood in the same sense. H.—Sinners shall be destitute of all hope at the resurrection, and shall be driven from the society of the blessed. W.—They will not even be able to complain, since they had been so often admonished of their impending fate, (Bert.) and would not judge themselves in time. S. Aug. 1 Cor. 11. Acts 24:15. Prot. “They shall not stand,” &c. H.

Ver. 6. Knoweth, with approbation. There is only one road which leads to heaven: but these men, having sown in the flesh, must reap corruption. Gal. 6:8. Berthier.—God will reward or punish (W.) all according to their deserts. H.—To some he will thunder out, I never knew you; while others shall hear, Come, &c. Mat. 25:34. &c. C.—In this world, things seem to be in a sort of confusion, as the wicked prosper. But, at the hour of death, each will receive a final retribution. Temporal advantages have been dealt out to the wicked for the small and transitory acts of virtue, the afflictions of this world have served to purify the elect from venial faults. H.

PSALM 2. (QUARE FREMUERUNT.)

The vain efforts of persecutors against Christ and his Church.

This psalm has no title, and therefore, S. Jerom, after the Jews, consider it as a part of the former. In Acts 13:33 some copies have, in the first, others in the second psalm; and Origen testifies that he saw a copy where this and the former psalm were joined together; and he says, the psalms were not distinguished by numbers or letters, as they have been since. We find in some Gr. and Lat. MSS. “a psalm of David.” It is certain that he composed it, speaking of the Messias, (Acts 4:25. Heb. 1:5) though some passages may be applied to himself. The Rabbins would restrain it to him entirely; and some Christians have been so much off their guard, as to allow (C.) that it refers to David in the literal sense, and to Christ only in the spiritual; (Lyrar. Grot.) which would destroy the force of the prophecy. David takes occasion, (C.) from the opposition which was made by Saul, (H.) the Philistines, &c. (2 K. 5:7. Joseph. vii. 4.) to his own exaltation, to foretell the similar rage with which many would resist the Messias. C. —The Philistines, however, had no kings to oppose David, as Kimchi confesses; and we had better refer the whole psalm to Christ. Berthier.

Ver. 1. Raged. Heb. “come together with tumult,” (Sym.) “loud cries,” like a furious army, composed of several nations. H.—Why have the Philistines, &c. assembled to obstruct my reign? or (C.) “why will the Gentiles be troubled, and the tribes meditate vain things?” S. Jer. Pilate, Herod, and the chiefs of the Jews, met to destroy the Messias; though, on other occasions, they were at variance. H.—Their attempts were fruitless. Their false witnesses could not agree. C.—The priests had, in vain, meditated on the law, since they had not discovered Him who was the end of it. S. Athan. &c.—People of Israel. Acts 4:27. M.

Ver. 2. Kings. Herod and Pilate, (W.) who acted for the Roman emperor.—Princes, of the priests, (H.) Annas and Caiaphas. But all the rage of the Gentiles and Jews against Christ was fruitless, (W.) and wicked, (H.) as the attempt of the surrounding nations to dethrone David was, in contradiction to the divine appointment. He is sometimes styled the Christ, or “anointed of the Lord.” Ps. 19:7. But the Chal. has, “to revolt from the Lord, and fight with his Messiah.” So that the ancient Jews agreed with us, (C.) and it would be “rash to abandon the interpretation given by S. Peter.” S. Jerom.

Ver. 3. Us. Let us no longer be subject to the old law, which is abrogated, (S. Aug.) or the enemies of David, and of Christ, encourage one another (C.) to subvert their authority, before it be too well established. Prot. still seem to be actuated with the same phrensy; fearing nothing more than the restoration of the Catholic religion; and incessantly pouring in petitions to Parliament to withhold the common rights of subjects from people of that persuasion. H.—“I fear there are more political than religious objectors to emancipation.” Nightingale.

Ver. 4. Them, who continue rebellious. Prov. 1. He speaks thus to shew that we deserve derision. H.—Quod nos derisu digna faciamus. S. Jer.—Yet he will convert many, (W.) even of those who, like S. Paul, were bent on persecuting the faithful. If they still resist, (H.) he will shew the futility of their plans, and triumph over all, as David did over his opponents, and Christ over those who wished to have obstructed his resurrection, and the propagation of his gospel. Thus Jesus has proved his divinity, and confirmed our hopes that he will still protect his Church; as he did when it seemed to be in the greatest danger. C.—God can fear no opposition to his decrees. M.—He is in Heaven, to whom we ought to address our prayers. The Lord seems to be here applicable to Christ. Chal. “the word of God.” He has the title of the Creator, Adonai, as the Jews have marked it with a Kamets 134 times, when it is to be taken in that sense. Berthier.

Ver. 5. Rage. These, and similar expressions, when applied to the immutable Deity, only denote that men have deserved the worst of punishments. H.—God had discomfited the enemies of David (2 K. 5:20. 24.) by his thunder. But he still more confounded the devil, when Christ descended to take away his spoils; and he chastised the Jews by the ruin of their city, (C.) as he has or will do all persecutors of his Church. H.—He will severely reprehend, and justly punish the obstinate. W.

Ver. 6. I am. Heb. “I have anointed ... over Sion, my,” &c. S. Jerom and others have read in the first person, what the Sept. translate in the third. The sense is much the same. C.—But the Vulg. seems to be better connected, and the same letters may have this sense, if we neglect the points, which were unknown to the Sept. and of modern invention. These interpreters may also have read a v for i, as these letters are very similar. Berthier.—“But I am anointed king by him over Sion, his holy mountain.” Houbig.—Theodoret, observing that Christ is king not only over Sion, but also over all, alters the punctuation: On Sion ... preaching, &c. which is very plausible, since Isaias (9:3) says, the law shall come forth from Sion, (Berthier) and C. 37:32. and salvation from Mount Sion. Hence Christ preached frequently in the temple. It is certain David was not anointed here, but at Hebron; and the temple was not built till the reign of Solomon. See Psalm 109:2.

Ver. 7. Thee. Chal. weakens this text. H.—“I love thee as my son, and look upon thee with the same affection, as if I had this day created thee;” which might be applied to David, now settled more firmly on the throne by his late victory. But it literally refers to Christ, either born in time, (v. 1. S. Aug. C.) or baptized; (S. Just.) or rather rising again, (Acts 13:33) and born from all eternity. Heb. 1:5. This shews him superior to the angels. The prophet had both these events in view. Eternity is always the same. Berthier. Bossuet. D.—He to whom God may speak thus to-day, at all times, must be God also. Robertson, Lexic. Jo. 5:25.—To this Socinians can make no reply, without giving up the Epistle to the Heb. or allowing that the apostle’s arguments were inconclusive. Bert.—The same text may thus have many literal senses. D.—The eternal birth seems here to be the chief, as from that source the nativity, baptism, priesthood, (Heb. 5:5.) and miraculous resurrection of Christ, necessarily spring. H.

Ver. 8. Ask. The Messiah must be invested with human nature, and merit all graces for man. When did David ask for such an extensive dominion? Berthier.—But Christ’s kingdom extends over the world. His Church cannot fail, as S. Aug. proved hence against the Donatists, and his arguments confute Protestants as well. W.—Our doctors used to refer this psalm to the Messiah, said R. Solomon; but it is better to apply it to David, on account of “Christians.” D.

Ver. 9. Rule, as a shepherd, (ποιμανεις) as it is cited Apoc. 2:26. But he is speaking of vengeance taken on the rebellious; and we might translate, “Thou shalt break,” &c. C.—Yet this is not necessary, as a shepherd sometimes beats with severity, to prevent his sheep from straying. H.—The Church guides also use coercion, but for the good of the flock. C.—God brought the murderers of his Son to an evil end, and destroyed their city. H.—He broke the Gentiles, to make them a more noble vessel. Jer. 18:4. S. Hilary.—He will execute judgment at the last day. Apoc. 19:11. C.—When the clay is still soft the vessel may easily be repaired; so the sinner may be reclaimed, when he has only just fallen. S. Jer.—Even the most obdurate, are as clay in God's hands. W.

Ver. 10. And. Here the prophet may address kings, unless the Father or the Messias continue to speak. It is evident these words are not to be understood of David's dominions alone. Fear and joy keep the Christian in proper order. Phil. 2:12 and 3:1. Bert.—“The love of God pushes us forward, and the fear of God makes us take care where we walk.” S. Theresa.—The one guards us against despair, the other against presumption. Kings are here instructed to support the Church, for which some have been styled, “Most Christian,” “Catholic,” or “Defenders of the Faith.” The Donatists falsely asserted, that they were ever found enemies to religion, because of Constantine, &c. attempted to repress their errors. But Julian favoured them, to increase dissensions. See S. Aug. c. Pet. et. c. Gaud. ii. 26. W.

Ver. 11. Trembling, with reverential awe and humility, (1 Cor. 2:3. Amama) as none is sure of salvation. Bell.—More are list by presumption than by trembling. Amama.

Ver. 12. Discipline. Chal. “doctrine.” S. Jer. “adore purely.” Prot. “kiss the Son, lest he be angry,” &c. H.—Houbig. “adore the son, lest he be angry, and you perish. For he comes forward, and shortly his wrath will be enkindled.” This version seems to be judicious: that of the Vulg. is less energetic, but come to the same end, as those who adore the Messias, must follow his doctrine. Berthier.—Lord and just is not in Heb. H.—The way or projects of sinners will perish; (Ps. 1:6) they will be hurried before the tribunal, as soon as they are dead; (S. Hil.) and when they least expect it. 1 Thes. 5:2. C.—Some fall from salvation, and God will bring them to judgment at the end of this short life. W.—Heb. “Kiss purely.” Kissing is often used in Scripture to express submission, love, and adoration. S. Jer. c. Ruf. i. Gen. 41:40. C.—We testify our respect for God, by kissing the Bible, &c. H.—But it cannot be shewn that bar means “a son,” in Heb. C.—Amama blames the Vulg. for withdrawing a text in favour of Christ's divinity. We must, however, submit to the law and faith of Christ with confidence and live, if we desire to escape his indignation and enter heaven. Acts 4:12. Mr. Nightingale (Portrait of Cath. 1812. p. 117 and 332) may represent this doctrine as uncharitable and groundless, though he allows it has been maintained by most (p. 473) who have professed to be the true disciples of Christ, whether Catholics or Protestants. The principle is good, though some apply it wrong. If he and Lord Milton, (speech. 1812. to whom we must express our manifest obligations) had contented themselves with saying that they believed our doctrine was “unscriptural,” &c. (p. 18) we should not have much wondered; as they could not consistently have said less, and remained out of the Catholic Church. But for any man who has read the Bible, to persuade himself that it is not necessary to profess the one only true religion, wherever it may be, after Christ has plainly declared, He that believeth not is already judged, and shall be condemned; (Jo. 3:18. Mark 16:16) and after the apostle has delivered over to satan those who only asserted that the resurrection was past, (2 Tim. 2:17) this fills us with astonishment. Not a single text can be produced in favour of the contrary system leading to indifference about religion; which, if true, would shew the preaching of the prophets and apostles was nugatory, and their blood shed in vain. All the “Scriptures” proclaim the necessity of faith and good works. We may observe, that the doctrine of the blessed Trinity seems to be no less objectionable to Mr. N. than the rest of our faith, p. 117, &c. Yet (H.) we must not refuse him the praise of liberality. Catholic Review, &c. Jan. 1813. H.

Ver. 13. Trust for salvation through Christ, (D.) acting as he has directed, so that our hope may be well founded. M.—This psalm is quoted six times in the New Testament, which shews the concord of Scripture, and that the prophets saw the promises at a distance, following the law of love, which is as ancient as the world. Berthier.

PSALM 3. (DOMINE QUID MULTIPLICATI.)

The prophet's danger and delivery from his son, Absalom: mystically the passion and resurrection of Christ.

Heb. and Sept. have lit. “a psalm of David,” (τω Δαυιδ) which may mean that it was addressed to him by God, or that he would set it to music himself, (H.) or that it was composed by him, or on his occasion. The part. l. has various meanings, and it does not incontestably prove that the person before whose name it is placed, must be regarded as the author. C.—Yet there is no reason for doubting that this psalm was composed by David. H.—The Jews say he wrote it on the ascent of Mount Olivet. 2 K. 15:17. But he rather waited till he had re-entered his capital, and herein expressed his gratitude, specifying at the same time the sentiments with which he had been impressed in the hour of danger. Ven. Bede explains this and many other psalms of Ezechias, as he perhaps did not read or attend to the title. C.—This deserves more attention, as it is the same in all Bibles, though all interpreters do not consider them as canonical, no more than that which is prefixed to the Lamentations. Berthier.—They are authentic, being inspired to Esdras or the Sept. W.—But this is doubtful. H.

Ver. 2. Why. Let me know the enormity of my sins. All Israel follows Absalom. 2 K. 15:13. So all rose up against Christ. W.—The Church was assailed on all sides, (C.) and every soul must live in expectation of battle from innumerable enemies. Heb. also, (H.) “How are they multiplied.” Houbig.—David is surprised at the sudden change, and adores the depth of God’s judgments, which had been denounced unto him. 1 K. 12:10. C.

Ver. 3. God. His case is desperate. W.—He must therefore be a criminal. This is the usual judgment of the world, though very false, as we have seen in the person of Job; for temporal punishments are frequently an effect of the divine clemency. Semei upbraided David on this occasion, as the Jews did Christ. 2 K. 16:7. Mat. 27:42. At the end of this verse, Heb. adds, Selah, (C.) sle and Sept. διαψαλμα, (H.) a word which is not much better understood. Houbigant therefore informs us that he has omitted it entirely, as the Vulg. seems to have done, except Ps. 61:8 where it is rendered, in æternum, “for ever,” (Bert.) as S. Jerom expresses it semper, in his Heb. version. It would perhaps be as well to leave the original term. H.—It occurs seventy-one times in the psalms, and thrice in Habacuc. Some think it is a sign to raise the voice, or to pause, &c. (Bert.) at the end of the lesson, before the psalter was divided. None, except Eusebius, asserts that it was inserted by the original authors, and it seems now to be useless. C. Dis.

Ver. 4. Protector. Heb. “shield.”—Glory. God is the hope of his servants, (1 Cor. 15:31) and grants their requests. C.—He has not abandoned me, when I had fallen into sin. H.—He gives me the victory, and confirms my throne. W.

Ver. 5. Hill. Sion, where the ark had been placed, (C.) or from heaven. M.—Heb. adds, “Selah.” Prot. H.

Ver. 6. Rest, in sin; (S. Athan.) or, I have not lost my confidence in God, though dangers threaten on every side. C.—Jesus remained undaunted, when his enemies surrounded him; he continued (Theod. &c.) free among the dead, and rose again by his own power. H.—If he prayed that the chalice might be removed, it was to teach us how to behave. C.—He was buried, and rose again, and his disciples believed the Scriptures (Jo. 2:22) recorded here, and in other places. W.—The same word refers to past and future things. S. Greg. Mor. xx. 1. W.

Ver. 7. Thousands. Sept. “myriads.” H.—If my enemies were still more numerous, I should not fear. C.—I beseech thee to help me. W.

Ver. 8. Without cause. Heb. “on the jaw.” H.—Without redress. C.—Sept. seems to have read léinom, as “some Jews say that the ancient copies were different.” Origen, A.D. 231. Kennicott.—Teeth. Strength and fury.

Ver. 9. Blessing. Abundance of grace is promised to God’s servants, who must look up to him for salvation. David gives thanks for the victory, though he grieved at his son’s death. W.—He shewed proofs of the greatest clemency on this occasion. It is evident, from this psalm being inserted before many which regard Saul, that no chronological order is observed. C.—Selah occurs a third time here, as some may have ended the lecture at one, while others ordered it to be continued to another, or even to the 3d and 5th verse of the next psalm, if that be its real import. H.

PSALM 4

PSALM 4. (CUM INVOCAREM.)

The prophet teacheth us to flee to God in tribulation, with confidence in him.

Ver. 1. Unto the end. Or as S. Jerom renders it, victory to him that overcometh; which some understand of the chief musician; to whom they suppose the psalms, which bear that title, were given to be sung. We rather understand the psalms thus inscribed to refer to Christ, who is the end of the law, and the great Conqueror of death and hell; and to the New Testament.—In verses, in carminibus. In the Heb. it is neginoth, supposed by some to be a musical instrument, with which this psalm was to be sung.—For David, or to David, τῷ Δαυὶδ, that is, inspired to David himself, or to be sung by him. Ch.—Lamnetseach, from nitseach, “to push to an end,” may signify (H.) to the end; and this sense is more noble than (Berthier) “To the precentor, or president.” C.—Binginoth. H.—“Over the female musicians.” C.—“To the chief of the singers on stringed instruments.” Duguet.—The psalms which have this title, related to future times, and to the Church of Christ; (S. Aug.

W.) or were to be sung at the close of the Jewish festivals, &c. Bert.—This is considered as a sequel to the preceding, to thank God for the late victory over Absalom. C.

Ver. 2. The God. Heb. “When I call, hear me, O God of my justice:” source and witness of my virtue. If I have offended thee, I have done no wrong to my rebellious son and his adherents. Many copies read Cum invocarem te, exaudisti me. C.—Thou. The change of persons intimates that when God is present (S. Aug.) the soul is animated with confidence to speak to him. H.—Prayer. Though his request had been granted, he still continues to address God, as we ought to pray without ceasing. 1 Thes. 5:17.

Ver. 3. O. This is a sort of manifesto to the rebels; and an invitation for them to return to their duty, desisting from setting up a false king, or a lie. H.—Dull. Heb. “my glory to shame.” But the reading of the Sept. seems to be preferable, (C.) as the rhyme in Heb. is now lost, (Fourmont) and the text has been altered (Houbig.) by an injudicious junction of words, and by using c for b. In ancient MSS. the words were all joined together, (Bert.) as may be seen in the specimen of the Alex. Sept. given by Grabe. Prot. “How long will ye turn my glory into shame?” &c. H.

Ver. 4. Wonderful, (mirificavit) according to the Heb. means also has chosen in a striking manner his appointed ruler, or holy person. Bert.—Holy, often means one set aside, (Lu. 2) or commissioned, though the person be a pagan. Isai. 13:3. Chasid, (H.) particularly signifies a “clement” character, such as a king ought to be. C.—“The Lord has set aside for himself the pious.” Pagn.—I am ready to pardon you, but know that if you continue rebellious, you go against the ordinance of heaven. H.

Ver. 5. Angry. My soldiers, do not resent this offence too much, kill not the boy; (2 K. 18:5) or (H.) you, my deluded subjects, enter into yourselves. S. Paul (Eph. 4:26) cites this as a moral sentence. C.—It is more difficult to moderate anger than to deny access to it entirely. S. Fran. de Sales. H.—Beds. Repent for the most secret evil thoughts, before you fall asleep. W.

Ver. 6. Justice. External devotion will not suffice. S. Chrys.—No sacrifice will please God as long as people take part with rebels. C.—Besides external sacrifices, which have always been required, and those of praise and contrition, (Ps. 49 and 50) we must offer to God the sacrifice of justice, by complying with our duties to him, ourselves, and neighbours, and by hating sin, and also the world, the flesh, and the devil, which prompt us to offend, and thus to give the preference to vanity. For this purpose, we must not trust in ourselves, but in God; and that no one may plead ignorance, the light of reason and grace is given us, plainly indicating that we have a God to serve, and must expect reward or punishment. Heb. 11:6. W.

Ver. 7. The. Houbigant transposes this to v. 9, which is not necessary. David answers those diffident people, (Bert.) who thought they had received no marks of God's favour, and were in great want of provisions, till some were brought by Berzellai. H.

Ver. 8. By. Heb. and S. Aug. "From the time of their corn and wine" (C.) gathering. I rejoiced "more" than those who live in the greatest affluence, which is nothing but vanity. No mention is made of oil, but the original term, "liquor," includes it. Bert.—S. Jerom found it not in the Hexapla. But it now occurs in the Arab. Syr. &c. C.—David envies not the present prosperity of the rebels. H.—He comforts his followers with the assurance of God's favour, which he had again testified by sending provisions. Bullenger.—He may also here express the disappointment of the rebels, who promised themselves great riches, of which Providence would soon deprive them, by restoring the king, whom he had chosen, and hitherto so wonderfully protected. H.—God gave temporal advantages to the just in the old law, as the figure of heavenly rewards. W.

Ver. 9. Same, (in idipsum) which signifies with one accord. Acts 1:14. Heb. "altogether," when we shall be united as one people, which I expect will shortly be the case. Confiding in God, I will repose as in the arms of peace. Absalom was already cut off. But all his adherents were not reclaimed. Yet their number was so small, as to cause no apprehensions. H.—Under thy protection, I am secure, (C.) no longer kept between fear and hope. S. Bern.—When I lie down, I can enjoy rest, (Bert.) being free from turbulent passions. H.

Ver. 10. Singularly. Art "alone" (Pagn.) the source of all my happiness; (H.) or thou hast taken such care of me, as if thou hadst no other. M.—I am at a distance from the contagion of evil company, (S. Chrys.) which I hate. Bert.—"For thou only art Lord, thou hast made me dwell secure." S. Jer.

PSALM 5

PSALM 5. (VERBA MEA AURIBUS.)

A prayer to God against the iniquities of men.

Ver. 1. For her that obtaineth the inheritance. That is, for the Church of Christ, (Ch.) and every faithful soul, which gains the victory and heaven. W.—Nechiloth, may also, (H.) signify musical instruments with holes, or “women dancing,” on religious and joyful occasions, as they did when the ark was removed, &c. 2 K. 6:12. C. Ps. 67:26.—We may (H.) as well follow the Vulg. and S. Jerom. Some have supposed that David alludes to Saul, Absalom, &c. But in most of the psalms, the wicked in general are reprobated, and the sentiments of the faithful expressed. This psalm contains an excellent form of morning prayer, as an armour against all our spiritual enemies. Berthier.

Ver. 2. Cry. Heb. “meditation.” M.—The cry of the heart, (S. Chrys.) and “the groans,” which the spirit forms within us. Rom. 8:26. God cannot reject such prayers. If he seems inattentive, it is because we ask amiss. Jam. 4:3. C.—He attends to the prayers of the Church, and of every faithful soul, (W.) and even exhorts sinners to come to him, that they may emerge from the abyss. H.

Ver. 4. Morning. This hour of prayer is also specified, (Ps. 62:1 and 118:147) as that of the evening is. Ps. 4:9, and 54:19. We read also of noon being a time for prayer among the Jews. Acts 10:9. Daniel (6:10) diligently observed these holy customs. C.

Ver. 5. Stand. Heb. implies “in order,” as those who neglect prayer must be all in confusion. God enables those who are diligent, to see wonderful things. Bert.—Iniquity. No: he has it in abhorrence; (C.) consequently he cannot be the author of it, but hates those who commit evil, though he loves them as his creatures, and wishes their conversion. W.—On this subject I will meditate. M.

Ver. 6. Eyes. God suffers them to remain for a time. S. Jer.

Ver. 7. Workers, (operantur) “who work,” (H.) and die impenitent.—Lie. All heretics, who kill their own and neighbours’ souls, (S. Jer.) and in general all seducers, (C.) who will be treated like those who have committed murder. Euseb. Cæsar.

Ver. 8. Mercy, not trusting in my own merit, (H.) but with the greatest awe. C.—The just trust in mercy, not in man's power.—Temple, the Church, and in God's presence. W.—Some would infer hence that David was not the author of this psalm. But the tabernacle is called by the same name; (1 K. 1:7, 24, and 3:3) so that this reason is not sufficient. C.

Ver. 9. Enemies. Heb. “observers.” They are always on the watch to discover any fault. Grant me thy preventing grace. Bert.—Let me not stumble, (H.) but cause me to walk cheerfully in thy paths. C.—If thou approve, it matters not how much worldlings blame me. S. Aug.

Ver. 10. Their. Heb. “his.” But it is incorrect. Houb.—S. Jer. has “their.”

Ver. 11. Sepulchre, which never says there is enough. Prov. 30:15. C.—Dealt, &c. S. Paul authorizes this version, (Rom. 3:13) though the Heb. be rendered, “they flatter cunning;” (Bert.) or “they sharpen their tongue,” and polish it like a sword, that it may cut more easily. This may be applied to heretics. SS. Athan. Chrys. Jer. C.—Judge, or “condemn them.” Heb. may be explained as a prediction. Bert.—The Holy Ghost could not dictate an imprecation or desire revenge. But David might beg that God would frustrate the designs of his enemies; and, by treating them with some severity, hinder the execution of their wicked schemes, which would bring on their own ruin. S. Chrys. S. Aug. C.—Though the just desire the conversion of all, yet if any die impenitent, they approve of God's judgment, manifested at the end of the world. W.—Provoked. Heb. “rebelled against.” I forgive them for what they have done to me. But I grieve at thy offence; make them return to a sense of their duty. C.—He might abhor the enemies of salvation, the world, &c. whom Christ has condemned. Bert.

Ver. 12. Dwell. Heb. “protect,” (S. Jer.) “or shade them.” C.—The just will rejoice under thy protection, (H.) and at the conversion of the sinner. S. Chrys.

Ver. 13. Us. Heb. “him.” S. Jer. Aquila. C.—But neglecting the points, the Sept. is as accurate, and more beautiful. Bert.—Shield. Heb. tsinna, (H.) which was probably large enough to cover the body. C.—If God be with us, who is against us? H.—The just shall receive the sentence of eternal glory. W.

PSALM 6

A prayer of a penitent sinner, under the scourge of God. The first penitential Psalm.

Ver. 1. For the octave. That is, to be sung on an instrument of eight strings. S. Augustin understands it mystically, of the last resurrection, and the world to come; which is, as it were, the octave, or eighth day, after the seven days of this mortal life; and for this octave, sinners must dispose themselves, like David, by bewailing their sins, whilst they are here upon the earth. Ch. W.—It may also signify, that this psalm was to be sung by “the eighth” of the 24 bands. 1 Par. 15:21. David might compose it after sickness, with which he had been punished for his adultery; (C.) or under any distress: he expresses the sentiments of a true penitent, (Bert.) with which he was ever after impressed. H.—It is applicable to penitents of the new law. W.

Ver. 2. Indignation. Lit. “fury.” H.—Such strong expressions were requisite to make the carnal Jews fear God’s judgments, though a being of infinite perfection can have no passion. S. Chrys.—David does not beg to be free from suffering, (H.) but he requests that God would chastise him with moderation. Jer. 10:24 and 46:28. C.—Justice without mercy is reserved for the last day. S. Greg.—Wrath. This regards those who have built wood, &c. on the foundation. They shall be purified by fire. S. Aug. Purgatory was then believed in the 4th Cent. Bert.—Let me not be condemned either to it, or hell. S. Greg. hic. and Ps. 37.

Ver. 3. Troubled, with grief. W.—I am sinking under my illness: my virtue is lost. C.—The whole human race is this sick man, requiring the aid of Jesus Christ. S. Aug.—The ineffable name Jehova, (H.) is repeated thrice, to insinuate that salvation must come from the Blessed Trinity. Bert. v. 9.—Under the allegory of sickness, the ravages of sin appear. M.

Ver. 4. Long? Wilt thou leave me in distress? W.—He breaks off abruptly to express his sorrow. See Isai. 6:11; Jer. 13:26. Bert.—True converts are often tried a long time, that they may conceive how God will treat those who never return him, (S. Aug. Euseb.) and that they may beware of a relapse. C.

Ver. 5. Turn. God never abandons us first. Jer. 2:27. Bert.—We drive him away by sin. S. Athan.—Sake. I cannot take one step without thee. C.—Treat me not as my sins deserve; but mercifully restore me to favour. W.

Ver. 6. Hell. The hardened sinner will not praise thee, (S. Aug.) much less will the damned, who are confirmed in evil. Bert.—Even those who are in “the grave,” though just, cannot sound forth thy praises; and consequently, if I be cut off, the number of thy adorers will be diminished. This motive is often urged, as if God was forgotten in the rest of the world. Ps. 29:10. Isai. 38:18. C.—This life is the time for repentance. After death there is no conversion, but eternal blasphemies in hell. I will strive to prevent this misery, by continuing to do penance, till I am watered with thy grace. W.

Ver. 7. Bed. S. Jerom, “I will make my bed swim” (H.) with tears, or sweat. Bert.—Here we behold the effects of true repentance, which will not suffer the sinner to enjoy any repose, (C.) when he reflects on the pains of hell, and the perfections of God. H.—“O sweet affliction, which extinguishes the fire of hell, and restores man to the friendship of his God.” S. Chrys.

Ver. 8. Indignation of God (Theod.) or of my enemies. I am also indignant when I behold my foes exulting in my ruin. C.—I have. Heb. “It,” the eye. Bert.—The eye is naturally injured by excessive grief. Yet David could not think of his sins, without floods of tears. H.

Ver. 9. Iniquity, who have fostered my passions, (Bert.) or sought my ruin. I now perceive who were my true friends. C.—Lord. He is twice mentioned in the next verse, in honour of the blessed Trinity, as a German commentator remarks, after the ancient interpreters (Bert.) and Fathers. They have constantly had an eye to these grand truths, which are nevertheless proved by clearer passages of Scripture. H.—David confides in God, as every true penitent may do, for protection. W.—He had also been assured of pardon by Nathan, the prophet. H.

Ver. 11. Troubled. This is a prophecy, (S. Aug.) or a prayer for their speedy and earnest conversion, (S. Jer. C.) or a threat if they persist. W.—Speedily. At the last day, the wicked will perceive how short life has been. Tunc sentient peccatores quam non sit longa omnis vita quæ transit. S. Aug.

PSALM 7

PSALM 7. (DOMINE DEUS MEUS.)

David, trusting in the justice of his cause, prayeth for God's help against his enemies.

Shiggaion (H.) is a word which has greatly puzzled interpreters. See Robertson in shage. Prot. have, “Shiggaion of David.” The Rabbins confess that they know not its meaning, and it is of no service for the explanation of the psalm. Bert.—S. Jerom follows the Sept. (H.) which may suit very well. Others have, “ignorance.” M.—“Perplexity.” C.—“Secret.” Vatab.—“Song of wanderings.” Parkhurst, &c.—Chusi is scarcely less difficult to understand. The person who has inserted this historical title, and many others, without much judgment, had probably in view the wars of Absalom, and the curses of Semei. But the psalm seems rather to refer to the persecutions of Saul, (C. 1 K. 22:8. M.) who was of the tribe of Benjamin. H.—SS. Aug. Bas. and Chrys. explain it of Chusi, (W.) the Arachite, from a town of Benjamin, (C.) who defeated the counsel of Achitophel, (W.) as it is supposed that David was given to understand that his friend had betrayed him, and in consequence speaks of him in such harsh terms. But if that had been the case, he would have suppressed what was founded on error; (C.) and the supposition is contrary to the idea which we have of inspiration. Yet there is nothing in the psalm which requires the harsh expressions to be applied to Chusi. They may as well refer to Achitophel, who spoke in answer to him.

Ver. 2. My God. This title is prompted by love and confidence. H.—All. David had only few followers, while he was pursued by Saul (C.) and Absalom. H.

Ver. 3. Lion. In a spiritual sense this is the devil. 1 Pet. 5:8. S. Aug.—“Let him only see the sign of the cross, or the lamp continually burning before the altar, he will flee away. Should we wonder at this? the garments alone of Paul drove him from possessed person.” S. Chrys.—Will modern sectaries still ridicule these things?—While. Heb. “tearing, and not snatching away.” But there is a similar construction, (Lam. 5:8) which shews that we ought to follow the Vulg. Bert.—Absalom, or any other enemy, may be this lion. W.—They threatened David with utter ruin, which he could never have escaped, without God’s visible protection.

Ver. 4. Thing, alluding to some calumny, (H.) with which he was assailed (W.) by Saul, Absalom, and Semei. Bert.—He disclaims all such ambitious or unjust sentiments, though he allows that he is not innocent before God. C.

Ver. 5. That repaid. This seems better than “my peaceable one,” as some translate the Heb. for it would be but a small commendation not to injure a friend: the pagans do as much. Duport therefore agrees with the Vulg., and S. Jerom has, “If I have rendered evil to those who did me any, and sent my enemies empty away;" or, as the Heb. is in the future, "I will let my enemies depart without fighting;" which is equivalent to, I will gain no advantage over them. Bert.—The man who takes revenge, injures himself, and becomes the devil's slave. S. Aug.—David had been so far from giving way to ingratitude, that he would not even hurt his enemy. H.—He let Saul escape, when he might easily have slain him. C.

Ver. 6. Dust. Heb. adds, "to dwell," (H.) as if the ignominy was not to be effaced. This would be very sensible for a king. Bert.—Glory is here synonymous with life, or soul. Gen. 49:6. Let my life and (C.) reputation be lost. W.—Summum crede nefas animam præferre pudori. Juv. viii.

Ver. 7. Borders. Heb. is rendered, "fury of my enemies."—My is found in some copies of the Sept. though the edit. of Comp. and Aldus agree with the Vulg., and Bos observes, that an ancient interpreter rendered the first word as we do. Berg.—Habar means, "to pass;" and, of course, behabroth (H.) may denote, in the borders; (Berg.) though S. Jer. &c. have, "rise up indignant over mine enemies." Avenge thy own cause, as they would overturn thy decree, which has called me to the throne. H.—Commanded. Shew thy power, and protect me, since thou hast ordered me to reign. W.—Convince my enemies of the injustice of their proceedings, (H.) and cause them to repent. Thy order is what displeased Saul. Protect me as thou hast promised. Chal. "Execute the judgment in my favour, which thou hast decreed." Then all will obey. C.—O Lord, my God. Heb. has not Lord, and some translate elai, "to me." But it also means, "my God." Bert.

Ver. 8. High, on thy tribunal, to decide this dispute. The Fathers apply this to the ascension of Jesus Christ, who will judge the world. S. Aug. Theod. C. 2 Cor. 10:11.—The interference of Providence (H.) will induce many to come to thy tabernacle, (M.) to embrace the true religion, (W.) and sectaries will decrease. These will be refuted most effectually, when they see the law well observed. Berthier.

Ver. 9. Innocence. Heb. "simplicity," which has the same meaning. H. He speaks of the justice of his cause (Muis) against his particular enemies. W.—S. Paul thus commends himself. 2 Tim. 4:7. The justice of the saints is not merely imputed, as the first Protestants foolishly imagined: for how should God reward those whom he saw still in sin, and who were only reputed holy? a notion which their disciples have modified or abandoned, as they have also done what had been taught respecting grace. Justice is an effect of God's grace, and of man's co-operation. 1 Cor. 15:10. Bert.—David begs that the disposer of kingdoms would convince Saul that he was not a rebel: and the world, that he had not lost God's favour, like his rival. H.

Ver. 10. Reins; affections, (Jer. 12:2. C.) and inmost recesses, which are open to God. M.

Ver. 11. Just. This epithet refers to God, in Heb. Sept. might easily explain it of help, before the words and verse were divided: (H.) yet it is still taken in the former sense, in some Gr. and Lat. copies. The wicked shall be frustrated in their designs, though they may succeed for a time, (C.) consumetur, (Sym. H.) or rather let their ruin be determined on. 1 K. 25:17. C.

Ver. 12. Strong. Heb. el, means also "God threatening every day;" (H.) which must be a proof of his patience, as the Sept. have intimated, since he could destroy at once. Thus numquid, must be rendered "is he not?" Isai. 27:7. Bert.—God cannot but be displeased at every sin. He threatens the offender daily by secret remorse, or by his preachers and good books. H.—But he often defers punishment (W.) till death, when the measure of crimes is full. S. Aug.—This silence or delay is one of the most terrible of his judgments, (H.) and a mark of his great indignation. If he were, however, to strike every one as soon as he had committed sin, where should we be? "He would soon be alone," as a pagan observed of "Jupiter, if he were presently to hurl his thunderbolts against every offender." C. See Val. Max. i. 2. Eccli. 5:4.

Ver. 13. Except you. Heb. "if he be not." Houb. would read, "God will not be turned aside." Bert.—"For him who does not change, he will sharpen his sword." S. Jer. H.—God threatens before he strikes, (C.) expecting amendment. W.

Ver. 14. For them that burn. That is, against the persecutors of his saints. G.—Heb. also, "he has made his arrows to turn." Houbigant after Sym. H.—The ancients used fiery darts or arrows. Ps. 109. Eph. 6:16.

Sed magnum stridens contorta phalarica venit, Fulminis acta modo. Æn. ix. Herod. viii.

—The death of Saul seems to be foretold. C.

Ver. 15. Iniquity. Heb. "a lie." All the labour of the wicked ends in smoke. See Mic. 2:1. Is. 59:4. H.—The psalmist sometimes speaks of many enemies, and sometimes of one, who was the chief. Yet what he says of him must, according to the genius of the Heb. language, be applied to the rest. Bert.—Saul, (C.) Absalom, and Achitophel, each found their ruin, in their unjust attempts. H.—They had injustice in view, and were actuated by envy, which destroyed them. W.

Ver. 17. Sorrow. The evil which he designed for me (M.) will fall on him, like an arrow shot upwards. C.—Crown. Prot. “pate.” H.

Ver. 18. Justice. “Truly thou art just, O Lord,” cries out S. Aug. “since thou protectest the just, so as to enlighten them by thyself; and so disposest of sinners, that they are punished, not by thine, but by their own malice.”

PSALM 8

PSALM 8. (DOMINE DOMINUS NOSTER.)

God is wonderful in his works; especially in mankind, singularly exalted by the incarnation of Christ.

Ver. 1. The presses. In Heb. Gittith, supposed to be a musical instrument: (Ch). or, “the musicians from Geth,” who were famous, and might follow David. 2 K. 1:20 and 15:18. The Sept. must have read a v for i. (C.) Gothuth. Yet S. Jer. and Pagnin agree with them; (H.) and that sense seems as plausible as any other. The psalm relates to Christ alone; (Matt. 21:16. 1 Cor. 15:26 and Heb. 2:6) who is represented treading the wine-press. Is. 63:3. Apoc. 19:13. Bert.—The Jews confess that it speaks of the Messias. Ferrand.—We may explain it also fo the natural prerogatives of man, (C.) though (H.) this weakens the force of the prophecy. Bert.—S. Aug. applies the expressions to the good and bad in the Church. W.—It might be sung during the feast of tabernacles, after the vintage. M.

Ver. 2. O Lord, (Jehova) our Lord, (Adonenu) S. Jer. Dominator noster, “our Ruler.” H.—God is Lord of all by creation, and still more of those who believe. W.—Adonai is pronounced by the Jews, and sometimes applied to men. But they have lost the pronunciation of the first term, which some read Jehovah, (C.) or Jaho, (S. Jer.) Jave, &c. H.—Admirable. It expresses all that He is. (Ex. 3:14. Bert.) Essence itself. H.—Earth. This was verified after the incarnation; (S. Chrys.) for before, the Gentiles knew it not, and the Jews caused it to be blasphemed. Bert.—Now all confess the glory of Jesus Christ, the master-piece of God. C.—Heavens; which are nothing in comparison, (M.) for he hath created them. W. Hab. 3:3.

Ver. 3. Praise. But why does the prophet take notice of this proof of Christ’s being the Messias, while he passes over his curing the sick?

&c. S. Chrysostom answers, because the other miracles had been performed in the old law, but God had never before opened the mouths of infants to proclaim “praise the Lord,” as they did when they bore witness to Christ entering the temple. Other commentators greatly weaken this proof. Bert.—We read that after the passage of the Red Sea, wisdom opened the mouth of the dumb, and made the tongues of infants eloquent; (Wisd. 10:21) which may be a figurative expression. The prophets and apostles, whom the world looked upon as fools, were chosen to declare the highest mysteries. All nature so clearly proves the existence of Providence, that, if other things were silent, infants would open their mouths to confound the incredulous. The condition of man from his infancy is, in effect, one of the plainest proofs of the divine wisdom. His imitative powers, the ease with which he takes his mother’s milk, &c. are something surprising. Hippocrates even, concludes hence, that the child must have sucked, even in the womb, as the art is soon lost, and not easily recovered. God seems to be particularly pleased with the praises of children. Mic. 2:9. Joel 2:16. S. Aug. admires how the Scriptures have been proportioned to the capacity of infants. Heb. “Thou hast founded strength.” Aquila. C.—But S. Jerom retains praise, as our Saviour himself quotes it. Matt. 21:16. H.—Avenger. The old Vulg. read defensorem (H.) in the same sense. S. Chrys. explains it of the Jews; and other Fathers understand heretics and the devil. S. Aug. &c. C.—Arnobius (con. Gent. i.) seems to think that all have an innate idea of Providence, ingenitum. The poor and simple confessed Christ, whom the proud doctors of the law, and Pharisees, rejected, despising his followers as children or fools. H.

Ver. 4. Fingers, as if they had been formed in play, while the Incarnation is the work of God’s right hand. Euseb. C.—Heavens, moon, and stars, denote the Church. No mention is made of the sun, because it is the emblem of Christ, who was the Creator. Bert. Apoc. 12:1.—This text proves that the world was not formed by angels, as some ancient heretics asserted. David, perhaps, wrote this at night; and the sun and stars are not seen together. M.

Ver. 5. Him. The prophet considers the nature of man at such a distance from the divinity. Being, nevertheless, united with it in Jesus Christ, it is raised far above the angels. Heb. 2:6. Bert.—When we reflect on the meanness of our nature, on the one hand, and on what God has done for it on the other, we are lost in astonishment. The pagans were aware of the corporal infirmities of man, (Seneca Consol. xi.) but not of his spiritual disorders. Heb. has here, the son of Adam, or one of the lowest class; and not of ish, which means a person of nobility, vir. Ps. 4:4. C.—Yet Christ applies to himself the former appellation, to shew us a pattern of humility. H.—S. Aug. inquires, what difference there is between man or the son. The Heb. v means, likewise, and; yet or would have been better. Ex. 21:16.—“Whether he have sold him, or he be in his hand.” Amama.

Ver. 6. Angels. Elohim means also “God,” as S. Jerom, &c. explain it. Thou hast placed man like a deity upon earth. But S. Paul adopts the sense of the Sept. C.—S. Jerom doubted whether the epistle to the Hebrews belonged to him or he would have done the same. Some of the Fathers suppose, (Bert.) that the prophet speaks of man before the fall. Theodoret.—Yet he has Christ principally in view. C.—A little less may be better rendered, “for a little while:” βραχυ τι. Acts 5:34. Is. 10:25. modico. Heb. 2. Notwithstanding the prerogatives of Adam, before the fall, what is said by the prophet and S. Paul can be true of none but Christ; who was subject to death only for a short space, and quickly rose from the tomb, Lord of all. 1 Cor. 15:26. If we do not see it yet, (Heb. 2:8. Ps. 69:2) our faith must not waver. He is crowned, and will one day assert his dominion. Bert. Matt. 28:18. Eph. 1:19. C.—In his assumed nature, Christ became less than the angels; but he has raised it above them, and is appointed Lord of angels, men, and creatures of every description. The sea and the winds obey him. Matt. 8.

Ver. 8. All sheep. S. Paul did not judge it necessary to specify these things, as they are included in the word all. Bert. These tame cattle designate the believing Jews; beasts, the Gentile converts; birds, the proud; fishes, the voluptuous. S. Athan.—The birds may also be put for men of genius, who dive into the secrets of theology; and fishes, for anxious worldlings. Hesyc.—SS. Aug. and Jerom understand that people who labour not for their salvation, or who are attached to the earth, men who rise up against God, or never elevate their thoughts to heaven, are emblematically specified by these creatures.

Ver. 9. Sea. All things are subjected to man’s dominion. Gen. 1:26 and 9:2. C.—“The Stoics are in the right, who say that the world was made for us. For all its parts and productions are contrived for man’s benefit.” Lact. ira. xiii.

Ver. 10. Earth. This repetition of the first verse insinuates, that as God was admirable in giving man the power to avoid sin and death; so he is wonderful in raising him again, in such a state the he can sin no more. W.

PSALM 9

PSALM 9. (CONFITEBOR TIBI DOMINE.)

The church praiseth God for his protection against her enemies.

Ver. 1. The hidden things of the son. The humility and sufferings of Christ, the Son of God; and of good Christians, who are his sons by adoption; and called hidden things, with regard to the children of this world, who know not the value and merit of them. Ch.—It may also signify, “to Ben, the master of music, over the young women.” See 1 Par. 15:18. C. M.—These authors have joined almuth, which S. Jerom, &c. read as tow words, “on the death of the son.” Prot. “upon Muth Labben.” David might allude to the death of Absalom, or of some of his other children. But he has his Son, Christ, the conqueror of death and hell, principally in view, as this psalm sings of victory over nations. His incarnation and the afflictions of Christians are hidden in God. W.—Lamnatseach has generally a preposition, l, al, &c. after it, which might induce us to prefer rendering “death,” before “secrets or young women.” H.—But al may be understood, as it is found Ps. 45., where all have, “for the secrets.” In Heb. this psalm is divided (Bert.) at v. 22nd, and formerly it seems at the 17th. C.—This division is arbitrary, and of no consequence for the understanding of the psalms. Bert.—It would be well if there were no more serious controversy between Catholics and Protestants. The Jews agree with neither. Some unite the 1st and 2nd, as Kimchi does the 114th and 115th. Amama.—What is here rendered a psalm for David, is the same in the Heb. and Sept. as has been before expressed of David. Ps. 3. H.

Ver. 2. Praise and thanks, or I will confess. W.—To thee. Heb. “to the.” David had received many favours from God, and he has testified his gratitude, and shewn how we ought to praise God, (S. Jer. C.) with soul and body. Bert. W.—Wonders; victories gained over the neighbouring nations, so that Israel was at peace and liberty to transport the ark to Sion. 1 Par. 15.

Ver. 4. Back; routed. After Saul’s family was taken off, none durst oppose David. They saw that the Lord had set him on the throne. C.—Only after his sin, rebels began to molest him. H.—The Fathers explain this of the devil and his agents. S. Jer.—God repelleth the enemy, when man is not able to resist. W.

Ver. 5. Justice, or rightly. C.—God alone always discerns what is just. S. Chrys.—Man overcomes the devil, with the assistance of God’s grace. W.

Ver. 6. Name, or destroy them. The name is often put for the thing itself. Yet many of those nations who once made such a noise, are now quite forgotten. No traces of them can be found. H.—The Egyptians and Chanaanites had been exterminated. C.—Ever, for all eternity, as long as God shall reign, v. 8. 39. or Ps. 10:1–6. This shews that he speaks of the latter times, and of the final destruction of idolatry, by the preaching of apostolic men, (Bert.) and by the last fire. For some will be so infatuated as to uphold it even to the end. H.—We have even reason to fear that it will again become more general, (P. Apoc.) as faith shall decrease. Jesus Christ and his apostles gave it however (H.) a mortal wound, so that in the fifth age many of its mysteries were quite forgotten. Theod. SS. Aug. and Jer. C.—They took the towns, or the souls, of many from the strong-armed. Luk. 11:21. Bert.—All sinners may be here styled Gentiles, because they were generally wicked. If their reputation survive here for a while, it will certainly perish in the future world. W.

Ver. 7. Swords. “My enemies have sunk under the sword.” Syr. H.—Frameæ is a German word for “javelins,” pointed with iron, which they might either throw, or use in close fight. Tacit.—It is often put for a sword. Et martii frameam. Juv. xiii.—The weapons of the enemy being exhausted, they are forced to yield.—Their. Heb. &c. “the.”—Noise, as swiftly. These fierce nations are fallen like a huge Colossus. C.—Heb. “they themselves,” or “with them.”—Cities, &c.

Ver. 8. In judgment. S. Jer. “to judge.” H.

Ver. 9. World. This globe must give place to new heavens and earth, (Bert.) after its inhabitants have been judged. H.—Justice. Men may be corrupt judges, but God cannot. W.

Ver. 10. Poor. Heb. ladac, “the oppressed,” (S. Jer.) “broken with grief.” C.—Tribulation. God’s assistance is requisite both in prosperity and adversity. He generally manifests his power only, when all human succour proves useless. H.—Thus he acted at the Red Sea, and when he sent delivers to Israel. Our Saviour came at the time appointed, when he was most wanted. Theod. Gal. 4:4. C.—“We are often oppressed with tribulation, and yet it is not the due time; that so we may be helped by the desire of being set free.” S. Greg.—Thus the delay is for our advantage. W.

Ver. 11. Know, with love. Such are always heard. What wonder if others be rejected, who flee from God? S. Chrys. and S. Aug. C.—The learned often trust too much to their own knowledge, whereas God has made choice of the simple. Matt. 11:25. Bert.

Ver. 12. Ways, (studia) “favours,” (H.) works, &c. C.—This was done by the apostles. S. Aug.—Men ought chiefly to study the precepts of God. W.

Ver. 13. Their, may be omitted, as it would seem to refer to the Gentiles. God declares that he will demand the blood of all that shed it without authority. Gen. 9:5. H.—He had punished the Chanaanites, &c. for their cruelty, as he did afterwards the persecutors of his Church. If the names of Herod, Nero, &c. be infamous in history for their sanguinary proceedings, they are not less so on account of the judgments which God exercised upon them, even in this world. C. See Lact. de Mort. Persec. H.—God avengeth the blood of his martyrs. W.

Ver. 14. Enemies. Israel has been so long under oppression.

Ver. 15. Death, from the most imminent dangers. H.—Daughter. In the places where the inhabitants of Sion assembled, (Bert.) or publicly in the Church. W.—In hell, the damned would wish to die. Theod.—The gates of death may also signify sin, (Orig.) and the bad example of parents. S. Jer.

Ver. 16. Hid. These are the enemies of salvation. Bert.—The nations which had oppressed the Jews found their fortifications and arms turned against themselves, (C.) which is often the case of the wicked. W.

Ver. 17. Hands. Caught in the very act, so that he cannot deny the crime. Here we find in Heb. (C.) higaion sela, which S. Jerom renders, “by meditation for ever.” H.—Sept. Sym. and some Lat. copies, “a canticle of the psalm’s division,” διαψαλματος. Here perhaps the psalm ended. C.

Ver. 18. Hell; shall die, or be lost. (Convertantur.) Lit. “Let,” &c. But it may be properly explained as a prediction, or menace. H.—“Those who are devoid of God’s justice, return to the dominion of the devil.” Robertson, Lexic.—Zeal, and not revenge, prompts David to speak thus. W.

Ver. 19. Not perish. Heb. does not express the negation, but it must be understood. Bert.—Prot. supply it from the former part of the verse. The expectation of the just will not be frustrated.

Ver. 20. Man. Heb. enosh, (H.) “weak,” sinful “man.” Bert.—Gentiles, or all notorious sinners. The Jews despised the Gentiles, as the Romans did all barbarians. W.

Ver. 21. Lawgiver. Heb. mora. H.—Sept. intimates one who rigorously enforces his laws. M.—Sym. “a law.” Heb. “instruction.” C.—Houb. “fear.” S. Jer. “terror: let the nations know that they are men always.” Sela is thus frequently explained as a part of the sentence by S. Jerom, though neglected by others. H.—It is no proof that the psalm ends here; but serves to excite attention. W.—The Gentiles lived without law, like beasts, except that their conscience sometimes admonished them of their duty. Rom. 2:14. H.—Whether a person can ever silence it entirely, is a very serious and terrible question. The great ones stand in need of being admonished frequently of their frail condition. Bert. —When Pausanias, king of Sparta, asked Simonides to give his some important lesson, he replied, “Remember that thou art a man.” Whoever reflects on this, will beware never to yield to sentiments of pride. The Fathers understand this lawgiver to be Jesus; or Antichrist, whom the wicked have deserved to have set over them. Theod. S. Athan. &c. C.—Those who will not believe in Christ, will give credit to Antichrist. S. Aug. 2 Thes. 2.

Ver. 22. or Hebrew Psalm 10. Ver. 1. In modern times, the Jews have done it. W.—The Church allows this title, though the Sept. found none in their copies, and therefore looked upon all to be one ps. The change of subject is no proof of the contrary, as such compositions mingle joy and fear together. David has shewn how the just had got the victory. He now proceeds to declare what persecutions they had to endure. Bert.—After peace war succeeds. There is no settled state here below. H.—The same sentiments occur, Ps. 11 and 13. &c. C.—Trouble. God assists his servants in distress; (v. 10,) yet sometimes he delays, in order “to inflame their souls with a desire of his coming.” S. Aug.—He is present, (Acts. 17:28) but only the men of prayer are truly sensible either of it, or of his absence. Bert.—The weak think he defers his aid a long time when they suffer any great persecution.

Ver. 23. or Hebrew Psalm 10. Ver. 2. Fire. With zeal (W.) and indignation, or rather is oppressed (C.) and persecuted. See Mic. 3:3. H.—They. Houb. would substitute “he is caught.” But we may well explain this of the sinner and the unjust, v. 3. Bert.—Indeed both are under perplexity, as the poor knows not why the wicked prosper. Bellar. M.—An answer is given to the complaint of the just, intimating that the wicked are caught in their own snares, (W.) and are not free from trouble. H.

Ver. 24. or Hebrew Psalm 10. Ver. 3. Blessed by flatterers, while his is full of himself also, as the Heb. insinuates. C.—“The miser, applauding himself, has blasphemed the Lord. The wicked in the height of his fury will not seek, nor is God in all his thoughts.” H.—This is more energetic, and encourages us to study the original. The worldling wishes there were no God; or banishes him from his thoughts as much as possible. Bert.

Ver. 25. or Hebrew Psalm 10. Ver. 4. Seek to regain his favour, (W. M.) or rather (H.) he flatters himself that God will not punish him, v. 13. C.—Multum irascitur, dum non exquirat. S. Aug. See Psalm 35:5.

Ver. 26. or Hebrew Psalm 10. Ver. 5. Filthy. Heb. “as one in labour.” He can enjoy no ease. Chal. “his ways are prosperous.” Jun. “paved.” C.—Removed. Heb. “height itself before him, he will blow upon all his enemies.” This more forcibly denotes his violence and scorn. Bert. Acts 9:1. M.—He ruleth for a time, and supposeth that his dominion will never have an end, and that he will enjoy constant happiness. W.

Ver. 27. or Hebrew Psalm 10. Ver. 6. Evil. Always happy, or as the Heb. Chal. &c. may signify, “I shall not desist from evil.” C.—I will gratify my passions. Who dares to oppose me? A.—The pride of Nabuchodonosor is known. Dan. 4:19. &c.

Ver. 28. or Hebrew Psalm 10. Ver. 7. Sorrow. Which he prepares for others, and yet feels himself. C.—Etiam ad perniciem laboratur. S. Aug. —To gain hell requires some “trouble. H.—The wicked is his own executioner. C.

Ver. 29. or Hebrew Psalm 10. Ver. 8. Rich. S. Jer. “in the porches,” is equivalent. Moderns translate, “villages,” which Houbigant would change for a word signifying “ditches,” without necessity. Bert.

Ver. 30. or Hebrew Psalm 10. Ver. 9. Poor. “His eyes look round the strong,” for aid; or “the poor,” (Prot.) for destruction. See v. 14.

Ver. 31. or Hebrew Psalm 10. Ver. 10. Fall. Prot. “and humbleth himself, that the poor may fall by his strong ones.” H.—He imitates the lion in the fable, which feigned sickness. Hor. ep.—But the Vulg. gives a better sense. C.—“He will bring under the broken, (poor) and will rush on violently with all his power.” S. Jerom here explains chelecaim, valenter, instead of “the poor;” (H.) as some of the Gr. interpreters must have done, if it be true that his version is formed on the plan of the Hexapla, of a mere selection from Aq. Sym. and Theodotion, as Houbigant asserts, (Pref.) in order to confute the Jews. H.

Ver. 32. or Hebrew Psalm 10. Ver. 11. End. God delays for a time; but he will punish. C.—Religion lays open all the sophisms of infidelity. Bert.

Ver. 35. or Hebrew Psalm 10. Ver. 14. Sorrow. Thou punishest with pain. S. Aug.—Thou beholdest all the iniquity which is committed, (C.) but waitest until the measure be full. S. Chrys.—Terrible delay!—Poor. S. Jer. “art left thy strong ones,” who distrust in themselves, and rely on thee. H.—Others explain cheleca, “poor and weak.” Parkhurst.—Cheleca only occurs here and v. 9. 10. Prot. “the poor committeth himself to thee.” H.

Ver. 36. or Hebrew Psalm 10. Ver. 15. Found. When the means of sinning are withdrawn, he will repent; (SS. Chrys. Aug. Is. 28:19) or it is a sort of irony: he will see whether, as he said, God will take no notice, v. 4. C.—He shall be utterly exterminated. Ps. 36. M.—No vestige of his magnificent works, founded on injustice, shall remain. H.

Ver. 37. or Hebrew Psalm 10. Ver. 16. Shall. Or Heb. “have perished.” In the prophetic style, things to come are spoken of as past, on account of their certainty. Bert.—The wicked shall not appear in the kingdom of God, to pollute his earth. H.—Ye nations which have seized the promised land, except not to keep possession. If God suffer the sinner for a while, it is because he is eternal, so that he will never let him escape. C.

Ver. 38. or Hebrew Psalm 10. Ver. 17. The. Heb. “Thou, Lord, hast heard the desire of the humble. Thou wilt prepare their heart; thou wilt cause thine ear to hear.” Prot. H.—Luther seems to have altered the text in his German version, in order to establish his error of the certitude of salvation; “their heart is sure that thine ear hath heard.” The Heb. intimates that God prepares the heart for all good. Bert.—He hears before his servants cry out, (Is. 65:24) since his spirit inspires the petitions. Rom. 8:26. Gal. 4:6. C.—The cry of the heart is charity, amore petitur. S. Aug. Mor. Ecc.—The just man is always ready to suffer whatever God may appoint. W.

Ver. 39. or Hebrew Psalm 10. Ver. 18. Earth. S. Jerom is more expressive, “that the man of earth may by no means cherish pride any longer.” Though he may be the greatest monarch, he is but man, dust and corruption, v. 21. H.—Christ, who shewed himself wonderful in humility at his birth, (v. 1) will display his power at the last day, by giving sentence against the wicked, and by exalting his servants. W.

PSALM 10. (IN DOMINO CONFIDO.)

Ver. 1. Heb. Lamnatseach lidavid, (H.) “to the master of music or, or to David.” C.—S. Jerom supplies the word psalm. That David, or any other, should give the title of master of music to so great a prince may seem strange; and therefore the Vulg. may perhaps be as accurate. S. Jerom and Pagnin have “to the victor of David.” Almost all agree that he composed this psalm (H.) when he began to be persecuted by Saul. He expresses his confidence in God; when his friends advised him to flee. C.—The Fathers take hence occasion to caution the faithful against the insidious speeches of those who pretend that they can procure greater security than the Church affords, (H.) and that they teach a doctrine of greater perfection. SS. Aug. Jer. & C.

Ver. 2. How. My friends ... say, &c. W.—To the. Heb. now, “to your mountain,” as the words are joined which were formerly divided, while a v has been lost, and another placed instead of i, as we may gather from the ancient interpreters. Chal. Syr. S. Jer. &c.—Most people suppose that David’s friends exhort him to withdraw: but he waits for the divine order. Others think (C.) that these are the words of his enemies, who wished to fill him with dismay, that he might retire among the Gentiles, and adore their idols, 1 K. 26:19. Mariana. —Sparrow. Heb. tsipor, any little “bird.” H. Prov. 27:8. M.—Heretics false style their conventicles the mountains. S. Aug. W.

Ver. 3. Quiver. Heb. “on the string,” ready to shoot. C.—But yether (H.) means “abundance,” and may be well understood of the quiver. Bert.—Persecutors use all rigour, though they disguise the real cause of their resentment against the innocent. W.—Dark. Sept. add “moon.” M.

Ver. 4. Made. In choosing me for king, Heb. “the foundations are, or shall be destroyed; and what shall the just do? or, what has the just man done?” The foundations, both of religion and of the kingdom, depend on God’s ordinances, as the Sept. well explain. Bert.—Pagnin has, “the nets;” S. Jerom, “the laws.” In these days of infidelity and rebellion, the just must experience the greatest perplexity. H.—If faith be lost, who shall be just? Bert.—Persecutors, and especially heretics, pull down what others have built. W.

Ver. 5. Heaven. This is the source of my confidence. C.—The admirable mother of the Machabees suggested this consoling motive, (Bert.) to strengthen her youngest son. 2 Mac. 7:28. Heaven is the temple of the Lord, (H.) though the tabernacle may be so styled here. See Ps. 10:8. C.—The poor man is not in Heb. but it is chiefly of him that the psalmist speaks; (Bert.) and the Sept. and Arab. (C.) seem to (H.) have read it. Eliphaz remarks, that God does not disregard human affairs, as the wicked supposed. Job 22:12. C.—If his eyes seem to be shut, his providence watcheth. W.

Ver. 6. Trieth, interrogat, which is rendered by examine, v. 5. H.—God juridically questions all, (C.) and makes them give an exact account of themselves, even of every idle word. H.—The word also means that he punishes, or chastises. C.—Heb. “the Lord trieth the just, but his soul hateth the wicked, and the lover of iniquity.” S. Jer. &c. H.—Yet the original may be explained in the sense of the Sept. which is more beautiful and instructive; as the sinner will hardly believe that he is his own greatest enemy. Bert.—By continuing in sin he brings damnation on his soul. W.

Ver. 7. Snares. Wonderful expression! The wicked cannot escape. H.—Brimstone, as he did upon Sodom. Gen. 19:4. Jude 7.—Cup. At feasts, each person (C.) had his portion and his own cup. Dreadful indeed is the inheritance of the wicked. See Ps. 15:5. Bert.—If God spare for a time, He must at last punish severely. W.

Ver. 8. Righteousness. As, on the other hand, (H.) the upright shall behold God, (Matt. 5:8) while the wicked shall be driven into darkness (C.) for all eternity. In vain do modern sophists pretend that hell will not last for ever because God is incapable of revenge, or of delighting in the torture of his creatures. They use the word revenge in a wrong sense. Bert.—God is not subject to any passion; but his justice requires that those should be eternally punished, whose will is always impious. H.—Can they shew that there will be room for repentance in the other world? (Bert.) or that the wicked would make use of it, if granted, since they would not repent as long as they lived? By the same arguments, they might as well prove that God could not punish at all. H. Dan. 3:27.

PSALM 11. (SALVUM ME FAC.)

The prophet calls for God's help against the wicked.

Ver. 2. Save. David, persecuted by Saul, (Bossuet) or Absalom; (Grot.) the captives at Babylon; (C.) our Saviour suffering, or coming to judge; (S. Aug.) in a word, any just man who sees the corruption of men, may use this language. H.—We cannot open the writings of the prophets, or of the Fathers, without meeting with such complaints. Heb. “no saint;” chasid, “pious” (Pagn. H.) clement person. C.—Truths. Heb. “people of veracity.” C.—Bias said, “All men are bad;” (Clem. Strom. 1.) or, as Laertius expresses it, “Most people are wicked.” Hence few are chosen. H.—Christ is the truth. If we admire his doctrine, let us put it in practice. Bert.

Ver. 3. Deceitful. Heb. “flattering;” and of course not free from deceit. Bert.—

“That man I hate, e’en as the gates of hell,
Who thinks one thing, and will another tell.” Iliad I.

—None can have (H.) confidence in a liar. S. Jam. 1:8. C.

Ver. 4. Lips. “The saints do not curse, but foretell what will happen.” S. Jer.—Heb. “the Lord will destroy” the deceitful, (Bert.) who mean to injure men; (H.) and the proud, who attack God and religion, which they pretend they can prove (Bert.) to be a mere fiction, by their superior eloquence! H.

Ver. 5. Own. “We have lips,” (Sym.) or eloquence to gain our cause against these miserable exiles. C.—Lord. Heb. adon, “master.” We admit of no superior, neither in heaven nor on earth. H.—Such was the haughtiness of Pharaoh, &c. Ex. 5:2 and 4 K. 13:19. Dan. 3:15. C.

Ver. 6. Arise, and redeem lost man; (Theod.) or, protect my servants (C.) from such insolent oppressors. H.—Regard. This may be put in the mouth of the afflicted. C.—“I will place my confidence in the Saviour, and will act boldly in him.” H.—His promises give me full assurance, v. 7. The Heb. seems to be incorrect, and very different from what the ancients read. C.—S. Jer. has, “I will place their aid in salvation;” (H.) which he explains of Jesus Christ. See Is. 12:2. C.—Moderns insert many words. “I will save him, that they may learn to trust in me.” German.—“I will set him in safety from him that puffeth at him.” Prot. Or “would ensnare him.” Margin. We may better translate, “I will put in safety, the Lord will act freely herein;” or, “safety which will act freely upon him,” the poor. Bert.—“I will raise up a Saviour, who with his breath will destroy the wicked.” Prin. disc.

Ver. 7. Pure words, very different from those of the deceitful, v. 3. C.—Earth, dross, or in the crucible, or “for the ruler of earth;” (Pagnin. H.) current money. If we alter the Heb. a little, it may be, “with care, (bahalil, which is never elsewhere used for a crucible) gold refined seven times;” often, (Prov. 24:16) or as much as possible. C.

Ver. 8. This corrupt generation; or, both in this world and in the next. Heb. “preserve them;” the just, or thy words. C.—“And thou wilt keep him.” Pagn.—Prot. marg. i.e. “Every one of them.” S. Jerom reads, “us.” H.

Ver. 9. About. Their life is a circle of relapses; or rather they continually attack the just, (C.) but their designs are made subservient to their advancement in virtue, by the power of God. T.—Heb. “They (the just) shall go round the wicked, when baseness shall have raised herself up, on account of the children of men.” When God shall have restored the Jews to liberty, the Babylonians shall be, in their turn, oppressed by Cyrus and the Persians, whom they now despise: or, when the miserable shall be placed in power, the wicked shall not dare to approach them. C.—“The wicked shall walk round about, when the vilest of the sons of men shall be exalted.” S. Jerom. H.—The former have spent their life in vanity, and shall be kept for ever out of the kingdom of heaven; as the error of the Platonists, who assert that all things will come to pass again, the world being compared to a wheel, is manifestly refuted by Scripture, which assures us that God will preserve the just from this generation, (S. Aug.) and the wicked will knock at the door, like the foolish virgins, and will be rejected with, I never knew you. Matt. 25. S. Jer. or some other learned author. W.—For some suspect that the commentary which goes under the name of S. Jerom, is not in the state in which it came from his hands.— H.

PSALM 12. (USQUEQUO DOMINE.)

A prayer in tribulation.

Ver. 1. Me? These expressions are figurative. God seems displeased: but it is often for our greater good. Some explain this of David, Ezechias, the captives, &c. It may be applied to every afflicted soul, which places her whole trust in God. C.

Ver. 2. Day; frequently. W.—Sept. adds, “and night.” C.—These cares and perplexities arise from persecutions and from man’s weakness. W.

Ver. 3. Enemy; Saul, &c. or the devil. S. Aug. C.

Ver. 4. Death, by mortal sin, (W.) or through excessive sorrow. Jer. 51:39. Shew me thy favour, (C.) and I shall be secure. Sleep is represented as nearly related to death. Iliad xiv.

Tum consanguineus lethi sopor. Æn. vi. H.

Ver. 6. Mercy. Man must attribute nothing to himself, otherwise he will be moved by pride. S. Aug. C.—Things; patience and reward. W.—The prophet feels a secret confidence arising in his breast, in consequence of God's protection.—Yea, &c. is not in Heb. but it is in the Sept. Arab. and the ancient Fathers. Heb. "My heart shall be transported in thy salvation; I will praise the Lord, because he has rendered me the like," as I placed my hopes in him: (C.) or, "he hath rewarded me." The blessed Virgin adopts the language of this verse, and the prophet probably had the same salvation, Christ, in view. Berthier.

PSALM 13

PSALM 13. (DIXIT INSIPIENS.)

The general corruption of men, before our redemption by Christ.

Ver. 1. Fool: the man of the most depraved morals, the atheist and deist. There have always been (Bert.) such pests of society. H.—David has refuted them again. Ps. 52. Bert.—Some have imagined that this psalm was composed in consequence of the blasphemies of Rabsaces, (4 K. 18:32. Theodoret, &c.) or of the Babylonians. C.—The Fathers explain it of Jesus Christ, denied by the Jews, &c.—Heart. This must be strangely corrupted, before the mouth can utter such impiety. H.—No God. Chal. "no power of God on earth." Elohim denotes particularly "judges." There have been a few philosophers who have denied the existence of God; and more who have called in question his Providence: though this amounts to the same thing. But the number of those who confess God with the mouth, and deny him by their works, is immense. H.—These live as if there were no judge. C.—By sin they come at last to think there is none to govern the world. W.—Plato (Leg. 10.) acknowledged that three sorts of people offend God; those who deny him; who say that He does not mind human affairs; or those who think that presents may prevail on him to connive at their wickedness. It is doubtful whether the mind can ever be so darkened as to believe that there is no God. Bert.—The heart may wish there were none to punish its impiety. H.—Libertinage or pride gives birth to so many infidels. They have begun by reducing conscience to silence. Their arguments only tend to destroy.—No, not one, is not in

Heb. Sept. &c. except in v. 3. C.—Yet it occurs in the Vatican Sept, which is the best. Bert. C.—“They are become abominable, with earnestness there is none who doth good.” S. Jer. H.—Or they sin designedly and with affectation. C.—All are unable to do good without the Redeemer. W.—Some explain this of mankind in general, as all are born in sin. David refers also to actual and habitual sinners. Bert.—S. Paul (Rom. 3) proves from this text, and Isai. 59:7, that all stand in need of grace and faith, and cannot be saved either by the law of nature or of Moses. But it does not follow that faith alone will save, or that the most just are still wicked, as Calvin and Beza falsely expound the Scriptures. For the prophets speak of those who were not yet justified, teaching that all mankind were once in sin, and could not be justified but by Christ. At the same time, they assert that, when they are justified, they must serve justice to bear fruit, and obtain happiness. Rom. 6. These points are well explained by S. Aug.: (de Sp. et lit. i. 9.) “The just are justified freely by his grace,” not by the law or will; though this is not effected without the will, &c. The same holy doctor (c. 27) observes, that the just do not live free from all venial sins, and yet remain in the state of salvation; while the wicked continue in the state of damnation, though they do some good works. W.

Ver. 2. God. Those only who seek God, understand their real interests. H.—The pagans, and particularly those of Babylon, lived in the greatest dissolution, so as to call loudly for vengeance, v. 5. C.—Both the understanding and the will were gone astray. Bert.

Ver. 3. Unprofitable. Without faith in Christ, none have meritorious works. W.—Not one. Such was the condition of the world before Christ, as all were born in sin. “No one,” says S. Aug. “can do good, except he shew the method.” All were immersed in ruin, “except the holy Virgin, concerning whom, for the honour of the Lord, I would have no question at all, in treating of sins.” S. Aug. de Nat. et Grat. con. Pelag. xxxvii. 44. C.—The Council of Trent approves of this reserve, when speaking of original sin. Our Saviour is the source of this privilege, and much more out of the question. He could not be guilty of any sort of transgression. He was in all things like to us, excepting sin. H.—Their, &c. What follows to shall not, (v. 4) occurs in S. Paul; (Rom. 3:11, 12, 13.) whence S. Jerom supposes that it has been inserted here, though the apostle took the quotations from different parts of scripture. Praef. in 16. Isai. He informs us, that all the Greek commentators marked it as not found in Heb. or the Sept. “except in the Vulg. or κοινη, which varied in different parts of the world.” There seems to be no reason why it should have been omitted designedly, whereas some might insert it, through the false notion that

S. Paul had taken it from this psalm. C.—The Heb. is not therefore mutilated, but the Vulg. redundant. Amama.—Yet this is not absolutely clear. We find the quotation in the Rom. Sept. which is the most correct; (Bert.) though some prefer the Alex. MSS. H.—It is also in the Arab. and Ethiopic versions; so that it might have been in S. Paul's copy. Our Saviour read a passage from Isaias, which is not extant. Luke 4:19. Bert.—S. Justin, S. Aug. &c. agree with the Vulg.; and Lindan mentions a Heb. copy which had these verses, though the learned have reason to think that this Heb. was of a modern date. C.—Prot. 1577, inserted these three verses, (W.) which they now omit.—Sepulchre. They are never satisfied with destruction, (H.) and with vexing others. W.—We bear in ourselves the seed of corruption, which can be prevented from growing up only by the grace of Jesus Christ. Bert.—Perdition is from thyself, O Israel. H.

Ver. 4. Know my just providence, though they would fain keep it out of sight, (v. 1) that they may indulge their passions. H.—My people. These we may conclude, were just; (Bert.) at least in comparison with their cruel oppressors, (H.) who made it their daily practice to injure them, (S. Aug.) as they could do it with facility. Num. 19:9. Prov. 30:14. Mic. 3:2. C.—The prophet, in God's name, complains of their eagerness to hurt the good. W.

Ver. 5. Where. This expression refers to there, which is in Heb. though this last part of the verse is wanting. Capel.—It is in Ps. 52:6., and this renders the former omission (v. 3) more credible. Bert.—When Cyrus approached to besiege Babylon, Nabonides, the king, met him, and gave him battle; but losing the victory, he, in a panic, retreated to Borsippe, and abandoned the defence of his capital. Beros. apud Jos. con. App. l. The citizens were in the utmost consternation. Isai. 13 and 21., &c. C.—But the wicked tremble at the prospect of temporal losses, (M.) and at shadows, while they boldly affront the Deity. Unbelievers find difficulties in the Catholic doctrines, which are frequently attributed to their own mistakes. H.—The pagans would not believe in God, but trembled before idols; which cannot hurt the faithful. W.

Ver. 6. Man, who wished sincerely to practise his religion, like Daniel, &c. Such you have persecuted, and hence God has filled you with alarms, and will punish you. C.—Some persevere in justice, amid the general contagion and insults of men. W.

Ver. 7. Sion; which God has chosen for his sanctuary. H.—Salvation, or the Saviour, whom Jacob expected. Gen. 49. Bert.—This Redeemer would fill all, both Jews and Gentiles, with joy, who should embrace his faith. S. Aug. &c.—The prophet seems to foretell the restoration of the ten tribes to the kingdom of Judea, as it took place after the captivity. C. Diss.—But he sighed for, and designated more particularly, (H.) the Saviour of the world; who would redeem man from the tyranny of the devil, to the great joy of those who strive to supplant every vice, and to contemplate God, (W.) as some interpret the names of Jacob and Israel. H.—The Gentiles will then be ingrafted into the stock of Abraham, (M.) into the true olive-tree. Rom. 11. H.

PSALM 14

PSALM 14. (DOMINE QUI HABITABIT.)

What kind of men shall dwell in the heavenly Sion.

Ver. 1. David. The word psalm being appropriated to some, while others are styled hymns, &c. does not hinder the latter from being also psalms or spiritual songs, to be set to music: so the insertion of David, “the beloved’s name,” in some of these divine canticles, is no proof that the rest were not written by him. W.—The author describes the perfection of priests, &c. contrasts the sanctity of those who shall inherit Jerusalem with that of the wicked mentioned in the last psalm. Some copies have To the end in the title, while others omit it, with the Heb. S. Chrys. &c.—Hill. The Jews comforted themselves with the hopes of seeing Jerusalem rebuilt, Ps. 131:1. The prophets describe those who should return from captivity, as holy people, (Isai. 26:3. Soph. 3:13. C.) a figure of the Church. H.—Heaven is also styled a tabernacle and mountain, (Apoc. 15:5. Heb. 12:22. Bert.) and is here chiefly (H.) meant. See ver. 5. W.

Ver. 2. Justice. These two things characterize the true Israelites. C.—We must avoid sin, and do good, in thought, word and deed, v. 3. W.

Ver. 3. Heart, as he thinks. H.—Those who sincerely love truth, will not deceive others. C.—We must be attached to all revealed truths, and avoid all the disorders of the tongue.—Up, which would otherwise have fallen to the ground, &c. Bert.—Reproach. Rashly giving credit to injurious reports, (C. S. Aug. Ex. 23:1) or speaking with insult, (Theod.) even in giving correction, (S. Hilary) or listening to detraction. W.

Ver. 4. Nothing. He despises all wickedness, though done by kings, whose power he considers as the means of destruction. 1 K. 15:26. Lu. 23:9. The wicked dares not appear before an upright judge, like David.

Ps. 100:2. Heb. may be "the wicked is despised." S. Jer. H.—Those who follow the Jews, have "he thinks meanly of himself," which is very good; but the sense of the Vulg. seems more pointed, (C.) though the other contains a noble maxim of the gospel. Bert.—Prot. "in whose eyes a vile person is contemned." The sinner is the only person who is truly vile, in the opinion of the just, who forms not his opinion on outward appearances. H.—Lord. Glory is the reward of good works. W.—Neighbour. This sense is conformable to the Heb. without points, (Geneb.) and more beautiful than that of the Rabbins, "against his own interest," (Jun.) "to do evil," (Ainsworth) "friendship," (Sym.) or "to afflict himself." S. Jerom.—We find such vows strongly enforced. Num. 30:3. Deut. 23:21. C.—Prot. "that sweareth to his own hurt, and changeth not." H.—It were to be wished that oaths were not necessary. C.—But when they are, the Lord must be the arbiter of truth, and not idols; as by swearing, we testify that we believe God is the sovereign truth, and thus honour his name. See Lev. 19:12. Mat. 5:33. H.

Ver. 5. Usury. This was always blameable, though Moses tolerated it with respect to the Jews lending to the Chanaanites. Deut. 23:19. Lu. 6:35. The Roman law condemned the guilty to pay double as much as the thief, who was to restore twice the value of what he had stolen. Cato 1.—Under the semblance of kindness it does a real injury; (S. Hil.) etiam his invisâ quibus succurrere videtur. Columel. præf. C.—Bribes, (munera) "presents." Even these are dangerous, as they tend to prepossess the judge. H.—Both usury and doing wrong for bribes exclude from heaven. W.—A judge must shake such things from his hands, (Isai. 33:15) as he cannot take them to give either a just or a wrong sentence. His duty requires him to give the former; so that the innocent would thus be purchasing what was his own. C.—The same maxims must be applied to all in authority, (H.) to witnesses, &c. C.—Those who have not failed in any of these respects, must be possessed of faith, and all other necessary virtues, before they can enter heaven. For when the scripture attributes salvation to any one virtue in particular, it does not mean to exclude the rest.—For ever. All terrestrial things are mutable; and of course, the psalmist speaks of heaven. If so great perfection was required, to appear in the tabernacle, how much more must be expected of the candidate for heaven! W.—The good Christian who has not yielded to temptation, may there enjoy undisturbed repose. Isaias (23:15) uses similar expressions, when describing the state of Jerusalem, after the defeat of Sennacherib. C.

PSALM 15. (CONSERVA ME DOMINE.)

Christ's future victory and triumph over the world and death.

Ver. 1. The inscription of a title. That is, a pillar or monument, σθηλογραφία: which is as much as to say, that this psalm is most worthy to be engraved on an everlasting monument. Ch.—Mictam. Prot. “Michtam.” Marg. or “golden psalm of David,” or most excellent. S. Jerom, &c. have divided the word into two: “of the humble and upright David.” H.—It may signify “inscribed.” C.—But there seems to be no reason for abandoning the Sept. who were well acquainted with the original. The ps. is in the form of a prayer, which David pronounces in the person of Christ, to whom the apostles apply several verses; and, as the rest seem to be of the same nature, we must understand all of the Messias, praying, in his sacred humanity, (Bert.) that his body may remain incorrupt. It may refer to Ezechias, to the captives, or rather to David, persecuted by Saul, and provoked to serve false gods. 1 K. 26:19. But then many expressions must be explained figuratively, (C.) and this would tend to weaken the prediction, (Bert.) which all the Fathers have understood of Christ suffering. C.—The thing most worthy to be noted, (stilographia) by the prophet David, is our Saviour's crucifixion; (W.) the memory of which must be perpetuated. Job (19:24) wished that what he said about the resurrection, might thus be engraven on flint. H.—Preserve. David acknowledges his infirmity, and that all good comes from God. C.—Jesus was heard praying with tears, &c. Heb. 5:7. In his humanity, He might use these expressions, (H.) as He was the head of a new people, whom he wished to sanctify and instruct. Bert.—He often prayed, as the gospel informs us. W.

Ver. 2. I have. Heb. “Thou, my soul, hast said.” But S. Jerom agrees with us.—Goods. Heb. “my good is not above thee.” I can desire nothing greater. Bert.—Aquila and Vatable seem to have the same idea as the Sept. We reap all the profit from our piety. C.—The redemption was entirely for man's benefit, (W.) though it gave the greatest glory to God. H.—Since God, therefore, wants nothing, I will shew my kindness (Bellar.) to the poor. H.

Ver. 3. Saints. Heb. “the magnificent” priests, God himself, (Ex. 15:11. Calmet) and ceremonies of religion, (H.) for which David had a wonderful affection. C.—But Christ has displayed the greatest love towards all his converts, and they had need of it. Bert.—God here speaks, shewing that Christ should make known his wonderful charity to the apostles and other saints.

Ver. 4. Haste. Men who are convinced of their own infirmities, hasten to find a remedy. W.—No sooner had fallen man been redeemed, that he strove to advance in the ways of perfection. Bert.—The sins, to which the saints sometimes yield, tend to make them more cautious (C.) and grateful to their deliverer, like S. Peter. Persecutions likewise cause them to cling closer to God, and fill them with interior joy. Acts 5:41. H.—If we explain it of the wicked, chastisement often makes them repent. Ps. 77:34. C.—“Their idols have been multiplied after their followers, I will not join in their libations of blood.” S. Jer.—David was continually exposed to such temptations, among the idolaters; but out of contempt, he would not even pronounce the name of the idols. C.—Blood, or bloody. D.—The pagan (W.) and Mosaic sacrifices shall cease. Christ will unite us (Bert.) by a more excellent oblation of his own body and blood. H.—Christians shall be distinguished by a fresh appellation, being styled children of light and of God, in opposition to the sons of men, (S. Aug. &c. C.) and pagans.

Ver. 5. Cup. Eternal happiness consists in seeing (W.) and enjoying God, (H.) and is promised to the patient. Though Christ was truly king of Israel and exercised jurisdiction, (Jo. 12 and 18:37. Matt. 21. &c. W.) yet it was not of a temporal nature; (H.) and his chief inheritance was the Lord, who would reward his merits. He has taught all clergymen to make this happy choice; as they declare when they become such. Man may call God his inheritance, as he was made for him; and though he may have fallen, if he rise again, his title will be restored, and he may obtain felicity, whether he live in the world or retire from it. W.—David alludes to the custom of allotting each his portion of wine and meat, which was greater in proportion to the person’s dignity. He rejects with disdain all worldly and sensual joys. C.—God in not “a part,” but the whole portion of a good man.—It is, &c. S. Jer. “Thou art the possessor of my lot.” I trust in thee for all. H. 1 Pet. 1:4. 2 Tim. 1:12. In the ancient sacrifices a part was reserved for the offerer. But Jesus keeps nothing back.

Ver. 6. Lines, with which land was measured. Bert.—Christ expresses his satisfaction with his church, which is gathered from all nations, to manifest the choicest virtues. Tit. 2:14. Euthymius, S. Jer. &c. C.—This was his inheritance, not measured out with lines, (Jos. 10) but reaching to the very ends of the earth. Ps. 2. H.

Ver. 7. Understanding. Heb. “counsel.” In the night of tribulation God directs the reins, or affections of the soul. Christ might speak thus concerning his human nature. Bert. Lu. 2:40. Heb. 5:7. David also gives thanks to God for enabling him to make so happy a choice, and to avoid being seduced. C.—He derives instructions from pain. W.

Ver. 8. That I. Heb. “I shall not,” &c. The sense is the same, but S. Peter agrees with us and the Sept. Acts 2:25, &c. It is not of faith that the seven preceding verse regard Jesus Christ as the following do; but as the same person speaks, we may rationally infer that all should be explained of him. Though he always enjoyed the beatific vision, his soul had the affections of other men, and always tended to keep in God’s presence. So the angels who see God, desire more and more to contemplate him. 1 Pet. 1:12. How earnestly ought we to strive always to keep in the divine presence! (Bert.) then we should constantly advance in virtue, and fear no dangers. The patriarchs thus walked with God, and arrived at such perfection. H.—The father was always at the right hand of his Son, to support and glorify him; and the Son, having continually performed what was pleasing to God, (Jo. 8:29) was placed at his right hand at his ascension, though his divinity had never been separated from him. C.—He had always God in view, and has left us a pattern how to behave. W.

Ver. 9. Tongue. Heb. “glory.” Yet Prot. translate, “tongue,” (Acts 2) as S. Peter follows the Sept. (H.) and he surely understood the force of the Heb.; so that his testimony in their favour is very strong. Commentators observe that the tongue manifests the joy of the heart, (Bert.) and the same word is used for the soul. Ps. 7:6. C.—Yet very different words signify the tongue and glory; and we follow the text, adopted by the apostle. Joy naturally flows from the presence of the best of friends. Bert.—Our Saviour sometimes suspended this joy, that he might suffer the more for us. C.

Ver. 10. Soul in hell. Beza, (in his 1st. edit. which he corrected afterwards) would translate “more corpse (cadaver, or carcass) in the grave;” for which he as been justly blamed. For, though the corpse is sometimes called soul, as it has been animated by it, (H.) and the soul and blood are often used synonymously, yet we shall find no instance of the body of any one still living being styled a soul. When speaking, therefore, of a person’s future death, the soul means either life or the spiritual substance. Gen. 37:22. Ps. 49:16. Hence the explanation of the Fathers, who understand this of Christ’s descent into hell, to free the saints who were detained in limbo, is more probable. Bert.—The instances which are adduced to maintain the opposite sentiment, which Calmet, &c. assert is more literal, either prove nothing, or they relate to people deceased, whose bodies were not to be touched. See Gen. 9:5. Lev. 17:11 and 21:11. Num. 6:6 and 19:13. Agg. 2:14. Christ speaks of his body in the following part of the verse, (H.) calling it

Holy, because it was never separated from the divine nature. Bert.—The erroneous interpretations or corruptions of Beza and Calvin on this head, opposing themselves to the consent of all the ancient Fathers, who believed this passage related of the descent into limbo, are noted. Gen. 27. Acts 2. 1 Pet. 3. The Prot. edit. vary. Some retain the word hell, others the grave; remarking that “this is chiefly meant of Christ, by whose resurrection all his members have immortality.” And (Acts 2) they paraphrase, “Thou shalt not leave me in the grave;” wresting that which regards the body, rising from the grave, to the soul, which was never there. W.—The last edit. of Jas. 1 agrees however with us, in both places. “Thou wilt not leave my soul in hell, neither wilt thou suffer thy holy one to see corruption.” It is observable that in the Heb. editions, (except Stephen’s and some few others) we find the word chasic in the text, though the last i be properly omitted in the margin; as the word would otherwise signify “saints:” and thus make the apostles false witnesses. Acts 13:35, &c. H.—“But who shall lay any such thing to their charge? Other men may be deficient in their knowledge, and in their honesty; but inspired apostles could neither be deceived nor deceive. All the ancient versions, the Masorets,” who order the word to be read in the singular, though printed plural in the text, and many of the best MSS. vouch for their veracity. Moreover it is not true that God will not suffer his saints to see corruption; and, if this were the meaning of the words, they would not predict the resurrection of any particular person: yet “these words, the apostles observe to the Jews, are a prophecy of some particular person, whose soul was not long to continue in the place of departed spirits, and whose body was not to be corrupted, both being soon to be reunited. Now David, say they, did not speak this of himself, &c. Have the apostles imposed a prophecy upon the Jewish people, and upon the world?” Kennicott. Dis. i.—This learned author was greatly encouraged to go on with his ten years’ labour, in examining Heb. MSS. over the world, by finding many of the so favourable to the Christian religion, though it had been confidently asserted that all the MSS. were perfectly uniform. We may rejoice to see that he also approves of the Catholic explanation of this passage, and does not refer the whole to the burial of Christ. In effect, the Apostles’ Creed clearly distinguishes this article from that of the descent into hell.—One. Mont. ventures to follow Keri, “thy merciful one.” H.—Corruption. “Neither wilt thou permit that sanctified body, by which other people are to be sanctified, to become corrupt.” S. Aug.—Christ rose again before the holy women had embalmed his body, (Lu. 24:53. Mark 16:1) that no one might attribute the incorruption to that cause. His appearance was so glorious, as to dispel every doubt from the minds of those who would attend to reason. His descent into hell was not in consequence of any weakness, or that he might suffer, (C.) as Calvin blasphemously asserts, (H. T.) but he descended in triumph, to liberate the souls of the holy Fathers, (C.) or to announce to them the glad tidings of peace, the fruits of which they should shortly enjoy at his ascension, when he would open the gates of heaven to all the faithful. H.

Ver. 10. Of life. The observance of the commandments, (S. Jer.) or the method of obtaining happiness by patience and humility. S. Aug.—Thou hast opened a new track to me (H.) in the resurrection, unknown to mortals. Euthym. Bellar.—For though some had been already raised to life, Christ is still called the first-fruits of those who sleep, or of the dead; because none had raised themselves to life, as he did. H. Jo. 10:18.—Yet he attributes all the glory to the Father, either because he is the origin of the Deity, or because Jesus considered himself as man, and was in all things obedient to his Father. Bert.—His sacred humanity was now glorified, and beheld the face of God in a more perfect manner than any mere creature can do, tasting inexplicable delights for ever. C.—We must die and rise again, (W.) before we shall perfectly comprehend the ways of life. Then we shall form a true judgment of all terrestrial things. H.

PSALM 16. (EXAUDI DOMINE JUSTITIAM.)

A just man's prayer in tribulation, against the malice of his enemies.

Ver. 1. Prayer. This psalm contains the model of a fervent prayer, (H.) which may be used by any person under affliction. W.—The Rabbins say David expresses too much confidence in his own integrity, and therefore was soon after permitted to fall; while others assert that he spoke thus after the murder of Urias, to avert God's wrath from his army before Rabbath. But this supposition is improbable, (C.) as well as the other. H.—The Fathers think that this psalm was composed during the persecution of Saul, and that it contains the sentiments of Jesus Christ and of his Church, under the persecution of infidels. There are some very difficult passages in it. C.—My justice. Heb. “attend to justice,” (H.) which amounts to the same thing; as no one would make this petition, unless he supposed that he was in the right. “Here the justice of my cause.” Principes. Bert.—“Hear the just man.” S. Jer. H.—Lips. I do not attempt to deceive thee, like the hypocrite; or rather I have not acted with deceit, or endeavoured to excite rebellion, as I have been accused. C.—In my just cause, hear my unfeigned petition. W.

Ver. 2. Countenance. Pronounce sentence, (Est. 1:19. C.) if I have done wrong. I do not refuse punishment. Ps. 7:5. H.—The Gr. and Lat. copies vary. Some read correctly with the Heb. “Let thy eyes behold what is wrong.” Yet S. Jer. (ep. ad Sun.) has “right,” with the Syr. &c. Others more commonly read, “Let mine eyes behold justice.” C.—Montanus, however, substitutes rectitudines for iniquitates, as Pagnin had rendered mesharim, and Prot. “the things that are equal.” H.—“Holy preachers are the eyes of Christ ... let them see what is just ... and fulfil the justice which they preach.” S. Jer.—God sees all things, and will pass a just sentence. W.

Ver. 3. Fire. I have experienced all sorts of misery. C.—Iniquity. Heb. “Thou hast not found; I have thought.” But the same word without points, zamoithi, (H.) has the sense given by the Sept. and they knew nothing of these points. Bert.—We may also translate, “Thou hast not found in me any criminal thoughts. My mouth has not transgressed thy orders.” If some thoughts of taking revenge by killing Saul, presented themselves involuntarily, David repressed them; (C.) and when he was alone with him at night in a cave, he would not suffer him to be hurt, 1 K. 26:7. Theod.—He asserts that he had gone through tribulations without offending. Those who are innocent or penitent, may pray with this confidence; as the Church may, which has always some saints, on which account she is styled holy. W.

Ver. 4. Men. Houb. “My mouth shall not pass to the pretexts of Adam.” I will not seek for excuses in sin. H.—“My mouth utters not vows to the vain works of men.” Prin. disc.—But these versions are singular. Bert.—Hard. Heb. “way of the robber.” Purits, or pirts, (S. Jer. H.) means also “fracture.” Bert.—David was ordered by God to retire into the wilderness, and to caves, where he was obliged to live like robbers, (C.) and was branded (C.) with the title of a fugitive slave by Nabal, 1 K. 25:10. H.—Yet the actions of David were very different from theirs. Bert.—He did not speak about the works of men, in power to condemn Saul, or any other, being averse to all detraction, and prescribing to himself the strictest laws, (C.) which God had ever promulgated. Prot. “I have purposed that my mouth shall not transgress. (4) Concerning the works of men, by the word of thy lips, I have kept me from the paths of the destroyer.” The division of the verses is arbitrary. H.—David kept the narrow path of virtue. W.

Ver. 5. Perfect. Heb. “support” me in these hard ways, where I am in continual danger of falling. C.—A Deo est incipere, a Deo est finire. S.

Jer.—God's grace enables us to begin and to perfect every good work.
H.—None can walk right of themselves. W.

Ver. 6. Heard me, of former occasions. This encourages me to pray with more confidence (Bert.) and fervour. Bona vota quoties effectum percipiunt, multiplicantur. S. Greg. Mor. xxxv. 3.—Heb. also, “thou wilt hear me favourably.” S. Jer. H.

Ver. 7. Mercies. We become accustomed to the ordinary effects of grace, which are always admirable; and we are astonished only at miraculous conversions and occurrences. Orig.—Some such manifestation of the divine power seemed now requisite, to deliver David from such a powerful rival as Saul. C.—Syr. “Lord, make thy holy one appear as a prodigy, as the Saviour of those who hope in thee.” S. Jer.—“O thou Saviour of those who hope.” H.

Ver. 8. Eye. God has shewn particular attention to protect the apple of the eye. He watches still more over his servants, (Zac. 2:8) for whom all things procure good. Rom. 8:28. Saul had declared himself against David, because he had been chosen to succeed him, and thus he opposed the designs of God. C.—The prophet prays that he may never give way to such impiety. W.—Wings, as a hen does her chickens. H.—Defend me from the furious countenance of my enemies. W.

Ver. 10. Their fat. That is, their bowels of compassion: for they have none for me. Ch.—They have become fat, and have given way to greater insolence, as we see too often verified. Deut. 32:15. Job 15:26. Ps. 72:7. Chal. C.—Proudly. Libertines are often prompted by vanity to speak as they do against God and man. H.—If Collins, Tindal, &c. had been cast upon some desert island, they would probably never have written such irreligious works as there would have been none to applaud them. Bert.

Ver. 11. Earth, to testify their wrath. So Virgil describes Juno.

Diva solo fixos oculos aversa tenebat. Æn. l.

—Hebrew, ashurenu, is rendered “by out step,” (Mont.) or contemplation. But the Sept. have explained it as a verb, as well as S. Jerom, (Bert.) who reads, “marching against me; now they have surrounded me,” (H.) like wild bulls. C.—Sym. “blessing me, they have presently cast down their eyes, they have prepared snares, to throw me down upon the ground.” They have sought my ruin both by craft and by open force. Even those who were once my friends and admirers, are now turned against me. H.—He alludes particularly to the courtiers of Saul. C.—They intend utterly to destroy me, even to the ground. W.—Heb. “by our step they have now surrounded us,” (Mont.) conformably to Keri; though the text, followed by Pagnin, has, “In our path, they have surrounded me.”

Ver. 12. They have taken me, is not expressed in Heb. H.

Ver. 13. Disappoint. Heb. “meet him,” as an enemy. Lev. 26:23.—Thy sword. The wicked are employed by God to chastise the just, and will then be thrown into the fire. Isai. 10:5. Jer. 50:23. C.—They little think that they are subservient to the designs of Providence, as they attribute their success to their own might. Whether we beg that God would take his sword from the wicked, or that we may be freed from their malice, is much the same. Bert.—Hebrew may express the latter sentiment, “Deliver my soul from the wicked, thy sword, (14) the men of thy hand, worldings, whose portion is temporal, in this life,” &c. H.—Many other versions may be given: (C.) by they all tend to shew the fleeting pleasures of God’s enemies, who are thus rewarded for their transient virtues, and reserved for eternal torments. H.—Man is not sufficient to resist that power, which they exercise by God’s permission. Hence David begs that it may be taken away. W.

Ver. 14. Divide them from the few, &c. That is, cut them off from the earth, and the few trifling things thereof; which they are so proud of, or, divide them from the few; that is, from thy elect, who are but few; that they may no longer have it in their power to oppress them. It is not meant by way of a curse or imprecation; but, as many other similar passages in the psalms, by way of a prediction, or prophecy of what should come upon them, in punishment of their wickedness.—Thy hidden stores: thy secret treasures, out of which thou furnishest those earthly goods, which with a bountiful hand thou hast distributed both to the good and the bad. Ch.—Of children. Heb. “their children are satiated.” Houb. Bert.—Some copies read $\upsilon\epsilon\iota\omega\nu$, (Rom. Sept.) instead of $\upsilon\tau\omega\nu$. “They have been filled with hogs’ flesh.” The mistake was easy in Greek. C. S. Jerom agrees with the Vulg. H.—A numerous family was the great desire of the Jews. David is willing to forego every temporal advantage, and only prays that he may live in his own country, and attend the divine worship in the tabernacle. This was the glory of Israel, v. 15. 1 K. 4:21. C.—He predicts the final separation of the wicked from the elect, which sometimes begins in this life. Their worldly joys are hidden or disapproved by God. W.—The feed on the poor servants of our Lord, (H.) whose life is hidden. M.

Ver. 15. Appear. S. Jer. “I shall be filled, when I shall awake in thy likeness,” (H.) at the resurrection: (Phil. 3:21 and 1 Cor. 13:12) or “when thy likeness, the Messias, shall rise again:” or (as the same expression is used by the Sept. as Num. 12:8.) David begs for actual inspiration, "thou wilt comfort my with the prophetic spirit." C.—Perhaps he might also desire to see the tabernacle again, or even now prepare to erect a temple unto the Lord; (2 K. 7:2. H.) or he begs for the gifts of grace and glory, which will restore the image of God, effaced by sin. 1 Jo. 3:2. Bert.—Then the just being approved, will taste that joy which alone can satiate the heart of man, when he shall behold God. W.

PSALM 17

PSALM 17. (DILIGAM TE DOMINE.)

David's thanks to God for his delivery from all his enemies.

Ver. 1. This title is almost wholly taken from the book of Kings, except Unto the end for; instead of which we read, And David spoke, &c. (H.) which are the words of the inspired writer; so that Ferrand is very rash in rejecting both these titles. David wrote this psalm after he had subdued the Moabites, &c. C.—He was inspired to write it (W.) twice, with some variations, (Bert.) 74 in number, (Aberbanel) or many more, if we believe Kennicott, who lays them to the charge of transcribers, perhaps, (H.) with greater reason. C.—We cannot doubt but this psalm regards David. But there are some passages which refer to Jesus Christ and his Church more directly; and in general, David must here be considered as only (Bert.) the figure of the Messias, and of the just in his Church. W.—James Paine has endeavoured to prove, with great ingenuity, that the whole must be explained of Jesus Christ, and that the name of Saul stands for “the grave;” as the points which are of modern date, only need to be changed. Thus the sufferings of our Saviour, and the punishment of the Jews in the last siege of Jerusalem are described; and thus it is clear that S. Paul (Rom. 15:9) has cited this ps. in it proper sense. Bert.—See v. 10. 41.—SS. Jerom and Aug. explain it of the victories of David, of the Messias, and of his Church. C.—Saul may be particularly mentioned, because he was the most powerful. W.

Ver. 2. I will love thee, as a mother does her son. He that loves has fulfilled the law. This word is omitted 2 K. 22:2. C.—Strength. Ibid.—Rock. H.—The Sept. have inserted some alterations in the Psalms, giving the sense of the Hebrew. W.—Others attribute the variations to David, or to the mistake of transcribers. H.

Ver. 3. Firmament. Heb. “rock and my citadel, and my deliverer. My God, (or strong one) my rock.” S. Jer. “my strong one.” The two words which are rendered “my rock,” are salhi and metsudathi. H.—David frequently retired to such places for safety. The idea was beautiful and striking. Such multiplicity of titles shews the gratitude (C.) and affection which David felt. C.—Here are nine, and we may add the three metaphorical Heb. terms, “rock, citadel, and buckler.” Can we refuse to love One from whom we have received so many favours?—

And in, &c. These words are most probably cited by S. Paul, (Heb. 2:13) though they occur also in Isai. 8:18.—Protector. Heb. “buckler.” Bert.—Horn. This title is given to Jesus Christ, Luke 1:69. It is an allusion to beasts which attack their opponents with their horns (Theod. Deut. 33:17) being an emblem of strength (W.) and glory. C.—And my, &c. (2 K.) he lifted me up and is my refuge; my Saviour, thou wilt deliver me from iniquity. Heb. “violence.”

Ver. 4. Praising. Heb. “praised;” and (2 K.) the Lord, who is worthy to be praised. H.—Chal. agrees here with the Sept. and Vulg. which seems more natural. C.—The sense is the same. Bert.

Ver. 5. Sorrows ... iniquity. Heb. “cables ... Belial.” By these figurative expressions, David declares to what dangers he had been exposed. They seem to be more applicable to our Saviour’s agony. Bert.—The wicked were constantly laying snares for both. We have the same idea enforced in the next verse. H.—The words are put into the mouth of fallen man, in the mass for Septuagesima. W.

Ver. 7. Called. All these words are in the future, 2 K. and Heb. H.—But as they relate to an event that was past, they seem to be as well expressed here as they are in Duport’s Greek Psalms. Bert.—Both are true; as David had prayed, and would continue to pray, for God’s protection; otherwise he would have deserved to lose it. We must always pray, and never faint. H.—Temple, “from my heart;” (S. Aug.) from the tabernacle at Gabaaon, (Lyran) or from heaven. Chal. Euseb. C.—Earnest prayer is the best remedy against temptations and affliction. God will not fail to hear those who are sincere, as he did the prophet. W.

Ver. 8. With them is not in Heb. Lo, illi refers to God. Furor fuit ei. Mont.—“He was wroth.” Prot. Yet he displayed his power on the mountains, as if he had been displeased with them, or with the enemies (v. 4) whom he would thus strike with awe. H.—These expressions are not to be taken in a gross literal sense. C.—God shewed himself as earnest in the protection of David, (H.) as if he had been in a rage; (C.) or as if the elements had all conspired to defend him. Theod.—This most pompous description (C.) alludes to the wonders wrought at Sinai, and the terrors which would happen at the death and resurrection of Christ, and at his last coming. Some moderns think that the overthrow of the Babylonians, and other enemies of God’s people, are also denoted. The sinner, touched by divine grace, implores mercy, and feels the remorse of conscience, the ropes or sorrows of hell, and a dread of God’s just judgments hanging over him. Bert.—These cause the most haughty and obstinate to tremble. W.

Ver. 9. By it. This relates to the clouds, thunder, and lightning. Muis.—God's wrath is compared with smoke, fire, a dark night, or mist. W.

Ver. 10. Feet. A violent storm of rain. Hence the Pagans borrowed:

Jupiter et læto descendit plurimus imbri. Virg. Ec. 7.

—The prophets Isai. (29:6) and Nahum (1:3) speak in the same lofty strains; (C.) and shall any one despise the language of Scripture? Nothing can exceed its sublimity. Heb. is rather more expressive, (v. 9.) “a fire devoured;” (v. 11.) “on a cherub, and flew; he flew most swiftly;” like and eagle. Bert.—Heb. vida. H.

Ver. 11. Winds. God mounts his chariot, as it were, (Ezec. 1:4. &c.) to come speedily to David's assistance. Æscylus, and other pagan authors, seem to have imitated his description. Euseb. præp. evan. xiii. 13.—The Fathers explain the former verse of Christ's incarnation, or of his second coming; and this of his ascension. S. Athan. &c.—They may also (H.) intimate that God is ready to pardon as well as to punish. W.—Plato (Phædro) represents the Deity on “a winged chariot, directing and taking care of all things.” H.

Ver. 12. Pavilion. Job 22:14 and 26:9. The Jews had this idea of God's throne, of which we behold only the less brilliant side, as the Egyptians did that of the cloud. Ex. 14:19. The poets represent Jupiter surrounded with clouds and darkness. Hesiod. op. 125 and 255. Iliad O.—Air. The parallel passage, (2 K.) seems more accurate. Dropping waters out of the clouds of the heavens. Heb. “waters bound up in darksome clouds.” C.—God is incomprehensible in himself, and his counsels are inscrutable. W.

Ver. 13. Clouds. 2 K. The coals (Heb. “flames”) of fire were kindled. Two words, habaw haberu, his clouds removed, (H.) omitted in this passage, are here supplied, as the former word is found in Syr. and Arab. But then hail and coals of fire seem improper for “they kindled into coals of fire;” and in the next verse they are redundant; being therefore omitted in 2 K. 22 in the best editions of the Sept. and in the old Italic of Blanchini. Capel supposes they have been inserted from the preceding verse, which is rendered more probably by the Heb. MS. 5. Kennicott Dis. 1.—They have been inserted in some editions of Sept. from the Heb. of Theodotion, (C.) or Symmachus. Montf.—This unusual third hemistic occurs in a smaller type in Brettinger's (Ken.) and Grabe's Sept. but they indicate thereby that it was not in the Alex. MS. as it is not in that of the Vatican. If it were in its proper place, we should read at least grandinem, &c. This magnificent description of a thunder-storm (H.) may allude to that which routed the Philistines. 2

K. 5:24. Is. 28:21. C.—The lightning seemed to dispel the gloom. Theod. Flamin.—Though man is overpowered with God's majesty, yet he is instructed how to act by those whom God has commissioned to teach. W.

Ver. 15. Arrows. Thunderbolts. Tela reponuntur manibus fabricata Cyclopum. Metam. Hesiod Theog. 708.

Ver. 16. Discovered. The earthquakes were so great, that such dreadful effects might have been expected. These phenomena sometimes make the sea retire, and new islands appear. Pliny i. 84. and xxxi. 5. &c.—The Jews supposed that the sea was the common source of all fountains, and that the earth was founded on it. Ps. 23:2. Eccle. 1:7. C.

Ver. 17. Sent his angel, &c.—Waters, which often represent multitudes, (Apoc. 17:15. C.) and afflictions. W.—David seemed in danger of perishing. C.

Ver. 18. For me. He may allude to the giant Jesbibenob, or to Saul, who surrounded him on all sides; (1 K. 23:26 and 2 K. 21:15. C.) and, in general, to all his temporal or spiritual adversaries. W.

Ver. 19. Affliction, when my friends joined Absalom. Theod.—In the rest of this psalm, the prophet chiefly uses words in the obvious sense, yet mystically speaks of Christ, and of the faithful. W.

Ver. 20. Place, where I was not hemmed in by my enemies. H.—Saved me, by repentance, out of his infinite mercy, (Euseb. S. Athan.) without any deserts. W.

Ver. 21. Will reward. S. Jerom, "hath rewarded," (C.) yet the edition of 1533 reads retribuet. H.—Justice, with respect to my enemies, whom I have not injured; (C.) or my sincere desire to serve God. Theod.

Ver. 23. Judgments. Commands, or treatment both of the just and of the wicked.

Ver. 24. Him, by his grace. W.—Iniquity, and be careful not to relapse. Others explain it in the past time. I have not shed the blood of my enemy when I could have done it. 1 K. 24:6. 14. C.—Fui immaculatus. S. Jer. H. It seems most probable that David composed this before his fall, as Aberbanel, one of the most learned of the Jews, asserts. If he be only a figure of Jesus Christ, we may easily conceive how the latter might speak thus of his innocence, and declare his abhorrence of all sin, though he was made a sin-offering, having undertaken to expiate the iniquities of mankind. Bert.

Ver. 25. And. He repeateth, (v. 21) that God will render to every one as he deserves. W.—Matt. 16. That all sins are equal is the error of the Stoics. H.

Ver. 27. Perverted. No version can properly express this idea. God turns away from those who abandon him, treating every one according to his works. If we do not advance in piety, it is a sign that God perceives something amiss in us. Bert.—He cannot but abhor duplicity, and resist the wicked. Lev. 26:23. 40. Prov. 3:34. He will make the craft of men turn against themselves, as he evinced in the case of Laban, Joseph's brethren, Pharaoh, and Saul. Sinners complain of him without reason, Ezech. 18:25. C.—Some improperly use this text to shew, that people will adopt the manners of those with whom they associate, (H.) though it means that God will treat the good liberally, and the wicked with severity. Lev. 26:23. 24. Amama.

Ver. 28. Proud, as thou hast already done. C.—

Insignem attenuat Deus, Obscura promens. Horat.

Ver. 29. Lamp, giving me hopes of redress, and of the Messias. C.

Ver. 30. Temptation. David was almost continually assailed by enemies. C.—Sept. πειρατησιον, signifies “a place of pirates;” denoting what crafty foes he had to encounter, (Bert.) or “a place or time to learn the military exercise,” a warfare. Job 7:1. But gedud, (H.) means “a troop,” designed to make incursions, as those under Jephthah and David. Heb. “In thee I will run armed;” (S. Jer.) or, “at the head of my troops.” C.—“I will break, (Pagnin) or, run through an army.” Mont.—No fortification can hold out. H.—He alludes particularly to the wall of the Jebusites, which Joab first mounted, though extremely high. 2 K. 5:6. C.—With God's help, every difficulty may be surmounted. W.—Watch and pray, that ye enter not into temptation, as our Saviour admonishes.

Ver. 31. As for, might be omitted. H.—The conduct of God towards men is irreproachable. He will treat all according to their deserts, and will fulfil his promises of protecting the just. Euseb.—Heb. “He is the strong God ... his words are pure as gold ... He is the shield,” &c. Bert.

Ver. 32. Our God. Will any one then hinder Him from doing as He has said? H.—Heb. “Who is the rock but our God?” Bert.—God is often styled a rock, tsur. Yet S. Jerom and Pagnin render it “strong,” or “the strong one.” H.—There is only one Lord and Saviour of all. W.

Ver. 33. Blameless. Whatever good is in me, comes from his grace, v.

21. 24. H.—God has prevented me from killing Saul and Nabal; He has rescued me from the abyss into which I had fallen. C.

Ver. 34. Harts. Prot. “hinds.” H.—The Hebrews generally prefer to specify the female. Harts are remarkably swift, and this quality was greatly esteemed in a warrior. Asael is praised for it; (2 K. 2:18) and Homer styles his hero “the swift-footed Achilles.” C.—As harts trample serpents under their feet, says Theodoret, so I treat my enemies.—High. Heb. “my high places,” where I have so often baffled the efforts of my persecutors. H.

Ver. 35. And thou. Chal. gives the same sense. “He strengthens,” &c. C.—Heb. “and a brazen bow is broken by my arms.” Mont.—Prot. “a bow of steel.” Perhaps not knowing that the ancients had the art of making brass answer the same purposes. See Proclus, Hesiod, &c. H.—They made all sorts of weapons of it. Job (20:24) seems even to insinuate that it was harder than iron. Our brass is too brittle. To break a bow, often means to obtain a victory. 1 K. 2:4. Jer. 49:5. C.—David gained many over a lion or a bear, over Goliath, &c. W.

Ver. 36. Of thy. The latter word is omitted in some copies of the Sept. while others change it into “my.” But the Heb. is agreeable to the Vulg. C.—End. Thou hast preserved me by salutary correction. S. Aug. H.—Heb. “thy goodness shall multiply me” with children. Sym. conformably to 2 K. 22 has, “my obedience shall lift me up.” C.—The Heb. may, however, admit the sense of the Vulg.—And thy, &c. is a paraphrase of the former sentiment, or it is borrowed from Theodotion. Bert.—Grabe marks from unto the end, &c. as omitted in Heb. H.—Luther and the Dutch translate, “When thou humblest me, then thou exaltest me,” to shew the salutary effects of suffering. But there is nothing of the kind in the original. Amama.

Ver. 37. Weakened, or tired. Chal. H.—I am now free from danger. All my enterprizes have succeeded. 2 K. 8:6 and 1 Par. 18:13. See Prov. 4:12. C.

Ver. 38. I will. Bellarmine would supply “I said I will;” and thus all is connected. But these future victories relate more to Jesus Christ. Bert.—David also continued making fresh conquests, (H.) and so entirely subdued his enemies all around, that they were not able to make head, even against his successor.

Ver. 40. Against me. No prince was ever more courageous than David, as the single combat with Goliath evinces. We know not that he ever lost a battle. He refers all the glory to God. C.

Ver. 41. Upon me. An expression often used to denote a fight. Jos. 3:12. &c. C.—God strengthens his servants, and weakens their enemies. W.

Ver. 42. Lord. This must be understood of Absalom, who offered sacrifices, (2 K. 15:12. Bert.) or of Saul, who, receiving no answer, consulted a witch. The Philistines also brought their gods with them, so that they were taken and burnt; (2 K. 5:21) and the other pagans, finding no aid in their idols, might in time of danger, invoke the Lord. C.—This is “the testimony of a soul naturally Christian,” as Tertullian (Apol. xvii.) speaks, to have recourse to the great and only God, in the utmost distress. H.—Deus ut subveniat oratur; ipsa veritas, cogente naturâ ... erumpit. Lac. Inst. ii. 1.

Ver. 43. Streets. Thus he treated the Ammonites, &c. 2 K. 8:2 and 12:31. C.—Jesus Christ will rule over his enemies with a rod of iron. Bert.

Ver. 44. Gentiles. Here he begins to predict the glory of the Messiah, though what he says may be applied to himself. David’s own people began to revolt, under Absalom and Seba; after he had subdued the most powerful nations around, 2 K. 20:1. The chosen people rejected Christ, (C.) while the nations were converted. The reprobation of the former was prefigured by those rebels. W.

Ver. 46. Faded, (inveterati sunt) “are grown old.” H.—The Jews had been long the objects of God’s favours: yet they fell away. Thus we often see priests outdone in piety by simple laics. Bert.—David continues in the comparison of a tree which bears no fruit; (C.) thus lying, as it were, and frustrating the just expectations of the owner. Subjects do the like, when they revolt; (Isai. 30:9) and thus deserve the title of strange. Prot. “the strangers shall fade away, and be afraid out of their close places;” (S. Jer.) “shall flow away, and be contracted in their straits;” while I shall be at large, v. 37. The last verb gachregu, (H.) occurs no where else. It may signify “shall be withered,” or burnt, from carar. C.

Ver. 47. Liveth. This is my consolation, though it must fill the obstinate sinner with dismay. H.—In a sort of transport, David wishes all happiness to his great benefactor. He may also speak of Christ’s resurrection. C.—My God. Heb. “rock:” a title frequently applied to God, in acknowledgment of his stability and protection. Bert.

Ver. 48. Avengest, or “grantest me revenges,” (H.) and the victory; inflicting a just punishment on the wicked. David was too well informed to delight in sentiments of revenge. 3 K. 3:11. Jesus Christ takes vengeance on his enemies, but this id done without passion. The love of justice is his only motive. David approves of this conduct. C.—Enraged enemies. Vulg. iracundis. H.—Sept. have thus explained aph, “wrath;” others join it with the following verse, “But (C.) or yea,” (H.) etiam. The former version is, however, very accurate. Bert.

Ver. 50. Nations. S. Paul (Rom. 15:9) adduces this to prove the vocation of the Gentiles. C.—We cannot doubt but the great things announced in the psalm pertain to Christ. Bert.—We see the completion of this prophecy, as there is no Christian nation which does not use the psalms of David to praise God. Theod. &c.—This practice is very common (Pref. W.) in all places here either Jews or Christians are found.

Ver. 51. Great. This is intimated by the plural salutes, “salvations;” as David had experienced innumerable favours. H.—He speaks of himself in the third person, to lead our minds to the Messiah, in whom this was more gloriously accomplished. The greater honour of this chief family of Israel, consisted in giving birth to so great a personage, in whom all are blessed. C. Isai. 11:1. Ezec. 34:23.—For ever. The true Church will never perish; (H.) God still protecting it, as he did David, v. 48. W.

PSALM 18. (CŒLI ENARRANT.)

The works of God shew forth his glory; his law is to be esteemed and loved.

Ver. 1. David. It is not known when this was composed. David praises the works and law of God. Some passages are applied to Jesus Christ and his apostles, Rom. 10:18. C.—When any text of a psalm is thus quoted, many judiciously conclude that the whole must be understood in the same sense, as the harmony will thus be greater. It seems there are two literal senses here, one regarding the law, whither natural or Mosaic; the other pertaining to the apostles and the law of the gospel; (Bert.) the “beloved” David of the latter days. W.

Ver. 2. Firmament. Heb. “expansion,” or region of the stars, far above our atmosphere. Bert.—These two sentences express the same idea, unless the former may denote what we behold, and the firmament be explained of the higher heavens, (H.) where we imagine the throne of God to be placed. Some have taken these expressions in a gross sense, and asserted that the heavens are animated. Job 38:7. But we must allow that they are figurative expressions, which seem to give a soul to plants, stars, &c. C.—The beautiful works of God extort our admiration. H.—The silence of heaven speaks louder than any trumpet. S. Chrys.—“Who can behold the heavens, and yet be so foolish as not to acknowledge that a God exists? said Cicero, (H.) a learned pagan; (Arusp. and Nat. Deo. 2. C.) though they cannot determine of what nature the Deity may be. Leg. i. M.—Hands. Chal. “Those who look up at the heavens, publish the glory of the Lord; and those who raise their eyes towards the air, announce his works.” C.—The silent works declare God’s Majesty to those who consider them, and his preachers make the same known to their hearers by word of mouth. W.—S. Paul reproaches the philosophers of paganism for not understanding the language of the creation. Rom. 1:20. Job 12:7. H.—The Church, which is so often styled the kingdom of heaven, makes God known, not only as a Creator, but also as a Redeemer. The figure is here most beautifully preserved. Heaven denotes the Church, as the stars represent apostolic men, who cease not to perform their duties day or night, in happier days as well as under persecution. Jesus Christ is the true sun of justice, enlightening every man that cometh into the world. S. Jo. 1.—The Fathers have made these remarks. Bert.—What a consolation must it be for Catholics to think that the true doctrine will never cease, no more than the succession of day and night! We have received our creed, our orders and mission, from the apostles. The chain of succession has never been broken. Unhappy those who make a religion of their own to damn souls! who run, though God send them not! H.

Ver. 3. Utterth, with great force and abundance, eructat.—Knowledge of God. Bert.—Our knowledge is always on the increase. Abenezra.—The vicissitudes of day and night prove the wisdom of their author. Euseb.—They seem to sing in succession the praises of God. Bellarm.—This evinces the power of God, as the perpetual propagation of the gospel does that of Jesus Christ, whose Church will last till the end. W.—All the chief reformers acknowledged that there was no salvation out of the one true Church, and that the Church of Rome is such. Nightingale, p. 263. H.

Ver. 4. There. Sym. joins this with the preceding. “Will announce knowledge. Not by words or speeches, the sounds of which are not heard,” so as to be understood. H.—“They are not languages or words, the signification of which is unknown;” or Heb. “never has their voice been heard.” Beli, “not,” may also signify absque, “without;” and thus we may render, “no speeches, (or country) where their voice has not been heard.” Bert.—The sight of the heavens is sufficient to convince any one of the existence of God. H.—No nation, however barbarous, can plead ignorance. The Fathers have explained this of the gift of tongues, by means of which the apostles spoke languages which they had not studied. Acts 2:4. S. Aug. &c.—Some of every nation have heard, (W.) or will embrace, (H.) the Christian religion. W.

Ver. 5. Sound. So, S. Paul reads this text, though the Heb. have, “line.” Yet there is no reason why we should suppose that the Sept. read differently, or that the Jews have corrupted their copies, as they could derive no advantage from so doing (Bert.) here, unless it were to discredit the apostle; as infidels assert the truth of the Old Testament, to vilify the new. Kum (H.) may signify a “line,” (Bert.) or “writing.” Abenezra.—The greatest exactitude has been observed in forming the world, as if all had been measured by an architect. But the sense of the Vulg. is preferable, and is adopted by Sym. S. Jer. and the Syr. C. —Prot. “their line.” Marg. “their rule or direction.” Kolam, “their voice,” occurs in the preceding verse. The l might easily be lost, (H.) or omitted by a poetical licence. Genebrard. M.—Their, refers to the heavens representing the apostles, as S. Paul explains this text, to prove that all were inexcusable who would not believe the gospel. Bert.

Ver. 6. Sun. Here God seems to reside, (Ferrand) and the magnificence of his works shines forth, insomuch that almost all nations have offered divine honours to the sun, and even the Manichees adored it, imagining that it was the very body of Jesus Christ. S. Aug. con. Faust. xiv. 12. and xx. 6.—Heb. “For the sun he has place a tent in them,” the heavens, (S. Jer. H.) or the ends of the world. The Jews supposed that the heavens rested, like a tent, upon the earth. C. Diss.—The Heb. preposition l, may have (H.) different meanings, ad solem posuit, &c. “He placed a tent in them, at or for the sun.” The idea of the Vulg. is more noble, but we would not exclude the other, which is very good, (Bert.) and obviates the gross mistake of the Manichees. Amama.—The Vulg. may admit the fig. hypallage, (M. Geneb.) as good authors say dare classibus austros, and thus it may signify “he placed the sun in his tent.” H.—This vast body stands in need of no vehicle, or tent, but itself. Diodorus.—It was placed in the firmament at first, (Gen. 1:16) and still performs its revolutions exactly. H.—Giant. Moderns would render “a strong man;” and Bythner remarks that the bulk of a giant would render him less fit for running, as if the stoutest wrestlers were not often the most active. Bert.—The sun is represented as a hero at some of the ancient games. S. Aug. and S. Jer. explain all this of Jesus Christ, who diffuses the light and warmth of his grace throughout the world. C.—He always resides with the Church, and is never divorced from her. W.

Ver. 7. Circuit. So the Heb. word is rendered “revolution.” Sept. and Vulg. “meeting” occursus, may insinuate that the sun is found in the centre, while the earth moves daily and yearly round it, according to the Copernican system. But we must be more attentive to the life and motions of Jesus Christ, in whom the Deity resided corporally. Bert.

Ver. 8. The law. As the sun gives light to the world, so the law serves to direct mankind, and is another most powerful motive for us to praise God. This raises our hearts and minds still more perfectly to him, recalling us from our wanderings, and confirming our knowledge. Light is necessary for the body, and the law for the soul. The prophet admires eight characteristics of this divine law, which he designates by different names; as in the 118th ps. some thing relate only to the evangelical law, which converts souls, (Bert.) and lasts for ever. v. 10. H.—The law of nature and of Moses are nevertheless also commended, (Theod.) inasmuch as the morality is always the same; and some faith in Christ, to come, or already past, is requisite under every dispensation. Hence he is called the Lamb slain from the beginning. Implicit faith would suffice for the less informed, before our Saviour’s coming; but now, under the light of the gospel, we must express our belief in his incarnation, as well as in the blessed Trinity. More is required of those to whom more has been given. H.—

Unspotted. Heb. and Sept. “irreprehensible.” C.—Who indeed could pretend to find any fault with it, since it comes from God? H.—The laws of men are imperfect, and liable to change. Those of Draco were too sanguinary, and gave place to Solon’s, which were deemed too mild, &c. How happy would all be if they would embrace the law of the gospel! Bert.—Converting. Heb. “tranquillizing souls,” (M.) by keeping the passions under. H.—Testimony, declaring the will of God to men.—Little ones. The simple, and the wicked; as both are so called. C.—Pethi, “easily persuaded.” M.—It directs the former, and keeps the latter in awe by punishment. C.—All, in general, must confess their ignorance, and want of the divine law, to reap any benefit from it. H.—This is the first lesson which it imparts. Bert.—The law is most pure in itself, whether we understand that given to Moses, or the gospel. But the latter makes the observers unspotted, by the grace which the Holy Ghost communicates to them, though all who barely read and know the law, have no share in this happiness. God is the author of salvation, sweetly inviting all by the perfections of his law, which confers light and gladness, to co-operate with grace, that they may obtain the promised reward. v. 12 and 2 Tim. 4:6. W.—The like grace was offered from the beginning, so that none will ever be punished who has not deserved it, having had the means to perform his duty. H.

Ver. 9. Justices. The law displays what is just, and renders those who observe it agreeable to God, (S. Greg. Naz.) filling their hearts with joy, by the testimony of a good conscience, and the prospect of felicity. C. Prov. 6:23.

Ver. 10. Fear; or “the law accompanied with fear;” of which he is speaking. This fear is filial and pure, such as a child must have of displeasing his father. Bert.—Yet even servile fear, which restrains us from committing sin, lest we incur punishment, is a gift of God, and prepares the way for charity. Trid. Sess. xiv. 4. But we must not stop here, like Achab and Antiochus. If we understand by fear, the moral law, it will subsist as long as there shall be men.—Themselves. Sept. ἐπὶ τὸ ὅτι, “by that very thing,” that they are the judgments of the Lord, (H.) who cannot do wrong. Dan. 2:27. C.—Heb. “truth itself, is justified altogether.” H.—Infidels acknowledge that the morality of the Gospel is excellent, but they reject the dogmatical part. Would He, who has prescribed such noble rules of conduct, lead our understanding astray, by requiring us to believe what is false? Bert.

Ver. 11. Stones. So S. Jerom renders the Heb. Prot. “than gold; yea, than much fine gold.” Paz (H.) denotes the finest gold of Uphan, or of the Phison; which is probably the river Phasis. Gen. 2:11. C.—Yet many explain this word of the topaz or chrysolite, which is of a golden colour. The Vulg. expresses topaz, (Ps. 118:127) where the Sept. have, “a precious stone.”—Honeycomb, as the English and German versions have it, though the Heb. signify, “the dropping of the honeycombs;” which is the most excellent honey. Bert.—This interpretation is inserted in the Prot. margin, and answers to S. Jerom’s favum redundantem. Nothing can be more delicious, or more magnificent. H.

Ver. 12. For. I speak from experience. C.—If I had no other inducement, I would observe this law for the consolation, (H.) and repeated advantages which I have derived from it. Theod.—Those who keep the same, and content not themselves with reading or hearing only, may feel the same impressions.—Reward: on which account the prophet declares that he observed the justifications; (Ps. 118:112) though that passage is corrupted in the Prot. version. W.—Heb. “wherefore thy servant shall teach them;” (S. Jer.) or rather, “is instructed by them, and convinced that in keeping them there are frequent falls. Who,” &c. 13. C.—Hekeb may indeed signify “a fall,” or tripping up the heels. But it is more commonly rendered “a reward,” (as Prot. Mont. &c. here agree) or end, as 1 Peter (1:9) has it. H.—The instruction, which the observer of the laws obtains, arises from that observance, inasmuch as “he is attentive to them.” Sept. φυλάσσει αὐτά. This must therefore be understood, and is well expressed by Custodit. Taste, and see that the Lord is sweet. Ps. 33:9. Berthier.

Ver. 13. Sins. Who can always decide when a sin is only venial? H.—Though I may have avoided the grosser transgressions, how can I be assured that my heart is innocent? C.—This assurance is reserved for Methodists, who seem to look upon it as essential, before a person can obtain salvation. But where does God specify this condition? We know that (H.) we are to work out our salvation in fear and trembling; and that S. Paul though conscious to himself of nothing said: yet in this I am not justified, &c. 1 Cor. 4:4 and 9:27. Phil. 2:12. Heb. speaks of “ignorances,” which might not however be wholly blameless. Bert.—Ones, or enemies: “... and from the proud preserve.” Sym. Chal. But he alludes to the distinction of sins of ignorance and of pride, (Lev. 4:2. Num. 15:30. C.) or malice. H.—David had not fallen into many sins of the latter description, though his adultery and murder were such. But the former are daily sins, into which even the just fall frequently. C.—None can be assured of their state, (Eccles. 9) but are kept between hope and fear. W.

Ver. 14. Those, &c. Or “from strangers,” alienis, whose company we cannot avoid with too much caution. H.—Heb. “the proud.” It is conjectured (Bert.) that the Sept. read r for d, in mizzedim. H. Amama.—But this is not necessary, as they might include the proud, and all the wicked, under the name of “strangers,” which term is particularly applicable to idolaters, (Isai. 13:11) and all scandalous sinners, who are strangers to the law; and from whose society and dominion we may all beg to be delivered. Bert.—Spare. Heb. “free,” (S. Jer.) or “withhold.” Nature is so prone to evil, that the prophet prays earnestly for grace to resist, or to be kept out of danger. H.—All sins cannot be avoided, but preserve me from wilfully committing any enormous crime. Rivet.—Deliver me from the devil’s power. Theod.—Those who are in authority have much to dread, lest they be answerable for the sins of others, which they ought to have prevented; as all must fear giving scandal, &c. and so being accessory to another’s crime. H.—Delicta aliena affigunt me. S. Aug.—Yet sins of frailty, and of malice, are here meant; (Bell.) which last ought to be strange, or very uncommon.—Over me. Sept. $\mu\omicron\upsilon$. H.—S. Aug. reads dominata, which agrees better with delicta. If my secret sins, or those of others, do not oppress me, I shall pray with confidence, and be heard. C.—Yet dominata refers to alienis, strangers, or proud people, (Bert.) who are continually alluring to evil, both by word and example. How great must be the influence of such over their subjects, when even their equals take the infection so frequently! Vulgate might be rendered, “If my own had not ruled;” in which sense Pius IV. used this explanation on his death bed, knowing that his kindred had abused their power. Du Thou, B. vi. A.D. 1549. H.—Sin, pride; the source of all evil. S. Jer.—“Let men at last blush to be proud, for whose sake God was humbled." S. Aug.—If mortal sin be absent, the soul is just, and will be, one day, free from stain. W.

Ver. 15. Always. Heb. "to thy regards," such as thou mayst approve. H.—He joins mental with vocal prayer, speaking like an evangelist. Bert.—Helper. Heb. "rock." C.—S. Jer. and Prot. "strength." H.—Grace is requisite to persevere, as well as to be converted. W.

PSALM 19

PSALM 19. (EXAUDIAT TE DOMINUS.)

A prayer for the king.

Ver. 1. David. This psalm was to be sung when he or his successors went to battle. In a higher sense, it may allude to the victories of Christ, and of his Church. Bert.—Christian must offer up this prayer for their governors. W.—It was probably composed when the Ammonites and Syrians made such great preparations for war, v. 8 and 2 K. 10:6. 18. C.

Ver. 2. Hear thee, the Ruler; or Jesus Christ praying for his people. W.—Tribulation. War is always such. The victors themselves suffer, and many souls perish. C.—Name. The Messias, as the Jews often explain the expression, (Hooke, Prin.) or God himself, as others have it. Nomen ejus ipse. C.—The blessed Trinity is all one God. The name of the Lord is a strong tower, &c. Prov. 18:10. It was made known to Moses, to give him confidence. Ex. 3:13. H.—Great was the honour conferred on the patriarchs, that God should be styled the God of Abraham, &c.! But ours is not less, since we are authorized to call Him Our Father. Bert.

Ver. 3. Sion, where God was supposed to reside, in the tabernacle; though he was also in heaven, v. 7. C.

Ver. 4. Sacrifices. Heb. mincha, a sacrifice of flour, or unbloody; a figure of the Mass. W.—Minchothec, "thy presents" (Mont. H.) of fruits, &c.—Fat. Heb. also, "ashes," by miraculous fire, (Bert.) to testify God's acceptance; as at the sacrifices of Abel, (H.) Elias, &c. Lev. 9:24 and 3 K. 18:31 and 1 Par. 21:26. God forbade lean victims to be offered, as they might shew a want of respect; (Mal. 1:8) though he always regards the heart (C.) and faith of the offerer more than the victim. Heb. 11:4. H.—Sacrifices were offered before every important enterprize. 1 K. 13:12. C.—Fat here intimates what would be acceptable. W. Dan. 3:40. M.

Ver. 5. Counsels. We must suppose that those of a pious prince are right. C.—This condition is always understood. H.

Ver. 6. Salvation. Jesus Christ, who gives us the victory over all our spiritual enemies, (C.) or in thy prosperity; (W.) which we shall attribute to God. The first words may also be addressed to Him. We shall rejoice if thou grant us the victory, and we will return thanks. Heb. “we shall praise, or be praised, for thy salvation; and in thy name we shall lift up the standard.” C.—But there is no proof that nodgol, (H.) which occurs no where else, has this signification. It is probable that the Sept. read nogdol; and Houbigant adopts their version. S. Jerom has, “we shall dance.” All the versions denote joy. Bert.

Ver. 7. Hath saved. The prophets speak of future events as past. Bert.—The people were convinced of God’s protection, (C.) and anticipated what they would say at their triumphant return.—Anointed (Christum) the king, (C.) priest, (W.) or our Saviour, at his resurrection, (S. Athan.) after he had subdued his enemies. W.—Powers. That is, in strength. His right hand is strong and mighty to save them that trust in him. Ch.—The plural is often used to denote something most excellent, (H.) great strength, or heavenly forces. W.

Ver. 8. Call upon. Sept. Rom. Syr. &c. read, “we shall be exalted,” μεγαυνθησομεθα, (C.) as v. 6. Some call upon or trust in chariots, &c. H.—Heb. “remember,” which often implies to confide, (C.) and such we call upon as we hope will be able and willing (H.) to protect us. Bert.—Let our enemies assemble all their forces and auxiliaries, we shall not fear as long as God is for us. C.—The Jewish kings were forbidden to multiply horses, that they might not be tempted to confide in them. H.

Ver. 9. Bound. Their chariot wheels are entangled. Ex. 14:25. C.—Those who trust in the power of man, fall into captivity. W.—Their feet are ensnared. Bert.—The king. Heb. “Let the king hear us when we call.” Prot. (H.) “our king shall hear,” &c. Syr. “Word of the Lord, redeem us; Potent king, hear,” &c. But the Sept. is preferable, and the best critics often deviate from the Jews; (Muis. C.) though here the sense is very good, and adopted by S. Jerom. God is styled king in Heb. H.—This title is commonly given to the Messiah. Bert.—The Chal. seems to have had the second person of the blessed Trinity in view, as many of the Jews were acquainted with this mystery, particularly after the propagation of the gospel, when the paraphrase on the psalms was probably composed. H.—When the head is safe, the body is also preserved. W.—We must pray for our superiors, that we also may lead a quiet life. 1 Tim. 2:2. Their welfare is for the public good.

PSALM 20. (DOMINE IN VIRTUTE.)

Praise to God for Christ's exaltation after his passion.

Ver. 1. David, after his victory over the Ammonites; (Du Pin. C.) though many passages relate only to the Messias, as the Chaldee and even some of the modern Jews confess, (Kimchi. Muis.) with the holy Fathers, who explain all of Him. C.—Those who overcome the devil, are here concerned. W.

Ver. 2. King. Chal. adds, “the Messias shall reign; and how shall he rejoice when thou shalt have delivered him!” The people had promised to return thanks in the former psalm. H.—Christ our king as man, having by his divine power overcome his enemies, rejoiceth. W.

Ver. 3. Will. Heb. aresheth, “the proof or request,” (H.) which manifests the will. The term occurs no where else. Bert.—Our Saviour’s greatest desire was the glory of his Father, (H.) in man’s redemption. W.

Ver. 4. Sweetness. Heb. “of goodness,” the effects of thy mercy. H.—Thou hast made David a king according to thy own heart, and granted him victory, and many favours, even before he had asked for them. The humanity of Jesus Christ was still more glorified, (C.) by a gratuitous predestination.” S. Aug. Prædest. 30. Persev. 24. &c.—Stones. Heb. “fine gold or the topaz.” Ps. 18:11. Bert.—David took the crown of Melchom, weighing a talent. 2 K. 12:30. C.—God gave him the victory on every occasion. Eccli. 47:7. H.—He crowned Jesus Christ, the martyrs, and all those who have been ready to suffer for him. W.

Ver. 5. And ever. David was much favoured, and reigned a long time, as well as his posterity. 2 K. 7:12. 29. But this was literally verified only in the Messias, (C.) who was his son; (H.) and founded his Church on a rock, to endure unto the end. C.—What do we ask for on earth? All will be lost if we have not life; and this we cannot obtain for ever, without rising again. Therefore Jesus said, I am the resurrection and the life. Jo. 11:25.—We must live in him by faith, (Bert.) and suffer before we can expect a crown.

Ver. 7. To be, (in benedictionem.) Thou shalt inebriate him with a torrent of thy blessings. H.—Blessing shall take hold of him, if we may so speak, (Bert.) and embrace him for ever. H.—All the saints receive glory. But Christ alone can impart it to others, as all are blessed in him. Gen. 21. Jo. 1. W.—When people wish any happiness to their friends, they need only desire that they may be like David. See Gen. 18:18 and 48:20. Gal. 3:16. C.

Ver. 9. Thy hand. O king, Messias, or God. No earthly monarch can always punish his enemies. But none can escape the hand of the Almighty. He will bring all to judgment. Bert.—The just approve of God's decree in punishing. This is all a prediction. W.—Let thine enemies find thy power, so as to return to good. S. Jer.—To find, often means to attack, (Jud. 1:5 and 3 K. 13:24) or to accomplish with ease. Deut. 33:1.

Ver. 10. Anger. Lit. “face;” (vultus. H.) which sometimes intimates favour, v. 7. This passage may allude to the vengeance (C.) which David exercised upon the Ammonites, whom he burnt in kilns, (2 K. 12:31. Geier. Vat.) or to the destruction of Sodom. Gen. 19:28. Lam. 4:6. C.—It is a terrible thing to fall into the hands of an angry God, who will punish his enemies in a fire; to which S. Paul (Heb. 10:27) attributes rage, (H.) or emulation, as it will seem to strive to surpass all others. O that we may meditate on this fire! that the love of God may consume all our defects!—Trouble. Heb. “swallow up;” which is more energetic.

Ver. 11. Fruit of the womb, or all their possessions. The family of Herod was presently extirpated. Bert.—The works of the wicked must burn. S. Aug.—The severity shewn to the Ammonites was perhaps without example, v. 10. C.—But this will be more fully verified in the judgment of the wicked, whose schemes against Christ and his Church will fail. W.

Ver. 12. Intended. Heb. “turned aside,” like a torrent. The Ammonites had violated the law of nations, and had attempted to raise up very powerful enemies to invade David. C.—Establish. Hebrew leaves thee sentence imperfect, to shew the utter weakness or impotence of God's enemies. Bert.

Ver. 13. In thy remnants thou shalt prepare their face: or thou shalt set thy remnants against their faces. That is, thou shalt make them see what punishment remain for them hereafter from thy justice. Instead of remnants, S. Jerom renders it funes, that is cords or strings: viz. of the bow of divine justice, from which God directs his arrows against their faces;” (S. Jer.) or “thou wilt prepare thy arrows on thy bow-strings,”

&c. But as bemetharic (H.) may also have the sense of the Vulg. in thy remnants, we need not abandon this version; as it implies that after God shall have put his enemies to flight, he will turn their faces to receive “the last” of his arrows or blows; (Bert.) or He will meet them everywhere. H.—There seems to be some transposition in Heb. and the Vulg. as if we should read in reliquis eorum præparabis vultum tuum. “Thou wilt execute thy vengeance upon their children;” (C.) or, as this transposition is unnecessary, “thou shalt make them look at thy children;” (H.) the elect, to increase their rage. Bellar. Jans.—To behold the glory of the just, which might so easily have been their own, will greatly mortify the reprobate at the last day. H.

Ver. 14. Exalted. God can receive no increase; but he manifests what he has. Theod.—Power. Lit. “powers.” H.—While the wicked perish, the just sing God’s praises. W.—We must beg that the kingdom of righteousness may spread over the world, (H.) and never cease to acknowledge the divine favours. Bert.

PSALM 21. (DEUS DEUS MEUS.)

Christ’s passion: and the conversion of the Gentiles.

Ver. 1. Protection, susceptione. Heb. ayeleth, hathuchar, or “for a speedy interposition,” or succour. See v. 2. 20. 25.—S. Jer. “the morning stag.” H.—Many of the titles are almost inexplicable, and this is one of the most puzzling; (C.) but is of no service to understanding the psalm, which certainly speaks of Jesus Christ, as the apostles have quoted several texts, and Theodorus of Mopsuesta was condemned for asserting that it was only accommodated to him. Conc. v. col. 4. Bert.—Grotius comes too near this system, by explaining it of Christ only in a figurative sense. We ought to do quite the reverse, if we allow that some verses regard David, as a figure of the Messiah; (C.) or rather, as the same person speaks throughout, we must understand the whole of Him. Bert. t. ii.—The Jews were formerly of the same opinion, (Lyran) but seeing the use which was made of this psalm by Christians, they have explained it of David, or of the miseries of the nation. Sept. seem to intimate that this psalm was sung at the morning service, (C.) or referred to the coming, or resurrection of our Saviour, (S. Aug. W. Ps. 3:6. M.) after the long night of infidelity. Didymus.—He is represented as the hart, or beautiful hind, whom the Jews hunted unto death, v. 17. Some band of musicians might be styled, after “the morning hind,” as another seems to be after “the mute dove;” (Ps. 55) and the wine presses, or “band of Geth;” (Ps. 8. &c.) though we cannot pretend to give a reason for these titles. Many, who are unwilling to confess their ignorance, say that these terms allude to some musical instrument, or favourite song, &c. C.—It would be as well to speak plainly that these things are hidden from us. H.

Ver. 2. O God. Our Saviour repeated these words as they are in Heb. though the vulgar tongue was Syriac, (C.) or Greek mixed with the Abamean. Paulus.—Eli (or Eloi. S. Mark) lamma sabacthani. So he pronounced what the Jews would now read, Eli ... lama (or lamach. T.) hazabtani; (C.) and in our method, ali ... lome azbocthoni. But it must be admitted (H.) that the true pronunciation is irretrievably lost. The Masorets vary from the ancient versions, (Masclef. Capel. Houb. Mr. C. Butler. Hor. Bib. 4 edit. p. 69.) and from one another; so that after being at the immense labour of learning their rules, we shall be no more secure of attaining the truth. H.—It were, therefore, greatly to be wished that the learned would agree about some characters to express uniformly the Hebrew in modern languages, as it would greatly facilitate the knowledge of the sacred writings. Kennicott. Diss. i. p. 243.—We have only attempted to use such as might inform the reader what letters were in the original; and yet we are sorry to find that z, or the long á and é are often printed without the mark above; which shews the inconvenience of so many points, introduced by the Masorets. H.—Look upon me, are words admitted by Christ, “because (says Eusebius) they are not in Heb.” But this reason is not conclusive, as he might have left them out, though they were in the original. The Sept. may have rendered one ali, in this sense, “to me,” as they have not added my to the first mention of God: or, they may have anticipated from v. 20 (Bert.) this explication. Christ speaks with reference to his sacred humanity, as his divinity suspended its beatific influence, that he might drink the bitter chalice. Theod. S. Jer.—He also speaks the language of his afflicted members, who think they are abandoned. S. Aug. C.—Sins. That is, the sins of the world, which I have taken upon myself, cry out against me, and are the cause of all my sufferings. Ch.—An ancient psalm of S. Germ. reads “lips,” instead of sins. Heb. “roaring.” S. Jer. C.—“Prayer,” Sixt. Edit. “Why art thou so far from helping me, and from the words of my roaring?” Prot. H.—the Sept. seem to have read shagathi, whereas the Heb. places the g after the a, or they have substituted the cause for the effect; as sin was certainly the cause of Christ’s affliction, and of his Father’s not granting present relief. Indeed our Saviour did not ask for it, but only expressed the sentiments of suffering nature, which he corrected by the most perfect submission, to teach us how to behave. Bert.—God is the God of all creatures, but more particularly of Christ, by personal union. W.—The latter tenderly expostulates, (H.) that he is not comforted like other saints, (Mat. 27:64) since he had undertaken to die for the sins of the world, and reputed them as his own. W.—Delicta nostra sua delicta fecit, ut justitiam suam nostram justitiam faceret. S. Aug.—He speaks in the name of his members. S. Tho. 3. p. q. 15. a 1. —Christ could commit no sin: (1 Pet. 2:21 and 2 Cor. 5:21) but as long as he had taken our iniquities upon himself, to expiate with his own blood, he could not be at ease till he had perfected the work. David was convinced that his own sins were punished by the rebellion of Absalom, as Nathan had declared. 2 K. 12:10. C.

Ver. 3. Folly. My cry proceeds not from impotent rage. Lu. 4:28. Euseb. Agel. M.—I know that thou wilt grant my request. C.—I shall not cry in vain. Theodor.—It is not for my own folly that I suffer. Geneb.—“Many cry and are not heard, yet it is for their advantage, and not out of folly.” S. Aug.—Christ prayed on the cross, as he had done in the garden, to have the bitter chalice removed. But this was not blameable, as it was done with entire submission. W.—The cry of the lips, or of human nature, which would be free from suffering, was not heard: (H.) because the cry of the heart, which desired that the justice of God should be satisfied, was much louder; and this petition was granted by Him who denied nothing to his Son. Jo. 11:41. C.—This should be our model. Submission and perseverance will always be crowned. Heb. has now d instead of r, in the word dumiya, “silence,” which is also good; “there is no silence for me.” In the night (Bert.) of death, (H.) God granted the petition. Bert.—Aquila gives this idea, non tacebis, as S. Jerom observes: “thou wilt do what I desire.” Heb. may also mean: I have no rest, or I cry incessantly. C.—The prayer of Christ for relief, was conditional. He absolutely desired God’s will to be accomplished, and thus he was heard, v. 25. Heb. 5:7. He was our pattern. S. Aug. ep. 120. W.

Ver. 4. In the, &c. Heb. “the Holy one inhabitest the praises of Israel,” or “Thou holy, sancte, inhabitant, the praise,” (S. Jer.) or, as the plural intimates, the source and object of all “the praises of Israel,” (H.) and of the Church. W.—This may be connected with the preceding, or following verse. Thou art in the midst of us, so that thou canst not be ignorant of my situation, like the idols; or thou hast shewn great favours to our ancestors, v. 5. Theodoret and S. Jerom seem to take these words to be addressed by the Father or by the prophet to Jesus Christ, who inhabited a body so free from sin. C.

Ver. 6. Confounded. He interests his Father, by calling to mind the ancient patriarchs, (Ecclus. 2:11. Bert.) who obtained their requests. W.

Ver. 7. No man. Heb. ish, “a great man,” vir, (Mont.) so far from being treated as a nobleman, I am not even respected as one of the meanest of men, (adam.) H.—“Why not a man?” says S. Aug. “because he is God. Why a worm? because a mortal, born of the flesh, without generation.” The ancient naturalists supposed that worms were not generated; and though this be now deemed inaccurate, the Fathers applied this notion to confirm the doctrine of our Saviour’s being born of a virgin, which had been clearly revealed. C.—People. God afforded Christ no exterior (H.) or common consolation, while the wicked persecutors treated him as a worm. W.—The rights of humanity are respected in the greatest criminals. But the enemies of our Lord added insult to torments. Isai. 52:14. Bert.—It would be difficult to apply this to David. For even in the depth of his misery, when reviled by Semei, and dishonoured by Absalom, he was attended by the priests, and by a powerful army. C.

Ver. 8. All. This often denotes only the greatest number. S. Jer.—For surely the blessed Virgin, and some others, must be excepted. H.—But almost all joined in persecuting Christ, (W.) while his disciples left him. C.—These two verses are quoted by the three first evangelists.—Spoken. Heb. “opened or distorted.” Bert.—“They shoot out the lip.” Prot.—These signs and expressions (H.) mark the greatest contempt, v. 14. Job 16:4. &c.

Ver. 9. He hoped. Heb. “roll, or he (C.) rolled himself on the Lord.” Prot. margin.—But the text is conformable to ours. “He trusted on,” &c. S. Matt. 27:43. He trusted in God, let him deliver him now if he will have him. Ci, which is here rendered quoniam, “since,” (H.) may also mean “if,” as it is in the Prot. marg. Thus both texts agree. Many passages are thus quoted, without adding, as it is written. Bert.—God permitted that these blasphemers should use the very language of the prophet, that the completion of what he said might be more conspicuous. Chal. “I have sung praises to the Lord, and he has withdrawn me from danger.” This explanation is not contemptible. C.—But it is foreign to the context, and to all the other versions, as well as to the evangelists. H.—The collating of this psalm with the history of Christ, must convince every sincere person that he who was thus ignominiously treated, was the object of God’s complacency, and that the Christian religion is true. Bert.

Ver. 10. Womb. David might say this as a figure of Christ, in consequence of the many favours which he had received. Theodoret. C.—But none could use these expressions with propriety, but Jesus Christ, who had no man for his father, and who had the perfect use of reason, so that he could call God his God from the very first. All others are born children of wrath, except the blessed Virgin, whose privilege was still the fruit of redemption. Bert.—She conceived and bore her son, remaining a pure virgin. Euseb. S. Athan. &c.—The synagogue rejected the Messias, but God received him, and made him head of the Church. S. Aug.

Ver. 11. Cast. This custom is noticed, (Gen. 30:3) and frequently in Homer. Thou art my only Father, (C.) as I am born miraculously, and have been hitherto protected. I now suffer death, but thou wilt raise me to life again. Ps. 15:9. W.

Ver. 12. Help. This Christ might say a little before he expired, foreseeing the distress of his Church, (C.) or he might use these words in his agony; (S. Jer.) as this agrees with the sequel. C.—Almost all have abandoned me; and those who would, are not able to protect me. W.

Ver. 13. Calves. The insolent Jews and soldiers.—Bulls. The more inveterate enemies, the priests and Pharisees. S. Aug. &c.—Heb. “strong bulls of Basan,” (Prot.) a fertile country east of the Jordan, where the finest cattle were found. Amos 4:1. C.

Ver. 14. As, is supplied by all the versions. Bert.

Ver. 15. Water, in the agony, or on the cross, fainting away. Jos. 7:5. —Bones. In extreme pain, (C.) they have been dislocated. H.—The bones signify the apostles, who were scattered through the world, to propagate the gospel. S. Aug.—Heart. Which lives and dies first, is now like wax in the fire. W.

Ver. 16. Jaws. So that he said, I thirst. Bert. W.—He would answer Pilate nothing in his own vindication.—Death. The region of blessed spirits, (S. Jer.) or into the grave, where other bodies turn to dust. C.

Ver. 17. Dogs. The pagan soldiers, who were instigated by the Jews, (Matt. 15:26. C.) or the latter are here styled dogs, as they are by S. Paul. Phil. 3:2. S. Jer.—The evangelists could scarcely have explained the authors, and manner of our Saviour’s death more particularly; so that we might entitle this “the Passion of Jesus Christ, according to David.” W.—Dug. The Jews have here, and God knows in how many other places, corrupted their text; reading “like a lion,” though it have no sense, to avoid so clear a prophecy. W.—They deep cari in the text, though it (Amama) or the margin had formerly the proper reading, caru. The Chal. has both, “they have bitten like a lion,” &c. in some editions only; which shews the antiquity of this variation, (H.) as the author, Joseph the blind, is supposed to have lived in the 4th century, though this is uncertain. C.—All the ancient versions of the Sept. Syr. &c. agree with us, as the Prot. do likewise. Even the Masora intimates that cari has not here the sense “of like a lion,” as it has Isai. 38:13; and, though it might be pointed so as to signify the same as caru, they have rejected that punctuation, and obstinately maintain their reading, in opposition to many MSS. seen by Ben. Chaim, &c. Bert.—Kennicott mentions another MS. in the Bod. Lib. which has caru, with cari in the margin; and observes that Dr. Pocock, nevertheless, maintains the accuracy of the Heb. edit. in this, as well as in every other instance, asserting that car is perfodit, and cari the part. Benoni, perfodientes, with the m omitted. “But as this omission is very irregular, and never proper but before a suffixed pronoun, or in construct.; and as the ancient versions express it ... as a verb, there seems to be but little doubt that this word was originally cru or caru, with an a inserted to express the kametz.” Dis. 1. p. 500. The proposed interpretation would be rejected by the Jews, while they would exult in their error being countenanced by us. C. Diss.—This reason is perhaps (H.) weak, as their conversion is not expected; if by means of it, the Heb. Bible may be reconciled with the versions; “the council ... hath besieged me, digging my hands.” Bert.—But this expedient is at least doubtful; (H.) suggested only by Prot. who maintained the integrity of the Heb. text, which is now given up; and the Jews seem inexcusable, though the variation might originally arise (C.) from a mistake of transcribers. Houbig.—They ought not to have rejected caru even from the margin, which they confess was once in the text, as it is still in very correct copies. Drusius informs us that a Jew threatened Bomberg, when he designed to adopt this correction, that if he did, he would prevent any of his brethren from purchasing a single copy. The pusillanimity of Christians, and the obstinacy of the Jews, keep therefore the text in its present state. Amama, p. 461.—Ximenes had the courage to insert caru in his Polyglot. C.—In the edition of S. Jerom, 1533, caru appears indeed in the margin; as he translated fixerunt, “they pierced,” and cru in that of Mont. with o over cari, perhaps as a sing that the former was formerly in the margin, or should be translated, as it is by Pagnin, foderunt; though Mont. alters it for circumdederunt me, sicut leo manus meas, in obedience to the Jews. H.—Thus we behold what dissensions the alteration of a single u or i may occasion; (Ps. 15:10) and yet these are letters which the Jews seem to have treated with little ceremony, (H.) changing in 100 instances, (C.) or omitting them, since the introduction of the vowel points; (Houbig.) and they are so easily mistaken, that the greatest attention is requisite to make the distinction. However, one jot or one tittle shall not pass of the law till all be fulfilled. Matt. 5:18. H. See Zac. 12:10.

Ver. 18. They. Heb. "I shall or may tell all my bones," (C.) they are so dislocated. H.—Syr. "my bones have howled," as in mourning. C.—Upon me, out of contempt, (Eus.) or to prevent my escape, (Orig.) or deriding my naked condition. M.—David experienced nothing of the kind. S. Justin. apol. ii.

Ver. 19. Vesture, or inner garment, which was all of a piece. C.—The soldiers perceived that it would be rendered unserviceable by cutting. H.—"Heretics attempt to divide the Church, but in vain." S. Jer.—Lots. This was verified above 100 years afterwards, in the person of Jesus Christ. Bert.—Let the Jews shew how it was accomplished in David. They assert themselves that nothing which had belonged to their kings was used by others. Their thrones, garments, &c. were all burnt. Maimon. &c.—Though this be doubtful we may employ this testimony against them. C.—At Siceleg the effects of David were indeed plundered; but David was absent, and not under torments, like the person here described. Our goods must be divided, either before of after death. Let us be solicitous to obtain the second covering, which may never be taken from us. 2 Cor. 5:4. Bert.

Ver. 20. Thy help. So some editions of the Sept. read, but S. Jer. approves "my help," as it is in the Com. edit. conformably to the Heb. (C.) which seems more animated, though the sense is the same. Bert.—The humanity here addresses the divine nature, to obtain a speedy resurrection. S. Jer.—Heb. "O, my strength, haste thou to help me." What is man when left to himself! The whole of a spiritual life consists in keeping close to God, and being convinced of our own infirmity. Bert.

Ver. 21. Dog. All my enemies are united to persecute me, in my desolate condition. Unicam meam, "my desolate one," the soul, which is the only thing which ought to fix our attention; since if we lose it, all is lost. This only one, self, is often, however, the most dangerous enemy. Bert.

Ver. 22. Lowness. This sense appears to be preferable to the Heb. "hear me from," &c. C.—Yet some who render the orig. literally have, "save me from the throat of the lion, and from the horns of the unicorns; thou hast heard me." This seems very striking, as Christ henceforth recounts the glorious effects of his sufferings. The Sept. have explained hanithani as a noun, though it properly signifies, thou hast heard, or humbled. Bert.—They may not have read the last n. C.—Yet S. Jer. has, exaudisti me, "thou hast granted my request." H.

Ver. 23. Brethren. So Christ styles his disciples, principally (C.) after his resurrection. Matt. 28:10. Jo. 20:17. Heb. 2:11. S. Paul quotes this passage, which may convince us that this psalm relates to our Saviour alone; and he informs us, that we are brethren of Christ, because we spring from Adam, (Bert.) and are adopted by God: whence the apostles assume the title of children of God, after baptism. Rom. 8:15 and 29. Eph. 1:5. C.—We are willing to be coheirs with Christ, but dislike the condition. Rom. 8:17.—Church. This he will never cease to do. After the resurrection, he communicated many instructions to his apostles, which all tend to honour God. H.—S. Aug. here refutes the Donatists, who pretended that God's church was confined to a small part of Africa, and that he had abandoned the Catholic Church. He shews that this conduct would be injurious to God, and contrary to his solemn promises, as well as to this prediction, which speaks of all, and of a great Church, praising and fearing Him, v. 24. 26. 28 and 29. The Church can, therefore, neither be destroyed nor hidden, though it may be persecuted. It will always be great, in comparison of any separate congregation which may pretend to the truth; and this appears not only with respect to the Donatists, but also to the Lutherans, &c. W.

Ver. 24. Fear. Thus the Gentile converts are designated. Acts 10:2. 35 and 13:16. 26.

Ver. 25. Israel. This may be something more general, as all the holy nation went under this name.—Supplication. Heb. also, “the lowliness of the afflicted.” Bert.—When I. Heb. Chal. and Syr. “he,” (C.) Jesus, of whom the prophet speaks; (Bert.) though, according to the Vulg. He speaks himself which seems more agreeable to the context. H.

Ver. 26. Great Church; the Catholic Church, dispersed throughout the world, in which many adore God in spirit and truth. S. Jer.—Here Jesus Christ praises his Father by the mouth of his priests and faithful, in whom the spirit works. Heb. “From thee shall proceed my praise,” in the great Church. C.—Prot. “congregation.” H.—The Vulg. may have the same meaning, as the desire to praise comes from God. The Church which Jesus founded immediately after his resurrection, to pay his vows, must last unto the end; otherwise this service would be interrupted. This can only be verified in the Catholic Church, as she alone can prove her uninterrupted existence. She alone is spread throughout the earth, united under the same pastors, and partaking of the same sacraments. If the Church failed after three or four centuries, the vows of Christ must have ceased. Yet he assures us, that he will pay them as long as his kingdom shall continue, v. 29.—Fear him. Houbigant would substitute “thee.” This change of persons is however very proper and remarkable, as Christ no longer addresses his Father, but gives a description of the worship which should be exhibited in his Church. Bert.—The eucharistic sacrifice is the vow here specified, which Christ offers by his priests daily. It is the only sacrifice of the new law, and the most perfect means of acknowledging God's supreme dominion, &c. S. Aug. S. Jer. &c. C.

Ver. 27. Poor. Heb. hanavim, means also, "quiet and modest men," such as our Saviour calls poor in spirit. Mat. 5:3. These alone ought to partake of the holy sacraments. H.—The psalmist may allude to the feasts prescribed by the law, (Deut. 12:7 and 26:11) and imitated in the love-feasts of the primitive Christians. The sacrifices of thanksgiving were symbols of that of the blessed Eucharist, of which the Fathers explain this text. Theod. S. Aug. &c. C.—Indeed, as it speaks of the times of the new law, this must be the meaning. H.—It describes that part of the Christian worship, which consists in participating of those sacred mysteries which give life to the humble and worthy receiver. Jo. 6. Prot. explain this eating, to mean "instruction." But that may be given any where; and the psalmist alludes to the public service, which is to be performed in the midst of the Church. Calmet would understand it of David, and of the sacrifices of the old law: which throws all into confusion. Bert.—The apostles clearly refer the text to Jesus Christ, who promised to institute the blessed Eucharist, after he had fed the multitudes, (Jo. 6) and he fulfilled his promise at the last supper. S. Aug. ep. cxx. 27.—This holy doctor observes, that the rich, or the fat ones, have eaten and have adored, (v. 30) but yet are not filled, because they disdain to be humble. He speaks not of mere bread and wine, which cannot be lawfully adored; not of Christ's body on the cross, or in heaven, which "is not eaten, but as it is in the forms of bread and wine on Christ's table, the altar." W.—Those who approach unworthily sign their own condemnation, which they bear about in their bodies. H.—Their. Heb. "your," though S. Jer. Chal. Syr. &c. agree with us. The sense is the same. My friends shall partake of the victims in abundance, after my restoration. "But the text is more naturally explained of the food ... which we receive in the blessed Eucharist," and which imparts life eternal. The strong may partake, but they must first become mean in their own eyes. C.—The faithful and humble only derive benefit from this great sacrament. Its effect is a glorious resurrection in eternal life. W.—The sounder Prot. maintain that Christ is to be adored "in the symbols, before receiving." Thorndike. See Ans. to Slack, p. 14.

Ver. 28. Remember. Our Saviour says, Do this in remembrance of me. H.—We must recollect what Christ has suffered and done for us, what was the condition of the world at his coming, and what the behaviour of his first disciples. These reflections will surely fill our breasts with love, admiration, and shame. The first Christians met together to break bread, they preached to word, and brought many to the faith.

Bert.—We cannot explain this of David, except in a very exaggerated sense. But all is clear if we understand it of Jesus Christ, whose faith many nations have embraced, assembling to celebrate his sacred mysteries, and the festivals of his birth, &c. C.—The Gentiles shall enter into themselves, when they shall hear his doctrine, and embrace the true religion. W.—In his. Heb. “in thy.” The sense is the same. The German version follows the Vulg. which Houb. also approves. Bert.

Ver. 29. Nations. God placed David on the throne. He caused both Jews and Gentiles to submit to Jesus Christ. Matt. 28:18. Rom. 3:29. Theod.

Ver. 30. Fat ones. Many ancient psalters read, “the rich,” which is the true sense.—Adored. This may be take as a prediction. C.—Heb. is in the future, “they shall,” &c. Bert.—The rich of this world have no relish for the sacred nourishment. C.—Those who understand, and comply with their duty, amid the riches with which they are not possessed, but only surrounded, find the greatest comfort in participating of it along with their poorest brethren, who may be equal, or superior to them, in the eyes of the common judge. The original dishnim, (H.) comes from a root, which signifies to reduce a victim to ashes, in testimony of approbation. It may here designate priests, as well as the rich, and princes.—Earth. Dying, (Bert.) or to manifest their adoration in the Church. Euseb.—All shall adore Jesus Christ, particularly those who receive his sacred body at the hour of death. Heb. “who go down to the dust.” H.

Ver. 31. Shall. Heb. “and his soul he will not vivify,” which give no distinct meaning. Some join it with the preceding, All shall adore ... yet he will not restore him to life. The living alone shall be able to sound forth God’s praises, as it is often observed. Ps. 6:6. Isai. 38:18. C.—Chal. “the Lord will not give life to the wicked; but the race of Abraham shall praise him.” Others again explain it of Jesus Christ, “because he has not spared his life,” he shall see a long-lived seed (Isai. 53:10) in the Church, which shall praise him for ever. H.—V. sometimes signifies “because,” and though it is not clear that it has this meaning here, the explication is very beautiful. None of the Greek versions admit the negation. They agree with the Vulg.; only Theod. reads, “his soul;” making the prophet speak instead of the Messiah. It is suspected that the Sept. read i instead of u, and lu for la. The Masorets acknowledge 15 places in which this change would be proper. The learned observe many more. Thus 1 Par. 11:20 in Heb. we read that Abisai had “no (la) name among the three;” whereas it ought to be the reverse, (lu) ei nomen inter tres, “he was renowned,” &c. Bert.—S. Jerom agrees with the present Heb. “and his soul shall not live.”

Prot. "and none can keep alive his own soul." Sym. "whose soul shall live, and seed shall serve him." H.—"The Messias shall live for God, and his posterity shall serve him," (Bert.) as the faithful shall never cease to be influenced by his spirit, to testify their gratitude. H.

Ver. 32. To, or by the Lord, who opened the mouths of the prophets to foretell the propagation of the Christian Church. C.—Prot. "It shall be accounted to the Lord for a generation: They shall come and shall declare," &c. H.—Heavens is added by the Vulg. to shew that the apostles, who are styled the heavens, (Ps. 18) shall proclaim these things. Bert.—Sept. &c. omit this word, as well as many Latin copies. One generation shall deliver the true doctrine to another, as long as the world shall last. C.—Which. Heb. ci has this sense, (Bert. Gen. 4:25,) whom Cain slew, as all the versions agree, and S. Jerom renders quem fecit. H.—Yet many translate, "that he hath done these things," (Bert.) delivering me from danger, and raising the Messias to life again, &c. C.—Thus Jesus foretold, with his dying breath, the glory with should always be given to his Father, in his true Church. Bert.—This is the generation which should be honoured with the title of children of God, and of Christ, (H.) and should partake of his sacraments. M.

PSALM 22. (DOMINUS REGIT ME.)

God's spiritual benefits to faithful souls.

Ver. 1. David. This psalm most beautifully describes the consolation which the just find in God's protection. H.—It may be applied to the Israelites in the desert, (Chal.) to David persecuted by Saul, or rather C. settled quietly upon the throne, (Muis.) or to the Jews returned from Babylon. S. Athan. C.—The Fathers explain it mystically of Jesus Christ, the Shepherd of our souls. Didymus, S. Aug. &c. The allegories of a shepherd and of a person giving a feast to his guests, are well supported. C.—Ruleth, in Heb. Is my shepherd; viz. to feed, guide, and govern me. Ch.—Sept. ποιμαίνει, pascit, as S. Aug. and S. Jer. read. S. Greg. Thaumaturgus understands this of the angel guardian. Paneg. in Orig.—Jesus Christ conducts us into the pastures of his Church, and feeds us W. with his own body, &c. C.—The saints never complain of want. Bert.

Ver. 2. Place. Mont. "in the huts of grass, (or of young trees, germinis) he will make me lie down." See Cant. 1:6. Ezecl. 34:15. H.—Shepherds were accustomed to conduct their flocks to shady places, during the heat of the day.—Refreshment. Heb. "still waters," like the pond of Siloe, (Is. 8:6) in opposition to the great streams of the Euphrates, &c. The fathers understand it of baptism; (S. Chrys. &c.) or of the truths of salvation. Euseb. C.—Baptism is the first justification. W.

Ver. 3. Converted. Prot. "restoreth my soul" (H.) to her former tranquility, or bringeth me back from my wanderings. Bert.—Justice. Those who have received baptism, must observe the law of Christ, (W.) as all indeed are bound to do. H.—Sake. Not on account of man's deserving (C.) by the force of nature. God must begin and carry on the work of our conversion, by his grace; with which we must co-operate. H.—The captives had been in the greatest distress among idolaters. They rejoice at the sight of the promised land, where they will fear no dangers. C.

Ver. 4. Walk. In the greatest temptations, we may resist by God's grace. W.—Midst. Heb. "in the valley." The greatest darkness, and the most horrible precipices, give no alarm to those who are under God's protection.—Comforted me, as they have kept all enemies at a distance. The shepherd's staff or crook is designed for that purpose; and though it may be used to bring back the wandering sheep by beating them, yet it is not under that idea an object of consolation, but rather of terror. C.—The effects of timely correction are, however, comfortable; and it is a great mercy of God to chastise the sinner, lest he should run astray to his eternal ruin. H.—Some distinguish the rod from the staff, and say that the former is to punish, and the latter to support. S. Jer. Muis.—We are generally too backward in having recourse to God in our distresses, though he invites us so pressingly. Isai. 41:10, &c.

Ver. 5. Thou. Here the allegory of a shepherd seems less discernible, though it may allude to the provisions for winter; (Bert.) or rather it ceases, as feasts are made for men; (M.) and the second allegory of a guest here commences. H.—The enemy had reduced me to the greatest misery. C.—But God has admitted me to his table. M.—This may be explained of the sacred mysteries received in the Church, (S. Amb.) or of the Scriptures, which nourish our souls. S. Jer.—No mention is made of the ancient sacrifices; and as this psalm must be understood in the spiritual sense, the prophet speaks of the blessed Eucharist, which imparts the unction of grace, &c. The enemy strives to make us keep at a distance from it. Bert.—Christ has himself prepared this table (S. Cyp. ep. 63. Euthym.) against all spiritual adversaries.—Oil. Christians are also strengthened by the sacraments of confirmation, penance, holy orders, matrimony, and extreme unction. W.—Three of these are administered with oil. H.—It was customary to anoint the head of guests with perfumes, (Matt. 26:6. Lu. 7:46) both among the Jews and Gentiles. But the Fathers explain this text of chrism, used in confirmation. S. Athan. Theod. C.—Chalice. The blessed sacrament and sacrifice of Christ's body and blood. W.—Inebriateth. Heb. "overflowing;" being constantly replenished (Cant. 7:2. Iliad iv.) with wine; as people are not inebriated with water. This term, however, only means to take as much as is requisite. Gen. 43:34. "Thy chalice inebriating me," occurs in most copies of the Sept. in Sixtus V. &c. But the more correct editions of the Sept. and all the Greek interpreters, (S. Jer. ep. ad Sun.) agree with the Heb. and Vulg. —How, &c. is added by way of explanation; or rather, the Sept. have taken two words from the following verse, ac tob, verumtamen bonum. C.—Prot. "surely goodness and mercy," &c. H.—Theodotion and Sym. were not acquainted with this division, which seems less accurate, though the sense be much the same. Bert.

Ver. 6. Follow me, like provisions from the king's table. 2 K. 11:8. C. —"The grace of God prevents the unwilling to make him willing; and it follows the person who is in good dispositions, that they may not be in vain." S. Aug. Ench. 32.—Prævenit per fidem, subsequitur in custodiendo mandata Dei. S. Jer. Continual and final perseverance is a special grace of God. W.—And that. Heb. "and I shall." The Vulg. expresses the effect of worthy participation of God's table, which leads to a happy eternity. Bert.—This is particularly applicable to priests, both of the old and of the new law. C.—Only those who remain in the house of God, in his church on earth, can expect felicity. H.—Days, in eternal life. W.—David always desired to be near the ark, (Ps. 26 and 83. M.) as the figure of heaven. H.

PSALM 23. (DOMINI EST TERRA.)

Who they are that shall ascend to heaven: Christ's triumphant ascension thither.

Ver. 1. Week. This title was found only in the common edition of the Sept. Theod.—The Jews say the psalm was used on Sunday; (Bert.) and the Fathers explain it of the resurrection and ascension of our Lord, whom it regards in the more sublime sense, though it may also be literally explained of the temple, or translation of the ark, 2 K. 6:12. C.—David appointed when the psalms were to be sung. Eccli.

47:12. This speaks of the creation. M.—S. Paul applies the first verse to Jesus Christ, whom he styles the Lord, (1 Cor. 10:26) and Creator, of whom David speaks. It is wonderful that so few have noticed this excellent proof of Christ's divinity. The authors of Principles Discussed, according to their general system of two literal senses, explain this psalm of the re-establishment of the Jews after the captivity, and of the propagation of the Christian Church; and it is not clear that two senses ought not to be admitted. But we must, at least, admit that the prophet speaks literally of Jesus Christ (Bert.) as well as of the ark, &c.—Therein. Though God be the Creator of all, he seems to have made a particular choice of Sion. Before the coming of Christ, all, except a few Jews (C.) and enlightened Gentiles, like Job, (H.) were buried in sin and ignorance. But now his kingdom is propagated widely; and in every place the Father is adored in spirit and in truth. S. Aug. &c.—All power is given to Jesus Christ, who rose again on the first day of the week. Not only the earth, but all that is in it, belongs to the great Creator. W.

Ver. 2. Founded, or created it (Bert.) upon (Heb. hal. “above, in, near, to, with,” &c.; Amama) the seas, like a floating island. Prov. 8:29. Jon. 2:7. Job 38:11. This was the language of the ancients: Ipsa natat tellus Pelagi lustrata coronâ. Manil. Astr. 4. The earth was at first covered with water. Gen. 1:9. Ps. 103:6. C.—Seas and caverns have received part of it, which was poured out again at the deluge. Several have rejected the antipodes, falsely supposing that there is water all under the earth, which the Scripture does not assert. Amama. H.

Ver. 3. Place. The punishment of the Bethsamites, and of Oza, had filled all with alarm, so that David durst not introduce the ark into his palace. 1 K. 6:19. C.—Though Christ created and redeemed all, yet only the just shall inherit felicity. W.

Ver. 4. Heart, whose faith and intentions are pure, as well as their actions.—Vain, by neglecting good works, (S. Jer.) or seeking after trifles; (S. Aug.) or rather, according to the Heb. “who hath not sworn in vain by his soul.” 2 Cor. 1:23 and 1 K. 1:26. To take the name of God in vain, means to swear falsely. C.—Prot. “who hath not lifted up his soul unto vanity;” to swell with pride, (H.) or to swear by idols. Pr. in disc.—To his, &c. This is not in Heb. but must be understood, (C.) as a person can only intend to deceive men. So Duport, who follows the Heb. so exactly in his Greek psalms in verse, (Bert.) reads, “Nor sworn an oath, that men he might deceive.” H.—These two verses contain an abridgment of the gospel, and shew that something better than Mount Sion is understood. Heb. 12:22. When we approach to the tabernacle, and to the sacred mysteries, we ought to put these terrible questions to ourselves. Bert.—We must carefully employ ourselves in good works, (W.) by which alone we can make our calling and election sure. 1 Pet. 1:10. H.

Ver. 5. Blessing. David seems to have given the eulogium of Obededom, whose example taught him that the ark was only terrible to the wicked; and that it was a source of blessings to the just. 2 K. 6:11.—Mercy. Heb. “justice.” But these terms are used synonymously, and denote that God gives a just reward; “when he crowns our merits, he crowns his own gifts.” S. Aug. Theod. C.—Mercy goes before; good works must follow, to obtain eternal glory. W.

Ver. 6. The face. Heb. “Thy face, O Jacob, always.” S. Jer.—Prot. (marg. God of) Jacob. Selah. H.—Thus they intimate that the Heb. is imperfect. All the preceding virtues belong to Jesus Christ, who obtained mercy for us. The generation of Adam multiplied, (Gen. 5:1) and soon forgot the Lord: but it shall not be so with the disciples of Christ, who must delight in fervent prayer, and in the constant practice of good works; and not merely serve him in certain fits of devotion. Bert. See Prov. 29:26. M.

Ver. 7. Princes; or, “lift up your chief or highest gates:” portas principes. Heb. “gates, lift up your heads.” Here the gates themselves are addressed, while the Sept. and Vulg. turn the discourse to the porters or princes. Bert.—The tops of the gates must be raised, to let the triumphal car pass through. Isai. 6:4. Amos 8:3 and 9:1. The Church has constantly understood this passage of Christ’s ascension. The saints in his train address the angels, who appear to be filled with astonishment. Theod. Euseb. C.—The gates of heaven are more properly styled eternal, than those of the temple, which were not yet erected; or of Jerusalem, which should be (Bert.) soon demolished. H.—This apostrophe to the gates is very striking, commanding them to allow more room for the crowd to pass in the train of the conqueror, who was usually seated on a lofty chariot. C.—The prophet contemplating the ascension of Christ, inviteth the angels to receive him; and by the figure, prosopopeia, speaketh also to the gates by which he is to enter. W.—Homer (Il. 8.) represents the Hours as door-keepers of heaven removing a thick cloud, which obstructs the entrance. H.—These gates are supposed to open, by being lifted upwards. The Greeks style them cataracts. Gen. 7:11. Tournemine.

Ver. 8. Who. This is the question of the Levites, when the ark approached, or of the angels in heaven, who hold a dialogue with the attendants of Christ. These return a satisfactory answer only at the second demand, having first given four titles to their great king. Bert.

—Some of the Fathers suppose that the angels in heaven were not acquainted with the incarnation. S. Just. dial. Theod. S. Jer. in Isai. lxiii. But the latter here asserts that the good and bad angels hold a dialogue, or that the former address the spirits in limbo, announcing to them their speedy deliverance in consequence of Christ's victory over the devil. The dialogue is rather (C.) between the angels in heaven, and the spirits of the just, (S. Athan.) or other angels, who accompanied Christ in his ascension. C.—The angels express their admiration of the glory with which Christ, (W.) in our human nature, (H.) was environed; and the prophet replies, that he had overcome all his opponents, and again orders the gates to open. W.—The angels were not ignorant, but gave occasion to a further display of the conqueror's dignity, and expressed their surprise that men should enter heaven. M.

Ver. 10. Hosts of all heavenly powers, (W.) and the arbiter of war. H. —Both Jews and foreigners were convinced that God granted victory to his people, if they had not forfeited his favour by their crimes, as in the case of Achan, and of the sons of Heli. Jos. 7 and 1 K. 4. Judith 5:24. The title of Lord of hosts, was very applicable to Christ after his victory. C.—Glory. S. Jer. adds, “for ever;” thus frequently sela seems to form a part of the sentence though it be neglected by the Vulg. &c. H.

PSALM 24. (AT TE DOMINE LEVAVI.)

A prayer for grace, mercy, and protection against our enemies.

Ver. 1. David. This word alone occurs in Heb. Sept. and S. Jerom add also Psalm. H.—S. Aug. and Theod. agree with the Vulg. C.—These variations prove that we cannot depend much on the titles; and the learned do not look upon them as the word of God. The psalm may have been composed, when David was persecuted by his son, (Bert.) or by Saul. It may also allude to the captives. This is the first of the seven alphabetical psalms. The 33d, 35th, 110th, 111th, 118th, and 144th, are of the same description, being written in this manner (C.) on account of their importance, (Kimchi) or to help the memory, (Bert.) or for copies, to teach young people to write. Grot.—Each verse forms a distinct sentence, not much connected with the rest. We perceive some derangement in the present Heb. copies of this psalm, as the letters are not in proper order, though it might easily be restored by altering the divisions (C.) than their Thalmudical songs. Pellican in Ps. lxxxv. 9.—The Sept. and S. Jerom seem to have had better copies. Christ, the Church, (C.) or any pious soul, may address this fervent prayer to God under affliction.—Lifted up in a true spirit of prayer, (Bert.) with fervour and confidence. Deut. 24:15. Lam. 3:41. C.—Attention is requisite to obtain a petition, (W.) as well as fervour, &c. H.

Ver. 2. In thee. Heb. bec. Thus the second verse will properly begin with b, (Capel. Houbig.) though the Jews place my God first, as it is in the Vulg. Deus meus, in te, &c. H.—Ashamed. Sept. Compl. adds, “for ever.”

Ver. 3. Laugh. Saying scornfully where is their God? C.—Wait. This is often urged (Is. 42:23) as comprising all the science of a spiritual life. We must neither despair nor omit the means of salvation. Bert.—Those who hope for the accomplishment of God’s promises, will not be disappointed. C.

Ver. 4. All, is not expressed in Heb. or some copies of the Sept. Bert.—Cause. No one can have reason to do so. But those who injure their harmless brethren, are more reprehensible, (H.) and the psalmist foretells that they will be put to shame. S. Jer.—This manner of praying frequently occurs in the psalms, to signify the event, and the approbation of the just. W.—Shew. The forth verse ought to begin here with d, as in Heb. H.—Paths. The mysterious ways of Providence, (Euseb.) or the law which is unknown to many, (S. Athan.) and practised by still fewer. C.

Ver. 5. And teach. If the verse were to commence thus, (C.) v would not be out of its place. H.—Without God’s direction, we cannot walk in the narrow path. Bert.—Long. We must never cease to desire the knowledge of true doctrine. W.

Ver. 6. World. God’s truth or fidelity in performing his promises, and his tender mercies towards his people, are the motives most frequently urged. C.

Ver. 7. Ignorances. Heb. “defects,” as youth is more apt to omit duties than to act very wickedly. Yet it is difficult to decide how grievous such sins may be. Bert.—Passion and ignorance then concur to lead the inexperienced astray. H.—From the first use of reason, many are careless, and neglect to learn their duty. W.—Ignorance is sometimes a sin, though it may be more pardonable. 1 Tim. 1. M.

Ver. 8. Righteous. Though he is always ready to receive the penitent, he will punish the obstinate with severity. C. W.—Yet he points out the means of obtaining his favour. S. Aug.—A law. Heb. “will instruct.” C.

Ver. 9. Mild. Only rebels are made the victims of justice. H.

Ver. 10. Seek. Heb. “keeps.” But no one seeks after the law, who does not strive to keep it. Bert.—Jesus Christ shewed mercy at his first coming, and he will display truth at his second, judging all with equity. S. Aug.—Testimonies. When God gave the law to manifest his will, he attested heaven and earth, that all might observe it carefully. C.—The law is God’s covenant, and the testimony of his will. He mercifully preventeth us with his grace, and will reward with truth and justice. W.

Ver. 11. Great. “Original sin is common to all, and will not be washed away, except God be pleased to destroy it in baptism.” S. Jer.—David had committed adultery; and all must acknowledge their manifold guilt. C.—Though the guilt had been remitted, the punishment due to David’s crime was to be endured in this life, and he ought daily to pray for pardon. Bert.—The aversion from God in sin is great, and standeth in need of his gracious remission. W.

Ver. 12. He hath. This may be understood either of God, or of man, who has chosen a state of life. Bert.—Provided he be guided by the fear of the Lord, (C.) all thing will turn to his advantage. H.

Ver. 13. Dwell. Heb. intimates, “all night” at rest; yet so that he must only enjoy temporal goods like a traveller. Bert.—We ought to look up to heaven as to our true country, (C.) or which Palestine was only a figure. Ps. 68. M.—The land, is not expressed in Heb. “his seed shall receive (good) for an inheritance.” H.—Five blessings are here promised to those who fear the God: instruction, a supply of necessities, a progeny to imitate his virtues, protection, and heaven. W.

Ver. 14. Firmament, or strong support. H.—Heb. “the secret of the Lord is for them,” &c. He conceals nothing from his friends. C.—Both these sense are good, (Bert.) and the Hebrew words are nearly allied. Robertson.—All who fear God, ought to interest themselves, and pray that he would enlighten the ignorant, and convert sinners. Bert.—The uncertain and hidden things of thy wisdom thou hast made manifest to me. Ps. 50:8. M.

Ver. 15. Lord. Our prayers are not heard, because they are not like this: fervant, incessant, and humble. We have all to fear from our passions, which are the most dangerous snares. Bert.

Ver. 16. Alone. Desolate, (Ps. 21:21) without any assistant. H.—Such is man destitute of God's grace. W.

Ver. 17. Multiplied. Heb. "enlarged." So in the gradual for the second Sunday of Lent, we read dilatatæ. Bert.—Afflictions must be endured. W. Sen. ep. 12.

Ver. 18. See. The word kum, "arise," may be wanting, as the verse should begin with k, (C.) unless it be lost. MS. 2, repeats the former verse, perhaps to fill up the space. Kennicott.—Forgive. Heb. or "bear." Bert. S. Jer. M.—If the cause be removed, the affliction will have an end. W.

Ver. 19. Unjust. Heb. also, "cruel," (H.) or "violent." But S. Jerom agrees with the Sept. Our spiritual enemies are the most dangerous and unrelenting, and we are too often off our guard. Bert.—The wicked, through hatred of God, (H.) seek to draw others into sin.

Ver. 20. Soul. David was most concerned for it; (Bert.) and those who sincerely place their confidence in God, will never be confounded. W.

Ver. 21. Adhered. Heb. "innocence, &c. have kept me." C.—Those faithful subjects, who have accompanied me in my flight, stand guard to protect me. Requite them, O Lord, and grant peace to all my people. H.—My example encourages them to follow thy law, and they will be staggered, if thou grant not my request. M.

Ver. 22. Deliver. Heb. pede, "redeem." All the 22 (H.) letters of the alphabet are complete without this supplication for all Israel, or for the Church. W.—It might form a part of the last verse, or belong to the next psalm; unless it be a conclusion like that of Ps. 33. (C.) out of the alphabetical order. Houbigant.—Israel. S. Aug. and some ancient psalters read, "Me, O God of Israel, from all my tribulations." C.

PSALM 25. (JUDICA ME DOMINE.)

David's prayer to God in his distress, to be delivered, that he may come to worship him in his tabernacle.

Ver. 1. David. Heb. and the most correct copies of the Sept. &c. have only "Of David." H.—The Comp. and Ald. edit. add indeed A psalm.

But these form no rule, as the Vat. Sept. is allowed to be the best. Bert.—The others may, however, be consulted, as in some instances they may be preferable. H.—This psalm might be composed to counteract the calumnies propagated against David, while he lived among the Philistines; (Theod. Flamin.) or it may contain the sentiments of the captives, as well as the two following canticles. C.—The Church, (S. Aug. &c.) or any afflicted soul, may this appeal to the justice of God, (Bert.) and particularly the sacred ministers, when they are going to appear before him.—Innocence. Only those whose conscience reproaches them with nothing, can hold this language. God is a just and unerring judge. C.—Weakened. Heb. also “slide,” (Prot.) or “stagger.” Sym. I am confident that my enemies will have no advantage over me. C.

Ver. 2. Burn, like gold in the furnace. Bert.—Purify all my affections and thoughts with the fire of divine love. S. Aug. S. Jer.—Make my dispositions known to the world. I have done no one any harm. C.—I take thee for the arbiter of my cause with respect to Saul, whom I have not injured. Still, as I may not be innocent, do thou try me, as thou thinkest proper. W.

Ver. 3. Truth. Before such a judge, I fear no calumny. I have always endeavoured to imitate these divine perfections. C.—Heb. “I have walked constantly in thy truth,” which could not be without loving it. Bert.

Ver. 4. Council. Heb. “men.”—Doers. Heb. “men of darkness;” which means the wicked, (Bert.) who love darkness. Prot. “dissemblers.” H.—The sacred minister ought to avoid evil company. C.—David had often people of this description, like Joab and Abner, in his train; but he did not approve of their conduct. Some would restrain his words to idolaters: but this would make his declaration of little importance to Christians, as many would say the same, though they dare not say that they flee from wicked society. We must also banish all such thoughts as would destroy us. Bert.—David was inspired to speak the sentiments of his soul, and praise his own sincerity more than ordinary men may do. He instructs us to have no society with the conventibles of any false religion. W.

Ver. 6. Innocent. Heb. “in innocence,” avoiding every thing which may defile and render me unfit to approach thy holy altar. Many things (C.) of themselves innocent, (H.) excluded the priests of the old law from officiating, and if they had partaken of any idolatrous sacrifices, they lost their dignity for ever. Ezech. 44:12. How much greater ought to be the sanctity of Christian priests! The Jews carefully abstained from eating what the law forbade. Dan. 1:8. Tob. 1:12. David would not sit down to a feast with the proud. Ps. 100:5. It was customary to wash before meat (Mat. 15:2 and Mar. 7:3) and prayer. Aristeeas informs us that the Sept. washed their hands every morning, before they began to translate the Bible, to shew what purity of soul was requisite. Pilate used the like ceremony, when he would have no hand in the condemnation of our Saviour; (Matt. 27:24. C.) and thus people declared their innocence. Deut. 21:6. M.—People entering the house of God, and priests at the altar, adopt the same symbols of interior purity, and ought to be penetrated with the like sentiments. H.—David opposes the society of the good to that of the wicked, knowing that the former is a great inducement to virtue, and he declares that he will wash or converse with such. Bert.—These words are recited by the priest, to put him in mind of the purity required. Lev. 16:4. W.

Ver. 7. Hear. Heb. with points, “publish.” Bert.—S. Jerom agrees with the Sept.—Thy praise. The former word is not expressed in the Vulg. or Heb. (H.) but is understood; and occurs in some editions of the Sept. as well as in the Syr. Houbig. &c.—Worldlings come to the assemblies of the faithful, but often without piety or advantage. Priests themselves but too frequently dishonour the altar, which they serve. Bert.—If they were careful to perform their sacred duties well, (H.) and had a sincere love for the spouse of Christ, many profanations would be avoided; (C.) as God suffers no greater injury from any, than from bad ministers. S. Greg. &c. H.—They ought to be recollected, and join mental with vocal prayer in their sacred offices. W.

Ver. 8. Beauty. The ark. 1 K. 4:22. Sym. “the palace.” C.—Heb. “the dwelling.” The psalmist desires to imitate those fervent Levites, who chose always to attend the tabernacle. Deut. 18:6. C.—Mehon, when applied to the “dwelling” of God, may be properly rendered a temple, heaven, &c. Deut. 26:15. Bert.—No one who reflects on the blessings dispensed in God’s house, can fail to be struck with admiration. W.

Ver. 9. Take; lit. “destroy,” (H.) or suffer me not to be contaminated or lost. W.—Heb. “gather.” Prot. or “take not away.” Marg. and S. Jer. H.—Heb. may be more expressive, and agrees with the parable, where God orders the cockle to be gathered into bundles, to be burnt. Bert.—Treat me not like the wicked and murderers, who are cut off before their time. C.—David alludes to a future state, as he knew that the wicked were not always punished here. Bert.—O God is not in Heb. Sept. or S. Aug. C.—But it is understood. H.

Ver. 10. Gifts, to bribe; or rather, which the judges have received.

Bert. Shochad is always used in a bad sense for “a bribe.” C.—Est munus a lingua ... a manu ... et ab obsequio. S. Jer.—The wicked use their worldly goods to corrupt others. W.—Jugurtha leaving Rome, said, “O venal city.” Sallust.

Ver. 11. Innocence. He opposes the integrity of his proceedings to that of the wicked. C.—Yet still calls for mercy. H.—Every one should strive to be innocent, and to avoid the company of worldlings. W.

Ver. 12. Direct, (directo.) Prot. “in an even place,” (H.) in the court where the Levites sung. Vatab.—I have followed the paths of justice, and hope soon to be able to praise thee in thy temple. C.—These seven last verses are daily recited at Mass. But do we reflect what innocence and fervour are required of the sacred ministers? I cannot assert that my paths have never strayed from the right way. Pardon my transgressions, and enable me henceforth to live so that I may be worthy to sound forth thy praise, and to appear in thy sanctuary. Bert.—Thee. Heb. “the Lord.” H.—The psalms of David are now used in every Christian Church. Euthym. M.

PSALM 26

PSALM 26. (DOMINUS ILLUMINATIO.)

David's faith and hope in God.

Ver. 1. Anointed. Heb. has only, David. The rest of the title occurs only in some copies of the Sept. (Euseb. C.) and is not of divine authority. Yet if any attention be paid to it, we must suppose that David composed this psalm before his second anointing, as he speaks of great dangers. But this is all uncertain. Bert.—For dangers threatened David even after he had been declared king. H.—Before Samuel anointed him, he was not endued with the spirit of prophecy. See 1 K. 16:13. 2 K. 2:4 and v. 3. C.—Some suppose that he alludes to the entertainment given him by Abimelech, (v. 5 and 12. Theod.) or to that night when, fearless of danger, he took away Saul's cup; (Ferrand) while Abenezra and De Muis rather believe, that he composed this psalm when his people dissuaded him from going out to battle. 2 K. 21:17. It expresses the sentiments of the Levites in captivity, (C.) and most beautifully consoles the just in distress. David did not write this for himself alone, but for all future generations. Hence it is not necessary to discover the particular circumstances of his life, to which this and many other psalms allude; nor is there any difficulty in explaining away the various imprecations, as they are not directed against any individual, but relate to all the enemies of the soul; while they foretell what the wicked shall suffer. Bert.—Afraid. “Find one more powerful, and then fear.” S. Aug.—God both giveth light and strength, so that no enemy can hurt his servants. Lu. 21:15. W.

Ver. 2. Flesh. This expression marks the fury of his enemies. See Job 19:22 and 31:31. C.—That. Heb. and Sept. “and my foes.” This may denote domestic, and the former word public, enemies. H.—Weakened. Hebrew also, “have stumbled.” Those who came to take Jesus Christ, verified this prediction. Jo. 18:6. C.

Ver. 3. This; God’s protection (H.) and light, (M.) or in the very heat of battle: prælium. Sept. express the Heb. fem. pronoun, as they do with the Vulg. v. 4, unam. There is no neuter in Heb. which commonly uses the feminine, instead. C.—It may be deemed too scrupulous an exactitude, to express this in a version. The word petition may be understood. Bert. M.—The one petition of David comprised every blessing; as he had his mind bent on heaven. D.

Ver. 4. House; the tabernacle, (H.) or temple, (C.) unless he may rather allude to God’s presence and union, or his enjoyment in heaven. Bert.—He had already expressed a similar wish. Ps. 25:8. C.—“When we love what God approves, he will surely grant our request. S. Aug.—David esteemed it as a special benefit to be in the Catholic Church, which is the only true house of God. W.—Delight; beauty and sweetness, as the Heb. implies. Many of the ancients read, “the will,” voluntatem, with Sixtus V. &c. But the edition of Clem. VIII. agrees with the Heb. and Oriental versions. C.—To comply with God’s will, is the only means of arriving at his beatific vision. H.—David was more grieved at being kept at a distance from the tabernacle, than from his own family. He envied the happiness of those who could attend the divine worship. M.

Ver. 5. Tabernacle; in the Catholic Church, so that the enemy can either not find, or at least cannot hurt, my soul. W.—I hope one day to enjoy rest in the temple. C.—The verbs are in the future, in Heb. both here and in the following verse. But they may be as well explained in the sense of the Vulg. Those who find themselves in danger, must still have recourse to God’s presence, (Bert.) where, as (H.) in the asylum of the tabernacle, (M.) or of the temple, they will be protected. C.—God rewards those with glory in death, who have suffered for his name. W.

Ver. 6. Round. Heb. “my enemies around.” But the Sept. understand it of David, (Bert.) or of the priest, who poured the blood of the victims on different sides of the altar. H.—Jubilation: singing and music, which are styled the fruit, or calves of the lips. Is. 57:19. Os. 14:3. C.—David diligently recounted God's benefits, with all his heart and voice. W.—He offered sacrifices by ministry of the priests, on the altar of holocausts, which was not in, but before, the tabernacle. M.

Ver. 7. To thee, is understood in Heb. and the Rom. Sept. H.

Ver. 8. Face hath. Heb. pointed, "faces seek ye." But Sept. S. Jer. Chal. &c. take no notice of these points; and even Prot. marg. has, "My heart said unto thee, Let my face seek thy face;" (Bert.) though in the text they derange the words, and add, "When thou saidst, Seek ye my face, my heart said," &c. H.—Seek. "I have sought for no reward besides thee." S. Aug.—I have earnestly desired to see thee face to face. 1 Cor. 13:12. W.

Ver. 9. Decline not. Heb. "put not away." Prot. But the Vulg. seems preferable.—Forsake. Sept. (Compl. and Ald.) μη αποσκορακισης, "send me not to the crows," an expression borrowed from profane authors, who said, "to the crows," when they held a person in sovereign contempt. Theod. Bert.—Grabe substitutes this word, though the Alex. and Vat. MSS. agree with us. H.—There seems to be a gradation in the condition of the reprobate here observed. God hides his countenance, withdraws, abandons, and despises them; and they only perceive their misery, when it is too late. Bert.—David implores aid in this life, and deprecates the divine anger, looking upon himself as an orphan, whom God takes under his special protection. W.

Ver. 10. For. Heb. "Though." David's parents fled to him. 1 K. 22:1. Yet they had made small account of him, till Samuel called him forth. 1 K. 16:10. The father-in-law and mother-in-law may be also designated. When a saint is deprived of every human advantage, he may still say with S. Aug. "They have taken from me what God gave, but they have not taken God from me, who gave those things." Bert.—Though I am like an orphan, I hope for all good from God, my father. Is. 63:16. C.

Ver. 11. Enemies, who strive to pervert me. Keep me in the right path, which thou hast already made known to me. W.

Ver. 12. Will. Lit. "souls." H.—Some ancient copies have, "the hands."—Unjust. Heb. "false." H.—To itself, ought not to be urged no more than eat sibi, vade tibi. Gen. 12:1. Cant. 1:7. C.—It is a Heb. idiom. H.—Many find fault with the Sept. and Vulg. in this place, but without reason; and they do not agree in their versions. Sym. and S.

Jer. come near to us. Puach means to breathe, or entangle; and our version intimates, that “iniquity has entangled itself:” vipheach chamas, “and open lying.” S. Jer. Bert.—The accusers of Susanna, and of our Saviour, could not agree in their testimony. The Chaldees continually calumniated the captives. Isai. 52:4. Jer. 50:33. C.—Worldlings still do the same, (Matt. 5) delighting in lies, which will prove their own ruin. W.

Ver. 13. I. Heb. “But I believe that I shall see.” S. Jer.—“I had fainted, unless,” &c. Prot. H.—Living, or of promise, as this country is often designated, (Muis. T. Du Pin. C.) or rather in heaven, (Bert. M.) where death shall be no more. H.—The Fathers explain it in this more elevated sense. C.—The just are comforted by God, and by the hope of heavenly rewards. W.—The land of the living may be opposed to the grave, where none can worship God. H.

Ver. 14. And let. Heb. “and he will strengthen my heart, and wait” (instead of and, Prot. put, without reason, “Wait I say” on the Lord.” We must do our utmost: yet all our strength must come from God. H.—The prophet encourageth his own soul to exercise patience, fortitude, and longanimity (Ps. 30. W.) unto the end. M.

PSALM 27

PSALM 27. (AD TE DOMINE CLAMABO.)

David's prayer that his enemies may not prevail over him.

Ver. 1. Himself. The Heb. and Sept. (Rom. and Alex.) have simply “of David.”—Ledavid. H.—The psalm appears to be a sequel of the preceding, and we may adopt the rule of the Jews, who refer the psalms which have no title, to the same author and events as those which go before. It may relate to the captives, (C.) or to David under persecution, though the Fathers explain it of Christ suffering, &c. and rising again.—My God. Heb. “rock.” This term is so often applied to God, that it might be added to his other ten titles. Bert.—Lest ... to me, is not in the Rom. psalter. Euthym. &c.—Pit, grave; though it also denote “a prison.” C.—S. Jerom has “be not deaf to me,” &c. M.

Ver. 2. Pray. Heb. “cry ... to the recess of thy sanctuary, (H.) or to thy oracle.” Sept. place the whole for a part. The tabernacle was often styled temple. 1 K. 1:9. To lift up the hands was customary in prayer, (1 Tim. 2:8. Lam. 3:41. Bert.) to testify whence our aid must come. H.

—The Jews turned towards the holy place in prayer, (3 K. 8:48. Ezech. 8:16) even after the temple was destroyed. C.

Ver. 3. Draw. Sextus V. reads tradas, “deliver,” &c. But the present trahas, is more conformable to the original. C.—Sept. add, destroy me not, as the Heb. might also signify. Suffer me not to follow bad example. They often paraphrase, to render the text clearer. A similar petition occurs, Ps. 25:9.—Hearts. Such double dealers are abominable, and quite opposite to the candour of a Christian. Jo. 1:47 and 1 Pet. 2:22. Bert.—The psalmist prays that God would comfort and support him, as he knew that God tempteth no man. Jam. 1. W.

Ver. 4. Reward. He speaks prophetically, (v. 5) or of spiritual enemies. Bert.—“If they do not understand by kindness, make them understand by torments.” S. Jer.—He alludes to the calamities of the Babylonians, who had made such havoc, (C.) as well as to that of all who persecuted or rebelled against David. H.—His zeal prompts him to approve of their chastisement. W.

Ver. 5. The works, (in opera.) The preposition seems redundant, though (H.) it was probably in both places, to insinuate that attention is requisite. The Jews perished, because they would not know the things that were for their peace. Lu. 19:42. Their city in ruins, is an emblem of the sinner’s utter destruction.—Thou shalt. Heb. “he will.” Bert.—The Chaldees gave supreme honour to idols, neglecting the true God. Their punishment was at hand. Kimchi. C.—Ignorance will prove no excuse, when people might be informed. God will save none, without their co-operation. W.

Ver. 6. Blessed. This energetic epithet is generally applied to the Lord, and as it is also given to Christ, he must be true God. Rom. 9:5. &c.

Ver. 7. Protector. Heb. “buckler,” to defend me from external enemies, as his grace enables me to do good.—Flesh. Heb. “heart.” But joy would manifest itself over the whole body: (Prov. 17:22. Bert.) and the Syr. agrees with the Sept. “My flesh shall bud forth, and I shall sing his praises in glory.” C.—Will. Heb. “canticle,” which was dictated by the will. It is suspected that the Sept. read differently. Only the saints taste true joys, so that they alone might be styled sensual. But this worldlings cannot understand. 1 Cor. 2:14. Bert.—The Fathers explain this text of Christ’s or of our resurrection, (S. Jer. &c.) which was prefigured by the return from captivity. C.—Interior comfort causes the body to be refreshed; and the psalmist gladly (W.) expresses his gratitude. H.

Ver. 8. People; (hoz lamu) instead of which the Heb. has lamo, “their strength;" though the people of God had not been mentioned. S. Jerom translates, "the Lord is my strength." Houbigant shews that the Vulg. is most accurate. Bert.—Prot. marg. "his strength."—Salvation. Lit. "salvations," as he had many times protected David, as well as (H.) the priests and prophets, and all the chosen people. 1 Pet. 2:9. C.—God causeth the good endeavours of the king for his subjects to prosper. W.

Ver. 9. Exalt, or carry on thy shoulders, like the good shepherd. Lu. 15:5. Restore thy people to prosperity. This was the wish of the carnal Jews. The Christian must raise his thoughts higher. C.—S. Jerom and Prot. "feed ... and lift them up for ever." Here the progress of justification appears. H.—God redeems and conducts us to eternal bliss. Bert.—As in Ps. 19. &c. the subjects pray for their superiors, so here the ruler offers up his petitions for those committed to his charge. W.

PSALM 28. (AFFERTE DOMINO.)

An invitation to glorify God, with a commemoration of his mighty works.

Ver. 1. Finishing. Sept. ἐξοδίου or ἐξοδου, may also signify "the going out;" (H.) as if the sacred ministers exhorted their successors to perform their duty in the ensuing week, or on the last day of the feast of tabernacles. Lev. 23:36. C.—Heb. has only "A canticle of David," (H.) and the rest was not in the Hexapla in the time of Theodoret, so that many pay no attention to it. The author seems to have supposed that the psalm was composed when David had finished the tabernacle, on Sion. C. 2 K. 6 and 1 Par. 16.—But the psalmist had in view things of far greater importance, the propagation of Christianity among many great potentates. W.—The Fathers explain it in this sense, though it may literally allude (C.) to the storm procured by the prayer of Elias, 3 K. 18:1. 41. H.—It might be composed in a thunderstorm, and used on similar occasions, (Muis) when a person had to go from home. H.—The seven voices may allude to the seven sacraments, or trumpets. Apoc. 10:3. Bert.—God. Sept. seem to have read Aleim, or they have taken elim in the same sense, as it signifies "the mighty" as well as "rams." On account of this ambiguity, a double translation is given either by the Sept. or rather by some later writer, who may have inserted the explanation, O ye children of God, bring ye to the Lord; (H.) which has crept from the margin into the text. Amama.—It is marked as superfluous by Grabe, (H.) not being found in the best Greek copies; or at least have an obel, (Euseb.) to insinuate that it was not in Heb. in which state it appears in the Gal. Psalter, published in S. Jerom's works. C.—It is not contrary to the original, though more explicit, (Bert.) as the address is made to all the faithful, (M.) or to the priests and nobility. H.—The apostles are styled rams, because they beat down error with the two Testaments; whence bishops' mitres have two horns. Lombard. Amama.—“Give praise to the Lord, ye troops of angels; render to the Lord glory and strength.” Chal. C.—Be grateful for the favours which are here recounted. W.—Most people now translate, “sons of the mighty.” Yet S. Jerom and Houbigant have, “offspring of rams;” filios arietum. Bring lambs to the Lord, as the original may certainly mean; though many who are attached to the Heb. allow also sons of God. Bert.—Montfaucon says that Origen marked with a lemniscus, what he judged “a better reading,” and thus obelized the first of these versions, and added the second with an asterisk. This liberty has been attended both with good and bad consequences. Ken.

Ver. 2. Honour. Heb. “strength,” which we must acknowledge. H.—The first design of sacrifice is to adore God in spirit. W.—Holy court. Heb. “in the holy beauty.” 1 Par. 16:29. Even the priests were obliged to remain in the court, where they adored God, as sitting upon the Cherubim, in the most holy place (C.) in the Catholic Church. W.—External worship must be observed. Bert.

Ver. 3. Voice. Separating the waters from the earth at the beginning, as the six other voices may denote the other works of the creation; or all these voices may signify the various effects of thunder, or may allude to the terrors preceding the last judgment, (Apoc. 10:3) or attending the establishment and liberation of the Jewish and Christian Churches. The first voice was heard when Jesus was baptized, (Mat. 3:17) as the rest may intimate the instruction and efficacy of the other sacraments. It is evident that something posterior to the reign of David is prefigured; (Bert.) and the Fathers have generally understood the psalm of the propagation of the gospel by the apostles, two of whom are styled sons of thunder. Mark 3:17. C.—The psalmist speaks of greater things than attended the translation of the ark. He represents our Saviour preaching with great power and majesty, (Mat. 7:29) and subjecting the most powerful monarchs to his dominion. W.—Thunder is often styled the voice of God, and is occasioned by the collision of the clouds, (H.) which Moses calls the waters above. S. Bas. C.

Ver. 4. Power and magnificence. The sacraments of confirmation and the blessed Eucharist, or the wonderful propagation of the Church, amid violent persecutions. Bert.

Ver. 5. Libanus. Which were the most famous. H.—Storms often tear up trees by the roots. C.—The effects of the gospel and of penance, may be described, or the terrors of the last day, when Jesus Christ will destroy the proud. Bert.

Ver. 6. Shall reduce them to pieces, &c. In Hebrew, shall make them to skip like a calf. The psalmist here describes the effects of thunder, (which he calls the voice of the Lord) which sometimes breaks down the tallest and strongest trees; and makes their broken branches skip, &c. All this is to be understood mystically, of the powerful voice of God's word in his Church; which has broke the pride of the great ones of this world, and brought many of them meekly and joyfully to submit their necks to the sweet yoke of Christ. Ch.—Calf, or "branch," as the Greek word also implies. But Heb. seems more naturally to signify "a calf; Libanus and Sirion, (or Sarion. Deut. 3:9) as the son of the unicorn." These two mountains are represented jolting together. C.—The violence of an earthquake has sometimes produced such effects. Pliny ii. 83. See Ps. 113:4. Judg. 5:5. Hab. 3:10. C.—And as. The construction & dilectus, seems rather to make this only nominative, "the Lord shall, &c. and the beloved, (H.) the Messias, like the son of the unicorn," shall perform the like wonders. It seems probable that the Sept. have read Jeshurun for Shirion, (Bert.) or visron, instead of ussriun; as i would only be a little transposed. H.—Jeshurun is a title of Israel, (Deut. 32:15 and 33:5. 26) who was a figure of the Messias, the beloved of God. Bert.—"And he will scatter them as a calf would do;" Libanus and Sarion, are in motion, like the son of the rhinoceros." S. Jer. H. The most powerful submit to Christ, who works these wonders. W.

Ver. 7. Fire. Lightning, which deals destruction around. C.—The Holy Ghost appeared in the form of parted tongues of fire, to enable the apostles to convert the desert of the Gentile world, and the Jews, represented by the desert of Cades, (W.) which was near their country, (H.) on the frontiers of Idumea. Num. 13:27. C.—Holy orders were instituted by Christ, to confer grace to the sacred ministers, according to their different stations or exigencies; (Bert.) or extreme unction, which prepares the soul for her separation from the body, may be here meant, if we follow the usual disposition of the sacraments; as the following sentence may allude to holy orders, which shakes or causes the desert to fructify, (H.) unless these words be rather applied to matrimony. Bert.—Shaketh and shakes. S. Jer. has parturire faciens, making the desert bring forth." Chal. "frightens the serpents." All nature is alarmed at the sound of thunder. H.—The deserts then appear most terrible. C.

Ver. 9. Prepareth. Heb. “delivereth,” as a midwife (S. Jer. 5 Edit. Aquila) “maketh the hinds to calve;” (Prot. H.) or “to leap, (from éul; Bert.) or frighteneth.” Hinds are supposed to bring forth with great difficulty. But the reverse seems to be the case. S. Chrys. in Job xxxix. 3. C.—They are very swift, and trample serpents under their feet, nature having given them this power. S. Jer. Pliny vii. 32. The text may be understood of the last sacrament, which prepares us for our passage; (Bert.) or of matrimony, by means of which the world is peopled with rational beings, whose duty it is to glorify God in his temple. H.—This is also the effect of grace, and of the preaching of the gospel, (Bert.) which inspires people with a desire of running on in the way of perfection. Christ explains to them hidden mysteries in his Church, to which he bring multitudes, like the waters, ruling over them, and enabling them to overcome all temptations, till he crown his elect with eternal peace. W.—Glory. Running thither through fear, or to thank God for rain after a drought.

Ver. 10. Dwell. Chal. explains this of the deluge, which continued a long while upon the earth, to punish mankind. Heb. may also signify, “the Lord sitteth upon the flood,” or clouds, as the Lord of nature.—Strength, or abundant rain, (Jos. 18:6.) with all other blessings; (C.) making his people as terrible to their enemies as the storm which has been described. M.

PSALM 29

PSALM 29. (EXALTABO TE DOMINE.)

David praiseth God for his deliverance, and his merciful dealings with him.

Ver. 1. Dedication, when David sung after he had (H.) built a magnificent palace, 2 K. 5. W.—David's ledavid, or “to David,” which some rather join with Psalm, (Muis) and explain the house of the tabernacle or temple; though it seems more probably to relate to the altar, which David erected, after the pestilence (C.) had destroyed 70,000. 2 K. 24:25. There seems to be nothing respecting a dedication in the psalm; whence we may conjecture that the title is not very authentic. The Greeks (Bert.) prefixed “unto the end,” in the Rom. Sept. but not Grabe's, &c. H.—The Rabbins inform us that this psalm was used when people brought their first fruits to the temple, and that it will be sung at the dedication of the temple, which they expect the Messiah will erect. Selden. Syn. iii. 13.—The Fathers explain it of Christ's resurrection. C.—It may be put in the mouth of a just man leaving this world. Bert.—The title of Psalm, most properly belongs to those which were played upon instruments; as a canticle refers to vocal music. When the instrument preceded, it was called A psalm of a canticle; as a canticle of a psalm intimated that man gave out the psalm, and instruments followed. W.—These distinctions are given by S. Chrys. &c. M.

Ver. 2. Extol. Or publish thy great goodness and power, (H.) in the same sense as we say Hallowed be thy name. Bert.—Though God can receive no increase of glory, we must shew our gratitude. W.—Me. Thou hast not suffered my people to be wholly destroyed, nor myself to perish in consequence of my vain curiosity. C.—David sings this psalm in thanksgiving for his many deliverances. W.

Ver. 3. Healed me. I expected to die every moment, and I had made choice of the scourge of pestilence, that I might not be more screened than my subjects, 2 K. 24:13. C.

Ver. 4. Hell. Preserving me from great dangers of sinning, (W.) or from death.—Saved. Heb. “granted me life.” This may all be explained of Christ's resurrection. C.

Ver. 5. Saints. Heb. “who have obtained mercy.” Priests and faithful people come to return thanks, because God has turned away the scourge. C.—Memory, or name. Ex. 3:15. C.—It is from God, and not from ourselves, that holiness comes. W.

Ver. 6. Wrath, which is a short fury. M. Isai. 54:7.—Heb. “momentary is his indignation;” or rather, “from his indignation comes destruction,” roga, as the Sept. constantly (H.) agree. Job 20:5. Is. 28:12. &c. C.—“The miseries which are inflicted, are in consequence of his indignation.” Prin. dis. Bert.—We are not miserable unless we have deserved it. S. Aug.—Even in chastising, God considers our welfare. W.—He takes no pleasure in our torments, but delights to crown us with life and happiness. H.—Eternal joys are the fruits of the short sorrows of this world, (Bert.) which is represented as one night or evening. H.—A few moments ago Jerusalem expected nothing but destruction. Thus the apostles grieved till Christ rose again; (C.) and the life of the just is a constant vicissitude of sorrow and of comfort. W.

Ver. 7. Moved. David thought himself invincible; and, out of vanity, ordered his subjects to be numbered. God shewed his displeasure only for three days, and all was in confusion, v. 8. C.—Though we may imagine that we are firmly established, we must acknowledge that all our strength is derived from God, who sometimes leaves us to experience our own weakness. W.

Ver. 8. Beauty. So Sept. and Syriac have read ledre, (C.) instead of leharri, “my mountain,” Sion, which David had taken from the Jebusites. The sense is much the same, though the reading of the Sept. seem more natural. Symmachus has followed another copy. Bert.—“Thou hast given strength to my first father.” C.—The present Heb. is rejected by Houbigant, (Bert.) though it be conformable to Aquila, S. Jerom, &c. How necessary is it for us to be convinced, that all we have is the gift of God! H.—In prosperity man is too apt to give way to presumption. Bert.—David had yielded to this temptation, not being sufficiently aware how jealous God is of his rights. C.—He confesses this mistake. Heb. “I was terrified.” M.

Ver. 9. Will I. We must not cease to pray, (W.) as we are always beset with enemies. H.—This text may be explained, “I prayed,” that I might suffer instead of my people. 4 K. 24:17. C.—But here the prophet seems rather to beg that he may not die, in order that he may publish God’s praises. H.

Ver. 10. Profit. The wicked on his death bed, cannot pray thus, as the justice of God is interested to punish his crimes, and to prevent their continuance. After death there is no merit; so that we ought to make good use of our time. Bert.—Corruption. The Fathers explain this of Jesus Christ. What good will my death procure, if I do not rise again? Orig. S. Jer.—Truth. See Ps. 87:11. Bar. 2:17. C.—The dead cannot make their voice heard in this world, though they may praise God in the other. M.

Ver. 11. The Lord. Heb. points determine, “Lord, hear,” &c. But the Greek interpreters agree with the Vulg. which seems better. Bert.—S. Jerom, however, make this a prayer. “Hear,” &c. H.

Ver. 12. Joy. When thou orderest the angel. 2 K. 24:16. C.—Sackcloth, of human nature, which was cut, and the price of our redemption came forth. S. Aug. S. Jer.—Thou hast changed my mourning weeds for robes of joy. D.

Ver. 13. Regret. Or be filled with grief, compungar. H.—Heb. “that glory may sing thee, (or thy praise) and may not be silent.” S. Jer. Sym. H.—Glory often signifies the tongue. D.—My is added, to shew that this was David’s glory, (H.) who considered God in all events. Bert.—Prot. supply the word my. H.—Chal. “that the great ones of the world may praise thee incessantly.”—Ever. In this my happy change. W.—Those who suppose that David sung this, when he purified his house from the abominations of Absalom, explain his illness (v. 2) to mean the anxiety caused by that revolt. 2 K. 16:21. Bossuet. C.—He gives thanks for the favour which God had shown him on that, or on any other occasion. H.—He might consider this purifying as a sort of dedication, as it was customary to dedicate even private houses. Deut. 20:5. C.

PSALM 30

PSALM 30. (IN TE DOMINE SPERAVI.)

A prayer of a just man under affliction.

Ver. 1. Ecstasy. This word is not in Heb. nor in some of the best Greek copies. Theod.—It seems to be taken from v. 23. (C.) and intimates that the just may recite this psalm in the latter times, (W.) when they shall be in the greatest perplexity. H.—David composed it when he was obliged to flee from court, (1 K. 19:1 and 27:1. C.) or in the desert of Moan, seeing himself in the most imminent danger; (1 K. 23:25. Kimchi. Du Pin) though some refer this psalm to the conspiracy of Absalom, (Theod. M.) or to the unpremeditated fall of David, (Euseb.) or to the captives. S. Chrys.—Our Saviour repeated part of v. 6 upon the cross; and he may perhaps be the object of the whole psalm. The Church prescribes only the six first verses to be recited at Complin. Bert.

Ver. 2. Justice. Sym. “mercy.” Thou art the judge between us. C.—How grievous soever I may be afflicted, yet I trust in thee. W.—“I fear that confusion which lasts for ever.” S. Aug. D.

Ver. 3. A God. Heb. “a rock of strength.” Sept. “a God who holdeth his shield over me,” υπερασπιστην. H.—Refuge. Heb. “fortress.” C.

Ver. 4. Nourish. Heb. guide. H.—Sym. “take care of me.” C.

Ver. 5. Snare. The order to appear at court, after Saul had manifested his ill-will, could be considered in no other light. C.

Ver. 6. Spirit. Heb. ruach. Our Saviour determines the signification of this word, and shews that the saints of the Old Testament believed that the soul survived after its separation from the body, which some commentators have unguardedly said could not be clearly proved. This text may be applicable both to David and to Jesus Christ in a literal sense, as nothing contradictory would ensue, no more than from the prediction, out of Egypt I have called my son, being verified both in the Israelites and in the Messias; as both may truly be styled sons of God, though in a different sense. It is not so with that other prophecy, Behold a virgin, &c. which some say related both to the wife of the prophet and to the blessed Virgin: which cannot be, as they would not both have children, and still remain virgins. When two literal senses are admitted, they must not be contradictory. The verb is here in the future, both in Heb. Sept. and in the common Greek of the New Testament; (Lu. 23:46) though some MSS. of the latter have the present tense, which is adopted by Prot. &c. Bert.—David commits his cause to God, being convinced that his promises would not be in vain. S. Stephen said in like manner, Lord receive my spirit; (Acts 7:58) and “the saints use this prayer when they leave the body,” (S. Jer. C.) as well as on any other important occasion, particularly when they receive the holy sacrament. W.—Redeemed, by freeing me from many dangers. The resurrection of Christ might be called a redemption; for which he had paid the price. Bert.

Ver. 7. Vanities. Idols, (C.) superstitious practices, (Hammond) and lies. It may refer to Saul, who performed his promises so ill, and neglected the laws which he had made against witches. C.—Prot. “I have hated them that regard lying vanities.” H.—The ancient interpreters, with S. Jerom, seem not to have seen the i, which changes the second into the first person, though here it would be less agreeable to the context. This i would appear unnecessary, if the present Hebrew were correct. Bert. Houbig.

Ver. 8. Humility. Heb. "affliction, thou hast known the tribulations of my soul." S. Jer. H.—Thou hast often rescued me from my enemies; and canst thou behold my present distress without pity? C.—When God knows his friend to be in misery, he does not fail to relieve him. Bert.

Ver. 9. Place. The psalms were commonly composed after the danger was over. David had escaped the lance and the servants of Saul. C.

Ver. 10. Belly, or entrails. M. Lam. 1:20. Eccli. 51:29. H.—David was filled with indignation at the conduct of his enemies. C.—Both soul and body felt the effects of his great sorrow, (H.) which pervaded every part. W.

Ver. 11. Poverty. Sept. have read ani instead of haoni, "my iniquity," which seems less accurate, as David had not offended Saul. Sym. has "malice," (C.) or "ill-treatment," κακωσιν. H.—We may form some judgment of David's distress, from his being obliged to eat the consecrated bread at Nobe. C.—Yet without making any change to the Heb. we may explain it in the sense of the Vulg. as áve signifies to be "bent down." Bert.—"Chastisements waste my strength." Pr. disc.—Jesus was a man of sorrows. Bert.

Ver. 12. Among. Lit. "above;" super. H.—Houbigant would exchange l for m, in Heb. "to all," &c. which seems more agreeable to the sequel, and does not contradict the Vulg. Bert.—David complains that none of his enemies were treated so severely as himself, (H.) though they were very wicked. M.—They all looked upon him with disdain, and even his friends fled from him. This is the picture of the world. A man fallen into distress is the object of general contempt. C.—Yet we ought rather to remember that such a one is sacred: sacra res est miser: and that he ought to excite our compassion. H.—Fear. People are afraid to have it known that they were ever acquainted with me, (C.) lest they should be involved in my misery. H.—My friends dare not converse with me. W.

Si malè res cedit, superest tibi nullus amicus:

Omnia fortunæ sunt inimica malæ. Lucian Anthol.

If fortune frown, no friend dares shew his face,

All flee the wretched, and abhor their place.

Ver. 13. Heart, past recovery. Prot. "dead man out of mind." H.—Vessel means, "any thing." C.—A broken pot is thrown away. M.

Ver. 14. About. They blame me to my face. Heb. “fear on every side.” H.—But magor signifies also “dwelling,” as well as “fear;” and this dread arose only from the multitude of enemies. Bert.—Life. I was proscribed by Saul, (1 K. 19:1. H.) and they were only solicitous how to destroy me. C.—They assembled to talk about my pretended H. faults, and to contrive my ruin. Jer. 20:10. M.

Ver. 16. Lots. Sept. Rom. κληροί, as the same word, hittothai is rendered Judg. 21:22. Others explain “times,” with the Rom. Psalter, &c. in the same sense, to denote (Bert.) that all the vicissitudes of life, both prosperity and adversity, are at God’s disposal. Theod.—If he protects me, all my enemies will rage in vain. C.

Ver. 17. Shine propitiously, so as to free me from this storm. C.—Make me acquainted with the right path, and deliver me. W.

Ver. 18. Brought. Prot. “be silent in the grave,” (H.) or “in hell.” This is a prediction. When I shall ascend the throne, they will be covered with shame. C.—Let them enter into themselves before they die. H.—Houbigant thinks that the Heb. had formerly, “let them be silent, and descend into the grave;” which seems judicious. David inveighs against his spiritual enemies, and against manifest impiety. Bert.

Ver. 19. Iniquity. Heb. “harsh things;” calumnies. C.—Abuse. Sept. ἐξουθενῶσαι, as if they “made nothing” of the just. H.—They seem to acknowledge no superior, and abuse their power. W.

Ver. 20. Men. Thou comfortest thy servants internally, and often manifestest thy protection. H.—This thou wilt do when it is expedient, though the reward of the just in this life is generally hidden. They are, nevertheless, in great esteem with thee. W.

Ver. 21. Face. The malice of the wicked has its limits; while God defends his servants, admitting them as it were into his own presence and tabernacle, where none dare assault them. The Eastern princes did not allow any, but their great favourites to come into their presence. C. Est. 5 and 15. H.—Disturbance. Chal. “troops of the strong.” Heb. “from the pride or vexations.” God will protect his friends, both from an open attack and from malicious speeches.—Thy is not expressed in Heb. Bert.—“From the harshness of the great ones thou wilt protect them in the shade, from the contradiction of tongues.” S. Jer.—How shall we avoid the danger of being seduced by contradictory teachers, unless we have recourse to the Catholic Church? Tu curre ad Eccles. Cath. et protegeris; &c. S. Aug. H.—Those who are united to God by contemplation and love, cannot be disturbed by men. Bellar. M.

Ver. 22. In a. Sym. “as in a city shut up” with fortifications. C.—As seems to be understood, though some explain this of Ceila, (Bert.) or of Siceleg, which had been given to David for a retreat. He here apologizes for having recourse to an infidel. C.

Ver. 23. Excess. Sept. “in my ecstasy.” Heb. “haste.” Prot. “consternation.” Sym. H.—In sudden danger I exclaimed that all was lost; but God presently relieved me. Thus He prepared David for his exalted station; having taught him by affliction, to have pity on others. C.—He experienced for a moment a sort of diffidence, before he had time to reflect. But he presently turned towards God. A Protestant commentator, who, in general, is very guarded in his expressions, and who applies all this psalm to the Messias, here falls into a horrible mistake, which he seems to have borrowed from Calvin: “The Messias,” he says, “was to experience once, what the damned will feel for ever. For the punishment of the damned properly consists in the consternation and grief which they will feel, to see themselves separated for ever from the sight of God.” He refutes himself, by saying the Jesus Christ shewed us how to pray, when we are abandoned in like manner. Does any one experience here the torment of the damned? or could Jesus ever be the object of God’s hatred? It would have sufficed to say that he was destitute of all exterior succour, and internally felt those torments which the gospel mentions. Bert.—Eyes. This he spoke in great agony of mind, which he would afterwards have recalled, like holy Job. C. 3 and 42. W.

Ver. 24. Saints. Heb. “merciful ones;” Assideans, priests, &c.—Truth. Heb. “will preserve the true;” (C.) or, “will observe the faithful.” Bert.—Abundantly. Sept. “that act with great pride,” as S. Aug. reads, and as Heb. and Vulg. may be rendered. H.—The prophet exhorts all to persevere unto the end. W.

PSALM 31

PSALM 31. (BEATI QUORUM.)

The second penitential psalm.

Ver. 1. Understanding; (Prot. mascul. H.) shewing how he was brought to acknowledge his fault, and by penance to obtain pardon, (W.) justly giving the glory to God’s grace. S. Aug.—Sept. Alex. [“A psalm] to David,” of understanding; which is taken from some other copy. H.—Some suppose this word has been inserted from ver 8. Abenezra.—But there are several other psalms which have this title, (H.) intimating either that they contain great mysteries, (Euseb.) or that they are easy to understand. Agellius.—This is wholly of a moral nature. The Jews styled it the heart of David, because it displays his sentiments of contrition. C.—He composed it most probably after Nathan had engaged him to confess his fault. Bellar.—It might be used on the solemn feast of expiation. Grot. Num. 29:7.—the Fathers explain it of the grace which we receive in baptism and in penance. S. Aug. S. Greg. &c. C.—Are they. Heb. “The blessings of him whose iniquity.” Pagnin.—But the sense is the same, and S. Paul follows the Sept. which gives their version the highest authority. Rom. 4:7.—Sins; or, “who is screened from the punishment of sin.” Prin. disc. Sin has often this signification; and the psalmist would otherwise seem to say less than he had already expressed. Bert.—Covered, by charity, (1 Pet. 4) as a physician covers a wound, to remove it entirely; and we must cover our former transgressions, by doing good works. S. Greg.—Then our sins will not appear at the day of judgment, (S. Jer.) nor be punished, as they are wholly destroyed. The Pelagians calumniated Catholics, as if they taught that sins were only shaven, as it were, the roots still remaining; which S. Aug. (con. 2 ep. Pelag. i. 13.) says, “None affirmeth but an infidel.” Thus the doctrine of Calvin is condemned; who abuses these texts to prove that sins are only covered, and still remain even in the most just; which is contrary to innumerable passages of Scripture, (Isai. 6. Jo. 1. 1 Cor. 6. &c.) and injurious to the perfections of God, and to the redemption of Christ, as well as to the saints in heaven, who are thus represented as still infected with all their sins. W.—This doctrine is now almost abandoned by Protestants, as it is contrary both to sound philosophy and divinity: for sin is nothing physical, but a want of moral rectitude. Bert.—God cannot fail to punish sin, wherever it really subsists. His spirit is surely free from guile. He cannot suppose that we are just by imputation of Christ’s justice, unless we be really so. H.—By means of the sacraments the sinner becomes just, and God sees nothing in him deserving of punishment. C.—“If any one wishes his sins to be covered, let him manifest them to God, by the voice of confession.” S. Greg.—But, replies a Lutheran commentator, “God does not forget sin.” What is this to the purpose, as long as the sin does not subsist in the offender? He allows that “the pardon of sin is inseparable from sanctification.” Renew a right spirit within my bowels. Ps. 50:12. Bert.—The man who has felt real compunction, will be able to form a true notion of the happiness of a reconciliation. C.—Covering may allude to the custom of writing on wax, which might easily be effaced. Our sins are recorded in the book of God’s justice. M.

Ver. 2. Spirit. Sym. has “heart,” or “mouth.” C.—The latter is also in some copies of the Sept. Euseb.—The Rom. and Alex. Sept. have it, though Grabe substitutes spirit, (H.) which is recognised by S. Jerom (ad. Sun.), Heb. &c. Nothing is so contrary to true repentance as hypocrisy. S. Aug. &c. C.—If we do not co-operate with God's grace, our sins will never be effaced, though, before remission, our works can only dispose us to receive pardon. "God (and meritorious) works follow." S. Aug. W.

Ver. 3. Because I was silent, &c. That is, whilst I kept silence, by concealing, or refusing to confess my sins, thy hand was heavy upon me, &c. Ch.—The cry was then only an effect of vanity, like that of the Pharisee, full of his own merits; (S. Aug. S. Jer. C.) or David was silent till Nathan made him know his fault, which he afterwards ceased not to deplore. Theod.—It is supposed that he had continued impenitent for above a year. But he might feel remorse during that time. v. 5. Bert.—Cried. Heb. "roared," like a lion. C.—Because I acknowledged not my grievous sins, I was much afflicted. I prayed, but to little purpose. W.—Wishing to conceal the cause of my grief, (C.) I pined away, (H. Lam. 3:4) and suffered greatly, because I did not confess. M.

Ver. 4. I am turned, &c. That is, I turn and roll about in my bed, to seek for ease in my pain, whilst the thorn of thy justice pierces my flesh, and sticks fast in me. Or, I am turned; that is, I am converted to thee, my God, by being brought to a better understanding by thy chastisements. In the Hebrew it is, my moisture is turned into the drougths of summer. Ch. Prot. H.—But the Sept. may have taken l for a prep. before shaddi, as the Greek interpreters say nothing of this moisture, which is the interpretation of modern Jews; and S. Jerom has (Bert.) "I was turned or occupied, in my misery;" versatus sum in miseriâ meâ. There is no peace for the wicked. H.—God has not punished David exteriorly till after the admonition of Nathan, when so many evils poured upon him. But the king must have experienced cruel agonies of mind, till he was prevailed on by this wise physician to confess his fault, (C.) and thus let out the imposthume, which would not allow him to enjoy any repose.—Fastened. S. Jer. "while the summer (or heat; æstas) was burning incessantly," sela. Heb. becharbone kayits means also in gladios spina. "The thorn has been turned into swords for my affliction;" (Bert.) or I have been as grievously tormented, as if a thorn or sword had pierced me. H.—Thy divine Providence chastises me, and my conscience tells me that I have deserved all my sufferings. W.—Many of the ancients read, while the thorn is broken, confringitur, (Ps. Rom. S. Greg. C.) which causes the extraction to be more difficult. H.—This thorn may denote sin, which like a weed, had infected David's soul. Theod. C.

Ver. 5. Sin. Or as some psalters read, “of my heart,” with the Sept. Cassiod. &c. C.—“I know that thou wilt readily forgive the sins which are fully laid open before thee.” S. Jer.—David no sooner perceived that he was the unjust man (H.) whom Nathan had described, than he exclaimed, “I have sinned;” and at the same moment God forgave him. 2 K. 12:7. C.—If this psalm relate to his repentance, it seems he had already had recourse to God; but this is doubtful, as he appears to have entered into himself only after the prophet’s reproach. Nothing can more effectually give peace to the soul than an humble confession, which costs human pride a great deal, when it must be made to our brethren. Bert.—The Jews were sometimes obliged to confess to God’s minister. Lev. 4:5 and Num. 5:7. M.

Ver. 6. Holy. Even the angels rejoice at the sinner’s conversion. Lu. 15:7. The saints take part in the welfare of their fellow creatures, and praise God for his mercies shewn unto them. C.—Time. During this life, (Is. 55:6. Eccle. 9:10. Chal. Muis.) or when they shall be treated in like manner. Piscat.—As I now repent, so must those who are afflicted, pray that they may obtain pardon; then they will not be oppressed, though their miseries may appear very great, like a deluge. W.—Yet. Heb. rak, “surely.” Bert.—“Therefore shall every merciful one pray unto Thee, finding time; that when many waters shall inundate, they may not approach unto him.” S. Jer. H.—A deluge denotes great calamities. Is. 43:2. Even the terrors of the last day will not disturb the just, (C.) nor will they inspire the wicked with true repentance. H.

Ver. 7. Refuge. Heb. “hiding,” (Ps. 30:21. H.) or asylum. C.—Which. Heb. “thou shalt surround me with songs of deliverance. Sela.” Or “my praise saving, thou wilt environ me always.” S. Jer. H.—Perhaps th may now occupy the place of m, as the Greeks all agree; and the sense is at least the same. Bert.

Ver. 8. Fix. Heb. “consult with my eyes concerning thee.” The Vulg. better. C.—Prot. marg. “my eye shall be upon thee.” H.—God thus engages to watch over, and direct his servant, (Gen. 44:21. Jer. 24:6. C.) giving him instruction, by means of chastisements. W.

Ver. 9. Do not. This may be spoken by God, or by the psalmist; as an admonition to hear the counsel of those divinely commissioned. C.—Who come. Prot. “lest they come near,” (H.) and threaten to bite or to run over thee. C.—But the Heb. may be the sense of the Vulg. qui non accedunt. S. Jer.—It may be a prayer, that God would offer a sort of violence to restrain the sallies of the sinner, (H.) and to convert him; (W.) or God threatens the obstinate with rigour of his justice. Many delude themselves, thinking that he will always treat them with lenity, and be ready to receive them. Bert. Is. 37:29. But the prophet admonishes them not to follow their senses alone, nor to imitate brute beasts, as he had done with regard to Bathsabée and Urias. M.—The bit (camus) was a sort of muzzle, “to hinder horses from biting.” Xenophon.

Ver. 10. Many. Sinners deserve much punishment. But if they will repent they may find mercy. W.—This may be also the declaration of God, though the prophet seem to speak in the next verse. Bert.—God humbles the pride of haughty monarchs, like Sennacherib and Nabuchodonosor, treating them like beasts. C.

Ver. 11. Glory, which is lawful when God is the object. 1 Cor. 1:31. My glory I will not give to another. Is. 42:8. C.—Heb. “praise him.” S. Jer. H.—Joy is the end of true penance, to which the prophet invites all. W.

PSALM 32

PSALM 32. (EXULTATE JUSTI.)

An exhortation to praise God, and to trust in him.

Ver. 1. David. There is no title in Heb.; and the Greek copies vary. This psalm may be considered as a continuation of the former, with the last verse of which it may be well connected. C.—Some suppose that David composed it after he had been rescued from the giant Jesibienob. v. 16. 1 Par. 20:4. Ferrand.—It is not certain that he is the author; but as other psalms without a title are ascribed to him, we have no reason to deny that he wrote this. Bert.—Many explain it as a thanksgiving of Ezechias. Theod. &c.—But we need not refer it to any particular event. C.—Upright. But it is not seemly in the mouth of a sinner. Eccli. 15:9. W. Ps. 68:16. C.

Ver. 2. Psalttery. Heb. nebel, (H.) which does not resemble the modern psalttery. C.—We must carefully observe mortification, and the decalogue. W.

Ver. 3. New. Interesting, like the canticle of the lamb, or of redemption, Apoc. Public worship and music are very useful, when performed with attention. Bert.—The prophet invites all to praise God for the blessings granted by Christ in the new law. W.—Noise, proceeding from the heart, the cry of which alone penetrates heaven. H.

Ver. 4. Faithfulness. He always fulfils his promises, and his laws are just; (W.) therefore he deserves our praise. C. Ps. 144:13.)

Ver. 5. Judgment. God joins these virtues together, (W.) as we ought to do. H. Lu. 6:36. Mat. 5:48.—He punishes the wicked, and rewards the good. But his mercy displays itself on the earth, as there is no misery in heaven. S. Aug.—Its effects appear more since the coming of our Saviour. C.

Ver. 6. Mouth, by his command. Euthym. Gen. 1:6.—The Fathers here find the blessed Trinity expressed; (C. M.) and the Council of Trent admonishes us to follow their unanimous interpretation, which is here adopted by Baumbgarte, a Prot. 1719. S. John informs us that all was made by the Word, from whom the Father and the Holy Spirit cannot be separated. Bert.—Seneca (consol. 8.) seems to have had some idea of this mystery. Quisquis formator universi fuit, sive ille Deus est potens omnium; sive incorporalis Ratio, ingentium operum artifex; sive divinus Spiritus, per omnia maxima et minima æquali intentione diffusus. The power of them may designate the stars and angels, which the Heb. styles “the army” of heaven. Is. 24:21. Mat. 26:53. C.—The word of God is omnipotent, (W.) “the Creator ... both of visible and invisible things.” Nic. Creed. H.—Calvin rejects this proof of the Trinity as weak, (Amama) as he did not like the word Trinity, nor perhaps the mystery itself. H.

Ver. 7. As in. This is agreeable to S. Aug. and some ancient psalters; though the Sept. have “like a bottle” made of leather, ὡσεὶ ἀσκὸν Moderns would translate, “like a heap.” But Sym. and S. Jer. agree with us, (see Ps. 77:13. C.) as well as the Chal. and Houbigant. God has made the bed of the sea capable of containing such quantities of water, some of which evaporate and descend again from the clouds, to make the earth fruitful. Yet many take no notice of this admirable economy. Bert.—Theodoret and S. Athanasius understand the clouds to be meant by this vessel; but the former sentiment seems better. These waters, as well as hail, &c. are instruments of God’s vengeance. Deut. 32:34. The depths have the same import. God calls them forth at pleasure, (Amos 5:8. Gen. 7:11) and confines them within bounds. Job 38:11.

Ver. 9. Created. Heb. “on foot,” to express God’s absolute dominion. C.—This passage shews that bra means properly created out of nothing. Gen. 1. Matter did not exist before God spoke. Bert.

Ver. 10. And ... princes. This seems to be lost in Heb. as all the Greeks have recognised it. Bert.—God prepares the causes and means when he forms his decrees, which are wholly independent. He is not forced to wait for a favourable opportunity. C.—He confounded the tongues at Babel, and his absolute decrees are always executed. W.

Ver. 12. Inheritance, in opposition to the Gentiles. 1 Pet. 2:9. Bert.—God made choice particularly of the Jews, as he does now of Christians. W.

Ver. 14. Prepared. S. Jer. “from his most established throne;” whence he beholds all the conduct of men, (C.) though he fill all places, and work in all. Bert.—His power and wisdom (v. 15) are infinite. W.

Ver. 15. Every one, sigillatim. Heb. yachad, means also “together;” whence the Origenists inferred (H.) that all souls were made at first with Adam. S. Jer.—Thus they explained how they came to be all infected. Bert.—But God rather creates them when he infuses them into the body. Carthus. H.—S. Aug. could never decide this important question. This text only proves that God is equally Creator of all; (Eccli. 18:1. C.) and He alone made the hearts and souls of all men, as καταμονας implies. Ps. 4:10 and Geneb. Amama.

Ver. 16. Giant. Or Heb. “strong man.” Monarchs and the stoutest men have been overthrown by Providence, like Pharaoh and Sennacherib, and the giant Og. C.—History proves that great armies have not always gained the victory. Ps. 65:13 and 146:10. Bert.

Ver. 17. Safety. Either of himself or his master. W. Prov. 21:31.—This can only be attributed to God’s protection. v. 18.

Ver. 20. Waiteth. Heb. “longeth.” H.—Protector. Heb. “shield.” Infidels deride the confidence of the just, as an effect of pride, supposing it is beneath the dignity of God to take notice of so small a creature, which he governs so many worlds. But if there be other worlds besides this, God is sufficient for all; (Bert.) and he will not neglect the work which his hands have deigned to form. H.

Ver. 22. Thee. All-perfect Being, shew thy protection to all who trust in thee. W.—He who wishes to receive much, ought to increase his hopes. C.—“Who is so full of hope as boldly to say, by my hope measure thy mercy?” Theod,

PSALM 33

PSALM 33. (BENEDICAM DOMINUM.)

An exhortation to the praise and service of God.

Ver. 1. Achimelech. So Clem. VIII. corrects what Sixtus V. had printed Abimelech, conformably to the Heb. &c. Some editors have since pretended that the word, (C.) which is retained in Berthier and Calmet, though we should think such changes improper, unless they were made by proper authority. H.—Many of the ancients suppose that Achimelech (who is also styled Abimelech, the high priest at Nobe) is here meant, from whom David concealed his real design. Euseb. S. Athan. S. Jer. &c.—Others rather think that the psalm was composed after David had escaped the great danger at the court of Achis, by counterfeiting madness. 1 K. 21:13. S. Aug. Muis, &c.—Achis alone is styled king among the Satraps. Those who ruled over the Philistines, generally bore the title of Abimelech, as the Egyptian monarchs had that of Pharaoh. Bert. Gen. 21:22. C. W.—This psalm is alphabetical. The last verse beginning with p, is supernumerary, and may belong to the next psalm. See Ps. 24. C.—There seems also to be something wanting in v. 6. (Houbig.) unless e and v have each only one hemistic. H.—From the change of names, and of David's countenance, S. Aug. gathers the vocation of the Gentiles, the real presence, &c. W. See 1 K. 21. H.

Ver. 2. Mouth. The just praise God in adversity, as well as in prosperity. W.—David had lately been delivered in a wonderful manner. C.

Ver. 3. Praised. Heb. “glory.” Ps. 31:11. H.—Others, seeing my treatment will give praise to thee, the Author of all good, (C.) and I shall be praised while I serve thee. W.

Ver. 4. Together, (in idipsum). “If you love God, draw all to the love of God.” S. Aug.—The multitude will not diminish his attention to you. C.

Ver. 5. Troubles. Heb. “fears or straits;” angustiis. S. Jer. H.—The Vulg. adopts the Alex. Sept. θλαψεων: the Vatican copy has, θλαψεων, “habitations,” at Nobe, Geth, &c. Seek the Lord, while he may be found. Is. 55:6. Those who entertain doubts about religion, who are in sin, or tend to perfection, must all strive to find the Lord. The matter is of the utmost importance. Bert.

Ver. 6. Come, “by faith and good works.” S. Jer.—Enlightened. Heb. also, “flow together.” S. Jer.—You need not be afraid of impoverishing him. C.—The points would require, (Bert.) “They looked ... and were lightened, (Prot.) or flowed unto him.” Marg. H.—But the Sept. &c. knew nothing of them, and Houbigant agrees with our version. Bert.—And. Here v comes in its proper place, though for only half of the verse. H.

Ver. 7. This. I myself, whom you beheld in the midst of afflictions. H.—Poverty is a great inducement for God to shew mercy. Bert.—The poorest may approach without fear. W.

Ver. 8. Encamp. Lit. “send.” H.—This is explained of Jesus Christ, by S. Aug. and S. Jerom. C.—Heb. and Sept. (παρεμβάλει) intimate that the angel himself shall encamp round God’s servants, so that no evil shall come near them. H.—This has often been verified. Gen. 32:1 and 48:16 and 4 K. 6:16. &c. C.—One angel is here represented as equal to a great army. A Prot. commentator observes, that David attributed his escape to the protection of an angel, and was very thankful for it. We see, therefore, what advantages we may derive from the blessed spirit? What then should hinder us from addressing our prayers to them? Bert.

Ver. 9. Taste, in the blessed Eucharist, (S. Athan. S. Aug. Theod.) or by experience. C. 1 Pet. 2:3.

Ver. 10. Want. In the old law, God was more particularly engaged to defend his servants from distress. Though, as they were sometimes under oppression, they knew that they were to look for more substantial blessings from heaven. Hence they would not have exchanged their condition for that of the richest worldling. Such ought to be still more our sentiments, since we have beheld Christ dying naked on the cross, and his martyrs rejoicing under the most excruciating torments. C.

Ver. 11. Rich of this world, (1 Tim. 6:17. M.) are often poor in spiritual gifts. W.—Those who are poor in both respects, are truly miserable, (H.) since they cannot satisfy their craving appetite. But the prophet admires those who are poor in spirit, whether they have many possessions or not. Bert.—The fear of the Lord is his treasure. Is. 33:6. The saint is content under every dispensation of Providence. H.—Lazarus was truly rich even here; and in heaven his is covered with glory. Lu. 16:20. S. Jer. C.—Heb. “the lions have wanted.” S. Jer.—This may have been the case: yet those who fear God shall be filled; or, the rich may be designated by the name of lion’s whelps, on account of their power and avidity. C.—The same term, cephirim, is often applied to men in power. Ezech. 19:2. Job 4:10. Bert.—Good. If the saints be sometimes deprived of provisions, they know that it is better for them; as God directs all for their good. H.

Ver. 12. Children; docile and free from pride and hypocrisy.

Ver. 13. Good days. S. Peter (1 ep. 3:10) adopts this sense, though the Heb. is rendered, “and desireth days, that he may see good.” The apostles shews that heaven is here principally meant, though a virtuous life is the best to procure even present happiness. Bert.—Many of David's followers probably confined their views to the latter. C.—Every one desireth to be happy, but only the virtuous are really so. W.

Ver. 14. Guile. He very properly begins with regulating the tongue, as this member may prove very dangerous. Prov. 18:21. Jam. 3:5. By detraction, it wounds three people; and it causes no less evil by flattery. C.

Ver. 15. Good. It will not suffice to refrain from criminal actions. Ps. 36:27.—Peace, both private and public. Jer. 29:7. C.—A person may, notwithstanding, have much to suffer. But S. Peter prevents this objection, by proclaiming those happy who suffer for justice sake. v. 14. Bert.—Good works are necessary as well as faith. W.

*Nam frustra vitium vitaveris illud
Si te alio pravum detorseris.* Hor. ii. sat. 2.

Ver. 16. Eyes. S. Basil understands the angels. God protects his servants, (H.) while he treats the wicked with severity. C.

Ver. 17. To cut, &c. S. Peter leaves this out; perhaps because temporal punishments would not be so often inflicted upon the wicked under the new law; as God tries his faithful, and teaches them to wait till judgment, when all will be treated according to their deserts. Bert.—He sees all men's actions, and will reward them accordingly. W.

Ver. 18. Just. This word is omitted in Heb. but it is supplied by all the versions; which shews that the original is not quite perfect. Bert.—If this were left out, the passage would refer to the wicked, v. 16. Yet S. Jerom found the Heb. in this state. H.—Troubles. Many experienced the divine protection in a wonderful manner, and though others fell victims to persecution, (Heb. 11:36) yet they were perfectly resigned to God's will, (Bert.) and thus obtained their wishes, receiving a better reward in eternity. C.

Ver. 19. Them. Heb. "broken-hearted;" to the humble and distressed. H.—God is very near to such. C. Ps. 50:19 and 90:15. See S. Polyc. ad Phil. ii.

Ver. 20. Many. David was too well informed to promise that the just would experience no affliction? but it will not last for ever. C. Heb. 12:6.—If God seem to forsake them for a time, he gives them interior strength, and will at last crown his own gifts. W.

Ver. 21. Broken. Their virtue which is denoted by the bones, (M.) shall not sink under torments. So Christ encouraged his disciples, by assuring them that a hair of their head should not perish. Mat. 10:30. S. Aug. C.—The elements of our bodies cannot be divided or destroyed by human force, so as to prevent their resurrection. The identical bodies shall rise again, though they may have been subject to many changes, reduced to ashes, or consumed by wild beasts. This mystery has often offended incredulous philosophers. Jesus Christ is the just, by excellence; and this prediction was fulfilled in his person, as S. John (19:36) does not confine himself to the type of the paschal lamb. Bert.

Ver. 22. Evil, or “bad.” Chal. Heb. also, “malice shall slay the wicked.” They can attribute their misfortunes only to their own misconduct. Bert.—Guilty, and shall be treated as criminals; a fate which the just shall never experience, v. 23. The death of Saul seems to be foretold. C.—The wicked are forced to quit the world and their bodies which they have idolized, and are hurled into everlasting fire. S. Bern.—In punishment of former transgressions, they are suffered to fall into more sins; while those who place their confidence in God’s grace, will be preserved. W.—“Death is not indeed the last, but those torments destined for the profligate in hell, occupy the last place.” Plato, Leg. ix.

Ver. 23. Redeem. This verse greatly resembles that which is placed, in like manner, out of the alphabetical order, at the end of Ps. 24. Heb. in both, “Redeem, O Lord,” &c. H.

PSALM 34

PSALM 34. (JUDICA DOMINE NOCENTES ME.)

David, in the person of Christ, prayeth against his persecutors: prophetically foreshewing the punishments that shall fall upon them.

Ver. 1. David. Some of the Greek copies add, “psalm,” and “unto the end.” It was composed during the persecutions of Saul, &c. and is applied by the Fathers to Jesus Christ, who quotes v. 19, (Jo. 15:25. C.) and it seems to be in the same state with several others, which speak of his sufferings. Bert.—The expressions are very animated, and though vengeance was not so strictly forbidden under the old law, (Matt. 5:44) yet we may explain them as predictions. Theod.—David always evinces the greatest moderation, (Ps. 7:5) and treated even Saul with the utmost respect. What he says, therefore, was dictated by a sincere desire of their conversion, and that they might prevent eternal torments. Asterius. C.—His name implies one “beloved,” &c. inasmuch as he is a figure of Christ, the conqueror of death and hell. S. Aug. W.—Judge. Heb. “plead.” I do not wish them to be condemned unheard. C.—A vindictive person does not thus commit his cause to God. Jesus Christ was all mildness. But in the spiritual warfare, we may well address these words to God, (Bert.) who is often represented as a mighty warrior. Ex. 15:3. C.

Ver. 2. Arms. Heb. magen, “buckler,” of a smaller size (1 K. 17:6, 7.) than the shield, (tsinna) which was used to cover the whole body. S. Jerom renders the latter word by hastam, “the spear.” C.—But this text speaks of defensive weapons.

Ver. 3. The way. This may be implied by the word conclude, which Houbigant rejects, observing that S. Jerom has præoccupa, (Bert.) as it is in the Par. ed. 1583. H.—But I find præcipita. Bert.—“Prevent” the designs, stop the passage, or “hurl my persecutors headlong.” H.—Take offensive weapons. He foretells the ruin of those who persecuted the Church. W.—Salvation, though my enemies deny it. Ps. 3:2.

Ver. 4. Let them. So most people render the Heb. though it may be understood in the future, (Bert.) as Montanus translates. H.—Me. The wicked shall be confounded in the end, when the just shall triumph. W.

Ver. 5. Dust. Heb. mots, small “chaff.” Ps. 1:4. Vatab.—Angel. The evil spirits are employed to punish the wicked, as good protect the just. Ps. 33:8. Some Fathers have supposed that every man was attended by a good and a bad angel. Hermes ii. Orig. xxxv. in Lu. S. Greg. Nys. vit. Mos. Cassian viii. 17. and xiii. 12.—But the Church admits the power of the wicked spirits only against those who take part with them, or “as far as God allows them” (S. Jer.) to tempt. The devil is like a dog chained down, which can bite none but those who come within its reach. S. Aug.—Both good and bad angels are ministers of God’s justice. H.

Ver. 6. Slippery. The systems of infidels, who deny a future existence are of this nature. If they were even true, the just would have lost nothing by pursuing a virtuous course. Bert.

Ver. 7. Their. Lit. “the destruction of their net.” H.—Some would translate shachath, “the pit of,” &c. But the Sept. is preferable; and chapheru means the have “covered with shame,” as well as dug for my soul. Bert.—Pit ought to be removed to the latter part of the verse.

Saul laid many falsehoods to the charge of David, (C.) and insidiously sought his ruin. H.

Ver. 8. Fall. He foretells the destruction of Saul, and his own glory. C.

Ver. 9. Salvation. In the midst of troubles he is not devoid of hope, and after his deliverance he looks for eternal happiness. W.

Ver. 10. Lord. Some Latin copies repeated this, while others in the original passed over the word entirely. S. Jer. ad. Sun.—Be thou my life whom I always seek.” S. Aug.—Poor, in general, or David, who was supplied by Abimelech with food, 1 K. 21:3. C.

Ver. 11. Not. Accusing me of disloyalty, &c. Flamininus.—We must not imagine that David was cited to the bar. This is admirably explained of Jesus Christ at the tribunal of Pilate, (C.) and of the high priests. H. Mat. 26.—God knows not what cannot be; (W.) and therefore Christ could not acknowledge what was falsely laid to his charge. H.—The martyrs, &c. have often been exposed to the shafts of calumny. Bert.

Ver. 12. Depriving, sterilitatem. H.—Heb. denotes the condition of one who has lost a husband or father.—I had exposed my life for the welfare of the state, and of those who now seek my ruin. C.—Yet David was not slain. This was verified in our Saviour. W.—Sept. have ἀτεκνίαν, “loss of children;” as Christ was abandoned by his disciples. M.

Ver. 13. To me. Heb. also signify, “when they were sick,” which manifests a more heroic charity; though yet it is more natural to suppose that David would assume these robes of penance when he was under affliction, as S. Jerom intimates, cum infirmarer ab eis. Bert.—Our Saviour’s life was a continual penance, though he stood in no need of it for himself. W.—David was aware that the best method of avoiding the attacks of his enemies, was to make God his friend, by sentiments of humility, and by penance. S. Aug. C.—Bosom. I shall reap the advantage from my prayer, if it be of no service to my enemies. Geneb. Lu. 10:6. M.—May what I wish for my enemies fall to my own lot. I have prayed for them in secret and with the utmost fervour. C.—I have repeatedly urged my request, (Houbig.) or I am confident my prayer will be of some service, at least to myself. Bert.

Ver. 14. Please, complacebam, “treat lovingly.” H.—Vulg. follows the regimen of the Sept. εὐηρεστουν, which may govern an accusative case. Heb. is plainer, I walked,” (Bert.) or “behaved myself as though he had been my friend or brother.” Prot. H.—So. Sept. seem to have explained am, “truly,” instead of mother; as the points would determine the Heb. "like one who bewails his mother;" (Bert.) or, "like a mother mourning, I bowed down in grief." S. Jer.—An ancient Greek interpreter has, "like one mourning for a brother born of the same mother." I felt the affliction of my enemies and sympathized with them, endeavouring to alleviate their distress as much as possible. C.—Such was the conduct of David, the figure of the Messias; so that the expressions which seem too strong, must not be taken for imprecations. Bert.—Christ was the good Samaritan who relieved the wounded man. Luke 10. W.—S. Paul admonishes us to weep with those who weep. Rom. 12:15. M.

Ver. 15. Against me. Heb. "in my distress," (Houbig.) or "infirmity." S. Jer.—Thus was my kind attention repaid. H.—My enemies became only the more insolent, and stood beside me, to shew their contempt. C.—Scourges. Heb. also, "vile men." Mont. H.—The Rom. psalters have "and they were ignorant," ignoraverunt. C.—David could not think that he had given any offence: much less had our Saviour. H.—He knew no just cause why the Jews persecuted him, as they were actuated by malice. W.—David knew not personally those who afflicted him. M.

Ver. 16. Separated, and could not agree in their testimonies. This may be one meaning of charak, as it has several. Bert.—"They did tear me, and ceased not, (16) with hypercritical mockers in feasts, they gnashed," &c. Prot. H.—Many of their attempts have been frustrated by thy Providence, yet they do not enter into themselves. Theod.

Ver. 17. One. Sept. "daughter." Aquila, "solitary," μοναχην. Prot. "darling," or my soul which is so desolate. Ps. 21:21. H.—So Christ said, Why hast thou abandoned me? (Mat. 27) not affording me such consolation as other saints enjoy in their agony. W.

Ver. 18. Strong, gravi. Heb. hatsum, numerous, (1 Mac. 1:1. M.) and "weighty," (H.) which is the consequence of great numbers, (Bert.) and of virtue. S. Aug. understands the Church, which is not carried away like chaff before the wind. Amama dislike this. H.—The resurrection is foretold, (v. 17) and here the Catholic Church is signified. W.

Ver. 19. Wrongfully. Heb. "liars," (S. Jer. H.) alluding to Saul, &c. C. Christ explains this of himself. Jo. 15. W.—Who. Some supply a negation. Bert.—"Neither let them wink with the eye who." Prot. This sign might indicate friendship, or evil machinations. Prov. 6:13 and 10:10. C.—"They pretended by their looks what they did not entertain in their hearts." S. Aug. M.

Ver. 20. Spoke. Heb. adds lo, "not." But it may be better explained as an interrogation. "Have they not spoken?" &c. as the enemies used deceit. Houbig. Bert.—Earth. This word is omitted in the Sept. Rom. S. Aug. &c. But Theodoret reads it, and it is in all the other Greek interpreters, and in the Arab. and Syriac. C.—Heb. "they devise deceitful matters against them that are quiet (righe, divided, &c.) in the land." Prot. or "in the plunder of the earth they devise deceit." S. Jer. H.—They appear friendly, but when alone they talk to the earth, like people in deep study and full of passion. C.—This terrestrial anger is the source of much evil. Bert.—The Jews and Herodians said, Master, &c. designing to inveigle our Saviour. Mat. 21. The priests and Pharisees also accused him boldly, and instigated the people to demand his crucifixion. W.—They were split into parties, and invaded those who were the reverse of passionate. M.

Ver. 21. Done, euge. Heb. heach. H.—This term occurs ten times in Scripture, and here denotes the joy felt in the destruction of an enemy. Thus the Jews insulted over Christ expiring on the cross. Bert.—Seen. No farther reserve is necessary: he is fallen, or we have accused him of nothing but what we have seen. C.

Ver. 22. Silent. I have chosen thee for my judge and protector. C.—Pronounce sentence if they be in the right; and if not, rescue me from their fury. H.

Ver. 23. Attentive. Heb. "watch over." He implores present assistance. Bert.

Ver. 24. Thy. Many copies read "my," with S. Aug. Euthym. &c. But thy agrees with the Rom. (C.) and Alex. Sept. and Heb. H.

Ver. 25. It is well, occurs only once in Heb. which may be imperfect, as many versions supply the second. Bert.—Mind, as we could have desired. Prot. "Oh, (marg. adds ah) so would we have it." H.—Things go on well according to our mind. M.

Ver. 26. Great. S. Aug. reads, "malicious." C.—At the day of judgment the wicked will be condemned. W.—If this judgment were not to take place, religion would be a fable: as impiety is not always punished in this world. Bert.

Ver. 27. Them. The blessed in eternal glory. W.—Justice. Or wish that sentence may be pronounced in my favour. C.—Delight. Heb. "who delights." S. Jer. H.—But the Greek interpreters read as we do. Bert.

Ver. 28. Meditate. Heb. word is used to signify speaking with reflection. C.

PSALM 35

PSALM 35. (DIXIT INJUSTUS.)

The malice of sinners, and the goodness of God.

Ver. 1. Himself. Psalm is understood. It is expressed in S. Amb. and S. Jerom, (C.) and is the Alex. Sept. H.—Eusebius improperly assigns the cause of the omission to the piece being of a moral nature. Many suppose it refers to Saul, who had promised that he would give ear no more to the detractors of David, when the latter restored to him his spear and cup. 1 K. 26. Theod. &c.—But it seems rather to express the sentiments of the captives at Babylon, like the Psalms 10. 11. 13 and 52. C.—David gloried in the title of servant of the Lord, though he bore the sceptre. Ps. 17. Bert. Ps. 115:16. M.—He applies this instruction to himself, and to all in the lowest stations. W.

Ver. 2. Himself. Heb. libbi, “in my heart.” But this is visibly incorrect, and we should substitute lobu, as S. Jer. Chal. Syr. &c. have done. C.—Yet Sym. translates, “concerning the disorder of the impious within, my heart has said, there,” &c. Heb. may also signify, “the transgression of the wicked saith within my heart.” Prot. H.—I am inwardly convinced how great the malice of the wicked may be. It touches me to the very heart. Both senses are good. The wicked are bent on evil, and this fills the virtuous with grief. Bert.—Eyes. They sin publicly, (Ps. 13:1. C.) and on purpose, preferring vice before virtue, (W.) and constantly bent on doing evil, so that they become odious to all. M.

Ver. 3. Unto hatred. That is, hateful to God (Ch.) and man; (H.) or that he may be able to hurt, as Hebrew also may insinuate. Bert.—Sept. “to find and hate his iniquity.” But he acts not with sincerity. He wishes to defend his evil ways. S. Aug. &c.—He still flatters himself with impunity. Ps. 9:25 or 9:32. To find, often means to punish. Gen. 44:16. &c. C.—God frequently abandons those who sin through malice. W.

Ver. 4. Well, to those in distress. Ps. 40:2. Though wise enough in worldly concerns, he seemed quite ignorant when any virtuous actions were proposed. C.—Sometimes ignorance is excusable when a person does his best to obtain knowledge. But when he is negligent, the ignorance is gross, and sinful in proportion to the importance of the thing. If one desire to be ignorant to prevent remorse, this only increases the guilt, and God often leaves such destitute of the ordinary graces which he gives to others; so that they fall into a reprobate sense, and into more horrible sins. W.

Ver. 5. Set himself, “persevering” in wickedness. S. Aug.

Ver. 6. Clouds. The mercy of God is great, and his fidelity indisputable. Some think these were concealed till the coming of the Messias; (Ps. 84:11. S. Bern.) and many of the Fathers accuse Aristotle of confining Providence to the regions above the moon, by perverting this text. S. Clem. Strom. 5. &c.—But Gesner has produced 30 passages from that author which prove both a general and particular Providence. C.—God does not leave the most wilful sinner without some good motions, and sufficient grace, that they may repent if they do not harden their own hearts. He has promised such helps, and is most faithful and desirous to receive again the penitent sinner. W.

Ver. 7. Of God. A title which is often given to things of superior excellence. So divine condimenta of Plautus, (Pseudol.) denote ragouts or sauces of the best quality; (H.) and sacra fames of Virgil, means great hunger. See Jon. 3:3. Cant. 8:6.—Deep. After praising the mercy of God, the psalmist expresses his admiration of his inscrutable justice. Rom. 11:33. C.—Preserve, salvabis. The latter are designed only for man’s benefit, and will end with time. H.—But man is destined for eternal happiness, v. 9. C.—God wishes the salvation of both the learned and of the stupid, (S. Jer. W.) of the Jew and Gentile, (Arnob. 1 Tim. 4:10) of good and bad. He makes his sun to shine on both. Mat. 5:45. Euseb. Piscat. C.

Ver. 8. O how. So the Heb. and Sept. read; quemadmodum may also (Bert.) signify “as.” God has given such proofs of his great mercies to all. H.—Of men. People must lay aside their stupidity and resemblance with brutes, to obtain the eternal joys which are prepared for men. W.

Ver. 9. House. In the temple, (C.) or in the Church of God. S. Amb.—The pleasures enjoyed by this communion of saints, (H.) is but a foretaste of what may be expected in heaven. C.

Ver. 10. With thee, Lord, is the fountain of life, Jesus Christ.—See light, of the Holy Ghost. S. Amb. Theod.—We shall see thee, Father of light, in thy Son. Orig. Prin. i. 1. C.—The saints behold in the light of God all that they can desire to know; and of course they will not be unacquainted with our wants and petitions, though they have not the asses’ ears of Calvin. H.—Light and life denote all happiness. C.—The psalmist might have a sublime idea of these pleasures. Bert.—But none will presently understand their excellence till they are put in possession of them. H.

Ver. 11. Mercy and justice, are here of the same import. Bellar. Muis.—Deliver us from captivity, and extend thy mercies to all thy people. C.—Heart. Many who have sufficient learning, are destitute of this better quality. The right of heart are always more knowing than those who are only learned in speculation, and puffed up with pride. Bert.

Ver. 12. Sinner. Heb. and Sept. “sinners,” who are always striving to supplant the just by pride and evil example. Bert.—Let me not listen to their wicked advice. S. Aug.—Let not the enemy invade our country any more. C.—The just may pray that no bad example or pride may place an obstacle to his salvation. W.

Ver. 13. There. The devil fell by pride, and man by his persuasion. Neither could escape punishment. W.—There, in heaven, (S. Jer.) and in paradise, pride proved fatal; (C.) while it will be punished in hell. S. Amb.—Pride and injustice will entail destruction upon our persecutors. Babylon shall shortly fall a prey to Cyrus. C.—Stand. Heb. “kum,” “rise again.” The proud are seldom converted, (Bert.) and the rebel angels had no redress. M.

PSALM 36. (NOLI ÆMULARI.)

An exhortation to despise this world; and the short prosperity of the wicked; and to trust in providence.

Ver. 1. Himself. Heb. has simply, “for David,” (C.) as well as the Greek of the Vat. “It is a mistake in Bellanger to say in general that the Greek adds “a psalm,” since this is true only with respect to the edit. of Aldus and Comp. says Berthier. But he is not quite accurate, as Erasmus inserts “a psalm” in his edition of S. Jerom’s Sept.; and the Alex. copy, which is equally famous with that of the Vatican, has [unto the end, a psalm] for David. Grabe has indeed marked all but the last word as a peculiarity, or not to be found in Origen’s copy. But he has published his edition with such accuracy, that we may distinguish what his MS. contained from other interpolations. It were to be wished that the same attention had been paid to the Vatican copy. But hitherto all the editors have taken the liberty to make alterations without specifying where; so that we can have no security that we ever quote the real MS. of the Vatican. The learned prefect, Zacagni, gives abundant proof of this in his letter to Grabe, which has been published by Kennicott, Diss. 2. Yet any of these editions may be quoted as the Greek or Sept. as we have yet no copy perfectly authentic: and the learned are not even agreed which standard ought to be followed. If that which presents the greatest number of Origen's corrections be preferable, the Alex. MS. must bear away the psalm. If the reverse, the glory must be given to its rival in the Vatican, which approaches the nearest to the κοινη, or to the edition of S. Lucian. See Kennicott. These remarks may be of service, as Berthier often seems inclined to place the Vat. edit. on the same level as the Latin Vulg. H.—This psalm is alphabetical. The Syriac, Sept. &c. read, (v. 28) the unjust, &c. ávilim; a word which seems now to be deficient in the Heb. which has no ver. beginning with á. C.—Some other derangement has taken place. Houbig.—The verses might be so divided as to begin every second verse with a fresh letter, and so to retain 42 verses. See v. 7 and 20. The matter is of no great importance. The prophet has comprised several duties in alphabetical order, to help the memory, (Bert.) and to excite attention. W.—He may predict the death of Saul, (Rabbins) or hint at the rebellion of Absalom in his old age; (v. 25. Ferrand) or rather he may comfort the captives at Babylon, promising them liberty, and denouncing the fall of their oppressors, above ten times. He admonishes them not to be scandalized at the distress of the just, and the prosperity of the wicked. C.—Emulous. Heb. “Fret not thyself.” Prot. “Mingle not with;” (Bert. Pagnin) “contend not.” S. Jer. H.—Envy. Their splendour is deceitful. C.—Be not, therefore, seduced (H.) to imitate the wicked (M.) nor offended, that they should prosper here. W.

Ver. 2. Wither. Heb. “be cut down.” C.—Fall. Heb. “wither.” S. Jer. H.—This admirably describes the transient glory of sinners. Is. 40:6. Jam. 1:10. C.—All life is short. W. 1 Pet. 1:24. M.

Ver. 3. Riches. Sept. and Houb. read emuné, “abundance.” Heb. begins with a. The sense is much the same. Bert.—“Thou shalt feed on faith,” (S. Jer.) or “incessantly.” Sym.—The Jews entertained the greatest desire of the promised land. C.—It may here denote our soul, (Orig.) the Church, (S. Aug.) the Scriptures, (S. Athan.) or heaven. S. Jer. &c. C.—Trust in God and be content. He will give thee what is requisite. W.

Ver. 4. Heart. Provided they be rational. S. Aug.—He will enable thee to repose in peace, and to taste innocent pleasures in the Lord. C.

Ver. 5. Commit. Lit. “lay open.” Heb. “roll.” H.—This expresses the most unbounded confidence. Ps. 54:23. Prov. 16:3.—Do it. Whatever may be proper. He will display thy justice, (v. 6) and free thee from anxiety, (C.) taking care of thee. 1 Pet. 5:7. M.

Ver. 6. Day. This will appear at the last judgment. S. Aug.

Ver. 7. Be. Heb. dom, begins only this verse with d. The other letters occupy two verses, (Bert.) the second of which may commence with any of the letters. H.—“Be silent to the Lord; wait upon Him.” S. Jer. H.—If he should suffer thee to be afflicted, envy not those who are in a more prosperous condition, nor give way to indignation. v. 8. C.—None can be truly subjected to God, who do not comply with his laws and pray. Orig. S. Aug.—We must wait patiently for his aid. Lam. 3:26. Is. 30:15. “Allow the gods to judge what’s best for us.” Juv. Sat. 13. H.

Ver. 8. Evil. Repining (M.) at the ways of Providence, &c. C. v. 1.—Reflect on God’s will. H.—Laboras; sed in via Dei. S. Aug.—Heb. “be not angry nevertheless (ac, a word which Houbig. deems useless) to do evil;” (Mont.) or “against the wicked,” (Prin. dis.) as lehareah may be perhaps signified; though it is more usually taken for a verb, as the points decide. Bert.

Ver. 9. Land of the living. W.—David knew that many truly pious people would never obtain riches in the land of Chanaan, even though they might have remained there, if the nation had been faithful. He therefore comforts them with the prospect of a better land. If this were not the meaning, the Church would put these canticles in the mouth of her children to little purpose. Bert.

Ver. 10. While. Till the day of judgment. Orig. S. Amb.—And shalt. Heb. “and it shall not be.” Prot. “it, or he shall not subsist.” S. Jer. H.—The state of the wicked is not therefore so enviable. The captives witnessed the fall of the great Colossus, the empire of the Babylonians. C.

Ver. 11. Meek. Heb. hanavim, also means “the afflicted.” Bert.—Captives, ye shall be reinstated in your dear country. Our Saviour alludes to this text, (Mat. 5:4) and the Fathers beautifully explain it of heaven. Euseb. S. Aug. C.—What is now become of those who have heretofore filled the world with tumult and bloodshed to obtain dominion! They are confined to the land where everlasting horror and on order dwells. They would wish they had never existed, as our Saviour mentions; while those who passed through life unknown, or despised, but always seeking God, are now arrived at the summit of all their wishes. H.—O holy religion! thou explainest all these things. The just have ceased to exist: but their better part has inherited the land of the living. Yet a little while, and all will be in order, and in its proper place; though that of the wicked deserves not the name. Bert.

Ver. 12. Watch. Heb. “plot against.” H.—Teeth. In rage to destroy him, (C.) whose virtue is a continual censure of his impiety. H.

Ver. 13. Laugh. This expression is often used to denote the triumph of divine justice, whose day will set all right: that day (2 Tim. 4:8) which ought to be constantly before our eyes. Bert.—God cannot indeed mock at any one. C.—But the wicked “deserve scorn and vengeance.” H.—Digni sunt ut irrideantur in vindictâ. S. Jer.—The day of their judgment or condemnation is at hand, (Ezec. 21:21. 1 K. 26:10. H.) when they will be sought for in vain (v. 10. C.) by their foolish admirers. They will seek to hide themselves from the indignation of the Lamb.

Ver. 14. Heart. Heb. “of way.” Prot. “such as be of upright conversation.” Only those whose heart is pure, will observe the right path. H.

Ver. 15. Broken. In the form of imprecation, he foretells the event. W.—Heb. is in the future, to imply as much. Bert.

Ver. 16. Wicked. Heb. “of many wicked,” or “of the impious great ones.” H.—What the just man hath, is preferable to the immense riches of sinners, acquired by injustice. In this sense Hesiod and Psittacus said, “half is more than all.” The wicked are never satisfied. Eccle. 4:6. Prov. 13:25. Riches are a dangerous temptation, (C.) and the sentence is generally true, “every rich person is either unjust or the heir of one who has been such,” (H.) aut hæres injusti. S. Jer.—It is difficult for the rich to enter heaven; and the unjust are certainly excluded. Yet if we confined our views to this world, it is evident that the rich may better procure the sweets of life. Bert.

Ver. 17. Arms of the body, brachia. All that they have admired perishes in death, (C.) while the just then possess true riches.

Ver. 18. Days, or “ways,” according to some copies of Sept. S. Aug. &c. God approves the conduct of the just. He takes notice of the time of their sufferings, and comforts them during life, (C.) yea, for ever.

Ver. 20. Because. Only this verse begins with c, as the seventh does with d. H.—Smoke. All their riches shall vanish, and their works be disregarded by God. But they will not be annihilated, as they would desire; otherwise the justice of God would not be executed on them. Bert.—There is a continual antithesis between the good and bad. The latter shall shortly lose all their splendour. “I fear, lest offending the gods, I may receive glory among men,” said the poet Ibicus, (C.) conformably to our Saviour’s declaration concerning the vain-glorious, they have received their reward. Mat. 6:6. Heb. “shall be as the fat of lambs, consumed and reduced to smoke.” H.—S. Jerom seems to have read differently, “boasting like unicorns, they shall be consumed, as smoke, they shall be consumed.” Syr. and Chal. intimate that they shall be like victims, “fattened” for slaughter, and burnt. C.

Ver. 21. Give. Having both the will and the power to be liberal. H.—“He shall lend without expecting any advantage, while the wicked falls into such misery as not to be able to pay his debts. This is not always the order of Providence. C.—But the just is often enabled by economy to relieve his brethren, at the same time that the libertine wastes his estate, (Bert.) or at least unjustly defers to pay his debts. M.

Ver. 22. Bless him. The just, (v. 21. Prin. disc.) or rather the Lord, v. 20. Bert.—“Are blessed of him,” &c. S. Jer. Chal. H.

Ver. 23. With. Or by the decrees of the Lord. The Heb. and Sept. have, “By,” παρα. Bert.—God gives grace to do all good, (Prov. 16:9. C.) and likes the way which He points out. The just also find the greatest consolation in virtue. H.

Ver. 24. Him. To break the fall. Heb. “the Lord upholdeth him with his hand.” Prot. H.—The just man is like a courageous wrestler, who may slip, but yields not. Orig. Euseb.—His fall is not mortal, (C.) though he may be guilty of venial sin. Prov. 24. W.

Ver. 25. Seeking, in vain. H.—Rom. and Gothic Ps. read, “wanting.” This does not condemn the mendicant orders. M.—Nothing was more unusual under the old law than the extreme distress of the just: yet Job and Lazarus were reduced to it. They were not, however, discontent. C.—They found the bread of life in conformity to God’s will. Jo. 4:34. H.—Their souls were enriched with grace, which was never wanting, as the Fathers explain this passage. Bert. Amos 8:11.—It is certain that there were poor among the Jews; (Deut. 15:11) and who would assert that they were all wicked, or the children of such? Yet the prophet had not witnessed (C.) any person renowned for virtue reduced to this condition, (H.) though he does not deny but it might be possible. C.—The proposition may be restrained to those who have been very charitable, and who are not often thereby reduced to want. Dan. 4:24. Genebrard. M.—But the word just is more comprehensive; and S. Paul gives several instances of persecuted saints (Heb. 11) which is confirmed by the parable, or rather by the history, of Lazarus. Bert.—At any rate, the Church is never deprived of the word of God. S. Aug. W.

Ver. 26. Lendeth. “To receive interest,” δανειζει, from God. Prov.

19:17. S. Aug. &c. C.—He maketh know the divine word. Orig.

Ver. 27. Dwell in the land of the living, rather than in that of promise, from which many just people were banished during the captivity. Bert.—He who complies with these two conditions, will inherit heaven. W.

Ver. 28. Saints. Heb. “merciful ones.” He will free them from captivity. C.—Punished. This sentence seems to be improperly omitted in Heb. which otherwise neglects the letter á, as the Chal. Syr. and S. Jer. do as well as a few copies of the Sept. The Rom. edit. with the Arab. and Ethiopic, reads αμωμοι εκδικθησονται, “the innocent shall be avenged,” (C.) or “punished;” which is inaccurately put for ανομοι εκδιωχθησονται, the wicked shall be punished, or “expelled;” (Bert.) though Grabe prefers the former verb. H.—S. Cyril acknowledges both readings. C.

Ver. 31. Supplanted. The devil shall have no advantage over the just, (C.) who aim constantly at perfection. Orig.

Ver. 32. Death, mortificare. Some read perdere, or occidere. The wicked are constantly laying snares for destruction, (C.) and to draw others into mortal sin. W.

Ver. 33. Judged, “by him.” Illi seems to be superfluous; (Bert.) or it implies that God will revise the sentence of wicked judges. H.—The just have nothing to fear. God will pass an equitable sentence, and the condemnation of men shall do no harm. Orig.—The mistakes of human tribunals prove the necessity of a general judgment.

Ver. 34. See the truth of these maxims. C.—While the wicked enjoy power they often conceal their injustice, which appears as soon as the veil is removed by death, when people cease to fear them.

Ver. 35. Cedars, &c. Sept. have read differently from the present Heb. and present a more beautiful sense. C.—Prot. “and spreading himself like a green bay-tree, (marg. or “a green tree that groweth in his own soil,)” yet he passed away, and lo,” &c. H.—Ezrach, denotes an evergreen, (Rabbins) “a laurel covered with verdure.” C.—Houbigant has “a cedar,” ezrach.

Ver. 36. I passed. This is better than the Heb. “it has passed,” transivit, as a tree changes not its place, and all the ancient interpreters agree with us. Bert.—His place, is not expressed in Heb. But it implies that every vestige of the proud is soon lost. This might serve to curb the violence of those who disturb mankind! H.—The wicked may here refer to Nabuchodonosor, the devil, Judas, &c. C.—We may behold the riches of sinners with our bodily eyes: but if we consider them with the eyes of faith, they presently vanish. S. Amb. S. Aug.

Ver. 37. Remnants, or rewards. W.—Heb. acharith, “the reward,” (Pag.) “the last end of man is peace,” (Mont. H.) or “the posterity (v. 38) of such a man shall be happy.” C.—“There are future things for the peaceful.” Sym.—The expectations of the just are not confined to this world. They have something laid up for heaven, whereas the wicked have nothing. H.—These lose all by death; and the thought makes them take refuge in the foolish hope of being annihilated. Bert.

Ver. 38. Together. At the last day, (H.) or all without exception shall perish; the wicked, with their posterity and riches. W.

Ver. 39. Salvation. This is an effect of God’s grace. W.

PSALM 37

PSALM 37. (DOMINE NE IN FURORE.)

A prayer of a penitent for the remission of his sins. The third penitential psalm.

Ver. 1. For a remembrance, viz. of our miseries and sins; and to be sung on the sabbath-day. Ch.—This sabbath might also allude to the indolent rest which occasioned the fall of David. 2 K. 11:1. H.—Heb. mentions not the sabbath; and it is not known (C.) why the Sept. made this addition. The prophet may have Christ suffering for our sins in view, (Bert.) though he probably composed this psalm, when he was afflicted with an illness after this fall. Rab. Muis, &c. C.—It contains an excellent model for penitents, (C.) to enable them to regain peace of conscience, (S. Greg.) and paradise, from which they are banished by sin. S. Aug.—This remembrance (W.) is most essential. H.

Ver. 2. Wrath. God is incapable of passion: but man deserves to be treated with the utmost rigour; and this David deprecates, begging that God would act rather like a physician in his regard. Theod. C.—The same petition occurs in psalm 6; and this ought to caution people not to make imprecations, since God’s judgments are so terrible. Bert.—S. Aug. and S. Greg. explain this text of the fire of hell, and of purgatory. 1 Cor. 3:15. H.—Though some be saved by the latter, “yet is that fire more grievous than whatever man can suffer in this life.” S. Aug.—“I esteem that transitory fire more intolerable than all present tribulation.” S. Greg. W.—We may therefore pray, “Here burn,” &c. with the same S. Aug. who assures us, (Gen. con. Man. ii. 20.) that “he who cultivates not the field of his soul, will, after this life, experience either the fire of purgatory or eternal punishment." H.

Ver. 3. Arrows. Afflictions, (W.) or the word of God, which convert the sinner. S. Aug.—The admonition of Nathan had made the deepest impression on David. He was also visited by sickness, like Job 6:4 and 19:21.

Ver. 4. Sins. These occasion my great affliction, when I reflect on thy justice. W.—I chastise myself. Euseb.—S. Aug. explains all this of original sin. C.—Jesus bore the weight of all our sins, which are above our comprehension, v. 5. Bert.

Ver. 5. Me. They press upon me like a deluge or huge weight. C.—The sin of David had many aggravations. Bert.—His punishment was also great. C.—His spirit was almost overwhelmed, as the sins which are not bewailed, bring on other transgressions. W.—It is not so much sin as the neglect of penance, which destroys men. Bert.—This folly is here acknowledged by David. H.

Ver. 6. Foolishness, or sin. Shame has made me conceal the state of my soul; and hence evil has increased. S. Jer. &c. C.—The poisoned wound has infected other parts which were sound: (W.) chaburoth denotes sores, or "wounds still fresh or mortifying," (H.) rather than scars. M.—All sin is properly styled foolishness, as no prudent man should commit any. Orig.

Ver. 7. End. Heb. "exceedingly," while a person feels his state is not desperate. Bert.—Sorrowful. Heb. "in black," which may refer either to the mourning attire, (C.) or to the "countenance." Sym.—Grief will allow me to take no rest. Orig.—I dare not look up to heaven, (C.) nor can I walk straight, to perform any good work (W.) of myself. H.

Ver. 8. Loins. Ψοαί, as the Alex. and Comp. Sept. read, though the Vat. has ψυχη, soul, (H.) with the Arab. &c.—Illusions. Heb. nikle, "burning." Pagn. "shameful ulcer." Houb. "Ignominy." S. Jer. H.—David acknowledges that the irregular motions of concupiscence were an effect of his transgression. The Jews and Greeks place these sensations in the loins. 3 K. 8:10. Plato triplicem finxit animan, cujus principatum in capite, iram in pectore, cupiditatem subter præcordia locavit. Cicero, Tusc. 1. C.—Flesh. Concupiscence striving in me.

Ver. 9. Heart. I give vent to my inward grief by loud lamentations.

Ver. 10. Desire, to be restored to thy favour. W.—Thou alone canst heal me. C.

Ver. 11. Troubled. Heb. “beats,” palpitat. Houb.—Itself. Heb. “even they are,” &c. H.—I was no longer endued with the spirit of prophecy, (S. Bas.) till my conversion, (S. Aug.) nor an object of favour. H.—I was abandoned to myself, (C.) quitting thy light. S. Amb.—My eyes have been hurt by weeping (H.) and maladies, (C.) while my heart is become so corrupt, that I do not relish or discern spiritual things. H.—The beauty of virtue, and the enormity of vice, do not strike me. M.

Ver. 12. Have. Heb. “over-against my wound (H.) or leprosy.” C. Prot. “stand aloof from my sore.” H.—But the original means rather “near to.” Sept. may have read u for i, in nighi. Bert.—But Sym. and S. Jerom translate, “stood against my leprosy, (H.) and my neighbour stood at a distance;” as if they had been afraid of the contagion. Job (19:13. 19) makes the same complaints. C.—These manners of worldlings may be seen in every age, and ought not to fill us with surprise. Bert. Jo. 15:18.—David was abandoned by Achitophel, and by most of the tribe of Juda, (Theod.) as our Saviour was by his disciples. S. Aug.

Ver. 13. Violence. Heb. “laid snares.” This treatment might be expected from enemies, since friends proved so treacherous. H.—They would willingly have slain David. The will is often put for the deed. C.—Things. Endeavouring to engage me again in sin, being displeased because I have quitted their evil company; (W.) or they raise their fortune, by causing dissensions in the state. This might be well applied to the Pharisees, who persecuted Christ.

Ver. 14. Mouth. I utterly renounce all sin. W.—David would make no reply to Semei, (Theod.) nor our Saviour to Pilate. C.—Silence is often the best defence. H.—Eagerness to justify one’s self, causes trouble and disedification. Bert.—The prophet joins the deaf and dumb; as those who have naturally the former defect, are also afflicted with the latter. Pliny x. 69. H.

Ver. 16. Hoped. This was the reason of his silence. Bert.—He knew that God was in a manner engaged to defend those (C.) who rely (W.) wholly on Him; and he declared such to be his disposition. H.—Hear me. The same term thahane means, “wilt answer” (Mont.) as a judge and advocate. H.—God will one day manifest the justice of his elect. Bert.

Ver. 17. For. On this account I turn to thee, and entreat thee not to suffer my enemies to gain the victory. W.—My humble and earnest prayer is another motive of confidence.—My enemies is not expressed in Heb. C.—I decline saying any thing in my own defence, lest I should offend God. M.

Ver. 18. Scourges. Prot. to “halt,” letselah. H.—S. Jer. ad plagas. Chal. “for calamity.” (Bert.) See Ps. 34:15. I speak not through impatience, as I know that my sins deserve still more. C.—I resign myself to thee. W.—This was admirably verified in Jesus Christ, the victim for our sins. C.—Before me. I cannot forget my transgression. H.

Ver. 19. Sin. Though Thou knowest all things, I will confess that I may be saved; and will meditate on what I have deserved. W.—He goes to the source of his malady. C.—“Be not secure after confession of thy sin, as being always ready to confess and to offend. Declare thy iniquities in such a manner as to take care on account of thy sin.” S. Aug.—Confession without repentance is only a mockery. H.

Ver. 20. Stronger. Heb. “strong, and they,” &c. H.—Art thou deaf to my cries? C.

Ver. 21. Detracted me, by insinuating that my repentance is hypocrisy. Another mode of detracting is by making known secret faults, (W.) as calumny imputes false ones. H.—Goodness. Sept. “justice.” Many Greek and Latin copies add: “They have rejected me, the beloved, (Theod. Arab.) as one dead, as an abomination.”—Forsake, v. 22. S. Amb. C.

Ver. 23. Attend. Heb. “hasten;” which is the sense of προσχες, “attend.” Sept. H.

PSALM 38

PSALM 38. (DIXI CUSTODIAM.)

A just man's peace and patience in his sufferings; considering the vanity of the world, and the providence of God.

Ver. 1. Idithun was one of the four chief masters of music, called Ethan, 1 Par. 6:44 and Idithun ib. 16:41. Some think that he was the author of this psalm; but it was rather given to him by David to sing. C.—The title shews that the psalms were designed for the public service of the Church, and not for David alone. Bert.—This refers to the Christian Church, though some explain it of the Jews in captivity, (W.) with R. Salomon, while others think that it was composed during some of David's persecutions. It is connected with the preceding, and with the two next psalms. C.

Ver. 2. Tongue. The matter is very delicate and important. James 3:2.

Prov. 18:21. Is. 32:17. Eccli. 22:33 and 28:28.—Me, and was treating me with injustice and calumny. H.—Chilo, the sage, said: “I know how to bear ill treatment,” (Laert. 1.) and this is a proof of “the greatest wisdom and virtue.” H.—ΟΥΤΟΣ ΚΡΑΤΙΣΤΟΣ. Menand. C.—Weak men seek revenge; but the wise resolve to govern their tongues, and do not stand up in their own just defence, though they be, therefore, more persecuted. W.

Ver. 3. Renewed. I was conscious of no offence against my enemies, (H.) but I reflected that I had forfeited my virtue, (Euseb.) and therefore gave vent to my grief. H.—Being afraid of saying anything amiss, I refrained from saying what was good. But I perceived that this was wrong. S. Aug.—I deprived myself of all pleasure. C.—The seven first verses detail the arguments used by philosophers to comfort men, which all prove of little service. We must have recourse to God, v. 8. Bert.

Ver. 4. Out. This alludes to his sorrow for his sins, (Orig.) or to the fire of charity, which is enkindled by meditation on the last end, &c. (v. 5) or rather it means, that while he repressed his tongue, he could not but feel an inward zeal and indignation, (C.) in consequence of grief suppressed. W.—See Jer. 20:9. M.

Ver. 5. End, as I desire to die, like Elias, 3 K. 19. W.—The just have frequently expressed such sentiments, to move God to pity, (Job 7:1. Ps. 101:4) though they wished to live, that they might praise God on earth, (C.) if it were his will. H.—This text may indicate the impatience (Bert.) of the mere philosopher, (H.) or David desires to know to what a decree of perfection he must arrive. Orig. S. Amb.

Ver. 6. Measurable. Heb. “of a hand’s breadth.” H.—Sym. “a spithame, or twelve fingers’ breadth,” perhaps in allusion to the Greek proverb, a “spithame of life;” which denotes one very short. Drus.—The Gr. copies vary: some read, (C.) with the Vat. παλαιας, “ancient;” and others of the palestra with the Alex. παλαιστας, or “contentious.” I am obliged always to wrestle with my adversaries. Grot.—My days are short, and spent in conflicts. H.—S. Chrys. S. Amb. &c. mention both. The former word is adopted by the Arab. Ethiop, &c.; but the Heb. has tephachoth, “of a palm,” or four fingers’ breadth; (C.) and S. Jer. breves, “short.” H.—Substance. S. Jer. “life.” Heb. “age.”—Living. Heb. “standing,” how well soever he may seem to be established. Prot. “at his best estate, is altogether vanity. Selah.” H.—The wisest of men confirms this at large, Eccli. 1:1. C. Jam. 4:14.—“What is this long while which has an end?” Cic. pro. Marcel. M.

Ver. 7. Image, “of God.” S. Greg. &c. Heb. “in a shadow or darkness,” where the fall of a leaf affrights him. Life is so short and miserable, why should we strive to heap up riches? C.—For whom. Heb. “who shall gather,” &c. H.—The term is used respecting harvest rather than money. C.—Heb. has disquieted in the plural, and the rest of the words in the singular; but S. Jerom agrees with us, conturbatur ... & ignorat cui dimittat ea. H.—The prophet still utters complaints. One step farther is necessary to ensure peace. Bert.—He acknowledges that his life is but a shadow, and what we ought not to grieve for temporal losses. W.

Ver. 8. Substance. Sept. hypostasis. Heb. “hope.” H.—I can depend only on thee. C.

Ver. 9. Thou hast. Heb. lo, “do not;” ne, or nonne; or “hast thou not made?” &c. as the following verse intimates. Bert.—Thou hast suffered me to be reproached by the foolish, who prosper in this world. W.—The fool may denote the devil, (S. Jer. Orig.) and all the lovers of iniquity. Flam. C.

Ver. 10. It. S. Aug. reads “me,” conformably to some copies of the Sept. Arab, &c. C.—He is at a loss to explain the reason of the prophet, and suggests that this perhaps ought to be referred to the following sentence, “Because thou hast made me, remove,” &c. H.—Such is the inconvenience of having incorrect copies. Amama.—The Alex. and Vat. Sept. both have me, (H.) which is omitted in Complut. C.—David knew that he was scourged by divine Providence. W.

Ver. 11. In (thy) rebukes, belongs to the next verse in Heb. and Sept. referring to man in general, unless the prophet mean himself. Bert.

Ver. 12. Spider. S. Jer. “moth.” Sym. “thou dissolvest like corruption his desirable thing;” (H.) which means the soul, (Bert.) or “beauty.” Prot. Remorse of conscience and God’s judgments make a man pine away.—Disquieted is obelized in the Sept. S. Jer. ad Sun. C.—It is not found in the Alex. and Comp. edit. (H.) and seems to be taken from v. 7. It does not alter the sense. Bert.—“Man is vanity always.” S. Jer.—As a spider which has consumed its moisture, so he decays. W.

Ver. 13. Were. 1 Par. 29:15. I can expect aid from no other but thee. C.—Heaven is our home. W.—“Life is a travelling from home.” Plato in Axiocho.

Ver. 14. More. In a state to do good. W.—Grant me relief. Eccle. 9:10. Job 7:8. C.

PSALM 39

PSALM 39. (EXPECTANS EXPECTAVI.)

Christ's coming, and redeeming mankind.

Ver. 1. Psalm. Prot. intimate that this was not in the Heb.; but we find mizmor, “canticle,” which is equivalent. H.—David speaks of his own restoration to health as a figure of Jesus Christ, who is principally intended, Heb. 10:7. The end of the psalm is nearly the same with the 69th. C.—Some arbitrarily (Bert.) explain the words with relation to the revolt of Absalom. Bossuet.—Others think it may refer to the captives, (Ven. Bede) to Daniel, or Jeremias, rescued from prison. See Theodoret, who explains it of men waiting for the general resurrection. It may express the sentiments of the Church, when the persecutions ceased. Euthym.—Christ sometimes speaks in his own name, and sometimes in that of his members. S. Amb. S. Aug. C.—It is certain that David had Christ in view; and if he alludes to himself, it is only as the figure of him. Bert.

Ver. 2. Expectation, or patience. H.—God has, at last, granted my request.

Ver. 3. Misery. Heb. “confusion,” (Bert.) or “noise,” (S. Jer. H.) from the greatest danger. Theod.—Dregs. Mud. Jer. 38:6. S. Aug. &c. explain this of the Christian saved by faith from the sink of his sins. C.

Ver. 4. New. Excellent. H.—I was before uttering complaints, now I give thanks with joy, for my health and conversion. C.—Song. Heb. “Praise.” The penitent changes his language, which is no longer understood by worldlings. Bert.—Many. S. Aug. reads, the just, who take part in the welfare of their brethren, (Ps. 31:11) while the wicked are filled with alarm, at the ways of God; who humbles or exalts people as he pleases. C.

Ver. 5. Vanities. Heb. “the proud, nor such as turn aside to lies.” Prot. H.—All the world is vanity, (Ps. 38:6. &c. C.) though idolatry may be here meant. S. Cyr.

Ver. 6. Thoughts, or designs, “over us,” as Heb. adds. No one can fathom the counsels of the Lord. It is folly, therefore, to attack his mysteries. H.—Like. Prot. “and thy thoughts which are to usward, they cannot be reckoned up in order unto thee.” Lit. non ordinare apud te. Mont. H.—But haroc means also æquiparare, which corresponds with the Vulg. Bert.—Syr. “none is comparable to thee.” C.—Number. Christ and his apostles preached, so that many followed their doctrine. W.—

David also had many witnesses of his gratitude. They crowded round him. Some would improperly make multiplicati sunt, agree with mirabilia, διαλογισμοις, which is in the masculine. Bert.—“I find no order before thee; if I would declare and number, they are more (wonders) than can be counted.” S. Jer. H.—I am at a loss how to express myself, and must be content with the interior sentiments of gratitude. See Ps. 70:15. C.

Ver. 7. Sacrifice and oblation. Neither bloody nor unbloody sacrifices of the law will do. M.—Pierced ears. Sept. and S. Paul read, a body thou hast fitted to me. Heb. 10:5. H.—Nobilius mentions, that he found the reading of the Vulg. in one Gr. MS. in Eus. &c.—The Arab. has both. “Thou hast prepared a body for me, and opened my ears.” C.—Both are, in effect, of divine authority. The version adopted by S. Paul, cannot be rejected, no more than the Heb. confirmed by the Vulg. James Pierce asserts, that the Heb. is incorrect, oznaim being put for az zip, “then a body,” as the letters are not unlike. The dissertation is ingenious: the author is, however, suspected of Socinianism. We know not the reason why the Vulg. here abandons the Sept. The sense is much the same; the prophet noticing the entire obedience of the Messias, (Bert.) and the apostle comprising his whole person. M.—His body was miraculous, (H.) and the incarnation the work of God. C.—Nothing could come up to his submission. “Thou has dug ears for me,” (S. Jer. H.) alluding to the custom of making slaves for ever, (Ex. 21:5) or “thou hast fitted, (C.) opened, (Prot.) my ears,” enabling me to hear, and to obey. H.—The sacrifice of Christ was never interrupted, from the first moment of his incarnation. C.—He was always doing the will of his Father. H.—This sacrifice is the most essential. God rejected all such as were destitute of this condition, or were not offered by people determined to observe the whole law. 1 K. 15:22. Is. 1:11. Jer. 7:22. Porphyr. Abs. ii. C.—No sacrifice of the Old Testament was sufficient to satisfy God’s justice for sin. Christ, by the ear of obedience, performed the redemption of man by his death, as was determined from eternity. See Heb. 10. W.—And is omitted in the Latin version of S. Paul, holocaustomata pro peccato, inadvertently, or rather to intimate, that he was speaking of the holocaust of expiation. Heb. 10:6. 8 and 13:11 and Lev. 16:27. Bert.—S. Aug. also admits only one species of sacrifice, “holocausts likewise for sin.” But others distinguish them from the victims designed to expiate the sins of individuals, (Lev. 5. &c.) of which the prophet also speaks. C.

Ver. 8. Head, or beginning, (Gen. 1. Jo. 1 and 8:25. S. Jer. &c.) or at the commencement of this book of Psalms, (S. Aug.) or rather in the whole Bible. C.—Kephalis denotes a volume, (Suidas) or stick, on which books were formerly rolled, being written on parchment. The Jews still observe the same custom in their synagogues. C. Lu. 4:17. 20.—Heb. “In the volume of the book,” means, in the book, (Amama) or the Bible, which is the book by excellence, where the incarnation and death of Christ, for man’s redemption, are clearly specified. H.—This is the sum of the Scriptures. W.—They bear witness to Christ. Jo. 5:39. Luke 24:27. H.—The apostle uses the word capitulum, for the sum. Hebrews 8. Whatever sense be chosen, we should meditate on this head, or volume. But Christ signed, as it were, this solemn engagement, from all eternity. If we adopt the passage to David, we may translate, “I come, having on me the volume of thy Scriptures.” See 4 K. 11:12. C.

Ver. 9. Heart. So the Vat. Sept. reads; while other editions have κοιλίας, “belly.” S. Jer. ad Sum.—Heb. “bowels.” H.—The sense is the same. Bert.—I love the law so much, that I would hide it in my bowels, (C.) or in the most secret place. Theod.

Ver. 10. Thy, is not expressed in Heb. or Gr. but understood. Bert.—Church, in the tabernacle, (Theod.) or rather in the Catholic Church; the propagation of which, (H.) and the preaching of the gospel throughout the world are foretold. W.—The justice, or mercies of our Saviour, are every where proclaimed. S. Jer. C.

Ver. 11. Thy. Some copies of the Sept. have, my justice, as well as the Ethiopic version. Eus. S. Aug. &c. C.—But the Vulg. is more correct. Bert.—Council. Christ conceals not his mercy and truth from the greatest and wisest congregations. He spoke boldly before Annas and Caiphas, as S. Paul did at Athens, &c. W.—David testifies his gratitude, and invites all to praise God with him. C.—But we must particularly learn from our Saviour, a horror of sin; the knowledge of his mysteries; confidence in his mercy; and a conviction, that we can never be saved but by his grace. He has announced these things, and then he finishes his career, by suffering for us, and pours forth his supplications to God. Bert.

Ver. 12. Withhold not. The prophet now speaks in the name of Christ’s mystical body, the Church, praying to be made a partaker of mercy, and to be delivered from evils, (W.) or Christ speaks as the victim for our sins. H.—Uphold me. This might be also rendered as a prayer, “May thy,” &c. with the Heb. and some copies of the Sept. Bert.

Ver. 13. My iniquities. That is, the sins of all mankind, which I have taken upon me. Ch. C.—The sins even of those who believe, are so numerous, that they cannot be seen in particular. We may faint at the sight of so many sins committed by Christians. W.—Forsaken me in the agony. C.—Christ had all the sins of mankind laid upon him. Bert.—

He did not suffer to release those who were already damned; though they had received sufficient graces, in consequence of the merits of his future death. H.—Christ knew the number and enormity of sin. M.—But he would not disclose his knowledge. H. Mar. 6:5. M.

Ver. 14. Be pleased. The rest is nearly transcribed. Ps. 69. C.—The Church prays for her weak members. W.

Ver. 15. Backward, as those who came to seize Christ were twice. Jo. 18:6.—He prays for their conversion. S.—Shame might have proved very salutary to them. Theod.—The reprobate will be confounded. W.

Ver. 16. 'Tis well. The Hebrew here is an interjection of insult and derision, like the Vah. Matt. 27:40. Ch.—As S. Jerom here expresses it, Vah, Vah. See Mark 15:29. M.—The Jews have now become objects of contempt, (C.) a just punishment (H.) of scoffers, who wish evil to the good.

Ver. 17. Magnified. Thus may those speak, who sincerely love God. W.

Ver. 18. Beggar. King David might assume this title, as well as all mankind. S. Aug.—The same may be applied to Christ, according to his human nature, as the end of this psalm, and the following, belong to him, more than to David. C.—He speaks in the name of penitents, whose sins he had undertaken to wash away. W.—Careful. Heb. “will think of me.” H.—Slack. The faithful prayed for the coming of our Saviour, as they still entreat him to hasten the reward of the good. W.

PSALM 40

PSALM 40. (BEATUS QUI INTELLIGIT.)

The happiness of him that shall believe in Christ; notwithstanding the humility and poverty in which he shall come: the malice of his enemies, especially the traitor Judas.

Ver. 1. Himself; implying, that David composed this psalm, though the word is not expressed in Heb. or Gr. Berthier. T. iii.—The same articles, however, occur, which have been thus rendered before. H.—Some explain this psalm of the sickness of Ezechias, (Ven. Bede) or of that of David, a little before the revolt of Absalom. Rab. Muis. Bossuet.—This may be described as a figure of our Saviour’s sufferings. C.—For it would be rash not to acknowledge, that He is here the principal object in view, (Theod.) since he has applied (v. 10) to the traitor’s conduct, (C.) and all the rest may properly allude to the same events. The psalmist speaks of the Messias in the six first verses, and introduces him, in the remainder, uttering his own sentiments, (Bert.) respecting his passion and resurrection. W. Isai. 53:4. M.

Ver. 2–3. Understandeth. Believing with eagerness, (H.) or reflecting seriously on Jesus Christ, (Bert.) who was pleased to be poor for our sakes. H.—And the poor, is not in the ancient Sept. (Eus.) nor Heb. &c. But it only expresses the same idea as the word needy, (Bert.) being added to show the extreme misery to which our Saviour was reduced. H.—The Fathers explain the passage in this sense, though some would suppose, that David speaks of his own conduct, (C.) or of those who adhered to him in his distress, while most followed Absalom. Flam.—Day of death or judgment. Happy the man, who makes the life of Christ his constant meditation, (Bert.) and endeavours to imitate his example, and divine charity! H.—The Church recites this psalm for the sick. Those who assist them may hope for similar treatment. But such as are not scandalized at Christ, on account of his poverty and afflictions, may be pronounced blessed, (Lu. 7:23) as He will deliver them from distress, if they place their confidence in Him. W.—The sick are relieved, when they think on Christ's sufferings. M.—Preserve. Heb. “will preserve ... and thou wilt not deliver him unto the will of his enemies.” Prot.—But S. Jerom has, “and he will not,” &c. H.—Sixtus V. reads, “into the hands of his enemy,” after S. Aug. &c. Others add, “he will purify his soul from, or on the earth.” C.—Our Lord will give to such servants more grace in this life, and glory in the next, nor will he suffer them to yield to temptation. W.—He will defend them and heal them, when sick. C.

Ver. 4. His bed. Lit. “on the bed of his sorrow.” His, seems to have been formerly in Hebrew, (Houb.) though it be now omitted, (Bert.) as it was in the time of Sym. “the bed of misery,” (S. Jer.) of infirmity.—Thou hast. Heb. “thou wilt make.” Prot. “turn,” (marg. H.) “change, or take away.” In the east, the bed was removed entirely, (Jo. 5:8) and this expression may denote, (C.) that the sick man should be cured, and no longer be confined to his bed, (S. Chrys.) or that God would take him by the hand, to support him, and turn his bed, like a tender mother, to make it more comfortable. Geneb. C.—When the just are sick unto death, Christ will give them greater consolation. W.—He will withdraw their affections from all terrestrial things, and remove whatever has been dangerous to them. S. Greg. Mor. xxiii. 15. The ineffable name has been thrice repeated in these verses, to insinuate, that all good is wrought by the blessed Trinity. Bert.

Ver. 5. Thee. Christ prays for his members, acknowledging their sins, (

W.) which he had undertaken to expiate. The Fathers explain this of his prayer in the garden. C.—Have we ever reflected on sin, which reduced the Lord of all, to such poverty and distress? Bert.

Ver. 6. Perish? When shall we have a change, and see Absalom on the throne? When shall we get rid of this man, who reproves our conduct? So were the Jews animated to destroy Christ. Theod.—The rest of the psalm more visibly relates to him. C.—His enemies were greatly disappointed. H.—For after they had put him to death, he rose again, and his name and kingdom became more glorious. W.

Ver. 7. If he, any one among my enemies. H.—The Scriptures often pass from the plural to the singular, (Bert.) to comprise every one distinctly. H.—Yet S. Aug. &c. read “they came,” &c. omitting if, as some of the Sept. edit. do likewise: though inaccurately, according to S. Jer. and Sun. C.—It occurs in the Rom. copy, and Grabe inserts it in a smaller type. The sense is not altered. H.—The conspirators affected to shew David some marks of civility, to obtain their ends. The Jews often strove to entangle Jesus, by their questions, (Matt. 19:3 and 22:17. 24 and Jo. 8:3) while Judas continued in his company, to gratify his own avarice, and to betray him. C.—Such were their vain projects. H.—Those who came maliciously to hear Christ, blamed him as an enemy to the law, or as one who cast out devils by Beelzebub. W.

Ver. 8. To me, seems useless, though it be added conformably to the Heb. (Bert.) or rather it intimates, that the enemies made no secret of their plots. H.

Ver. 9. Word of affecting the regal power, &c. S. Amb.—No more? Jesus Christ speaks. They have unjustly condemned me: But can I not rise again? or the words may be put in the mouth of his enemies. Shall we have any thing to fear from the dead? If we were to confine him only, he might perhaps escape. C.—Heb. “an evil disease, say they, cleaveth fast unto him: and now that he lieth, he shall rise up no more.” Prot.—“The word of the devil they poured out against themselves; he who hath slept, shall rise no more.” S. Jer.—Yet lo may be explained, an non, “shall not he,” &c. Sept. have seen this insulting interrogation of the Jews who ridiculed what Christ had said of his future resurrection. Bert.—They determined to put him to death; but they could not prevent his glorious (W.) appearance again on the third day. H.—Those who explain this of David, say, that the sleep denotes a mortal illness, or a grievous fault, for which it was expected, that the king would die. Kimchi. Munster. &c.

Ver. 10. Bread. This characterizes the traitor, who had received the holy Communion, and had been intrusted with the purse by our Saviour, yet betrayed him with the sign of peace. C.—To violate the laws of hospitality was greatly resented by the very pagans. Plut. Symp. vii. 4.—Supplanted me, or kicked like a wild colt, as Plato complained that Aristotle had done, when he set up another school. H. Ημᾶς ἀπελακτίσε. Laert. Eliaiv. 9.—David might allude to Absalom, though the Holy Ghost speaks of Judas. C.—Our Saviour himself says, (W.) that the Scriptures may be fulfilled, he that eateth bread with me, shall lift up his heel against me: Qui manducat mecum panem levabit contra me calcaneum suum: ἐπὴρεν ἐπ' ἐμὲ τὴν πτέρναν αὐτοῦ, “has lifted up,” &c. as the Heb. expresses it here. Judas had attempted to betray Christ already, and would do it more effectually hereafter; so that both the present and future might agree with him. We also find the psalm translated qui edebat panes meos, &c. But the difference is very small. H.—To lift up the heel, is the posture of one who attempts to supplant his adversary. M.

Ver. 11. Them. No one is ignorant of the destruction of Jerusalem, and of the miserable condition of the Jews (M.) throughout the world. C.—Christ will render every one according to his deserts. W.

Ver. 12. Over me. Thus the divinity of Christ was proved, since he rose victorious, in spite of his enemies. C.

Ver. 13. Innocence. Jesus was the spotless lamb incapable of sin. He effaced it by his blood, and is therefore crowned with glory. Heb. 2:9. Phil. 2:9. C.—This innocence made him a fit victim for sin. W.

Ver. 14. So be it. Chal. “Amen.” This word, at the beginning of a discourse, implies an affirmative oath; (Matt. 6:13) and at the end, it is a mark of approbation. Num. 5:22.—Here the Jews terminate the first book of the psalms, which they divide into five. C.—S. Jerom rejects this division, as our Saviour mentions only the psalms, and the last psalm has no such conclusion. W.—It has Alleluia. All the rest have Amen. See Ps. 72. 89 and 106. Heb. Bert.—The observations which have been made in this first part, will serve to explain many other passages, on which we shall therefore be shorter, as well as in specifying the variations from the original, which are for the most part only apparent, as the intelligent reader may be convinced, by the preceding remarks. H.

PSALM 41. (QUEMADMODUM DESIDERAT.)

Ver. 1. Understanding. See Ps. 31. M.—Core, who composed, (T.) or sung (M.) most of the psalms in this second part. T.—Pieces of a joyful nature were generally assigned to them, according to the Jews and S. Jer. Ps. lxxxiv. M.—They were descendants of the famous schismatic, the miraculous preservation of whose innocent children teaches us, that the good will not be punished with the guilty, and that we must be raised above this earth, lest hell devour us. Num. 16:31 and 26:10. W.—The sentiments of the captives, (C.) and of every sincere Christian, are here expressed. S. Aug.—David may have been the author, (C.) as it is generally believed. Bert.

Ver. 2. Waters. This was sung at the baptism of Catechumens, (S. Aug.) teaching them to thirst after heaven. H.—The hart being infected with poison, thirsts exceedingly, as sinners must do for pardon. W.

Ver. 3. Strong. Most Bibles before Clement VIII. read “fountain.” C.—El signifies both God and strong. Bert.—The Levites desired earnestly to serve God in his temple; Christians must wish to appear before him in heaven, (C.) when they will be free from temptations. Idols may destroy, but they cannot give life. W.

Ver. 4. Bread. Ovid imitates this: Cura dolorque animi lachrymæque alimenta fuère. Met. x.—The tears of compunction obtain the remission of sin. S. Jer.—God. Thus the idolaters derided those who could not point at their God. H.—The Babylonians had conquered all the surrounding nations, and despised their deities. C.—The wicked laugh at the just, who are for a time in distress, comforting themselves with weeping. W.—Those who saw David wandering (H.) in the mountains, at a distance from the tabernacle, might ask him what religion or God he followed. M.

Ver. 5. These sarcasms fill me with grief, (C.) while the solemn ceremonies of religion, which, I remember, were observed in the temple, cause my heart to overflow with joy. Bert.—I shall. Prot. “I had gone with the multitude; I went with them to the house of God with the voice of joy and praise; with a multitude that kept holiday.” Yet the holidays of the Catholic Church are now ridiculed by many. Prot. H.—The original may have several other meanings. The tabernacle may here designate the musach of Levites. 4 K. 16:18. C.—Feasting. Some such religious feasts were prescribed. Deut. 12:12. H.—David was not permitted to build the temple, nor to enter the tabernacle: but he speaks of heaven. W.

Ver. 6. My countenance. Heb. “his,” as Aquila, &c. read. C.—Yet as the words are repeated, (v. 12) there seems to be a fault in the text, (Bert.) owing to v, “his” being taken in here, instead of explaining it by and, v. 7. H.—The arrangement of the letters in the Vulg. is preferable. C.

Ver. 7. Little hill of Sion. I hope that I shall soon again behold the fertile regions along the Jordan. C.—But these hills of Hermon, &c. are nothing when compared with heaven: They serve only to remind us of our banishment. Bert.—The difficulties of our present abode, hemmed in on all sides, teach us to place our hopes in heaven. W.

Ver. 8. Flood-gates. The Hebrews imagined there were immense reservoirs of water above, (C.) which might serve to drown the earth, as at the deluge. Gen. 7:11. Both heaven and earth seemed to be armed against the psalmist. H.—One affliction succeeded another, (C.) and God appeared to have abandoned his servants to temptations. But he enables them to come off with victory, and fills them with more joy in their trials: so that they may sing in heart, and pray. W.

Ver. 9. Night. In affliction, as well as in prosperity, we must praise the Lord. Rom. Sept. “in the night he will manifest it.”—Mercy. H.—This is very beautiful, but not agreeable with the original. Bert.

Ver. 11. Whilst. Prot. As, “with a sword in my bones, mine enemies reproach me.” H.—Thus the martyrs were tortured and upbraided. C.

Ver. 12. Countenance. To whom I look up with confidence. M.—The just are comforted with the hope of God’s sight. W.

PSALM 42

PSALM 42. (JUDICA ME DEUS.)

The prophet aspireth after the temple and altar of God.

Ver. 1. David. Sept. add, “it has no title, in Heb.” being composed by the same author, and on the same subject, as the preceding. C.—David teaches the faithful how to begin a good work; and priests how they ought to officiate at Mass. W.—Holy. Heb. “merciful.” The Babylonians and their king, treated the Jews with great cruelty. C.—After we have proved ourselves, according to the admonition of S. Paul, (1 Cor. 11) before approaching to the holy Eucharist, we may beg of God to judge and to protect us. W.

Ver. 2. Me. Without thy assistance, I can do nothing. My enemies seem too strong, while thou appearest to disregard my prayer. W.

Ver. 3. Light, your Messias, as the Jews confess, (Jarchi) truth, the holy Spirit. S. Chrys.—Both the titles may be applied to our Saviour. Bert. S. Jer.—We are in the utmost distress; be pleased to send us relief. C.—As thou hast sent Christ into the world to impart these graces, grant that we may know, and comply with our duties, before we approach to thy holy altar.—Holy hill, the Church, (W.) or tabernacle on Sion, where the Jews wished to be present. C.

Ver. 4. Youth. S. Jer. “the God of my joy and exultation.” H.—Syr. and Arab. agree with us, and Gil means, (C.) a young man, in Arab. and Heb. Hammond.—People in youth, shew for the effects of joy. Bert.—Accompanied with light, and a pure intention, we may offer sacrifice to God, who changeth our corruptions into newness of life. W.—The Levites might sing near the altar, but could not offer victims. C.

Ver. 5. My God. This word is sing.; but the former “Elohim,” is plural, to intimate one God in three persons. W.—Harp. Heb. cinnor, which Sym. renders, “the psaltery.” The sons of Core were chiefly door-keepers: but they also played on musical instruments. C.

Ver. 6. God. Trust in God, whom I hope to see face to face. W.

PSALM 43

PSALM 43. (DEUS AURIBUS NOTRIS.)

The Church commemorates former favours, and present afflictions; under which she prays for succour.

Ver. 1. Understanding. See Ps. 41. M.—David or the Corites composed this piece, to comfort the just under persecution. Bert.—It may allude to the situation of the Jews at Babylon, (C.) or under Antiochus Epiphanes, (Ven. Bede) though S. Paul, (Rom. 8:36) applies v. 22 to the persecutions of the primitive Christians, which seems to shew, that the whole psalm refers to them, (Bert.) as the Fathers have explained it. Yet it may literally be understood of the Israelites (C.) also, (H.) as well as the Christian martyrs, since all things happened to the Israelites in figure. W.

Ver. 2. Old, in calling Abraham, and rescuing the Hebrews for the Egyptian bondage, &c. W.—God formerly protected our Fathers; but how are things changed? C.—Gideon uses nearly the same words.

Judg. 6. M.

Ver. 3. Plantedst them, thy people. See Jer. 2:21 and 12:10. Ezech. 17:6.—Out, by means of insects, &c. Wisd. 12:8. Jos. 24:12. C.—The Hebrews were miraculously assisted, (W.) without any merit of their own, (C.) as all were wicked at first. Yet Abraham was freely chosen, that the visible Church might be preserved. W.

Ver. 5. Saving (salutes) the manifold instances of protection. H.

Ver. 6. Horn, like bulls. W.—This we have done in former times. C.—Not man's strength, but God's favour, granteth the victory. W.

Ver. 9. We glory. Lit. "be praised." H.—We have always attributed our success to thee. C.

Ver. 10. Now. He foretelleth divers states of the Jews, and of the Church. W.

Ver. 11. To. Lit. "after," post. They were formerly defeated; now it is our turn. H.

Ver. 12. Nations. Many never returned from captivity. C. See Deut. 28:43.

Ver. 13. Reckoning. Prot. "thou dost not increase thy wealth by their price." H.—Thou art eager to get quit of them, as of the vilest slaves. Theod. Grot. Isai. 50:2 and 52:3. Exchange. Some copies of the Sept. read ἀλλαλαγμασι, "jubilations," with the Ethiopic. S. Aug. &c.—While others have more correctly ἀλλαγμασι, like the Vulg. There were none to purchase, so that thou hast given the people for nothing. C.—At the last siege of Jerusalem, the Jews, who had sold (W.) or bought Christ for thirty pieces of money, (H.) were themselves sold for the smallest price; thirty being given for one penny. See Joseph. de B. Jud. W.

Ver. 15. Head, out of contempt. M.—The Gentiles propose us as an example of a people fallen a prey to the divine indignation. 4 K. 19:21. Lam. 2:15.

Ver. 17. Detracteth me. S. Jer. "blasphemeth" God, while they upbraid us, as a faithless people. C.

Ver. 18. Covenant. Till the passion of Christ, the Jews did not wholly fall from God, and then many were chosen from among them, to found the Christian religion. W.—The Corites speak in the name of their faithful brethren, whom no provocation had induced to follow the superstitious practices of Babylon. C.

Ver. 19. Neither. Lit. “and or yet.” H.—But the negative particle is taken (W.) from the first part of the verse. C.—S. Jer. “Neither hast thou,” &c. M.—Yet many adhere to the Heb. &c. “And thou hast turned,” &c. Though it may be taken in a dangerous sense, (C.) yet it may only signify, (H.) that God had removed his people from the country where his worship was observed, and had refused them his protection; hence their paths have been unfortunate. Theodoret.—This agrees better with the sequel. Bert.—It is no proof that God is the author of sin, in either sense. T.

Ver. 20. Affliction. Heb. or “dragons,” (S. Jer. M.) alluding to the deserts, to which the Jews retired, when the Assyrians invaded them. The text may be more applicable to the first Christians, who might truly say, that they had not transgressed. Houbig.—To the martyrs, death was but like a shadow. S. Greg. Mar. 4:17.—Here it denotes great darkness and misery. M.

Ver. 21. If we. This is a Heb. idiom, to express, we have not. W.

Ver. 22. Slaughter. They will not suffer us to be quiet respecting our religion, striving to delude us: or, if we prove resolute, like Daniel, they expose us to torments. C.—This was more fully verified at the first propagation of the gospel, (Rom. 8:36) as it still continues to be among those, who cease not to persecute Catholics by artifice, as well as by open violence. Christians in every age (H.) are persecuted, more than the prophets (W.) generally were. H.

Ver. 23. Sleepest thou, seeming not to attend to our sufferings. M.—End, shall we never be restored to favour? C.

Ver. 25. Dust. We are at death’s door, being oppressed with grief, as long as thou dost not assist us. W.—We petition in the most fervent (H.) and humble posture. Isai. 49:23. Mic. 7:17. C.

PSALM 44

PSALM 44. (ERUCTAVIT COR MEUS.)

The excellence of Christ’s kingdom, and the endowments of his Church.

Ver. 1. For them that shall be changed, i.e. For souls happily changed, by being converted to God; (Ch.) or it may allude to the variety of speakers here introduced. Bert.—Prot. leave shoshannim, which some translate, “on the lilies,” (Aquila. S. Jer.) or “instruments of six strings.” C.—The beloved, viz. our Lord Jesus Christ. Ch.—Heb. “of loves;” or of the young women, friends of the bride, (yedidoth) who sung the Epithalamium, as we see in the 18th Idyl of Theocritus. The Jews formerly explained this psalm of the Messias, as well as all the Fathers after the apostles. Heb. 1:8. Many passages cannot refer to Solomon’s marriage with the daughter of Pharaoh, though some might be referred to that event, as a figure of Christ’s union with his Church. C.—The whole had better be understood of Christ, (Bert.) being intended for the instruction of all converts from paganism and schism. W.

Ver. 2. Uttered. Heb. rachash, “boileth,” as one unable to contain himself. Bert.—Speak, or “dedicate,” dico, (H.) though here it only means to speak. C.—He addresses the object of his praise, instead of invoking the muses. S. Jer.—Swiftly. I have not to meditate. C.—The Holy Ghost moves my tongue, (2 Pet. 1:21) as fast as my hands can write. Jer. 36:18 and 4 Esdras 14:39. H.—High mysteries, in honour of the great king, occupy my thoughts, and to him I refer this canticle. W.

Ver. 3. Beautiful. The corporal beauty of Christ may be problematical. H.—But justice is the truest beauty. S. Aug.—All admired his eloquence, (Lu. 4:22 and Jo. 7:46) and innumerable converts were made, by the preaching of his word. S. Jer.—The young women here address the spouse.—Therefore, I say, (Rabbins) or “because” God hath chosen thee freely. Solomon was styled the beloved, (2 K. 12:25) and was highly favoured. Wisd. 8:20 and 3 K. 4:29. &c. But this was only a figure of Jesus Christ, (C.) whose hypostatical union was an effect of gratuitous predestination, (S. Aug. præd. xv.) though his other graces were merited. S. Chrys. Sa. C.—He was most excellent in all sorts of gifts. W.

Ver. 4. Mighty. (Potentissime) Erasmus (Apol. con. Sutor.) complains, that he could not learn, whether this was a noun or an adverb, without consulting the originals. Amama.

Ver. 5. Reign. Devise, execute, and perfect the establishment of thy spiritual kingdom. W.—Solomon was no warrior; but he only wanted enemies to be so. The sword of Christ is his word, (Heb. 4:12) anger, (Apoc. 19:15. C.) or human nature. S. Jer.—Some translate, “and ride,” because kings were mounted on chariots, and governed their people with the reins of justice, &c. Robertson.—Justice. These titles are eagerly desired by monarchs; as martial prowess, clemency, and justice, (C.) render them objects of terror, and of love. H.—Christ conquered by his miracles, mildness, &c. (C.) propagating the truth, and punishing the rebellious. W. Ps. 2:8.

Ver. 6. Fall. This seems to be placed too soon, in order to shew the rapidity of the conquest. C.—“Thy arrows are sharp, shot into the hearts,” &c. H.—Some explain in corde, (as the Heb. Sept. &c. read) of the voluntary submission of those who had formerly been enemies of the Messias. S. Chrys. &c.—“Thy sharp arrows, the people subject to thee, shall fall into,” &c.—Men are sometimes represented as arrows. Is. 49:2. Bert.

Ver. 7. O God, O Θεός. The Sept. thus mark the vocative case, (Ps. 138:17. H.) and it is clear, that the Messias is here styled God, (Heb. 1:8) though some of the Jews would evade this proof by saying, “God is thy throne.” 1 Par. 29:23. Even Munster translates, O Deus, and the Jew Agesila, ω Θεε. Elohim is never addressed to any one by the prophets, but to the true God, (Bert.) and this title alludes to the judicial character of Christ, (Acts 10:42. C.) of whose kingdom there shall be no end. Luke 1:33.—Calvin is very bold in asserting, that David spoke properly of Solomon, as if the apostle had applied the text to our Saviour only in the mystical sense; whereas many things cannot belong to the former, and the Chal. and Fathers expound this psalm of Christ and his Church.—Solomon did not persevere in wisdom, and his beauty was equalled by that of Absalom, &c. W.—Crellius and Grotius in vain attempted to weaken this proof of Christ’s divinity, as a Jew, who disputed with Origen, did. con. Cels. i. D. H.

Ver. 8. God. Sym. Θεε. Theophyl.—Elohim is used in both places, (H.) with a singular verb, as being spoken of the Deity. S. Iræn. iii. 6. Bossuet. D.—“O Elohim, thy Elohim,” (H.) which implies more than one person in God. Bert.—Many king might be preferred to Solomon; but Christ was raised above all. W.—Fellows. In consequence of the free gift of God, in uniting the human nature to the second person, the Messias advanced in glory; (H.) or rather the prophet speaks of his subsequent merits, which entitled him to the greatest felicity.—The oil of gladness, alludes to the reward of his labours. ΔΙΑ ΤΟΥΤΟ seems to require this sense, though the Heb. may be rendered, “because.” Bert.—Either the cause or the effect may be meant. M.—Solomon was chosen before many of his elder brothers; but Christ was anointed by the Holy Ghost. Acts 10:38. C.

Ver. 9. Perfume. Lit. “from thy garments, from the ivory houses, out of which they have delighted thee, (10) the daughters of kings, in thy honour.” They esteem it an honour to wait upon thee, and perfume thy robes, which are placed in chests of ivory, with odoriferous herbs. H.—The ancients admired such garments. Gen. 27:27. Amos 3:15.—They had been given, together with the ivory boxes, as a present to Solomon at his marriage, and might give him delight, (C.) as it was then deemed unpolite to refuse a present. Odys. Σ.—Stacte. Lit. “the drop” gutta, (H.) distils from the myrrh, the wood of settim, (Num. 24:6) and may denote aloes, but not the plant. C.—Mortification and humility (W.) raise the soul on high. 2 Cor. 2:16. H.—The blessed Virgin is here styled a house of ivory. The Church, and all who observe purity, may be considered as God’s temples. 1 Cor. 3:17. C.—The virtues of Christ are this precious perfume. S. Aug. &c.—Houses. Sept. Βαρεῖς, a word which means “a tower.” Some have not understood this, and have rendered it, gravibus, “heavy,” (S. Jer. ad Prin.) which others have improperly correct by gradibus, “steps.” C.—Houbigant would change three words, and translate, “from ivory vessels, the vases of thy anointing.”

Ver. 10–11. Clothing. Heb. “in gold of Ophir.” H.—The Church is spotless. Eph. 5:26. The attendants of this glorious queen, are the nations converted, or Christian virgins. They are not the maids of Pharaoh’s daughter, whose marriage was never commended. Bert.—House. Paganism, and the observances of the old law. Bert.—The Church, and every faithful soul, may be styled the daughter, as well as the spouse of Christ.

Ver. 12. Lord. Heb. adonaiic, “thy master,” and worship him, (H.) like a dutiful wife. 1 Pet. 3:6 and 3 K. 1:16.—God is not found in the Sept. The title belongs to Jesus Christ, the spouse, who has been twice called God before. C.

Ver. 13. Daughters of Tyre; the city, with her dependant villages. Bossuet.—Tyre might send presents on this grand occasion, or might even pay tribute. 2 Par. 9:26. C.—Idolatrous nations submitted to Christ. Bert.

Ver. 14. Is within. Rom. Sept. &c. have “of Hesebon,” by mistake, for Esothen. C.—Queens in the East, could not appear much abroad. Kimchi.—When they go out, they cannot be seen. The beauty of the Church consists in virtue, and in the grace of God. C.—Borders. Charity influences the exterior works of piety, (T.) and gives beauty to the ceremonies (S. Bas.) and decorations used by the Church, with such magnificence. H.

Ver. 15. Neighbours. The Jews, as well as the Gentiles, shall embrace the faith. C.—Virginity became honourable only after the coming of Christ. S. Chrys.

Ver. 16. Temple. Even virgins (H.) out of the Church, cannot please the king. S. Aug. W.

Ver. 17. Sons. Prot. “shall be thy children.” H.—This was the wish of those present. But it does not appear that the daughter of Pharaoh had any children, (C.) and thus it seems improbable, that she is here spoken of, as the psalmist foretells the establishment and glory (Bert.) of the Church, by means of the apostles, (S. Chrys.) and their successors, who are made princes over all the world. Let those who are cut off acknowledge this, and come to the unity, that they may be introduced into the temple of the king. S. Aug. W.—Innumerable saints of all ranks, kings and emperors, acknowledge the Church for their mother, and submit to her. C.

Ver. 18. They. Heb. Sept. of Ald. and Comp. and the Gr. Fathers, have “I will;” yet this is contrary to the Vat. and Alex. Sept. (Bert.) and seems less accurate. Houbig.—The prophet was not to live for ever, so that the fame of the Church was to be spread by others. Bert.—Ever. There shall be pastors and faithful people to the end. W.

PSALM 45. (DEUS NOSTER REFUGIUM.)

The Church in persecution trusteth in the protection of God.

Ver. 1. It may allude to the defeat of Sennacherib, (Houbig.) or might be sung by the Corites at the dedication of the second temple, when peace was restored to the world, after the death of Cambyses. Ezec. 38. The Fathers explain it of the Christian Church, delivered from persecutions. S. Chrys. &c. C.

Ver. 2. Troubles. Those of English Catholics have been very great; yet they increase. W.

Ver. 4. Their. Heb. S. Amb. &c. read, “its.” C.—Both sea and land may be in confusion; we shall fear nothing, having God for our protector. H.—Though many and noble personages have revolted from the faith in England, yet the Catholic Church will never fail, (W.) even if it should in these islands. H.

Ver. 5. Stream. Jerusalem was surrounded by placid streams, which are here opposed to the great waters, as in Isai. 8:6. The Church, after persecution, is restored to peace, and adorned with all graces. C.—

Tabernacle. This is the source of our joy. Apoc. 21. M. and 22:1. Ezech. 47:1.—The advantages of the virtuous, both here and in heaven, are great. Bert.

Ver. 7. Trembled. We have witnessed the commotions in the East, under Cyrus, and his son; the latter of whom seems to be styled Gog, (Ezech. 38:19) and perished in Judea, which he intended to plunder. C.

Ver. 10. Shields. Heb. “the round things,” which some explain, “chariots,” without need. Bert.—Fire. The Fathers apply this to the peace which reigned at the birth of Christ, or to that which Constantine gave to the Church. C.

Ver. 11. Still. We have only to admire the work of God. Bert.—He will bring all to a happy issue for his elect, though the wicked may rage. H.

PSALM 46

PSALM 46. (OMNES GENTES PLAUDITE.)

The Gentiles are invited to praise God for the establishment of the kingdom of Christ.

This psalm appears to be a sequel to the former psalm, and is addressed to the Gentiles who were present at the dedication of the second temple, as Darius had ordered his governors to assist the Jews. 1 Esd. 6:15. See Esth. 8:17.—Many explain it of the translation of the ark: but the Fathers behold the establishment of Christianity, and the ascension of Christ, v. 6. C.

Ver. 4. Feet. The Chanaanites were subdued by Josue, and others by David, &c. The army of Cambyzes became a prey to the Jews. Ezech. 39:10. C.—All who embrace the true faith, even kings, become subjects, and not heads of the Church. W.

Ver. 5. Beauty. The temple. Ezech. 24:21. Both Jews and Gentiles form the Church.

Ver. 6. Trumpet. Christ ascended, accompanied by choirs of angels. His apostles proclaimed his truths. C.—They were not left desolate, but joyful; having the Paraclete sent the them.

Ver. 7. King. Christ is God, by his divine nature, and our king, by his humanity. W.

Ver. 8. Wisely. Heb. mascil, which is so often rendered “understanding” in the titles. No one can do well, what he does not understand. C.—The union of faith and good works, is singing wisely. S. Chrys. C.—Concordent manus & lingua. S. Aug. D.—Let each strive to know the mysteries of faith. W.

Ver. 9. Throne. Christ reigns over the heart with all power. Matt. 28:18.

Ver. 10. Gods. Judges appointed by the king of Persia over the Jews, &c. (C.) or rather the apostles, who were more than men, (S. Jer.) and exercised a greater power than any earthly monarch. C.—The richest princes have submitted to the God of Abraham, whose seed was to prove a blessing to all. Gen. 18:18. Heb. as it is now pointed, “the princes of the people are gathered unto the people of the God of Abraham, for He is far elevated above the gods the shields of the earth,” as kings are often styled. C.—Prot. “for the shields of the earth belong unto God: He is greatly exalted;” or (Sept.) “the earthly potentates, who are of God, have been,” &c.—We might explain the Vulg. in the same sense, if Dei were substituted for Dii, (H.) as it should be. C.—Dei sunt optimates terræ, & ipse summe elevatus est. Houbig.—S. Jer. agrees with the Vulg. (H.) which is the clearest, (Bert.) only he renders ham, “the people” of the God, as it may also signify, and retains the word shields, which we explain the strong gods, or the “strong ones of God.” H.—The blessed Trinity is not divided, but more distinctly professed in baptism than it was under the law. W.

PSALM 47. (MAGNUS DOMINUS.)

God is greatly to be praised for the establishment of his Church.

Ver. 1. On the, &c. is not in Heb. nor Euseb. &c. It means Sunday, (S. Amb. W.) or rather Monday, being sung on that day. S. Jer. &c. H.—The subject of the former canticle is continued, in thanksgiving to God, for some signal victory, or for the peace which God afforded to his people, after the death of Cambyzes. C.—The Fathers explain it of the propagation and peace of the Church. H.

Ver. 2. City, or temple, which lay to the north of old Jerusalem, on Sion. C.—Yet Genebrard, &c. place this mountain south of Salem. M.—The concourse of priests and people gave the appearance of a great city. Ezec. 40:2. Is. 14:13.—The Church is built upon a rock. C.—The Jews and Christians are under the greatest obligation of praising God. W.

Ver. 3. With. Heb. “the beautiful situation, the joy of the whole earth, (M.) Sion, sides of,” &c. Chal. “Sion, thou art beautiful as a bride.” Christ’s Church is thus described. Apoc. 21:2. C.—Its figure, (H.) the temple, was the glory of the whole country. Ps. 25:8. Lam. 2:15. C.—But the Church alone extends to the sides of the north, or over the world. W.

Ver. 4. Houses. Heb. “palaces;” Sept. “towers.” Βαρεσι, a word which has again been mistaken for gravibus or gradibus, as v. 14 and Ps. 44:9. God is the defence of his people, (Prov. 18:10) the Church, Mat. 16:18. C.—All particular houses, or churches, must come to the unity of faith, (W.) and to the seat of Peter. S. Iræn. iii.

Ver. 5. Earth is superfluous. S. Jer. ad Sun. C.—Yet it is found in the Vat. Sept. &c. H.—The kings of the earth assembled against the Church, (Ps. 2:2) as many came to oppose Jerusalem, under Cambyzes. Ezec. 28:2. 13. C.

Ver. 6. Saw. They could not say, like Cæsar, Veni, vidi, vici. For they no sooner came to invade the unsuspecting people, than they began to tremble. Ezec. 38:11. &c. Ps. 45:7. H.

Ver. 7. There, denotes the promptitude of vengeance, as well as the following allusion. Is. 13:8. 1 Thes. 5:3.

Ver. 8. Vehement. Heb. “eastern.”—Tharsis, such strong-built ships, as might go to Tarsus, in Cilicia, (Gen. 10:4. C.) or to India. M.—The merchants of Tharsis, the naval officers, shall say, &c. There shall be a great commotion, &c. Ezec. 38:13. 19.—The same storm proved fatal to the land and sea-forces of Cambyzes. His navy is mentioned by Herodotus, (iii. 11. and 44.) and was probably stationed over against Acco, or Ptolemais, as the king perished at the foot of Carmel. C.—Nothing maketh a deeper impression than the sentiments of religion. God’s grace enableth the soul to sustain all conflicts, and to overcome. W.

Ver. 9. Seen. All the promises have been fulfilled. How could any one have thought that we should have been permitted to dedicate this temple under the patronage of the king of Persia? (1 Esd. 6:8.) Who would not have feared, lest the Christian religion should perish, under such violent persecutions? Converts admire its beauty and strength. C.—The completion of the prophecies is a wonderful confirmation and comfort of Christians, (W.) whose faith is founded indeed for ever. H.

—The gates of hell shall not prevail. M.

Ver. 10. Temple. Ναου. Sept. S. Amb. &c. though the Vat. and Alex. copies have Λαου, “people,” with the Arab. Ethiop. S. Aug. &c. H.—In the Church we receive many graces, (C.) even Christ himself, (S. Amb.) to which those who refuse to be Catholics, can have no title. W.

Ver. 11. Earth. all who hear of the wonders of God, must praise him; and who can be ignorant of what He has done, (C.) in the defeat of the enemies of his people, (H.) of Sennacherib, Cambyases, &c.? Yet all the earth will be instructed only by the propagation of the Gospel. C.—Justice, against thy enemies, (H.) though this word may here imply “mercy,” in opposition to the judgments, v. 12. C.—These perfections are never at variance. W.

Ver. 12. Juda. Sept. Sym. &c. have “Judea,” (C.) which would intimate, that the psalm was composed after the captivity. But the Hebrew reads Yehuda, “Juda,” with S. Jerom. H.

Ver. 13. Surround. Heb. “walk round, (H.) tell her towers.” S. Jer.

Ver. 14. Strength. Perhaps the outward wall, (Ezec. 40:5) not seen in Solomon’s temple.—Houses. Heb. “palaces.” Sept. “houses built like towers.” Βαρεῖς. Jerusalem was not rebuilt or fortified, when the second temple was dedicated. 2 Esd. 1:3. C.—The fortresses of the Church are the holy Fathers and Doctors, who watch in her defence. Her pillars shall not fail. The particular Churches are all united in the same faith, and these reflections ought to prevail on all to embrace the same. W.

Ver. 15. Our God. Christ incarnate works all this. He shall rule over the Church, not for three or four hundred years only, but as long as time shall last, and He shall have a Church triumphant in eternity. W.—Evermore. Heb. hal-moth. The letters being differently arranged, are rendered, “in death.” S. Jer. “even unto death.” Prot. (H.) “in youth,” (Chal.) or “in the secret” of Providence. It may form a part of the following title, “over the young women,” as Ps. 9 and 45. C.—But then it would probably come after lamnatseach. The psalmist inculcates the perpetual duration of the Church under God’s conduct, by three terms. In sæculum & ultra ... usque ad mortem, “till death,” (Pagn.) or “incessantly.” Sym. H.—This psalm may also express the sentiments of a penitent, (Bert.) or of one who is put in possession of unchangeable felicity. H.

PSALM 48. (AUDITE HÆC OMNES GENTES.)

The folly of worldlings, who live in sin, without thinking of death or hell.

Ver. 1. Psalm. S. Amb. adds, “of David.” It is written in an enigmatical style, like the book of Ecclesiastes, and is very obscure. But the drift is, to impress the captives with a contempt of worldly grandeur, which will end in death. The redemption of mankind and the resurrection of Christ are foretold, v. 8. 16. &c. C.

Ver. 3. Earth-born. Heb. “sons of Adam,” a title belonging to the meanest. Progenies terræ. Perseus vi. 56. C.—So Callimachus styles the giants, “mud-born.” H.—Yet Houbigant explains it of the rich, (Bert.) who have lands, and leave their names to them, v. 12. H.—Of men. Heb. ish, noblemen. M.—Ye just and (S. Aug.) and polite. S. Athan.

Ver. 5. Proposition. Heb. “riddle.” Bert.—The ancients delighted in parables, which required attention to discern the meaning, and thus people had the pleasures of ingenuity. Music often accompanied their precepts. Strabo i. 12. C.—Utile dulci. H.—The psalmist intimates, that he had attended the best masters, (C.) even the Holy Ghost. S. Chrys.—He delivers the instructions which he had received from God, on the instrument of ten strings, to imply that we must keep the ten commandments. W.—He listens if the instrument be in tune. C.

Ver. 6. The iniquity of my heel. That is, the iniquity of my steps, or ways: or the iniquity of my pride, with which, as with the heel, I have spurned and kicked at my neighbours: or the iniquity of my heel, that is, the iniquity in which I shall be found in death. The meaning of this verse is, why should I now indulge those passions and sinful affections, or commit now those sins, which will cause me so much fear and anguish in the evil day; when the sorrows of death shall compass me, and the perils of hell shall find me? Ch.—The old serpent is constantly laying snares for our heel. Gen. 3:15. H.—Original (S. Jer.) and actual sin, (Euseb.) particularly final impenitence, (Rabbins) and the punishment of our transgressions, (Abenezra) are much to be feared, (H.) as well as concupiscence. S. Amb.—All that will fill us with alarm in the day of vengeance, will be the having been supplanted, like wrestlers, by our iniquity, (C.) of which we have not repented. H.—Any such injustice must be dreaded, as it will bring on damnation. W.—Instead of heel, Sym. has “steps,” including all the unjust actions of life. H.

Ver. 7. They that trust, &c. As much as to say, let them fear, that trust in their strength or riches; for they have great reason to fear: seeing not brother, or other man, how much a friend soever, can by any price or labour rescue them from death. Ch.—I address myself particularly to the rich, who are in the greatest danger.

Ver. 8. No. Prot. “none of them can by any means redeem his brother; nor, &c. H.—But the Sept. translate as well, and the sense is the same. Matt. 16:26. Bert.—If Jesus Christ, thy brother, does not redeem thee, will any other do it? (S. Aug.) or though thy brother neglect, the man, Christ Jesus, will suffice. S. Amb.—But with respect to death, no redemption will be admitted. It is appointed for all once to die. H.—A man shall be more precious than gold, says Isaias, (13:12) of the Babylonians, whom the enemy will not spare, for any consideration. We must therefore make good use of our time. Eccle. 9:10. Prov. 11:4. C.

Ver. 9. And shall labour for ever, &c. This seems to be a continuation of the foregoing sentence; as much as to say, no man can by any price or ransom, prolong his life, that so he may still continue to labour here, and live to the end of the world. Others understand it of the eternal sorrows, and dying life of hell, which his the dreadful consequence of dying in sin. Ch.—The just, on the contrary, who have laboured for eternity, shall see the death of the wicked, or of the wise of this world. Euseb. &c.—It may also be a prediction of Christ’s life of sufferings and future glory, (Bossuet) or express the sentiments of infidels, who deny a Providence; because both good and bad perish alike. Eccle. 3:18. S. Aug.—Heb. “he rests for ever,” (S. Jer.) or “shall he be undisturbed?” C.—Both those who disbelieve a future state, and those who live as if they did, shall suffer. W.—This verse is included within a parenthesis by Prot. (For the redemption ... is precious, and it, &c.) H.

Ver. 11. He shall not see destruction, &c. or shall he not see destruction? As much as to say, however thoughtless may be of his death, he must not expect to escape: when even the wise and the good are not exempt from dying. Ch.—Strangers. This is very distressing. Pindar. Olym. x. Eccles. 2:18.—The endeavours of the wicked to establish their families, will be vain, while they themselves shall never more return from the graves hither. W.

Ver. 12. Sepulchres. Heb. Kobrom is better than the present Kirbam, their “interior,” and is adopted by the Chal. Syr. &c. C.—“Their inward thought is, that their houses shall continue for ever.” Prot. H.—Called. That is, they have left their names on their graves, which alone remain of their lands, (Ch.) or, they have called cities and countries by their own names, as Alexander and Romulus did, Alexandria, (H.) and Rome. M. &c.—They have spread their fame throughout the world. C.—Scarcely two translate the four last verses alike. Bert.

Ver. 13. Compared. Heb. “he is like dumb, or perishable beasts.” H.—So much is man degraded by his attachment to riches and pleasures. Theod. C.—Some explain this of Adam, (S. Chrys.) reduced to the necessity of labouring, and dying, like brutes. v. 21. Eccle. 3:18. C.—This is a very serious reflection, to think that man should so far neglect the gifts of reason, as to strive for temporal advantages only, like irrational creatures. W.

Ver. 14. They shall delight in their mouth. Notwithstanding the wretched way in which they walk, they shall applaud themselves with their mouths, and glory in their doings, (Ch.) though it be to their shame. Phil. 3:10.—Heb. their posterity shall applaud their maxims, (C.) as many of their followers contributed to keep them in the delusion, (H.) which the damned will deplore, when it is too late. v. 15. S. Jer.—A thirst after worldly advantages has proved their ruin; yet they obstinately persist in their evil ways. W.

Ver. 15. In the morning. That is, in the resurrection to a new life; when the just shall judge and condemn the wicked.—From their glory. That is, when their short-lived glory in this world shall be past, and be no more. Ch.—Sic transit gloria mundi. H.—Then the world shall be turned upside down. C.—The just shall have their day, (M.) when the beautiful palaces of the wicked shall be exchanged for darkness, and horrible torments. H.—“Their bodies shall grow old in hell, because they have stretched out their hand, and destroyed the habitation of the house of his majesty.” Targum.—Their figure shall be destroyed in hell, after his dwelling. S. Jer.—They can rescue themselves no more than sheep. Those whom they oppressed shall be their judges. All friends will forsake them. W.—Crowds shall be confined to those mansions, where the fire is not extinguished. M.

Ver. 16. Redeem. Chal. and some Rabbins seem to understand this of purgatory. “He will draw me from hell, and give me a place in his habitation.” Geneb.—Others explain it of Christ’s resurrection, or of the liberation of the patriarchs from limbo. Cassiod.—It seems a full solution of the enigma v. 6. I repent, and shall have nothing to fear. Bert.

Ver. 18. Him. “The glory of a man increases with his prosperity, but it does not go down with him when he descends” (S. Amb.) into the grave. He there finds the same reception as the most ignoble.

Ver. 19. To him. The wicked are very selfish. They will seem grateful to those who are in power, and will cringe to get riches. H.—Yea, they will seem to thank God for their prosperity, (W.) or rather, they will assume these appearances with men. Heb. “he will bless his soul during life, (Bert.) with all pleasures.” Lu. 12:19. Deut. 29:19. C.—To him, is not in Heb. which insinuates, that people are flattered during their prosperity. H.—Yet Houbigant would restore this word, “and he will praise thee when thou shalt have done him a kindness;” c may have been placed for i, as Sym. seems to have read αὐτῷ. H.—The proper use of riches is to do good. Luke 16:9.

Ver. 20. Fathers. Like them he shall die. H.—Heb. reads in the second person, with Syr. Aquila, &c. C.—Yet Prot. Mont. and others agree with us and the Sept.—And he. Heb. “they.” The—edit. however, has οὐρεται. Each individual, as well as the whole collection of the damned, shall be deprived of light and comfort. H.—Chal. “the just shall live like his fathers, a long and happy life; but the wicked shall enjoy no light in the life to come.”

Ver. 21. Understand. Heb. yabin, though (v. 13) we find yalin, “shall remain all night.” C.—But this is probably a mistake, as the prophet concludes with repeating this important instruction: (Bert.) Remember, O man, not to degrade thy rational soul. W.—Thou wast honoured by all, and made to the likeness of God. M.

PSALM 49. (DEUS DEORUM.)

The coming of Christ: who prefers virtue and inward purity before the blood of victims.

Ver. 1. For Asaph. The prep. L is placed before his name, as it is before David's. H.—Yet whether he was the author of the psalm, (C.) or only set it to music, (W.) is uncertain. M.—The 72d, and ten following psalms, bear his name, and it is observed, that the style is not so flowing as those which are attributed to the royal prophet. Moller.—It is certain, that Asaph was a prophet, and chief musician in the days of David. 1 Par. 6:39 and 25:2. and 2 Par. 29:30. Bert.—But the psalms that have this title relate to the captives, and may have been composed by some of his descendants. This and the following seem designed to shew, that something more than bloody victims is required by God; and thus the Israelites, who could not offer sacrifices at Babylon, were comforted; and the people taught by degrees, to look for something more excellent than the law of Moses. C.—The first and second coming of Christ are here described. D.—God's angels, just men, judges, (C.) idols, &c. W.—Heb. El Elohim, Yehova, "the mighty God, the Lord." H.—From these three titles, some of the Fathers have proved the blessed Trinity. E.—But this argument is not conclusive. Bert.—They ought, however, to fill us with awe, when he shall come to judge the earth, his chosen people, (v. 4. C.) or all mankind. Bert. M.—Christ will come, surrounded by many legions of angels. H.

Ver. 2. Beauty. This may refer to God, or to Sion, (C.) where the Church of Christ began. W.

Ver. 3. Silence. Christ displayed the light of truth from Sion, at his first coming. But he would not judge any till the second. Jo. 3:17 and 8:15. S. Jer. C.—Before him, at the last day, (H.) or in hell. S. Athan.—Our Saviour appeared formerly with great mildness: but he will come with majesty and terror, after fire shall have destroyed all transitory things. W.

Ver. 4. Earth. As if they were animated. Deut. 4:26 and 32:1. Is. 1:2. Jer. 2:12.—Some understand the angels and apostles by heaven. C.—Judge. Lit. "to divide," discernere, (H.) the goats from the sheep. Matt. 25:32. C. M.—The whole earth, particularly the elect, will approve of God's decree. 1 Cor. 6:2.

Ver. 5. His saints. Heb. "my merciful ones," (H.) the chosen people, (C.) particularly priests, (Theod.) who might have too high an opinion of the legal sacrifices, (S. Chrys.) or all the elect are meant. Matt. 24:30. Euseb.—The Hebrews were the only nation which then offered sacrifices to the true God, though some individuals might do it among the Gentiles. C.—Before, super, or, "who make a covenant with him respecting sacrifices."—Prot. "those that have made a covenant with me by sacrifice." Mal. 1:12. H.—The Sept. seem to have read v for i, more accurately, as the prophet speaks till v. 7. Bert.—Judgment should begin at the house of God. And if first at us, what shall be the end of them that believe not the gospel of God? 1 Pet. 4:17. Rom. 2:9. H.—Those who believe not, are already judged. Jo. 3.—Sacrifice generally precedes a covenant. Gen. 15:17. M.

Ver. 6. Heavens. Apostles, (S. Jer.) or angels. Chal. S. Athan.—God is judge. His sentence must therefore be just, (M.) and we ought to tremble. 1 Cor. 4:4. H.

Ver. 7. Testify. I will require thee to speak the truth, and attest the world. Ps. 80:9. C.

Ver. 8. Sight. I complain of no neglect (M.) in these outward ceremonies. H.—God required no victims during the captivity; but he always demanded praise, (v. 14. C.) a contrite heart. Ps. 50:19. &c. H.—The prophets often admonished the people of this truth, (Is. 1:2. Jer. 7:20. C.) that they might not set too high a value on sacrifices, (H.) which, though pleasing to God, are of no service to him; as all the world is his property. W.

Ver. 10. Oxen. S. Jer. and Prot. “the cattle upon a thousand hills.” But our version is very good, and adopted by the Syr. Ferrand, &c. C.—Aleph means an ox as well as a thousand; and i may have been added to the preceding word, instead of u, at the beginning of this. Bert.—We find u here improperly in either, “beast.” Houbig.—No mention is made of fishes, because they were not used as victims. C.

Ver. 11. I know your number, and have absolute dominion over all. Is. 37:28. C.—Field. Ripe fruits. S. Cyr. Alex.—With God all things are present. S. Aug. Lombard, 1 dist. 35. F. Amama.

Ver. 13. Goats? Can any of you be so stupid? M.—Some of the pagans believed, that their idols delighted in the smell of victims. H.

Ver. 14. Vows. A faithless promise is very displeasing. Eccle. 5:3. True religion must be interior, (C.) also 1 Cor. 14:15. H.—We must discharge, not only our general, (M.) but also our particular vows, (W.) and obligations. H.

Ver. 15. Call. Prayer is a perfect act of religion, and a confession of God's dominion.

*Qui fingit sacros auro vel marmore vultus,
Non facit ille Deos: qui rogat, ille facit.* Mart. viii. v. 24.

To neglect prayer is, in some sense, to deny God. C.—He is pleased to exercise our confidence, (H.) and will have us to call upon him in distress. M.

Ver. 16. Sinner. He is not blamed for praying: but his hypocrisy is condemned. Bert.—The world is full of such hypocrites, who have God in their mouths, but not in their hearts, and whose voice alone is the voice of Jacob. Gen. 27:22. Is. 29:13. Tit. 1:16.—The wicked judges, who condemned Susanna, (Dan. 13) should have attended to these lessons. C.—Thou that teachest another, teachest not thyself. Rom. 2:21.—It is surely to be expected, (H.) that those who undertake to teach others, should shew good example, and serve God with sincerity, (W.) and not content themselves with the glory of their vocation. M.

Ver. 20. Lay. Heb. “slanderest.” (Prot.) But dophi occurs on where else. Bert.—The sinner sits to detract, or with pleasure, (M.) habitually offends. H.

Ver. 21. Silent, and deferred punishment, (S. Aug.) waiting for thy conversion. Rom. 2:4.—Unjustly, is not expressed in Heb. Bert.—Face, judgment and hell, (Chal.) or all these things, (S. Jer.) and thy manifold transgressions. The sight will be most intolerable. C.

Ver. 22. Lest he. Heb. “I tear you in pieces.” Prot. H.—Rapiat ut Leo. S. Aug.—It may be understood of death, (Theod.) or of God. C.

Ver. 23. Praise. This king of improper sacrifice, and those of justice, and of a contrite heart, (Ps. 4 and 50) must accompany outward sacrifices, to make them acceptable. The latter has always been obligatory, (W.) as well as the former. H.—This ps. proves, that the old victims should give place to one far more excellent, the body of Christ, the sacrifice of praise which the Church offers, S. Aug. con. advers. xx. orat. con Jud. vi. and ep. cxx. 18. W.—Eucharist means “good grace,” or thanksgiving, being intended to enable us to render that tribute of praise, which he requires. H.—There. Heb. “to him that ordereth his conversation aright, will I,” &c. Prot.—The difference consists only in the points. Bert.—Syr. “There I will shew him the way of his salvation,” or, according to S. Chrys. “even my salvation.” C.—By adoring God in spirit and truth, (H.) we may be saved. M.

PSALM 50. (MISERERE.)

The repentance and confession of David after his sin. The fourth penitential psalm.

Ver. 2. Bethsabée. Sept. “Bersabee.” Some copies add, “the wife of Urias.” H.—The rest of the title is in Heb. &c. so that it is one of the most authentic. Nathan did not give the admonition till about a year had elapsed after the transgression, (2 K. 12) when David was made to enter into himself, by a prophet inferior to himself. Bert.—After his departure, he is supposed to have composed this psalm, to testify his repentance to all the world. C.—He had also in view the state of the captives. Theod. &c.—The two last verses seem to have been added at Babylon, (Abenezra) as a similar addition has been made (Ps. 105:47 and 1 Par. 16:35. C.) by some inspired author. H.—David knew that something more than confession was requisite, and that he must submit to temporal punishments, even though the prophet had assured him that his sin was remitted. He prays to be washed still more from evil habits, v. 4. W.

Ver. 3. Thy great mercy. Such is the purport of the Heb. chasdec, though (H.) the Chal. and Syr. omit great. My sin requires the deepest compunction. I must strive to repair the scandal I have given. C.—Mercies. I stand in need of many sorts, mitigation of punishment, true sorrow and perseverance, and that I may make some amends for my bad example, &c. W.

Ver. 4. Yet more, by baptism. Euseb. S. Amb. apol.—The true penitent never ceases to deplore his sins, like David, S. Peter, and S. Paul. Eccli. 5:5. The psalmist prays, that all the remains of sin may be obliterated. Jo. 13:10. W.

Ver. 5. Me. I do not forget it, but am covered with shame. C.—Sin is our greatest enemy, and continually cries for vengeance. H.—While David did not confess, his sin lay heavy upon him. W.

Ver. 6. Only, or principally, who art the only God, (1 Tim. 1:17. W.) the judge and witness of my crime. H.—David was a king, and acknowledged no judge among men. S. Amb. c. x.—Soli Deo reus est. Cassiod.—Urias, whom he had injured, was no more. S. Aug.—The action had been done in secret: (2 K. 12:12) but many began to suspect, and to blaspheme. H.—Judged. S. Paul reads thus, (Rom. 3:4) though the Heb. be, “when thou judgest.” S. Jerom has also judicaberis, so that we might infer, that the Heb. is now incorrect, or that besophotec means in judicare te. Bert.—Houbigant changes the order of the verse, “cleanse me from my sins, that thou mayst be blameless when thou comest into judgment: For I know,” &c. H.—Susanna was preserved from sinning by the thought of God’s presence. Dan. 13:25.—If David fell, he confessed his fault. Bert.—God is faithful to his promises, and desires the conversion of sinners, though some would represent him as cruel, and unconcerned about his creatures. The psalmist prevents this unjust inference, (H.) and proves, that God is both just and merciful. W.—He acknowledges his ingratitude, as the captives confess, that their sins have brought on them this chastisement, though they had not injured the Babylonians. Theod. Flam. C.—God had often promised pardon to those who truly repent. An appeal is made to his truth and mercy.

Ver. 7. Sins. Heb. “iniquity, ... and in sin did my mother warm or conceive me.” Original sin has a manifold deformity, and is the fatal root of other transgressions. See S. Aug. Ench. S. Tho. i. 2. q. 82. a. 2.

est multiplex virtute. H.—The prophet speaks here undoubtedly of original sin. Amama.—No text could be more express, as the Fathers and the Jews agree. Yet Grotius, whose opinions are almost always singular, and dangerous, maintains, that the expression is hyperbolical, and only implies, that David had been long subject to sin, even from his infancy, as Job was naturally of a merciful disposition. Job 31:18.—Thus free-thinkers abuse the Scripture, and setting aside all authority, will only see what they think proper. C.—The weakness of man is a motive for pity: (M.) David pleads for it, yet allows, that the fault was entirely his own, and that he had grace sufficient to have avoided it. C.—The consideration of our sinful origin, ought to move us to beg, that we may be washed still more, and that we may not yield to our evil propensities. W.—We may resist them, and therefore David would not make vain excuses in sin, as God love the truth, and a sincere confession. M.

Ver. 8. Uncertain. Heb. “in the interior,” I am full of sin, and thou requirest that I should constantly adhere to virtue. See Job 14:1.—To me. This increases my crime, (C.) as I cannot plead ignorance. M.—Those who have true faith, are more easily converted. But God gives to all some good, which he loves in them, and is ever ready to preserve his gifts, and to save his creatures. W.

Ver. 9. Hyssop, which was used in sprinkling lepers, &c. (Lev. 14:6) not that the like ceremony, or even sacrifice, would suffice to heal the wound of the soul. Sincere contrition, (v. 18, 19) and the virtue of Christ’s blood, are necessary. C. Heb. 9:19.—The heat (Num. 19) and operation of this sovereign medicine was shewn to the prophet. Jo. 19. W.—The sprinkling of the priest might be of service, if the heart was contrite. Heb. 9:13. M.

Ver. 10. Rejoice, when thou givest me an assurance of pardon. My bones, or virtue, shall then be restored. Heb. “the bones which thou hast broken may exult.” S. Jer. H.—God gives contrition, after which the whole interior is filled with joy. Bert.—When the affections are purified, the soul takes delight in God’s word, and revives. W.—The assurance of being pardoned, give her fresh alacrity in his service. M.

Ver. 11. Face. Anger. If the sinner consider his fault, God will forget it. C.—His justice requires that he should punish the impenitent. W.

Ver. 12. Create. Heb. bera, a term never used but for a new production. Whatever comes immediately from God must be pure, and as David had fallen into impurity, he earnestly implores this gift. He prays for the new heart of flesh. Ezech. 36:26. H.—Thou hast said, Behold, I make all things new. Apoc. 21. Oh that I may be included, that I may sing a new canticle, having become a new man! 2 Cor. 5:17. Eph. 4:24. Bert.—Right. Heb. “constant,” (H.) the Holy Spirit, thy inspiration, or that uprightness, of which I have been deprived. C.—Bowels, or interior. W.—These sentiments ought to animate priests, when they hear confessions. W.

Ver. 13. Spirit of prophecy, which is not withdrawn, except for some crime. Orig. Huet. p. 35.—David had been without this privilege, till his repentance. S. Athan.—Yet S. Chrys. and Theodoret maintain the contrary. C.—He prays for final perseverance, which is due to none, (Bert.) and that he may fall no more. W.

Ver. 14. Salvation, or thy salutary joy, (Bert.) “the joy of thy Jesus,” (S. Jer.) for whom he prays, (S. Aug.) knowing that He will save his people from their sins, and that there is salvation in no other name. H.—Perfect. Lit. “principal.” Sept. “conducting;” such a spirit as may suit one who is to command. H.—This may denote sound reason, (4 Mac. Philo Nobil) which keeps the passions under, (S. Chrys. Job 30:15) or God himself, to whose Spirit all others shall be subservient. Rancè often inculcated to his Monks, the importance of having this principal spirit, which includes every virtue, particularly of liberality, as the Heb. nediba, implies. Bert.—“Thy free Spirit.” Prot.—How earnest should we endeavour to be disentangled from all the chains of our passions! H.—David might also fear, lest he had forfeited the throne, like Saul, whom the Spirit left. 1 K. 10:9 and 16:14. Kings affected to be styled liberal. Lu. 23:25. C.—He repeats his petition thrice, in allusion to the three persons in one God, (S. Aug. &c.) and prays, that the Messiah may still spring from him, notwithstanding his sins, and that he may have a constant and willing spirit to fall no more. W.—Principal, or liberal, may refer to the Holy Ghost, the fountain of all grace, or to the king, who ought to be generous. M.

Ver. 15. Thee. The sinner cannot testify his gratitude better, than by promoting the conversion of others. W.—This is a sort of satisfaction. M.—While engaged in sin, David could not well exhort his subjects to repentance. His example was rather an inducement for them to transgress. Bert.—But when they saw his grief, and knew that God had pardoned him, they were no longer tempted to despair. He also watched more carefully over their conduct.

Ver. 16. Blood, from death, which I have deserved. S. Athan.—That of Urias, and his companions, (W.) cries to heaven for vengeance. 2 K. 11:24. H.—Hence the word sanguinibus, is used. Bert.—Spare me, and my people.—Justice, which has given place to mercy. C.—The latter word is here used by Sym. and justice may have this meaning. Theod.

—Sixtus V. reads exaltabit, instead of exultabit, which Sept. ἀγαλλιασεται, (C.) requires. Heb. terannen, “shall sing aloud of.” Prot. “shall praise thy justice.” S. Jer.—Extol agrees better with exaltabit, though both have nearly the same sense. H.—God’s justice will pardon the penitent, as he has promised. W.

Ver. 18. Sacrifice. If my crime were of such a nature as the be expiated by certain victims, I would surely have offered them: but my heart has offended, and must do penance. C.—The legal victims were not of themselves sufficient to remit sin. M.—Contrition was necessary. Is. 66:2. Ezech. 6:9. Bert.—The Scripture often prefers internal, before outward sacrifices. This of the heart must precede those of justice, and of praise. W.—The heart must be broken, to make place for love. Compunction is thrice urged. The two first terms in Heb. are the same, “contrite,” (H.) broken, or disconcerted. Κατεκλασθη φιλον ητορ. Odyss. M.—The captives might adopt this prayer. Dan. 3:39. C.—External sacrifices are commended in the next verse, as they are good, (H.) being instituted by God. M.

Ver. 20. Deal. These two verses have no necessary connexion with the preceding: they may have been added by some prophet at Babylon, (C.) or David foresaw the destruction of the city by the Chaldees. S. Chrys.—He might fear that his sin would draw ruin on the capital, as a much less offence did, and as in all ages, the sins of the rulers have fallen on their subjects. 2 K. 24. H.—Though the place was not destitute of fortifications, (C.) he might pray that they might be completed, (Bert.) as they were by Solomon, who built the temple and various walls, so that David might very well add this conclusion, (3 K. 3:1 and 9:15. H.) alluding to the sacrifices which should be offered in the future temple. Bert.—He insinuates, that his pardon may prove beneficial to his people, and sues for it to be granted for their sakes. M.

Ver. 21. Justice; works of piety, (Ps. 4:6) or victims vowed or prescribed by the law; the same which are afterwards styled holocausts (C.) by two different terms, hola and calil. H.—The latter includes fruits, &c. C.—While we are in sin, our good works are less acceptable. M.

PSALM 51

PSALM 51. (QUID GLORIARIS.)

David condemneth the wickedness of Doeg, and foretelleth his destruction.

Ver. 2–3. Achimelech. Sixtus V. Sept. &c. read Abimelech. But the former is the true name. See 1 K. 22:9. 20. C.—The word understanding implies, that we ought to reflect on the misery of detraction, and bear our crosses with submission. Bert.—Doeg was but half a Jew, and persecuted the faithful. W.—Iniquity. Heb. chesed, means also mercy, and some translate, “the mercy of God! or, the great mercy.” Noble exploit! C.—But our version seems more natural. El may be a preposition, as Sym. has Καθ . Bert.—If Doeg, who was the most powerful of the shepherds of Saul, (1 K. 21:7) thought it his duty to give his master information of what had passed, he ought to have stated the matter fairly, instead of insinuating, that the high-priest was ill-affected. H.—Nothing could be more false, as he supposed he was acting agreeably to the interests of Saul, and of the state. C.

Ver. 6. Ruin. Sept. καταποντισμου , “drowning,” or to make the innocent suffer “shipwreck.”

Ver. 7. Thy, is not found in Heb. Doeg would not dare to enter the tabernacle, after he had slain the priests. C.—Houbigant properly supplies thy. Bert.—Living. The Jews inform us, that Doeg slew himself with his master at Gelboe, and that David punished his offspring with death. C.

Ver. 8. Laugh, at the last day, when they will have nothing to fear, nor the wicked to hope. In this life, the just are full of compassion; but they cannot but approve of God’s judgments. C.

Ver. 9. The man. Heb. hageber, “the hero.”

Ver. 10. Fruitful. David foretells his own prosperity on the throne, (W.) when this wretch shall be no more. H.—He was at this time in great perplexity, (C.) in banishment from the house of God. M.

Ver. 11. It punished the wicked, and asserted thy just providence. H.—Good. Thy saints find the greatest comfort in thee. C.

PSALM 52

PSALM 52. (DIXIT INSIPIENS.)

The general corruption of man before the coming of Christ.

Ver. 1. Maeleth, or Machalath. A musical instrument, or a chorus of musicians: for S. Jerom renders it, per chorum; (Ch.) and Aquila, “for dancing.” Sixtus V. &c. read incorrectly, “for Amalec.”—The psalm is nearly the same with the 13th, (C.) except v. 6. M.—We know not the reason why David gave this second copy, omitting the name of Jehovah. Bert.—S. Aug. explains it of the dangers of the latter times. W.—It seems to speak of the return from captivity, v. 7. C.

Ver. 6. God hath scattered the bones, &c. That is, God hath brought to nothing the strength of all those that seek to please men, to the prejudice of their duty to their Maker. Ch.—That. Heb. “who besiege thee. Thou hast confounded them, because,” &c. Sept. seem to have read more correctly, as no one has been addressed before. Bert.

Ver. 7. Glad. The Fathers explain this of Christ’s redemption. The captives doubted not but that they should be speedily set at liberty, as the prophets had assured them. C.

PSALM 53

PSALM 53. (DEUS IN NOMINE TUO.)

A prayer for help in distress.

Ver. 2. Ziph lay to the south of Juda. H.—David was rescued from the most imminent danger, by an irruption of the Philistines. He then composed this canticle, expressing his sentiments in danger, and his gratitude to God. C.—It may also be used by any person in distress. W.—The Church orders it to be said by her ministers at Prime, that they may be protected from all their spiritual enemies. Bert.—The Fathers apply it to Jesus Christ, (S. Hil.) or to his persecuted members. S. Aug.

Ver. 3. Name, which is a strong tower, (Prov. 18:10. C.) event thyself. Hence it is so criminal to take it in vain. Bert.—Judge. Ancient psalters have, “deliver.” Saul and the Zipheans persecute me unjustly. I commit my cause to thee. H.—Defend me for the justice of my cause. W.

Ver. 5. Strangers. Barbarous, (W.) enemies, though of the same tribe. C.—Hostis dicebatur quem nunc peregrinum dicimus. Cic. Off. i.—The devil and our passions, as well as the world, are such to us. Bert.

Ver. 6. Behold. He admires how God delivered him, though Saul seemed to have only one step more to take. Jesus Christ was secure amid the persecutions of the Jews, till he was pleased to deliver himself up. Jo. 10:18. C.

Ver. 7. Truth. To fulfil thy promises. H.—He foretells their destruction.

Ver. 8. Freely, without being commanded. W. M. Lev. 3:1.—Jesus Christ was offered, because he would. Is. 53:7. Jo. 10:17. S. Jer.—Good, so to do, (D.) or sweet in itself. Ps. 51:11. C.

Ver. 9. Enemies, from the hill which divided the armies. I saw them retire, (H.) and in security beheld their chastisement. M.

PSALM 54

PSALM 54. (EXAUDI DEUS.)

A prayer of a just man under persecution from the wicked. It agrees to Christ persecuted by the Jews, and betrayed by Judas.

Ver. 1. David. It alludes to some of his persecutions, particularly to that of Absalom, as well as to that of the Church, and of Jesus Christ. Bede explains it of Onias: who, being excluded from the high priesthood, retired into Egypt, and built the temple of Onion. 2 Mac. 13. C.

Ver. 3. Hear me. He repeats the same petition four times, (H.) to testify his fervour, and humility. Eccli. 25:21.—Exercise, among the wicked, (S. Aug.) or while I consider the sufferings of Christ. Euseb.—David was perplexed what course to take, when he first heard of his son's revolt. Our Saviour was sorrowful unto death. Matt. 26:37. C.—This life is a warfare. W.—Ἀδολεσχία. Heb. sichi, denotes serious (H.) meditation. Gen. 24:63. M.

Ver. 4. Upon me. When a person has fallen into distress, the world is ever ready to attribute it to some fault. Absalom accused his father of neglecting to judge, &c. 2 K. 15:2. The Jews calumniated and sought the death of Christ, whose agony in the garden is well described, (v. 5) as well as the consternation of David, at the sight of such a general revolt, (C.) which almost overwhelmed him. W.

Ver. 5. Troubled, like a woman in labour, (M.) as yachil implies, (C.) in Hiphel. M.

Ver. 7. Dove, which flies swiftly. He now adored the judgments of God, which chastised him, as he had threatened; (2 K. 12:11) though, while innocent, he had rejected a similar proposal. Ps. 10:1. The event shewed, that he acted wisely in retiring beyond the Jordan. C.—O that I could fly, and in the simplicity of the dove, be removed from these afflictions! W.—As I could not go to heaven, I retired into the wilderness. M.

Ver. 9. Storm. The first fury of the rebels, which is most dangerous, is thus specified. David was convinced, that his son's party would dwindle away, when he was informed that he did not pursue him, following the advice of Chusai. C.—Heb. "I would hasten my escape from the impetuous wind and tempest." But the Sept. may be equally correct. Bert.—God protected his weak servant in the greatest dangers. W.

Ver. 10. Cast down. Heb. "swallow up," as the earth did Dathan. C.—Sept. "drown." H.—Tongues, as at Babel, that they may not know how to proceed. C.—Heb. "swallow up ... the torrent of their tongue." Bate.—Pallag, means also to "divide." Absalom was accordingly infatuated by David's friend. 2 K. 15:31 and 17:7. M.—City of Hebron, or even of Jerusalem, which caused the king to leave no garrison in it. The city was still more abandoned in our Saviour's regard. C.—Contradiction. Their counsels agree not. They have their troubles, yet will not amend; but strive to oppress the poor. W.

Ver. 13. From him. But how shall we guard against a traitor? C.—The injury received from a friend is most cutting. W.

Ver. 14. Guide, the prime minister, (Bert.) and chief of the council. M.—Such was Achitophel, who had nevertheless been long (C.) secretly disaffected. See 2 K. 15:12 and 16:23. He professed the same religion, and was trusted with the most important affairs, as Judas carried the purse. H.

Ver. 15. Consent, or with expedition, as the Rabbins order people to go to the temple, though they must return slowly. All this designates Judas. C.—Dreadful lesson for all sacred ministers, who prove faithless! (Bert.) participating of the holy sacraments of the Catholic Church, (W.) and yet betraying themselves, and their master! Achitophel had probably to attend David in the temple, as Naaman did Benadad. 4 K. 5:18. H.

Ver. 16. Let death, &c. This, and such like imprecations, which occur in the psalms, are delivered prophetically; that is, by way of foretelling the punishments which shall fall upon the wicked from divine justice, and approving the righteous ways of God: but not by way of ill-will, or uncharitable curses, which the law of God disallows. Ch.—David shewed even too much tenderness towards the rebels, in the opinion of Joab, &c. He would not hurt Saul. His predictions were verified; as Achitophel became a suicide, Absalom perished miserably, suspended between heaven and earth, as an object of horror to both, while many of his accomplices were either slain, or fell into precipices. 2 K. 17:23 and 18:8. H.—Hell, by a sudden death, like Antiochus, Core, &c. Num. 16:30. They just are already dead to this world. Bert.—Those who sin on purpose, descend, as it were, alive into hell. W.

Ver. 18. Evening. The Hebrew then began the day. C. Gen. 1:5. H.—They had three times allotted for prayer, (Dan. 6:10) as the Church had afterwards. Const. Ap. vii. 25. C.—Evening song, matins, and the sacrifice of the mass, are the principal times for divine service. W.—David comprises all times, because his prayer was continual. Bert. C.

Ver. 19. Among many, &c. That is, they that drew near to attack me, were many in company, all combining to fight against me. Ch.—Or, many also joined themselves to me with Joab, and the holy angels, (4 K. 6:16) though almost all Israel followed Absalom. 2 K. 15:13. C.—In many things, schismatics agree with the Church; but their crime is the breaking of unity. S. Aug.

Ver. 20. Change, or redemption for them, (Ps. 43:13. Euseb.) or they will not amend, (W.) nor cease to blaspheme God, and to calumniate me. C.—Eternal. Lit. “He who is before ages.” H.

Ver. 21. Repay. Heb. bishlomaiv, “in his tribulations,” or “against his peaceable ones.” Houbigant too arbitrarily translates, “they have sent forth their hand against,” &c. Bert.

Ver. 22. They are divided, &c. Dispersed, scattered, and brought to nothing, by the wrath of God, who looks with indignation on their wicked and deceitful ways. Ch.—They are separated from the good, (S. Jer.) slain by a look. 2 Thess. 2:8.—Near, or fought, v. 19. C.—Some translate, “they have divided the butter, like words of his mouth.” But this is less accurate, and the same idea is conveyed in the next words. Bert.—Prot. “The words of his mouth were smoother than butter, but war was in his heart. His words were softer than oil, yet were they drawn swords.” H.—My enemy has violated every law, under his appearance of friendship. C.—Darts. Absalom kissed the men of Israel to delude them, (2 K. 15:2) and the traitor gave this sign to those who came to seize our Saviour. Matt. 26:48. C.—The words of God are most excellent in themselves, but they seem hard to the incredulous. Thus the Capharnaïtes gave rise to the first heresy against the words of Christ, which S. Peter piously believed, though, as yet, he did not comprehend their meaning. Jo. 6. S. Aug. W.—His heart and words may thus be understood of God: but they more probably relate to any one of David’s numerous enemies, who is thus singled out. H.

Ver. 23. Cast. The prophet had experienced the happy effect of this conduct. C.—In all troubles and doubts, we must have recourse to God. W. 1 Pet. 5:7.

Ver. 24. Destruction; “into gehenna,” (Chal.) or “hell,” (S. Jer.) to which the judge sentences the reprobate, without promoting their crimes. S. Aug. C.—Days. It is rare that murderers and notorious malefactors escape punishment in this world; but in the next, they will surely be requited. Absalom perished in the flower of his age. Bert.—Achitophel, and many others, have been suddenly cut off. God sometimes permits such to reign for a time, to exercise his servants, or that they may repent. S. Aug.—The Scripture often threatens sinners in this manner. Job 21:21. Is. 65:20. C.—Their days are indeed spent, when they die. But if they had altered their conduct, they might have prolonged their life, (H.) according to the usual course of nature. W. M.

PSALM 55

PSALM 55. (MISERERE MEI DEUS.)

A prayer of David in danger and distress.

Ver. 1. Geth. Before (Bert.) or after his escape to the cave of Odollam, (C.) he composed this psalm, to comfort his followers with the consideration of God’s protection. H.—See 1 K. 22 and Ps. 10. The title is variously rendered. S. Jer. “to the victor for the dumb dove,” &c. Prot. “upon Jonath elem rechokim Michtam of David.” This is to elude the difficulty, and we might as well adhere to the Sept. who seem to have only added, "from the sanctuary." The psalm may suit any one in distress, (Bert.) unable to attend the public service, (W.) or it may be understood of our Saviour's passion. Bert.

Ver. 2. Man. All combine against me. C.—The sins of every man oppressed Jesus Christ. Bert.—All who live piously, must suffer many attacks. W.

Ver. 4. The height of the day. That is, even at noon day, when the sun is the highest, I am still in danger. Ch.—Heb. "many fight against me from an elevation, or from day-break."—Fear. Many prefix a negation, which S. Jerom rejects, (ad Sun.) explaining this height of the divine majesty. C.—David felt the impressions of fear; but corrected them by his confidence in God. W.

Ver. 5. My words. The words or promises God has made in my favour. Ch.—Praising God (H.) removed the dejection of David. Euseb.—Detested. Prot. "wrest." They put an evil construction upon what I say, (H.) and make me their laughing-stock. Ps. 37:13. C.—But I cease not to proclaim what God has declared in my favour, (H.) or what good I have been enabled to effect by his grace. My enemies may meet to devise my ruin, and to supplant me: yet all in vain. W.

Ver. 8. For nothing shalt thou save them. That is, since they lie in wait to ruin my soul, thou shalt for no consideration favour or assist them, but execute thy justice upon them. Ch.

Ver. 9. I have. Prot. "thou tellest my wanderings: put thou my tears into thy bottle. Are the not in thy book?" S. Jer. "thou hast numbered my most secret things: place my tears in thy sight," &c. H.—Sept. render the sense clearer. Bert.—God has promised to relieve the distressed, who confided in him.

Ver. 11. To me. This is almost a repetition of v. 5. C.—Elohim and Jehova are mentioned (H.) as "the power and eternity" of God gave David the greatest confidence.

Ver. 12. To thee. Lit. "thy vows." H.—Houbigant chooses rather to follow the Syriac, "with thee, O God, are my vows:" which is clearer, though our version may be well explained, "I will perform my vows to thee," (Bert.) the sacrifice of praises, in this psalm. C.—I will endeavour to comply with my engagements and vows. W.

Ver. 13. Living, in my own country, where I am no longer, as formerly during my banishment, in the region of the dead. C.—The Fathers explain this of Jesus Christ, or of eternal glory. Theod. C.—In the true faith and good works, I will strive to please God. W.

PSALM 56. (MISERERE MEI DEUS.)

The prophet prays in his affliction, and praises God for his delivery.

Ver. 1. Destroy not. Suffer me not to be destroyed, (Ch. M.) or I will not allow my men to destroy an implacable foe, (H.) as they entreat me to do. This conduct is worthy of eternal memory. W.—The words may also be an admonition to the reader, not to alter this piece. Apoc. 22:18. C.—Al tashcheth, (or thosseth. H.) is supposed to be an instrument, or a favourite song, such as that of Moses, (Deut. 9:26) which begins thus. But the point is uncertain. The same words occur, Psalm 58. 59. (Bert.) and 74. They are put in the mouth of Christ suffering, by S. Hilary, &c.—Cave of Odollam, or rather of Engaddi. C.

Ver. 2. In thee. This obliges God to take pity. Ps. 45:11.—Wings, as a chicken retires to the hen. Ruth 2:12. Matt. 23:37.

Ver. 4. Sent his mercy, &c. (C.) above the power of man. W.—Reproach. Saul was forced to entreat David to preserve his family, as he had just spared his own life; which would, no doubt, mortify his pride, (1 K. 24:18. 22. C.) and seem a reproach to him. W.

Ver. 5. Lions. Poetry gives life to all things. It represents mercy and truth as God's messengers; and Saul as a young lion. He might have entered the cave with his men, and destroyed David: but Providence caused him to enter alone, so that David had an opportunity to cut off the hem of his garment, and to shew his clemency.—Sword. Thus were the Jews armed, to demand Christ's death. Euseb. C.—The persecutors use artificial weapons, and excite one another to fury. 1 K. 22:16. W.

Ver. 7. Down. Heb. "my soul was bowed down," (Bert.) or "to bow down my soul." S. Jer. H.—Saul strove many ways to destroy his rival, sending him to fight the Philistines, who, nevertheless, proved the ruin of Saul. 1 K. 18:17 and 31:1. W.

Ver. 8. My. This and the following verses, from the 107th psalm. C.

Ver. 9. Glory. Soul, tongue, or rather instruments of music, (C.) and spirit of prophecy. S. Athan.

Ver. 10. Nations. the psalms are now recited, (W.) in every language, and the wonders wrought by Christ are proclaimed. C.

Ver. 11. Clouds. They are exceedingly great. H.—Christ has mounted to the highest heavens, and his apostles have preached (C.) his saving truths, which, like clouds, render the earth fruitful in good works. H.

Ver. 12. Earth. It is just thy mercy should be extolled. M. v. 6.

PSALM 57

PSALM 57. (SI VERE UTIQUE.)

David reproveth the wicked, and foretelleth their punishment.

Ver. 1. Title. This psalm is a sequel to the former, (W.) and refers to the malevolent speeches of Saul's courtiers, (1 K. 24:10 and 26:7. C.) and to the proceedings of the Jews against Christ. S. Jer.—It is an invective against hypocrites, (C.) and detractors. Bert.

Ver. 2. Men. If you be consulted by Saul, and act as judges, do what is right. Condemn not a man unheard. C.—Frew refuse to speak well. W.—Heb. also, “O assembly,” act not hypocritically.

Ver. 3. Heart. Hence proceed evil thoughts, &c. H.—Quicquid vis & non potes, factum Deus computat. S. Aug.—Forge, as you endeavour to preserve the appearance of rectitude. Heb. “weigh” in scales. C.—This double-dealing aggravates the fault. W.

Ver. 4. Womb. Born in sin. H.—They have followed the same course through life, being always bent on wickedness. C.

Ver. 5. Madness; or “poison,” chamath. M.—Deaf asp. This is the most dangerous species. The ancients attempted to charm serpents. But these courtiers were deaf to every proof of David's innocence, (C. Diss.) and would receive no admonition, stopping their ears, like asps. W.—The prophet speaks conformably to the received opinion, (Bert.) without determining it to be true. M.

Ver. 6. Wisely. “Cunningly.” Many read, qui incantatur a sapiente. C.—He does not approve of the magical art. M.—Serpents may naturally be effected with music. The torpid snake by incantation bursts. Virg. Ec. viii. Bochart v. 3. 385. Parkhurst, chober. H.

Ver. 9. Wax. Heb. shabbellul, occurs no where else, and this signification is surely preferable to that of the Rabbins, “a snail.” Prot. H.—Fire. Heb. “like the untimely birth of a woman, which has not seen the sun.” Houbig. after S. Jerom.—Sept. may not have read th at the end of esh, “fire.” But both version imply, that the wicked shall perish, without resource (Bert.) or struggle. This is enforced by a multiplicity of examples. H.

Ver. 10. Before your thorns, &c. That is, before your thorns grow up, so as to become strong briars, they shall be overtaken and consumed by divine justice, swallowing them up, as it were, alive in his wrath. Ch.—You shall be cut off when you least think of it. M. Ps. 54:24. H.—David probably alludes to the proposal mentioned, (Jud. 9:14) where the brier (rhammus) invites all the trees to come under its shade. Before you, my followers, shall fall under the oppression of our cruel persecutors, they shall be suddenly destroyed. Bert.—“Before your pots can feel the thorns, he shall take them away, as with a whirlwind, both living, and in his wrath.” Prot.—This version of Pagnin is rejected by Montanus, who nearly follows the Vulg. Sirothecem means, “your thorns, or pots.” Eccles. 7:7. H.

Ver. 11. Shall wash his hands, &c. Shall applaud the justice of God, and take occasion, from the consideration of the punishment of the wicked, to wash and cleanse his hands from sin. Ch.—Hands. Heb. “feet,” (though this is not certain. Ps. 73:4. Bert.) and all his body; the carnage shall be so great. The just approve of God’s judgments, (C.) in or “over,” επλ, to testify that he has no connexion with the wicked. Theod.—The just will purify himself still more at the sight of vengeance. This interpretation is good, but no so literal. Bert.

Ver. 12. A God. Heb. Elohim shophetim. Both are in the plural, which has induced many to suppose that angels, &c. are meant; yet the plural is sometimes used, when speaking of the true God. Gen. 20:13. Jos. 24:19. C.—Houbigant translates, “gods,” which he explains of the pastors of the Church, or “judges.” The reward of virtue, and punishment of vice, are very important truths. Let us wait till the time of harvest, and all will be in its proper place. Bert.

PSALM 58. (ERIE ME.)

A prayer to be delivered from the wicked, with confidence in God’s help and protection. It agrees to Christ and his enemies, the Jews.

Ver. 1. Watched. Heb. “they (the guards) watched.” The psalm relates also to the resurrection of Christ, and vocation of the Gentiles, (Bert.) as well as to the reprobation, and future conversion of the Jews. It seems to be most applicable to the times of Esdras and Nehemias: (2 Esd. 4:1. and 6:1) one of whom may have composed it. C.—But this is only a conjecture, (Bert.) and Saul's emissaries may be styled Gentiles, (M.) because they imitated their manners. H.—Saul sent repeatedly, and went himself to attack David. He gave him Michol with the same design. W.—But God turned her heart another way. H.

Ver. 4. Caught. Heb. "laid snares for." Sept. "hunted." The enemy wished eagerly to take David, or Nehemias, (H. C.) and they seemed to have so surrounded the former, as to be sure of him. W.

Ver. 5. I ran. Heb. "they," &c. But the Sept. would not have made such a mistake, (Bert.) and the Heb. appears to be incorrect, though we may understand "without iniquity in me, they have run." C.—I gave them no offence. W.—All this may be well explained of Jesus Christ, who alone could use these expressions with propriety, being without sin.

Ver. 6. No mercy. Nehemias uses the like prophetic threats, 2 Esd. 4:5. C.—"Every sin must be punished, either by the penitent, or by an avenging God." The prophet supposes that his enemies died impenitent. S. Aug.—When the gospel was first preached, God visited the world with various afflictions, to make people enter into themselves. Euseb.—The prophet prays that God would visit all nations with peace, and punish obstinate persecutors of the Catholic Church. W.

Ver. 7. Evening, when they came to take David. But, out of regard for Michol, they providentially waited till he had escaped, 2 K. 19. H.—Nehemias was obliged to watch continually, 2 Esd. 4:11, 23. C.—The Jews will embrace the faith at the end of the world, (S. Aug.) or they will be destroyed (S. Hil.) or banished by Titus and Adrian (A.D. 137); the latter of whom forbade them even to look at Jerusalem from an eminence. They could not enter it in the time of Eusebius, (Ps. 48) and S. Jer. Soph. i.—They have a hunger for God's word, of which they have lost the true sense. S. Athan.—Persecutors are never satiated, though they labour to destroy, all their lives. W.—They allow themselves no rest. M.

Ver. 8. Lips. They seek my ruin, 2 Esd. 4:2. &c.—Heard. Thus they deny Providence, Ps. (Heb.) 10:11. C.—This thought and the occasion of it have produced much wickedness. "Whithersoever thou goest, thou art seen by Jesus Christ, who made, redeemed, and died for thee." S. Aug. Ser. 161.—A serious consideration of God's presence is the best preservative. Bert.—The wicked devise all sorts of cruelty, as if there were no God. W.

Ver. 9. Laugh. Permitting them to become ridiculous. C.

Ver. 10. My. Heb. “his,” which seems incorrect. Chal. (C.) and S. Jerom agree with the Vulg. Houbigant would also substitute, “My strength, I will sing to thee,” which affords a better sense, v. 17. Bert.—Yet our version is very plain; I will make all my powers serve thee, and acknowledge that all comes from thee. H.—Such was the admirable humility of Nehemias, who never assumed any glory to himself. C.—David and all just men entertain the same sentiments. We are here assured (H.) that the Church and some virtuous souls will persevere, by God’s grace. W.

Ver. 11. His mercy. Prot. “the God of my.” Yet the text has “his;” i and v are easily confounded. The Keri here allows “my,” which Pagnin translates. S. Jer. “the mercy of my God;” (H.) or “my God, my mercy.” Ep. ad. Sun. C.—All comes to the same end. These words are most applicable to Jesus Christ. Bert.

Ver. 12. Over. S. Jer. “my spies.” H.—Forget. Let them suffer a long time, (M.) that their punishment may be a greater warning. The ancients read, “thy law,” instead of people, and apply this to the Jews, (C.) who still preserve the law, and bear witness throughout the world that the prophecies were not a fabrication of Christians. H.—Their exemplary chastisement and continuance, may serve to caution all not to follow their example. Judæi testes iniquitatis suæ et veritatis nostræ. S. Aug. Euseb.—“If all the Jews had been converted, we should have had only suspicious witnesses; and if all had been exterminated, we should have had none.” God permits our spiritual adversaries to remain for our trial, (Tert.) that we may not forget ourselves in prosperity. W.—We may also translate Al, “O God, (as well as not) slay them, that they may attack my people no more;” (see 2 Esd. 4:4) for what reason could Nehemias have to beg that they might be spared? C.—God might have some. H.

Ver. 13. For, is not expressed. Lit. “bring down ... the sign,” &c. Let not their haughty speeches take effect, or escape punishment. The imprecations of the Jews against themselves, (H.) and against Christ, have brought on their destruction. S. Aug.—Thus nothing need be supplied.—Of. Heb. “shall relate;” which has little sense. Laying aside the points, it may have the meaning of the Vulg. This passage can hardly be applicable to David’s persecutors, though it might predict the disasters of Saul. It alludes more to the enemies of Christ, (Bert.) who called down his blood upon themselves, (Mat. 27:25) and most falsely accused Him. C.—Hence they are become the reproach of men, and are no long a people. They behold the reign of Christ propagated throughout the world, (v. 16. H.) while they are wandering about and despised. They once would not serve; boasting that they were children of Abraham. Jo. 8. M.

Ver. 14. Consumed. At the destruction of Jerusalem, or for opposing Nehemias, 2 Esd. 6:16.—Earth. The Jews who were preordained to life, embraced the gospel. C.—How can those know, who are no more? Their condition will be worse than annihilation. They will exist in hell, though no more visible to us. Bert.—They will know the truth, when it is too late; and when they are on the point of plunging into the abyss. The measure of their crimes being full, they shall be accused and punished. W.

Ver. 15. City. This is a sort of chorus, v. 7. S. Jer. and Prot. “Let them bark.” H.—It insinuates, that the attacks of the enemies of Nehemias, (C.) David, and Christ, were unceasing. H.

Ver. 16. Murmur. Heb. also, “shall tarry all night.” Prot. “grudge.” H.—Finding no oil for their lamps, they will repent like Judas, and blaspheme in hell. W.

Ver. 17. Morning. With earnestness, (H.) I will fulfil this duty (C.) at the resurrection, (W.) in the morning of a glorious immortality. M.

Ver. 18. Helper. S. Jer. “my strength,” virtutem meam tibi cantabo, v. 10. I will sing, that all I have comes from thy pure mercy. H.

PSALM 59

PSALM 59. (DEUS REPULISTI NOS.)

After many afflictions, the Church of Christ shall prevail.

Ver. 1. Changed. Ps. 44:Title, Ps. 15. doctrine explaining what will be the progress of the Church. M.—It seems to have the same import as understanding, in other titles, but here is of little authority. Bert.—It has no connexion with the psalm, which seems to have been written before David had obtained the sovereignty over Israel, (Houbig. v. 8) or it expresses the sentiments of the captives, (C.) and of Jesus Christ, and his Church. S. Aug.

Ver. 2. Set fire. Heb. “fought against Syria of Mesopotamia, and Syria of Seba.” S. Jer. 2 K. viii. 10. H.—Twelve. Abisai slew 18,000, perhaps on another occasion; (1 Par. 18:12) so that this title does not contradict history. M.

Ver. 3. Off. Chastising thy people frequently under Moses, &c. Bert.—On us. Redeeming mankind, which thou hadst condemned, for the fault of Adam, and giving us a more abundant grace. Rom. 5:9. S. Hil.—Thou hast treated us like a good physician, (Deut. 32:39. C.) chastising us for our sins, that we might improve in virtue. W.

Ver. 4. Moved. He personifies the earth, which had fallen into the hands of the Chaldees, (C.) or had experienced various commotions under Saul, &c. (H.) which he denotes by the mention of an earthquake. M.

Ver. 5. Sorrow. Heb. “muddy,” such as is given to slaves or malefactors, (S. Matt. 27:34) mixed with myrrh, or venom. Lit. “wine of trembling,” (C.) or soporiferous. S. Jer. H.—All these expressions give the idea of something disagreeable. Bert.—The people became penitent, or were astonished. M.

Ver. 6. Warning, to amend, (W.) the sign of the cross (C.) in baptism, (S. Jer.) or confirmation. Euseb.—It was customary to erect a pole, on which some signal was placed, in case of invasion. Is. 5:26 and 11:12. &c. C.—Bow. Heb. kossoth, (H.) as S. Jer. &c. have read, though the present Heb. end with t, less correctly, and is explained, “because of the truth.” C. Bert.

Ver. 7. Save me. The king praying for all. M.—S. Aug. reads, me, (C.) though the Vulg. does not here express it. H.—Heb. “save thy right hand,” the people, or man of thy, &c. Ps. 79:18. C.—Hear me. Heb. “him.” But the margin has, me. H.

Ver. 8. Holy one, Jesus Christ, (Euseb.) the prophet, (M.) the sanctuary, (C.) or oracle. W.—He had promised that the captives should return in seventy years time. Jer. 25:11 and 29:10. C.—Sichem. (partibor Sichimam ... metibor.) These two verbs are sometimes used for partiar and metiar, in ancient authors.—Tabernacles. Heb. “succoth.” Bert. Gen. 33:17.—It may also signify the Arabs, who lived in tents. M.—David’s dominion extended over these nations, (H.) and the captives at Babylon hoped to recover them, as the Machabees did. The kingdoms of Juda and Israel were no more divided, (Is. 11:13. Jer. 31:8) to shew the unity of the Church.

Ver. 9. Head. This tribe was at the head of the kingdom of Israel, but submitted to David, (H.) and afforded excellent soldiers and captains. C.—His temporal kingdom was extended by God, who will crown his elect. W.—King. Heb. “law-giver,” alluding to Gen. 49:10. Sym. “my general." C.—The word king implies all this. H.—Juda always swayed the sceptre. Bert.—After the captivity, Zorobabel was at the head of the people. Jesus Christ sprung from this tribe, and is the true king of the people, whom he has redeemed, and put in possession of the land of promise. C.

Ver. 10. The pot of my hope; or my watering pot. That is, a vessel for meaner uses, by being reduced to serve me, even in the meanest employments. Ch. W.—Plautus (Mort. ii. scen. 1. 40) says, Ego vos pro matula habeo, &c. Symmachus adopts the sense of the Sept. ἀμερμνίας, as rêts, in Syr. means “to trust,” (Dan. 3:28) and “to wash” in Heb. It was customary to throw lots into a pot full of water, and that which came out last was most esteemed. To this custom the psalmist may allude, (C.) or he hoped that the fruitful region of Moab would supply him with food. It was subject to David, (2 K. 8:2. H.) and to the Machabees, 1 Mac. 5:6.—Shoe, to be untied, or carried, as by the meanest slaves, (Matt. 3:11) or to take possession. Deut. 11:24. Thus “Alexander threw a javelin, and danced on the shore of Asia, begging that those lands would not receive him unwillingly for king.” Diod. Arrian. Justin.—David conquered Idumea, (2 K. 8:14. H.) as Hyrcanus did afterwards. Joseph. xiii. 17. C.—Foreigners, alienigenæ, or, “Allophyli.” S. Aug.—“Of another tribe.” H.—So the Philistines were called, who had no kindred with the Israelites; whereas the Edomites, Moabites, &c. were originally of the same family. Ch.—Subject, or “friends.” Ps. 107:10. C.—Prot. “Philistia, triumph thou, because of me.” Marg. insinuates this is spoken “by irony;” but (H.) Heb. properly means, “make an alliance with me;” or, Syr. “I will shout for joy over Palestine.” This country was subdued by the Machabees, (1 Mac. 4:15. C.) as it had been tributary to David. 2 K. 8:2. Bert.—“I will make a league against the Philistines.” Houbig.

Ver. 11. city. The capital of the aforesaid counties, or Jerusalem; (C.) but more particularly Petra, (H.) the strongest place in Idumea. M. Abdias, 3. Bert.—The Fathers understand the Church. Euseb.

Ver. 12. Off? God punishes and rewards. W.—And wilt; or, “yet thou wilt not,” &c. H.—Thou wilt not depend on our efforts for victory. Bellar. M.—How can we expect to make such conquests, being in so forlorn a condition, when thou dost not lead forth our armies, as formerly? All that man can do is vain, but thou wilt look down upon us, and through God we shall do mightily, v. 14. C.

A prayer for the coming of the kingdom of Christ, which shall have no end.

Ver. 1. Hymns. This denotes either the female musicians, or the instruments. C.—David, under persecution, (Ferrand) the captains, (Ven. Bede C.) or any one in the Church of Christ, (S. Aug.) may adopt this psalm, (Bert.) to thank God. W.

Ver. 3. Earth of Palestine, (Bert.) when David was at Mahanaim. Ferrand. 2 K. 17:22. H.—The countries beyond the Euphrates may be so styled. Ps. 64:6.—Rock, by inspiring Cyrus to grant us liberty, (C.) or by sending Jesus Christ. Euseb.—The church is firmly established; and, in all places, serves God. W.

Ver. 5. Tabernacle. The words for ever seem to confine this to heaven, as the Fathers explain them, though they may also allude to a temporal protection (Bert.) in the temple. C.—Wings. Chal. “of thy deity.” Chal. I will continue a member of thy Church here, and be happy for ever. M.

Ver. 6. Inheritance. David had both a temporal, and an eternal one in view. Bert.—The captives express their gratitude for their deliverance. C.

Ver. 7. King. They wish long life to the king, expecting that the predictions of the prophets insured to them temporal dominion. But when they saw Zorobabel possess no such splendour, they were naturally taught to extend their thoughts to the Messiah, of whom the Chal. and ancient Jews, as well as the Fathers, explain this passage. C.—Chal. “the days of the future world thou wilt add to the days of the king, the Messiah. His years shall be like the generations of this world, and the generations of the world to come.” Eternity is clearly meant. If David speaks of himself, and of his successors on the throne for many ages, he must be considered as a figure of Christ, who is also designated. Bert.—The Church will continue to the end, and be triumphant throughout eternity. W.

Ver. 8. Search? Who can comprehend what thou hast prepared for this king? He may allude to the promises made to David’s family, (Ps. 88:30. 38. C.) which should reign for ever, by means of Christ. H.—Who can explain the mercy of God in redeeming us; and his fidelity in granting his promised rewards? W.

Ver. 9. Day. A Levite speaks, having dedicated himself by vow to serve God continually in his temple, after his return from Babylon, (

C.) or David expresses his resolution to testify his gratitude, by sacrifice. H.—I will sing psalms, &c. in this life, and for ever. W.

PSALM 61

PSALM 61. (NONNE DEO.)

The prophet encourageth himself and all others to trust in God, and serve him.

Ver. 1. Idithun, to sing. W.—He was one of the chief musicians under David. 1 Par. 25:3. The psalm may be explained of David, persecuted by Absalom, (C.) of the Machabees, (Theod.) &c. or of Christ, and his Church. C.—S. Jer. considers it a piece of excellent morality, (C.) and this may suffice, without referring it to any historical fact. Bert.

Ver. 2. Subject. The just is resigned, though he feel like other men. David found a sort of resentment against the rebels, arising in his breast, which he presently repressed, by the thought of God's will. 2 K. 12:11. C.—He fears nothing, because his soul is subject to God. W.—Heb. “silent.” H.

Ver. 4. Fence. This may refer to the persecutors, who resembled a leaning wall. Bert. Is. 30:13. C.—Prot. “ye shall be slain all of you, as a bowing wall shall ye be,” &c. He threatens them with speedy destruction, (H.) or represents to them the baseness of attacking a man ready to fall. C.—He informs them, that their attempts will be in vain, though they be very numerous, and he himself apparently so weak. W.

Ver. 5. Price. Sept. S. Hilary, &c. “my honour.” They wish to dethrone me, and to represent me as unfit to govern.—I ran. Sept. ἔδραμον, “they ran” likewise, as Heb. implies, and as the Gr. Fathers generally explain it. David thought proper to flee, that he might be at a distance from traitors, 2 K. 15:14. His enemies sought this destruction. C.—They wished to deprive him of the reward of his labours; but he ran more earnestly.—Blessed. Flattery is very dangerous. W.

Ver. 8. God. The multiplicity of titles shews the prophet's love. See Apoc. 5:12. S. Aug. Conf. i. 4. Bert.

Ver. 9. All. Heb. “always, O people.” Sept. seem to have read, adoth, for heth.—For ever. Here Selah is translated, (Bert.) though it is not in Sept. &c. David exhorts his followers to address themselves to God, with compunction and confidence. C.

Ver. 10. Liars. They are so vain and light, that if they are put into the scales, they will be found to be of no weight; and to be mere lies, deceit, and vanity. Or, they are liars in their balances, by weighing thing by false weights, and preferring the temporal before the eternal. Ch. Prov. 11:1 and 20:10.—They give false judgments; be not concerned; God is our protector. C.—God's servants strive to draw others to the practice of virtue. W.—All sinners (H.) will not outweigh vanity itself. M.

Ver. 11. Them. Let the rich assist their needy brethren; and you, my followers, beware of enriching yourselves, by unjust rapine, during this civil war. C.—Raise your thoughts to something better. S. Aug.

Ver. 12. Once, by the generation of his word, (S. Aug.) or when he promulgated the law. Ex. 20:6. Bert.—God's word is invariable, (W. Job 33:14. M.) and will be put in execution. S. Amb. T.—This he has often inculcated. Vatab. Job 39:35. Amos (1:3) uses three and four, in the same sense. C.

Ver. 13. Works. We must therefore refrain from every injustice. H.—God spoke once by Moses, and again by his own Son. Both the Testaments confirm the certainty of rewards and punishments, (Bert.) as God is able and willing (W.) to execute his decrees. Luther, followed by the Dutch, translates, “as he merits;” to which expression, concerning the just, Amama objects. H.

PSALM 62

PSALM 62. (DEUS DEUS MEUS AD TE.)

The prophet aspireth after God.

Ver. 1. Edom, (Idumææ.) H.—Several copies read Judææ; which agrees with the Heb. &c. The Idumeans, after the captivity, occupied those deserts (C.) or Ziph, Haret, &c. (W.) where David had screened himself from the fury of Saul. This psalm may express his sentiments, (Theod. Muis.) or those of the captives, returning home, (C.) or it may agree with all those, who thirst after their heavenly country. Bert.—S. Jerom explains it of the coming of Christ, and it was used in the morning service. S. Chrys. Ps. 140. C.—Catholics, who are imprisoned for their faith, and cannot approach the tabernacle, may here find comfort. W.

Ver. 2. Day. The manna dissolved with the sun beams, and God will be served with diligence.—Flesh. The sensations of my soul affect all my body. W.—Thirst is more insupportable than hunger; and the psalmist could not express his ardour better. C.—He loves God with all his strength, &c. H.—“The soul desires, but the end can be attained only by good works.” Carnis laboribus pervenitur. S. Jer.—O how! Prot. “longest for thee in a dry,” &c. But come is no Heb. verb, and occurring no where else, is little understood by the Jews. It seems that comu, “as,” should be here, to correspond with the following so. “As my flesh thirsts in this, &c. so in the,” &c. I shall find no less pleasure in attending thy worship, than a thirsty traveller does in finding water. C.—Theodotion agrees with the Sept. in considering this as a compound word ποσαπλως, (C.) and we had best stick to the most ancient version. Bert.

Ver. 3. Land. “O solitude,” cries out S. Ephrem, “ladder of heaven, mother of compunction, ... and piety, thou art the guardian of the eyes,” &c.—Glory. The ark, (C.) or Jesus Christ, the desired of all nations. S. Jer. H.—I have attended thy worship in spirit, not being able to be present at Jerusalem. C. M. W.—Thus people, who cannot hear mass, ought to act. H.

Ver. 4. Lives. For these must perish, while heaven remains for ever. S. Hil.—This consolation is preferable to any worldly prosperity. W.

Ver. 5. Hands. Doing good works, as the Fathers explain it. This is the posture of people who pray, or take an oath. Tert. 1 Tim. 2:8. C.—I will, &c. Comfort is proportioned to suffering for Christ. 2 Cor. 1. W.

Ver. 6. Fatness. With the most exquisite delights of the temple. Jer. 31:14. C.—Thy grace will enable me to give thee due praise (W.) with joy. M.

Ver. 7. Bed. I will think on thee both when I retire to rest, and when I get up. Bert.—Thou art my first beginning, and last end. H.—At all times I will meditate on thy mercies (C.) in bed, and much more, when I arise, (W.) as I shall not then be so much oppressed with drowsiness. M.

Ver. 10. Earth. To seek me out, (Houbig.) or they shall perish. The Babylonians were exposed to many miseries under Cyrus, as the prophets assert, (Is. 13:1. Jer. 25:12) though profane history be silent. C.—David foretells the destruction of his persecutors, either temporal or spiritual. W.—The devils may be styled foxes. Bert. S. Hil.—This may also be verified in the Jews, who persecuted Christ, and fell a prey to the Roman arms, &c. Euseb. C.—Saul perished in battle, and his body was exposed on a gibbet to wild beasts. 1 K. 31. W.

Ver. 12. The king. David, (Bert. &c.) or Zorobabel, for whom the Jews had the highest regard, though he was not an independent monarch, nor wore a crown. Agg. 2:24. Zac. 3:8. It was customary to swear by the life of the king. 1 K. 1:26 and 20:3. The Fathers understand Jesus Christ to be meant, and this is the true and primary sense; as Zorobabel was only a figure of Him, and never really possessed the throne, that the Jews might not think that the prophecies were fulfilled in his person.—By him. The king, (Du Pin. C.) or God. M. Boss. T.—Those who follow the true religion, (Deut. 6:13. Is. 45:23. C.) and act accordingly (H.) shall be kings for ever. Apoc. Bert. 1 Pet. 2:9. H.—As David came to the throne, on the death of his rival, so was Christ's name exalted, after the Romans had destroyed the Jews. W.

PSALM 63. (EXAUDI DEUS ORATIONEM.)

A prayer in affliction, with confidence in God that he will bring to nought the machinations of persecutors.

Ver. 1. David, in distress. Euseb. &c.—It has no relation to any historical fact. But it expresses the sentiments of any just man, surrounded with danger. S. Hil.—Yet many apply it to Daniel, in the lion's den, (Muis.) to the captives, (C.) or to Jesus Christ and his Church. S. Aug. &c. H.

Ver. 3. Malignant. I am encouraged to hope by past experience. W.

Ver. 4. Thing, or discourse. This describes the poisonous insinuations of heretics, (Euseb.) or the calumnies of the Jews against Christ. Bert.

Ver. 6. Them. The snares. H.—Houbigant prefers “us,” with reason, (Bert.) after the Syr. Arab. Cassiod. &c. Yet the Heb. &c. retain them, which is very easily explained. H.—The most wicked desire to preserve the reputation of honesty, (C.) and flatter themselves that no mortal is conscious of their deceit, and that even Providence does not regard things below. Ps. 10. H.

Ver. 7. Search. Or, they have made the most diligent investigation, (Bert.) to no purpose. H.—Thus David and our Saviour were treated.—Heart. That is, crafty, subtle, deep projects and designs; which nevertheless shall not succeed; for God shall be exalted in bringing them to nought, by his wisdom and power. Ch.—Heb. “both the inward thought of every one of them, and the heart is deep.” Prot. H.—But, without the points, the Sept. is accurate. Bert.—The Jews, with all their deep machinations to prevent the belief of Christ’s resurrection, bringing even sleeping witnesses, only made themselves ridiculous. S. Aug. H.—Achitophel was forced to give way, (2 K. 17. W.) though he had been considered as an oracle. H.

Ver. 8. The arrows of children are their wounds. That is, the wounds, stripes, or blows, they seek to inflict upon the just, are but like weak efforts of children’s arrows, which can do no execution; and their tongues, that is, their speeches against them, come to nothing. Ch.—Or, children themselves have wounded these crafty politicians, and exposed their folly. H.—Heb. is “very perplexed in the last three verses. Let us adhere to the Vulg. and Sept. who generally read more correctly than the present Hebrew.” C. Bert.—Yet S. Jerom gives a very good sense. H.—Wounds. God hath chosen the weak things of this world to confound the strong, (W.) and he hath taken the wise in their craftiness. M.

Ver. 10. Afraid, at the sight of God’s judgments on the Babylonians, &c. C.

Ver. 11. Praised. All will begin to esteem the chosen race. C.—Heb. “shall glory.” The Jews and Christians (H.) shall esteem themselves honoured by the title of God’s people. C.—They shall be praised for rightly serving God, (W.) and shall be rewarded by Him (H.) with universal applause. M.

PSALM 64

PSALM 64. (TE DECET.)

God is to be praised in his Church, to which all nations shall be called.

Ver. 1. Of the captivity. That is, the people of the captivity of Babylon. This is not in the Hebrew, but is found in the ancient translation of the Septuagint. Ch.—From the word canticle. H.—It is of little authority. Jeremias and Ezechiel were never together. C. Bert.—Perhaps the former might have put this psalm of David into the hands of the people, when they were going to Babylon, and Ezechiel might have exhorted them to recite it at their return. H.—It seems to have been composed by David, in thanksgiving for rain; (Ps. 28. Muis.) or some of the Levites wrote it, after God had removed the scourge of drought, with which he had afflicted the people, in consequence of their neglecting to finish the temple. Agg. 1:4. Mal. 3:9. C.—David predicts the return from captivity, (Bert.) and the vocation of the Gentiles, (S. Hil. &c. M.) which the prophets Jeremias, &c. had insinuated, by the coming of the nations from Babylon, so as to forsake idolatry. S. Aug. &c. W.

Ver. 2. Hymn. Or Heb. “Praise is silent,” (H.) “waiteth,” (Prot.) or “silence is praise for thee, O God.” Pagn. Favete linguis. Hor. Grot. —“We worship Him with pure silence.” Porphy. Abst. iii. Zac. 2:13. H.—In Jerusalem, is not in Heb. &c. though Houbigant thinks it was originally. Bert.—“Only the vows of ecclesiastical religion are useful.” S. Hil.—Praises of those who are out of the Church, are not acceptable to God. W.

Ver. 3. O. Heb. “hearer of prayer,” (C.) or “graciously hear my prayer, till all,” &c. S. Jer. Houbig.—Too thee. At the last judgment, or (C.) at the vocation of the Gentiles. Bert. M.

Ver. 4. Transgressions. These are the words of the Christian converts, (Euseb.) or of the Jews, who acknowledge that they have been justly punished with drought, for neglecting the temple and first fruits. Agg. 1:4. Mal. 3:9. C.—Heb. “thou wilt expiate our transgressions,” which denotes Christ’s satisfaction. Bert.—Though the wicked threaten, we fear nothing, as long as thou wilt pardon our offences. W.—These have been the occasion of our past sorrows. M.

Ver. 5. To thee, by predestination.—House, adorned with exterior graces. S. Hil.—Happy the man, whom thou hast ordained, by faith and good works, to eternal life! David speaks in the name of the elect. M.

Ver. 6. Justice. Because there thou wilt fulfil thy promises, and requirest the greatest composure and attention. Eph. 2:12. 22. Bert.—Nothing defiled can enter into heaven. Apoc. 21. W.—Off. The Jews were dispersed into all countries, (Jer. 31:8) and all are called to the true faith. C.

Ver. 7. Strength, or rain. The power (C.) and goodness of God, are described with regard to the captives, and converted nations, (Bert.) and the great works of the creation. W.

Ver. 8. Troublest. Prot. “stillest the noise.” H.—Troubled. The most obdurate are converted from all countries. W.

Ver. 9. Joyful. People both of the east and west shall learn to fear thee; or thy chosen people shall dwell in peace, and attend the morning and evening service. Euseb. C.—Both morning and evening afford delight, as people may labour, or take some rest, according to their different wants.

Ver. 10. River. Heb. “the division,” or all the seas and fountains (Bert.) of consequence, (M.) particularly the Jordan, which overflows, like the Euphrates, about Pentecost. Jos. 3:15. Jer. 12:5. C.—Its, the earth’s, after a plentiful rain. H.—God has wrought many wonders by water, and hath fed his people, (Ex. 7:14 and 16:3. &c.) to prefigure the graces conferred in baptism, the holy Eucharist, &c. W.

Ver. 11. Showers. This gives the sense, rather than the words of the Heb. Bert.—Pastors are still preserved to feed the faithful; and all the just receive the crown of justice, at the end of their life. 2 Tim. 4. W.

Ver. 12. Crown. The crops shall succeed each other, and be abundant. Lev. 26:5. 10. Amos 9:13. This fertility was foretold, Agg. 2:20. C.—“By the blessing, the year shall roll along, and thy steps shall distil fatness.” S. Jer. H.

Ver. 13. Wilderness. Or, of such places as were not ploughed. Little hay was collected, as cattle might almost always pasture.—Hills, covered with vine-trees, &c. Joel 3:18. Job 20:17. C.—The most barren will bring forth fruit, and the perfect shall advance in merit. W.

Ver. 14. Clothed, with fleeces, (H.) or rather, shall be surrounded with sheep. Heb. also, “the pastures shall be covered with sheep.” Houbigant would read e for c, and translate, “the mountains shall be clothed with flocks.” But such changes require some proof, and the sense is the same. Bert.—All nature (M.) praises God in its own manner, when it answers the designs of God. Yet man is chiefly invited to sing. H.—The pastors, (W.) like rams, lead the way; but all the just, without exception, shall be happy in their celestial mansions, and with the utmost content, shall join the hymns of Sion. H.

PSALM 65. (JUBILATE DEO.)

An invitation to praise God.

Ver. 1. Psalm. Cassiodorus, &c. add, “of David.” But it is thought, he was not the author of this and the following piece, as his name is not in the original. C.—This argument is, however, of small weight.—Resurrection. Heb. Origen's Sept. &c. omit these words, (Bert. T. iii.) which seem to have been added by some Greek Christian, who thought he perceived some allusion to the resurrection of Christ, v. 9. The Fathers have well explained it in this sense, though they also apply it literally to the return of the captives, (Theod. C.) and to the general resurrection, the end of all the miseries of the elect, (Bellar.) as well as to the conversion of the Gentiles, (Geneb.) and the resurrection of a soul from the state of sin. H.

Ver. 3. Lie. Prove faithless to thee, (Ps. 17:46. &c.) notwithstanding the evidence of thy wonders, and their deceitful professions. Thus the Samaritans pretended they wished to assist the Jews to build the temple; yet soon after obtained an order from court to hinder it. 1 Esd. 4:1. and 8:36. C.—Pharao frequently promised to let the people go, but as often broke his word. W.—They had been moved with servile fear. M.—The sight of God's judgments upon the world was enough to inspire terror. W.

Ver. 5. Men. Choosing some, and rejecting others, (S. Jer.) calling the Gentiles, while he casts off the Jews. S. Aug.

Ver. 6. In him. God, (H.) Jesus, (Euseb.) or “on it,” the river Euphrates, which we shall pass over with as much ease, as our ancestors did the Red Sea. So the prophets frequently speak in a figurative sense. Is. 11:16 and 50:3 and Zac. 10:10 and 4 Esd. 13:41. C.—As Josue led the Israelites across the river Jordan on dry land, (H.) so wel shall extol thy wonders. W.—There, reflecting on these prodigies, both past and present, we shall rejoice. M.

Ver. 7. Provoke him. The faithless Jews, or Gentiles; particularly those of Babylon; or those among God's people, who neglected his service. Hos. 4. and 1 Esd. 9. &c. C.—These often gave way to murmuring, and are therefore exhorted not to be proud, lest they should be brought low.

Ver. 8. Gentiles. By this invitation, he predicts their conversion.

Ver. 9. Moved. The apostles were most courageous. Only those Jews returned, who had separated themselves from impure idols. 1 Esd. 5:5. The Church never fails. If some apostatize, others embrace the faith. W.

Ver. 10. Tried. So Daniel was treated. Dan. 3:21. The Babylonian captivity is compared to a furnace, as well as all severe trials of virtue. Prov. 17:3. Zac. 13. C.

Ver. 11. Back. Heb. “loins.” The captives had experienced the greatest miseries, as the martyrs of Christ have done since. C.—The Church is put to the most severe trials. W.—Yet God brings no one into the net of sin. This is solely the effect of man’s corruption. H.

Ver. 12. Fire and water, which the Egyptians considered as the emblem of purity, (Horus. xli.) and which here denote the greatest tribulations. C.—The just still overcome by God’s grace, (W.) notwithstanding all the efforts of tyrants who may be set over them. M.

Ver. 14. Uttered. These were alone deemed obligatory by the Jews, (Lev. 5:4. C.) yet the more enlightened knew that God discerns the secrets of hearts, whence the force of a vow proceeds. H.

Ver. 15. Marrow. Malachy (1:13) reproaches some for presenting lean victims. C.—Offer. Heb. ehese, “will make.” Sept. use ποιησω, in the same sense, and are followed by the writers of the New Testament.—Do this, &c. Bert.—The best external victims of the old law are here specified. Yet even then the internal sacrifice was most pleasing. W.

Ver. 16. My soul. Every Israelite ought to cherish the same sentiments. C.

Ver. 17. Extolled, by meditation, (Muis.) or God has immediately granted my request. Theod.—Some Lat. Bibles read, “I have exulted under my tongue,” which my heart directs. W.

Ver. 18. Heart. Being enslaved to any passion. H.—Iniquity and dissimulation hinder the effect of our prayers; and in some sense, it is true, that God does not hear sinners: (Jo. 9:31. 2 Tim. 2:9) though He regards favourably such as wish to repent, like the publican. Lu. 18:14. C.—Whosoever would be heard, must repent of his sins. W.

PSALM 66

PSALM 66. (DEUS MISEREATUR.)

A prayer for the propagation of the Church.

Ver. 1. For David, is not in Heb. nor in some copies of the Sept. C.—Yet the psalm expresses the sentiments of the royal prophet, (Bert.) or it is a sequel to the two former, thanking God for liberty, and for rain. The Fathers explain it of the coming of Jesus Christ, and the calling of the Gentiles, v. 5. It many have been sung when the first-fruits were brought to the temple. See Ps. 84. C.

Ver. 2. Upon us, to grant our requests; or may the Messias come. Heb. 1:3.—And may, &c. is in the Arab. and in most copies of the Sept. and Vulg. though it is omitted in Heb. &c. “and we shall live.” Ethiop. C.—Perhaps it may be given to express the sense of Selah, which seems to have been a term of approbation. It does not alter the sense. Bert.—God first forgives sins, and then bestows his manifold graces. W.—This was the form of solemn blessing. Num. 6:17. D.

Ver. 3. Way. The true religion. M.—Salvation. Christ, who is the only way to be saved. Jo. 14:6. Matt. 1:21. C.—This way is new, leading to new heavens, &c. Heb. 10:20 and 2 Pet. 3:13. Bert.

Ver. 5. Earth. Thou art the Father and ruler of thy people. Let all submit to the sweet yoke of Christ. Zac. 8:21.

Ver. 7. Fruit, after rain; or, in a spiritual sense, Jesus Christ, the root, or bud of Jesse, (Is. 4:2. C.) born in Judea, (Bert.) of the holy Virgin. S. Jer.—God. The triple repetition of God’s name, insinuates the blessed Trinity, (H. Fathers) and the prophet’s earnestness. C.—The faith of the Trinity is to be preached throughout the world, (H.) for the salvation of nations. W.

Ver. 8. Fear him. With holy fear and obedience. M.—The blessings which God bestows upon his servants, and their piety, will induce many to embrace the truth. H.

PSALM 67

PSALM 67. (EXURGAT DEUS.)

The glorious establishment of the Church of the New Testament, prefigured by the benefits bestowed on the people of Israel.

Ver. 1. Himself. This is the most difficult of all the psalms, (C.) crux ingeniorum. Muis.—The prodigies wrought by God in favour of his people, when they came out of Egypt, and conquered the land of Chanaan, are described by David in this triumphal canticle, which was sung when the ark was removed. Houbig.—He had also in view the greater prodigies, which should attend Jesus Christ, and the propagation of the gospel. The latter explanation is also literal, (Bert.) and is given by the Fathers, (C.) on the authority of S. Paul, v. 19.

Ephes. 4:8. H.

Ver. 2. Arise. These words were used when the Israelites decamped, (Num. 10:35. C.) and in the exorcisms to expel devils, who are here styled enemies. S. Athan.—The Jews were confounded when Christ arose again. S. Aug.—The psalmist foretells the ruin of God's enemies, in the form of a prayer. W.

Ver. 4. Feast. This was done when the ark was removed. 1 Par. 15 and 16:3. C.—But believers may now receive God himself. S. Amb. Ps. 39. Bert.

Ver. 5. Who ascendeth upon the west. Super occasum. S. Gregory understands it of Christ, who after his going down, like the sun, in the west, by the passion and death, ascended more glorious, and carried all before him. S. Jerom renders it, who ascendeth, or cometh up, through the deserts; (Ch.) which some explain of the coming out of Egypt, others of the progress of the gospel, in a western direction. M.—Baharaboth, means also, “in the remotest heavens,” (Mont. H.) or, “in delights,” or “darkness,” and all these senses may have been in the prophet's mind, as they are all beautiful. Bert.—Resist not God's inspirations. He triumphs over death, and is Lord of all. W.—Lord. Heb. “in Yah is his name.” H.—The Word was with God. Jo. 1.—But ... presence. These words seem to have been in the copy of the Sept. and shew the contrast between the just and their oppressors, at the presence of the ark, and of the Messias, (Bert.) before whom the latter must tremble.

Ver. 6. The Father, (patris.) Heb. pater, “the Father ... God.” He delights in these titles, (H.) and though he dwelleth on high, he looketh on the low. Ps. 112:5. M.

Ver. 7. Of one manner. That is, agreeing in faith, unanimous in love, and following the same manner of discipline. It is verified in the servants of God living together in his house, which is the Church. 1 Tim. 3:15. Ch.—Heb. may signify, “He maketh those who were alone (steriles) to dwell in a house.” Ps. 112:9. He builds up their house, and grants them children. Flamin. Exod. 1:21.—The Israelites under Pharaoh, (C.) saw their male issue destroyed, (H.) but God enabled them to multiply exceedingly. Exod. 1:12. C.—Yechidim means “the solitary,” (S. Jer.) and “the united,” as the first Christians were. Bert. Acts 2:44. H.—The Church preserves unity in faith, &c. S. Cyp. ep. 76. W.—Bound. The power and mercy of God appears, in his bringing out of their captivity, those who were strongly bound in their sins; and in restoring to his grace those whose behaviour had been most provoking; and who by their evil habits were not only dead, but buried in their sepulchres. Ch.—God’s grace moves even the rebellious and negligent will of man, so that it willingly embraces the right path. W.—In strength. Houbig. “to walk freely.” The Gentiles were, as it were, buried, before Christ delivered them, (Bert.) as he did those who were once incredulous in the days of Noe, (1 Pet. 3:20 and 4:6. S. Athan.) and God rescued the Israelites from servitude, notwithstanding their repeated provocations, both before and after this mercy. Some translate, (H.) Heb. “He delivers those who were bound in chains; but the rebels (Egyptians, or faithless Hebrews) have remained in the desert.” C.—Their bodies have there become a prey to beasts, and to corruption. H.—God permitted the rebellious Egyptians to pursue his people. M.

Ver. 9. Dropped. The earthquake and rain are not mentioned by Moses. But the prophets often supply omissions. Debora and Habacuc speak in the same lofty strains. Ex. 19:16. Judg. 5:4. Hab. 3:6. C.—Debora specifies some words, (H.) which seem to be here wanting, “the clouds also dropped water, the mountains melted” at, &c.—Of Sinai, or, “Sinai at,” &c. M.—Heb. “this Sinai before God, (Judg. 5:5. Jehovah) the God of Israel.” The old MS. 3. retains the word Jehovah at least six times, where it is not once printed, as that of Lambeth, 434, does here, &c. Kennicott.—S. Aug. and the ancient psalters read, A facie Domini; Mons Sinai, &c. C.—The mount itself seemed to melt amid thunder and rain. H.

Ver. 10. A free rain. The manna, which rained plentifully from heaven, in favour of God’s inheritance, that is, of his people Israel: which was weakened indeed under a variety of afflictions, but was made perfect by God; that is, was still supported by divine Providence, and brought on to the promised land. It agrees particularly to the Church of Christ, his true inheritance, which is plentifully watered with the free rain of heavenly grace; and through many infirmities, that is, crosses and tribulations, is made perfect, and fitted for eternal glory. Ch.—God came to redeem us, without any merit on our side. He chose the weak, but made them strong. W.—The cattle stood in great need of water, as the Hebrews did of manna. C.—He will render the promised land most fertile. Houbig.)

Ver. 11. In it, &c. That is, in this Church, which is thy fold, and thy inheritance, shall thy animals, thy sheep, dwell: where thou hast plentifully provided for them. Ch.—Those whom thou hast chosen shall enjoy this manna, or the blessed Sacrament. W.

Ver. 12. To them that preach good tidings. Evangelizantibus. That is, to the preachers of the gospel; who, receiving the word from the Lord, shall with great power and efficacy, preach throughout the world the glad tidings of a Saviour, and of eternal salvation through him; (Ch.) with miracles following. Mark 16. W. Luke 21:15. C.—Heb. seems to speak of females, who used to sing canticles of victory, like Mary and Deborah, &c. But the feminine is used at the beginning of Ecclesiastes, though Solomon be meant, and here the Chaldee paraphrases, “God gave the words of the law to his people, by the mediation of Moses and Aaron, who published the word of God.” This passage has a striking analogy with Ephes. 4:11. &c. He gave some apostles ... for the perfecting of the saints, &c. which S. Paul observes, just after quoting this psalm. Bert.

Ver. 13. The king of powers. That is, the mighty King, the Lord of Hosts, is of the beloved, of the beloved; that is, is on the side of Christ, his most beloved Son; and his beautiful house, viz. the Church, in which God dwells for ever, shall by her spiritual conquests, divide the spoils of many nations. The Hebrew (as it now stands pointed) is thus rendered: The kings of armies have fled, they had fled, and she that dwells at home (or, the beauty of the house) shall divide the spoils. Ch.—Yet Sym. comes nearer the Sept. and S. Jer. has in the same sense, (Bert.) “the kings of armies shall form leagues,” &c. The great King, is the Lord (v. 12) of hosts, who shall enable many to publish his wonders. They are represented as women, to denote the particular Churches of Christ, which have risen on the ruins of idolatry, though they may also refer to the victories of the Israelites, under Debora, when mighty kings came to invade the country. Judg. 4 and 5:19. 24. H.—The glory of that victory was given to her, and to Jahel, who slew Sisara. C.—Soon after the preaching of the gospel, the most potent monarchs (C.) submitted to its authority, and thus a glorious prey was rescued from the power of the devil. W.—Women sometimes promoted this great work. M.

Ver. 14. If you sleep among the midst of lots, (inter medios cleros, &c.) viz. in such dangers and persecutions, as if your enemies were casting lots for your goods and persons: or in the midst of the lots (inter medios terminos, as S. Jerom renders it) that is, upon the very bounds or borders of the dominions of your enemies: you shall be secure, nevertheless, under the divine protection; and shall be enabled to fly away, like a dove, with glittering wings, and feathers shining like the palest and most precious gold; that is, with great increase of virtue, and glowing with the fervour of charity; (Ch.) or, “if ... in the borders of the dove,” &c. the ensign of Babylon. Jer. 25:38.—When, &c. T.—The tribe of Juda may be denoted by the dove, as it seems to be in the canticles, because it continued faithful longer than the ten tribes; (Bert.) or these words may be addressed to the tribes of Ruben and God, which neglected to come to the aid of Debora, and thus melted away like snow, as Jacob had threatened the former; (Gen. 49) or rather, that we may not interrupt the harmony of this solemnity by reproaches, we may (C.) adhere to the Vulg. which renders, they shall be, &c. v. 15. H.—The former stain has been effaced by their subsequent good conduct. C.—While the pastors of the Church diligently propose the doctrines revealed in the two lots, of Testaments, to the prophets and apostles, the faith of the Church shines most conspicuously. The other explanations maybe seen in Lorin. &c. M.

Ver. 15. Kings over her. That is, pastors and rulers over his Church, viz. the apostles, and their successors. Then by their ministry shall men be made whiter than the snow, which lies on the top of the high mountain Selmon, (Ch.) which is in the tribe of Ephraim, shaded with trees. Judg. 9:48. W.—Discern it, may also mean, “judgeth,” (H.) or “divideth,” as S. Jerom translates; and may intimate, that when God shall have exterminated the kings, who attacked his chosen race, it should appear more glorious. H.—In the first year of Cyrus, who had been commissioned by God, with Darius the Mede, to punish Babylon, (Dan. 5) the Jews were liberated. T.

Ver. 16. The mountain of God. The Church, which (Is. 2:2) is called, The mountain of the house of the Lord upon the top of the mountains. It is here called a fat and a curdled mountain; that is to say, most fruitful, and enriched by the spiritual gifts and graces of the Holy Ghost. Ch.—Fat. Heb. “as the hill of Basha,” (Prot.) which was very fertile: the very name signifying “fat.” S. Jer. H.—The psalmist apostrophizes the mountains of Chanaan, which were very high, and those of Basan, where Og ruled; (C.) or he insinuates, that the latter could not vie with Sion, where the ark was now to be placed. Bert.

Ver. 17. Why suspect ye curdled mountains? Why do you suppose or imagine there may be any other such curdled mountains? You are mistaken: the mountain thus favoured by God is but one; and this same he has chosen for his dwelling for ever. Ch.—They who are not of the Church, vainly imagine, that any other mountains are united, (W.) rich in grace, or beautiful. H.—Sects do not agree among themselves, but only in opposing the Catholic Church. They have not the marks of truth, which are here given. The Church of God is compared to a mountain, visible to all; fat, with the graces of the Holy Ghost; united and firm, like cheese; the perpetual residence of God, who will never suffer her to fall into error. W.—Why then do you deign to look at such conventicles of pride and perdition, as if they could be the one holy Catholic and Apostolic Church? Heb. “why do ye contend, ye high mountains, against the mountain?" &c. S. Jer. H.—There are several other interpretations. But that of the Vulg. susplicamini, is the most followed, even by the Jews. Bert.

Ver. 18. The chariot of God, descending to give his law on Mount Sinai; as also of Jesus Christ, his Son, ascending into heaven, to send from thence the Holy Ghost, to publish his new law, is attended with ten thousands, that is with an innumerable multitude of joyful angels. Ch.—Lit. "with forty thousand." Bert.—Innumerable hosts of Cherubim, (H.) seem to be the chariot of the most high. Dan. 7. W.—But here the Israelites, who came to conquer Chanaan, are meant. Deut. 33:2. Zac. 14:5. Hab. 3:6. C.—The promulgation of the old and new law is contrasted. God is the author of the beauty of his Church. M.

Ver. 19. Led captivity captive. Carrying away with thee to heaven those who before had been the captives of Satan; and receiving from God the Father gifts to be distributed to men; even to those who were before unbelievers. Ch.—Yea, even these were the spoils which Christ presented to his Father. H.—S. Paul quotes this text rather in a different manner, ascending on high, he led captivity captive; he gave gifts to men; as the Heb. lakach means, "to give and to receive." Abenezra, Chal. Syr. &c. give it the former sense, with the apostle; S. Justin, (dial.) S. Hilary, and the ancient psalters of Rome and Chartres. S. Aug. approves both readings. C.—So Samson said, "take this woman for a wife for me." Judg. 14:3. The true God is here undoubtedly meant, and as S. Paul explains it of Christ, the Socinians, who admit the authority of the epistle to the Ephesians, ought to confess his divinity. Bert.—Those. Prot. "gifts for men, (Marg. "in the man,") yea, for the rebellious also, that the Lord God might dwell among them." Yet the construction of the Heb. and Vulg. would insinuate as well, that these faithless people were now become true subjects, and were the gifts here presented to the Almighty. Christ came to save sinners. He gratuitously sought after them, and filled them with graces, that they might become a suitable present for God. H.—He received gifts to be distributed among his servants, and merited grace for the conversion of innumerable souls. At his ascension, he was accompanied by angels, and by the patriarchs, who had been retained in captivity. W.—The rebellious nations were forced to pay tribute, (Judg. 3:15. C.) or to submit to Josue, David, &c. H.—God in the flesh, or in his holy mountain, the Christian Church. M.

Ver. 20. To us. so the Israelites might be filled with confidence in the desert, (H.) or the people pray that God would favour the pious design of their king. C.—Heb. "God will carry us, (S. Jer.) or loadeth us with benefits." Prot. H.

Ver. 21. The issues from death. The Lord alone is master of the issues, by which we may escape from death. Ch.—He killeth and giveth life. 1 K. 2:6.

Ver. 22. Sins. He will humble them, or will slay the proud. Ps. 72:18. C.—Though Christ died to save men, He will condemn the obstinate. W.—Sinners take pride in what ought to fill them with confusion. S. Aug. D.

Ver. 23. I will turn them from Basan, &c. I will cast out my enemies from their rich possessions, signified by Basan, a fruitful country; and I will drive them into the depth of the sea: and make such a slaughter of them, that the feet of my servants may be dyed in their blood, &c. Ch.—Into. Most translate from, and explain this of God's people. But it seems more naturally to refer to their enemies, and the preposition m, signifies in. Ps. 36:15. Bert.—I will treat them like Pharaoh. M.

Ver. 24. Same. Streams of blood shall flow, as was the case when Moses overcame Og, &c. Num. 21:23. C.—The gospel was propagated without bloodshed, but no less effectually. At the last day, the just shall triumph over the reprobate. Bert.

Ver. 25. Thy goings. Thy ways, thy proceedings, by which thou didst formerly take possession of the promised land in favour of thy people; and shalt afterwards of the whole world, which thou shalt subdue to thy Son. Ch.—Many have now become acquainted with what Christ has done for the salvation of mankind; but the faithful consider this with most attention, and view him seated on his throne above, as our Mediator, through whom alone others can have access. W.—Eusebius and S. Hilary suppose, that Christ appeared and spoke to the patriarchs and prophets of the Old Testament. C.

Ver. 26. Princes. The apostles, the first converters of nations: attended by numbers of perfect souls, singing the divine praises, and virgins consecrated to God. Ch.—S. Paul exhorts the faithful to sing hymns. Ephes. 5:19. Bert.—Moses and Mary had sung a canticle, after the passage of the Red Sea. Ex. 15. M.

Ver. 27. From the fountains of Israel. From whom both Christ and his apostles sprung. By Benjamin, the holy Fathers on this place understand S. Paul, who was of that tribe, name here a youth, because he was the last called to the apostleship. By the princes of Juda, Zabulon, and Nephthali, we may understand the other apostles, who were of the tribe of Juda; or of the tribes of Zabulon and Nephthali, where our Lord began to preach. Matt. 4:13. &c. Ch.—The Jews were first invited. Acts 1. W.—All the tribes were present at the translation of the ark. It is not known why these four alone are mentioned. Bert.

Ver. 28. Mind. Through excessive joy. Heb. also, “containing (or ruling) them.” S. Jer. H.—But this seems improper. Hence Prot. have, “with their ruler,” though with is not in the original. Bert.—Rodem (Keri rode) “presided.” Saul, indeed, had been the first king of Israel; but he throne afterwards continued in the tribe of Juda: an dat the time of the conquest of Chanaan, as well as at the translation of the ark, Benjamin could not be considered as the chief. H.—We may therefore better follow the Sept. and Deschamps, who has sopore corripitur. Bert.—S. Paul was in an ecstasy, rapt to the third heaven. 2 Cor. 12. M.

Ver. 29. Command thy strength. Give orders that thy strength may be always with us. Ch.—Display thy power from thy holy temple. H.—Send the Messias, grant perseverance to the just, and defend thy Church against all attacks. C.—As she commenced by God’s power, so by the same she is continually preserved. W.—Heb. “Thy God hath commanded thy strength.” (Prot.) or, “command thy God.” Bert.

Ver. 30. From. Sym. For. Kings shall reverence the temple, which David foresaw would be shortly erected; or, “with greater magnificence, than in the temple of Jerusalem, kings shall offer gifts to thee,” (Deschamps) which clearly refers to the Messias. Bert.—“As soon as thy temples shall be,” &c. Under Solomon, many kings became tributary, and at the preaching of the gospel, emperors submitted to Christ. C.—They have contributed to adorn the Church, (Is. 60 and 66) where God is praised with the sacrifice of thanksgiving, and the virtues of penance and prayer. M.

Ver. 31. Rebuke the wild beasts of the reeds: or the wild beasts which lie hid in the reeds. That is, the devils, who hide themselves in order to surprise their prey. Or by wild beasts, are here understood persecutors, who, for all their attempts against the Church, are but as weak reeds, which cannot prevail against them, who are supported by the strength of the Almighty. The same are also called the congregation of bulls, (from their rage against the Church) who assembled together all their kine, that is, the people, their subjects, to exclude, if they can, from Christ and his inheritance, his constant confessors, who are like silver tried by fire. Ch.—Symmachus nearly agrees with this version: “Rebuke the wild beasts.” Yet most render the Heb. in the singular, to denote the chief of the enemies, (H.) particularly the devil, who dwells with the vain and luxurious, (Bellar.) being Behemoth, in Job xl. 16. (M.) and the old serpent, (H.) as he probably lay concealed, among the shrubs of Paradise, when he tempted our first parents. Bert.—It refers literally to the kings of Egypt, and of Ethiopia, who might be solicited to make war on David, by the Philistines. Pharaoh is often called a dragon, (Ezec. 29:3) as his officers, or the princes “of Chus,” may be styled bulls. They shall be forced to submit, v. 32. C.—To exclude. Heb. “trampling upon,” (Bert.) or “boasting of their pieces of silver,” (Mont.) which is so common among them. 3 K. 10:27. H.—The Egyptians even adorned their sandals with it. Clem. Ped. ii. 11.—The soldiers of Antiochus had mostly gold nails in their shoes. Val. Max. ix. 2. C.—Houbigant proposes some alterations, and translates, “Keep down the beast of the reed, the collection of the strong, as also the chariots of the people, which run quickly on silver wheels.” All the versions tend to shew the fury and insolence of the enemy against God’s people. Bert.—Tried. Prot. “till every one submit himself with pieces of silver.” H.

Ver. 32. Ambassadors shall come, &c. It is a prophecy of the conversion of the Gentiles, and by name of the Egyptians and Ethiopians, (Ch.) who were among the first converts. Is. 19:9. Soph. 3:10. Acts 8:27.—Ambassadors. Heb. chashmannim occurs no where else. But it denotes some people in authority, and seems to have the same import as “the Asmonean.”—Ethiopia, comprises the country on both sides of the Red Sea, as well as that below Egypt, and on the Araxes. This prediction was accomplished, when Solomon married the daughter of Pharaoh, and was visited by the queen of Saba. But it was more fully verified by the propagation of the gospel, (C.) when many in Egypt became monks and nuns. W.

Ver. 33–34. Sing ye to God, is rejected by S. Jerom; but defended by S. Hil. &c. It seems proper to connect the former sentence after Selah, (Bert.) or may be added instead, to express applause. H.—East. From Mount Olivet, which is on the east side of Jerusalem. Ch.—God fills all places, v. 5. Deut. 33:26. C.—Religion has gone westward, but will return to the east. Apoc. 16. T.—Power. That is, he will make his voice to be a powerful voice; by calling from death to life, such as were dead in mortal sin: as at the last day he will, by the power of his voice, call all the dead from their graves. Ch.—He will come to judge with great majesty, (W.) and his thunder shall resound, as well as the last trumpet. 1 Cor. 15:52.

Ver. 35. For Israel. Altering the stops, we might translate, “over Israel appears his magnificence;” (Bert.) agreeably to Heb. S. Aug. &c. C.

Ver. 36. Saints, or sanctuary. Heb. lit. “thou art terrible, O God, from thy holy places.” Mont.—Yet Pagnin retains, “in his holy,” &c. The tabernacle, or temple, (v. 30) and the ark, were esteemed the bulwarks of Israel. There God was pleased to grant his people’s requests more easily, to encourage public worship. H.—The sanctification of the faithful is a miracle of God. C.—They may justly be styled his sanctuaries.—People. Adorning his elect with immortality. M.

PSALM 68

PSALM 68. (SALVUM ME FAC DEUS.)

Christ, in his passion, declareth the greatness of his sufferings, and the malice of his persecutors, the Jews; and he foretelleth their reprobation.

Ver. 1. Changed. A psalm for Christian converts, to remember the passion of Christ; (Ch.) whose sentiments this and the 21st psalm express in the most energetic language. Bert.—It may have been composed by a captive Levite, (C.) or David may allude to their sufferings at Babylon, or to his own, though he had those of the Messias principally in view. See Ps. 45.

Ver. 2. Save me from affliction. Lu. 22:42. Christ could not be lost. M.—Waters of afflictions and sorrows. My soul is sorrowful even unto death. Matt. 26. Ch. See Jo. 3:6.

Ver. 3. Standing, υποστασις, “subsistence:” there is no bottom. H.

Ver. 4. Hoarse. This might be literally true, as Christ had suffered the greatest torments, and recited this and the 21st psalm on the cross; looking up towards heaven, so that his eyes were weakened, as well as by shedding many tears. Hope. Thus the blasphemy of heretics, who pretend that he gave way to despair, is refuted. Bert.—Christ was not presently delivered from tribulation: neither ought his followers to expect better treatment. W.

Ver. 5. Cause. The captives had not injured Babylon, and Christ had even bestowed the greatest favours upon his enemies. He suffered for our sins. Is. 53:4. C.—Away. Christ in his passion made restitution of what he had not taken away, by suffering the punishment due to our sins, and so repairing the injury we had done to God. Ch.—The expression was proverbial. Jer. 31:29. Lam. 5:7.—Many of the captives were very innocent. C.—But Christ was without sin; (W.) though made a curse and a sin-offering. Gal. 3:13 and 2 Cor. 5:21. C.

Ver. 6. My foolishness and my offences; which my enemies impute to me: or the follies and sins of men, which I have taken upon myself. Ch.—My cross is foolishness to the Gentiles, 1 Cor. 1:23. S. Aug.

Ver. 7. For me. If I rise not again, my disciples will take me for a mere man. If the captivity continue much longer, many will despair, v. 11. C.—Suffer not the weak to be scandalized in my passion. W.

Ver. 8. Reproach. Because I would not adore idols. Christ undertook to expiate our offences, and to satisfy the justice of his Father. Rom. 15:3. C.

Ver. 9. Mother. This might be true with respect to some apostate Jews. But it was more fully accomplished in Christ, who was betrayed by Judas, &c. C.—His own received him not. Jo. 1. Bert.

Ver. 10. Upon me. The disciples remembered that this had been written concerning Christ, who drove out the profaners of his temple, (Jo. 2:17) and will not be less severe on those who dishonour the Church by their scandalous lives, or by propagating erroneous opinions. C.—S. Paul (Rom. 15:3) doubted not but this passage was literally applicable to Christ, who has taught us to prefer the glory of God, and our neighbour's salvation before our own temporal advantages. Bert.—Those who have less zeal, are not so much persecuted. W.

Ver. 11. Covered. Retiring from society. Bert.—Sept. Rom. and Houbig. "I humbled." Heb. "I bewailed my soul in fasting," (Aquila) as if death were inevitable; and this practice was derided, as the fasts of the Church, (H.) and mortification, (W.) are still by unbelievers. H.—The Jews seemed to scoff at the thirst of Christ, when they gave him vinegar; and the devil took occasion from his 40 days' fast to tempt him. Bert.

Ver. 12. Hair-cloth. The sacred humanity, which being torn, let out the price of our redemption. S. Aug. M.—I mourned for my country, &c. C.—Christ was clothed in derision, with a soldier's straight purple garment. Bert.

Ver. 13. Song. Both judges and common people (W.) derided me over their cups of shecar, (H.) or strong drink, and palm wine. Lam. 3:14. C.—Thus the soldiers made Christ their jest, while they drank on the long night of his passion. Bert.

Ver. 14. Pleasure. Which is seasonable, and appointed for pardon. Ps. 31:6 and 101:14.—Father, forgive them, &c. The term of the captivity is at hand. I seek no revenge; but commit my cause to thee. C.

Ver. 15. Waters. Beneath which the Hebrews supposed hell was placed. Job 26:5. S. Hil. v. 39.—He prays to be delivered from misery, (v. 2) and for a glorious resurrection. C.—Christ could not be detained in limbo or in the grave. W.

Ver. 19. Enemies. That they may insult no longer over me, (C.) being converted or covered with shame, (M.) that they do no more hurt. W.

Ver. 20. Shame, (reverentiam.) S. Aug. &c. read verecundiam. C.—Christ was covered with all sorts of reproach. H. Euseb.

Ver. 21. Misery. For which I ardently longed, as the Fathers explain it. —None. I expected that my brethren would at least condole with me: but I was deceived. Christ drank the bitter chalice to the dregs, and found no consolation even from his Father. C.

Ver. 22. Food. Tert. reads “drink;” which agrees better with gall. Yet it might be mixed with food, (C.) with wine and myrrh, which were given to our Saviour, when he arrived at Calvary, as vinegar was offered to him on the cross. Matt. 27:34. Jo. 19:28. This was the last prophecy which regarded our Saviour, while living; and was the last instance of the Jewish malice, by which they requited him for the thirst which he had for the salvation of mankind. Greg. Naz. &c. Bert. —Jeremias (8:14 and 23:15 and Lam. 3:15) uses the same expressions, in a metaphorical sense, to describe the afflictions of the captives. C.

Ver. 23. Let their table, &c. What here follows in the style of an imprecation, is a prophecy of the wretched state to which the Jews should be reduced, in punishment of their wilful obstinacy; (Ch.) or it may be a sentence pronounced on them by Jesus Christ. They are driven from their own country, and the sacred books (C.) being misunderstood, (M.) prove their ruin. Our Saviour and S. Paul confirm this prediction. The latter adheres to the Sept. (Rom. 11:9) though some would translate lishlomim, “for peace”—offerings, instead of recompenses, as it also means. Bert.—“Let their sacrifices become a scandal to them;” (Chal.) or rather, May their table, the symbol of friendship, be a snare for them, that they may be destroyed, or betrayed by their dearest friends. C.—The overthrow of the Jews, when they were assembled to eat the paschal lamb, is here foretold. W.

Ver. 24. Always. The Babylonians were ordered by Cyrus to look upon the Persians as their masters. Xenoph. vii.—Nothing could more strikingly point out the present condition of the Jews than this passage. They are every where kept under, and see not the sense of the Scriptures, (C.) and the truth of Christ’s doctrine; but are bent on worldly gain. W. 2 Cor. 3. M.

Ver. 25. Thy wrathful. Lit. “the fury of thy anger.” H.—The first term denotes expedition; the second, perseverance. Quickly destroy them, without redress. Theod. C.

Ver. 26. Desolate. Babylon gave place to Susa, and “was reduced to a solitude by the vicinity of Seleucia.” Pliny vi. 26. Isai. 47.—But the fall of Jerusalem was more sudden and memorable within 40 years after the death of Christ. Ps. 58:7. C.—The Jews, and particularly the traitor, lost their country. Acts 1:20. Bert.—He (the traitor) indeed hath possessed a field of the reward of iniquity ... and burst asunder. H.

Ver. 27. Wounds. The enemy persecuted Christ even after his death, opening his side, spreading false reports, and guarding his tomb. C.—God ordained his death for the good of man: but they sought it out of malice. W.

Ver. 28. Iniquity. The first term may denote the crime; and the second, the punishment. C.—Peccatum pæna peccati est. S. Aug.—God permits people to fall; (W.) but he does not force them. H.—Let the Babylonians become victims of thy indignation: but save thy people. Very few of the Jews embraced the faith of Christ. C.

Ver. 29. Living. Let them die. Grot.—If we understand the book of the predestinate to life eternal, and not merely to present and mutable justice, (T.) God never blots any out. But though they fall, he brings them to repentance. S. Aug. E. Bellarm.—The reprobation of the obstinate Babylonians (C.) and Jews, is predicted. H.—The latter were effaced from the book of the living of the Old Testament, and were never written in that of the just, belonging to the New. S. Jer.—At death, the unbelieving Jews (H.) shall not find their expectations will founded. W.—Only the faithful are truly just. M.

Ver. 30. Up. The cross is now triumphant, (H.) an object of veneration. Bert.—Christ submitted to die upon it, and rose again. W.—He was exposed naked, and was truly a man of sorrows. M.

Ver. 32. Hoofs. They were to be three years old. Kimchi.—So Virgil says, (Æn. ix.) Jam cornu petat & pedibus qui spargat arenam. Ec. 3. C.—Our prayers are therefore offered through our Lord Jesus Christ. Heb. 13:15. Bert.—Devout prayer is more acceptable than victims of the best description, though they were also good, (W.) and, cæteris paribus, of a higher dignity. H.

Ver. 33. See, my deliverance, or thy just vengeance on the wicked. C.

Ver. 34. Prisoners. Martyrs, (M.) and those who suffer for the faith, will be rewarded. W.

Ver. 35. Therein, the fish. Our admiration of creatures causes us to praise God. S. Aug. S. Hil.

Ver. 36. Sion. The Catholic Church. The cities of Juda, &c. her places of worship, which shall be established throughout the world. And there, viz. in this Church of Christ, shall his servants dwell, &c. Ch. W.—It matters not whether a person live in the Church of God, which is at Corinth, or at Philippi, provided he be a member of the Catholic Church. But those who adhere to separate congregations, and style themselves “the Church of England,” or “the Kirk of Scotland,” &c. cannot be written with the just, (v. 29) nor have any part in this prediction. H.—It alludes to the restoration of the captives, (C.) or rather to the propagation of the gospel, (H.) of which the former was a figure, (Euseb. S. Aug.) as the Jews were never quietly settled again in their country, and were expelled by Titus; where as the Church of Christ remains to the end of the world. Bert.

Ver. 37. Therein. The succession of the Catholic Church is uninterrupted. W.—Those who adhere to Christ by faith, hope, and charity, will be saved. M.

PSALM 69

PSALM 69. (DEUS IN ADJUTORIUM.)

A prayer in persecution.

Ver. 1. Remembrance. This is all that occurs in Heb. or in many Greek copies, though the following words were perhaps extant in the copy of the Sept. or were added to complete the sentence. Several of the verses are found in Ps. 34 and 39 and seem to have been used as a form of prayer in any danger. Bert.—David foresaw that Christ would pray for the safety of his natural and mystical body, and would be heard. M.—The following psalm is a sequel to this. C.

Ver. 4. ‘Tis well, ‘tis well. Euge, euge. S. Jerom renders it, vah! vah! which is the voice of one insulting and deriding. Some understand it was a detestation of deceitful flatterers. Ch.—In the New Testament, Well done, denotes applause. S. Jer. in Ezec. vi.—These predictions relate to the murderers of the Messias. Bert.—In the 39th psalm, the Church prays for aid; and here David, persecuted by Absalom, or any of the just, lays before God his particular wants. W.

PSALM 70

PSALM 70. (IN TE DOMINE.)

A prayer for perseverance.

Ver. 1. Of the sons of Jonadab. The Rechabites, of whom see Jeremiah 35. By this addition of the seventy-two interpreters, we gather that this psalm was usually sung in the synagogue, in the person of the Rechabites, and of those who were first carried away into captivity. Ch.—This first captivity happened under Joakim, A.M. 3398, the second, under Jechonias, 3405, and the last, when the city was destroyed and Sedecias was taken, 3416. Usher.—The Rechabites entered Jerusalem a little before the first of these events, and set the people an example of obedience by submitting to Nabuchodonosor, as Jeremiah directed. Bellar. M.—S. Jerom considers their being confined within the walls, as their first captivity. Ep. ad Paul. and ad Rust.—But there is nothing in this title in Heb. Euseb. &c. and several copies of the Sept. acknowledge the same; (C.) so that it is of no great authority. Bert.—The psalm contains the sentiments of the captives, (Theod.) or of David, persecuted by his son: and in a more sublime sense, of Jesus Christ, complaining of treason and cruelty. C.—All the saints, under persecution, may adopt the same language. Bert.—Hoped. These three verses are almost exactly the same. Ps. 30. Bias “being asked what was sweet to men, answered, hope.” Laert. 1.—Vain is the salvation of man. But hope confoundeth not. Ps. 59:13. Rom. 5:5. C.

Ver. 2. Justice. Or mercy. Ps. 30:1. I have not injured Absalom, &c. C. —God avengeth the injuries done to his servants. W.

Ver. 3. Refuge. The parallel passage seems more complete (C.) in Hebrew, some letters of which may have been altered, since the time of the Sept. Yet the sense is nearly the same. Bert.—“Be thou my strong habitation, whereunto I may continually resort. Thou hast given commandment to save me; for thou art my rock and my fortress.” Prot. H.

Ver. 4. Unjust. Achitophel and Absalom. C.

Ver. 5. Patience. Confiding on thee, I lost not patience; (S. Aug. W.) or rather, (Amama) all my expectations are from thee. Ps. 61:6. C.

Ver. 6. Art my. Heb. “hast taken me,” (H.) or “cut the navel string.” Ezech. 15:4. Thou hast acknowledged me for thy son, by taking me upon thy knee, as soon as I was born. Gen. 50:22. Ps. 21:11.

Ver. 7. Wonder. My exaltation, (C.) and present misery, (W. M.) fill all with astonishment. H. Is. 8:18 and 11:10.—God often made his prophets bear about the signs of his vengeance on others. Is. 19:20. C.—Christ was a sign of contradiction, which shall be contradicted. Lu. 2:34. H.—He was looked upon as a prodigy. Euseb. S. Aug.—Helper. He gives all the glory to God. C.—None can persevere without his grace. W.

Ver. 9. Old age. Absalom rebelled when his father was grown old. C.—Against the dangers of our last conflict, (H.) Christ has instituted Extreme Unction. W.

Ver. 10. Watched. My guards, (Ferrand) or rather my enemies. C.

Ver. 11. Him. Thus the world commonly judges of those in distress. It was known that David sinned; but none could tell that God was now punishing him rather than putting his virtue to the trial. “Upbraid not the miserable,” said Thales.

Ver. 13. Detract. Heb. “are satans,” or “adversaries,” during my trial. The Fathers say these are predictions. Ps. 34:4. C.—David certainly wished to spare the chief of the rebels, and host probably speaks of his spiritual enemies. Bert.

Ver. 14. Praise. To perform good works, and to praise God, is the best way to advance in virtue. W.

Ver. 15. Learning. As much as to say, I build not upon human learning, but only upon the power and justice of God. Ch. W.—I have not leisure to write a canticle at present, as the word known intimates. Ps. 13:3 and 73:9. But I will do it hereafter, and record the praises which I now proclaim. Some would translate, “I know not the number” of thy mercies. Bert.—This sense is adopted by the Chal. Theod. &c. See Ps. 39:6. Yet it seems more probable, that David acknowledges his inability to speak to God as he deserves, though he promises to do his best to shew the utmost respect. So Solomon confessed his ignorance, (Prov. 30:2) and Socrates asserted, that all his knowledge consisted in the conviction of his complete ignorance. If this be true with respect to human science, how much more so is it, when we speak of God, (H.) and attempt to dive into the holy Scriptures? Geneb.—David meditated on the law continually. Ps. 1:2. C.—Yet he admits, that he stands in need of a guide (H.) and must enter into the sanctuary, to penetrate such high mysteries. Ps. 72:17. S. Aug. and Eusebius understand, that the letter of the Mosaic law is incapable of insuring salvation. C.—This text has been abused, to encourage ignorance, as Amama (p. 502.) complains with respect to the Prot. pulpits and colleges abroad. Know gives a dreadful picture, of their universities in England. H.—“With the unlearned Anabaptists and fanatics, such may perhaps conclude, that they will thus more easily approach to God,” (Tarnov.) and “may boast, that they have been instructed in the school of the holy Spirit,” θεοδικατοι, “when they boldly ascend the pulpit, and adduce texts from Scripture, it matters not whether right or wrong.” Amama.—Is not this generally the case among those who broach new religions? H.—Sept. Vat. reads, πραγματειας, “mercantile affairs.” But the Vulg. follows the edition of Aldus, &c. γραμματειας. Bert.—A similar variation occurs, 1 Esd. 8. The former reading is adduced by the Fathers, and by Gelasius, (dist. 88.) who hence condemns clergymen engaging in merchandise, (Amama) as it was contrary to their calling: and formerly at least, very dangerous for any honest man. H.—David had not received a polite education, and he disapproved of Achitophel’s worldly prudence. M.

Ver. 17. Till now. Here the stop should be placed. Bert. C.—The verb may also be explained in the past time, “till now I have declared.” Bert.

Ver. 19. The great things. Thou hast even punished the rebel angels. M.

Ver. 20. Me. Heb. “us.” Yet Prot. &c. retain the singular, as the context requires. Bert.—Earth. To which I seem to be consigned, (H.) being in the greatest distress. It may be understood of Christ’s return from hell, and from the grave. Ps. 68:17. C.

Ver. 21. Thy. Heb. and Syr. “my.” Thou hast raised me to the highest honours. S. Aug. &c. read “thy justice.” C.—Houbigant prefers the Vulg. Bert.

Ver. 24. Meditate. Or, utter my most serious reflections. C.

PSALM 71

PSALM 71. (DEUS JUDICIUM TUUM.)

A prophecy of the coming of Christ, and of his kingdom: prefigured by Solomon and his happy reign.

Ver. 1. Psalm. Some copies add, “of David.” But the Heb. has only Lishlomo, “to Solomon;” (S. Jer. H.) or, composed by Solomon. The former sense is more generally adopted, (Bert.) though the Chal. and Eusebius look upon the latter as most plausible. David, however, seems to have written this last most beautiful piece, when he placed his son upon the throne; (3 K. 1:47) and being transported with a divine enthusiasm, he described the reign of the Messias, (C.) to whom alone many of the passages can be applied, (S. Aug. W.) as the Jews, Chal. Kimchi, &c. confess, though they will not allow Jesus to be the Christ, v. 5. 11. 17. C.

Ver. 2. Son. Solomon, (Bert.) or Cyrus, (Pr. disc.) or the Messias. Most blessed Trinity, enable the Son of man, or of David, to judge the world. W. Is. 10:3. Jo. 5:22.—Judgment. Equity is the duty of governors, as obedience is that of subjects. Solomon acts with the greatest sagacity. 1 Par. 22:10 and 29:23. and 2 Par. 1:10. The psalmist inculcates the obligation of defending the rights of the poor, who are under God’s protection. To him even judges and monarchs must give an account. Deut. 1:17. 2 Par. 19:6.

Ver. 3. Justice. These blessings shall be so common; (Ps. 35:6 and Joel 3:18) or, let princes pursue the paths of justice and peace. Mic. 6:1. Solomon was to enjoy a perpetual peace, (1 Par. 22:9) as he was a figure of Jesus Christ, who has procured a more solid one for us. Eph. 2:14. Jo. 14:27. Is. 52:7. C.—Heb. has “by righteousness,” as this is the source of true peace. Rom. 14:17. These virtues are publicly enforced in the Church, as from a mountain. Is. 2:2. Bert.—Christ, the rock, (H.) and his ministers, the hills, preach reconciliation. W.

Ver. 4. Oppressor. Lit. “calumniator.” Christ has chained down the devil, the accuser of our brethren. Apoc. 12:10 and 20:2. M.—He hath taken away his spoils, (Jo. 8:44) and undertaken the defence of the humble. Is. 11:4. Solomon was also the reverse of those wicked princes, who received bribes, and neglect the poor. Is. 1:23. C.

Ver. 5. Before. Or, in the presence of the moon, as the Heb. indicates, (Bert.) though S. Jerom translates, ultra, “beyond, or after.” H.—Yea, Christ existed before all the creation, (Ps. 109:3. C.) and these comparisons do not insinuate that he will ever cease to be. Theod.—The kingdom of David and Solomon is described in the same poetic language, (Ps. 88:28 and 37. C.) as it will remain for ever in the hands of the Messias. H.—Heb. makes a sudden address to the king, “they shall fear thee with the sun,” which Houbigant dislikes. Some letters may have been changed, though the sense is not bad. Bert.—“They shall fear thee at the rising of the sun, and shall pray to they by the light of the moon,” Chal. both day and night. C.—Solomon, as a figure of Christ, was good for some time; but no king, except our Saviour, will reign for ever. W.—The mind of the prophet is now raised to behold him. M.

Ver. 6. Fleece. Or, “new cut grass,” as the original term also signifies. Yet the explanation given by the Vulg. seems preferable, (Bert.) as an allusion is made to what happened to Gideon, (Judg. 6:37. Houbig.) prefiguring the miraculous conception of our Saviour. He shall call both the strayed sheep of the house of Israel, and the inhabitants of all the earth: as Solomon gave the greatest satisfaction to his people, during the early part of his reign, (H.) and spoke with the utmost eloquence. 3 K. 4:34. C.—Some supply His justice, (v. 7) or rather, “his word” shall come. Deut. 22:2. C.—The incarnation was effected sweetly, and in silence. W.

Ver. 7. Justice. Heb. “the just,” who appear most under a good king, being animated by his example. H.—Away. Chal. “till those who adore the moon be exterminated.” This idolatry pervaded almost all the east. Solomon’s reign was very peaceable, 3 K. 4:25. But this was only a feeble representation of the peace which Christ should bring. At his birth, the whole world was at peace. Angels proclaimed it to all the earth. Lu. 2:14. Is. 2:4. C.—It is certain, that the internal peace of Solomon’s reign did not continue to the end, (H.) much less till the moon should be taken away. Bert.

Ver. 8. To sea. Solomon ruled from the Mediterranean, Red, and Indian Seas, to the Persian Gulph, and the Euphrates, having al Arabia tributary to him, (H.) and the countries as far as Syria; so that he enjoyed all that had been promised by God. Gen. 15:18. Num. 34:3 and 2 Par. 9:26 and 3 K. 4:24.—The earth, denotes this kingdom. S. Jer. in Is. xiii. 4. But if we explain it of Christ, his Church has no limits. In spite of the corruption of the world, she still asserts her title of Catholic. C.—She is universal, both as to time and place, and always visible, v. 15. W.—Her divine head began to propagate this kingdom, after he had been baptized in the river Jordan, (Bert.) as the Fathers agree. This unlimited dominion was promised, (Ps. 2:7. C.) and the prophet Zachary, (9) seems to quote this passage, when speaking of the Messias alone; so that it is best to understand it in this sense, as the Sept. have done, by οἰκουμένης. Bert. Is. 9:6.

Ver. 9. Ethiopians. So S. Jerom, Aquila, &c. translate Tsiim, (H.) which denotes any nations living at a distance from commerce, (Bert.) or islanders, and those who are accustomed to sail. Is. 13:21. People on the continent, as well as those in islands, and ships, shall submit to Solomon, 3 K. 10:11) as all shall yield to Christ, (C.) at least at the day of judgment.—Ground. Prostrating to adore him. Is. 49:23. Bert.—Thus the Persians approach their kings, (Val. Max. vii. 3.) as the Muscovites and Chinese do still. C.—The eunuch of the queen of Ethiopia was the first convert of those who did not live in the holy land. Acts 8:27. M.

Ver. 10. Tharsis. Bordering on “the sea,” (Bert.) or in Cilicia, though we find not that Solomon ever claimed any authority there, or that the Mediterranean was under his control. He sent his fleet indeed to Tharsis; (3 K. 10:22) but Arabia and Saba brought presents, or tribute to him. Under the name of islands, the Hebrews comprise all places, to which they had to go by water, as Asia Minor, &c. Is. 66:19. C.—The three kings were the first who verified this prediction concerning our Saviour; and afterwards Constantine and other potentates embraced his religion. Among the islands, Britain, which is the greatest in Europe, was partly converted in the days of the apostles, (Theod. in Tim. &c.) and more under Eleutherius; though the English nation received the faith from S. Aug. and others, sent by Pope Gregory the Great, A.D. 596. W.—Saba. Heb. Seba. The preceding Arabia is sheba, (H.) and refers to some of those who people that country.—Gifts, or tribute, 1 Par. 18. C.—If the former term, presents, (Heb. mincha, “a sacrifice of flour,” &c. H.) be taken in the strict sense, the text cannot be applicable to any but the true God, the Messias. Bert.—The wise men, who came from this country, adored and offered presents to Christ. Matt. 2. M.

Ver. 11. Earth, is omitted in Heb. Rom. Sept. &c. so that this cannot regard Solomon, (Bert.) though he was revered by all the neighbouring kings. 3 K. 10:23. Christ alone is the universal king, (Apoc. 19:16 and Phil. 2:10. C.) to whom every knee shall bend, at least when all shall appear in judgment. Many kings shall submit before. Bert.

Ver. 14. Usuries. Heb. toc, (H.) means “fraud and usury.” Eternal torment is the usury which God exacts for murder, &c. (S. Aug.) or a transient pleasure. H.—From this Christ has redeemed us, (Bert.) as well as from iniquity. S. Aug.—Original sin is the capital, for which the devil claims usury. Bell.—Name. Heb. “blood.” Sept. properly wrote αιμα, which has been changed for ονομα. The sense is not very different, as those who respect a person’s name, are careful to defend him from death. Bert.—Heb. “their blood is precious.” Ps. 115:15 and 1 K. 26:21. Solomon repressed all injustice, so that usury was banished, and the poor was so much enriched, as not to be forced to borrow. C.—Yet, after his fall, he laid heavy burdens on his people. H.

—How much has the name and blood of Christians cost! Yet we fear not to scandalize those (Bert.) for whom Christ died! The most beautiful qualification of all in power is, to protect the poor, and to promote the work of God, for which he lends them his authority. H.

Ver. 15. Arabia. Heb. sheba, v. 10. H.—This was accomplished by the wise men. Euseb.—For him, (de ipso.) They shall adopt the form of prayer which he has taught, (S. Aug.) or they shall adore him on his own account. Bert.—Through him we have access in one spirit to the Father. Eph. 2:18. Rom. 5:1. People might pay a civil respect also to Solomon.—He shall live. The prolongation of the ruler's life is sometimes (H.) a blessing. Prov. 28:2. The poor shall live, and pay the taxes cheerfully, praying for his prince, &c. C.—They shall adore God, and offer their vows for him, (H.) as subjects would do for Solomon, and the crowds did for Jesus Christ, crying out, Hosanna, &c. Matt. 21. M.
